(3) PTB * k / p / s -rwak ANT

No fewer than three prefixes are attested for this interesting root: k- (e.g., WT grog-ma), s- (e.g., Anong sərɔ) and p- (e.g., WB pərwak). This velar prefix occurs in several other Lolo-Burmese animal terms: CAT, RAT, CHICKEN, TIGER, and LEECH (see HPTB p. 138). The sibilant prefix is a reduction of PTB sya-n FLESH / MEAT / GAME ANIMAL (§1.1.1). The labial prefix is a reduction of PTB bəw INSECT / SNAKE / VERMIN / BUG (§2.1.6.1).

(55) PTB *k(w)aŋ ⩙ *p^{w}aŋ SPIDER / SPIN / SPINDLE

The reflexes of this richly attested root range from velar stops to labial stops to w-, pointing to a complex allofamic reconstruction. The TB languages show much variation in the names of insects and other small creatures, which often run to four or more syllables. The large degree of variation to be found in such words can plausibly be ascribed to the tendency of successive generations of children to create new forms.

The nasal prefix in the PLB reconstruction accounts for the voicing of the Lahu initial.

Clearly related are PTB m-ga SPIN / CARD FIBERS (§6.24) and PTB m-gu SPIDER (§2.2.6), also with voiced initials in Lahu. Polysyllabic Lahu forms like na-gù-na-gá-pɛ̄ demonstrate that these two roots are separate.

2.2.7.1 Otter

(1) PTB *sram OTTER

Written Burmese phyam has always presented a puzzle (see STC 107, n. 302). In Matisoff 2010 ("Toward a Eurasian Bestiary"), I surmised that the labial initial arose through a reduction of a Mon-Khmer etymon (see Mon-Khmer bheʔ, Shorto 2006:#260).

Lisu pu̱^{33} and Hani (Khatu) pjá tɔ̃ seem clearly to be loans from Burmese.

After much hesitation, STC chose to treat the initial combination sr- as an intrinsic cluster rather than as a sequence of prefix plus root initial. This analysis is buttressed by forms like Mizo sa-hram.

Chinese comparandum

猵 OC piɑn, GSR #246i 'otter'; Schuessler 2007:165 pên; Mand. biān.

Comment: Cf. discussion in STC 107, n. 302, also Matisoff (2010). Forms with initial p- for 'otter' are apparently rare across TB languages except for Written/Spoken Burmese (WB phyam) and possibly Sak and Marma (both phaing).

(5) PTB *grwa BIRCH

This comparison is from Gong 2001:28, but the OC reconstruction g'wå is JAM's guess based upon the other characters in GSR #44; the Chinese character is not in AD #94 and not in GSR #44.

STC assigns the first syllable of WT gro-ga rather to PTB s-graw SKIN / OUTER COVERING (§1.6.5).

(11) PTB *ri(:)m RATTAN / CANE

STC sets up this root with a long vowel without explanation, probably because of the retention of the original vowel in the Lepcha form, since Lepcha tends to lower short *high vowels in closed syllables.

The WB form seems to reflect a k- prefix unattested elsewhere.

This etymon is a prime example of the alternation between homorganic stop and nasal. Most subgroups reflect the *nasal, while Lolo-Burmese attests to the *stop.

Galo seems to have an interesting doublet sɯ ≍ 'hɨɨ. Note also the Trung [Dulong] doublet śiŋ ≍ śik.

LTSR 118(a-b) also reconstructs two allofams, with the nasal-final variant attested in Bisu tsùŋ.

As suggested in DL p. 1221, the poetic Lahu form šɔ̂ might be from the nasal-final variant, although it is tonally aberrant.

(28) PTB *ku:ŋ TREE / BRANCH / STEM

Coblin (1986: 47) suggests a relationship between this PTB root and Chinese 弓 (Mand. gōng) 'bow', the semantic connection residing in the shape of a bent tree branch. Cf. Written Burmese ə-kuing 'stalk, branch', kuing 'hang over in a curve', ə-kùing 'large branch, bough of tree'.

Jingpho has forms with medial -ji- (lă^{31}*kjiŋ^{31} 'branch / twig' [TBL], phun^{55}lă^{31}*kjiŋ^{31} 'branch' [ZMYYC]), which are perhaps related to the present root.

(14) PTB *bay PEA / BEAN / SMALL WEIGHT OR COIN

This is definitely an areal word, found in Mon-Khmer and Tai as well as in TB and perhaps Chinese. The meaning ranges from 'small weight or coin' to 'bean, pea'. Shorto 2006 (#1489, p. 400) reconstructs Proto-Mon-Khmer ɓa(a)y 'bean; small weight or coin' (cf. Mon boa 'bean, pea, 1/16 tical'); also Thai p[h]ay '1/32 tical'.

Shorto also suggests a connection with Amoy/Hokkien pè or poè 貝 (cf. Mand. bèi).

(19) PTB *bu RICE

This root has so far only been discovered in Kuki-Chin and Karenic.

While the Chin forms refer to cooked rice, the Karenic forms seem to have a broader reference, referring both to the plant in the field and to cooked rice.

