of the Eng, word are due to the influence of F. lot.
The primary meaning of the Teut. root *hleut- is uncertain. Schrader has suggested that it may have been furmed by secondary ablant from the wk-grade *hlut- (repr. pre-Teut. k/d-: see Holt) in the sb. *hluto-m, the primary sense of which would then be the piece of wood used in casting lots. But this conjecture is very doubtful, and not free from difficulties.]

1. An object (app. usually a piece of wood) used in a widely diffused ancient method of deciding disputes, dividing plunder or property, selecting persons for an office or duty, etc., by an appeal to chance or the divine agency supposed to be con-cerned in the results of chance. The 'lots', each bearing the special mark of one of the competitors, were placed in a receptacle (in Homeric Greece a helmet); according to Greek procedure the vessel was shaken, the winning lot being that which fell out first; in Scandinavia (see Vigf. s. v. hlutr) the winning lot was drawn out by an uninterested party. In Eng. (exc. in rare modern instances, chiefly translations from ancient langs.) the word in this sense occurs only in the phr. to cast, draw (+ also lay, pul, send, throw, warp) lots (or + lot); followed by on or upon, over, between, for (the object or objects concerned); also by inf. or indirect interrog. clause.

pul, send, throw, warp) lots (or † lot); followed by on or upon, over, between, for (the object or objects concerned); also by inf. or indirect interrog. clause. In genuine OE. idiom the vb. governing hlot was voerpan to throw (see Warp v.); cf. G. das loss verfen, L. sortes conicere, Gr. κλήρον βαλλεω. In ME. werpe was superseded by the synonymous cast and throw. The OE. use of sendau is a Latiuisin, after mittere of the Vulgate. The only forms of the phrase that survive are to cast lots (arch.) and to draw lots (cf. F. tirer au sort), which is interpreted as synonymous with to draw cuts (CUT sh.) 1.

The spelling lover (cf. flower) renders the ward identical in its written form with Lower, to bring or come down, and the two vbs. have often been confused: when said of clouds, lower (lau-e) to look threatening, has some affinity in sense with lower (law-e) to descend, and it is not always possible to discover which vb. was in the mind of a writer.

Low Churchman. [Cf. High Churchman.]

A member of the Church of England holding opinions which give a low place to the authority and claims of the episcopate and priesthood, to the inherent grace of the sacraments, and to matters of ecclesiastical organization. and thus differ relaof ecclesiastical organization, and thus differ relatively little from the opinions held by Protestant Nonconformists.

Nonconformists.

The term, invented as an antithesis to High Churchman, was in the early part of the 18th c, used as equivalent to LAITUDINARIAN. Afterwards it fell into disuse, but was revived in the 19th c., when the designation High Churchman had obtained a new currency as applied to those who inclined to the theology and ritual of pre-Reformation times. In this later use, Low Churchman has for the most part been viewed as equivalent to Evangetical, and has rarely been applied to members of the Broad Church School. 1792 Charac. [a. OF. losenge, losange (mod.F. losange) = Sp. losanje, Catal. llosange, It. lozanga; perh. a derivative of the word which appears as Prov. lausa, Sp. losa, Catal. llosa, Pg. lousa, slab, tombstone, OF. lause roofing slate.

It has been suggested that Prov. lausa:—late L. *lapidea (f. lapid, lapis stone) has been adopted into the other Rom. langs.; the presumed derivative losenge first occurs in Fr. (13th c.).]

1. A plane rectilineal figure, having four equal sides and two acute and two obtuse angles; a rhomb, 'diamond'. In Heraldry, such a figure used as a bearing, less elongated than the Fush, and placed with its longer axis vertical. † In lozenge = Lozenger. Grand lozenge, † lozenge in point: a lozenge the angles of which touch the sides of the shield. Lozenges in cross: four or point: a lozenge the angles of which touch the sides of the shield. Lozenges in cross: four or more lozenges disposed so as to form a cross.

