Syllabub: see SILLABUB Syllabus (si·lābvs). Pl. syllabi (si·lābəi) or syllabusəs (si·lābvsez). [mod.L. syllabus, usually referred to an alleged Gr. σύλλαβοs. Syllabus appears to be founded on a corrupt reading syllabos in some early printed editions—the Medicean MS, has sillabos—of Cicero Epp, ad Atticum IV. iv, where the reading indicated as correct by comparison with the MS, readings in IV, v. and viii. is sittybas or Gr. σιττύβαs, acc. pl. of sittyba, σιττύβα parchment label or title-slip on a book (Cf. Tyrrell and Purser Correspondence of Cicero nos. 107, 108, 112, Comm. and Adnot. Crit.) Syllabos was græcized by later editors as συλλάβους, from which a spurious σύλλοβος was deduced and treated as a derivative of συλλαμβάνειν to put together, collect (cf. Syllable).

In the passage from S. Augustine's Confessions XIII. XV. ('ibi legunt [sc. angeli] sine syllabis temporum quid velit aeterna voluntas tua 'commonly adduced as further evidence of L. syllabus, the word is clearly syllaba syllable.]

λογίζεσθαι to Syllogize.]

1. Logic. An argument expressed or claimed to be expressible in the form of two propositions called the premisses, containing a common or middle term, with a third proposition called the conclusion, resulting necessarily from the other two. Example: Onne animal est substantia, omnis homo est animal, ergo omnis homo est

The kind of syllogism illustrated by the above example is called simple or categorical. In valid categorical syllogisms, the premisses have the major and minor terms so disposed in respect of the position of the middle (see Figure 56, 23) and the quality and quantity of the premisses (see Mood 56, 21) that the conclusion affirms or denies the major term of the minor.

1. A formal authoritative statement or summary of the religious belief of the Christian church, or of a particular church or sect; a creed or confession of faith, spec, the Apostles' Creed.

This use is traceable to Cyprian, Bishop of Carthage (c 250), who applies L. symbolum to the baptismal creed, this creed being the 'mark' or 'sign' of a Christian as distinguished from a heathen. The notion, long current, that the creed was so called because it was 'put together' by the Apostles is without foundation in fact.

PREFACE TO THE LETTER T.

THE portion of the Dictionary (comprising the latter part of Vol. IX and the beginning of Vol. X) which treats of the words beginning with T contains in all 27,514 entries. Of that number, 14,457 are Main words, 3593 are Subordinate entries of obsolete forms, etc., 4428 are Special combinations, and 5036 are Obvious combinations not requiring explanation. Of the Main words 11,165 are still in current use, 2469 are now obsolete, and 823 are alien or not completely naturalized. The number of illustrative quotations for the whole letter is 108,926.

The comparative scale of this portion of the work and some other Dictionaries is shown by the following figures:—

The number of quotations in the corresponding portion of Richardson is 5764.

In respect of the number of words beginning with it, T is one of the larger letters of the alphabet, coming fourth in order after S, P, and C. In addition to all the vowels, it may be followed by the consonants r and w (exceptionally also by m, s, and z) giving the initial groups TR-, TW- (TM-, TS-, TZ-). TII- is also employed to represent the simple sounds b and d, and words commencing with this form a block of 164 pages between the end of TE- and the beginning of TI-, similar to those formed by CH-, PH-, and SH- in their respective places. These natural divisions of the letter vary considerably in the character of the vocabulary which they include. Native English words are fairly well represented in TA- and TE-, are numerous in TH-, TI-, TO-, and TW-, less frequent in TR- and TU-, and almost entirely absent in TY-. Where this clement is scanty, the Romanic is usually large, and in fact is prominent in all sections, except TH-, TI-, TW-, and TY-. The Scandinavian and other Teutonic languages have contributed occasional words in most of the divisions, the most important of all being the Scand. verb TAKE, which has completely supplanted the native nim. Greek is strongly represented in TE-, TH-, TO-, TR-, and TY-, and words from Oriental and more remote sources are most numerous in TA-, To-, and TR-. In contrast to the letters C and P, T is not greatly enlarged by formations with a common prefix; words in TRANS-, however, occupy 32 pages, and in ME. a considerable number of compounds with To- were current.