(20) PTB *swa-n ONION / GARLIC

This root is well-attested in Tibeto-Burman and Chinese, but has a fortuitous resemblance to an Indo-Aryan root (Skt. laśuna-, Hindi lahsun, Nepali lasun). In fact, many Tibeto-Burman languages (e.g. Maru la^{31}sɔn^{35}, Chang lasung, Lotha lasen, Bantawa losuna, and Jingpho la^{31}son^{33}) have borrowed the Indic root. In a couple of cases, a compound seems to be an Indic-TB hybrid, e.g. Achang lɑ^{31}suɑn^{55}.

Compound formations with this etymon show an interesting range of semantic associations, including BITTER (e.g. Lisu), CHICKEN (e.g. Burmese), WHITE (e.g. Burmese), and SMELLY (e.g. Lahu).

This Chinese character contains the graph for 'mother' (母, Mand. mǔ), which seems to suggest that the original meaning might have been "be revolted by food, as a pregnant woman". Cf. Lahu tɔ̀ʔ, which means both 'poison' and 'be revolted by food'.

(22) PTB *r-tsa:l VEGETABLE

This root is reconstructed with a final lateral on the testimony of Written Tibetan. There is a closely similar comparandum in Chinese 菜 ts'âi', although Karlgren (1923) only gives a Middle Chinese form. The Qiangic, Tujia, Baic, and Loloish forms may well be borrowings from either Tibetan or Chinese, although the Mizo form seems to reflect a genuine TB root.

9.0.1. Old Chinese
Chinese (Old)	ts'âi'	vegetables; things plucked	Matisoff 1985a:161 [b]

[a] Lahu -chî was previously identified (cf. DL:221) with the verb chî 'to lift up, exalt' since curries or vegetable dishes 'lift up' the taste of plain rice; most Lahu consultants endorse this analysis), but Akha has both tjhì [ILH] 'lift up' and tshɛ̀ 'food (except rice)', which might indicate that two separate morphemes are involved (cf. PTB kyi LIFT / RAISE / AWAKE (§1.1.4)).

(6) PTB *m-bup ROT / SPOTTED / WRITE

The semantic range of this root is interesting: the basic meaning seems to have been 'rot'; have spots of rot or mold', whence 'be spotted, mottled', thence to the notion of 'write' (perceived by preliterate people as making spots on paper). Matisoff 1972 (LTSR) treats ROT / SPOIL (#75) as a separate etymon from WRITE / MAKE SPOTS (#89).

This root resembles PTB bruk PIEBALD / SPECKLED (§9.4), but is best kept distinct.

(8) PTB *s-ŋar FROST / ICE

In some TB languages, an apparent reflex of PTB s-ŋar may refer not to 'frost' per se, but instead refer e.g. to 'frost' or 'dew' equivocally, or to 'dew' alone. Cases in point are particularly evident within Lolo-Burmese, especially among closely related languages. For instance, WB has an etymon hnâŋ or hnɑŋ[3], glossed 'dew', but also as 'fog, mist'; the notion 'frost' is expressed as WB hnɑŋ[3]khɑi[3], i.e. 'hard dew'. Similary, Atsi (Zaiwa) has ŋa̱n[51] 'dew', while 'frost' is ŋa̱n[51]phju[51] lit. 'white dew', and 'ice' is ŋa̱n[51]thuŋ[21]. Single lexemes which can mean either 'frost' or 'dew', apparently depending on context, are seen in Langsu (Luxi) ŋə̱ŋ[31] and Maru (Langsu) ŋə̱ŋ[31].

In Loloish, reflexes of PTB s-ŋar most often refer to 'frost' and/or 'ice', cf. Black Lahu ʌ[33]ŋə[33] 'frost, ice'; the notion 'dew' is then expressed through reflexes of a separate etymon PTB (d)zil 'dew' (PLB ʔ-dzi[2]), either alone or in compounds, cf. Black Lahu tsi[31]ɣə[31], lit. 'dew water'. The situation in Nusu (Bijiang), however, is noteworthy: PTB s-ŋar yields Nusu hɑ̃[ɪ35], which as a single lexeme is glossed 'frost', while the compound hɑ̃[ɪ35]tɕhe[35] , literally 'frost dew', is the term for 'dew' (compare e.g. Nusu (Southern), which simply has tɕhe[55] 'dew'). In Leqi (Luxi) (a Burmish language), ŋa̱n[33] by itself is glossed 'ice'; the term for dew is ŋa̱n[33]tʃu[55], lit. 'ice dew (?)', 'frost' is ŋa̱n[33]phiu[33], lit. 'white ice'.

In dealing with the above examples, it should be kept in mind that in the real world, the phenomena we call 'fog, mist, dew, frost' refer to points along a continuum. When air temperature cools to near the dew point, then we see 'fog' or 'mist'. When the surface temperature of an exposed, thin object cools to near the dew point, then we see 'dew'. When the surface temperature of that object cools to near a dew point that is already below freezing, then rather than 'dew', we see ice in the form of 'frost'.

We can, then, cautiously say that some languages describe this meteorological continuum using relatively more single lexemes (e.g. English and Chinese), while other languages use relatively fewer single lexemes but more lexemic compounds (e.g. Burmese, Atsi, Langsu and Maru). Regarding Nusu (Bijiang) hɑ̃[ɪ35] and Leqi ŋa̱n[33], we surmise that the underlying lexemic meaning is maximally inclusive, i.e. 'condensed/congealed water in general'; this may account for the seeming disparity between the surface connotation of single lexemes vs. the same lexemes in compounds.