Guillim's definition (quot. 1610) would require that the neute angles should be of 60°; but the rule is not strictly followed by heraldic draughtsmen.

fur of the lynx; for a similar instance of an adjective becoming a sb., cf. MARTEN.

The spelling leuxerne (quot. 1660), if not a misprint, is conclusive evidence in favour of this derivation. Etymologists have usually supposed the word to be an alteration of the OF. loucerve, leuserve, female lynx, a fem. of unexplained form corresponding to the masc. loug-cervier repr. L. lugus cervièrius (Pliny) lynx, lit. 'stag-hunting wolf' (lugus wolf, cervièrius adj. f. cervus stag). But this hypothesis does not account for the form of the Eng. word, nor can it be satisfactorily referred to the OF. loug cerviin (as if L. *lugus cerviinus=lugus cervarius) of which Godef, gives one example. was supposed to be referred to in Isa. Niv. 12; Satan, the Devil. Now rare in serious use; current chiefly in the phrase As proud as Lucifer.

The Scripture passage (Vulg. 'Quomodo cecidisti de caelo, Lucifer, qui mane oriebaris?' A.V. 'How art thou fallen from heauen, O Lucifer, sonne of the morning?') is part of a 'parable against the king of Babylon' (Isa. xiv. 4); but the mention of a fall from heaven led Christian interpreters to suppose that 'king of Babylon' was to be interpreted spiritually, as a designation of the chief of 'the angels who kept not their first estate'. Hence the general patristic view that Lucifer was the name of Satan before his fall. The Latin word was adopted in all the Eng. versions down to 1611; the Revised version has daystar.

[a. LG. (Du., OFris.) luk, a shortened form of geluk (MDu. gelucke = MHG. gelücke, mod.G. glück). Parallel adoptions of the LG. word are leel. lukka (14th c.), MSw. lukka, lykka (mod.Sw. lycka), Da. lykke. Probably it came into English as a gambling term; the LG. dialects were a frequent source of such terms in 15-16 centuries.

The ultimate etymology of MHG. gelücke (:-OHG. *gi.luchi:-OTeut. type *galukkjo-m) is obscure. So far as meaning is concerted nothing could be more plausible than Paul's wew (Beitr. VII. 133 note) that the word is connected with G. gelingen (OHG. gilingan) to succeed, turn out well or ill, as G. druck pressure with dringen to press, schluck gulp with schlingen to swallow, ruck wrench with ringen to wrench. But morphologically this assumption seems quite inadmissible, and most scholars deny the existence of etymological affinity in any of these instances. Formally, the word might be cognate with Louk v.¹ or v.², or with G. locken to entice (OHG. locken) and the synonymous OHG. lucchen; but no probable hypothesis seems to have been formed to connect the meaning of the slb. with that of any of these vbs.]

As a synonym of ear, it first appears early in the 16th c, and in colloquial Sc. use has entirely superseded the older word. Presumably this application is a transferred use of a word that existed earlier with some other meaning. It is possible that the sense 'ear-flap of a cap', which is the earliest represented in our quots, may really be prior to the sense 'ear'; for similar transferences of words from parts of clothing to the parts of the body covered, cf. breech, crown, sole. If so, the word may perh. be of Scandinavian origin, with a general sense of 'something that can be pulled or laid hold of', specialized differently in Sw. lugg forelock, with which cf. Eng. dial. lectures without payment, and to receive certain dues from the other students, in return for services rendered by him.

The Librarian of the University, Mr. J. Maitland Anderson, informs us that the first student whom he has found described in the records as 'luminator' entered the University in 1697; it is, however, probable that the title goes back to mediaval times. It is supposed that the 'luminator' originally provided lights and fires to the classes; but there is no contemporary evidence of this. Between 1800 and 1827 his duties seem to have been those of a clerk (cf. quot. a 1808). The office was abolished about 1830.