Taken as a whole, T includes no small number of important words of English origin, as tail, tale, tame, teach, tell, thing, think, throw, tide, timber, time, to (and too), tongue, tool, tooth, tree, true, etc.; also the definite article the, the demonstrative pronouns and adverbs that, there, this, etc., and the numerals two, three, ten (twelve, twenty, etc.). Among the common words taken from French or Latin are task, taste, tax, temper, tempt, tender, touch, try, and turn. The number of interesting words occurring throughout the letter is distinctly large, and much historical information or illustrative material will be found in such articles as those on tariff, tax, tea, telegraph, telephone, telescope, temple, tennis, testament, theatre, theodolite, thermometer, throne, tieket, tithe, title, tobaeeo, toll, ton, torpedo, tory, tower, town, trade, traffic, tragedy, train, tram (-car, etc.), transept, treasurer, treasury, trespass, tribe, triforium, trinity, tulip, tune, tutor, type, etc.

Arranging and sub-editing of the material collected for T was carried on by various voluntary helpers during the years 1881-90. The Rev. W. B. R. Wilson of Dollar worked through Tal to Tiling in 1881-3, To to Tozy in 1884-8, and Trea to Triluminous in 1889-90. Till to Tmetic was done by Mr. T. Wilson of Harpenden, Herts., in 1882-6. To to Tz was chronologically arranged by Miss M. Westmacott in 1882-3. Tra to Traze was sub-edited by Mr. A. Sweeting in 1882-4, and again in 1888-9 to incorporate the new material which had by that time been collected. Tron to Truage was sorted and arranged by the Rev. C. G. Duffield in 1882-5, and Truan to T-square by Mr. W. Welch in the same years. Tu to Tzirid was also subedited by Mr. A. Lyall at this time. In 1892 the Rev. Mr. Wilson began a new revision of the letter, and worked carefully through almost the whole of the material, finishing his extensive task in 1910. This thorough sub-editing of T, extending over so many years, is only one part of the valuable aid steadily given by Mr. Wilson towards the progress and completeness of the Dictionary.

PREFACE TO THE LETTER T

As in previous letters, much assistance on special points has been generously given by scholars and experts in various branches of knowledge. For such help acknowledgements are due to the following (in addition to many of those named in the preface to Vol. VII):—Dr. A. Beets, Leiden (for Dutch etymology), Prof. E. Björkman, Upsala (Scandinavian etym.), Mr. A. D. L. Cary, Librarian at the War Office (military terms), Sir W. R. Gowers (medical terms), Mr. G. F. Hill (numismatics), Mr. Daniel Jones (phonetics), Mr. L. G. Carr Laughton (naval terms), Mr. Willoughby Maycock, C.M.G. (horse-racing terms), Sir William Schlich, K.C.I.E. (forestry), Dr. A. Strachan (geology), M. Antoine Thomas (Romanic etym.), Mr. A. P. Trotter (electrical terms).

The proofs of T have been read throughout by Miss E. P. Thompson and Miss Edith Thompson, Lansdown, Bath; Mr. R. J. Whitwell, B.Litt., Oxford; Rev. Canon Fowler, D.C.L., Durham; Rev. J. B. Johnston, B.D., Falkirk; Mr. H. F. Rutter, M.Inst.C.E.; in part also by Mr. F. J. Amours, Glasgow (until his death in 1910), and in later sections by Mr. G. Friedrichsen, M.A., and the Rev. C. B. Mount, M.A.

