

ludinch York Porps A.

ICELANDIC-ENGLISH DICTIONARY

Candon

MACMILLAN AND CO.

PUBLISHERS TO THE UNIVERSITY OF

Oxford

ICELANDIC-ENGLISH DICTIONARY

BASED ON THE MS. COLLECTIONS OF

THE LATE RICHARD CLEASBY

ENLARGED AND COMPLETED

ΒY

GUDBRAND VIGFUSSON, M.A.

WITH AN INTRODUCTION AND LIFE OF RICHARD CLEASBY

BY GEORGE WEBBE DASENT, D.C.L.

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS
M.DCCC, LXXIV.

ICELANDIC-ENGLISH DICTIONARY

Chiefly founded on the Collections made from prose works of the 12th-14th centuries

By the late

RICHARD CLEASBY

Enlarged and completed by

GUDBRAND VIGFUSSON

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

M.DCCC, LXIX.

[All rights reserved]

PREFACE.

THIS work is a Dictionary of the Old Icelandic Language, or (as it may be called) the Classical Language of the Scandinavian race.

The history of the preservation of this language in its ancient form is remarkable.

The Icelandic language, in old writers also called the Norse or the Danish (Norana or Dönsk tunga), was spoken by the four great branches of the Scandinavian race who peopled the countries abutting on the Baltic, the Norsemen or Northmen, Swedes, Danes, and Goths (Nordmenn, Sviar, Danir, and Gautar), as well as by the inhabitants of those parts of Northern Russia which were then known by the name of Gardar*.

At the beginning of the 9th century the growing population of these countries, together with political changes and the naturally enterprising character of the people, caused a great outward movement of the race. Under the leading of their chieftains they set forth to seek for homes in other lands; and thus the 9th century came to be known by the name of the Age of the Vikings (Vikinga-Öld). The stream of emigration increased in volume, as tidings of the successes of the first adventurers reached the northern shores. The Swedes continued to press eastward into the countries beyond the Baltic, while the Danes and Norsemen steered boldly to the south and west, and chiefly to the shores of the British Isles.

Two main currents of this emigration by sea may be traced. First, the Danish, which directed its course to the north-east of England, and at length occupied that district so completely that it received the name of the Dena-lagu. The Saxon Chronicle is the chief authority for this part of the subject†; the only old Icelandic works which touch on it being the Egils Saga, which says that in the reign of Athelstan almost every family of note in Northern England was Danish by the father's or the mother's side; and the Ragnars Saga, which professes to give an historical account of the great Danish invasion, but is almost as mythical as the Iliad.

The second migration was Norse. These settlers gradually peopled the coasts of Ireland, the Isle of Man, the Orkneys and Shetland, and the northern counties of Scotland, Ross, Moray, and especially Caithness. In the year 852 A.D. the Norse sea-king Olave the White reached Ireland with a large fleet, and founded a Norse principality at Dublin: the foremost man among the Norsemen in Scotland was Earl Sigurd, uncle of Göngu-Hrolf. It is probable that to this same emigration must be referred the conquest and occupation of Normandy.

^{*} See the word Gardar in the Dictionary.

[†] The Saxon Chronicle under the year 787 states that in that year Danish ships first came to England. The Annales Cambriae record the same fact with regard to Ireland under the year 795: so also the Irish Annals, see Dr. Todd's Introduction to 'The War of the Gaedhill with the Gaill,' p. xxxii (Rolls' Ed.)

With this stream of Norsemen the colonisation of Iceland also is closely connected. That island had already been discovered by a Viking named Naddodd, who called it Snowland (Snæland); it was next seen by Gardar, a Swede, after whom it was named Gardarsholm; and lastly, the Viking Flóki gave it the name of Iceland, from seeing the Isafjörd covered with polar ice. But the first settlers were Ingolf, son of Örn, and his foster-brother Leif, who set sail about A.D. 870, and reached Iceland; they soon however passed on to Ireland, whence after a few years they returned to Iceland, taking with The year 874 is fixed by the chroniclers as the date of this them some Irish slaves. final settlement. Leif was soon after murdered by his unwilling Irish colonists; Ingolf remained alone and is regarded as the first settler in the island. About the same time Harold Fair-hair had seized the throne of Norway, and, by the establishment of despotic power, had become unbearable to the high-spirited and independent chiefs; and therefore the newly-discovered island, bleak and desolate as it was, offered a welcome home to men who had hitherto lived in the possession of equal and undisputed Again, the Norsemen in the British Isles became unsettled after the death of King Thorstein, Olave the White's son (the Oistin Mac Amlabh of the Irish Annals), in the year 874 A.D.; and they seem from that time to have begun to migrate to Iceland. Conspicuous among these emigrants was Queen Audr Djúpaudga, King Olave's widow, who set forth with almost all her kinsfolk and followers. It is probable that the number of Norsemen who sailed from Ireland to Iceland was about equal to that of those who had gone thither from Norway. They carried with them their families and such cultivation as they possessed. They spoke that form of the Scandinavian tongue which prevailed on the western coast of Norway; and as time went on, while new dialects formed themselves throughout Scandinavia, in Iceland the old tongue rose to the dignity of a literary language, and thereby retained its original form. It has thus been preserved to our days *.

The first settlers formed an independent aristocracy, or republic, which continued for nearly four hundred years. Up to the end of the 10th century they held the heathen faith and practised the rites of heathen worship: Christianity was accepted as the faith of the island in the year 1000 A.D. Two centuries and a half after this change of faith (A.D. 1262) the Icelanders made willing submission to the king of Norway, that is, as has been said, about four hundred years after the first discovery of the island.

It was during this period that the Laws and Sagas of Iceland were written. Some idea of the extent and variety of this literature may be formed from the compendious account which is subjoined to this Preface. Tales of an historical and mythological character were committed to writing, being for the most part narratives of the feats of heroes abroad and at home, and belonging to the times before the year 1030 A.D., which may fairly be called the patriarchal age of Icelandic history; and in these tales, with poems, laws, and documents of various kinds, the old Scandinavian tongue, as spoken and written by the Icelanders in the period ranging from 900 to 1262 A.D., has been handed down to us in a form which may justly be called classical. In Sweden and Norway the old Scandinavian tongue is preserved in writing only on the scanty Runic monuments. The earliest Danish and Swedish written laws are believed not to be earlier than the middle and end of the 13th century, by which time the common language in these lands had already undergone great changes, although the modern Danish and Swedish were not yet formed. In Norway, however, a considerable literature of the 13th century survives; and the old language lasted longer there than in the sister countries. This literature consists of laws, diplomas, homilies, and translations of French romances; and these works are quoted in this Dictionary together with the Icelandic. These documents belong to the period embraced by the reign of King Hakon, A.D. 1216–1263; but, though valuable, they do not make an original literature. Only in Iceland did a living literature spring up and flourish; there alone the language has been handed down to us with unbroken tradition and monuments, from the first settlement of the island to the present day.

^{*} See the Landnáma, the Laxdæla Saga, and the Irish Annals; and, for details, Mr. Dasent's Paper in the Oxford Essays for 1858, pp. 176 sqq., and his Introduction to 'The Story of Burnt Njal,' Edinburgh 1861.

It is believed that the present Dictionary will furnish not only a complete glossary of the words used in this old classical literature, but also a full account of the forms and inflexions of the verbs, with copious citations of passages in which each word occurs, with references carefully verified, and explanations given whenever they seem to be required; and, at the same time, though the Dictionary is mainly intended for the old authors, both in prose and poetry, it endeavours to embrace an account of the whole language, old and new.

A few words must be added to explain the origin and history of the work.

Many years ago, RICHARD CLEASBY projected a General Dictionary of the Old Scandinavian Language; and in 1840 he left England to settle in Copenhagen, the chief seat and centre of Scandinavian learning and the home of the best collection of Icelandic MSS., for the purpose of preparing himself for his work and of obtaining the assistance of Icelandic students in collecting materials; among these Mr. Konrad Gislason's name ought especially to be mentioned. Mr. Cleasby was a man of independent means, an excellent scholar, held in high esteem by foreign scholars, devoted to his work, and shunning no labour to make it perfect. He reserved for himself the old prose literature; while Dr. Egilsson was engaged on the poetical vocabulary, towards the expenses of which Mr. Cleasby promised to contribute, so that he may be said to have been the chief promoter of that work also. The MS. of the Poetical Dictionary was ready for publication in the year 1846. In the following year Mr. Cleasby caused five words—bragð, búa, at (conjunction), af (preposition), and ok (conjunction) -to be set up in type as specimens of the projected Prose Dictionary. he sent to several foreign friends, and among others to Jacob Grimm, who returned a most kind and friendly answer, warmly approving of the plan as indicated in the specimens, and adding many good wishes that Mr. Cleasby might have health and life to complete the work. Unhappily these wishes were not to be realised. In the autumn of the same year he was taken ill, but was in a fair way to recovery, when, by resuming work too soon, he suffered a relapse. His illness took the form of typhus fever, and he died insensible, without being able to make any arrangements respecting his papers and collections.

Digitized by GOGIC

Mr. Cleasby's heirs, anxious that his labours should not be thrown away, paid a considerable sum of money to certain persons in Copenhagen, for the purpose of completing the book. But in 1854 came a demand for more money; and as it seemed doubtful whether the work was likely to be finished in any reasonable time, and on any reasonable terms, it was determined that the whole of the MSS. should be sent to England. It seems, however, that none of Mr. Cleasby's original slips were included in the papers sent. These papers consist of rough transcripts, made after Mr. Cleasby's death by various students in Copenhagen, whereas his original papers have not to this day come over to England.

It is clear, from an examination of these transcripts, that scarcely any part of the Dictionary, with the exception of the words sent to Grimm, had been completed during Mr. Cleasby's lifetime or by him. The letters D, F, J, K, N, O, P, S, U, V, and H (partially), were worked out after his death by the Copenhagen editors, but in such a manner that it would have been much better to have had Mr. Cleasby's papers in their original form. In his collections he appears to have been accustomed to write out in full the references taken from MSS., while he made but a brief note by page or otherwise of words drawn from printed books. This he probably did, both to save labour and also because he may have looked forward to being able to complete his book in England, where the printed editions, but not the MSS., would have been within his reach. The editors have simply copied out these references, adding and explaining little or nothing.

The MSS. in this state were placed at the disposal of the well-known Icelandic scholar, Mr. G. Webbe Dasent, and in the year 1855 he proposed to the Delegates of the Clarendon Press at Oxford to undertake the publication of the Dictionary under the belief that the collections left by Mr. Cleasby would not require much revision to fit them for publication. A specimen was set up in type, and Mr. Dasent himself undertook to see the book through the Press.

The matter, however, remained in abeyance till the year 1864, when Mr. Dasent again brought it before the Delegates. They, having taken into consideration the great value of a complete and accurate Dictionary of the old classical Scandinavian language, and the great interest this language has for students of Old English, were persuaded to renew their engagement with Mr. Dasent and to undertake the publication of the work. Mr. Dasent consented, as before, to revise the proof-sheets, to correct the English explanations and translations, and to add parallel words and usages from the Old English and Scottish dialects. He also stated to the Delegates that the papers were left in an imperfect state, and asked them to grant a sum of money, for the purpose of securing the services of an Icelandic scholar in completing the work. This was also agreed to; and Mr. Dasent, in the course of the same year, secured the services of Mr. Gudbrand Vigfusson, a born Icelander, already well known for his learning, and for his labours in the field of his native literature.

Mr. Vigfusson's report of the papers handed over by Mr. Cleasby's heirs shews that they contained copious materials for a Dictionary, but required much labour and research to work them into a form fit for publication. Mr. Cleasby's were the first large and comprehensive collections ever made, and are particularly valuable in that they were all taken from the documents themselves. The words of varied construction, such as the chief Verbs and Prepositions, are very rich, and taken from the best writers. But the words relating to Antiquities are left in a meagre condition; and there are many omissions of a kind which shew that Mr. Cleasby kept much of the matter in his head, and intended carefully to revise the whole. He intended no doubt to have worked out every word with the same conscientious accuracy which is shewn in the completed articles,—a task which would have occupied years of labour; and had life been granted him, it is certain he would have fulfilled this self-imposed task well and thoroughly. These circumstances have rendered the business of completing the book very arduous, and must account in a great measure for the delay which has occurred in the publication of even a part of the work.

Unfortunately also, Mr. Dasent's incessant and various occupations have prevented him from carrying his promised supervision beyond the first two sheets. The task of revising the English part of the work has fallen into hands far less competent, not only in respect to knowledge of the Scandinavian language and literature, but also in respect to acquaintance with those archaic and provincial dialects of the British Isles, which have special affinities to the Scandinavian tongue.

The Delegates however have reason to hope that a fuller account of Mr. Cleasby's life and labours, as well as a general introduction to the whole work, will be written by Mr. Dasent and prefixed to the Dictionary when it is completed.

Mr. Vigfusson takes this opportunity of acknowledging the help and advice he has received from the officials at the British Museum and the Bodleian Library, and particularly to express his many obligations to the Rev. H. O. Coxe, librarian of the Bodleian. He also desires to render his personal thanks to the following Icelandic scholars,—Mr. Dasent, Dr. John Carlyle, Prof. Konrad Maurer of Munich, Prof. C. R. Unger of Christiania, and last, not least, to his friend and countryman Mr. Jón Sigurdsson of Copenhagen.

H. G. L.

Oxford, June 10, 1869.

Digitized by boos[C

- r. Mr. Cleasby's collections, which have in words, phrases, and references supplied about one half of the materials for the present work.
- 2. The Lexicon Poëticum, by Dr. Sveinbjörn Egilsson, born 1791, died 1852, a most excellent work, which has served as a chief guide in references from the old poetical language.
- 3. Fritzner's Dictionary, by Johan Fritzner, a Norse clergyman, begun shortly after the year 1850, and completed in 1867. It is a very rich and good collection, entirely independent of Mr. Cleasby, and has afforded much valuable assistance throughout.
- 4. Björn Halldórsson's Dictionary, Icelandic and Latin. The author, an excellent Icelandic clergyman, was born about 1724, and died 1794, and his work was published in 1814 by Rask, who also translated the original renderings into Danish: it is well known from the fact that Grimm in his Grammar has taken from it almost all his collection of the vocabulary of the Icelandic language.
 - 5. Alt-Nordisches Glossar, by Theodor Möbius, 1866, a limited but independent collection, which has afforded many happy references.
 - 6. The Dictionary published in Copenhagen in 1860 (Old-Nordisk Ordbog). This book has evidently been compiled from Cleasby's papers in Copenhagen: it omits all references. It has been of some use, as it has here and there shewn where words have been omitted in the transcripts now at Oxford.
 - a. Specimen Lexici Islandici, by Magnús Ólafsson, an Icelandic clergyman, died 7. Earlier Glossaries: 1636, published under the name Specimen Lexici Runici in 1650 by the Danish scholar Ole Worm, who also wrote it in the Runic character. This is the first Icelandic Glossary alphabetically arranged, and contains from 1200 to 1500 words with references. Hence the word 'Runick,' as applied to Icelandic, in Hickes and Johnson. β. Lexicon Islandicum, by Gudmundus Andreae, an Icelander, died 1654, published by Resen in 1683; it derives all words from Hebrew: not very y. Monosyllaba Islandica, by Rugman, an Icelander, 1676; interesting and without references. it contains about 1400 such words. 8. Index Linguae Veteris Scytho-Scandicae sive Gothicae, by Olaf Verelius, a Swedish scholar, died 1682, published by Rudbeck in 1691; a fairly done work, containing about 12,000 words with references from MSS. e. Lexicon Islandicum, a large collection made by Jón Ólafsson, born 1705, died 1779; it has not been published but is preserved in MS. in Copenhagen and has therefore not been within reach, but illustrations from it are now and then given from memory. 3. Skýringar, by Pál Vídalín, died 1727; a commentary on obsolete law terms, published at Reykjavík in 1854.
 - 8. Indexes along with Editions, etc., e.g. the 12th volume of Fornmanna Sögur: Lexicon Mythologicum, by Finn Magnusen, affixed to the large edition of Sæmundar Edda: Indexes to Njála, Grágás, Annálar, etc.: Indexes along with Chrestomathies, e.g. Dieterich, a German scholar; as also Dieterich's Runic Glossary (Runen-schatz), 1844: Physical Index in the Itinérary or Travels of Eggert Ólafsson, Copenhagen 1772: Index on Medical Terms in Félags-rit, 1789, 1790: Botanical Index in Hjaltalín's Icelandic Botany, 1830: Indexes of Proper Names in Landnáma, 1843; in Fornmanna Sögur, vol. xii, and Flateyjar-bók, vol. iii; in Munch's Beskrivelse over Norge (Geography of Norway), 1849.
 - 9. Mr. Vigfusson's own collections and such additions and illustrations as he has been enabled to make through his knowledge of his own mother-tongue.

The sources for the etymological part are chiefly the following.

Jacob Grimm, Deutsche Grammatik, a work which embraces all Teutonic languages.

For Gothic, the Glossary to Ulfilas, by Gabelenz and Loebe, 1843.

For Anglq-Saxon, Dr. Bosworth's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary; as also Grein's Poetical Glossary (Sprach-schatz), 1861 and 1864.

For Early English, the Ormulum, an old gospel paraphrase by Orm or Ormin (a Scandinavian name), published by Dr. White in 1852; it affords many illustrations of Scandinavian words, but it is chiefly curious for philological purposes because of the careful distinction it makes between short and long vowels.

For Northern English and Scottish, Jamieson's Dictionary.

For Old Saxon, Schmeller's Glossary to Heliand, an Old Saxon gospel harmony, 1840.

For Old and Middle High German, Graff's Sprach-schatz, and Mittelhoch-Deutsches Wörterbuch, 1854 sqq.

CLASSIFICATION OF WORKS AND AUTHORS CITED IN THIS DICTIONARY.

- N.B.—The authors of most of the Icelandic Sagas are unknown; the works are therefore cited, not the authors, even where they are known.
- A. POETRY.—Kviða generally denotes a narrative poem; mál a poem in dialogue or didactic; ljóð, söngr a lay, song; tal a genealogical, drápa a laudatory heroic poem; ríma a rhyme or rhapsody.
 - I. MTTHICAL POEMS:—Völu-spá, Háva-mál (mythical-didactic), Grímnis-mál, Vafþrúðnis-mál, Skírnis-mál, Alvís-mál, Loka-senns, Harbarðs-ljóð, Vegtams-kviða, þryms-kviða, Hýmis-kviða, Hyndlu-ljóð, Forspjalls-ljóð (mod.)
 2. Poems in the form of à 'drápa,' but upon mythical subjects:—Haustlöng, Hús-drápa, Þórs-drápa, Ragnars-kviða.
 - II. Heroical: Fáfnis-mál, Sigrdrífu-mál, Hamðis-mál, Sigurðar-kviða (in three poems), Guðrúnar-kviða (in three poems), Brynhildar-kviða, Atla-kviða, Atla-mál, Völundar-kviða, Rígs-mál, Helga-kviða Hjórvarðs-sonar, Helga-kviða Hundings-bana (in two poems), Helreið Brynhildar, Oddrúnar-grátr, Guðrúnar-hefna, Grotta-söngr, Gró-galdr, Fjölsvinns-mál, Ynglinga-tal, Háleygja-tal, Bjarka-mál, Getspeki Heiðreka, and other poems in Hervarar Saga, Darraðar-ljóð. Most of these poems (in I. II) are contained in the old collection commonly called Sæmundar Edda: the various editions differ in the distribution of the verses; in this Dictionary references are made to the edition of Möbius, Leipzig 1860; that of Sophus Bugge, Christiania 1867, has now superseded all former editions, and is cited in special instances.
 - III. Historical:—Höfuð-lausn, Sona-torrek, Arinbjarnar-drápa (all published in the Egils Saga), Hákonar-mál (published in Hkr. i), Vell-ekla, Darraðar-ljóð, Rekstefja.

 2. Poems later than the middle of the 12th century:—Kráku-mál (published in Fas. i), Hugsvinns-mál (paraphrase of Cato's Disticha), Sólar-ljóð (published along with Sæmundar Edda), Hátta-tal (published along with the Edda), Jómsvíkinga-drápa, Tslendinga-drápa, Merlinus-spá (an Icelandic metrical paraphrase of Geoffrey of Monmouth), Málshátta-kvæði (collection of proverbs in a MS. Cod. Reg. of Edda), Konunga-tal (published in Flateyjar-bók ii. 520 sqq.), Placidus-drápa, Harm-sól, Leiðar-vísan, Líknar-braut (religious poems, edited by Dr. Egilsson, published 1833 and 1844), Geisli (published in Fb. i. beginning), Guðmundar-drápa (published in Bs. ii. 187 sqq.), × Lilja or the Lily (published in H. E. ii. 398 sqq.), both poems of the 14th century.

 3. Olafs-ríma (published in Fb. i. 8 sqq.), Skáld-Helga-rímur (published in Grönl. Hist. Mind. ii), Þrymlur, Völsungs-rímur (edited by Möbius), Skíða-ríma (a satirical poem of the 14th or 15th century), etc.
 - IV. Poers cired:—Bragi (9th century); Hornklofi, Þjóðólfr Hvinverski (9th or 10th century); Egill, Kormakr, Eyvindr Skálda-spillir (all of the 10th century); Hallfreðr (born 968, died 1008); Sighvatr, Arnórr (both of the 11th century); Einarr Skúlason (12th century), etc.
- B. LAWS.—The Icelanders and Norsemen first began to write their laws at the end of the 11th and the beginning of the 12th century; before that time all laws were oral.
 - I. LAWS OF THE ICELANDIC COMMONWEALTH:—Grágás (vide that word), a collection of the laws of the Commonwealth, published in two volumes by the Arna-Magnacan Legate, Copenhagen 1829. Parts or sections of the law are, Kristinna-laga-páttr, Þingskapa-páttr, Víg-slóði, Bauga-tal, Tíundar-lög, Landbrigða-páttr, Arfa-páttr, Omaga-bálkr, Festa-páttr, Lögréttu-páttr, Lögsögumanns-páttr, etc. These laws are chiefly contained in two private collections or MSS. of the 12th century, called Konungs-bók (marked Grág. Kb.) and Staðarhóls-bók (marked Grág. Sb.); the new edition (Copenhagen 1853) is a copy of the Konungs-bók; but the Arna-Magn. edition, which is cited in this Dictionary, is a compilation from both MSS., having however Staðarhóls-bók as its groundwork. The Kristin-réttr Þorláks ok Ketils (K. p. K.) is cited from a separate edition (Copenhagen 1775).
 - II. Laws of Norway contained in a collection in three volumes, called Norges Gamle Love (published by Munch and Keyser, Christiania 1846, 1847). The 1st vol. is most frequently cited, and contains the laws of Norway previous to A. D. 1263; the 3rd vol. contains Réttar-bestr or Royal Writs, cited by the number. The Gulapings-lög or Lands-lög, = the Code of King Magnus (died 1281), is contained in the 2nd vol. of this collection, but is cited from a separate edition (Copenhagen 1817).
 - III. Icelandic Laws, given after the union with Norway:—Kristin-réttr Arna biskups (published at Copenhagen in 1777); Járn-síða (Copenhagen 1847), the Law of Iceland from A.D. 1272-1280; Jóns-bók (Hólum 1709) is the Icelandic Code of Laws of A.D. 1280 (still in use in Iceland).

- C. HISTORIES OR TALES OF A MYTHICAL CHARACTER.
 - I. EDDA OR SNORRA EDDA:—In this Dictionary only the prose work of Snorri Sturluson (born 1178, died 1241) is cited under this name; the poems of the so-called Sæmundar Edda are all cited separately by their names (vide A). The Edda consists of three parts, the Gylfa-ginning or Mythical Tales (pp. 1-44), Skáldskapar-mál or the Poetical Arts and Diction (pp. 45-110), Hátta-tal (marked Edda Ht.) = a poem on the metres, and lastly, Fulur or Rhymed Glossary of Synonymes (marked Edda Gl.) The edition cited is that of Dr. Egilsson, Reykjavík (1848) in one vol.; the Arna-Magn. (1848 sqq.) in two vols. (the third is still in the press) is now and then referred to. The Edda is chiefly preserved in three vellum MSS., the Konungs-bók (Kb.), the Orms-bók (Ob.), and the Uppsala-bók (Ub.), which is published in the Arna-Magn. Ed. ii. 250-396.

 2. The prose parts of the Sæmundar Edda (here marked Sæm.)
 - II. MITHICAL SAGAS OR HISTORIES:—Fornaldar Sögur, a collection published in three volumes by Rafn, Copenhagen 1829, 1830: the 1st vol. contains Hrólfs Saga Kraka (pp. 1-109), Völsunga Saga (pp. 115-234, again published by Bugge, Christiania 1865), Ragnars Saga (pp. 235-299 and 345-360), Sögu-brot or Skjöldunga Saga (a fragment, pp. 363-360), Hervarar Saga (pp. 411-533), Norna-Gests Saga (pp. 319-342): the 2nd vol. contains Hálfs Saga (pp. 25-60), Friðþjófs Saga
 (pp. 63-100 and 488-503), Örvar-Odds Saga (almost wholly fabulous): the 3rd vol., Gautreks Saga (pp. 1-53): the rest are mere fables, and belong to G below. Hemings-páttr, from the Flateyjar-bók, 3rd vol., partly cited from MSS.; this tale contains a myth parallel to that of William Tell.

 2. Ynglinga Saga by Snorri Sturluson, containing lives of the mythical kings of Sweden from Odin down to the historical time, cited from Heimskringla, 1st vol.
- D. ISLENDINGA SÖGUR OR HISTORIES referring to the ICELANDIC COMMONWEALTH and the time following the union with Norway.
 - I. SAGAS OR HISTORIES OF THE GENERAL HISTORY OF ICELAND:—Landnáma or Landnáma-bók, a History of the Discovery and Settlement of Iceland, originally written by Ari Fródi (born 1067, died 1148), but worked out into its present form by Sturla pordarson (born 1214, died 1284); this important work is cited from the Copenhagen Ed. of 1843, where the figures are separated with a ('); the first figure marks 'a part' (pattr), the second a chapter. Landnama (Hb.) denotes the text of the vellum MS. Hauks-bok. Landnama Mantissa means an appendix affixed to the book in the printed editions. Islendinga-bok by Ari Frobi, from the Ed. of 1843 (published along with Landnama). Kristni Saga (Introduction of Christianity), cited from Biskupa Sögur, vide below. Sturlunga Saga or Islendinga Saga hin mikla by Sturla pordarson, relates the history of Iceland, especially of the 13th century up to the union with Norway, cited from the Ed. of 1817-1820, in four volumes; the last volume however, containing the Arna biskups Saga, is quoted from the Biskupa Sögur below. The chief MS. of this work is in the British Museum, 11,127; the letter C after the figures denotes the vellum MS. Arna-Magn. 122, fasc. A.