Admittedly, our suppositions above are based on data likely collected in part via prepared word lists, which can unwittingly impose lexemic categories and distinctions that speakers of a particular language being studied may not find natural. More in-depth and beyond the glossary studies of Lolo-Burmese languages will hopefully become available to help us better shed light on this interesting area of the TB lexicon.

The semantic connection between LIGHTNING and BUTTERFLY seems to reside in the iridescent quality of many butterfly wings, as well as by the rapidity of their wings flapping.

Bauer (1992) has identified this root as a “pan-Southeast Asianism”, and relates it to PTB g-ya:p FAN / WINNOW / PADDLE / WAVE (v.) (§6.8).

Also undoubtedly related to this etymon is PTB s-lap WING / FLUTTER / EYELASH / GILL (§1.5.1).

(15) PTB *twaŋ RAINBOW

This root is hesitantly set up on the basis of a number of scattered forms, including one from Chinese.

According to Marrison, this Meithei binome means either 'rain' or 'rainbow'.

In Chinese, 蝀 dōng is typically seen in the synonym compound 蝃蝀 or 蠙蝀 dìdōng 'rainbow', where 蝃 or 蠙 dì by itself can also mean 'rainbow' (cf. 蠙 OC tiɑd/tiei-, GSR #295k).

Schuessler 2007:278 reconstructs 蠙蝀 dìdōng as OCM tê(t)s-toŋ < tloŋ, with later stages LH tes-toŋ and MC tiei[C]-tuŋ. He notes "The wide range of forms, incl. dì-dōng, speaks for a non-ST source for this etymon. < > Kam-Tai: Zhuang lgs. have tu[2]-tuŋ[2] 'rainbow' and the like, where tu[2] is a prefix added to animals and persons. Li Xu-lian (1997) reconstructs this prefix as PT ta, among others based on forms like Wuming ta[6] and Bama tiə[6]. Luó Yǒngxiàn (MKS 27:1997:272) reconstructs PTai Druŋ: S. ruŋ[C2] 'rainbow'." [JAM, SPB]

(16) PTB *laŋ RAINBOW

This root seems to be fairly widely distributed across subgroups, although with scant attestation in each. There is some slight evidence for an s- prefix (Achang [Xiandao] l̥ŋ[55]ɲɔʔ[55]l̥aŋ[31]kam[55]).

At first glance, Bodo zay klóŋ 'rainbow' seems to reflect a velar prefix with this root, but it is at least equally probable that the second syllable actually means 'bridge' (cf. Bodo sayklóŋ), the semantic association residing in the arched appearance of the rainbow.

(19) PTB * s/m -kwa RAINBOW

This root is well attested in Qiangic, with a very likely Angami cognate. The putative Jingpho cognate with the rhyme -oi justifies the reconstruction of the nasal prefix; the presumed development of -wa to Jingpho -oi looks like the exact opposite of the sound change from Middle French -oi to Modern French -wa.

This etymon has an allofamic relationship with PTB muːŋ ⩤ r/s-muːk FOGGY / DARK / SULLEN / MENACING / THUNDER (§3.2.1), as suggested in STC (n.236, p.77). LaPolla 1987:11 notes that evidence from Dulong supports this contention.

(4) PTB * s / g -la MOON / MONTH

We prefer the "paradigmatic" reconstruction s/g-la to the "syntagmatic" one offered in STC, s-gla.

Jingpho, Asakian and Ao have developed a dental stop from the original *lateral. See JAM 2013 ("The dinguist's dilemma").

The first element in Proto-Tani po-lo resembles the prefix-like onset of Proto-Loloish bəla, but it is not possible to assign a meaning to it at present.

Lahu lɔ́-pa is a poetic word for MOON, which is of doubtful relationship to the ordinary word ha-pa. Cognates have just been found in several recently discovered Loloish languages of the "Mangish" group (Lama Ziwo 2015, in prep.): Mongi li[13] e[13] pɔ[13], Mondzi lie[13] pɔ[13], Munji la[33] po[31].

(17) PTB *s-nəy SUN / DAY / DWELL

This extremely well-attested root shows considerable evidence for the s- prefix (Qiangic, rGyalrongic, Sema, Kaike). The Qiangic forms with initial sibilants are deemed to show preemption by this prefix.

The Written Burmese doublet ne 'sun' (Tone *1) and ne' 'day' (Tone *3), indirectly reflects the absence or presence of the s- prefix. See Thurgood (1981) "Notes on the Origin of Burmese Creaky Tone".

There is also scattered evidence for a velar prefix with this root (Khumi, Kom Rem).

The final -t in the Chinese comparandum may be purely "extrusional" (see HPTB:464-465).

(8) PTB * $\begin{matrix}\textbf{r}\\\textbf{m}\end{matrix}$ -ba WAVE (in water) / RIPPLE

The nasal prefix is confirmed by the voiced initials in Lahu. The r- and d- prefixes are directly attested in Tibetan. It has been shown that the semantically mysterious r- prefix is reflected by a syllabic nasal in Jingpho (STC p. 109), indicating that the former is more ancient in TB as a whole. The d- in Tibetan is not paralleled elsewhere as far as is now known.

Chinese comparandum

For 鐵, Karlgren posits OC t'-; later reconstructions have ST, PC and/or OC voiceless lateral lh-, hl-, or l̥- (at the MC stage, all reconstructions for 鐵 show initial t'-, cf. B & S 2011 MC thet).