It is commonly stated that the University seal contains a representation of a 'luminator' holding a candle while a professor is lecturing. But whether the object is a candle or something else (2 a mace), and whether the figure holding it is meant for the 'luminator', seems to be quite uncertain. Obviously related in some way to this Fr. word are early and dial, mod.G. lortsch, lurtsch, lorz, lurz, the name of a game, also as adj. in lurz neerden, a phrase in various games, expressing the failure to achieve some object aimed at; MHG. lorz, lurz (also lerz), mod. Ger. dial. lurz, lurtsch left (hand), wrong, whence MDu. lordsch. The most plausible supposition with regard to the relation between these words is that the MHG. lurz left, wrong, or its derivative lurtsch (cf. linksch from link), was adopted into Fr. as a gaming term (lourche adj.), and that lourche sb. as the name of a game was developed from the adj. LUSH sh.²
The 'City of Lushington' was the name of a convivial society (consisting chiefly of actors) which met at the Harp Tavern, Russell Street, until about 1895. It had a 'Lord Mayor' and four 'aldermen', presiding over 'wards' called Juniper, Poverty, Lunacy, and Suicide. On the admission of a new member, the 'Lord Mayor' (of late years at least) harangued him on the evils of excess in drink. The 'City' claimed to have existed for 150 years; if this claim be wellfounded, the existence of Lt sn sk.² will be authenticated for a date considerably earlier than that of our first quot. Our information is from 'Sir' B. Davies, the last 'Lord Mayor of Lushington'.]

A adj. Pertaining to the German reformer Martin Luther (1483–1546), his opinions and followers. In the 16th c. the designation was used by Roman Catholic writers as coextensive with Protestant; applied, e.g., to the reformed Church of England. Now chiefly applied to doctrinal views held by Luther in opposition to other reformers, e.g. his doctrine as to the nature of Christ's presence in the Eucharist (see Construction), and as the appellation of those churches, principally in Germany and Scandinavia, which accept the Augsburg Confession as their official doctrinal symbol.

Ly, obs. f. Lie, Lye; var. Leye Obs., flame.

-ly, suffix1 (Forms: 1-lie, lie, 2-5-lich, 4-5-liche, 3-5 north.-lik(e, (3 Orm.-lie, -li3, -like), 3-6-li, 4--ly), appended to sbs. and adjs. to form adjs., represents the OE. -lic, corresponding to OFris., OS. -lik (Dn. -lijk), OllG. -lik (MilG.-lich, mod.G. -lich', ON.-lig.r, -leg-r (Sw., Da.-lig), Goth.-leik-s:—OTeut.-liko-. The phonology of the OF. form, as also of the mod.G. and the ON. forms, is somewhat abnormal, the frequency in use of the suffix having caused loss of quency in use of the suffix having caused loss of of the original secondary stress, with consequent shortening of the vowel, and in ON. also voicing of the guttural. A further irregularity appears in the phonetic development in ME. The normal representation of OE. -lic was -lik in northern dialects and -lich in southern dialects. These forms are found as late as the 15th century; but the form -li, -ly, which (though parallel with the reduction of OE. ic to I, and of ME. everich to every) seems to be chiefly due to the influence of the Scandinavian -lig-, occurs in northern and midthe scandina and artistics are all and dialects as early as the 13th c., and before the end of the 15th c. had become universal. In the Ormulum (c 1200) -lic (tarely -like) is used before a vowel and at the end of a line, and -li3 before a cons.; the inflected form -like (disyllabic) seems often to be used, for metrical reasons, where grammar would require the uninflected form. In the comparative and superlative (OE. -licra, -c, -licost) the ME. form had regularly -k according to phonetic law in all dialects (in the south the usual 13-14th c. form was -lukere, -lokere); but where the positive had the form -li new comparatives and superlatives in -lier, liest were regularly formed from it.

The original Teut, adjs. in -liko- were compounds of the sb. *likom appearance, form, body (see Licii).

