'Ten Seconds to Hell' at Midtown

Bomb Disposal Work Makes Gripping Film

The nerve-racking business of defusing unexploded bombs buried in Berlin's postwar rubble creates considerable, if eventually repetitious, suspense in "Ten Seconds to Hell," Berlin-filmed drama at the Midtown.

Based on Lawrence P. Bachmann's novel, "The Phoenix," this Seven Arts-Hammer production undertakes to combine a symbolical essay on the dangers of living in a high-explosive world with out-and-out melodrama revolving around the fates of six members of a detonation squad.

CONFLICT OF GOOD, EVIL

The men, played by transplanted Hollywood actors, are returned German soldiers, each of whom has fallen afoul of the Nazis. The two "big" ones of the group—Jack Palance and Jeff Chandler — represent, respectively, all that is unselfish and good in mankind as opposed to selfishness, egotism and the me-first philosophy of survival.

It is these, constantly at each other's throats actually and figuratively, who last longest until finally one of the double-fused British bombs which has been decimating the little group settles their running argument, permanently.

BOMBS AND EMOTIONS

The Palance-Chander team, under the direction of Robert Aldrich (who also helped write the script), gives excellent account of itself as bombs and emotions flare up lethally. Martine Carol—usually peeled down to her skin in French films—keeps her clothes on this time to play the stars' rather pathetic Gallic landlady who finds comfort in Palance's gloomy architect's heart.

Doomed members of the squad are sympathetically represented by Robert Cornthwaite, the "kid"; Wes Addy, the family man; Dave Willock, the soft-hearted colector of pets, and Jimmy Goodwin, who would have preferred to be a tumbler.

Film Censoring Bill Is Signed

Inquirer Harrisburg Bureau

HARRISBURG, Sept. 17.—Gov. David L. Lawrence has signed a bill setting up a three-member board of motion picture control and giving it authority to ban films which it determines are "obscene" or which would incite children under 17 to crime.

The measure was intended to create motion picture censorship which would comply with a Supreme Court decision knocking out previous state control over movies. The bill povides a penalty of fines from $500 to $1000 and up to six months in prison for violations.

At the Fox

Jurgens Stars In 'Tamango'

In gaudy color and with atrocious English dubbing, "Tamango" trudges through 98 minutes on the Fox's CinemaScope screen to a conclusion which finds Curt Jurgens pointing a cannon into the hold of his ship and blowing up the cargo.

The "cargo," unfortunately, happens to be human. For this is a French production of Prosper Merimee's tale about a Dutch sea captain back in 1820 whe transported slaves from Africa to Cuba, kept a mulatto mistress above decks and dreamed of going back to Rotterdam to marry a Dutch girl and build a whole fleet of ships to carry on his nefarious trade.

Judgens lurches about, having defiant slaves cast overboard and hanged from the yard arm, or making passes at extremely uneasy Dorothy Dandridge as his tepidly smouldering mistress. Jean Servais,of "Rififi" fame, plays a derelict doctor who has taken to drink, and Roger Hanin, a mean boatswain who gets his down in the hold. As lion-hunter Tamango, leader of the rebellion, Alex Cressan would have been better off pursuing the medical studies he left in left in Martinique to make the picture and some extra cash. M. M.