Significantly, the recent ST, PC and OC reconstructions for 鐵 cited above, with initial lh-, hl-, or l̥-, bear close comparison with PTB l-tsyak 'iron'. In fact, some scholars would prefer to derive WT lčags 'iron' via palatalization of earlier PT hlyak (Coblin, ibid.) or earlier lhyaks (Schuessler, ibid.). This looks phonetically plausible; however, it begs the question of subgroup relationships within TB. Is the same shift hly/lhy- > lč intended to account not only for WT lčags, but presumably, and ultimately also, WB jak 'bit of a bridle (of iron)' and Lotha Naga jon[1] tʃak[2] 'iron' (Bruhn 14 PCN:III.174)? For now, this intriguing issue will be left open for further inquiry. [SPB]

The initial consonant reflexes of this root vary between affricates, dental stop, and s-, in a manner similar to PTB (t)sum MORTAR (§5.5).

Written Tibetan attests both the b- and g- prefixes.

Mizo has a doublet dai-lêng 'shit' and tŭi-êk 'rust', motivating the reconstruction of medial -w-.

(15) IA *gan ⪤ *gat ⪤ *gay SULFUR

The Mikir forms descend immediately from Assamese gandhaka. Cf. Turner 1966:214-5.

(1) PTB *b-liŋ FOREST / FIELD

STC (pp.80-81, n.246) hesitantly groups Tibetan źiŋ and Lepcha lyăŋ in this etymon, but the semantic differences among the various reflexes are certainly not too great to preclude this interpretation.

(3) PTB *gliŋ GROUND / LAND / ISLAND

STC #128 groups Black Lahu mɨ̀-gɨ̀ 'land' (cf. also Yellow Lahu mi^{2}gɯ^{2}) in this etymon but this is not plausible, since the rhyme -iŋ consistently becomes -ɛ in Black Lahu. The second syllable should rather be assigned to PTB m/s-k-rəy SKIN (§1.6.5), so that the compound mɨ̀-gɨ̀ actually means "earth-skin".

(8) PTB *ri MOUNTAIN

This morpheme frequently occurs as the first element in compounds for wild animals. Many languages in the Tibetosphere have borrowed the Tibetan binome PTB *ri-dak ANIMAL (§1.1.1.1), sometimes preserving the vowel of the first syllable and sometimes reducing it to a schwa-like vowel.

(19) PTB *kl(y)u $\begin{matrix}ŋ\\k\end{matrix}$ VALLEY / RIVER

This is an East / Southeast Asian areal word; cf. Siamese khlɔɔŋ, Old Mon kruŋ, Cham krauŋ. HPTB reconstructs two separate roots (kluŋ ≍ kluk and klyoŋ), although it suggests that the two are related. We treat them here as co-allofamic.

Chinese kuk ~ gi̯uk 'valley' reflects the allofam with final stop.

It seems likely that this etymon is related to PTB grawk RAVINE / VALLEY (§1.4.2).

(4) PTB *kwar HOLE / ORIFICE / INNARDS

STC makes an artificial distinction between two groups of forms, one reconstructed kor 'valley; pit; cave' (#349) and the other kwar 'hole' (#350), here combined into a single etymon. This etymon is widely distributed in the NE Indian Areal Group, with scattered cognates elsewhere (Himalayish, Qiangic, Nungish, Bai). It appears as the last syllable in compounds referring to orifices of the body, especially EAR, NOSTRIL, ANUS, and VAGINA; occasionally also in compounds for EYE.

Sometimes, however, a similar morpheme appears as a monosyllable or as the first syllable in a compound; these cases I refer to a separate (but perhaps allofamically related) etymon NEIA ko(n/r) EAR (§1.2.7), with the specific meaning EAR. A key form here is Kom Rem kōr khur 'ear canal', with the structure NEIA ko(n/r) EAR (§1.2.7) + kor.

While I occasionally reconstruct kwar for the second syllables of compounds meaning EYE (e.g. Wancho mək-*ər), there is a group of Bodo-Garo forms meaning EYE where I set up a separate (but again perhaps allofamic) etymon NEIA gon EYE (§1.2.6), with the specific meaning EYE. Compare Bodo ha-khor 'hole, valley' vs. me-gon 'eye'; Garo ging-kol 'nostril' vs. mik-on 'eye'. There is also some evidence from Monpa Tsangla for the independence of this etymon and NEIA gon EYE (§1.2.6): miŋ-khor 'eye' vs. miŋ-khoŋ-(taŋ) 'eye (< PTB s-mik EYE (§1.2.6) + NEIA gon EYE (§1.2.6)).

This etymon may well be related to PTB s/m-kwar ROUND (§9.7.1), the common core of meaning perhaps residing in the round appearance of many holes (cf. WT kor 'round, circular hollow in the ground, pit').

It is often difficult to distinguish reflexes of this etymon from those of PTB (g/k)uŋ HOLE / ORIFICE / INNER PART (§3.2.7), especially with respect to Loloish and Qiangic. More than one allofam are evidently involved; cf. e.g. Lahu qhɔ 'inside; hole' ⩷ qō 'hollow object'.