Thus *mannliko- ('manly') means elymologically 'having the appearance or form of a man'; godo-liko- ('goodly') 'having a good appearance or form', or 'having the appearance or form of what is good'. The primitive force of the suffix may therefore be rendered by 'having the appearance or form indicated by the first element of the word'; but while in the historical Teut. langs, it has remained capable of expressing this meaning, it has in all of them acquired a much wider application.

When appended to sbs., the most general senses of the suffix in all Teut. langs. are 'having the qualities appropriate to', 'characteristic of', 'bentting'. In English of all periods it has been a prolific formative; the adjs, formed with it are most frequently eulogistic, as in kingly, knightly, aucenly, scholarly, soldierly most requently eulogistic, as in kingly, knightly, masterly, princely, queenly, scholarly, soldierly (cf. manly, womanly with mannish, womanish); among the examples with dyslogistic sense are beastly, beggarly, cowardly, dastardly, rascally, ruffianly, scoundrelly. In OE, as in other Teut. langs, the suffix had often the sense 'of or pertaining to'; but the adjs, have, so far as this meaning is concerned, been to a great extent superseded by synonyms of Latin or Romanic etymology. Thus manly formerly admitted of the senses now expressed by human and masculine; for one of the older senses of timely we must now say temporal. Another use of the suffix, common to English with other Teut. langs., is to form adjs. denoting periodic recurrence, as daily, hourly, monthly, nightly, weekly, yearly.

When -ly is appended to an adj., the resulting derivative adj. often connotes a quality related to or resembling that expressed by its primary; cf., e.g., OE. Wof'dear' with Woffic 'lovely' (or, as it might be rendered, 'such as becomes dear'). The diminutive sense found in mod.G. gelblich yellowish. siisslich sweetish, though a very easy development from the original sense of the suffix, does not seem ever to have existed in English. Even in OE. -lie had app. ceased to be used in new formations from adjs.; the new adjs. f. adj. +-/y that have arisen in ME. or in mod. E. seem to be from the advs.

in ME. or in mod.E. seem to be from the advs.

-ly, suffix 2 (Forms: 1-2-lice, 2-5-liche, 4-5
-lich, 3-5 north. -like, (3 Orm. -like, -liz), 3-6
-li, 4- -ly), forming adverbs, represents OE.
-liee, corresponding (functionally if not morphologically) to OFris. -like, OS. -liko (M.Du. -like, Du. -lijk, MLG. -like, mod.LG. -lik), OHG.
-lichô (MHG. -liche, mod.G. -lich), ON. -liga, -lega (MSw. -lika, -leka, in mod.Sw. superseded by -ligt, -ligen; Da. -lig), Goth. -leikô, derived from
-liko- (see -Lv) with an adverb-forming suffix,
OTeut. -ô, according to some rept, the ending of OTeut. $-\hat{o}$, according to some repr. the ending of the abl. fem. (pre-Teut. $-\bar{a}d$) or neut. (pre-Teut. $-\bar{o}d$); according to others that of the instrumental neut. (pre-Teut. -om).

The form-history of the suffix in Eng. is similar to that of -1.x 1: in ME, the OE. -lice was normally represented by -liche (southern), -like (northern', the compar. being -tiker, -luker, -loker (superl. -est). The form -li, -ly, which was current in East Midland English in the 14th c., and became general in the 15th c., is probably due to the influence of the ON. -liga. In the strongly Scandinavianized dialect of the Ormulum ($\epsilon$1200) -ligand -like are used indifferently, according to the requirements of the metre. Where the positive ended in -li, -ly, the comparative and superlative ended in -lier, -liest. In the 15-17th c. forms like falslyer, traitorouslyer (Malory), softlier, justlier, widelier (Long Barclay's Argenis 1625), easilier, -est (R. Baxter Saving Faith 1658) were common, but in later use the advs. in -ly are compared with more, most, the inflexional forms being only employed in poetry or for rhetorical effect. In OTeut. an adv. with this suffix must have