Only a small portion of T was still unprinted when Sir James Murray died on July 26, 1915, and the completion of the letter has been greatly facilitated by the work he had already done on the remaining words and by the efficient cooperation of the Scriptorium staff. Those members of the staff who have worked at the whole of T are Messrs. A. T. Maling, M.A., F. J. Sweatman, M.A., F. A. Yockney, and Misses Elsie M. R. and Rosfrith N. R. Murray. Others who have assisted for limited periods are Mr. G. Friedrichsen, M.A., Rev. P. H. Aitken, D.Litt., Mr. G. G. R. Greene, Mr. T. Z. D. Babington, B.A., and Dr. E. Brenner. Mr. C. G. Balk, who took part in the preparation of T for nearly four years, retired from Dictionary work in October, 1913, after twenty-eight years of valuable service, and died in December, 1915.

W. A. CRAIGIE.

OXFORD, February 1916.

(tī), the twentieth letter of the English and other modern alphabets, the nineteenth of the ancient Roman alphabet, corresponding in form to the Greek T (tau), from the Phenician (and ancient Semitic) + X X (tau), in Phenician, and originally also in Greek, the last letter of the alphabet. It represents the point-breath-stop consonant of Bell's 'Visible Speech', or surd dental mute, so called, but in English is gingival or alveolar rather than dental. Several varieties of a t-sound occur in different languages, varieties of a r-sound occur in therein languages, according as the flow of the breath is stopped by bringing the tip or front of the tongue into contact with different points between the edge of the upper teeth and the roof of the palate. Thus, contact of the tip of the tongue with the teeth gives the true dental t, which is common in con-tinental European languages, very distinct in Anglo-Irish, and heard in north-western English dialects before r, where it is often represented in dialect specimens by spelling thrue or thrue for true, and the like (though the consonant is not actually th or h). The Indian languages, Aryan as well as Dravidian, distinguish two kinds of t, the dental, and the retracted or 'cerebral' (mūrdhanya), in Sanskrit 7 and Z, of which the latter is formed by contact of the retracted tip of the tongue with the roof of the palate. The English is formed between these two extreme positions, the contact being with the back of the gum or the front margin of the palate; its sound is much closer to the region of the parate; its sound is indeal closer to the cerebral than to the dental, and in the Tamil or Telugu representation of English words, the cerebral is regularly put for English t. In the Roman transliteration of Indian words it is usual to write t for the dental, and to distinguish the cerebral as t, as is done in this dictionary. The Semitic languages also distinguish two t-sounds, one, the Hebrew tan (n), Arabic ta (w) dental; the other, Hebrew teth (11), Arabic ta (14), said to be formed by contact of the blade of the tongue with the palate; this also has been romanized as !, though

In modern English, besides its proper sound as above described, t in the combinations -tion, -tious, -tial, -tia, -tian, -tience, -tient, after a vowel or any consonant except s, has the sound of sh (), in which the following i is absorbed, as in nation (nellow), factions (fækses), partial (pālsal), militia (milisa), patience (pelseus); but in -ia, -ian, i is sometimes more or less preserved, especially in proper names, as in inertia, Portia, Gratian, Dalmatian. In these combinations Latin (t) became (ts), usually written z, and then (s), written c, in French, as in L. grātia, It. grazia, F. grāce, L. nātionem, It. nazione, OF., Sp. nacion. In French and English spelling the Latin t was subjected to the second to the secon sequently in most cases restored, e.g. nation; but the living sound was (s), and it is this s which combining with the following i = y consonant) as (sy-), passed in English into (f), in the same way as written c or s has done in gracious, Asia, emersion: see S the letter, par. 4. Strictly, therefore, what we have is not ti pronounced as (f), but (f) derived from ci, spelt ti after its Latin source. After s, the original sound of t has remained, as in bestial, distinguished in Urdu from the cerebral f.

Christian; Erastian, question.