(5) PTB * $\begin{matrix}\mathbf{g}\\\mathbf{k}\end{matrix}$ uŋ HOLE / ORIFICE / INNER PART

This widespread etymon is similar to PTB kwar HOLE / ORIFICE / INNARDS (§3.2.7) (below), in that it typically occurs as the second morpheme in binomes referring to orifices of the body, especially EAR, NOSTRIL, and ANUS; occasionally it occurs in compounds for VAGINA.

This etymon is certainly allofamically related to PTB s-kawŋ HOLLOW / HOLLOW OBJECT / HEAD (§1.2.1), as in the last syllable of, e.g. Lahu ó-qō 'head' < PLB bʷu²-ʔgoŋ².

It is also very possible that it is allofamically related to PTB huŋ HOLE (§1.9.5). For remarks on velar/laryngeal interchange in TB, see PTB (h/k)ay VAGINA (§1.9.5) above.

There are excellent Chinese comparanda: 空 OC k'ung, GSR #1172h 'hollow, empty' and 孔 OC k'ung, GSR #1174a-b 'very, greatly; empty'. Another likely Chinese relative is 肛 'anus', Mand. gāng (not in GSR #1172), though this might fit better with PTB k(w)a(ŋ/k) WAIST / HIPS / BUTTOCKS / TAIL / BACK (§1.4.6). See ZJH's discussion, below.

It is often difficult to distinguish reflexes of this etymon from those of PTB kwar HOLE / ORIFICE / INNARDS (§3.2.7), especially with respect to Loloish and Qiangic. More than one allofam are evidently involved; cf. e.g. Lahu qhɔ 'inside; hole' ≍ qō 'hollow object'.

Chinese comparanda

This OC-PTB comparison is long-recognized. See for example Simon 1929, Gong 1995 #75, Coblin 1986:71.

The Chinese forms are a perfect match for the TB reconstruction. For another example of this final correspondence, cf. PTB (t/d)uŋ ≋ (t/d)waŋ MIDDLE / NAVEL (§1.9.3). On the aspiration mismatch in the initial corresponce, see the discussion under PTB pu EGG (§1.9.1).

The two Chinese forms are clearly etymological doublets. Schuessler (2007:335) speculates that 孔 kǒng may be an 'endoactive' derivation meaning 'hole', from 空 kōng 'hollow, empty', lit. 'that which is hollow, empty'.

This word is not attested until the Middle Chinese period. The Old Chinese reconstruction would be krung (Li)/krong (Baxter) if we assume membership in GSR #1172; however, it is possible that the Old Chinese source is krong (Li)/krung (Baxter), and that the phonetic element of the character was chosen after the merger of these two OC finals. (The Mandarin pronunciation of 肛 gāng is irregular; we would expect jiāng.)

Schuessler (2007:251) suggests a comparison with WT gźaŋ 'anus'; however, the vowel correspondence is not good (unless a late borrowing is involved). It is certainly possible that this word is in the same family as 空 kōng and 孔 kǒng, although the function of -r- is not clear.

The final -p in Dumi is perhaps due to assimilation with the initial.

(5) PTB *m-tsyi SALT / YEAST

In the Southeast Asian linguistic area, yeast is used for brewing liquor rather than for baking bread. The semantic connection between SALT and YEAST can be understood as residing in the enlivening effect the two substances have on food and drink.

The nasal prefix attested overtly in many languages is also reflected by the voiced Lahu initial.

This root appears distinct from PTB tsa SALT (§3.2.9), which has a low vowel. Unlike Qiangic, we do not expect languages of the NE Indian Areal Group to have undergone a brightening change of a > i.

Many reflexes of this etymon are good examples of the process of "prefix pre-emption", whereby the prefix drives out a "weak" root-initial consonant.

(11) PTB *$\genfrac{}{}{0pt}{}{s}{z}$a-y EARTH / SAND

The Phunoi, Mpi, and Bisu forms are probably loans from Tai (cf. Siamese saaj < Proto-Tai zaay). The Siamese word is written with an initial indicating Proto-Tai dr-, but this is held to be spurious by Li Fang Kuei (1977:161-162).

If the WT form meaning 'earth' is indeed cognate to Chinese shā 'sand' (OC sa) [GSR #16a-c] / srāj [WHB]), as suggested in STC p. 188, it is possible that this is an old loan from Sino-Tibetan into Tai.

This etymon has an impressive number of variants, motivating an extreme pan-allofamic formula like PTB (p/b/h)(w/y)a(:)(r/l/n/t) FIRE / BURN / SHINE / BRIGHT / LIGHT / WHITE (§3.2.12). The sub-roots fall into several categories: some of the reflexes derive from prototypes with final *liquids; others point to earlier final *nasals; while still others derive from *open syllables. For convenience's sake, we will present the allofams in that order.

The semantic developments of this root are also quite varied, ranging from FIRE / BURN / KINDLE / ROAST to SHINE / LIGHT / BRIGHT to HEAT UP / SWEAT to WHITE / YELLOW. Less this be thought implausible, cf. Proto-Indo-European *bhel- "shine; flash; burn; shining white and various bright colors" which give us English reflexes including 'black', 'blank', 'blanch', 'bleak', 'bald', 'bleach', 'blue', 'blaze', 'blind', 'blend', 'blond', 'blink', etc. See HPTB 428-430.

[a] PKC has two homophonous roots, may TAIL and FIRE. These are quite separate etymologically (PTB r-may ⪤ m-ray TAIL / PENIS (§1.4.10.1) vs. PTB mey FIRE (§3.2.12)), although KVB (#794, #767) glosses certain forms with both English words.