Digitized by GOOGIC

D. cederschila 575

- II. SAGAS OR LIVES OF MEN OR FAMILIES referring to the Icelandic Saga time, i.e. the 10th century down to about A.D. 1030 or → 1050, properly called Islendinga Sögur. 1. The Larger Sagas:-Njála or Njáls Saga, published at Copenhagen in 1772; the Latin translation by Johnsonius, Copenhagen 1800 with Icelandic various readings, is cited now and then; cp. Burnt Njal by Mr. Dasent. Laxdela Saga, Copenhagen 1826; the later part of Laxdela also exists in a better form in a vellum MS. Arna-Magn. 309, but is not as yet published. Egils Saga or Egia, Copenhagen 1809. Eyrbyggja Saga or Eyrbyggja, 3 Ed. 1787, and Leipzig 1864, where the pages of the old Ed. are marked in the margin. 2. The Smaller Sagas :-Lifevetninga Saga, Valla-Lifets Saga, Svarfdæla Saga, Reykdæla Saga, Víga-Glúms Saga, all five cited from the octavo volume called Islendinga Sögur, 2nd vol., Copenhagen 1830: Harðar Saga (pp. 1-118), Hænsa-þóris Saga (pp. 121-186), Gunnlaugs Saga (pp. 189-276), Heiðarvíga Saga (pp. 320-392), all four cited from the collection called Islendinga Sögur, 2nd vol., Copenhagen 1847: Gisla Saga Súrssonar, Bjarnar Saga Hitdæla-kappa, Hrafnkels Saga, Droplaugar-Sona Saga, Vapnfirðinga Saga, Þorsteins Saga hvíta, Þorsteins-þáttr Stangar-höggs, all seven cited from the small editions, 1847, 1848; the chapters in Gisla Saga, when quoted, refer to the old edition, Holum 1756: Kormaks Saga, edited separately, Copenhagen 1832: Vatnsdæla Saga (pp. 1-80), Flóamanna Saga (pp. 117-161), Hallfreðar Saga (pp. 83-115), all these three Sagas are published and cited from a collection called Forn-sögur, Leipzig 1860: Bandamanna Saga, Hávarðar Saga, Grettis Saga (an A after the figures denotes the vellum MS. Arna-Magn. 556 A), Ölkofra-páttr, all these four Sagas are cited from the quarto volume Margfrobir Sögu-þættir, Hólum 1756 (of Grettis Saga a new edition appeared in 1853, and of Havardar Saga in 1860; of Bandamanna Saga an earlier and better text is preserved in a vellum MS. 2845 Royal Libr. Copenhagen, cited Band. (MS.), but is a blibbed): Porfinns Baga Karls-efnis, cited from Grönland's Historiske Mindesmærker i. 352-442, a part is also published in Antiquitates Americanae: Porsteins Baga Sidu-Hallssonar, cited from Analecta, by Möbius, Leipzig 1860, pp. 169-186: Gull-Póris Baga by Maurer, Leipzig 1857, cited by the pages of published & Corochild the MS, which are marked in the margin of the Ed.: Fostbrædra Saga, Ed. 1822, new Ed. 1852: Njardvíkinga Saga or Gunnars-pattr pioranda-bana, published at the end of Laxdæla, pp. 363-384: porvalds Saga Viororla, published in Biskupa Sögur i. 33-50. Many of these Sagas were undoubtedly written in the 12th century, although preserved in later MSS.; some, although old, have been worked out into their present shape by historians of the 13th century (e.g. Eyrbyggja, Laxdæla, and Njála); some few of them have only reached us in the more modern and artificial style of the 13th or 14th century.
 - III. Sagas or Lives of the Icelandic Bishops from A. D. 1056-1330, collected and edited under the title of Bishupa Sögur:—Vol. i, Copenhagen 1858, contains Kristni Saga, pp. 1-32, vide above; Hungr-vaka or Lives of the First Five Bishops of Skalholt, pp. 59-86; Forláks Saga, pp. 89-124, 263-332; Jóns Saga, pp. 151-260; Páls Saga, pp. 127-148; Guðmundar Saga, pp. 407-618; Arna Saga, pp. 679-786 (bishop Arne died 1298); Laurentius Saga by Einar Hafildason, the last Icelandic historian of the olden time, born 1307, died 1393, pp. 789-914 (bishop Laurentius died 1330); Rafns Saga and Arons Saga are printed as an appendix, vol. i, pp. 639-676, 619-638. Vol. ii, pp. 1-230, contains another recension of Guðmundar Saga, written by Abbot Arngrim, who died 1361: the following pages (ii. 230 sqq.) are lives of the bishops of the Reformation period.
 - 1V. Annals:—Islenskir Annálar or Annals of Iceland, containing Konungs-annáll or Ann. Regii, an important vellum in Gamle Kongel. Saml., 2087, 4to, published in Langebek's Script. rerr. Dan. vol. iii; cp. also the Hauks-annáll, Hóla-annáll, Flateyjar-annáll, Lögmanns-annáll, etc. A collection of Annals embracing the time from the settlement of Iceland up to A. D. 1430 was published at Copenhagen in 1847, and is cited by years.
 - V. Skrök-Sögur or Fabulous Sagas:—Bárðar Saga, from Ed. Hólum 1756, new Ed. 1860; Víglundar Saga, Ed. 1756, new Ed. 1860; Þórðar Saga hreðu, Ed. 1756, new Ed. 1848, and 1860 (partly); Kjalnesinga Saga, cited from Íslendinga Sögur, Ed. 1847; Króka-Refs Saga, Ed. 1756; Finnboga Saga, Ed. 1812, along with the old Ed. of Vatnsdæla: Þorsteins-þáttr uxafóts, Orms-þáttr Stórólfssonar, Þorleifs-þáttr Jarlaskálds, all three in Fb. i. and in Fms. iii: Brandkrossa-þáttr, Ed. 1847: Bolla-þáttr, published along with the Laxdæla: Stjörnu-Odda Draumr, Ed. 1780, new Ed. 1860.
 - E. KONUNGA SÖGUR OR LIVES OF KINGS, PRINCES, AND EARLS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES, etc.
 - I. SAGAS OR LIVES OF THE KINGS OF NORWAY AND DENMARK, contained in a great collection published in twelve volumes, Copenhagen 1825-1837, under the title of Fornmanna Sogur:-Vols. i-v contain the lives of the kings of Norway from the end of the 9th century to A.D. 1030: vol. vi contains Magnús Saga Góða and Haraldar Saga Harðráða (died 1066): vol. vii goes down to A.D. 1176; the best text of both vols. vi and vii are contained in a great Icelandic MS. called Hulda (cited now and then): vol. viii contains the Sverris Saga by Karl Aboti (Abbot Carle), who died 1213; the king Sverrir died 1202: vol. ix, pp. 229-535, and vol. x, pp. 1-154, contain Hákonar Saga by Sturla Þórðarson, king Hacon died 1263: vol. xi contains the lives of the kings of Denmark, viz. Jómsvíkinga Saga (pp. 1-162, a shorter recension of the Saga is preserved in an Icelandic MS, at Stockholm, and cited from the Ed. 1824); Knytlinga Saga (pp. 179-402) = lives of the Danish kings from king Canute down to the end of the 12th century: in the 10th vol. there are besides, Agrip (pp. 377-421), a compendium of the lives of the kings of Norway; Olafs Saga Tryggvasonar by Oddr Munkr, who lived in the 12th century (pp. 216-376), another recension of the same work is edited by Munch, Christiania 1853 (and here marked O.T.): vol. xii contains registers, etc. Heims-kringla, vols. i-iii, cited from the folio edition, Copenhagen 1777-1783, contains the lives of the kings of Norway in a text mostly identical with Fornmanna Sögnr vols. i-vii, and is therefore sparingly cited; but the Heimskringla alone gives the Ynglinga Saga, vide C. II: a new edition by Unger has been published, Christiania 1868. Codex Frisianus, a vellum MS. of the Heimskringla, fasc. I, Christiania 1869. Olafs Saga Helga by Snorri Sturluson, who died 1241, cited O. H., Christiania 1853, is identical with Fornmanna Sögur vols. iv, v, and Heimskringla vol. ii, but contains the best text of this Saga. Fagrskinna, Christiania 1847, contains a short history of the kings of Norway down to the end of the 12th century. Morkinskinna, an old vellum containing the lives of king Harald Hardráði and the following kings, by C. R. Unger, Christiania 1867. Ingwars Saga by Brocman, Stockholm 1762. Eymundar Saga, cited from Fb. ii. and Fms. v; the Saga is given in Antiquités Russes. Olafa Saga Helga (O. H. L.), a legendary life of St. Olave, Christiania 1849. Flateyjar-bók, edited in three volumes, Christiania 1860-1868, contains the text of Fornmanna Sogur, besides many other things, and is often cited (Fb.) Here may also be mentioned Skalda-tal or Catalogue of Ancient Poets and Kings, published by Möbius in his Catalogus, Leipzig 1856; but again edited by Jon Sigurdsson in Edda iii. pp. 251-286 (still in the press).
 - II. Sagas referring to other countries:—Orkneyinga Saga, also called Jarla Saga, the Lives of the Earls of Orkney from the earliest time down to the end of the 12th century, cited from the new edition of Mr. Dasent, not yet issued, the old Ed. A. D. 1780; the whole Saga is given in the Flateyjar-bók. Magnús Saga Eyja-jarls, the Life of St. Magnus, Ed. 1780. Færeyinga Saga, the History of the Faro Islands, Copenhagen 1832, from the Flateyjar-bók. Grænlendinga-påttr or Einars-påttr Sokka-Sonar, cited from Flateyjar-bók iii. 445-454. Játvarðar Saga, the Life of Edward the Confessor, Ed. 1852, also contained in Flateyjar-bók iii. 463-472. Ósvalds Saga, the Life of King Oswald, Ed. 1854. Thomas Saga Erkibiskups, the Life of Thomas à Becket, cited from a MS. 5311 in the British Museum, a transcript of an Icelandic vellum MS. called Thomas-skinna; another recension of this Saga is in an Icelandic MS. at Stockholm: it is now in the press under the care of Unger, Christiania, whose edition is now and then cited (Thom. Ed.), vide e.g. gjafmildi. Rómverja Sögur, edited in Pröver, pp. 108-386, is a paraphrase of Sallust's Bellum Jugurt. and Lucan's Pharsalia. Veraldar Saga, a short Universal History, 'Sex Aetates Mundi,' cited from Pröver, pp. 64-103. We may also here record the Porfinns Saga (vide above, D. II. 2) and Vínlands-páttr, from Flateyjar-bók vol. i, wrongly inserted in the editions of the Heimskringla vol. i, published by Rafn in Antiquitates Americanae, Copenhagen, pp. 7-78: these two Sagas refer to the discovery of America at the end of the 10th and the beginning of the 11th centuries.

F. SACRED OR LEGENDARY LORE.

- I. STJÓRN OR A BIBLICAL PARAPHRASE of the Historical Books of the Old Testament by bishop Brand (died 1264), edited by Unger, Christiania 1862; also sometimes called Gyöinga Sögur. The first part, pp. 1-319, is a scholastic compilation from Genesis, Exodus, Petrus Comestor, and the Speculum Historiale, and was composed about A.D. 1300, but the whole work is now called by the name of Stjórn.
- II. Homilies, etc.—The Homilies and Sermons of St. Gregory, marked Greg. Homiliu-bók or Book of Homilies, by Unger, Christiania 1864, marked Hom.; the figures refer to the pages of the MS. Arna-Magn. 619, which are marked in the edition: another old vellum MS. of Homilies at Stockholm (marked Hom. St.) is not published. Elucidarius, Ed. in Ann. for Nord. Oldk. 1858; the figures mark the pages of the MS. noted in the edition.
- III. HELGRA-MANNA SÜGUR OR LIVES OF SAINTS, etc.:—Barlaams Saga (by Joh. Damasc.), Unger's Ed., Christiania 1851: Clemens Saga (Clement Alexandr.): Martinus Saga (St. Martin of Tours), from vellum MS. Arna-Magn. 645:—Blasius Saga (St. Blaise), from vellum MS. Arna-Magn. 623: Mariu Saga (Virgin Mary), from MS. Arna-Magn. 656 A. and other MSS., is now edited by C. R. Unger, Christiania, and often cited both in the Grammar and Dictionary: Niorstigningar Saga of History of the Descent to Hell, a rendering of the later part of the Apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus, from MSS. Arna-Magn. 645, pp. 102-110, and 623. pp. 1-10: Andreas Saga, MS. Arna-Magn. 625: Johannes Saga baptistae, MS. Arna-Magn. 623: Postula Sögur, from various MSS., Arna-Magn. 645, 656 C, etc.; a printed copy (Videy 1836) is now and then used: Theophilus, edited by Mr. Dasent, 1842, now again published as part of the Mar. Saga. Antonius Saga, Augustinus Saga, Páls Saga Postula, cited from Arna-Magn. 234 fol. Many other small legendary stories are besides cited (without name) from the Arna-Magn. MSS. nos. 656, 655 (the Roman numerals denote parts or fasciculi), 623, 645, 677. Many of these tales and homilies are preserved in very old MSS., and belong to the earliest stage of Icelandic literature.

G. ROMANCES OR FABLES, rendered mostly from French and Latin.

- I. HISTORICAL ROMANCES:—Alexanders Saga (from the Alexandreis of Philip Gautier), by Unger, Christiania 1848: Karla-Magnús Saga (Charlemagne), by Unger, Christiania 1860: Þiðreks Saga af Bern (Dieterich), by Unger, Christiania 1853: Breta-Sögur, the first part also called Trojumanna Sögur, chiefly founded upon Geoffrey of Monmouth's Hist. Brit. and Dares Phrygius, edited in Ann. for Nord. Oldk., Copenhagen 1848, 1849.
- II. Mtthical:—Artus-kappa Sögur, containing Parcevals Saga, Ivents Saga, Valvents Saga, Möttuls Saga, Erreks Saga, cited from MS. 4859 in the British Museum: Elis Saga, Bærings Saga, Flovent Saga, Magus Saga, all four cited from vellum MS. Arna-Magn. 580; the last is also at times quoted from an edition: Tristams Saga, in MS. Arna-Magn. 443, but only cited from Fritzner's Dictionary: Mirmants Saga, cited from MS. 4859 in the British Museum: Bevus Saga; Clarus Saga.
 β. Strengleikar or Lays of the Britons, edited by Unger, Christiania 1850.
- III. Lyga-Sögur or Stories fabricated in Iceland:—The greater part of Fornaldar Sögur, 2nd and 3rd vols., vide above; pjalarJóns Saga, Konráðs Saga Keisara Sonar, and many others.

H. WORKS OF A LEARNED OR SCHOLASTIC CHARACTER.

- I. Philological:—Skálda, a collection of three or four Icelandic philological treatises of the 12th to the 14th century, preserved in one of the MSS, of the Edda (Orms-bók), and therefore usually published as an appendix to that book, and in many nodern works quoted under the name of Edda; it is here cited under the name of Skálda. Skálda is a traditionary name in Iceland, although it is sometimes applied to the Skáldskapar-mál, vide C; the earliest and by far the most interesting—perhaps the earliest philological treatise in any Teutonic language—is that by Thorodd; it is contained in p. 160, l. 27 to p. 169, l. 18 in the edition of Dr. Egilsson, Reykjavík 1849 (where these treatises are published under the name of Ritgjörðir Tilheyrandi Snorra Edda), but in the Ed. Arna-Magn. (Copenhagen 1852) ii. 10-43; the second treatise, probably from the later part of the 12th century, pp. 169-173, Ed. Arna-Magn. ii. 44-60; the third treatise, an imitation of Donatus and Priscian, pp. 173-200, is written by Olafr Hvíta-skáld (died 1259), cp. Ed. Arna-Magn. ii. 62-189; the fourth treatise, pp. 200-212, is simply a continuation of the third.

 2. The Skáldskapar-mál of Snorri, the rhymed glossaries, and the metrical poem Hátta-tal with the commentary in prose (vide C), may be reckoned in this class.
- II. Skugg-sjá or Konungs Skugg-sjá, i. e. Speculum Regale, a didactic scholastic work; the Copenhagen Ed. of 1768 is cited here; a new edition appeared at Christiania in 1848. Anecdoton, a polemical treatise on ecclesiastical matters, published by Werlauff, Copenhagen 1815, and again in 1848, along with the Skugg-sjá.
- III. Arithmetical:—Rím-begla, a large collection of arithmetical treatises, etc., published at Copenhagen in 1780: the name Rímbegla, however, refers properly only to the first part, viz. pp. 1-114 in this edition: this treatise is preserved in an Icelandic MS. of the 12th century (no. 1812 Royal Libr. Copenhagen), and is so called by the author, whose name is unknown. Algorismus, a treatise on Arithmetic by Hauk Erlendsson (died 1334), contained in the vellum MS. Hauks-bók, and edited by Munch in Ann. for Nord. Oldk., Copenhagen 1848, pp. 353-375.
- IV. Gzographical:—A small collection is published under the title of Symbolae ad Geographiam Medii aevi, edited by Werlauff in 1821, especially containing a geographical sketch by the Icelandic abbot Nicholas (died 1161), called Leidarvisir og Borga-skipan: some things are also published in Antiquités Russes and Orientales, 1852; various fragments of this kind are contained in the Hauks-bók. Some parts of the rhymed glossary in the Edda (C. I), e. g. names of rivers, islands, etc., belong to this class.
- V: MEDICAL:—Lækninga-bók, a MS. in the Arna-Magn. collection 434, 12mo; a small part published in Pröver, pp. 471-474. The chief source for medical citations, however, is a list of Icelaudic names of diseases contained in the 9th and 10th volumes of Félags-rit, 1789 and 1790, written by Svein Pálsson (died 1840), and drawn from various old treatises on medical matters.

J. MÁLDAGAR, SKJÖL, etc., i.e. DEEDS AND DIPLOMAS.

I. ICELANDIC: — Historia Ecclesiastica Islandiae by bishop Finn Jónsson, Finnus Johannaeus, published in four volumes, Copenhagen 1772-1778, contains a great number of writs and deeds referring to Icelandic church-history, which are cited in this Dictionary as far as down to A. D. 1400: Diplomatarium Islandicum by Jón Sigurdsson, Copenhagen 1857 sqq., contains deeds and Libri Datici of the churches down to the union with Norway (about A. D. 1263), but is not finished: deeds of the 14th century are therefore cited from MSS. in the Ama-Magn. collection marked Dipl., the Roman numerals denoting fasciculi: there are also cited collections of Libri Datici of the 14th century, viz. Pétrs-máldagi, Auðunnar-máldagi, Jóns-máldagi, and Vilkins-máldagi, all bearing the name of the bishops of the 14th century who made the collection, and cited from MSS. in the Ama-Magn.

· vay it sile.

II. Norse:—Diplomatarium Norvagioum, in many volumes, by Unger and Lange, Christiania 1849 sqq.; but as the language of Norway was no longer in a pure state in the 14th and 15th centuries, this large collection is sparingly cited: Björgynjar Kalfskinn, Boldts Jordebog, and Munkalif are all registers of properties of the Norse cloister, rarely cited.

K. RUNIC INSCRIPTIONS.

- I. Gotric Runes, called by some Old Scandinavian Bunes; they are identical with the Anglo-Saxon Runes, but older, and are found only on the very oldest monuments:—The Golden Horn, dug up in Schleswig A.D. 1734, contains an inscription probably of the 3rd or 4th century, explained by Munch and finally by Bugge; The Runio Stone at Tune in Norway, edited and explained by Munch, Christiania 1857, specially cited now and then in the introductions to the letters.
- COMMON SCANDINAVIAN RUNIC INSCRIPTIONS:—The Swedish Stones, collected in Bautil, vide s. v. bautasteinn; the figures mark the number: Brooman's treatise upon the Runes at the end of Ingvars Saga, Stockholm 1762.
 The Danshe Runic Stones, edited by Thorsen, De Danske Bune-Mindes-mærker, Copenhagen 1864; Rafn's collection, Copenhagen 1856. The Manx Stones are edited by Munch along with his edition of the Chronicon Manniae.

65° As to the authorship of these works, we can only briefly note that most of them are Icelandic, but parts Norwegian or Norse. Parts of A, the whole of B. II, and part of B. III are Norse; F and G are partly Norse and partly Icelandic; H. II and J. II are Norse; K Scandinavian; the rest Icelandic. Some few MSS. under the other letters are Norse, e. g. Fagrskinna; but the works are undoubtedly of Icelandic origin, Again, many of the Norse laws are preserved in Icelandic MSS., and only one of the many MSS. of the Skugg-sjá is Norse.

- BY MODERN WORKS are understood the works from the Reformation to the present time, as opposed to the old literature, which may be said to end about A.D. 1400; the following 100 or 150 years are almost blank, at least as far as prose is concerned. The first specimen of modern Icelandic literature is the translation of the New Testament, A.D. 1540, then the rendering of hymns and psalms into Icelandic, and the version of the whole Bible: the middle and latter part of the 16th century was entirely taken up with these subjects. A fresh historical literature, annals and the like, first dawns at the end of that century. The 17th century is especially rich in religious poetry; the Sermons of Jón Vídalín belong to the beginning of the 18th; essays of an economical or political character begin at the middle or end of that century, and periodicals from A.D. 1780. As for this Dictionary, it may be briefly stated that, as to the old literature, every passage is as far as possible given with references; while words and phrases from the living Icelandic tongue, popular sayings, etc. are freely given, but generally without references. No Icelandic Dictionary can be said to be complete that does not pay attention to the present language: the old literature, however rich, does not give the whole language, but must be supplemented and illustrated by the living tongue. The differences in grammar are slight, and the transition of forms regular and gradual, so the change is mostly visible in the vocabulary. But it should be noted that when a word or phrase is given without reference, this means that no ancient reference was at hand: but it does not follow that it is modern; this can only be seen from the bearing of the word, e. g. whether it conveys a notion known to the ancients or not. Of modern works cited the following may be noted:
 - I. In Poerry, first, the flower of Icelandic poetry, old as well as modern, the Passíu-Sálmar or Fifty Passion Hymns by Hallgrim Petrsson (born 1614, died 1674), finished 1660, published 1666, and since that time reprinted in thirty editions; the former figure marks the hymn, the latter the verse. The Hymns and Psalms of the Reformation are now and then cited from the Hymn-book 2. Of secular poems, Bunsoar-balkr (marked of 1619 (called Hóla-bók, cited by its leaves), or the collection of 1742. Bb.), composed 1764, by Eggert Olasson (born 1726, died 1768); this poem has always been a great savourite with the people in Iceland: the first figure marks the divisions of the poem. A small collection, A.D. 1852, called 8n6t, containing small but B. Of rimur or modern rhapsodies, the Ulfars-rimur are cited as the choicest specimen, choice poems of different poets. composed by porlak Gudbrandsson, who died in 1707; Tima-rima, a satirical poem of the beginning of the 18th century; Y. Njóla, a philosophical poem by Björn Gunnlaugsson, published 1844; Hústafia, a Núma-rímur by Sigurd Breidfjörd. pedagogical poem by Jon Magnusson (born 1601), cited from the Ed. of 1774.

 8. The Ballads or Fornkvesői, 1854 sq., vide s. v. danz.

 e. Ditties and Songs, never published, but all the better recollected,—the choicest among them are those attributed to Pál Vídalín (born 1666, died 1727), etc. etc. 3. The chief Poets are: Hallgrimr Pétrsson; Stefán Ólafsson (died 1688); Eggert Ólaísson; Jón Þorláksson (born 1744, died 1819), his poems are collected in two volumes, 1842; Benedikt Gröndal (born 1762, died 1825), his poems in a small collection, 1833; Sigurdr Pétrsson (died 1827), his poems collected in 1844; Bjarni Thorarinsson (born 1787, died 1841), his poems published 1847; Jónas Hallgrímsson (born 1807, died 1846), his poems published 1847; Siguror Breiofjöro (died 1846).
 - II. In PROSE we must first mention, 1. Nýja Testamenti, the New Testament, cited from the text of 1644, in Edd. of 1807 and 1813 (in no case is the new version, London 1866, cited, it being merely a paraphrase, and inaccurate); the text of 1644 here cited is mainly founded on the original version of 1540, which has been duly reckoned among the noblest specimens of Icelandic prose, especially in the Gospels; it is therefore frequently cited. Gamla Testamenti, the Old Testament, is cited more sparingly. The earliest edition of the Bible (Holum 1584) is called Guobrands-Biblia, i. e. the Bible of bishop Gudbrand; the next edition (Hólum 1644) is called Dorláks-Biblia, i.e. the Bible of bishop Thorlak, and is a slightly emended text of that of bishop Gudbrand. The porláks-Biblia may be called the Icelandic textus receptus; the edition of 1746, called Waisenhús-Biblia, is a reprint of it; as is also the edition of the British and Foreign Bible Society, 1813. Whenever the Old Testament is cited (and when Stjórn is not meant), the reference is to one of these three editions of the same version. we have to notice the Sermons of bishop Jon Vidalin (born 1666, died 1720), called Jons-bók (not the Jons-bók above mentioned, B. III) or Vídalíns Postilla, a highly esteemed work; the first edition is of 1718, and ten or eleven editions have since been published: perhaps no Icelandic book is so stocked with popular sayings and phrases of every kind. literature we have first to mention Islenskar pjóðsögur or Icelandic Stories and Legends by Jon Arnason, Leipzig 1862, 1864, in two volumes; some of them rendered into English by Messrs. Powell and Magnusson; the Icelandic text, however, is always cited. B. Kvöldvökur, a popular book for children, in two vols. 1794 and 1796, by Hannes Finnsson. Y. The publications of the Icelandic Literary Society, Bókmenta-félag, founded A.D. 1816: Arbækr or Annals of Iceland by Jón Espolin (died 1836), published 1821 sqq.: Safn or Contributions towards the History of Iceland, etc. etc. 8. Piltr og Stúlka, a novel, 1850.
 • The beautiful translation of the Odyssey by Sveinbjörn Egilsson, published under the name of Odysseifs-kvæði, in small parts, to serve as school books during the years 1829–1844.

 • Periodicals:—Félags-rit, a periodical in fifteen volumes, 1780-1795, contains much that is valuable in Icelandic philology; cp. also Ný Félags-rit, a periodical of 1841 sqq. Armann á Alþingi, a periodical of 1829–1832. Þjóðólfr, a newspaper, Reykjavík 1848–1869.

Ample thanks are due to the excellent reader at the Clarendon Press, Mr. Pembrey, for his watchful attention to consistency in spelling and accuracy in punctuation, especially in the Icelandic part of this Dictionary.

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS OF WORKS AND AUTHORS.

N. B.—The letters between () refer to the Classification of Works and Authors.

A. A. = Antiquitates Americanae. | (E. II.) Ad. = Arinbjarnar-drápa. (A. III.) Akv. = Atla-kviða. (A. II.) Al. = Alexanders Saga. (G. I.) Alg. = Algorismus. (H. III.) Alm. = Alvis-mál. (A. I.) Am. = Atla-mál. (A. II.) Anal. = Analecta. (D. II.) Andr. = Andreas Saga. (F. III.) Anecd. = Anecdoton. (H. II.) Ann. = Íslenzkir Annálar. (D. IV.) Ant. S. = Antonius Saga. (F. III.) Arna-Magn. or A. M. = Arna-Magnacanus. Arons S. = Arons Saga. (D. III.) Art. = Artus-kappa Sögur. (G. II.) Aug. = Augustinus Saga. (F. IIL) A. p. = Arfa-þáttr. (B. I.) Agr. = Agrip. (E. I.)Ám. = Audunnar-máldagi. (J. I.) Áma S. = Áma Saga. (D. III.) Band. = Banda-manna Saga. (D. II.). Barl. = Barlaams Saga. (F. III.) Baut. = Bautil. (K. II.) Bárð. = Bárðar Saga. (D. V.) Bb. = Bunadar-bálkr. Bev. = Bevus Saga. (G. II.) Bjarn. = Bjarnar Saga. (D. II.) Bjarni = Bjarni Thorarinson. Björn = Björn Halldórsson. B. K. = Björgynjar Kálfskinn. (J. II.) Bkv. = Brynhildar-kviða. (A. II.) Blas. = Blasius Saga. (F. III.) Bm. = Bjarka-mál. (A. II.) Boldt = Boldt. (J. II.) Boll. = Bolla-þáttr. (D. V.) Brandkr. = Brandkrossa-þáttr. (D. V.) Bret. = Breta Sögur. (G. I.) Brocm. = Brocman. (K. II.) Bs. = Biskupa Sögur. (D. III.) Bt. = Bauga-tal. (B. I.) Bær. = Bærings Saga. (G. II.) Clar. = Clarus Saga. (G. II.) Clem. = Clements Saga. (F. III.) Darr. = Darraðar-ljóð. (A. III.) D. I. = Diplomatarium Islandicum. (J. I.) Dipl. = Diplomatarium. (J. I.) D. N. = Diplomatarium Norvagicum. (J. II.) Dropl. = Droplaugar-sona Saga. (D. II.) Eb. = Eyrbyggja Saga. (D. II.) Edda = Edda. (C. I.) Eg. = Egils Saga. (D. II.) El. = Elis Saga. (G. II.) Eluc. = Elucidarium. (F. II.) Em. = Eiriks-mál. (A. III.) Esp. = Espólin Árbækr Íslands. Fagrsk. = Fagrskinna. (E. I.) Fas. = Fornaldar Sögur. (C. II.) Fb. = Flateyjar-bók. (E. l.) Fbr. = Fóstbræðra Saga. (D. II.) Fél. = Félags-rit. Finnb. = Finnboga Saga. (D. V.) Fkv. = Fom-kvæði. Flóam.S. = Flóamanna Saga. (E. I.) Flóv. = Flóvents Saga. (G. II.) Fm. = Fafnis-mál. (A. II.) Fms. = Fornmanna Sögur. (E. I.) Fr. = Fritzner's Dictionary, 1867. Frump. = Frumpartar. Fs. = Forn-sögur. (D. II.) Fsm. = Fjölsvinns-mál. (A. II.) Fspl. = Forspjalls-ljóð, (A. I.)