A much more recent change, as yet scarcely recognized by orthoepists, is the development in southern England of the sound ch (tf) from t followed by u with its diphthongal or name sound (yu, iu, iu), in such combinations as -tual, -tue, -tuous, and especially -ture, as in nature (nêrtiúl), whence (nêrtyəl, nêrtfəl). In those English dialects in which u has not become (yū), the original t remains, as in 'critter' = creature, 'pictur' = picture. In rapid speech ti after s often passes similarly into tf, as (kwestfən) for (kwestyən).

T between s and syllabic t or n (en), as in bustle, castle, epistle, christen, fasten, hasten, is now usually mute; so between s and m in Christmas, and between f and syllabic n in often, soften.

Vol. IX.

TH is a consonantal digraph representing two simple sounds (b, o), for which the Roman alphabet has no simple symbols, and is thus phonetically a distinct letter (or two letters), inserted between Te-and T1-, where see its history and pronunciation. I. 1. The letter and its sound. The plural is

[The original sense of T here has not been ascertained. Suggestions that it was the tee at Curling, or at Golf, or a T square, appear on investigation to be untenable; it has also been suggested that it referred to the proper completion of a t by crossing it (see b); or that it was the initial of a word; in reference to this it is notable that to a tittle (i.e. to a prick, dot, jot) was in use nearly a century before to a T', and in exactly the same constructions: see TITLE.] 1693 Humours Town 102 All the under Villages and Townsmen come to him for Redress; which he does to a T. 1700 Labour in Vainvuli. in Harl. -t, suffix, formative of the pa. pple. in some weak verbs, for earlier -d and -ed (see -ED I), due usually to the devocalization of d after a breath consonant, as in nipped, nip'd, nipt. In some verbs the use of t for -ed goes back to OTeut., esp. in app. contracted or irregular verbs, as esp. in app. contracted of Irregular verbs, as bought, brought, might, thought, wrought (Gothbauht, brâht, maht, pâht, waurht); in others it appears in WGer., as sought (Goth. sôkid, OS. and OE. sôht); in others only in OE. as laught (læht), taught (tæht, taht). But in the majority of cases the t is of later appearance, arising from the reduction of -ed to -'d, -d in Middle or Mod. Engl., with consequent devocalization of d, not only after breath consonants, as in dropt, nipl, crept, slept, swept, left, lost, tost, past, but, in certain cases, after liquids and nasals, as in felt, spell, spill, dreamt, burnt, meant, pent; also in contracted formations, such as built, bent, lent, sent, spent, girt, cast. But in many words where the pronunciation has t, the current spelling is -ed, e.g. blessed, dropped, hushed, passed for blest, dropt, hushet, past. See the article -ED suffix I.

-t, suffix 2, formative of the pa. t. of some weak verbs, for earlier -te, -de, -ede, (-da, -tida, -eda)

verbs, for earlier -te, -de, -ede (:-da, -ida, -eda). Parallel in formation to the prec., and generally going along with it in ME., and identical in form in mod.E.; but in OE. a pa. t. in -te was some-times used where the pa. pple, retained the fuller -ed, as in cyssan to kiss, cyste, cyssed, settan to set, sette, seted (and sett). In mod.Eng. on the contrary the spelling in t is more frequent in the pa. pple, esp. when used adjectivally, than in the pa. t.: cf. tempest-tost, the wind tossed the ship; in time past, he passed his time. In some cases even the form in -ed is a mere modern fashion of spelling, at variance with both the pronunciation and the history; thus, kissel was in OS. kusta, OE. cyste, ME. kist, as actually pronounced; it has come to be spelt kissed, because in other verbs -cd is pronounced -t.