[b] Ao mo ‘smoke’ reflects PTB mey FIRE (§3.2.12) but shows the result of vowel harmony with the root syllable.

(19) PKC *ho(o)l CHARCOAL

	kuaŋ^{1}/kuan^{1}	burn with flames	Bhaskararao 1994

(21) PTB *kəw- $^{n}_{t}$ SMOKE

This root could take either the -n suffix (as in Sunwar, Newar, and Chinese) or the -t suffix (as in Jingpho).

Many languages have binomes meaning SMOKE, where the first element is PTB mey FIRE (§3.2.12). This first element is sometimes "prefixized" to simple m-, as in Ergong/Daofu.

Many Loloish languages (e.g., Lahu mû-qhɔ̂) have a similar but different formation where the first element is from PTB r-məw SKY / HEAVENS / CLOUDS (§3.2.1).

Lahu has a doublet derived from this etymon: mû-qhɔ̂ 'smoke' < PLB kəw^{2} ⩙ qhɔ̀ʔ-lá 'ashes' < PLB kut^{L}

[a] STC has Lepcha bryaŋ 'name' "from sbraŋ" (p.31, fn.99). LaPolla has apparently interpreted this sbraŋ as an older Lepcha form, but it appears to be a PTB reconstruction (though missing an asterisk). Even Mainwaring's dictionary of Lepcha has 'name' as a-bryaṅ (1898:513).

This etymon is attested universally in Sino-Tibetan. The variant with final dental nasal is secondary, reflecting a rather widespread phenomenon of assimilation of final velars to medial -i-.

The semantic association between NAME and COMMAND probably stems from the notion of a superior designating a particular person to carry out a task.

In Baxter's reconstruction, the OC forms with initial mrj- are completely compatible with the reconstruction of PST prefixal r-, which could easily have metathesized with the labial nasal in Chinese.

(4) PTB *ŋa-y ≍ *ka I / ME / 1st p. PRONOUN / SELF

The variant of this root with final palatal semivowel is attested in Jingpho, Central Naga, and Qiangic languages. The variant with velar stop is found in Kuki-Chin, Kiranti, and Qiangic. Bodo-Garo has a metathesized form aŋ, which has probably arisen from syncope of a form with an a- prefix, a-ŋa, which actually exists synchronically in Garo.

(7) PTB *su ≷ *s-lu WHO / INDEF PRONOUN / REMOTE 3RD PERS.

This etymon undoubted underlies the last syllable in many TB language names, e.g., Bisu, Lisu, Moso, Nasu, Nosu, Ersu, etc. I also believe that the last syllable of LAHU derives from an allofam s-lu, that is also reflected by WB lu 'person'. This view is reinforced by the existence of language names like Lalo and Laghuu. This etymology was first suggested in JAM 1969 ("Lahu and Proto-Lolo-Burmese").

Another etymon recruited for names of Tibeto-Burman ethnic groups is PPC r-mi(y)-n PERSON / MAN (§4.4.1).

(8) PTB *na-ŋ YOU / THOU / 2ND PERSON PRONOUN

As is frequently the case with pronouns, there is quite a bit of variation with this etymon. In particular, the Loloish languages have multiple reflexes for YOU (sg.), YOU (du.) and YOU (pl.). A number of languages have an open-syllable allofam, but most reflexes have the final velar nasal.

See e.g. nɔ̀-hɨ, nì-hɨ, nì-hɨ 'you (pl.)' (DL 792). For an analysis of pronominal paradigms in Loloish, see Matisoff 1993 ("Sangkong").

9.0.1. OLD CHINESE

Chinese (Old/Mid)	tsi̯əg/tsi:	son / daughter / child;young of animals	Karlgren 1957:964a-j

[b] K. P. Malla (p.c. 2007) analyzes this form as consisting of te ‘navel’, pu ‘seed, round thing’, ca (preferably chaa) ‘DIMINUTIVE; child’. Newar chaa appears in compounds like ma-chaa ‘a child’ and khi-chaa ‘a dog’.

(2) PTB *bu CHILD

This etymon means CHILD. It is included here because of the important WT form bu-snod ‘womb’ (“child-vessel”). Care is required to distinguish this etymon from reflexes of PTB r/m-bu ≍ *pru NEST / WOMB / PLACENTA (§1.9.6), above. The Tibetan-Chinese comparison is due to Coblin (1986:164).

The vowel correspondence is regular, as OC -uk (Li)/-ok (Baxter) normally corresponds to PTB -uk, as in ‘bend /crooked’ PTB guk∼*kuk, OC 曲 khjuk (Li)/kh(r)jok (Baxter); Mand. qū, qǔ. However, the presence of coda -k in the Chinese form is unexplained.

Peiros and Starostin (1996.1:57 #203) relate this Chinese word to Tibetan phrug ‘child’ and Burmese pauk ‘young of animals’.

(3) PPC *r-mi(y)-n PERSON / MAN

The -n suffix (a morpheme signifying collectivity, according to Benedict, STC n. 428, pp. 157-8) is attested in Written Burmese and Chinese.

This morpheme frequently occurs as first element in compounds signifying body part terms (e.g., in Mzieme, Zeme, Magar).