F. b. = Festa-battr. (B. I.) Fær. = Færeyinga Saga. (É. II.) Gautr. = Gautreks Saga. (C. II.) Gg. = Grógaldr. (A. II.) Gh. = Guðrúnar-hefna. (A. II.) Gisl. = Gisla Saga. (D. II.) Gkv. = Guðrúnar-kviða. (A. II.) Glum. = Viga-Glums Saga. (D. II.) Gm. = Grímnis-mál. (A. I.) Grág. = Grágás. (B. I.) Greg. = Gregory. (F. II.) Grett. = Grettis Saga. (D. II.) Grönd. = Benedikt Gröndal. Grönl. Hist. Mind. = Grönlands Historiske Mindes-mærker. Gs. = Grótta-söngr. (A. II.) Gsp. = Getspeki Heiðreks. (A. II.) Guom. S. = Guomundar Saga. (D. Gullp. = Gull-póris Saga. (D. II.) Gylfag. = Gylfa-ginning. (C. I.) Gbl. = Gulaþings-lög. (B. II.) Hallfr. S. = Hallfreðar Saga. (D. II.) Hallgr. = Hallgrimr Pétrsson. H. Ann. = Hauks-annáll. (D. IV.) Hard. S. = Hardar Saga. (D. II.) Har.S. Harð. = Haralds Saga Harðráða. (E. I.) Haustl. = Haustlöng. (A. I.) Hák. S. = Hákonar Saga. (E. I.) Hálfs S. = Hálfs Saga. (C. II.) Háv. = Hávarðar Saga. (D. II.) Hb. = Hauks-bók. (H. IV.) Hbl. = Harbards-ljóð. (A. I.) Hd. = Hús-drápa. (A. İ.) Hdl. = Hyndlu-ljóð. (A. II.) Hom. = Hamois-mál. (A. II.) H. E. = Historia Ecclesiastica Islandiae. (J. I.) Heidarv. S. or Heid. S. = Heidarvíga Saga. (D. II.) Helr. = Helreið Brynhildar. (A. II.) Hem. = Hemings-pattr. (C. II.) Hervar. S. = Hervarar Saga. (C. II.) Hjalt. = Hjaltalin, Icelandic Botany. Hkm. = Hákonar-mál. (A. III.) Hkr. = Heimskringla. (E. I.) Hkv. = Helga-kviða Hundingsbana. (A. II.) Hkv. Hjörv. = Helga-kviða Hjörvarðssonar. (A. II.) Hlt. = Háleygja-tal. (A. II.) Hm. = Háva-mál. (A. I.) Hom. = Homiliu-bók. (F. II.) Hrafn. = Hrafnkels Saga. (D. II.) Hrólfs Kr. S. = Hrólfs Saga Kraka. Hs. = Harm-sól. (A. III.) Hsm. = Hugsvinns-mál. (A. III.) Ht. = Hátta-tal. (C. I.) Hung. or Hv. = Hungr-vaka. (D. IIĬ.) Húst. = Hús-tafla. Hým. = Hýmis-kviða. (A. I.) Hænsab. = Hænsa-þóris Saga. (D. 11.) Höfuðl. = Höfuðlausn. (A. III.) Itin. = Itinerarium or Travels of Eggert Ólafsson, 1772. Ivar Aasen = Ivar Aasen's Dictionary, 1850. Ib. = Islendinga-bok. (D. I.) 1d. = Islendinga-drúpa. (A. III.) 1ngv. = Ingvars Saga. (E. I.) Isl. Þjóðs. = Islenzkar Þjóðsögur. Játv. = Játvarðar Saga. (E. II.) Jb. = Jóns-bók. (B. III.) Im. = Jóns-máldagi. (J. I.) Jóh. = Jóhannes Saga. (F. 111.) Jómsv. S. or Jv. = Jómsvíkinga Saga. (E. I.) Jónas = Jónas Hallgrímsson. Jóns S. = Jóns Saga. (D. III.) Jón Þorl. = Jón Þorláksson. Js. = Járnsíða. (B. III.) Karl. = Karla-magnús Saga. (G. I.) K. A. = Kristinn-réttr Arna biskups. (B. III.) Kb. = Konungs-bók. (B.I, C.I, etc.) Kjaln. S. = Kjalnesinga Saga. (D. Km. = Kráku-mál. (A. III.) Knytl. = Knytlinga Saga. (E. I.) Konr. = Konráðs Saga. (G. III.) Korm. = Kormaks Saga. (D. II.) Kristni S. or Kr. S. = Kristni Saga. (D. I. III.) Krók. = Króka Refs Saga. (D. V.) K. p. K. = Kristinn-réttr borláks ok Ketils = Kristinna-laga-þáttr. (B. I.) Landn. = Landnáma. (D. I.) Laur. S. = Laurentius Saga. (D. III.) Ld. = Laxdæla Saga. (D. II.) Lex. Mythol. = Lexicon Mythologicum. Lex. Poët. = Lexicon Poëticum by Sveinbjörn Egilsson, 1860. Lex. Run. = Lexicon Runicum. Lil. = Lilja. (A. III.) Ls. = Loka-senna. (A. I.) Lv. = Ljósvetninga Saga. (D. II.) Lækn. = Lækninga-bók. (H. V.) Mag. = Magus Saga. (G. II.) Magn.=Magnús Saga jarls. (É. II.) Magn. S. Góða = Magnús Saga Góða. (E. I.) Mar. = Mariu Saga. (F. III.) Mart. = Martinus Saga. (F. III.) Merl. = Merlinus Spá. (A. III.) Mirm. = Mirmants Saga. (G. II.) M. K. = Munkalif. (J. II.) Mkv. = Málshátta-kvæði. (A. III.) Mork. = Morkinskinna. (E. I.) Mött. = Möttuls Saga. (G. I.) N. G. L. = Norges Gamle Love. (B. II.) Niðrst. = Niðrstigningar Saga. (F. III.) Nj. = Njála. (D. II.) Njarð. = Njarðvíkinga Saga. (D. II.) Njóla = Njóla, the poem. Norge's Beskriv. = Beskrivelse Norge. Norna G. S. = Norna-Gests Saga. (C. II.) N. T. = New Testament. Ný Fél. = Ný Félags-rit. Ob. = Orms-bók. (C. I.) Od. = Odysseifs-kvæði, prose, 1829. Odd. or S. Odd. = Stjörnu-Odda draumr. (D. V.) Og. = Oddrúnar-grátr. (A. II.) O. H. L. = Olafs Saga Helga Legendaria. (E. I.) Or. = Ólafs-ríma. (A. III.) Orkn. = Orkneyinga Saga. (E. II.) Ób. = Ómaga-bálkr. (B. I.) O.H. = Olafs Saga Helga. (E. I.) Osv. = Osvalds Šaga. (E. II.) O. T. = Olafs Saga Tryggvasonar. (E. I.) Pass. = Passíu-Sálmar. Jd. = Jómsvíkinga-drápa. (A. III.) Páls S. = Páls Saga. (D. III.)

Pd. = Placidus-drápa. (A. III.) Pm. = Pétrs-máldagi. (J. I.) Post. = Postula Sögur. (F. III.) Rafns. S. = Rafns Saga. (D. III.) Ragn. S. = Ragnars Saga. (C. II.) Rb. = Rímbegla. (H. III.) Rd. = Reykdzla Saga. (D. II.) Rétt. = Réttarbætr. (B. II.) Rm. = Rígsmál. (A. II.) Róm. = Rómverja Saga. (E. II.) Safn = Safn til Sögu Íslands. Sb. = Staðarhóls-bók. (B. I.) Sd. = Svarfdæla Saga. (D. II.) Sdm. = Sigrdrífu-mál. (A. II.) Sig. Breiðf. = Sigurðr Breiðfjörð. Sig. Pét. = Siguror Pétrsson. Skálda = Skálda. (H. I.) Skáld H. = Skáld Helga-rímur. (A. Skjöld. = Skjöldunga Saga. (C. II.) Skm. = Skírnis-mál. (A. I.) Sks. = Konungs Skugg-sjá. (H. II.) Sksm. = Skáldskapar-mál. (C. I.) Skv. = Sigurðar-kviða. (A. II.) Sl. or Sól. = Sólarljóð. (A. III.) Snót = Snót, poems. Stef. Ol. = Stefan Olafsson. Stell. = Stellu-rimur. Stj. = Stjórn. (F. I.) Stor. = Sona-torrek. (A. III.) Str. = Strengleikar. (G. II.) Sturl. = Sturlunga Saga. (D. I.) Sverr. S. = Sverris Saga. (E. I.) Symb. = Symbolae. (H. IV.) Sæm. = Sæmundar Edda. (A, C. I.) Th. = Theophilus. (F. III.) Thom. = Thomas Saga. (E. II.) Tl. = Tiundar-lög. (B. I.) Tristr. = Tristrams Saga. (G. II.) Uh. = Uppsala-bók. (Č. I.) Ulf. = Ulfars-rimur. Valla L. = Valla Ljóts Saga. (D. II.) Vápn. = Vápnfirðinga Saga. (D. II.) Vd. = Vatnsdæla Saga. (D. II.) Ver. = Veraldar Saga. (È. II.) Verel. = Verelius, Index. Vh. = Vatnshyrna MS. Vídal. = Vídalíns-Postilla. Vídal. Skýr. = Vídalín Skýringar. Vígl. = Víglundar Saga. (D. V.) Vínl. þ. = Vínlands-þáttr. (E. IÍ.) Vkv. = Völundar-kviða. (A. II.) Vm. = Vilkins-máldagi. (J. I.) Vsl. = Vígslóði. (B. I.) Vsp. = Völuspá. (A. I.) Vtkv. = Vegtams-kviða. (A. I.) Vbm. = Vařprúðnis-mál. (A. I.) Völs. S. = Völsunga Saga. (C. II.) Yngl. S. = Ynglinga Saga. (C. II.) Yt. = Ynglinga-tal. (A. II.) þd. = þórs-drápa. (A. I.) þiðr. - Þiðreks Saga. (G. I.) pjal. = pjalar-Jóns Saga. (G. III.) pkv. = pryms-kviða. (A. I.) perf. Karl. = porfinns Saga Karlsefnis. (D. II.) porl. S. = porláks Saga. (D. III.) porst. hv. = porsteins-battr hvita. (D. II.) porst. Sidu H. = porsteins Saga Síðu Hallssonar. (D. II.) porst. S. St. = porsteins-pattr Stangarhöggs. (D. II.) porst. ux. = porsteins-pattr uxa-fots. (D. V.) Þórð. = Þórðar Saga hreðu. (D.V.) þ. þ. = Þingskapa-þáttr. (B. I.) Ölk. = Ölkofra-þáttr. (D. II.)

Digitized by GOOSIC

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS.

absol. = absolute, abso- | dat. = dative. decl. = declined. lutely. acc. = accusative. def. = definite. defect. = defective. act. = active. A. D. = Anno Domini. dep. = deponent. adj. = adjective. adv. = adverb.adverb. = adverbially. rich idiom. allit. = alliteration, alderiv. = derived. literative. dict. = dictionary. anatom. = anatomically. dimin. = diminutive. απ. λεγ. = απαξ λεγόdissyl. = dissyllabic. μενον. A. S. = Anglo-Saxon. astron. = astronomy, by Grimm. astronomically. dub. = dubious. eccl. = ecclesiastical. Begin. = beginning. Bodl. = Bodleian. editions, edited. Bohem. = Bohemian. botan. = botanically. Brit. Mus. = British Museum. ch. = chapter. class. = classical. tically. Cod. or Cd. = Codex. Engl. = English. cognom. = cognomen. esp. = especially. collect. = collective. etc. = et cetera. compar.=comparative. etym. = etymology. compd, compds = comf. or fem. = feminine. pound, compounds. Fin. = Finnish. for. = foreign. conj. = conjunction. contr. = contracted. corresp. = correspondmologies. Frank. = Frankish. cp. = compare.Dan. = Danish. quently.

De Professer = De Herr Professer by August Goth. = Gothic. Corrodi, in the Zu- | Gr. = Greek. D. R. A. = Deutsche Rechts-alterthümer Ed., Edd. = edition, E. Engl. Spec. = Early English Specimens. e. g. = exempli gratia. ellipt. = elliptical, ellip-Fr. = French in ety- Lat. = Latin. freq. = frequent, fre-

Fris. = Frisian. Gael. = Gaelic. gen. = genitive. gener. = generally. Germ. = German. gl. or gloss. = glossary. gramm. = grammar. Havn. = Havniensis. Hel. = Heliand. Icel. = Iceland, Icelander, Icelanders, Icelandic. id. = idem, referring to the passage quoted. id. = idem, referring to the translation. i. e. = id est. imperat. = imperative. impers. = impersonal. indecl. = indeclinable. indef. = indefinite. indic. = indicative. infin = infinitive inflex. = inflexive. intens. = intensive. intrans. = intransitive. irreg. = irregular. Ital. = Italian. l = line. L. = Linnæus. l. c. = loco citato. lit. = literally. Lith. = Lithuanian. Litt. = Littonian.

loc. = local, locally. m. or masc. = masculine. medic. = medicine, medically. metaph. = metaphorical, metaphorically. metath. = metathesis. meton. = metonomy, ntetonomically. metric. = metrically. mid. H. G. = middle High German. Lat. = middle mid. Latin. milit. = military. M. Lat. = Mediæval Latin. mod. = modern.monosyl. = monosyllabic. MS., MSS. = manuscript, manuscripts. mythol. = mythology, mythologically. n. or neut. = neuter. naut. = nautical. navig. = navigation. neg. = negative. N. H. G. = New High German. no. = number. nom. = nominative.North. E. = Northern English. Norweg. = Norwegian. obsol. = obsolete.

1 O. H. G. = Old High | Sansk. = Sanskrit. German. opp. = opposed. Ormul. or Orm. = Ormulum. part. = participle. partic. = particularly. pass. = passive. perh. = perhaps. pers. = person. pl. or plur. = plural. poët. = poetically. Pol. = Polish. posit. = positive. pr. or prop. = proper, properly. pref. = preface. prep., prepp. = preposition, prepositions. pres. = present. pret. = preterite. priv. = privative. pr. n. = proper name. prob. = probably. pron. = pronoun. proned. = pronounced. proverb.=proverbially. provinc. = provincial. qs. = quasi. q. v. = quod vide. $\dot{R} = Rimur$. recipr. = reciprocally. redupl. = reduplicative. reflex. = reflexive. relat. == relative. S = Saga. s. a. = sub anno.

Scandin. = Scandinavia, Scandinavian, Scot. = Scottish. signif. = signification. sing. = singular. Slav. = Slavonic. Span. = Spanish. spec. = specially. sq., sqq. = following. subj. = subjunctive. subst. = substantive. suff. = suffix.sup. = supine. superl. = superlative. s. v. = sub voce.Swed. = Swedish. temp. = temporal.termin = termination. Teut. = Teutonic. theol. = theological, theologically. trans. = transitive. transl. = translation. trisyl. = trisyllabic. Ulf. = Ulfilas. uncert. = uncertain. unclass. = unclassical. Ups. De la Gard. = De la Garde's collection of Icel. MSS. in Upsala. $\mathbf{v}_{\cdot} = \mathbf{v}_{i} \mathbf{d} \mathbf{e}_{\cdot}$ viz. = namely.v. l. = varia lectio. Wolf. = Wolfenbüttel þ. = þáttr.

SIGNS, ETC.

=, equal or equivalent to, the same as.

[7], between these brackets stand etymological remarks and comparisons with cognate languages.

Words in capital letters are root words or important words.

The word Norse is generally used in a peculiar sense, namely, to mark the old Norwegian idiom (or MS.) as opposed to Icelandic proper.

Historical references referring to religion, customs, life, etc. are given in chapters, and under the special name of the Saga or work cited, vide e.g. sub voce draumr and drapa; the condition of the editions has, however, made it impossible to follow this rule throughout. Philological references are given in pages.

In nouns the genitive termination is placed between the noun and gender, e. g. alda, u, = alda, gen. öldu; bára, u, = bára, gen. báru, etc.; bati, a, = bati, gen. bata; bogi, a, = bogi, gen. boga, etc. So also s, ar, jar, e.g. bekkr, s, = bekkr, gen. bekks; bekkr, jar, = bekkr, gen. bekkjar; belgr, jar, = belgr, gen. belgjar; borg, ar, = borg, gen. borgar, etc.

Compounds of nouns formed from the genitive of the noun are regarded as double words, and printed at the end of the head noun in the same paragraph, vide e. g. bekkr, bók, etc.

As to the marking of verbs the following is to be noticed: -ao, or d, o, t, tt, following immediately after a verb, are the preterite inflexions which characterise the verb; ad indicates a trisyllabic preterite with ad as its characteristic, e.g. baka, ad, that is to say, infin. baka, pret. bakaði, sup. bakað, pres. baka: whereas d, ð, t, dd, tt, indicate a dissyllabic preterite, having the dental as characteristic, e. g. brenna, d, that is to say, infin. brenna, pret. brenndi, sup. brennt, pres. brenni; fæða, dd, that is to say, infin. fæða, pret. fæddi, etc.; bæta, tt, = bætta, pret. bætti, etc.; bægja, ð, = bægja, pret. bægði, etc. Where the verb is somewhat irregular, the form is given in full, e.g. berja, pret. barði. All verbs in this Dictionary not marked as above stated are strong, and the tenses are given in extenso. The notation as above stated is adopted from Unger's Glossaries to his editions of Sagas, and has been lately used in Fritzner's Dictionary.

The simple and accented vowels are separated; thus a and ú, i and í, o and ó, u and ú, y and ý stand each by themselves; an exception, however, is made with 6, because it is rare and peculiar in pronunciation. Ang, ing, ung, yng are given with the simple unaccented vowels, though they are frequently in the editions spelt with an acute (').

OUTLINES OF GRAMMAR.

THE ALPHABET.

THE Icelandic alphabet (stafrof) in popular use as taught to children consists of the following letters (stafir):—

a, b, c, d, e, f, g, h, i, k, l, m, n, o, p, q, r, s, t, u (v), x, y, z, b, s, ö, the names of which may be learnt from two stanzas by Gunnar Pálsson in the Barna-gull:—

A, bé, cé, dé, e, eff, gé, eptir kemur bá, í, ká, ell, emm, enn, ó, einnig pé, ætla eg qú þar standi hjá. Err, ess, té, ú eru þar næst, ex, ý, zeta, þorn, æ, ö, allt stafrofið et svo læst í erendin þessi litil tvö.

The vowels are pronounced long. This alphabet was, with some additions, adopted from the Latin, and the p was added at the end; and so late as the 17th century (in the Glossary of Magnus Olafsson, who died 1636, and in the Icel. Grammar of Runolf Jónsson, who died 1654), the alphabet ends with p, α and \ddot{o} being attached to a and o; Runolf calls the ö 'o brevissimum.' At a later time α and \ddot{o} were detached from a o, and put at the end; but not both of them at the same time, as Björn Halldórsson ends his Dictionary with a. Gunnar Palsson, who wrote the first popular abc, seems to be the man who, by his memorial stanzas, settled the alphabet as it is now taught. The division into mutes, liquids, etc. is too well known to be repeated. Neither are we here concerned with the Runic alphabet; there can be little doubt that this too was rudely imitated from the Greek or Latin, perhaps from coins: Roman coins of the 2nd and 3rd centuries of our era have been dug up in Scandinavian cairns and fens: foreign coined money was centuries in advance of books, and in barbarous countries shewed the way to the art of writing.

The vowels (hljóð-stafir or less properly raddar-stafir) are, simple (short)— $a, e, i, o, u, y, \ddot{o}$. 2. diphthongal, either marked with the acute ('), a, é, i, ó, ú, ý, or double letters, au, ei, ey, a (a). Thus in written Icel. all the vowels together are, a a, e e, i i, o b, u u, y y, a, ö, the diphthongs au, ei, ey being included under a and e respectively. In this Dictionary the simple and acute vowels are treated under one head, but separately one after another; e.g. A in pp. 2-36, A in pp. 36-48; these letters are widely different from one another both as to sound and etymology; a and a, o and δ , i and i, for instance, being no more akin than a and ei, o and au, etc.; and therefore great confusion would arise from mixing them together. The long vowels are chiefly due to contraction or absorption of consonants, which in Icel. has been carried farther than in any other Teutonic language, e. g. ar, atom, and ar, year; vin, friend, and vin, wine; dyr, door, and dyr, deer; fullr, full, and full, foul; goo, god, and góðr, good, etc.

To the consonants (samhljóðendr) were added in olden times the δ (e δ), \dot{p} (porn); and in modern times j, about the end of the last century; so that in Icel. writing all the consonants are, b, c, d δ , f, g, b, j, k, l, m, n, p, q, r, s, t, v, x, z, p, (= twenty-one); and this brings the whole alphabet to thirty-six letters:—

a á, b, c, d ð, e é, f, g, h, i í, j, k, l, m, n, o ó, p, q, r, s, t, u ú, v, x, y ý, z, þ, æ (œ), ö, from which number we may subtract c, q as little in use, x, z as compound letters, δ as subordinate to d, α and α are treated as one letter, and thirty remain; au, ei, ey go along with a and e, each in its due place, as also ja, ja, ja, ja, ja, ja, ja.

There is a curious division of the alphabet by an old Icel. grammarian of the latter part of the 12th century (Skålda 169-173). He draws five concentric circles: in the centre he places what he calls the höfuð-stafir ('bead-staves,' initial letters), viz. b, q, v, p, which in Icel. can only stand at the beginning of a syllable: in the next ring the mål-stafir ('speecb-staves' or common consonants), twelve in number, which can stand both as final and initial: in the third ring the hljóð-stafir ('voice-staves,' vowels, still so called in Icel.), twelve in number, among which he distinguishes between six simple and six long vowels, the latter marked as at present with '; with them also he counts the limingar ('clusters,' double vowels), \alpha, \alpha, \alpha, and lausa-klofar (split letters), ei, ey, as well as ia, io, iu; the vowel i he calls skiptingr (a cbangeling) from its being sometimes a vowel, sometimes a consonant: in the fourth ring are the capitals, which in MSS. are made to serve for double consonants (e.g. kroS = kross): lastly, in the fifth ring, the undir-stafit ('under-staves,' sub-letters), δ , κ , κ , which in Icel. can only be used as final.

Thorodd (Þóroddr Gamlason, called Rúnameistari or Rune-master) is the oldest lcel. grammarian, and lived in the beginning of the 12th century; for a curious account of this remarkable man, a builder by profession, see Bs. i. 235. He makes thirty-six vowels, nine of which seem to be nasal, caused by the frequent dropping and agglutination of n (in the infinitives, the weak nouns, etc.) These letters were lost before writing began, but left a nasal sound so late as the beginning of the 12th century. To the five Latin vowel characters he adds $\omega, \varepsilon, v, v$. These nine vowels as well as the nasals he then doubles by marking the long with an acute ('), and so they make thirty-six. In writing and printing, ω, ε, v are out of use, but occur frequently in MSS.

Icel, prose literature extends over nearly eight centuries, and in the course of that time the language lost some of its rich vowel system; besides the nasals we are able to trace seven distinct vowels as lost. Four of them were lost at a very early time, perhaps in the 12th century, viz. & the umlaut of a (see p. I, B. 5); o or a, a vowel change of \dot{o} ; and the double e and \ddot{o} sound (see introduction to letter E); all these four letters were lost about the same time, and so early that few MSS. use them; they are not noticed in this Dictionary, except now and then for etymological purposes. Some three or four centuries later, three other vowels vanished, viz. the y sound in all the three letters y, y, ey, which became respectively = i, i, ei; but the former are still preserved in writing and printing. The MSS. down to the Reformation make in most cases a sharp distinction between the i and y sound, as also the poets; yet one very ancient MS. of the 12th century (Arna-Magn. 623, see Frump. pp. 42-48) is remarkable for its confounding both letters. The same confusion is observable in Anglo-Saxon; whereas in Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, the distinction of i and y is still strictly kept up. As for Icel, we suspect that the change began in some remote district at an early time, until many centuries later it was suddenly adopted throughout the whole country

The Icel, is not, in its pronunciation, a strongly accented language. (the acutes, as stated above, are marks of diphthongs, not of accent,) and is in this respect nearest in sound to the French. In modulation the Icel, is in the main trochaic $(- \cup | - \cup)$, and arsis and thesis follow alternately one after another: secondly, all root syllables are accentuated, but inflexive syllables have no accent, e. g. bārnā, hāndā, bōðā, hārðan, fagra; in bisyllabic compounds both the root syllables are accentuated, but the second with only a half accent, which we mark by \(\sigma\), e.g. sam-band, hug-bod, as also in strong inflexions like -andi, -astr, e. g. eigandi, hardastan: if one of the words which form a compound falls in the third syllable it is accentuated, e. g. barna-gull, barnagulli, handa-verk (but hand-verk), because in this case the arsis falls on the third syllable which is a root: in trisyllabic words with bisyllabic inflexion the third syllable is sounded 2, e. g. lausnarinn, huggunar, syngaðist, sannleikann, hentugast, truar-innar (pidei), naðarinnar, holding-janna, and that even though the second syllable is a root syllable, e. g. üppväknäðr, afsökun: words like blessunar innar. miskunar innar, drottningar innar, etc. are dactylic. Root and inflexion on the one hand and the trochaic flow on the other are felt all along, mutually resisting or aiding one another as to the measure of a syllable; accordingly, whenever the arsis falls on o it becomes ≅, if on ≅ it becomes -. In the best Icel, poets half-accentuated syllables may form full rhyme, by a poetical licence; thus, in the Passiu-Sálmar more than eight score, and in Búnaðar-balkr more than two score of such rhymes are found, e.g.

Mig hefir ljúfur Lausnarinn leitt inn í náðar grasgarð sinn. Huggun er manni mönnum að miskun Guðs hefir svo tilskikkað. Iðranin bliðkar aptur Guð ei verður syndin tilreiknuð.

Bænarlaus aldrei byrjuð sé burtför af þinu heinile. Þú veizt ei hvern þú hittir þar heldur en þessir Gyðingar. Því hjartað mitt er helmingað, hlakka-eg til að finna það.

SUBSTANTIVES.

A. STRONG NOUNS, i.e. the more complex kind of Declension in which the gen. sing. ends in a Consonant.

Masculine. 1st Declension, gen. sing. -s, nom. pl. -ar. 2nd Declension, gen. sing. -ar, nom. pl. -ir. 3rd Declension, nom. pl. -r. Nom. O heim-r himin-n lækn-ir fund-r bekk-r kött-r vetr bekk-jar GEN. heim-s himin-s lækn-is fund-ar katt-ar vetr-ar DAT. lækn-i heim-i himn-i fund-i bekk kett-i vetr-i Acc. heim himin lækn-i bekk fund kött vetr PLUR. Nom. heim-ar himn-ar lækn-ar fund-ir bekk-ir kett-ir vetr eigend-r GEN. heim-a himn-a lækn-a bekk-ja fund-a katt-a vetr-a eigand-a um t. DAT. heim-um himn-um læku-um fund-um bekk-jum kött-um eigund-um vetr-um Acc. heim-a himn-a lækn-a fund-i bekk-i kött-u eigend-r vetr Feminineand Declension, gen. sing. and nom. pl. -ar. 1st Declension, gen. sing. -ar, nom. pl. -ir. 3rd Declension, nom. pl. -r. SING. C tíð Now. heið-r höfn nál fit eik bók GEN. tíð-ar hafn-ar sól-ar nál-ar fit-jar heið-ar eik-ar bók-ar DAT. tíð höfn sól-u nál fit heið-i cik bók tíð höfn sól Acc. nál fit heið-i eik bók PLUR. Nom. tíð-ir hafn-ir sól-ir nál-ar fit-jar heið-ar eik-r bæk-r non eacc GEN. tíð-a hafn-a sól-a nál-a heið-a fit-ja eik-a bók-a diay save tíð-um DAT. höfo-um sól-um nál-um fit-jum heið-um eik-um bók-um 4 9 tíð-if Acc. hafn-ir sól-ir nál-ar fit-jar heið-ar b eik-r bæk-r Neuter. 1st Declension, gen. sing. -s. 2nd Declension. Sing. Nom. O skip barn 🚧 klæði nes högg ríki N.A GEN. skip-s barn-s nes-s högg-s klæði-s ríki-s Sing . The DAT. skip-i barn-i nes-i högg-vi klæði ríki ways sauce skip barn . Acc. nes högg klæði ríki يع .سه لا PLUR. Nom. skip ríki börn nes högg klæði 05.1 GEN. skip-2 barn-a nes-ja högg-va klæð-a rík-ja DAT. skip-um börn-um klæð-um nes-jum högg-um rik-jum a s

B. WEAK NOUNS, i. e. the simpler kind of Declension in which the gen. sing. ends in a Vowel.

nes

Sing.		Masci	dine.	11	Fem	inine.	Neuter.
Sing.	Nom. [©] Gen. 1	tím-i	steð-i	v tung-a	ald-a	ell-i	aug-a	hjart-a
	DAT. Acc.	tím-a	steð-ja	tung-u	öld-u	ell-i (unchanged)	aug-a (unchang	ed)
PLUR.	Nom. Gen. Dat.	tím-ar tím-a tím-um	steð-jar steð-ja steð-jum	tung-ur tung-na tung-um	öld-ur öld-um	no plur.	aug-u aug-na aug-um	hjört-u hjart-na hjört-um
	Acc.	tím-a	steð-ja	tung-ur	öld-ur	1 11	aug-u	hjört-u högg

klæði

ríki

STRONG NOUNS .- Masculine.

börn

Acc.

