A forest assembly held three times a year in accordance with the Forest Charter of 1217, probably orig, 'to enable the forest officers to super-intend the depasturing of pigs in the king's woods in the autumn and the clearance of the forest of cattle and sheep while the deer were fawning in the summer'; later, applied vaguely or generically in the autumn and the clearance of the forest of cattle and sheep while the deer were fawning in the summer'; later, applied vaguely or generically to courts of attachment, inquisitions, etc. (See G. J. Turner, Select Pleas of the Forest, 1901.)

The commonly received account of the swanimote is derived from Manwood, who asserted that it was a distinct count of the forest, to which the frecholders (see Swain & e.) were summoned, and having jurisdiction with power to enquire of vert and venison and other trespasses done within the forest.

[ME. swepe (taking the place of the original Swope, OE. swapan, sweop, swapen), first recorded from northern texts; of uncertain origin. Two suggestions of source have been made, both of which involve phonological difficulties. (1) The mutated stem swip- (cf. zeswipa beside -zeswip sweepings, ymbswipe 'ambages'). This would normally have produced a mod.Eng. *sweap, but in its transference from the northern to the southern area, swepe may have been assimilated to words like slepe (OE. Anglian slepan) to SLEEP, or crepe (OE. creopan) to CREEP, the process being perhaps assisted by the pa. t. stuep-e (OE. swiep) of the original strong verb. (2) ON. swipa to move swiftly and suddenly. This etymology involves the assumption that ON. i became ME. e, which is not otherwise clearly authenticated, and that the intransitive sense (22) is the original.

The shortening of the stem-vowel in pa. t. and pa. pple. is shown in spellings c1400.

The order of sense-development presents difficulties, it being uncertain whether the transitive or intransitive meanings are the primary ones. The present arrangement of the word is adopted as convenient from the modern point of view, since the whole word is now coloured by the meaning 'cleanse or remove with a broom'.]

(b) 1773 Ed. Tres Fig. to India 1, ii. 27 On the 9th of April, annually, at Bengal the natives une ergo a very uncommon kind of penance: In a large plain about a mile from Calcutta, there are erected about thirty Iamhoos, at least twenty feet high; on the top of these they contrive to fix a swivel, and another bamboo of thirty feet or more crosses it, at both ends of which hangs a rope. One end of this rope, the people pull down, and the devotee placing himself under it, the Brahmin pinches up a large piece of skin under both the shoulder blades, and thrusts a strong iron-hook through each. When this is done, the people hand down the other end of the lamboo, by which means the devotee is immediately lifted up from the ground, and then run round as fast as their legs will carry them. This throws the devotee out to the full length of the rope, where as he swings, he plays a thousand antic tricks. 1793 Medical Spectator 11.