It also occurs as final element in names of Tibeto-Burman ethnic groups (e.g., Prinmi, Thangmi, Khumi, Xumi), and as first element in such names as well (e.g., Mizo, Mikir, Mishing, Miji). In this respect, it is similar to PTB su ≍ s-lu WHO / INDEF PRONOUN / REMOTE 3RD PERS. (§4.1).

(3) PTB *d-gra STRANGER / ENEMY

The Qiangic / rGyalrongic forms are probably borrowings from Tibetan. This root is undoubtedly allofamically related to PTB g-raːl ⩙ *g-ran ⩙ *ray ENEMY / FIGHT / QUARREL / STRIFE / SWORD / WAR (§6.5).

A Chinese comparandum 旅 OC gli̯o GSR #77a Mand. lyŭ ‘guest, stranger; traveller’ has been suggested by Gong Hwang-cherng (2001:27). The semantic connection between ‘enemy’ and ‘guest’ is paralleled in Indo-European: PIE ghos-ti- > PGermanic gastiz ‘guest’, Latin hostis ‘enemy’ (< ‘stranger’). Cf. also the opposed meanings of English ‘host’: (a) ‘entertainer of guests’, (b) ‘army of foes’.

4.6.0 Ethnonyms/Place names

(1) PBod *r-gya CHINESE

WT rgya, glossed in Jäschke (p. 104) as “seal, stamp, mark, sign, token” is perhaps the origin of this ethnonym, which has somehow come to refer both to China and India, and by extension to European colonials in India. Jäschke observes (p. 106) that some scholars of his day derived it from feringhi, a general term for Europeans used since the Crusades, deriving ultimately from ‘Frank, France, French.’

The Qiangic/rGyalrongic forms all seem to be loans from Tibetan.

(1) PTB *p[w]a-n ≍ *b[w]a-n GRANDMOTHER

HPTB:174 incorrectly gives “GSR 25q” as the source of the OC reconstruction. Actually, however, this character is not to be found in GSR, but is cited in STC:174 as well as in Benedict 1942 (“Tibetan and Chinese kinship terms”).

9.0.1. Old Chinese

Chinese (Old/Mid)	b‘wâ/b‘uâ	old woman / grandmother	Chou Fa-kao 1972:25q

Chinese comparandum

Karlgren cites 婆 pó as GSR #25q with the gloss “dance, saunter”; this meaning is attested in ancient sources such as Er Ya 爾雅, but is not relevant to the present comparandum. The meaning “old woman, grandmother, female relative”, which does concern us here, is attested for 婆 pó in post-Han times, and is the only meaning commonly associated with 婆 pó in modern standard Chinese. Of course, it is possible (and it is our assumption) that a Chinese etymon “old woman, …”, reconstructed as OC b’wâ or similar, existed in Han times or earlier. [SPB]

Chinese comparandum

出 OC t̂'i̯wət, GSR #496a-e; Chou 1972:213; Mand. chū.

This character, which means 'emerge' in Modern Chinese, is glossed 'nephew, descendant' in 爾雅 Er Ya (see Benedict 1942, 'Tibetan and Chinese kinship terms'). The OC form t̂'i̯wət is treated as a -t-suffixed variant of PTB m-(t/d)u.

Due to a typographical error, a wrong character (畀, Mand. bì, 'confer, give') was cited in HPTB:200 instead of 出 (Mand. chū), cited correctly on p. 464.

(4) PLB *ʔ-lu^{1} FRY / STIR-FRY / TOAST

This root is universal in Lolo-Burmese, and also appears in two adjacent Qiangic languages influenced by LB, as well as in Naxi.

The WB reflex has -o instead of the expected -u, perhaps reflecting a variant with PLB -aw. Several Burmish languages have the diphthongal reflex -ai. This suggests that the PLB rhyme is still subject to revision.

(5) PTB *m-hla SOUL / DEMON / GOD / BEAUTIFUL

This root has been reconstructed with a nasal prefix at the PTB level, but many languages have fully vocalized disyllabic compounds where the initial syllable begins with a nasal (cf. Jingpho min, Tangkhul maŋ, Proto-Ao hməy). It is thus natural to assume that this first element represented a separate morpheme which was subsequently "prefixized." It is possible that this morpheme was actually PTB s-maŋ BODY / CORPSE (§1.1.6.1).

(3) PTB *m-dzəy CHISEL

This etymon has so far only been discovered in Loloish and Qiangic. The nasal prefix is reconstructed on the basis of Qiangic reflexes.

A number of Loloish forms in this set may actually be borrowings from Chinese, cf. Mandarin záozi 鑿.

刀 OC tog GSR #1131a 'knife'; Schuessler 2007:207 tâu; B & S 2011: C.t^{ʕ}aw; Mand. dāo.

Schuessler 2007:207 views Chinese 刀 dāo as perhaps an "…[A]rea word or CH loan". As an alternative, we posit Sino-Tibetan s-ta-w, with suffix -w, on the assumption that the suffix was dropped in Tibeto-Burman, yielding PTB s-ta, but was retained in Sinitic, yielding OC C.t^{ʕ}aw (cf. B & S 2011).

Comparative evidence for suffix -w within Sinitic or Tibeto-Burman is sparse (cf. PTB ka-y/w/m EAT, where the range of reconstructed finals awaits confirmation). Nonetheless, the fact remains that PTB s-ta 'knife, axe, sword' and OC C.t^{ʕ}aw 'knife' are quite close phonologically, and appear to reside within very old, core lexicon of their respective subfamilies. We suggest the issue of cognacy be left open for further research, rather than rejected outright. [SPB].