411. D (sene is head int. No ace ماد و وعد

skip

Remarks on the 1st Declension: I. heimr: words of this form are found almost in every column of the Dictionary, and are therefore usually only marked 'm.' 2. about half a score of masculines have a characteristic v, which appears before a vowel, hör-r, hjör-r, bör-r (poët.), söng-r, má-r, sæ-r, snjá-r (sjó-r, snjó-r), sör-var (poët., pl.); in dat. sing. hör-vi, ... söng-vi, má-vi, sæ-vi, snjá-vi; in pl. hör-var, söng-var, snjó-var. The dat. in -vi is now obsolete, but the pl. is still used. 3. remarks on the inflexion, the nominative: -r assimilates with the final radicals l, n, s: in words with long root vowel, ál-l, gál-l, hvál-l, hól-l, kjól-l, stól-l, fíl-l, hæl-l, præl-l, flein-n, stein-n, svein-n, brún-n, dún-n, hún-n, ás-s, bás-s, lás-s, haus-s, hnaus-s, meis-s, ís-s, ós-s, etc. In mod. usage the inflex. -s in ás-s... ós-s is dropped, as is the -r after a radical r, in ár-r, aur-r, hver-r, her-r, geir-r, leir-r, hör-r, mör-r, por-r, hamar-r, and thus the nom. becomes like the acc., ús, bás, ... år, hver, hamar, etc.:—the r is dropped, in words like afl, gafl, skafl, nagl, vagl, fugl, karl, jarl, jaxl, lax, hrafn, stafn, ofn, stofn, þorn, vagn, svefn, þegn, geisl, gísl, háls, fress, sess, foss, koss, kross, þurs, dans, fans, angr, klungr, hungr, akr, hafr, sigr, otr, lúðr, hrúðr, naðr, nykr, veðr (wetber), vikr, gróðr, aldr, Baldr, galdr, öldr, meldr, aror, hlatr, bólstr, austr, lestr, bakstr, mokstr, β. the genitive; graut-r, skóg-r, höfund-r have -ar in gen. as the 2nd declension. Y. the dative; some words of this declension drop the -i, but it is difficult to draw an exact line, as this use is rather a licence than a law: -all the words in -leik-r, kær-leik (charitati), fríðlcik (venustati), sann-lcik (veritati); as also lcik-r, fil-l, kíl-l, skríl-l, (dat. fil, kil, skril), hrepp-r, lepp-r: words with long root vowel and a final p or f, hof-r, hop-r, sop-r: words with ei as root vowel, dat. hleif, Hm. 51 (but hleif-i, 140); sveip, meis, sveig, dverg (but dvergi, Ýt. 2), strák, snáp, skáp, bát and bát-i (scapbae); þór, kór, flór, bor, hor, from bor-r, etc.; daun (odori), dun, Brun, hun, mul, mur, dur, etc., for dún-i...dúr-i, which are obsolete; so also búk and búk-i, dúk and dúk-i, múg and múg-i, reit and reit-i: those with a long vowel as final, e.g. jó, skó, ná, Frey, þey, from jó-r... þey-r:—in masculines with a characteristic v the old dat. form is -vi, whereas the mod. drops both letters, thus dat. mör, hör, má, snjó, for the old mör-vi, hör-vi, má-vi, snjó-vi. Nouns with the inflexive endings -ingr, -ungr seldom drop the i, konung-i, buning-i: words with a radical r never, e. g. galdr-i, aldr-i, not aldr, galdr: the proper names of this declension very seldom drop it, e. g. porleif-i, porleik-i, porleik-i: dag-r, dat. deg-i, but as pr. name Dag. In old writers many of these apocopate forms begin to appear, e. g. por-i (the god) is only found in a single instance used by a poet of the 8th century; yet the decay of the dat inflexion is a little increasing, though the use, ancient and modern, is in the main still the II. himinn: the contraction in dat. sing. and plur. is to be noted, and the assimilation in nom.; hereto belong all masc. with inflex. -inn, -unn, -arr, -urr, -ill, -ull: 1. -nn, aptan-n, 2. -arr, hamar-r, arin-n, dróttin-n, himin-n, Oðin-n, morgin-n. kamar-r, humar-r, jadar-r, nafar-r, etc.: pr. names in -arr (the -ar in these is etymologically different) are not contracted, e. g. Einar-r, dat. 3. -urr, fjötur-r, tötur-r, jöfur-r; but not so the pr. names, e. g. Gizur-r, dat. Gizur-i. 4. -II, bagal-l, kaðal-l, vaðal-l, biðil-l, ketil-l (q. v.), lykil-l, jökul-l, röðul-l, stöðul-l, söðul-l, möndul-l, öngul-l, böngul-l, etc.: even the pr. names are contracted, e. g. Egil-l, dat. Agli; Ketil-I, dat. Katli. III. læknir: hereto belong only a score of common words used in prose writing, bætir, ein-ir, elr-ir, end-ir, eyr-ir, fell-ir, hell-ir, hers-ir, hirð-ir, kæs-ir, kyll-ir, létt-ir, lækn-ir, miss-ir, mæl-ir, mæn-ir, nenn-ir, reyn-ir, skelm-ir, steyp-ir, verm-ir, víð-ir, vís-ir, berr-ir: pr. names as, Grett-ir, Brest-ir, Bein-ir, Styrm-ir, Sverr-ir, porir, Æg-ir: local names, Geys-ir, Keil-ir. 2. a great many (more than a hundred) poët. and obsolete words. In mod. usage the declension of these words is altered and the r is kept throughout, whereby nom. dat. acc. sing. become alike, hell-ir, gen. helli-rs, dat. acc. hell-ir, pl. hell-rar, hell-ra, hell-rum, or lækn-irar, lækn-ira, lækn-irum :-- the words with an inflex. -ari were originally, as shewn by Gothic bôcar-eis, of this declension, but now they are all weak masc., and the sole instances left on record of the old inflexion are the gen. mutar-is by Sighvat, and vartar-is, Landn. 197 (v. l. 18) in a verse of the 10th century.

Digitized by GOGIC

Remarks on the 2nd Declension: the words belonging hereto are far less in number than those of the 1st, perhaps seven score of simple nouns or thereabout, but they are often irregular, we shall therefore try to give a list of them; their marks, besides the plur. -ir, are the freq. dropping of the dat. sing. -i, the acc. plur. -u, and the characteristic i:

I. fundr: skrið-r, stuld-r, sull-r, sull-r, veg-r, frið-r, kvið-r (a womb), feld-r, verð-r, brest-r, gest-r, rétt-r, kost-r, burð-r, skurð-r, þurð-r, fund-r, mund-r, grís-s, ná-r:-inflex.-aðr, -uðr, búnað-r, fögnuð-r, hagnað-r, jöfnuð-r, getnað-r, söknuð-r, dugnað-r, þrifnað-r, skilnað-r, etc.:-stað-r, brag-r, mat-r, sal-r, ham-r, svan-r, val-r, sauð-r, óð-r, snúð-r, þrótt-r, bol-r, dug-r, hug-r, bug-r, grun-r, mun-r, hlut-r, skut-r, vin-r, grip-r, gleep-r, lyo-r,—in these words the dat. -i is dropped, as also in compd nouns in -skap-r, gleoskap-r, fifiskap-r, etc.: - pr. names in -ror, -ndr, -kon have also -ar in gen., Bárð-r, Þórð-r, Sigurð-r, Þránd-r, Eyvind-r, Geirröð-r, Sigröð-r, Há-kon, etc.:—in pl., pr. names of some people (countries or counties), Danir, Frisir, Valir, Indir, Vindir, Lappir, Grikkir, Tyrkir, Kyrjalir, Kvenir, Serkir, Vanir (the gods): Egdir, Eynir, Háleygir, Mærir, Sygnir, Þilir, prœndir (in Norway): -dælir, Lax-dælir, Vatns-dælir, etc. 😝 Irregularities; some of the words above have -s in gen. sing. like those of the 1st declension, e.g. hal-r, val-r, ham-r, svan-r, bol-r, dug-r, grun-r, brest-r, gest-r, gris-s, gloep-r, lýð-r, nú-r:-dal-r, hval-r, staf-r, mar-r, hver-r, ref-r, sel-r, mel-r have now usually -ir in pl., but in olden times they had -ar, and belonged to the 1st declension; they also drop the II. bekkr: with characteristic j, which appears -i in dat. sing. before a vowel in a score and a half of words; bed-r, vef-r, bekk-r, hrekk-r, stekk-r, flekk-r, leyg-r, eyk-r, reyk-r, legg-r, vegg-r, belg-r, elg-r, merg-r, streng-r, pveng-r, hrygg-r, drykk-r, hlykk-r, byl-r, hyl-r, ryf-r, 2. dreng-r, segg-r, stegg-r, etc. byr-r, hyr-r, styr-r, læk-r, bæ-r. have -s in gen. sing. Almost all those above (with characteristic j) also drop, the dat. -i in sing. 3. with characteristic v; sjó-r, gen. III. köttr: with an old acc. pl. in -u, sjó-var, pl. sjó-ir. prob. caused by a characteristic u (cp. the Goth. airus, quipus, tigus, 1. with a plain root vowel; pabstus, valus), three score words: kvið-r (dietum), kvist-r, kvitt-r, lið-r, lim-r, lit-r, sið-r, smið-r, stig-r, tig-r, vio-r, réttr (a fold), bur-r: most of these words drop the -i in dat. (lið, lim, lit, sið, smið, stig). 2. with a change in the root vowel, --ö, a, e, lög-r, mög-r, völ-r, völl-r, vönd-r, vörð-r, mörð-r, svörð-r, böll-r, börk-r, knörr, gröpt-r, örn, flöt-r, hött-r, knött-r, kött-r, vött-r, köst-r, vöxt-r, löst-r, mökk-r, Höd-r, Hörd-r, Snört-r, spől-r (vide bring-spelir):— $j\ddot{o}$, ja, i, björn, fjörð-r, hjört-r, kjöl-r, mjöð-r, skjöld-r, Njörð-r (the god):—a, a, a-r, a-s, drátt-r, hátt-r, mátt-r, slátt-r, þráð-r, spán-n, bálk-r:-6, a, bóg-r:-0, y, son-r: the acc. pl. -u has been changed into -i, first, in arr, ass, making aru, asu, which changed to zeri, zesi, a change which took place very early, and later in other words, which have now all got a regular acc. in -i (limi, firði, ketti, hetti, syni, etc.); syni for sonu occurs even in old MSS. To björn (p. 66) add that when used as a pr. name it has in mod. usage a gen., Björn-s, not Bjarnar (e. g. Sigurðr Björnsson).

Remarks on the 3rd Declension: I. ordinary substantives,
1. gen. -ar, mánað-r, pl. -r, mod. -ir; fót-r, q. v.; vetr, fingr, q. v.
2. gen. -s, mað-r, gen. mann-s, pl. menn (með-r); nagl, gen. nagl-s, pl. negl.
II. eigendr: the plur. of participles, when used as subst., as grátend-r, fagnend-r, gefend-r: hereto belong the plur. of bóndi, frændi, fjándi, q. v.
III. the plur. of faðir, bróðir may also be reckoned in this declension.

Gothic, that has preserved (up to the present day) the masc. inflexive -r (Goth. -s); even in the earliest Anglo-Saxon it is dropped, and the nom. sing. represents the naked root in the masculines as well as in the feminines and neuters.

Feminine.

Remarks on the 1st Declension: in every column or page of the Dictionary, and simply marked ' f.' II. hom: about four score words, with a in the root vowel changed into \ddot{o} , caused by a hidden characteristic u, which 1. fönn, önn, bönn, högld, appears in dat, sing, of a few of them: hrönn, hvönn, spönn, ögn, lögn, sögn, þögn, dröfn, höfn, körf, mörk (sylva), örk, þökk, Hlökk, vömb, þömb, skömm, vömm, klöpp, löpp, ösp, vöst, öxl, mjölt, björg, björk, tjörn, Gjöll (mythol.), löb, tröð, sög, kör, kröm, möl; and in mod. usage, dögg, lögg, öx, kvörn (kvern), q. v. 2. with -u in dat. sing.; rödd, rönd, strönd, önd (anima), jörð, hjörð, höll, þöll, mjöll, mörk (sylva), stöng, töng, 3. -r in nom. pl.; önd (a duck), mörk (marca), hönd (dat. hendi), röng, tönn. 4. the following had in olden times -ar in plur, and thus belonged to the 2nd declension, but changed into -ir at an early date, so that this is the usual form in Editions of Sagas and the sole form in mod. usage,— a. with a single final, röb, döf, gröf, gjöf, nöf, töf, fjöðr, spjör, sök, vök, dvöl, fjöl, kvöl, löm, grön, mön, þön, β. with double final, vörr, börf, gjörð, för, skör, kös, nös, hvöt. görn. Fit is likely that at earlier times many more of these words had the plur. -ar and dat. -u; the -ar remained longest in those with a single final, and the dat. -u in those having dd, nd, ll, ng as final; dat. sak-u (culpae) occurs on Runic stones, and gjaf-u, dval-u, III. sól: with a characteristic etc. may also be supposed. u, which appears sometimes in dat. sing. alone, sometimes in both 1. only in dat. in sál, ván, sól, braut, laut, þraut, dat. and acc.: fold, mold, þjóð, grund, lund, mund, stund, und, ull, hurð, urð, dögg (irreg.), rödd, etc. (above); nott, night, in plur. næt-r (3rd declension); ey dat. ey-ju, and egg dat. egg-ju belong to the 2nd declension: mæ-r, dat. mey-ju; even röddu (vocem), Pass. 19. 9, but that is a poët. 2. fem. pr. names ending in -björg, -laug, -run, -ny, -ey, -leif, Ingi-björg, Guð-björg, Þor-björg, Vil-borg, Ás-laug, Guð-laug, Guð-rún, Sig-rún, Sig-ný, As-ný (gen. -nýjar), Þór-ey, Guð-leif, Ingi-leif; in names of foreign origin, Kristín, Katrín, Elín; in all the pr. names the -u fixedly remains (in the appellatives it is often dropped), and this not only in dat, but as a common case for dat, and acc. feminines with the inflexive -ing, fcd-ing, cld-ing, drottn-ing, kerl-ing, kenn-ing, bekk-ing, virð-ing, send-ing, bygg-ing, uppstign-ing, sæ-ing, etc., so many that it would be in vain to try to record them all; they have -ar in plur, and thus belong to the 2nd declension: in mod. usage many of them have the -u in common for dat. and acc., thus drottning-u = reginae and reginam, kenning-u = doctrinae and doctrinam, fceding-u = nativitatem and nativitati, but this is very rare in old writers, yet drottningu reginam (acc.), Mar. 232, 304. B. in -ung, djörf-ung, hörm-ung, laun-ung, etc., but only in dat.; they have also -ar in plur. Remarks on the 2nd Declension: I. nál:

2. over two score simple feminines in -ing, -ung, vide above. nouns, ár, ál, nál, skál, tág, flaug, laug, rauf, dreif, kleif, veig, geil, seil, hlein, rein, vél, heið, rim, sin, hlíf, smíð, flík, kví, for, brú (q.v.), run, lend, kvern, öx (the old form), alin:-with radical r, gymbr, lifr, vinstr, vigr:--only in plur., leif-ar, hrær-ar, gerð-ar, herðar, öfg-ar, æs-ar, hreys-ar, sliðr-ar, gjölln-ar, meiðm-ar (poët.): heterogene are, lim-ar, tál-ar (lim, tál in sing. are neut.): heteroclyte are, lyg-ar, görsim-ar (sing. indecl. weak fem.) 3. add the words roo, dof, etc. above recorded (1st declension II. 4). II. fit: over a score of words, with characteristic j, which appears before a vowel, hel, skel, ben, eng, egg, dregg, ey, des, fles, il, vin (only in local names, e. g. Björg-vin), fit, klyf, lyf, nyt, dys, naudsyn, Frigg (the goddess), fiski (q. v.), mæ-r (q. v.), pl. mey-jar:-only in plur., ref-jar, sif-jar, 2. with characteristic v, ör, skef-jar, men-jar, skyn-jar, hreð-jar. gen. sing. nom. plur. ör-var, stöð, böð, dögg, gen. stöð-var, böð-var, dögg-var; only in plur., göt-var (obsolete). 🚱 Heterogene are the local names in Norway; in fem. plur., Holt-ar, Hus-ar, Hris-ar, Torgar, Tún-ar, porp-ar, Nes-jar (holt, hús, hrís, torg, tún, porp, nes are all neut. appellatives), Ló-ar, Les-jar, Vág-ar, Vin-jar, Kvild-ar, etc., see Munch's pref. (p. x) to Norge's Beskriv. III. heiðr: feminines with an inflex. -r in nom. and characteristic i, which has caused a vowel change in most of them, and which appears in dat. acc. 1. about a score of appellatives; heið-r, veið-r, Hleið-r, erm-r, helg-r (a boliday), eyr-r, mer-r, reyð-r, brúð-r, byrð-r, fyll-r, flæð-r, æð-r (an eider-duck), æð-r (vena), mýr-r, vætt-r, öx (qs. öx-r); ký-r, z-r, sý-r (q. v.), all three contr. in dat. and plur.; the obsolete þý-r, rýg-r, gýg-r (pl. þý-jar, rýg-jar, gýg-jar):—in mod. usage the -r has changed into -i, in heið-i, veið-i, erm-i, eyr-i, mer-i, byrð-i, fyll-i, flæð-i, öx-i; otherwise they retain the full declension and must not | be confounded with the indeclinable weak feminines gleð-i, ell-i, etc. In the west of Icel. the -r is still in use in fleed-r, veid-r, reyd-r (steypi-reyð-r), and all over Icel. in ký-r, æ-r; as also in brúð-r, only here the -r is kept through all cases, so that the word has an indeclinable sing., cp. the use of this word in Isl. Pjóds. i. 340, 341 (omitted 2. a great many fem. pr. names : simple, Auð-r, Fríð-r, Gerő-r, Hild-r, Þrúð-r, Unn-r, Urð-r (mythol.): compds, Sigríð-r, Astrid-r, Gudrid-r, Þurid-r, Ragnheid-r, Alfheid-r, Hallgerd-r, Ingigerð-r, Valgerð-r, Þorgerð-r, Gunnhild-r, Ragnhild-r, Ingveld-r, Þórhild-r, Hólmfríð-r, etc.: those in -uor, qs. -unnr, Steinun-n, Ingun-n, Idun-n, porun-n: in -dis, As-dis, Her-dis, Vig-dis, por-dis, Alf-dis, dat. acc. disi (omitted s. v. p. 100), and by way of analogy the foreign abbadís (abbess), as if compounded with dis; foreign pr. names, Margrét, Elizabet, etc.: in pr. names the inflexive -r is in full use over Icel., so that Baugeið, Randíð, etc. in old MSS. are only Norwegianisms. The Icel. feminines in -r answer to Gothic -is, and are different from the Gothic feminines in -s, such as anst-s, alb-s; of these latter the Icel. naud-r (need, decl. as tid) is the sole remnant. It is worth noticing that the Icel. feminine proper names have preserved and represent the oldest and fullest declension of feminines.

Digitized by GOOGI

Remarks on the 3rd Declension, which contains about two score words: 1. eik, steik, geit, greip, grind, gnit, kinn, kind (in mod. usage), flik, spik, tik, vik, rit, mjólk, kverk (but in mod. usage 2. with changed vowel, bók, brók, glóð, nót, rót, gát, kverk-ar). nátt, tönn, hönd, önd (anas), mörk, fló, kló, ló, ró, tá, gás, lús, mús, brún, stoð, hnot; plur. bæk-r, glæð-r, gæt-r, næt-r, tenn-r, hend-r, end-r, flæ-r, tæ-r, gæs-s, mýs-s, brýn-n, steð-r, hnet-r (but in present use, stoð-ir, hnot-ir). A very few of these words have also -r in nom. sing., viz. mjólk, mörk, nátt, vík; bæk-r from bók also occurs, though seldom; rist-r from rist, Pass. 33. 4, is poet. 3. to this class we may refer the plur. dyr-r (q. v.), gen. dura; the latter r is inflexive, and the form analogous to ký-r from kú; the plur. ký-r, æ-r (q. v.) to this declension may also be referred the plur. of dottir, systir, módir, although the r is here radical. The monosyllabic feminines with a final long vowel are contracted, á, brá, gjá, Gná, ljá, lá, krá, rá, slá, skrá, spá, þrá; as to the declension of these words vide á, p. 48, and brá, p. 77; ló, Ey-gló, sló, stó, þró, dat. ló-m . . .; ásjá (q. v.) has no r in gen., nor trú, frú (q. v.) The root vowel of these words is not changed, and accordingly they are classed with the 1st declension of feminines, but in a contracted form.

Neuter.

Remarks on the 1st Declension: I. skip: forms like this are regular, and occur throughout the book, simply marked II. barn: to this belong neuters with a as root vowel, which in plur, becomes \ddot{o} ; a change due to a lost characteristic vowel in neut. plur., answering to -a in Goth., -u in A. S. (cp. Lat. cornu): as a radical a is the only vowel which is affected by an inflexive u, the remains of this inflexion are only found in the words with that root vowel; these words are many: 1. single words, bað, blað, vað, haf, vaf, flag, drag, bak, flak, rak, tak, þak, skjal, far, skar, svar, glas, fat, gat, afl, tafl, fall, fjall, kall, band, grand, barð, skarð, bjarg, bragð, flagð, nafn, safn, gagl, hagl, tagl, agn, gagn, hald, vald, magn, lamb, mark, rann, happ, hapt, skapt, hlass, gjald, spjall, spjald, tjald, hvarf, starf, barn, kast, ax, fax, sax, vatn:-only in plur., lög, glöp, sköp, rök: many have no plur. with an inflexive -ad, -al, etc., changed into u, her-ad, hundr-ad, for-ad, óð-al, plur. hér-uð, hundr-uð, óð-ul: sum-ar (prop. a masc.), plur. sum-ur: gaman, dat. contr. gamni: höfuð, dat. höfði. nes: to this belong more than a score of words, with characteristic i, geð, veð, nef, stef, egg, hregg, skegg, él, sel, ben, fen, gren, men, ber, sker, nes, flet, net, fley, grey, hey, kið, rif, gil, þil, fyl, kyn, ný. högg: to this belong a score of words, with characteristic v, högg, skrök, kjöt, böl, öl, föl, mjöl, fjör, smjör, bygg, glygg, lyng, fræ, læ, hræ, hey: only plur.söl. 🚱 The dat.högg-vi, kjöt-vi, böl-vi, smjör-vi, bygg-vi, fræ-vi, hey-vi, etc. began to be uncommon even in old writers and are in mod, usage sounded högg-i, skrök-i, kjöt-i, etc., whereas in plur. the v still remains, e. g. sölva-fjara. For fé, kné, tré, see these Remarks on the 2nd Declension, containing bisyllabic derivative words with characteristic i. Most of these words are derivative and with a changed vowel wherever possible. A great number are declined like klzd-i, so that it is difficult to give a complete list of them, e. g. frelsi (by misprint called fem., p. 172); in the Dictionary they are simply marked 'n.'

II. rfki: to this belong those with a final g, k, which have j (the characteristic i) in gen, and dat. plur., e. g. fylki, riki, siki, vigi, lægi, and many others.

WEAK Nouns .- Masculine.

The original characteristic of weak nouns in Teutonic languages is | hvat-vetna, every wight).

the inflexive -n, of which in Icel. the sole remnant is the gen. plur. of the feminines and neuters.

Remarks on this Declension: I. tími: forms like this occur almost in every page of the Dictionary, and are simply marked 'a, m.' II. stedi: to this belong only a few primitive words with characteristic j, as adil-i, bryt-i, sted-i, vil-i, nid-i; the poët. and obsolete skyt-i, tygg-i; poët. pr. names, Bel-i, Ið-i, Skyl-i, Þrið-i, Vig-i; compds in -skegg-i, cyjar-skeggjar; names of people in -ver-jar, Gaulver-jar, Oddaver-jar, and in mod. usage, Þjóðver-jar, Spánver-jar, etc., cp.-varii in old Teutonic names in Latin writers:-compds in-ingi, höfðing-i, heiðing-i, kunning-i, fæðing-i, banding-i, leysing-i, auming-i, ræning-i, Væring-i, Skræling-i, etc., pl. höfðing-jar, etc.: in -yrki or -virki, ein-virki, spell-virki, etc., pl. einvirk-jar, Tyrki (a Turk, mod.), etc.:—for lé, gen. ljú (léa), and klé, gen. kléa, see these words. There is a curious inflexive -n left in pl. of the obsolete poët, words, brag-nar, gum-nar, got-nar, from bragi, goti, gumi. Some masculines have a double declension, both strong and weak, hug-r and hug-i, hlut-r and hlut-i, hólm-r and hólm-i, stall-r and stall-i, munn-r and munn-i, garð-r and garð-i, odd-r and odd-i, nið-r and nið-i, drang-r and drang-i, linn-r and linn-i, likam-r and likam-i, glugg-r and glugg-i, -ingr and -ingi; all derivative words in -leikr have both forms, -leik-r and -leik-i; cp. also pr. names as Örn and Árn-i, Björn and Bjarn-i, Finn-r and Finn-i, Odd-r and Odd-i, Gisl and Gisl-i, Geir-r and Geir-i, etc.

Feminine.

Remarks on the 1st Declension: I. tunga: this form, marked 'u, f.' in the Dictionary, contains many hundreds of appellatives, and several pr. names, Halla, Ása, Þóra, Hall-dóra, etc.: frú (q. v.) is contracted; so also trú-a, gen. trú; the pr. names Gró-a, II. alda: to this belong all the Gó-a, gen. Gró, Gó. feminines with a as root vowel, cp. introduction to letter A: völy-a, a sibyl, gen. völ-u, pl. völ-ur. Only a few of the words of this declension (little more than a score, or about two or three per cent. of the whole) form a gen. plur.; these are esp. the following, vaka, vika, klukka, ekkja, rekkja, kirkja (gen. ekk-na . . . kirk-na), stúlka, tala, vala, sála (sálna, Mar. passim), kúla, súla, gata, gáta, sáta, varta, dúfa, þúfa, rjúpa, ríma, vísa, hosa, messa, kelda, skylda; kona has kven-na; the nom. of stjarna (a star) and skepna (a creature) may also serve for gen. plur., skaparinn stjarna, creator stellarum, in a hymn: in some few cases the gen. plur, is formed by adding the article to the nom. sing., thus gyðja-nna (dearum), gryfja-nna (fovearum): in many cases the gen. sing. is used collectively, thus Icel. say, öldu-gangr, impetus undarum,-the words denoting wave, alda, bara, bylgja, are all of this declension, and none of them have a proper gen. plur.; bylg-na is found (bylgna-gangr, Mar. 269), but ald-na, bár-na are impossible forms, one might perhaps say alda-nna, bylgja-nna; sögubók, liber bistoriarum; the gen. sagn-a, bistoriarum (sagna-ritari), is rarely used and is borrowed from sogn. Sometimes this deficiency may become puzzling, chiefly in translating Latin into Icel.; in original writers it is not felt. In olden times the number of those words that allowed of a gen. was still more limited.

Remarks on the Indeclinable Feminine:—with perhaps the sole exception of ævi (life) and elli (age) all the words of this declension are derivatives from adjectives and formed by a change of vowel, whenever the root vowel of the adjective is changeable; almost all these words are abstract (denoting quality), and so have no plural; forms like gledi-r (ludi) or æfi-r (vitae) are quite exceptional and ungramma-1. single nouns, about two score of words; gleði, helgi (boliness), ergi, leti, gremi, helti, speki, hugrekki, fræði, mæði, æði (fury), hæsi, kæti, reiði, feiti, bleyði, hreysti, veyki, hárcysti, fylli, hylli, fýsi, sýki, birti, snilli, girni, teiti, hvíti, örvi, mildi, blindi, atgörvi, hnöggvi, myki: lygi and görsimi in sing., but heteroclite in plur. 2. derivatives; -semi from adj. -samr, skyn-semi (very many): compds in -fræði, -speki, but if prefixed as a double compd they take s, thus e. g. fræði-bók, but guðfræðis-bók; skynsemi (rationis), but skynsemis-trú (fides rationis, i.e. rationalismus): -ni from adjectives in -inn, e. g. heið-ni, Krist-ni, hlýð-ni, and many others: -skygni, -sýni, e.g. glám-skygni, víð-sýni: -gi from adj. -igr, e.g. græð-gi, kyn-gi; -yôgi, harð-yôgi, etc.: -gli from adj. -gull, sann-sögli (veracitas) from sann-sögull (verax): in -andi only a few, kveð-andi, hyggjandi, afr-endi, Verð-andi (the Norn): in local names, Skáni, Erri, Ylfi (islands): Skaði (the goddess) is declined as masc.

Neuter.

Remarks on this Declension: it contains, denoting parts of the body, auga, eyra, hjarta, lunga, nýra, eista.
2. a few appellatives, almost obsolete, none of which form a gen. plur., bjúga, ökla, sima, leika, hnoda, vidbeina, vetta (in ekki vetta, no wight; hvat-vetna, every wight).

Digitized by

ADJECTIVES.

A. STRONG DECLENSION, as in Substantives, used of Adjectives, both positive and superlative, when indefinite.

_		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
Sing.	Nom. Gen. Dat. Acc.	ung-r ung-s ung-um ung-an	ung ung-rar ung-ri ung-a	ung-t ung-s ung-u ung-t	fagr fagr-s fögr-um fagr-an	fögr fagr-ar fagr-i fagr-a	fagr-t fagr-s fögr-um fagr-t	há-r há-s há fyum há-ván	h á h á- rrar há-rri hú-va	há-tt há-s há-yum] hú-tt
PLUR.	Nom. Gen. Dat. Acc.		ung-ar in all genders in all genders ung-ar	ung	fagr-ir fagr-a fögr-um fagr-a	fagr-ar in all genders in all genders fagr-ar	fögr fögr	há-vir há-rra in a há-folm in a há-va	há-var all genders all genders há-var	há há
						THE ARTICLE		Participia	L ADJECTIVE	in -inn.
_		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
Sixo.	Nom. Gen. Dat. Acc.	ný-r ný-s ný-jum ný-jan	ný ný-rrar ný-rri ný-ja	ný-tt ný-s ný-ju ný-tt	hin-n hin-s hin-um hin-n	hin hin-nar hin-ni hin-a	hi-t hin-s hin-u hi-t	komin-n komin-s komn-um komin-n	komn-ar komin-nar komin-ni komn-a	komi-t komin-s komn-u komi-t
PLUR.	Gen. Dat.	n ý -jum	ný-jar in all genders in all genders	ný	hin-ir hin-na hin-um	hin-ar in all genders in all genders	hin	komn-um	komn-ar in all genders in all genders	komi-n
	Acc.	n ý-ja	ny-jar	n ý	hin-a	hin-a	hin	komn-2	komn-ar	komi-n

B. WEAK DECLENSION, used of Adjectives, both posit, and superl., when indef.; and general in compar, and part, act, sing.