-t, suffix 3. A formative of sbs. a. from verbs, -t, suffix 3. A formative of sbs. a. from verbs, going back to OTeut., and answering variously to the Indo-Eur. suffixes -tos, -tā, -tis, -tus, the t of which remained in Teutonic, when preceded by a guttural, labial, or s; e. g. draught, drift, flight, frost, gift, heft, might, plight, shaft, shrift, slaught, thirst, thought, thrift, weft, etc. (in some which the formation is later and imitative). In a few cases the t is a later Eng. change of -b after h, s, as in sight (OE. siehb), in which b normally represented Indo-Eur. t. See -TH.

b. from adjs. (or sbs.), changed from earlier ->, D. Itom adjs. (or sbs.), changed from earlier -b, -th (in length, etc.) after h, 3, as height (Goth, hauhipa, OE. hiehho, ME. heighe, highth); sleight (ON. slægh, ME. sleighe); theft (OE. piefh, ME. hiefhe); dreight (for dreighth, from dreig, DREE): here the suffix was OTeut. -ipô: -ibô: Indo-Eur. -tā. See -th. Also dought (OE. dugup:-*dugunh), drought (OE. draguh, Sc. drouth), where the OE. suffix -up was for -unh:-Indo-Eur. -ntis.

are made the stuffs, called 'Attābīya, which are silks and cottons of divers colours'.

The connexion of the other senses is not very clear. Tabby eat, instanced in 1695, is generally held to have been so named from the striped or streaked colour of its coat. The simple tabby, in the same sense, is much later (1774). Tabby, old maid, is usually associated with tabby a cat; but it appears earlier, and may have originated as the familiar contraction of Tabitha (cf. Abby for Abigail), as an old-fashioned female name, and have become humorously associated with tabby cat. It is possible that tabby in the sense of she-cat originated in Tabby for Tabitha; otherwise it is difficult to see any sense-connexion between she-cat and brindled cat, since a tom-cat may also be brindled or striped. Sense 4 of the sh, prob. arose from resemblance to the markings of the tabby cat; the origin of sense 5 is very uncertain, and sense 6 may be a different word, though it may also have originated in a fancied resemblance of colour to that of the tabby cat.]

Some of the Melanesian langs., as those of Fiji, and some of the Solomon Is., have tambu, New Britain tabu and tambu. Various cognate forms occur in Melanesian and cognate langs. The Tongan form was that first met with by Captain Cook, in 1779, from the narrative of whose voyages the custom with its name became known in England. In Fr. spelt tabou. The accentuation tabou, and the use of the word as sb. and vb., are English; in all the native langs, the word is stressed on the first syllable, and is used only as adj., the sb. and vb. being expressed by derivative words or phrases.]

many other races in early stages of culture.

The institution is generally supposed to have bad a religious or superstitious origin (certain things being considered the property of the gods or superhuman powers, and therefore for bidden to men), and to have been extended to political and social affairs, being usually controlled by the king or great chiefs in conjunction with the priests. Some things, acts and words were permanently taboo or interdicted to the mass of the people, and others specially to women, while temporary taboo was frequently imposed, often apparently quite arbitrarily.

B. Signification.

The earliest known use of this verb in the Germanic languages was app. to express the physical action 'to put the hand on', 'to touch'—the cal action 'to put the hand on', 'to touch'—the only known sense of Gothic têkan. By a natural advance, such as is seen in English in the use of 'lay hands upon', the sense passed to 'lay hold upon, lay hold of, grip, grasp, seize'—the essential meaning of Old Norse taka, of MDu. taken, and of the material senses of take in [Norlikh Buther spheritation of the pattern of English. By the subordination of the notion of the instruments, and even of the physical action, to that of the result, take becomes in its essence 'to transfer to oneself by one's own action or volition (anything material or non-material)'. This becomes then the general or ordinary sense of the verb, which falls into two main divisions, take in the sense of 'seize, grip', hence 'appropriate', and take in the sense of 'receive or accept what is handed to one'. Subordinate to these are the non-material senses of 'assume, adopt, apprehend, comprehend, comprise, contain'. For the common element of all these notions take is the simple and proper term, for which no simpler can be substituted. It is one of the elemental words of the language, of which the only direct explanation is to show the thing or action to which they are applied.

Take also enters into a great number of idiomatic phrases, which are often difficult to analyse. Many of these are parallel to, and influenced by French phrases with prendre: see F. H. Sykes, French Elements in ME., Oxford 1899.