(9) PTB *k-ra $\frac{\text{p}}{\text{m}}$ NEEDLE

A number of reflexes point to initial r-, while many others reflect an initial velar; we are treating the velar element as prefixal, so that the reflexes with initial velar are deemed to have undergone prefix pre-emption. Written Burmese has an anomalous zero or glottal stop initial, a variational phenomenon which occurs in a considerable number of roots (see HPTB:57 and JAM 1997).

The Chinese comparandum has a final labial nasal.

(3) DRV *wut BRICK

Cf. also Proto-Mon-Khmer ʔit 'brick' (Shorto 2006:R:940.A).

This root appears both in Naga languages and in Burmish. Among the cognates are words meaning 'open' or 'close', but this seems reasonable given that doors may be either opened or closed in a Janus-like way.

Chinese comparandum

Benedict (STC 169n452) suggests a connection with GSR 560a-d.

(7) PTB * g b m -la-y BOW / ARROW

This root is very likely allofamic with PTB m-da ARROW (§5.15). The alternation between apical stops and laterals in TB has been discussed in detail in Matisoff 2013 ("The dinguist's dilemma").

STC (p.176, n.469) identifies this TB root with 弋 OC diə̯k 'shoot with arrow with string attached / arrow (of this type)' (GSR #918a-b), with an unexplained velar suffix.

(31) PTB *ŋ-wa TRAP

The Tamangic group has forms with initial ŋ-, while other languages reflect a simple w-, leading to the hypothesis that ŋ has there been treated as a prefix and dropped. In any case, ŋ and w are extremely close phonetically, which might have encouraged the loss of the first element in a ŋw sequence.

(10) PTB *du DWELL / STAY / SIT / REST / LIVE

For now, we consider this etymon as distinct from PTB m-(t/d)u(ŋ/k) SIT (§6.1.1), although several reflexes have -i vocalism; such -i ≍ -u variation has so far only been solidly attested in closed syllables. The Qiangic form with -i- shows the expected "brightening".

The Apatani forms might also come from PTB ta LIVE (§1.1.2.1).

Schuessler (2007:371) attributes OC initial r- in 落 râk to Austroasiatic influence, where OC initial l- might otherwise be expected based on comparison with TB (C-)l- for this etymon. In this regard, however, Matisoff identifies "...several etyma where PTB (C-)l- seems to correspond to Baxter's (C)-r-, including 'fall', 'good', 'neck', 'salty', 'strength / arm', and 'young man / husband'"(HPTB:53). We reiterate here Matisoff's (ibid.) claim that the relationship between TB l-/r- and OC l-/r- is complex and has yet to be fully clarified. Apparent irregularities in correspondences between TB/OC l-/r- may therefore not always be attributable to loans to or borrowings into TB/OC.

(31) PTB *m- t/d u ŋ/k SIT

Dialects of Tibetan point to variants with final velar stop and/or nasal prefix. The long vowel is reconstructed on the basis of the Written Burmese rhyme -uiŋ.

This root strongly resembles PTB du DWELL / STAY / SIT / REST / LIVE (§6.1.1), and may well be allofamic with it.

In addition, there well may be a relationship between this root and PNungic roŋ SIT (§6.1.1). For a similar alternation between d- and r-, see numbers PTB (t/d)ak WEAVE (§6.24) and PTB rak WEAVE / DRIVE / CHASE (§6.24).

(32) PNungic *roŋ SIT

This root is very likely related to PTB m-(t/d)u(ŋ/k) SIT (§6.1.1), despite the unusual variation between a dental stop and initial r-. However, we posit a similar relationship between the very well-established PTB (t/d)ak WEAVE (§6.24) and PTB rak WEAVE / DRIVE / CHASE (§6.24).

6.2.2 Assorted action verbs

(1) PTB * $\begin{matrix}\mathbf{g}\\\mathbf{k}\end{matrix}$ wa-n WEAR / CLOTHE

(1a) PTB *s-gywa $\begin{matrix}\mathbf{n}\\\mathbf{t}\end{matrix}$ WEAR / PUT ON / CLOTHE

All the forms cited here were put into the same etymon for the first time in HPTB:333-334.

The alternation between homorganic nasal and stop in this root is well-attested. Note the complex word family in WT. There is a good Chinese comparandum.

The Qiangic (including Tangut) forms show the expected "brightening" of the vowel to -i.

We reconstruct this interesting root with medial -l- on the basis of the PKC form, even though this medial does not appear overtly elsewhere in TB. Written Tibetan lacks an skl cluster, so that medial -y- was substituted for it. Written Burmese has a doublet, kyôŋ 'feed, tend cattle' and ə-coŋ' 'watchman, guard', with the latter apparently a later development. This etymon is thus a good example of a proto-contrast better preserved in a particular subgroup than in the family as a whole.

(51) PTB *pu- n ŋ CARRY

This root bears a strong resemblance to the widespread etymon PTB bəw CARRY (ON BACK OR SHOULDERS) (§6.2.2), and the Karenic forms were assigned to that root in the original version of STC. However, the published version (p. 135) recognizes that this is a complex root in Karenic, and it now seems best to treat these two etyma separately.