			Positive (def	inite).	Сомра	RATIVE (def. 2	ind indef.)	Superlative (definite).
_		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neus.
Sina.	Nom. Gen. 1	ung-i	ung-a	ung-2	yng-ri	yng-ri	yng-ra	yng-sti	yng-sta	yng-sta
	DAT. ACC.	ung-a	ung-u	ung-a	yng-ra	yng-ri	yng-ra	yng-sta	yng-stu	yng-sta
Plur.	Nom. GEN. Acc.	ung-u	in all genders		yng-ri	in all genders		yng-stu	in all genders
	DAT.	ung-um	in all genders		yng-rum	in all genders		yng-stum	in all genders	•

O. INDECLINABLE ADJECTIVES in -a and -i, see remarks below.

D. THE ARTICLE SUFFIXED TO NOUNS.

		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem		Neut.
Sing.	Nom. Gen. Dat. Acc.	heimr-inn heims-ins heimi-num heim-inn	tíð-in tíðar-innar tíð-inni tíð-ina	skip-it skips-ins skipi-nu skip-it	tími-nn tíma-ns tíma-num tíma-fh	tunga-n tungu-nnar tungu-nni tungu-na	elli-n elli-nnar elli-nni elli-na	auga-t auga-ns auga-nu auga-t
Plub.	Nom. Gen. Dat. Acc.	heimar-nir heima-nna heimu-num heima-na	tíðir-nar tíða-nna tíðu-num tíðir-nar	skip-in skipa-nn s skipu-num skip-in	tímar-nir tíma-nna tímun-um tíma-na	tungur-nar tungna-nna tungu-num tungur-nar		augu-n augna-nna augun-um augu-n

I. the nom. masc.:-Remarks on the Adjectives: the nom. -r is dropped in fagr (qs. fagr-r), magr, dapr, apr, vakr, digr, vitr, bitr, itr, lipr, snotr, forn, sýkn, frækn, gjarn, frjáls, þurr, hvass, hress:-it is assimilated in bein-n, ein-n, hrein-n, sein-n, groen-n, koen-n, -roen-n, væn-n, brýn-n, frýn-n, sýn-n, hál-l, heil-l, veil-l, sæl-l, fúl-l, hás-s, fús-s, læs-s, laus-s, ljós-s, vís-s, etc.; inflexive, litil-l, mikil-l, gamal-l, vesal-l, förul-l, atal-l, spurul-l, þögul-l, heimil-l, 2. the nom. fem. sing. represents the root of the adjective (ung, nv, há):-adjectives with a as root vowel change into ö in fem. sing. and neut. plur., e. g. all-r, öll, all-t; marg-r, morg, marg-t; harð-r, hörð, har-t; hag-r, hög, hag-t; fagr, fögr, fagr-t; stak-r, stök, stak-t; van-r, von, van-t; hvass, hvoss, hvas-t; varm-r, vorm, varm-t; sam-r, som, sam-t; tam-r, tom, tam-t: in the inflexive -aor, a is changed into u, aldrað-r, fem. öldruð; gamlað-r, fem. gömluð; gamal-l, fem. gömul; talað-r, fem. töluð, etc., see introduction to letter A, p. 1: this change is all that remains of an obsolete characteristic u, answering 3. the nom. neut. sing. is formed to the inflexive -u in Anglo-Saxon.

by adding -t to the root: -after a long root vowel -tt, e.g. há-tt, mjó-tt, ný-tt, grá-tt, hrá-tt, smú-tt, etc. :-- the t assimilates with a final o, e. g. mið-r, breið-r, blið-r, stríð-r, fróð-r, góð-r, óð-r, stríð-r; in neut., mit-t, breit-t, blit-t, strit-t, frot-t, got-t, ot-t, etc.:—in long syllables with d or δ as final, the δ is dropped, as in hard-r, stird-r, lynd-r, doemd-r, reynd-r; in neut., har-t, stir-t, lyn-t, dem-t, reyn-t, qs. hard-t, etc. :the t is dropped in such words as reist-r, bratt-r; in neut., reist, bratt, etc.; cp. the participles of the second weak conjugation:in the participles and adjectives in -a ∂r , the ∂ is dropped, e. g. elska ∂ -r (amatus), elska-t (amatum), but in mod. usage elska-o; and only the change of vowel marks the distinction between fem. and neut., e. g. töluð (dicta), but talað (dictum):—in adjectives in -inn, the root n is dropped before the neutral t, hi-t, heiði-t, komi-t, Kristi-t, qs. hin-t, 4. as to the cases, the inflexive -r in gen. and dat. heiðin-t, etc. sing, fem. and gen. pl. is assimilated into n in the words in -inn, and monosyllables in -nn with a long root vowel, thus, komin-na (q. v.), væn-na (venustorum), væn-ni (venustae, dat.), væn-nar (venustae, gen.), etc.: into I in similar words, e.g. szl-l, heil-l, gamal-l, szl-lar, gamallar (sæll-rar, gamall-rar, etc. are faulty forms); mikil-li, magnae; litil-li, parvae, etc.:—it is dropped in those with radical r, vitra, sapientium; fagri and fagrar, pulchrae: into s in words such as viss, e.g. vissa, certorum; but in mod. usage viss-ra and viss-ri, certae; (fag-urti, fag-urrar are not right, although now and then used in mod. writers): -the r is doubled after a long vowel, há-rri altae, mjó-tra tenerarum, at least in mod. usage; old writers seem to have spelt and sounded mjó-ra, mjó-ri, etc.:—the -ar and -um are contracted after a long vowel, thus, blá-r caeruleas, blá-m caerulaeo. 5. contraction takes a. in a few words in -igr, -ugr, auð-igr, blóð-igr, úð-igr, göfigr, öf-ugr, höf-igr, öfl-ugr, saur-igr, nauð-igr, móð-ugr, mál-ugr, úr-igr (poët.), matt-igr; they are contracted before an inflexive vowel, audgan, auðg-ir, auðg-um, göfg-ir, úðg-ir, blóðg-ir, öfg-ir, höfg-ir... máttkir, etc.; in mod. usage the root is dissyllabic and not contracted, thus, audugir, blodugir, höfugir ... mattugir, etc.: even in old writers other adjectives in -igr were not contracted, e.g. hróðigr, kröptugr, skyldugr, syndugr, sidugr, rádigr,-hródigan, e. g. rádigan (not rádgan), etc., β. in a few words in -II, gamall, vesall, both in old and mod. usage. lítill, mikill, hugall, þögull, etc. II. hár: to this belong over twenty words, with characteristic v, dygg-r, hrygg-r, stygg-r, glogg-r, hnögg-r, snögg-r, þröng-r, öng-r, dökk-r, þjökk-r (þykk-r), kvik-r, myrk-r, -yrk-r, rösk-r, lösk-r, öl-r, föl-r, ör-r, gör-r, hös-s (obsolete), há-r, mjó-r, sljó-r (slæ-r); the v is freq. spelt with f in the words há-r, mjó-r, sljó-r, but not in the rest, see introduction to letter F. In mod. usage and pronunciation this v or f has been mostly lost; Icel. say há-an, mjó-an, föl-an, but it still lingers in the words ending in gg, ng, kk, rk, sk, as glöggvan, öng-van, þykk-van, rösk-van, etc. are current forms. nyr: to this belong adjectives with characteristic j: only a few words remain with g, k as final, fræg-r, hæg-r, læg-r, slæg-r, þæg-r, eyg-r, fleyg-r, ýg-r, sek-r, rík-r, þekk-r, ræk-r, tæk-r; in very old MSS. the forms frægjan, ýg-jan, sek-jan, rík-jan, þekk-jan, etc. are almost universal, but even in olden times the j was dropped in these words, and fræg-an, sek-an, rik-an, etc. are now the sole forms. This declension therefore is now only represented by mio-r (medius) and by the words ending in a vowel, ny-r, hly-r, -sæ-r; but that in pre-historical times this declension was far more extensive is shewn by the many adjectives with a changed root vowel (prob. caused by a lost j), as dyr-r, hyr-r, lynd-r, streym-r, væn-n, sæl-l, sœt-r, skæð-r, næm-r, hæf-r, mær-r, kær-r, ber-r, IV. kominn: to this belong all participles of the strong verbs, and a great many adjectives; with the exception of the contraction it conforms to the article. For participles of weak verbs of the 3rd conjugation see remarks on the verbs below.

Remarks on the formation of the Degrees of Compari-I. the compar. and superl. are, -ari, -astr, or -ri, -str, thus, kaldr, compar. kald-ari, superl. kald-astr, fem. and neut. plur. köld-ust; harðr, harð-ari, harð-astr, fem. and neut. plur. hörð-ust; frjáls, frjáls-ari, frjáls-astr (frjáls-ust): in adjectives with characteristic j or v these letters reappear, glöggr, glögg-vari, glögg-vastr; örr, ör-vari, ör-vastr; nýr, ný-jari, ný-jastr; or it is contracted, mjór, mjórri, mjó-str, but older are the forms mjó-vari, mjó-vastr. the compar. is assimilated in adjectives in -nn, -ll, væn-n, væn-ni, vænstr; grœn-n, grœn-ni, grœn-str; heil-l, heil-li, heil-str or heil-astr; sæl-l, sæl-li, sæl-str; svipal-l, svipul-li. III. some few adjectives form compar. and superl. by vowel change, há-r, hæ-ri, hæ-str; fá-r, fæ-ri, fæ-str; lág-r, læg-ri, læg-str; lang-r, leng-ri, leng-str; (fram), frem-ri, frem-str; fagr, fegr-i, fegr-str; skamm-r, skem-ri, skem-str; grann-r, grenn-ri, grenn-str; stór-r, stær-ri, stær-str; smá-r, smæ-ri, smæ-str; ung-r, yng-ri, yng-str; bung-r, byng-ri, byng-str; grunn-r, grynn-ri, grynn-str: in mod. usage also, full-r, fyll-ri, fyll-str; stutt-r, stytt-ri, stytt-str; þunn-r, þynn-ri, þynn-str; mjúk-r, mýk-ri, mýk-str; djúp-r, dýp-ri, dýp-str; pröng-r, preyng-ri, preyng-str, but also pröng-vari, pröng-vastr (older and better); svang-r, sveng-ri, sveng-str; magr, megr-i, megr-str, etc.; but in old writers we often find full-IV. heterogene, as in other languages, are ari, full-astr, etc. góð-r, bet-ri, bez-tr; ill-r, ver-ri, ver-str; marg-r, flei-ri, fle-str; litil-l, min-ni, min-str; mikil-l, mei-ri, me-str; gamal-l, ell-ri, ell-str. forming compar, and superl, from adverbs: 1. from local adverbs denoting direction, austr, norðr, suðr, vestr, fram, aptr, út, inn, of, nior, fjarr, ná-; in compar. and superl., eyst-ri (aust-ari), aust-astr; nyrð-ri, nyrð-str; synn-ri, synn-str; vest-ri, vest-astr; frem-ri, frem-str; ept-ri, ept-str, or apt-ari, apt-astr; yt-ri, yt-str (yztr); inn-ri (ið-ri), inn-str; ef-ri (of-ri), ef-str (of-str); ned-ri, ned-str; fir-ri, fir-str; næ-ri, 2. temp. adverbs, síð, fyrir; síð-ari, síð-astr; fyr-ri, fyrnæ-str. 3. other adverbs, from heldr, sjaldan; in compar. and superl., str. held-ri, hell-str; sjaldn-ari, sjaldn-astr; hind-ri, hinn-str; æð-ri, æð-str; ská-ri, ská-str: only in compar., hæg-ri, the right; vin-stri, the left.

Remarks on the Weak Declension:

I. the positive and the superlative have both strong and weak declension, according as they are indefinite or definite in sense, whereas the comparative has in either case only a weak declension. 2. the part. act. in -andi is declined as the comparative. II. the numerals bridi, fjordi, fimti, sexti, etc., the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, etc.; have (old and mod.) only the weak declension; bridi with a characteristic j, þrið-ja, plur. þrið-ju, fjórð-u, fimt-u. III. changes in mod. usage, 1. the dat. plur. -um, which is almost always used in good old MSS., is now lost, and dat. is like nom.: thus Icel. say, hinum beztu mönnum, betri mönnum, ungu mönnum; in old usage, beztum, betrum, yngrum, (Jón Þorkelsson, Hauks-bók, 1865. p. 14, note 4.) The sole remnant in mod. usage of the old -um is the compar. fleir-um (pluribus), which is still so pronounced, and often 2. the sing, has become indeclinable; the used in Icel. writings. gen. dat. acc. masc. sing. -a in the compar. is now obsolete; Icel. say yngri manns (junioris bominis) for the old yngra, dat. yngra manni, mod. yngri manni; yngra mann, mod. yngri mann. 3. the part. act. sing.; here also the gen. masc. sing. is altered; vaxanda vinds (vindi, vind), crescentis venti, into vaxandi vinds: the neut. -a is also usually changed into -i, e.g. fall-anda forað into fall-andi forað (a stumbling-block).

Remarks on the Indeclinable Adjectives. They were originally regular adjectives, which, though both definite and indefinite, had only the weak declension; and—perhaps in order to distinguish them from other adjectives in definite forms—they have lost all inflexion, and have no comparative or superlative; they vary between the forms -i and -a, andvan-i and andvan-a, originally expressing the distinction between masc., fem., and neut., but are, in fact, used without regard to gender, one MS. has -a, another -i, even in the same passage, e.g. Mar. 378; in mod. usage, -a is the current form. These indeclinable words (in the Dictionary simply marked 'adj.' or 'adj. indecl.') are very many, chiefly compound words, e.g. in al-, ein-, balf-, full-, frum-, sam-, and for the latter part, -vana, -gedja, -laga, -stola, etc., e. g. af-laga, sjálf-krafa (-bjarga, -ráða), ein-hama, ein-mana, ein-staka, ein-skipa, ein-huga, sam-huga, sam-ráða, ör-vasa, full-tíða, mið-aldra, gjaf-vaxta, frum-vaxta, hamstola, vit-stola, óð-fluga, flaum-ósa, al-verkja, al-bata, al-dauða, aleyða, á-skynja, eið-rofa, far-flótta, óða-mála, sundr-orða, tví-saga, hungr-morða, strú-dauða, afl-vana, mátt-vana, and-vana, hálf-vita, harð-brjósta, hand-lama, fót-lama, gagn-drepa, hall-oka, las-burða: single words are few, hlessa, hissa, klumsa, reisa, hugsi, játsi, heitsi, etc. In some cases it is difficult to say whether the word is to be taken for a substantive or indeclinable adjective, e.g. eið-rofi or eiðrofa, harm-dauði, full-tíði, þing-logi, næsta-bræðra.

Remarks on the Suffixed Article. This is characteristic of the Scandinavian languages, and still remains in modern Danish and Swedish. It forms a double declension, with substantive and adjective forms in the same word; or rather it gives to a substantive the form of an adjective. The inflexive -ar, -ir represent different genders for substantive and for adjective, thus, all-ir dag-ar, omnes dies, masc., but all-ar stund-ir, omnes borae, fem. The same rule applies to the suffixed article, draumar-nir, but tioir-nar. The nouns of the and strong declension are so few that they scarcely affect this rule. In very early times we may suppose that the Scandinavian language had no suffixed article; in the oldest poems it is rarely used; in old prose more rare than in modern prose; and at the present time the article is less used in Icel. than in any other living European language, and is dispensed with in endless cases, where others must use it; in solemn style it is used less than in conversational. declension of the suffixed article: 1. the b is dropped throughout 2. the root vowel of the article is dropped, if the substantive ends with a vowel, and the final n + the inflexion is suffixed, e. g. sólu-nni, tungu-nni, for the vowel of the noun has always the preference. β. so also after the plur. -ar, -ir, -r, e. g. tiðir-nar, draumarnir, vetr-nir, fœtr-nir; but not so after -ar, -r in gen. sing., e. g. tíðarinnar, fótar-ins, hafnar-innar, bókar-innar and bækr-innar, τοῦ βίβλου, whereby a distinction is kept between gen, sing, and nom. plur., e. g. tíðar-innar temporis, but tíðir-nar tempora. Icel. say, móður-inni matri, systur-inni sorori, dóttur-inni filiae, as also móður-innar matris, systurinnar sororis, dottur-innar filiae; but contracted in foour-num patri, bróður-num fratri, - föður-inum, bróður-inum may occur in old writers, Mar., but is seldom used. y. the masc. dat. is often dropped before the article, but kept if without the article, e. g. draum'-num, saum'num, but draumi, saumi: it is difficult here to give a rule. acc. sing. fem. is in old writers contracted in such words as, sök-na (causam), ál-na (funem), etc., mod. sök-ina, ál-ina, etc. vowel of the article is also dropped in the dat. of strong masc., as bekkr of the 2nd declension (without -i), thus, reyk-num, bekk-num, not reyk-inum, bekk-inum. 3. in dat, plur, the final m of the noun is dropped, tidu-num,-an older form tidum-inum, temporibus, occurs in early Swedish; this -unum is always in mod. usage sounded -onum (mönn-onum), as also in earlier rhyme, Pass. 9. 7.

PRONOUNS.

PERS	ONAL (Ist and 2	nd pers.)	Personal (31	rd pers.) wit	h gender.	REFLEXIVE.	;	Demonst r a:	rive (sá	, the, that; þ	es si, tbis).
_	without gend	ler.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
	Nom. ek Gen. min Dar. mér Acc. mik	þú þín þér þik	han-n han-s hán-um han-n	hon (hún) hen-nar hen-ni hán-a	þat þess því þat	sín sér sik	sá (sjá) þess þeim þann	sú (sjá) þeir-rar þeir-ri þá	þat þess því þat	þessi þessa þess-um þenna	þessi þessa-rar þess-ari þessa	þetta þessa þessu þetta
	Nom. vit Gen. okkar Dar. Acc.	þit (it) ykkar ykkr
Plur.	Nom. vér Gen. vár Dat. Acc.	þér (ér) yðar yðr	þei-r þei-rra in þei-m in þá	þæ-r all genders all genders þæ-r	þau þau		þess-ir þessa-ra þess-um þess-a	_	þessi þessi	common for	both demonstr	atives

INTERROGATIVE.

In plural sense ('who or which of many'). In dual sense ('who or which of two').

INDEFINITE (one, some one).

		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
Sma.	GEN.	hver-r hver-s hver-jum	hver hver-rar hver-ri	hver-t and hvat hver-s hver-iu	hvár-r hvár-s h vá r-um	h v ár hvár-rar hvár-ri	hvár-t hvár-s hvár-u	nokkur-r nokkur-s nokkur-um	nokkur nokkur-rar nokkur-ri	nokku-t nokkur-s nokkur-u
_	Acc.	hver-n	hver-ja	hver-t	hvár-n	hvár-a	hvár-t	nokkur-n	nokkur-a	nokku-t
PLUR.	Gen.	hver-ra	hver-jar In all genders in all genders	hver	hvár-ir hvár-ra hvár-um	hvår-ar in all genders in all genders	hvár	nokkur-ir nokkur-ra nokkur-um	nokkur-ar in all genders in all genders	nokkur
	Acc.	hver-ja	hver-jar	hver	hvár-a	hvár-ar	hvár	nokkur-a	nokkur-2r	nokkur

NUMERALS (two, both, three, four).

	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	1	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	1	Masc.	Fem.	Neul.
Nox.	tvei-r	tvæ-r	tvau (tvö)	báð-ir	báð-ar	bœð-i	1	þrí-r	þrj-ár	þrj-ú	1	fjór-i r	fjór-ar	fj∳gr	0
	tve-ggja		in all genders		in all genders		1	þri-ggja		all genders		fjög-urra	in all genders
DAT.	tvei-m or	tvei-mr	in all genders	báð-um	in all genders		1	bri-m or	bri-mr in	all genders	1	fjór-um	in all genders
Acc.	tvá	tvæ-r	tvau (tvö)	báð-a	báð-ar	bœ3-i	1	Ďrj-á	bri-ár	bri-ú	1	fiór-a	fiór-ar	fiögr	~ ·

Other Pronouns: I. the demonstrative hinn, hin, hitt | (the other one) is declined like the article, only the neut. sing. with II. the possessive pronouns are, 1. minn, min, mitt (meus); pinn, pin, pitt (tuus): the reflex. sinn, sin, sitt (suus). in dual sense; okkar-r, okkur, okkat (noster); ykkar-r, ykkur, ykkat 3. in plur. sense; vár-r, vár, vár-t (noster); yovar-r, (vester). your, your-t (vester); declined as nokkurr, but confracted, e.g. yorir. In mod. usage these possessives in plur, and dual sense are rare, and instead of them the gen. of the personal okkar, ykkar, yoar is used as III. for the pronouns sami (weak) idem, sjálfr indeclinable. ipse, neinn (nó einn) nullus, einhvert every one, sumt some, engi no one, annarr-hvarr one of the two, alteruter, hvargi or hvarigr neither of the two, neuter, hvarr-tveggja or hvarr-tveggi each, uterque (the former part following the strong declension, the latter the weak), bvilikr and slikr such, talis, hvilikr as, qualis: see the Diction-IV. as relatives the old language has only the particles er and sem, see the Dictionary, pp. 131, 132.

Remarks:

1. personal and demonstrative; in the mod. language ek etc. have become eg, mig, þig, sig, við, þið, vor; and hón or hon has become hún:—in the neut. þau is sounded þaug, but seldom spelt so:—old writers often use sjá as a common nom. for masc. and fem., sjá maðr, tbat man, and sjá kona, tbat woman:—dat. fem. þessi = þessari is used in old writers:—dat. sing. masc. þeim-a = þeim, and dat. sing. neut. því-sa occur in old prose and poems; in Runes, þansi = þenna.

2. interrogative and indefinite; remains of an older declension are, hvat, wbat (still in full use); dat. hveim (poët. and obsolete); hví, wby; hve, bow, mod. also hversu; the mod. hvaða is curious, being indeclinable throughout:—old form nekkverr or nakkverr (necquerr, naquarr in the MSS.): in mod. usage nokkurr, but contracted before a vowel, e.g. nokkr-ir, nokkr-um, etc.

Remarks on the Numerals: I. the cardinals; the first four are declined, einn, tveir, etc.: the rest indeclinable, fimm, sex, sjau (mod. sjö), átta, níu, tíu, ellifu, tólf, þrettán, fjórtán, fimmtán, sextán, sjautján (mod. sautján), átján, nítján, tuttugu (twenty), tuttugu ok einn, etc.,—the decades first and then the smaller numbers: but with the even decades, from twenty onwards, the reverse is common in Icel.,—eiun og tuttugu (one and twenty),...tíu og tuttugu ('ten and twenty'), ... nítján og tuttugu ('nineteen and twenty'), fjörutíu (forty), einn og fjörutíu (one and forty), and so on to sixty, then from sixty to eighty, from eighty to 'tenty' (tiu-tiu = bundred), from 'tenty' to a hundred (i. e. the gross hundred, 120). Icel. children in play, shepherds in counting their flocks, and fishermen in counting their catch are sure to reckon in this way. From forty and upwards the Danes say, tre-sinds-tyve (= three times twenty = three score) for 60, firsinds-tyve (= four score) for 80, and balv treds (= tbree score minus a balf score) for 50, balv fjerds (= four score minus a balf score) for 70, balv fems (=balf the fifth score, i.e. five score minus a balf) for 90; but not so in Sweden and Norway. The decades are in old writers treated as independent words, and declined, brir tigir, dat. bremr tigum, acc. þrjá tigi, with a following genitive, e.g. fjóra tigi manna (quadraginta 'bominum'), etc.; in mod. usage indeclinable, þrjá-tíu, fjöru-tíu, fimm-tíu, sex-tíu, sjö-tíu, átta-tíu, níu-tíu, tíu-tíu (' ten ten,' i.e. one bundred), but usually hundrad; both hundrad (bundred) and busund (thousand) are in old writers (and freq. in mod.) declined and followed by a genitive, e. g. þúsund manna, tveim hundruðum skipa. the ordinals; fyrstr (q.v.), annarr (q.v.): the rest only in the weak declension, priði, gen. dat. acc. þriðja, plur. þriðju indecl.; fjór-ði, fimm-ti, sét-ti, sjaun-di (mod. sjöun-di), át-ti (mod. áttun-di), níundi, tíun-di, ellef-ti, tólf-ti, þrettán-di, fjórtán-di, ... tuttug-asti (twentieth), pritug-asti, fertug-asti, ... nitug-asti, hun-drað-asti, ... þúsundasti. III. distributives from I to 4; ein-ir (singuli), tvennir (bini), prenn-ir (trini), fern-ir (quaterni), all as regular adjec-IV. multiplicatives, either tve-nnr (duplex), pre-nnr (triplex), fer-n (quadruplex); or with -faldr, ein-faldr, tvau-faldr (twofold), þrí-faldr, fer-faldr,... átt-faldr, ní-faldr, tí-faldr,... tvítugfaldr, pritug-faldr, ... hundrað-faldr, þúsund-faldr, all regular adjec-V. the adjectives in -tugr and -ræðr, denoting aged, tives. measuring, for the decades, from twenty and upwards: for the decades, from 20 to 70, tvi-tugr, pri-tugr, fer-tugr, fimm-tugr, β. -ræðr, for the decades, from 80 to 120, áttsex-tugr, sjau-tugr. ræðr, ní-ræðr, tí-ræðr (centenarius), tólf-ræðr (numbering 120), hence tólf-rætt hundrað = 120, and tí-rætt hundrað = 100. numeral adverbs, tvisvar = bis, prysvar = tris; the rest formed by sinni or sinnum, times; fjórum-sinnum, four times = quater, etc.

VERBS.

A. WEAK VERBS, i.e. Verbs in which the Preterite is formed by adding a Termination: characterised by the final vowel of the pres. sing.

			•			, ,		•		. ,
-				jugation,	2nd Conj characteris		3rd Con	jugation, el i is suppressed.	4th Conju
Indic, Pres.	Sing.	I. 2.	boð-a boð-ar	kall-a kall-ar	dœm-i dœm-ir	fylg-i fylg-ir	gleð gleð-r	spyr spyr-r	vak-i vak-ir	dug-i dug-ir
	Plur.	3. 1. 2.	boð-ar boð-um boð-it	kall-ar köll-um kall-it	dœm-ir dœm-um dœm-it	fylg-ir fylg-jum fylg-it	gleð-r gleð-jum gleð-it	spyr-r spyr-jum spyr-it	vak∗ir vök•um vak-it	dug-ir dug-um dug-it
Pret.	Sing.	3· 1.	boð-a boð-aða	kall-a kall-aða	dœm-a dœm-da	fylg-ja fylg-da	gle ð-ja glad-da	spyr-ja spur-ða	vak-a vak-ta	dug-2 dug-ða
	Plur.	2. 3. 1. 2.	boð-aðir boð-aði boð-uðum boð-uðut boð-uðu	kall-aðir kall-aði köll-uðum köll-uðut köll-uðu	dæm-dir dæm-di dæm-dum dæm-dut dæm-du	fylg-dir fylg-di fylg-dum fylg-dut fylg-du	glad-dir glad-di glöd-dum glöd-dut glöd-du	spur-ðir spur-ði spur-ðum spur-ðut spur-ðu	vak-tir vak-ti vök-tum vök-tuð vök-tu	dug-ðir dug-ði dug-ðum dug-ðut dug-ðu
Imperat.			boð-a	kall-a	dœm	fylg	gleð	spyr	vak (vak-i)	dug (dug-i)
Subj. Pres.	Sing.	1. 2.	boð-a boð-ir boð-i	kall-a kall-ir kall-i	dœm-a dœm-ir dœm-i	fylg-ja fylg-i r fylg-i	gle ō-ja gleō-ir gleō-i	spyr-ja spyr-ir spyr-i	vak-a vak-ir vak-i	dug-a dug-ir dug-i
	Plur.	3. 2. 3.	boð-im boð-it boð-i	kall-im kall-it kall-i	dæm-im dæm-it dæm-i	fylg-im fylg-it fylg-i	gleð-im gleð-it gleð-i	spyr-im spyr-it spyr-i	vak-im vak-it vak-i	dug-im dug-it dug-i
Pret.	Sing.	I. 2.		kall-aða kall-aðir kall-aði	dœm-da dœm-dir dœm-di	fylg-da fylg-dir fylg-di	gled-da gled-dir gled-di	spyr-ða spyr-ðir spyr-ði	vek-ta vek-tir vek-ti	dyg-ða dyg-ðir dyg-ði
	Plur.	I. 2. 3.	boð-aðim boð-aðit boð-aði	kall-aðim kall-aðit kall-aði	dœm-dim dœm-dit dœm-di	fylg-dim fylg-dit fylg-di	gled-dim gled-dit gled-di	spyr-ðim spyr-ðit spyr-ði	vek-tið vek-tið vek-ti	dyg-ðim dyg-ðit dyg-ði
Infin.			boð-a	kall-a	dœm-a	fylg-ja	gleð-ja	sрут-ja	vak-a	dug-a PART. Act.			boð-andi	kall-andi	dœm-andi	fylg-jandi	gleð-jandi	spyr-jandi	vak-andi	dug-andi
PART. Pass.	Fem.	د	boð-aðr boð-uð	kall-aðr köll-uð	dœm-dr dœm-d		glad-dr glöd-d	spur-ðr spur-ð	vols te	. •
	Neut. Supine		boða-t	kalla-t	dœm-t	fylg-t	glat-t	spur-t	vaka-t	duga-t

B. STRONG VERBS, i. e. Verbs in which the Preterite is formed by changing the Root Vowel (as found in the Infin.)

change of		st Class, le(i) into a (u)	2nd Class, into ei, [i.]	3rd Class, jo into au, u.	4th Class, a into o.		Class, into a , [á, o./	6th (á into é;	Class, au into jó.
INDIC. Pres. Sing.	I. 2.	brenn brenn-r	rís rís- s	byð byð-r	fer fer-r	gef gef-r	ber ber-r	græt græt-r	hleyp hleyp-r
Plur.	3. 1. 2. 3.	brenn-r brenn-um brenn-it brenn-a	rís-s rís-um rís-it rís-2	býð-r bjóð-um bjóð-it bjóð-a	fer-r för-um far-it far-a	gef-r gef-um gef-it gef-a	ber-r ber-um ber-it ber-a	græt-r grát-um grát-ið grát-a	hleyp-r hlaup-um hlaup-it hlaup-a
Pret. Sing.	2. 3.	brann brann-t brann brunn-um brunn-ut brunn-u	reis reis-t reis ris-um ris-ut ris-u	bauð baut-t bauð buð-um buð-ut buð-u	fór fór-t fór fór-um fór-ut fór-u	gaf gaf-t gaf gáf-um gáf-ut gáf-u	bar bar-t bar bár-um bár-ut bár-u	grét grét-st grét grét-um grét-uð grét-u	hljóp hljóp-t hljóp hljóp-um hljóp-ut hljóp-u
IMPERAT.		brenn	rís	bjó ð	far	gef	ber	grát	hlaup
SUBJ. Pres. Sing.	2. 3.	brenn-a brenn-ir brenn-i brenn-im	rís-a rís-ir rís-i rís-im	bjó ð-a bjó ð- ir bjó ð-i bjó ð-im	far-a far-ir far-i far-im	gef-a gef-ir gef-i gef-im	ber-a ber-ir ber-i ber-im	grát-a grát-ir grát-i grát-im	hlaup-a hlaup-ir hlaup-i hlaup-im
	2. 3.	brenn-it brenn-i	rís-i t rís-i	bjó ð-it bjó ð-i	far-it f ar-i	gef-it gef-i	ber-it ber-i	grát-ir grát-i	hlaup-it hlaup-i
Pret. Sing.	I. 2. 3.	brynn-i brynn-ir brynn-i	ris-2 ris-ir ris-i	byð-a byð-ir byð-i	fœr-a fœr-ir fœr-i	gæf-i gæf-ir gæf-i	bær-i bær-ir bær-i	grét-2 grét-ir grét-i	hlyp-a hlyp-ir hlyp-i
Plur.	1. 2. 3.	brynn-im brynn-it brynn-i	ris-im ris-it ris-i	býð-im byð-it byð-i	fær-im fær-it fær-i	gæf-i m gæf-it gæf-i	bær-im bær-it bær-i	grét-im grét-i ð grét-i	hlyp-im hlyp-it hlyp-i
Inpin.		brenn-a	rís-2	bjó ð-a	far-a	gef-a	ber-a	grát-a	hlaup-a PART. Act.		brenn-andi	rís-andi	bjóð-andi	far-andi	gef-andi	ber-andi	grát-andi	hlaup-andi PART. Pass. Mass. Fem. Neut.	-	brunn-inn brunn-in	ris-inn ris-in	bo ð-inn boð-in	far-inn far-in	gef-inn gef-in	bor-inn bor-in	grát-inn grát-in	hlaup-inn hlaup-in
· Supin		brunn-it	ris-it	boð-it	far-it	gef-it	bor-it	grát-ið	hlaup-it

Digitized by GOOGLE

vis-sa

vit-a

vit-20

unn-andi vit-andi

C. IRREGULAR VERBS.

Pret. Sing. 1. ætt-a IMPIN. Pres.