In OTeut, an adv. with this suffix must have implied the existence of an adj, with the suffix corresponding to -LY 1. In OE., however, there are several instances (e.g. bealdlice boldly, swettlice sweetly) in which an adv. in -lice has been formed directly from a simple adj, without the intervention of an adj, in -lic. In ME, the number of these direct formations was greatly increased, and when the final -e, which was the original OE. adverb-making suffix, ceased to be pronounced, it became usual to append -ly to an adj. as the regular mode of forming an adv. of manner. It was, down to the 17th c., somewhat frequently attached, with this function, even to adjs. in -ly, as earlily, godlily, kindlily, livelily, lovelily, statelily; but these forma-tions are now generally avoided as awkward, while on the other hand it is felt to be ungraceful to use words like godly, goodly, lovely, mannerly, timely, as advs.; the difficulty is usually evaded by recourse to some periphrastic form of expression. In examples belonging to the 16th and 17th c. it is someamples belonging to the 10th and 17th c. it is sometimes difficult to determine whether a writer intended the adv. goodly to mean 'in a good manner' or 'in a goodly manner', and there are other instances of similar ambiguity. In the words denoting periodical recurrence, as daily, hourly, the adj. and the adv. are now identical in form. A solitary example of an adv. f. sb. $+ -ly^2$ with no related adj. example of an adv. I. sb. +-ly² with no related adj. is partly. From the early part of the 16th c. the suffix has been added to ordinal numerals to form advs. denoting serial position, as firstly, secondly, thirdly, etc. (cf. F. premièrement, etc.).

When-ly is attached to a disyllabic or polysyllabic adj. in -le, the word is contracted, as in ably, doubly, singly, simply; contractions of this kind occur already in the 14th c., but examples of the Vol. VI.

uncontracted forms (e. g. doublely) are found as late | as the 17th c. Whole + -ly becomes wholly, but in all other similar instances the written e is rein all other similar historics the writer that is retained before the suffix, e.g. in fully, vilely, purilely. Adjs. ending graphically with 1/l lose one / before -ly, as in fully (in southern Eng. commonly pronounced with a single l, but in Scotland often with double or long I, dully (dr. lili), coolly ($k\bar{n}^{i}l_{i}l_{i}$). Adjs. of more than one syll. ending in y change y to i before -ly, as in merrily; in formations from monosyllabic adjs. the usage varies, e.g. dryly, drily; gayly, gaily (cf. daily, which is the only current form); slyly, slily (but always shyly); greyly, grayly has always y. Another orthographical point is the dropping of the e in the two words duly, truly. It is unusual to append -ly to an adj. in -ic; the ending of the adv. is nearly always -ICALLY, even when the only current form of the adj ends in six always -1eALI, even when the only current form of the adj. ends in -ir.

mary punishment upon an offender, by a self-constituted court armed with no legal authority; it is now limited to the summary execution of one charged with some flagrant offence.

Now most commonly written lynchelaw or lynch law, though the capital L is still often used.

The origin of the expression has not been determined. It is often asserted to have arisen from the proceedings of Charles Lynch, a justice of the peace in Virginia, who in 1782 was indennified by an act of the Virginia Assembly for having illegally fined and imprisoned certain Tories in 1780. But Mr. Albert Matthews informs us that no evidence has been adduced to show that Charles Lynch was ever concerned in acts such as those which from 1817 onward were designated as 'Lynch's law'. It is possible that the perpetrators of these acts may have claimed that in the infliction of punishments not sanctioned by the laws of the country they were following the example of Lynch, which had been justified by the act of indennity; or there may have been some other man of this name who was a ringleader in such proceedings. Some have conjectured that the term is derived from the name of Lynche's Creek, in South Carolina, which is known to have been in 1768 a meeting-place of the 'Regulators', a band of men whose professed object was to supply the want of regular administration of criminal justice in the Carolinas, and who committed many acts of violence on those suspected of 'Toryism'.

1817 S. Roaxs in W. Wirt Life P. Henry (1818) 372 In the year 1792, there were many suits on the south side of the James river, for inflicting Lynch's law. 1819 W. Fraux Diary 29 Nov. in Memor.