PART. Act.

Pret.

PART. Pass. Neut.

knætt-a

as regular weak verbs eig-a

á-tt

eig-andi

THE VERB SUBSTANTIVE.

Literal	c. Pyes . S	ing. Plur.	3. 1. 2.	em er-t er (es) er-um er-ut er-u	Pret. var (vas) var-t var (vas) vár-um vár-u vár-u		AT. Ver (ver verit (es	•	sj. Pres . sé sé-r sé sé-m sé-t sé	Pret. vzr-a vzr-ir vzr-i vzr-im vzr-it vzr-i	Infin, ve	er-a Par	r, Pass. ver-it	:
						Ten Verb	WITH PRE	SENT IN P	RETERITE FOR	м.
ÎNDIC	:. Pre s. Si	in g.	I. 2. 3.	á á-tt á	kná kná-tt kná	má má-tt má	skal skal-t skal	kann kann-t kann	mun (mon mun-t mun) man man-t man	þarf þarf-t þarf	ann ann-t ann	veit // veiz-t veit
-	P	lur.	I. 2.	eig-um eig-ut eig-u		meg-um meg-ut meg-u	skul-um skul-ut skul-u	kunn-un kunn-ut kunn-u		mun-um mun-it mun-a	purf-um purf-ut purf-u	unn-um unn-it unn-2	vit-um vit-uð vit-u
	Pret. S	ing.	ī.	á-tta as regula	kná-tta r weak verbs	má-tta		kunn-a	mun-da	mun-da	þurf-ta	unn-s	vis-sa
IMPE	RAT.			eig				kunn		mun		unn	vit
Sunj.	Pres. S	ing.	ı.	cig-a as regular	r weak verbs	meg-a	skul-2	kunn-a	mun-a	mun-2	þurf-a	unn-2	vit-a
					•

NINE VERBS WITH THE PRETERITE IN -ra (-li).

kynn-a kunn-a

kunn-andi

kunn-at møn-da

mun-u mun-du myn-da

mun-a mun-andi

mun-at þyrf-ta

burf-a burf-andi

burf-t

ynn-a unn-a

unn-t

INDIC. Pres. Sing. Plur.		rœ-r ró-a	grœ-r gró-a	sæ-r så	gn ý- r gnú-a	sný-r snú-a	frýs-s frjós-a	kýs-s kjós-a	slæ-r slá	veld-r vald-2
Pret. Sing.		rö-ri re-ri	grö-ri gre-ri	sö-ri se-ri	gnö-ri gne-ri	snö -ri s ne-ri	frö-ri fre-ri	kjö-ri ke-ri	slö-ri sle-ri)	ol-li
IMPERAT.		ró	gró	sá.	gnú	snú	frjós	kjós	slá	vald Subj. Pret. Sing.	3.	rö-ri	grö-ri	sö-ri	gnö-ri	snö-ri	frö-ri	kjö-ri	, slö-ri	yll-i lurur.		ró-a	gró-a	sá	gnú-a	snú-a	frjós-a	kjós-a	slá	vald-a PART. Pass.		ró-inn	gró-inn	sá-inn	gnú-inn	snú-inn	fros-inn	kos-inn	sleg-inn	v ald-it skyl-da

skul-u skyl-du mætt-a

meg-a

má-tt

meg-andi

D. VERBS WITH THE REFLEXIVE OR RECIPROCAL SUFFIX -sk, -z, -st (-mk).

	Pres	ent.	Preter	rite.	Present.			Preterite.
	Indic.	Subj.	Indic.	Subj.	1	Indic.	Subj.	Indic.	Subj.
Sing.	 kalla-sk 	kalli-sk	kallaði-sk	kallaði-sk	ı	læz k	láti-sk	lézk	léti-sk
_	kalla-sk	kalli-sk	kallaði-sk	kallaði-sk		læzk	láti-sk	lézk	léti-s k
	3. kalla-sk	kalli-sk	kallaði-sk	kallaði-sk	1	læzk	láti-sk	lézk	léti-sk
Plur.	ı. köllu-mk	kalli-mk	kölluðu-mk	kallaði-mk	- 1	látu-mk	láti-m k	létu-m k	léti-mk
	2. kalli-zk	kalli-zk	kölluðu-zk	kallaði-zk		láti-zk	láti-z k	létu-zk	léti-z k
	3. kalla-sk	kalli-sk	kölluðu-sk	kallaði-sk		láta-sk	láti-sk	létu-sk	léti-sk

Part. Pass. Neut. kalla-zk, láti-zk, (glað-zk, gefi-zk, bori-zk,) etc.

M. VERBS WITH THE NEGATIVE SUFFIX.

lattic.	Sing.	Pres. I. em-k-at 2. ert-at-tu 3. er-at (cs-at)	Pret. var-k-at (vask-at) vart-at-tu var-at (vas-at)	Pres. skal-k-at skalt-at-tu skal-at	Pret. skyldi-ga skyldi-a skyldi-t	Pres. mon-k-a mont-at-tu mon-at	Pret. mundi-3A mundir-2 mundi-t	Pres. hyk-k-at hyggr-at hyggr-at	Pret. átti-g-a áttir-a átti-t
	Ples.	3. eru-t	váru-t	skulu-t	skyldu-t	monu-t	mundi-t	hyggja-t	áttu-t

INDERAT. ver-at-tu (be not ibou !), lat-at-tu (let not ibou !), grat-at-tu (weep not ibou !), etc.

WEAK VERBS.

Remarks on the 1st Conjugation. To this belong four or five hundred simple verbs, which in the Dictionary are marked 'ao, i. e. pret. -20i; they are, I. verbs with a primitive root vowel, a, á, au, o, b, u, ú (except a few which are placed in the 4th conjugation), e. g. tala, baga, haga, skada, baka, stama, bana, svara, rasa, tapa, hvata, rata, hata, glata, launa, fagna, banna, safna, anda, varna, starfa, stoda, loga, loka, losa, rota, hóta, róma, hljóða, sópa: verbs with i as root vowel, esp. if before a single consonant, frida, skrifa, kvika, lima, lina, skipa, hita, kvista; some with á, ei, leita, reika, eisa, geisa, smíða, lika, etc. II. derivatives. 1. in -na, inchoative verbs, daf-na, kaf-na, harð-na, vak-na, blá-na, grá-na, fit-na, hvít-na, vis-na, los-na, roð-na, brot-na, bólg-na, föl-na, fú-na, dök-na, ves-na, tré-na, (a hundred words or more.) 2. in -ga, from adj. -igr, chiefly in a causal sense, to make so and so, about a score of words, aud-ga, blód-ga, mód-ga, göf-ga, hel-ga, líf-ga, naud-ga, saur-ga, fjölga, frjóv-ga, vin-gast, hold-gast, synd-ga, kván-gask, hýr-ga, þýf-ga: in -ka, denoting to become or make so and so, hæ-kka, læ-kka, smækka, fæ-kka, grœn-ka, væn-kast, dýp-ka, rým-ka, mjó-kka, breið-ka, sein-ka, víð-ka, mín-ka, blíð-ka, þur-ka, ið-ka, tíð-ka, þræl-ka, which follow the 1st conjugation without regard to root vowel. -sa, iteratives, glep-sa, hrif-sa, taf-sa, hram-sa, kjam-sa, ryg-sa, king-sa, ving-sa, flak-sa, flang-sa, vind-sa, kal-sa; with these may be reckoned hug-sa (cogitare), hrein-sa; (these words also are few.) 4. in -ja, a few words (perhaps thirty), veð-ja, steð-ja, stef-ja, egg-ja, gnegg-ja, hrekk-ja, bel-ja, em-ja, gren-ja, her-ja, ið-ja, kvið-ja, rif-ja, gil-ja, fit-ja, vit-ja, klyf-ja, syf-ja, lyf-ja, byr-ja, bryn-ja, skyn-ja, syn-ja, dys-ja, flys-ja, bryt-ja, á-ný-ja. 5. in -va, böl-va, möl-va, göt-va, ör-va, 6. in -la, a kind of diminutive, but rare, etc., (a few words.) ding-la (to dangle), hönd-la (captare), hvarf-la, söng-la (to sing between the teeth), skját-la, væt-la (to drip, ooze), sving-la, trít-la, skurt-la (to make a slight cut), fip-la, rup-la, hnup-la, grip-la, jap-la (to clip, mumble with the teeth), tonn-last, gut-la, brut-la, œx-la, etc. in -ra, klif-ra, halt-ra, hlið-ra, (a few words, some of which are conversational.)

Remarks on the 2nd Conjugation. To this belong several hundred words, which in the Dictionary are marked variously 'd, 8, dd, t, tt,' according to the final root consonant; in words like fceða, reiða, the pret. are fced-di, reid-di; so beita, bceta, pret. beit-ti, bœt-ti: the d becomes d after a soft root consonant or a vowel, e.g. ræg-ja, ræg-ði; svæf-a, svæf-ði, etc.: it becomes t after hard consonants, or s, reis-a, reis-ti; leys-a, leys-ti, cp. introduction to letter D, p. 93 (C. III): it is dropped and cannot be sounded in words like skept-a, hept-a, frétta, geld-a, send-a, lend-a, ert-a, pret. skept-i, frétt-i, send-i, lend-i, ert-i: in mod. usage a root d may even be changed into t; Icel. often say, hert-i, ent-i, lent-i, synt-i, from herð-a, end-a, lend-a, synd-a: in words with a double final consonant it is common to drop one, thus kyss-a, kys-ti; perr-a, per-di; but ll and nn are more often (and properly) retained, as fell-di, fell-t, kenn-di, kenn-t, from fell-a, kenn-a, better than fel-di, fel-t, ken-di, ken-t. this conjugation belong chiefly derivative verbs with a changed vowel in the root, e, ey, ý, æ, æ, e. g. brenna (to make burn), kenna (to teach), gleyma, dreyma, bœta, græta, græða, hýsa, lýsa, (several hundred words.) In earlier times (in Gothic) these words had a characteristic j and a primitive vowel, e.g. Goth. dôm-jan, baus-jan, = lcel. doem-a, heyr-a; this j has in Icol. been preserved in verbs with a short root vowel and a single final consonant (see the 3rd conjugation); but in verbs with a diphthong or long vowel only if the final be g or k, or if they end in a vowel, e. g. blekk-ja, drekk-ja, sekk-ja, rekk-ja, bekk-ja, telg-ja, velg-ja, eng-ja, deng-ja, leng-ja, feyk-ja, teyg-ja, heygja, beyg-ja, sleik-ja, steik-ja, rík-ja, berg-ja, þresk-ja, bæg-ja, hæg-ja, læg-ja, væg-ja, stygg-ja, drýg-ja, byrg-ja, syrg-ja, rýja, etc., (about a hundred words, see the Dictionary): fylgja is a specimen of these verbs. A few verbs which now have -ja had in olden times -va, e. g. bygg-va, styrk-va, stygg-va, hrygg-va are older forms than bygg-ja, styrk-ja, hrygg-ja. Many verbs with i, ei as root vowel belong to this conjugation, not only derivatives, as leida, reisa, beita, from the strong verbs lida, risa, bita; but also other words, as beina, greina, deila, glima, tina, nita: also verbs with i before a double consonant, as spilla, villa, dimma, inna, ginna, sinna, dirfa, firra, missa, hitta, flimta, skipta, gista, hrista, and many others. Monosyllables as má, brá, spá, strá, fá (pingere), gljá, kljá, þjá, hrjá, tjá, etc. are contracted, but, in spite of the root vowel, belong to this conjugation.

Remarks on the 3rd Conjugation. To this belong about ninety words:

1. about fifty verbs with e(a) for the root vowel, gleð-ja, kveð-ja, bleð-ja, seð-ja, skeð-ja (obsolete), teð-ja, kef-ja, kref-ja, svef-ja, tef-ja, vef-ja, peg-ja, hrek-ja, klek-ja, rek-ja, pek-ja, dvel-ja, kvel-ja, seg-ja, tel-ja, vel-ja, frem-ja, grem-ja, hem-ja, krem-ja, lem-ja, sem-ja, tem-ja, spen-ja, pen-ja, ven-ja, glep-ja, lep-ja, skep-ja, ber-ja, er-ja, fer-ja, mer-ja, ver-ja (defendere), ver-ja (induere), et-ja, flet-ja, hvet-ja, let-ja, met-ja, set-ja, legg-ja, pret. bag-oi (obso-2. about thirty verbs with y lete, vide bæg-ja), skil-ja, þil-ja, vil-ja. (u) for the root vowel, bryd-ja, gnyð-ja, ryð-ja, snyð-ja (obsolete), styð-ja, hygg-ja, ygg-ja, tygg-ja (mod., but old usage strong), kryf-ja, lyk-ja, byl-ja, dyl-ja, hyl-ja, myl-ja, þyl-ja, glym-ja, rym-ja, ym-ja, þrym-ja (obsolete), dyn-ja, dryn-ja, hryn-ja, styn-ja, smr-ja, spyr-ja, pyr-ja (obsolete), fyr-va, pret. bus-ti (obsolete), pret. pus-ti, flyt-ja. few verbs with long root vowel, hey-ja, prey-ja, dý-ja, flý-ja, gný-ja, knýja, hlý-ja, lý-ja, tý-ja, which have monosyllabic pres. indic. hey-r, dý-r, flý-r, and change even the vowel in pret., há-ði (gessit), dú-ði, knú-ði; and in mod. usage also flú-ði, hlú-ði, lú-ði, but flý-ði, etc. in old writers: sel-ja and set-ja have unchanged pret. sel-di, set-ti; skil-ja has skil-di; vil-ja, vil-di, part. vil-jat; seg-ja and þeg-ja a bisyllabic pres. seg-i, 1. the characteristic marks II. special remarks: a. the vowel change in pret. indic. (glad-di, spur-bi). y. the monosyllabic pres. vowel in pret. subj. (gled-di, spyr-ði). δ . the j as characteristic; only fyrva, an indic. sing. (gleð, spyr). obsolete word, has v. 2. a participle passive in -iôr is used in some of these verbs by old writers, especially poets, viz. a bisyllabic form, as kraf-iðr, vaf-iðr, vak-iðr, tal-iðr, bar-iðr, hul-iðr, val-iðr, variðr, tam-iðr, lag-iðr, skil-iðr, þil-iðr, fem. bar-ið . . . lag-ið, neut. barit ... lag-it (see Lex. Poët.): this -ior was in later times changed into -inn in imitation of the strong verbs, which however is only used in about thirty-four verbs (a third of the whole number), viz. kraf-inn, kaf-inn, taf-inn, vaf-inn, hrak-inn, klak-inn, rak-inn, vak-inn, þak-inn, dval-inn, kval-inn, tal-inn, val-inn, fram-inn, ham-inn, kram-inn, laminn, sam-inn, tam-inn, þan-inn, van-inn, bar-inn, mar-inn, var-inn, skilinn, kruf-inn, dul-inn, hul-inn, mul-inn, bul-inn, hrun-inn, knú-inn, flu-inn, lu-inn (in old writers, kný-iðr, flý-iðr),-almost the same words in which the ancients had -ior: these forms begin to occur in MSS. of the 13th or 14th century, e. g. dulin, Fb. i. 12, Fs. 97 (Arna-Magn. 132); pilinn, Fbr. 44 new Ed.; barin, Ld. 152, (both from Arna-Magn. 132); as a provincialism it is still older, and frequently occurs in an old vellum MS. of Mar. S. (Arna-Magn. 655), Unger's Edit.; framinn, Mar. 449; laginn, 465, 484, 491; valin, 446; skilinn, 326; laminn, 637; samin, 491; vaninn, 398; barinn, 619; lagin, 633. This -inn must not be confounded with the participles of the strong conjugation; for, a. in this weak -inn the n disappears in the adjectival inflexion, e. g. plur. taldir, never talnir, whereas fallinn makes fallnir. β. the weak nom. remains beside that in -inn, e.g. hul-inn and hul-dr, þak-inn and þak-tr, vak-inn and vak-tr, flú-inn and 7. the inflexive -inn can never be used in the other words of this conjugation, e. g. glad-dr, never glad-inn; spur-or, never spur-inn; skap-tr, never skap-inn. Some have no participle, as bledja, metja, bylja, glymja, etc.

Remarks on the 4th Conjugation. To this belong only 2 few verbs (thirty or upwards), but some of them are among the chief verbs of the language, hafa, lafa, vaka, gana, gapa, mara, spara, stara, hjara, blaka, flaka, blasa, þrasa, kúra, stúra, lifa, loða, þola, skolla, tolla, bora, brosa, duga, luma, una, trúa, grúfa, ugga: in -ja, þegja, segja, æja (áði), vilja (see above); under this also come sækja, pret. sótti; yrk-ja, pret. orti; þykkja, pret. þótti; a pret. þátti from þekkja is obsolete and poët.:-and to these may be added the weak preterites of the verbs with strong preterite in present sense, vissi, átti, mátti, knátti, kunni, mundi, undi, skyldi; as also verbs such as göra, old pres. gör-r, mod. göri; ljá (to lend), old pres. lé-r, mod. ljæ-r; ná, pres. nái, 1. the charactermod. næ, gá, q. v. II. special remarks: a. the root vowel, according to which we should istic marks are, expect them to follow the 1st conjugation, whereas they all have the characteristic i of the second. B. in about twenty words the pret. subj. is formed by vowel change from pret. indic., viz. hefði, vekti, sperði, þyldi, þyrði, dygði, tylldi, myndi, yndi, tryði, næði, gæði, segði, þegði, from pret. indic. höfðu, dugðu, . . . trúðu, náðu, gáðu; as also ætti, mætti, knætti, þyrfti, kynni, from pret. indic. áttu, máttu, knáttu, þurftu, kunnu; þætti, sækti, yrkti, from þóttu, sóttu, orktu; keypti from kaupa (emere) is pret. subj. with the sense of pret. indic. have part. pass. in -at (-ad) like the 1st conjugation, vak-at, spar-at (in old writers also spart), blak-at, blas-at, lod-at, lif-at, toll-at, bros-at, dug-at, un-at, trú-at, þag-at (from þegja), sag-at (from segja, instead of sagt) occurs in Merl. Spá; haf-at = haft, Vsp. 16; bol-at, bor-at are now the only forms, but polt, port also occur in old writers; vilj-at from vilja, but vilt seems older, cp. also mun-at, vit-ao, kunn-at. the sole remains of a bisyllabic imperat. in -i (answering to the 1st conjugation in -a) are the old imperatives vak-i! gap-i! dug-i! lum-i! ugg-i! un-i! see these words; in mod. usage the sole instance left is beg-i (tace) or begi-bu! Many of the rest might, but for the primitive root vowel, well be counted as regular verbs of the and conjugation. This conjugation seems to answer most nearly to the 3rd Gothic conjugation of Grimm,

STRONG VERBS.

I. to the 1st class belong A List of the Strong Verbs: about fifty words, finna (fann, fundu, fundit), spinna, spirna, svimma (obsolete), vinna (vann, unnu, unnit), binda (batt, bundu), hrinda (hratt, hrundu), vinda (vatt, undu), springa (sprakk, sprungu), stinga (stakk, stungu), brenna, renna, drekka, bregða (brá, brugðu), bresta, bella, gnella, smella, skreppa, sleppa, seroa, snerta, gnesta, detta, spretta, svella, vella, svelta, velta, hverfa, sverfa, þverra, verpa, verða: with the root vowel e resolved into ja, gjalda (galt, guldu), gjalla, skjalla, bjarga, skjálfa, hjálpa (halp, hulpu, hólpinn): with characteristic j or ν, hrökkva (hrökk, hrukku), klökkva, stökkva, sökkva, slöngva, pröngva, svelgja, tyggja, hnöggva (defect.), syngja. 🚱 All those with n, g, k for final have u in part. pass., fundit, bundit, stungit, brunnit, drukkit, brugdit, prungit, tuggit, sungit; they have also i for root vowel in infin., finna, etc., which is weakened into e in bregoa, drekka, brenna, renna,—brigða, drikka, brinna, rinna are the older forms, which even occur in old poets: the rest have o in part., oltinn, sloppinn, snortinn, brostinn, dottinn, goldinn, hólpinn,...hrokkinn, stokkinn, sokkinn, sólginn: those with initial v drop it before u, o, y, svella, sullu, sylli, sollinn; ... verða, urðu, yrði, orðinn; vinna, unnu, ynni, II. to the 2nd class belong about forty words, bioa, unninn. kviða, liða (pati), liða (labi), riða (equitare), riða (ungere), riða (qs. vriða, nectere), siða, skríða, sníða, svíða, drífa, hrífa, klífa, rífa, svífa, þrífa, dvína (defect.), gina, hrína, hvína, skína, grípa, svípa (defect.), físa, rísa, bita, drita, hnita (defect.), lita, rita, rista, skita, slita, hniga, miga, siga, stiga: with characteristic j, blik-ja, svik-ja, vik-ja. 🖝 Those with final g have also é in pret., e. g. hneig and hné; steig and sté; also vék and veik from víkja, but these forms are later. III. to the 3rd class belong about thirty-six words, bjóða, hnjóða, hrjóða (desolare), rjóða, sjóða, frjósa, gjósa, hnjósa (defect.), hrjósa (defect.), kjósa, ljósta, brjóta, fljóta, gjóta, hljóta, hrjóta (cadere), hrjóta (stertere), njóta, skjóta, þjóta, þrjóta:—those with final f, p, g, k, have $j\hat{u}$ in infin., which seems older, kljúfa, krjúfa, rjúfa, drjúpa, krjúpa, fljúga, ljúga, sjúga, smjúga, fjúka, rjúka, strjúka: with eliminated j, súpa, lúka (and ljúka), lúta, hnúfa, amputare (defect.) Those with final g have also an obsolete pret. in 6 (fló, ló, smó, só), but usually and in mod. usage regular, flaug, etc.: frjósa and kjósa have a double pret., a regular fraus, hnaus, and irregular fröri, köri. IV. to the 4th class belong twentysix words, hlada, vada (ód, vadit), vaxa (óx, vaxit), standa (stód, staðit), grafa, skafa, ala, gala, kala, mala, skapa, fara, draga, gnaga (defect.), aka, skaka, taka: contracted in infin., flá, slá, þvá (qs. flaga, slaga): infin. with characteristic j, dey-ja, gey-ja, hef-ja, hlæ-ja (hló, hlógu), kleg-ja (defect.), sver-ja (sór, svarit). The verbs with final g and k, either contracted or not, have e in part. pass., dreg-it, ek-it, skek-it, fleg-it, sleg-it, þveg-it, hleg-it; deyja has dá-it. V. the 1. twenty words, kveða, vega 5th class falls into two divisions: (vá, vágu), fregna (frá, frágu, fregit), gefa, leka, reka (persequi), reka (qs. vreka, ulcisci), drepa, vera (vesa), lesa, eta, feta, freta, geta, meta: infin. with characteristic j, biò-ja, ligg-ja (lá, lágu, legit), þigg-ja (þá, 2. nine irregular words, þágu, þegit), sit-ja, sjá (sá, séð). all having o in part. pass., vefa (of, ofu, ofit), fela (fal, falu, folgit), stela (stal, stálu, stolit), nema (nam, námu, numit), bera, skera (skar, skáru, skorit), troða (trað, tráðu, troðit), sofa (svaf, sváfu, sofit), koma (kom, kómu or kvámu, komit). In placing these words here we follow the preterite; according to the participle they might be put in the 1st class. Grimm makes a separate class of them; but for that they are too few in number and too similar in inflexion to the 1st and 5th class. VI. the 6th class, originally reduplicated verbs, many of which are still such in Gothic: 1. with é in pret., falda, halda, falla, blanda, ganga (gékk, gengu, gengit), hanga (hékk, hengu, hangit), fá (fékk, fengu, fengit), ráða, blúsa, gráta, láta, heita (hét, heitinu), leika (lék, leikinn), blóta (q. v.)

2. the verbs auka, ausa, hlaupa, leika (lék, leikinn), blóta (q. v.) búa (q. v.), höggva (hjó, hjoggu, höggit), spý-ja (spjó, spúit); defect. bauta (p. 54).

IRREGULAR VERBS.

The Verb Substantive properly belongs to the 5th class of strong verbs; older forms are, pres. es, pret. vas, vas-t, vas, infin. vesa, imperat. vesi, ves-tu, which forms are used in old poets and in the very oldest MSS. (cp. Engl. was); er, var, vera, etc. are the mod. forms; er (sum) is mod. instead of em, which latter however is still used in the N.T. and often in sacred writings, hymns, etc.; mod. Dan. and Swed. also have er, so that the Engl. alone have preserved the true old form (am): the Engl. plur. are is not Saxon but Scandin. Engl., and is not used even by Chaucer.

Verbs with Present in Preterite Form: the first three belong, although irregularly, to the 5th strong class, the next six (skal,...ann) to the 1st class, and veit to the 2nd. The plur. 2nd writings, shew that at early times this verb began to confuse the preterite with the present forms; in mod. usage this is carried farther, and Icèl. say, eigit and eiga, megið and mega, kunnið and kunna, þurfið and purfa, vitio and vita; but the -u is still preserved in skuluo and skulu, munuð and munu. Icel. distinguish between munu (μέλλουσι) and muna (meminerunt). II. the infinitives skulu, munu are properly preterite infinitive forms; whereas in the rest of these verbs the -u changed into -a, eiga, vita, etc.: another preterite infinitive (weak) is preserved in skyl-du and myn-du, which are the sole preterite infinitive forms that have been preserved in prose. In old poetry there are about twenty instances of an obsolete pret. infinitive, which conforms to 3rd pers. plur. pret. indic., just as the pres. infin. to the 3rd pers. plur. pres. indic.; especially in acc. with infin., hygg bá stóðu (credo illos stetisse), fóru (ivisse), kómu (venisse), flyðu (fugisse), etc., vide Lex. Poët., all of them obsolete and seldom used in prose, e. g. vildo (voluisse), Mork. 168, l. 20; only skyldu, myndu are frequent in the Sagas and are used even to the present day. III. the preterites are formed by inflexion and are weak; exceptional however are kunna, unna, vissa, being without d or t; in mod. usage Icel. say, unnti (amavit), making a regular weak preterite of it, which form occurs even in Fb. iii. 469; but we cannot say kunn-ti instead of kun-ni.

The Verbs with the Preterite in -ra: these verbs are properly strong verbs, and are so in kindred languages (A.S., O.H.G., Goth.) The pret. form is difficult to explain; a reduplication might explain the verbs having initial r or s before the root vowel, roa, gróa, frjósa, and sá (sö-ri being qs. sö-si); and would even do for slá, snúa: but gnúa, kjósa remain unexplained, unless we admit that they have been formed by analogy with the others, as also valda (olli, qs. vo-voli). Kjósa, frjósa usually follow the 3rd strong class (pret. kaus, fraus), and slá the 4th: sleri only occurs a few times in old writers; sá has in mod. sense become a regular weak verb (sá, sá-ða, sá-ð).

General Remarks on the Strong and the Irregular Verbs: these verbs all together amount to about two hundred and twenty, but in the course of time some of them have become weak, and even in old writers are so used: a. changed into the 1st weak conjugation, bjarga, hjálpa, feta, freta, fregna, rita (from ríta), blika (from blíkja), dvína, klifa (from klífa), svipa (from svípa), gala, mala, B. into the 2nd weak conjuaka, skapa, falda, blanda, blóta, klægja. gation, snerta, slöngva, þröngva, rista, svelgja, sá (serere). 3rd weak conjugation, fela, tyggja, þvá,—in all about twenty-six verbs. If we add half a score of words which are obsolete and defective, or were so even in olden times, there remain not quite two hundred strong verbs in full use. We may add fragmentary verbs, of which only the part. pass. remains; and to this class we may assign the participial adjectives, bólginn (inflatus), toginn (ductus, Germ. gezogen), dofinn, boginn, hrodinn (pictus), snodinn, rotinn, hokinn, fuinn, luinn, audinn, snivinn (νιφόμενος obsolete and poët.), belonging chiefly to the 1st and 2nd class, and perhaps many besides. Grimm reckons that in all the Teutonic languages together there are about four hundred and fifty strong verbs, whole or fragmentary; but no single dialect has much more than half of that number. These verbs belong to the earliest formation of words; they are decreasing, as no new strong verbs are ever spontaneously formed, whereas the old die out or gradually take the weak forms. So also wrecks of strong verbs are found here and there, and even modern languages have by chance preserved words lost elsewhere, thus vrungu (torserunt) is an απ. λεγ. in one of the oldest Icel. poets; but in this case the English supplies the loss, as wring, wrung (whence wrong, prop. = wry, opp. to right) are common enough. Most of the important words of the language belong to the strong conjugation, and many of them are treated at great length in the Dictionary; whereas only a few of the great verbs, such as gora, hafa, belong to the weak conjugation, so that the strong conjugation has an importance far beyond the number of its verbs. II. the formation of tenses in the strong verbs is plain enough, a. the chief tenses, the pret. in sing. and plur., the infin. and part. pass., are formed by way of ablaut (see β. the secondary tenses are formed by way p. xxix), from which of umlaut (see p. xxviii), viz. the pres. sing. indic. from infin., e. g. byo (jubeo) from bjóða (jubere); stend (sto) from standa (stare); el (alo) from ala (alere); græt (fleo) from grata (flere), etc.: in plur. the unchanged root vowel returns, bjóðum (jubemus); stöndum (stamus); ölum (alimus); gratum (flemus). Y. in the same way the pret. subj. is formed from pret. plur. indic., e. g. byda (juberem) from budu (jusserunt); œla (alerem) from ólu (aluerunt); brynna (agerem) from brunnu (usserunt); bæra (ferrem) from baru (tulerunt), etc. The characteristic j and v reappear in pres. indic. plur.; thus, from sitja (sedere), pres. sing. sit (sedeo), but sitja (sedent); from höggva (caedere), högg (caedo), but höggva (caedunt): in pres. subj. the j and v are kept through the sing., as sitja (sedeam), höggva (caedam), etc. III. the weak verbs pers. munit, unnit, and 3rd pers. muna, unna, which are used in old are formed upon a later and quite different principle, viz. by suffixing the auxiliary verb to do, in a (reduplicated?) form ded or did, whence the mod. Engl. deed, Germ, that, Icel. dub; thus heyr-o-a = I bear-d or bear did I. This is precisely analogous to the suffixing of the article, only that the verbal suffixed preterite is much older (centuries older than Ulfilas), and is common to all Teutonic languages, ancient and modern; whereas the suffixed article is of later date and is limited to the Scandinavian branch. There probably was a time when the preterite of weak verbs was expressed by a detached auxiliary did, as was common in the English of former days and still remains to a certain extent. The other tenses, future and pluperfect, are still expressed by auxiliaries (mun, skal, vil, hafa); ek mun ganga, ibo; ek hefi gengit, ivi; ek hafba gengit, iveram. In mod. Icel. pres. indic. is used in future sense (as in Gothic and to some extent in Engl.); as, hann kemr aldrei, be will never come; hann kemr & morgun, be comes (i. e. will come) to-morrow. The auxiliary verb mun is chiefly used in writing; in conversation it sounds stiff and affected; again, skal denotes necessity or obligation, e. g. in a reply, eg skal gera það.

Digitized by GOOGIC

Modern Changes: generally these are very few, for special cases see above and the single verbs in the Dictionary. There are two things chiefly to be noted: 1. the 1st pers. -a, in pret. indic. as well as in pres. and pret. subj., is changed into -i, bodadi = bodada (nuntiavi), hefdi = hefda (baberem), hafi = hafa (babeam). These mod. forms began to appear in MSS. even of the 13th century; but the old form still remains in some words in southern Icel., see the Dictionary, p. 2, introduction to letter A (signif. C). 2. the plur. forms of the subj. -im, -it, -i are in most cases changed into -um, -ut, -u, and conform to the indic., thus tolubum (loqueremur) instead of talabim; tölum (loquamur) instead of talim; but wherever the subj. is formed by vowel change it remains, thus hefoum (baberemus) instead of the old hefdim: værum (essemus) instead of værim (in indic. höfdum. várum); as also hafði (babui), but hefði (baberem), so that in this case distinction is kept up between indic. and subj. But the old subj. inflexion -i is still sounded in the 2nd and 3rd pers. in many dissyllabic words, e.g. vzrið (essetis), vzri (essent) are quite as freq. as væruð, væru, whereas in the 1st pers. plur, Icel, say værum (essemus), never 8. in 2nd pers. sing. pret. indic. of strong verbs, s has been inserted throughout, thus, brann-st (ussisti), fann-st (invenisti), kom-st (venisti), hljóp-st (eucurristi), var-st (fuisti), bjó-st (paravisti), etc., whereas the ancients said brann-t, hljóp-t, etc. But even the ancients inserted s with verbs having t as characteristic; indeed it is doubtful whether braut-t (fregisti), grét-t (flevisti) ever occur in old writers; in these words we meet with the s in rhymes, even in verses of the middle of the 11th century, e. g. brauztu vio bragning nýztan, O. H. 219; brauztu rhymes on mestan, Fms. vi. 139; and so also the MSS., e. g. veizt (nosti) not veit-t; lézt (fecisti) not lét-t, etc. and pers. pres. indic. of strong verbs o is inserted in about a score of verbs, viz. in strong verbs and in weak of the 3rd conjugation if they have a final vowel or a final r, fer-o (is), fæ-ro (capis), dey-ro (moreris), hlz-to (rides), slz-to (feris), bvz-to (lavas), sé-to (vides), by-to (paras), sve-ro (jurus), tx-ro (remigas), gny-ro (fricas), sny-ro (vertis); weak, ber-o (feris), mer-o (contundis), ver-o (defendis), smyr-o (ungis), spyr-8 (quaeris), ljær-8 (commodas), flý-rð (fugis), lý-rð (fatigas), tx-ro (carpis lanam), instead of fer-r, dey-r, ... ly-r, tx-r; but this is conversational and little used in writing: t is added in vil-t (vis, Engl. wilt), for the old vil-1; both forms occur in very old MSS., e. g. villt, Mork. 57. l. 15, 168. l. 19, but vill 62. l. 3: er-t (es, Engl. thou art) is common for old and mod. 5. for the weak participle in -inn see p. xxiv. Some MSS. (e. g. the Mar. S.) confound the 1st pers. with the 3rd pers. pres. indic., and say, ek segir, heyrir, tekr, elskar, as in mod. Swed. and Dan.; Dan. jeg siger, borer, tager, elsker, Swed. sager, borer, taker; cp. in vulgar Engl. I says, I bears, I takes, I loves: this use has never prevailed in Icel., either in speech or writing; and in MSS. it is simply a kind of Norwegianism.

VERBS WITH SUFFIX.

The Reflexive: these verbs are used in a reflexive or reciprocal sense, but seldom as passive, and then in most cases only by way of Latinism, the passive being usually expressed by the auxiliary verb verda or vera; thus olska (amare), but pau elskask, they love one another; anda, to breathe, but andask, to breathe 'oneself,' so die. expirare: the reflexive often gives a new turn to a verb, and makes it, so to say, individual and personal; see the Dictionary II. as to the form. 1. the inflexive -r (of the active voice) is dropped, thus, boos-sk, qs. boosr-sk (nuntiaris). 2. the inflexive - assimilates to the reflexive -s, and becomes -z, e.g. in the and pers. plur., elskizk (amamini), eggizk (bortamini); peim hafði bodazk (qs. bodat-sk), as part. pass. neut. illis nuntiatum fuit, but boda-sk (nuntiantur). 3. -sk, qs. sik (se), is the old form, and kept in the oldest MSS.; even sometimes -zp, but usually -z, -zt or -zst (often in MSS. of the 14th century), thus booa-z or booa-zt, the former of which is common in MSS.; the mod. is -st (booa-st), which form is adopted in most Editions and is also found in some old MSS., e. g. in one of the handwritings of Hb. (see Antiqq. Americ. facsim. iv). It is likely that the sound of -zp, -z, -zt, and -st was much the: same, and that they differed only in the spelling. there were two suffixes, viz. -sk (i.e. sik, se) for the 2nd and 3rd pers.. but -mk (i. e. mik, me) for the 1st pers. plur.; this -mk is used in many good old MSS. (and has generally been adopted in this Dictionary), but was, from some confusion with -sk, changed into -mz or -mst; the -mk may be called the personal reflexive, i. e. the reflexive reflecting the speaker himself. It is worthy of notice that the ancients seldom used ek (I) along with -sk; therefore-instead of saying ek bykki-sk (videor), bótti-sk (videbar), ek andask, lætsk, efask, óttask-they said, ek bykkjumk (videor mibi), ek bóttu-mk (videbar mibi), ek öndu-mk (morior), ek latu-mk, ek efu-mk (dubito), ek óttu-mk (timeo), etc.; and ek bykjumst, ek bóttumst are still in use. This usage is quite correct, and the later common ek bykki-sk is in fact nonsense, being literally ego 'sibi' videor; it no doubt arose from the fact that the sense of the suffix was no longer perceived. 2. we may note also the old poët. usage of joining the reflexive -mk to the and and 3rd pers., but in a personal reflexive sense, as göngumk firr funi, flame I begone from me, Gm. I; jötna vegir stóðu-mk yfir ok undir, the ways of giants stood over and under me, i.e. there were precipices above and below, the m in this case belongs to the pronoun, not to the verbal inflexion, and we are to write bykkju-mk, not bykkjum-k; the inflexive -m is dropped before -mk, just as -r before -sk.

The Negative: it is obsolete and only used in poetry, in laws, old sayings, and the like; from the poets about two hundred instances have been collected—perhaps a hundred more might be gleaned—in Lex. Poët. p. 2, and from prose in this Dictionary, pp. 2, 3. In Unger's Edition of Morkinskinna (lately published), we read munk-at, 50; mun-a, 37; er-a, 36, 52, 129, 186; vere-a (non esset), 37:

I. this suffix is chiefly used,

1. in the verb sub-I. this suffix is chiefly used, stantive and in the irregular verbs with pret. pres., esp. á, mun, skal, which four verbs include nearly half the instances: in regular strong verbs and some few verbs of the 3rd and 4th weak conjugation, hafa, lifa, göra, etc.: very seldom in the 1st or 2nd weak conjugation, e.g. kallar-a (non vocas), Akv. 37; subj. stöðvi-g-a (non sistem), Hm. 151; and once or twice in trisyllabic tenses. as to moods, it is freq. in indic. and imperat., but seldom in subj., where scarcely a score of instances are on record, e. g. verir-a, veri-a. kveðir-a, megi-t, verði-t, standi-t, renni-a, bíti-a, sé-t (non sit), etc.; and never in infin. 3. as to number and person, freq. in sing. through all persons; in plur. freq. in 3rd pers., but very rare in 1st and and; forms such as vitum-a, munum-a, várum-a (non fuimus), ættim-a (non baberemus), or segit-a (ne dicatis), farit-a (ne eatis), each probably occurs only once. 4. as to voice, it is rarely used with a reflexive; bóttisk-a (non videbatur), komsk-a (non pervenit), kömsk-at, fordumk-2 (non evitamus), each occurs about once or twice; erumk-a (non est mibi), Stor. 17, Eg. 459 (in a verse). II. as to form,
-at and -a both occur, as skal-a and skal-at, mon-a and mon-at; -a is preferred when the next word begins with a consonant, -at when it begins with a vowel; but they are often used indiscri-2. after a vowel inflexion the vowel of the suffix is dropped, and -t (-0, -p) remains, as attu-0, vitu-0 (nescitis), eigu-t (non babent), standa-t (non stant); yet in a few instances -a is used, but the hiatus sounds ill, e.g. bíti-a, renni-a, skríði-a, all from Hkv. 2. 30, 31; væri-a, Mork. 37, Bkv. 8; kœmi-a (non veniat), Gs. 10; urðu-a (non fiebant), Gh. 3:- in verbs with characteristic j it appears, thus begj-at-tu (ne taceas), segj-at-tu (ne dicas), eggi-a (ne borteris), Sdm. 32; teygj-at, id.; kvelj-at (kill not), Völ. 31; leti-at (ne retineat), Skv. 3. 44:—in verbs ending in a long vowel the a is not dropped, e.g. kná-at (cannot), á-at (ought not), sá-at (saw not). 8. in 1st pers. sing. the personal pronoun (-k = ek) is inserted between the verb and suffix, á-k-at, em-k-at, etc.: if the verb ends in gg an assimilation takes place, hykk-at, qs. hygg-k-at (I think not); likk-at, qs. ligg-k-at (non jaceo): after a long vowel the k is even doubled, e.g. sé-kk-at (non video), ma-kk-at (non debeo): the pronoun is even repeated, e. g. má-k-at ek, sá-k-at ek, etc.:-in weak dissyllabic forms the inserted k becomes g, stöðvi-g-a, or iterated stöðvigak, bjargi-g-a, Hm. 151, 153; (note also that the inflex. -a of the 1st pers. is here turned into -i, bjargi-g-a, not bjarga-g-a.) 4. in 2nd pers. sing. the personal pronoun bu is also iterated, the latter being assimilated, er-t-at-tu for ert-at-bú; mon-t-a-ttu, but also mon-at-tu.

The Personal:

1. for -k in the 1st pers., see s. v. ek (B), p. 124.

2. the 2nd pers. pú, tbou, is suffixed, as -ôu, -du, -tu, or -w, according to the final of the verb, e. imperat. book-ôu, dœm-du, gled-du, spyr-ôu, vak-tu, dug-ôu; brenn-du, rís-tu, bjód-du, far-ôu, gef-ôu, ber-ôu, grát-tu, hlaup-tu; ver-tu, eig-ôu, mun-tu, mun-du, unn-tu, vit-tu, ró-ôu, gró-ôu, sá-ôu, snú-ôu, gnú-ôu, kjós-tu, slá-ôu;

Digitized by GOOGLE

as also haf-ou, gör-ou, kom-du (kon-du) come thou! vil-tu, statt-u | in old prose, and already occurs in even the oldest poems, but it has dugðir-ðu, brannt-u, bautt-u (bauðst-u), reist-u, grétst-u, hljópt-u, pronounced long (viltú), bu hljópst-u, etc.: subj. boðaðir-ðu, ... gleddir-ðu, etc.: this usage is freq. it has become a full suffix.

stand thou! bitt-u bind thou! pres. bodar-ou, brennr-ou, ris-tu, byor- gained ground in mod. usage, and esp. in speech it has quite superdn...er-tu. átt-u, kannt-u, munt-u, veizt-u, etc.: pret. bodaðir-du, ... seded the detached þú; the vowel is ambiguous, being sometimes pronounced long (viltú), but usually short (viltu), in which latter case

ADVERBS, PARTICLES, ETC.

ADVERBS.

With Degrees of Comparison: I. the neut. sing. is freq. used as positive, e. g. bung-t, beautly; skjót-t, suddenly; fljót-t, 2. from brat-t, ot-t, or-t, stor-t, har-t, mjúk-t, ljót-t, fagr-t, etc. adjectives in -ligr is formed an adverb in -liga, skjót-liga, ná-liga, etc. : in a few cases, especially in poetry, they are contracted -la, thus skiotla, 68-la, brál-la, etc.; in prose in var-la, bardly, Lat. vix, but var-liga, marily; hard-la or har-la, very, but hard-la, barsbly; ar-la, early; but from var-la, har-la, ár-la no degrees of comparison are formed.

8. a few end in -a, viò-a, far and wide; snemm-a, early; ill-a, ill, badly; 4. special forms, leng-i, Lat. diu, but lang-t, locally; görva, quite. fjar-, far; vel, well; sjaldan, seldom; sio, late; opt, often; mjok, much; litt, little; inn, in; ut, out; fram, onwards; aptr, backwards; nior, down; upp, up; heim, bome: of the quarters, austr, noror, suor, II. the formation of degrees of comparison is like that of the adjectives, only that the inflexive -i, -a, -r is dropped; as skjót-t, compar. skjót-ar, superl. skjót-ast; fljót-t, fljót-ar, fljót-ast; fagr-t, fegr, fegr-st; skjótlig-a, skjótlig-ar, skjótlig-ast; víð-a, víð-ar, við-ast; leng-i, leng-r, leng-st; skamm-t, skem-r, skem-st; (fjar), fir-r. fir-st; vel, bet-r (melius), bezt; ill-a, ver-r, ver-st; görva, gör-r (more fully), gör-st; sjald-an, sjaldn-ar, sjaldn-ast; snemm-a, snem-r, snemst; sid-r (less), sizt (least), but sid-ar (later), sid-ast (latest); opt, optar, opt-ast; mjök, mei-r, me-st; lit-t, mio-r or minn-r (less, Lat. minus), minn-st; inn, inn-ar, inn-st; út, út-ar, út-ast or yzt; upp, of-ar, ef-st; nidr, ned-ar (farther down), ned-st; aptr, apt-ar (farther behind), aptast or ept-st; austr, aust-ar, aust-ast; nordr, nord-ar, nord-ast or nyrdst; suor, sunn-ar, sunn-ast, synn-st or syo-st; vestr, vest-ar, vest-ast: without positive are, ská-r (better), ská-st; hand-ar (ulterius), handast; held-r (rather), helzt; fyr-r (prius), fyr-st; hand-ar (ulterius), handast; superl. hinn-st (bindermost). Go Old writers usually spell -arr, thus opt-arr, sid-arr, vid-arr, etc., as also fyr-r, gör-r, in mod. usage opt-ar, vid-ar, fyr, gör.

2. the full adjectival comparative is frequently víð-ar, fyr, gör. made to serve as adverbial comparative, e.g. hæ-ra, bigber; læg-ra, lower; leng-ra in local sense, but leng-r in temp. sense; skem-ra (local), but skem-r (temp.):—or both forms are used indiscriminately, as vio-ar and víð-ara, skjót-ar and skjót-ara, harð-ar and harð-ara. following after the article the superlative conforms to the neut, sing, of the weak declension, e. g. rioa hit hardasta, to ride one's bardest; hit skjótasta, fyrsta, síðasta, etc.

Without Degrees of Comparison: I. adverbs with 1. formed as genitive in -s, or -is, or -ar; öllungis, quite; einungis, only; lok-s, at last, or loks-ins, id.; all-s, in all: formed from nouns, as leid, dagr; heim-leidis, bomewards; somu-leidis, likewise; á-leidis, onwards; rak-leidis, straight; át-degis, early in the day; framveg-is, furthermore; útbyrð-is, overboard; innbyrð-is, inwardly; ókeyp-is, gratis; erlend-is, abroad; margsinn-is, optsinn-is, many a time: umhvery-is or umberg-is, all around; jafn-fœtis, on equal footing; and-scelis, against the sun; for-streymis, for-brekkis, forvioris; tvi-vegis, twice, etc.:-in -ar, from staor, allstao-ar, everywbere; sumstad-ar, somewbere; annars-stad-ar, elsewbere; einhversstad-ar, anywhere; nokkurs-stad-ar, id.; marg-stad-ar, in many places: from konar (generis), kind; eins-konar, annars-konar, of another kind: nokkurs-konar, of any kind; alls-konar, hvers-konar, margskonar: alls-kostar = alls-konar: so, many other words, innan-huss, in-doors; utan-huss, out-doors; utan-lands, abroad; and inn-fjarda, innan-lands, etc. 2. the acc. sing. masc. is often used adverbially, as hard-an, swiftly; brad-an, suddenly; rida mikinn, to ride fast; this is properly an elliptical use, a noun being understood. in -um, properly a dative form, eink-um, especially; fyrr-um, formerly; long-um, all along; tio-um, often; stund-um, sometimes; ford-um, of yore; fikj-um, eagerly; od-um, rapidly; brad-um, bye and bye: endrum og sinnum, now and then; höppum og glöppum, by baps and gaps; smam saman, by little and little: also from nouns, hronnum and unnvörp-um (Lat. undatim). 4. in -eg, from vegr, a way; thus pann-ig, pann-og, thus and thither; hinn-ig, the other way, bither; hvern-ig, bow; einn-ig, also: the ancients often spell pannog, etc.; in mod. usage bann-inn, hvern-inn, einn-inn; hins-eg-inn

(the other way), qs. bann-iginn or bann-veginn, etc., from the noun along with the article: the adverbs, badum-egin, on both sides; hvarum-egin, on what side; hinum-eginn, on the other side; öllumeginn, on all sides; herna-megin, on this side; formed from dat. plur. and vegr, the oldest form is probably báðu-megum, both forms being in dat.: öðru-vísi, otberwise. 5. in -an, denoting motion from a place; héd-an, bence; bad-an, thence; hvad-an, whence; sid-an, since; und-an, before; fram-an, q.v.; hand-an, from beyond; neoan, from beneath; of-an, from above; heim-an, from bome; inn-an, from the inner part; út-an, from outwards; nord-an, from the north; aust-an, sunn-an, vest-an, etc.: without the notion of motion, ad-an. sbortly, a little while ago; jain-an, 'evenly,' frequently; sam-an, to-B. in -at, denoting motion to the place, hing-at or heg-at, bitber; bang-at, thitber; hver-t, whither. Y. terminations denoting rest in the place, her, here; har, there; hvar, where; hvar-gi, nowhere; heim-a, at bome : old poët, forms are hédra, bere; padra, there. mod. forms suffixing a demonstrative particle -na, hér-na, þar-na, tarna, this bere (qs. bat bar-na): in -i, framm-i (q. v.), upp-i, nior-i. numeral adverbs, tvisvar, twice; prysvar, thrice, (spelt with y in good II. special adverbs, úr, early; ár-la, id.; þegar, at once, Lat. jam; svá, so, thus, and svo-na, id.; gær, yesterday; bá, then; nú, now, and nú-na, just now; nær, when; hve-nær, id.; enn, still; senn, soon; ella, else; unz, until; já, yes; nei, no; aldrigi, never; æ, ever; ætið, id.; ei and ey, id.; si. Lat. semper, only in compounds and in the phrase, si og æ, for ever and ever; hvi, wby; hve, bow; hversu, id.; alltend (mod.), always; avalt, id.; alla-jafna, id.; einatt, repeatedly; of, too; van, too little, used singly only in the phrase, of ok van; samt, together; sundr, asunder; a mis, amiss; ymist, indiscriminately; idula, repeatedly, etc.

Adverbial Prefixes: 1. in 1. in positive and intensive sense. especially with adjectives, al-, quite, al-, see Dictionary, p. 11 sqq.; all., very; aud., easy; afar., greatly; fjol., frequently; of., too (very freq.); ofr., very, greatly: temp. ai., semper: id., often, again; ey- or ei-, ever-; einka-, especially; endr-, again; frum-, origin-2. in special sense, da-, very: full-, quite; half-, balf; jafn-, equally, in many words, etc.: only as prefixes, sam-, together, Lat. con-, in many words; er-, qs. el- (cp. Lat. ali-us), in er-lendr and compds; and-, against; gagn-, id.; gor-, quite, altogether. in negative sense, ú- or ó-, = Lat. in-, Engl. un-, in a great many words; the mod. form is 6-, e.g. 6-fagr, unfair, ugly; un- is the etymologically true form, which is preserved in German and English, as well as in mod. Danish, Swedish, and Norse; but that the Icel., even in the 12th century, had already changed \vec{u} - into \vec{o} - is shewn by the spelling of the earliest MSS., and from the statement in Skalda by the second grammarian, who says that 'o- or u- changes the sense of a word, as in satt (sootb), or ó-satt (untrue),' Skúlda 171; but in the bulk of MSS, of a later date, after the union with Norway, the 4- prevailed, and was henceforth adopted in the Editions, although the Icel. people all along pronounced 6-, which also is the spelling in all modern books, and might well be adopted in Editions too: mis- (cp. Engl. amiss), differently, and also badly, in many compds: var-, scarcely, insufficiently: svi-, cp. svei, p. xxviii: van-, deficiency, 'wane:' tor-,= Gr. dus-, with difficulty, opp. to aud-: or-,= Lat. ex-, thus or-skipta =expers, or-endr = examinus, etc.: for-, in a few words, cp. p. 182. Words denoting wonder, awe are often used as adverbial prefixes in an intensive sense, as geysi-, æði-, undra-, fjarska-, furðu-, óskapa-, awfully, wonderfully; see Dictionary.

PREPOSITIONS.

With dat. and acc., at, Lat. ad, only exceptionally with acc.; á, Lat. in, Engl. on; fyrir, for, before; eptir, after; í, in; undir, under, beneath; yfir, over, above; vio, with, = Lat. cum; meo, 2. with dat., af, off, of; fra, from; or, mod. ur, Lat. ex, out of; hjá, Lat. juxta, = besides; mót, against; gegn, id. with acc., gegnum, through; fram, on, onwards; upp, up; nior, down; ofan, id.; um, Lat. de, per, old form of. 4. with gen., til, till, to; an, without; milli or medal, between. The prepositions a and i are in the MSS. usually joined to the following word, thus alandi = a landi, iriki = i riki. As to the syntactic use of prepositions, elliptically and adverbially, see Dictionary. In poetry, even in plain popular songs, hymns, epics, etc., a preposition can be put after its case, e.g. birtust snjóhvítum búning i, blessaðir englar líka, Pass. 21. 10; himnum a = a himnum, in the beavens; but scarcely, unless before a pause at the end of a line.

CONJUNCTIONS.

The chief of these are, ok, mod. og, and, also; n6, nor, Lat. neque; eða or eðr, or, Lat. aut; ellegar, id.; en, but, Lat. sed, autem, vero; en (an), tban, Lat. quam; enda, and even, and tben; ef, if, Lat. si; nems, unless, but, Lat. nisi; heldr, but, Lat. sed; sem, as, Lat. ut, sicut; þ6, tbougb, altbougb, yet; alls, because; hvart, wbetber, Lat. an; því, tberefore: we may here add the enclitical particle of or um (different from the prep. um), which is very much used in old poetry, and now and then in laws and very old prose, e.g. hann of sá, be saw; er sér of getr, wbo gets for bimself, see Lex. Poët.

Compounds of adverbs, prepositions, and conjunctions are much 1. prepositions and adverbs or double prepositions; & nsed: medan, wbilst, meanwhile; á undan, abead; á eptir, behind; á milli and a medal, among, between; a ofan, to boot; a samt, together; á móti, against; á fram, on, along; á-lengdar, afar; á síðan, since; á við, alike: auk-heldr, still more; í frá, from, cp. Swed. ifrån; i sundr, asunder; i gegn, against; i hjå, aside; i senn, in one; i kring, around; undir eins, at once; at auk, to boot; at ofan, from above; upp aptr, over again; kringum (qs. kring um), all around; gegn-um, all through; yfir um (proncd. ufrum), aeross; fyrrum, formerly; framan af, in the beginning; hedan af, benceforth; þaðan af, thenceforth; allt af, for ever; hingað til, bitherto; þangað til, until; eptir å, after, (so avalt, for of allt); ofan å, insuper; framan á, in front; nedan á, beneath on; aptan á, behind on: as also, ofan í, down; nedan i, underneath, at the bottom; framan i, in the face; aptan i, in the rear; framan til, until; austan til, nordan til, sunnan til, vestan til, etc.; að aptan, and aptan til, bebind; fyrir fram, beforeband; fyrir útan, except, etc., see e.g. fyrir and fram:-with nouns, & vixl, alternately; & laun, secretly; & vit, towards; & mis, amiss; á braut, abroad, away; á ská, askance; á víð ok dreif, scattered 2. with a conjunction; bó at or bó-tt, although; svá abroad. at (svá-t), so that, Lat. ut; pvi at, for that, because; hvárt að, whether; ef ad, if; fyrr en, Lat. priusquam; adr en, id.; at eigi, that not, lest; eins og, as; að eins, only, barely; begar er, Lat. simul ac; síðan er, Lat. postquam; medan er, Lat. dum; hvart er, Lat. utrum; hvar's, wberesoever; hvegi er, wbosoever: in mod, usage, þegar að, síðan að, meðan að, hvárt að, and many others.

8. adverbial phrases, e. g. að vörmu spori (tepido vestigio), at once; um hæl, 'turning the heel,' in return; af bragði, af stundu, instantly; aptr á bak, backwards; um leid, by the way; eptir ad hyggja, apropos, and many others.

INTERJECTIONS AND EXCLAMATIONS.

To denote consent, já já or jú jú, yea yea! ó já, O yes! jaur or jur, bear ! O. H. L. 10, 45, 69, Mirm. (jur); in mod. usage, jir jor or jur jor, sounded almost like the Engl. bear bear! (it is doubtful whether this Engl. exclamation has any connection with bear = audire):-half consent, jæja, yea yea!-denial, nei nei, 6 nei, 6 ekki, ekki, O no !-bitti nu, wait a bit !-loathing, bjs, fussum, ff, fie! voi, Lat. vae, Engl. woe, whence the compd svei or svei ber (qs. sé vei, woe be to thee!), (a shepherd's shout, e.g. to a dog worrying the sheep), or Lat. apage! putt (Dan. pyt, Swed. pytt), pish, pshaw! Mork. 138: bey bey, tush !-hushing to sleep, etc., dillindo, korriró, bíum bíum, bí bí (as in the rhyme, Bí, bí og blaka !)—hó hó, bo, boa! a shepherd's cry in gathering his flock so as to make the fells resound, hence the verb hoa; trutt trutt, hott hott, he he! the shout in driving or leading horses; tu tu tu tu, kus kus, bás bás! in milking or driving cows into the byre; kis kis, puss puss (to a cat); sep sep or hép hép (to a dog); rhrhrh! in driving horses or cattle out of a field, imitating the sound of a rattle, called ab siga:amazement, uss, sussu (qs. svá svá), sei sei, á, eb!-a cry of pain, ai ai! which form occurs in Sæm. 118 and porf. Karl. 390, v.l., whence the mod. so (proncd. like Engl. long i); this Icel. use is curious, as mod. Swedes, Danes, and Norsemen, as well as Germans, all say au (proncd. ow); from z comes the verb zja, to cry; so so, soi, beigb-ob! avi,= Germ. ob web, is foreign; -exultation, he he, & &, aba!-wonder, delight, 6 61-enquiry, há, what?-chattering of the teeth from cold, atatata, hutututu, Orkn. 326. 2. interjections imitating the voice of birds or beasts, e. g. dirrinds (of the lark); there is a pretty legend about this in Isl. pjóðs. ii. 2; krunk krunk (of the raven); mjá mjá (of the cat); gagg gagg (of the fox); kví kví kví, cp. kywitt kywitt in the bird's song in Der Machandelboom in Grimm's from sa.

Märchen; ti ti ti, úh úh! Bb. 2.12; vi vi (of birds and ducks); gagga-gagg (of a gull).

THE SUPPLEED PARTICLES.

These are suffixed to nouns and verbs, but never used separately: I. the nominal suffix -gi, originally a copula, akin to Lat. -que, and used so in some words, but chiefly used in a negative sense, see Dictionary, II. the verbal negative suffix -a, -at, see p. xxvi. p. 199. The true explanation of this particle is found in the Gothic, which makes frequent use of a suffixed particle -ub (esp. in verbs and also in pronouns), to which the particle pan is freq. added in an indefinite enclytical sense, almost as the Gr. 84, thus vas-ub-pan, or assimiencrythal sense, annost as the Gr. δε, thus var-up-pan, or assimilated vas-up-pan = Gr. ην δέ; skal-up-pan = δε γάρ; stôp-ub-pan = είστηκει δέ; nam-ub-pan = ελαβε δέ; quap-up-pan = ελαγε δέ; vêsun-ub-pan = ησαν δέ; qvêpun-ub-pan = ελαγον οδν; vitum-ub-pan = οδδαμεν δέ; vitaidedun-ub-pan = παρετήρουν δέ; bidjandansub-ban = προσευγόμενοι δέ; and even in passages where the Gr. text has no particle, quipid-ub = elware (Mark xvi. 7). There can be little doubt of the identity, by way of assimilation, of the Goth. -ub or -up-pan and the Scandin. -a or -ap (-at). As to the sense, the difference is that whereas in Gothic this suffix is used indefinitely or is almost an affirmative copula, the Icel. is only used in a decidedly negative sense. But the freedom in the use of the particles is greater than in any other part of speech; and the negative and affirmative frequently take the place of one another in different dialects, e.g. -gi, see above; so eyvit etymologically = ought, but in fact used = naught (the etymological notice p. 136 is scarcely correct); or, on the other hand, neinn or ne-einn, qs. none (n'one), but actually used = Lat. ullus; nokkurr, prop. from ne and hverr, = ne-quis, but in fact used = aliquis; ein-gi, ein-igr are both used negatively = none, and positively = any; lcel. mann-gi, Lat. nemo, is etymologically identical to Engl. many; ei-manni, nobody, Vpm., is etymologically = Germ. jemand = everybody; the particle ei- is used both in a positive and negative sense; vætr, a wight, is positive, but is used negatively = naught. As to the form, the Icel. -a answers to Goth. -ub, the Icel. t or b to Goth. b, whereas the -an is dropped. The double Goth. form -ub and -ub-pan (-up-pan) also explains the puzzling Icel. double form -a and -ab (-at); the -a represents the -ub singly, the -ab the compd -ub-ban or -up-pan. A further proof is that neither the Goth. nor the Icel. suffix was used with nouns. In the 9th and 10th centuries the negative suffixed verb appears to have still been in full use among Icelanders (at that time there were no books), else it could not have survived in laws and old saws; there are about four or five hundred instances, three-fourths in poetry; it lingered on into the 11th or even 12th century, and then became obsolete; in Norway, Sweden, and Denmark it seems to have disappeared much sooner, and has left no traces. From Ulf. we see that in his days the Goths used the -ub freely, though in a different sense. As a pronominal suffix the Gothic -ub seems to remain in the Icel. word peim-a, Goth. paim-ub = illi; perhaps also in hvat-ta, wbat! Mork. 129 (exclam. indignantis); cp. also the mod. hvad-a, wbo? perhaps also in end-a = $\delta\epsilon$; and lastly, the demonstrative pronoun petta = Goth. pat-ub = Gr. roûro, but in these cases the particle has not taken the negative sense (see Grimm's Gr. iii. 24, 25; the explanation of the negative -at, as suggested in iii. 718, from vætr, is not admissible). A different kind of negative is the particle ne before a verb, only in old poets, e.g. Vsp., sól þat ne vissi (thrice within a single stanza); in A.S. and Early Engl. often prefixed to the verb, as nolde = n'wolde, nadde = n'badde, cp. Lat. nolo, nemo; in Icel. it remained in the adj. neinn and nokkurr (see above), cp. also neita or nita, negare. In mod. usage eigi or ekki has replaced almost all other negative particles. To make it emphatic, nouns are added, ekki grand, not a grain; ekki vitund, not a wbit; ekki hót, qs. ekki hvat, naught; ekki ögn, not a mite; ekki augna-blik, not the twinkling of an eye; ekki fet, not a step: and borrowed from French, ekki par, ne pas. Phrases of this kind are of modern growth and were scarcely used by the ancients ;-ekki lyf. Skv. 2, is dubious, if not corrupt. In sense the Icel. enclitical particle of or um answers to the Goth. -ub, but is detached and placed before the verb or noun: this particle, although a favourite with the old poets (like the Homeric & apa), is obsolete, and in prose is only found now and then in the oldest writers, in laws and the like. the demonstrative suffix -na, in nú-na, þar-na, hér-na, svá-na; this -na is akin to Lat. en, ecce (qs. en-ce), and is found in A. S. eno and O. H. G. ino; cp. the Icel. exclamation ha-na, hana-nú! It probably explains the Icel. and Scandin. demonstrative pronoun hann (be) hon (sbe), compared with Engl. be; hann, hon being qs. ha-n, ho-n, be there, she there, en ille, en illa! cp. also gær-na = gær, q. v.; þér-na, tibimet, Mork. 120.

IV. a pronominal suffix -su, -su occurs in hver-su, bow; pvi-sa, dat. neut. of pat; peim-sa, dat. masc-

FORMATION OF WORDS.

VOWEL CHANGES.

All changes of vowels are of two kinds, simple and complex: the simple is homogeneous and leaves the quantity of the vowel unaltered; a short vowel is changed into a short, a long or a diphthong into a long or a diphthong; this change is generally caused by characteristic or inflexive letters, in Icel. especially by i(j) and w2. the complex is heterogeneous and affects the quantity of a vowel, which is changed from a short into a long or diphthongal vowel; this change is generally produced by, a. agglutination, absorp-B. by contraction of two syllables into one tion, or the like: or. (e. g. reduplicated syllables contracted).

The Simple Vowel Changes.

The Umlant or Vowel Change was first traced out by Jacob Grimm in his Grammar of 1819 and 1822; it is of two kinds, B. the uthe i- umlaut caused by a characteristic i or j; and, umlaut caused by a characteristic u or v.

A. The i- umlaut, whereby the primitive vowels a, á, au, o, ó, u, ú, jó, jú, (o), are changed into e, æ, ey, y, æ, y, ý, ý, (ø).

The primitive vowels are thus changed into mixed vowels with an i-sound; short vowels change into short, and long or diphthongs into long or diphthongs. All the changed vowels have an a- or u- sound blended with i, whence it follows that no change takes place within the i-class itself, and i, i, ei are unchangeable ('unumlautbar,' as Grimm says): the characteristic i usually appears as j, or has since been dropped in most cases: it can only be sounded, 6. in dissyllabic words with a short root syllable, i. e. a short vowel and a single final, thus tem-ja, venja, but tœma, væna; and, β. in long syllables with g, k, or a vowel as final, without regard to the quantity of the root vowel, thus fylg-ja, hogja, sæk-ja, dey-ja: in monosyllables it is apocopated throughout, e. g. in nes, but nes-ja. Thousands of words are formed by way of umlaut, but all words thus formed are derivatives, nouns as well as verbs: roots and words formed by umlaut are, 1. verbs, the greatest part of the 2nd weak conjugation, such as dæma, geyma, heyra, kenna, at least three hundred, to which add all those with inflexive -ja, in the and and 3rd conjugations and a few of the 1st, together about two hundred verbs. We may take as a sample the transitive verbs which are formed from the strong intransitive verbs, all following the 2nd weak conjugation, and having for root vowel the pret. sing. of the strong verbs but with changed vowel wherever the vowel is changeable; about forty such words are in use, formed from the 1st class, with pret. a, sprengja, drekkja, brenna, renna, bella, sleppa, spretta, svelta, vella, velta, hverfa, þverra skelfa, hrökkva, stökkva, sökkva: from the 2nd and 3rd classes, pret. ei, au, leiða, reiða, dreifa, hneigja, reisa, beita, bleikja; geysa, fleyta, hreyta, beyta, dreypa, fleygja, smeygja, feykja, reykja: from the 4th class, pret. 6, œxa, fœra, gœla, kœla, sœra, hlægja: from the 5th and 6th classes, pret. á, a, etc., leggja, setja and sæta, svæfa; fella, hengja, græta,—all of them causal, denoting to make one do so and so, e.g. brenna (brann), to burn, but brenna (brenn-di), to consume by fire; hverfa (hvarf), to disappear, hverfa, d, to turn; rída (reid), to ride, reida, dd, to carry; bita (beit), to bite, beita, t, to cut, make bite; hniga (hneig), to sink, hneigja, d, to make to sink; sofa, to sleep, svæfa, d, to lull to sleep; falla (féll), to fall, fella, d, to fell; grata (gret), to greet (weep), græta, tt, to make one greet; hanga (hékk), to bang (intrans.), hengja, d, to bang (trans.), etc. nouns, adjectives; those as ny-r, seet-r, counting perhaps a hundred words: substantives, hundreds of derivatives, e. g. the neuters in -1, as klæð-i: all the weak feminines in -i, as gleð-i: the words of the 2nd declension of strong masc. and fem., as bekkr, fit, heiðr: the masc. in -ir, as lækn-ir: neuters, as nes;—in short, all words marked as having characteristic i or j: in the chief declension (the 1st), hundreds of words, as boen, prayer, from bon; væta, wetness, from vátr; or, with nominal inflexions; the feminines with inflexive -d (0, t, prop. instead of -id), leng-d, length, from lang-; hæ-d, beight, from há-r; dyp-t, deptb, from djup-: most feminines with inflexive -ska and -sla (qs. -isha, -isla), bern-ska from barn, Islend-ska from Island, gæt-sla from gát: masculines in ingr and feminines in ing, thus England, England, but Englendingr, an Englishman; læg-ing, lowering, from lágr; but not in those in -ningr, -ning, e.g. brag-ningr, drott-ning (not droettning), as the n comes between the word and root vowel: masculines in -ill, ket-ill: diminutives in -lingr, bock-lingr, libellus, from bok; dræp-lingr, a ditty, from drápa, a poem. II. inflexions formed by way of verbs and the weak of the 3rd and partly those of the 4th conjugation (see the tables and remarks on the verbs above), the plur. in the 3rd strong declension, bok, bæk-r; eigandi, eigend-r; bróð-ir, bræð-r; fað-ir, feð-r; móð-ir, mæð-r; fót-r, fæt-r; mús, mýs-s; gás, gæs-s,-the -r or -s being here contracted instead of -ir. dissyllabic comparatives (and superlatives) of adjectives, in -ri, -str, yng-ri, yng-str; hæ-ri, hæ-str, etc.

By observing the rules of the vowel change the reader will be enabled to follow the derivative words recurring in the Dictionary, e. g. glaðr and gleði, fár and fætta, auðr and eyða, forn and fyrna, bót and boeta, fullr and fylla, fúss and fýsa, ljós and lýsa. Lastly, we have 1. the æ (in MSS, spelt ø and ø) is obsolete in Icel., to notice that, and the changes of a and o are sounded both alike, thus fotr, fæti (old fœti); móð-ir, bróð-ir, old plur. mœð-r, bræð-r; in Denmark, Sweden, and Norway the distinction is retained, and has to be borne in mind for the sake of the etymology. 2. the vowel change o into o is rare and obsolete, and is now represented by e; it takes place in very few words, e. g. the comparative and superlative from of-, ofri, ofstr; noror, norori: the pres. indic. køm-r from koma (to come), søf-r from sofa (to sleep), trøð-r from troða (to tread); but commonly kem-r, treð-r, sef-r: the plur. of hnot (a nut), hnot-r; stod (a column), stod-r, but later hnet-r, sted-r; this change is therefore in col. I put last, between (), and it need not be heeded, and o and w may be said to have the same vowel change.

B. The u- umlaut, whereby the primitive vowels á, are changed into ö(a), d.

Distinction is to be made between the change if caused by a charac-I. the change by a characteristic u teristic or an inflexive u: a. nouns, all masculines takes place in the following instances, as köttr: feminines as höfn: neuters as högg: neuter plurals as börn from barn: masculines as söngr. B. adjectives, in fem. sing. and neut. plur. in words as fagr: and through all genders in adjectives as 2. the vowel change y. verbs: those in -va (only a few). á, d takes place in all similar instances, e.g. hottr (modus); des (a god) = áss; n.dl = nál (needle); ot = át (an oar); ot = át (years); sot = sár (wounds); fá = fá (few), fem. and neut.; há = há (bigb), fem. and neut.; but this change from a into so is now obsolete, and has been lost for about seven centuries, whereas the change from a into ö is still in full use; both are of common origin, and can only have risen together and at a time when the inflexive -u was still suffixed to all these words. Since that time it has been dropped in many cases, but the vowel change has remained, in some forms throughout all numbers and cases, whereas in others, as barn, höfn, fagr, the primitive vowel recurs before inflexive -ar, -ir, and the like; the difference is probably only one of time, the one being older and weak, the other later and stronger. The words in p. 1, col. 2, lines 23, 24 from the bottom are not quite exact, and ought to be worded thus, 'this | vowel change seems still to have been in full use in Icel. during the 11th and 12th centuries, being etc." II. the change caused by an inflexive -u takes place in all words, nouns and verbs, having a as root vowel, and -u, -ur, -um for inflexion, cp. in the tables the verbs kalla, vaka, and such nouns as hjarta, alda. Thus in born and in born-um the case is different, the ö in born is caused by a lost characteristic u, in bornum it is caused by the inflexive -um; as also in gom-ul (prisca) from gamall. The former change by a characteristic u was in olden' times common to all Scandinavians, whereas the latter seems to be solely Icel.; Swedes, Danes, and Norsemen said lönd (terrae), but landum (terris); born, but barnum; as also gamul (prisca), not as the Icel. gömul. It is to be borne in mind that a characteristic belongs to the root, and has a stronger hold than an inflexive vowel, so that the former may cause a change in the root vowel, though the latter does not. It is also to be noticed that the inflexive vowel was not properly u, but was in early times sounded and spelt o (land-om, kall-om, gam-ol). B. in inflexive syllables ending in a the change usually becomes u, e.g. hundruð, sumur, from hundrað, sumar; kölluðu, clamabant: in hard or strong inflexions both forms are right, as in eigöndum and eigundum, hördöstum and hördustum; in mod. usage the latter is more III. the ancients seem to have had a third kind of u change, viz. caused by a mixed i and u, which they spelt of ey, as the verbs hrökkva, dökkvan, stökkva were in MSS. sometimes spelt hreyqua, steyqua, deyquan, qs. hranquian; but this was confined to a few words and is now obsolete.

There is also a peculiar Resolution of the vowels i or e into ja umlaut are, 1. verbs; in about three hundred verbs the deriva-tive tenses pres. indic, and pret, subj. are thus formed, viz. all the strong place in some infinitives of strong verbs of the 1st class, gjalda, etc., and in several nouns, e. g. hjálp, belp; cp. also berg and bjarg, fell and fjall, gildi and gjald: in the feminines björk, a bircb; fjöl, a dealboard; björg, belp; tjörn, a tarn; fjöðr, a featber (but also fiðr); gjöf, a gift, from gefa, to give; gjörð, a girdle; jörð, eartb (see remarks on the 1st strong fem. declension); in the seven masc. nouns, as fjörðr, a firtb (see remarks on the 2nd strong masc. declension): and in sundry other nouns, jarl, an earl, hjalm-r, a belmet; jaki, ice, jökull, an icicle; hjarta, beart; jötunn, a giant, fjöturt, a fetter: in adjectives, as bjartt brigbt, but birti brigbtness; sjálfr, self; jafn, even; gjarn, willing (and girni); snjallr and snilli; fjart, far, but firt, farber, and firrask, to avoid, whence fjar-ski, q. v.; sjaldan, seldom; fjöl, Germ. viel, whence fjöldi, multitude. & These must be distinguished from sel, whence fjöldi, qs. fl-andi, a fiend; sjándi, seeing, qs. sí-andi; or in trjá, arborum; fjár, pecoris;—in all of which the jú is produced by contraction; as also from jó or jú, in bjóða, ljós, and similar words.

The Complex and Heterogeneous Vowel Changes.

Absorption and Contraction. A consonant is sometimes absorbed by a preceding vowel, which then becomes long or dipha. the inflexive -n in the thongal: 1. absorption of nasals, weak nouns and infinitives of verbs has been absorbed, but as all Icel. inflexions (of cases and tenses) have short vowels, the end syllable has not in this case become long, and the n has simply been dropped, leaving at first a nasal sound, which afterwards disappeared: similar is the contraction in the negative suffix (see p. xxvi). B. in roots, the Scandinavian tongue commonly contracts the particles an-, in-, un-, sin-(semper) into a, i, ii (or o), si; þá, Engl. then; nú, Germ. nun:—in sundry other words, esp. before s, e. g. os-s = Germ. uns; ás-s, deus; bás-s, a byre; gás, a goose; ást, love (for ans, bans, gans, etc.); fús-s, willing, from funs; ras, course, from renna, to run: vetr, winter: assimilation has taken place in the preterite forms, as batt bound, vatt wound, hratt pushed, qs. bandt, vandt, hrandt; even ng, as in œri, an obsolete form for yngri, younger (qs. öngri); hestr, a borse, prob. = hengistr, Dan. bingst; in provinc. Dan. it is still pronounced as diphthong beist. absorption of gutturals before t; here also the t is doubled and the vowel made long (by assimilation as well as absorption) in many words, e. g. dó-ttir, a daughter, Goth. daubtar; nó-tt, night; só-tt, sickness, cp. sjúk-r, sick; á-tta, octo, eight; dró-tt (q. v.); bó-tti, thought; só-tti, sought (þykkja, sækja); sá-tt, peace (cp. síkn); drá-ttr, draught; slá-ttr, stroke; má-ttr, might; há-ttr, mode; ré-ttr, right; slé-ttr, slight; ó-tti, fright; fló-tti, flight; þé-ttr and þjokkr, tight; fré-tta and fregna, to ask; væ-ttr, wight, Germ. wicht; níta, to deny, cp. Germ. nicht; væ-tt, weight; hlu-tr, laughter; slutra, to slaughter, etc.: even before & in the feminine inflexion -iid, qs. hugd. β. at the end of a syllable; nú-r, a corpse, Goth. nabs, cp. Lat. nec-s, = Gr. vénus; fá-r, Lat. paucus, Goth. fabs; fé, Goth. faibu, Lat. pecu; né, Lat. nec, ne-que; þó, tbough, Germ. doch; mý, a gnat, cp. Germ. mücke; ljó-s and ljó-mi, light; þjó, thigh: the strong verbal forms, infin., slå, Germ. seblagen; flå, flay; pvå, to wash, qs. slag, flag, pvag: the pret. and pres. forms, å, ought; må, might; knå, can, from eiga, mega; as also slæ and sló, hlæ and hló, laugh; vá, from vega; lá, from liggia; spá, to spae, but spakr, wise, cp. Lat. -spicio; bá, from þiggja; frå, from fregna; hjó, from höggva; bjó and byggja; trúa and tryggja; trúr, true, and tryggr, trusty; Freyja and Frigg. The Scandinavian languages have rejected all guttural sounds, and even in writing the contraction is not marked, the change having taken place long before writing began; whereas in Engl., although the same phonetic change has taken place, the old Saxon spelling is still kept, because the change was of much later date (15th century?), when the old sound was fixed in writing: but the Icel. spelling accords better with the sound. absorption of dentals; only in a few cases, as nál, needle, Goth. napal; vál, misery, A.S. vädl = begging or ambitus; hvárt (uter), from hvadarr (cp. Engl. wbetber); hvart, wbetber; fjó-rir, an older form is preserved in the old Swed. county-name Fjadrundaland, the Fourth land, cp. Lat. quatuor: Gormr is contr. from God-ormr (Guthrum of the A. S. Chronicle); Hrólfr, Ralph, from Hrodulfr, Rudolph. absorption of the semi-consonant v and the like, as ny-r new, sal soul, Goth. savila; and contr. in forms such as mey, maid, for mavi, whence Goth. mavila = mey-la = girl; ey, for avi; hey, bay, for bavi, and many other words. 5. in Icel. (as in Latin) all monosyllables ending in a vowel are long, therefore even the names of the letters of the alphabet are sounded so, (á, bé, cé, not a, be, ce.)

The Ablaut, or Variation of Vowels, as Jacob Grimm calls it. This variation is chiefly found in the strong verbs, esp. in the pret. tense; but also in nouns and adjectives:

I. in those root words whose strong verbs still exist, e. g. liò, troops, and leid, a way: riò, trembling, and reiò, riding; sniò and sneiò, a slice; grip and greip, q. v.; drif, splasb, and dreif, spray; svif, turn, and sveif, a belm; khit and kleif, a cliff; ris, rising, and reisa, to raise; rit, a writ, and reitt, beds, a square; bit, a bit, and beit, bite, grazing; lit, a look, and leiti, a bill in the borizon; blik, blink, and bleikr, pale; vik, a nook, and vik, an inlet; robi, ruddiness, raudr, red, and rjodr, ruddy; Goti and Gautr, q.v.; not, nautn, use, and njótr, a mate; klofi, a cleft, and klauf, a clove; rof and rauf, a rift; rok, splash, and reykr (rauk), reek; flog and flaug, flight; sopi and saup, a sip; gröf (graf-), a grave, and gróf, a ditch; hlad and hlod, a structure; gal, crowing, and gol, bowling; drep, a stroke, and drap, slaying; eta, a manger, and at, eating; geta and gat, getting; set and sat, a seat; skeri, a cutter, and skari, a swatbe, etc. II. in roots where the verb is either lost, or only found in the cognate languages or dialects (Goth., A. S., Engl.), the vowels a, b, a vary, hani, a cock, and hoena (hon), a ben; ein-man, solitude, and moena, Lat. im-minere; bati and bót, bettering; dagr and dægr (dóg), a day; dalr and dæld, a dale; hagr and hægr, easy; skaði and skæðr (skóð), scathe; net and not, a net; kaf and kof, choking; sok (sak), sake, and soekja (sók), to seek; kraki, a twig, and krókt, a crook; haki, a book, hœkja, a crutch, and haka, a chin; sama and sæma (sómi), to beseem: irreg. variation of o, au, dobi, torpor, and daudr, death; dofi, numbness, and daufr, deaf; froda and fraudr, froth; snodinn, shorn, and snaudr, poor; baugr, a ring, bogi, a bow, and bjugr, crooked; bloti and blautr, wet; losa, to loosen, and lauss, loose; lofa and leyfa (lauf), to praise; togi and taug, a string; glufa and gljúfr, a chasm; guma and geyma (gaum), to beed; tamr, tame, and taumr, a bridle; gap, gap, and gaupn, q. v. :-i, ei vary, hiti, beat, and heitr, bot; digna and deigr, wet; sviti and sveiti, sweat; fita and feiti, fatness; sili and seil, a string; gil and geil, a chasm, etc. III. in many cases there is only one derived form, e. g. dá (from deyja), a swoon; pága (from piggja), acceptance; nám (from nema), seizing; kváma (from koma), coming; reior (from vrida), wroth, prop. wry, distorted. It is worth noticing that the intermediate classes of the strong verbs (the 2nd to the 5th) gave rise to most words and forms, whereas in the 6th no nouns were formed from the preterite, very few in the 1st class:-for spuni (spinning), bruni (burning), runi, sultr, fundr, sprunga, stunga, drykkr, band, hjálp (belp), hvarf-nouns related to the 1st class-are partly irregular and not directly formed from the verb; and faldr (a fold), hald, fall, bland, gangr, hangi, fang, ráð, blástr, grátr, lát, heit, leikr, blót, auki, ausa, hlaup, bú, högg-nouns related to the 6th class-seem to be formed, not from the pret., but from the infinitive. Many words throughout the language indicate ablaut and lost verbs, e.g. breið-r, broad; hvitt, white; hveiti, wheat; deili, distinction; hreinn, pure; beinn, straight; leifa = Gr. λείπω (lifa, leif); draumr, a dream; naumr, tight, etc. etc. But great caution is needed here; the form of a word is not sufficient to prove etymology, and in many cases the likeness is only apparent; thus gnaga (to gnaw) and gnogr (enough), or bak (back) and bók (a book) are not related, though skaði and skæðr are. In respect to umlaut the mere form of the word is in most cases conclusive; but the ablaut, in many cases, requires examination, although hundreds of words may still be explained by it.

It is interesting to compare the Latin irregular verbs with the strong Teutonic verbs, especially those which are etymologically related; the pret, and pres, sing., Icel, and Lat., are the best tenses a. pres., Icel. et and ědo, sit and sědeo, les and for comparison: lėgo, kem and věnio, fel and se-pělio, hef and -cipio, ber and părio, ek and ago, mel and molo, ved and vado, dreg and trabo, veg and věbo, stend and sto. B. pret., at and ēdi, satu and sēdi, lasu and lēgi, kvámu and vēni, fálu and se-pēli, hóf and cēpi, báru and peperi, ók and egi, mól and molui, óð and va-si, dróg and traxi (trab-si), y. Latin words with inserted vóg and vexi (veb-si), stóð and stēti. m, n may be compared with the Icel. and and 3rd classes, which are only two branches of the same kind of words; the i and the inserted i in Icel. are a kind of equivalent to the inserted m, n in Latin; thus Icel. brjóta braut and Lat. frango frēgi, rjúfa rauf and rumpo rūpi, míga meig and mingo minzi, sníða sneið and scindo scidi, þjóta þaut and tundo tūtūdi, strjúka strauk and stringo strinzi, bita beit and findo fidi: weak forms, sleikja and lingo, leifa and linguo, auka jók and jungo junzi; cp. also Goth. tiuban taub, Germ. zieben zog, and Lat. duco duxi (duc-si); Icel. tjá (to say) and Lat. dicere, and many others.

In the Gothic the preterite is almost like the Icel., thus (compared with table, p. xxii), Goth. brinnan, brann, brunnum; biudan, bauh, buhum; reisan, rais, risum; faran, fór, fórum; giban, gab, gébuss (Goth. é answers to Icel. á): in case of reduplication the same vowel is not repeated, but changed for the sake of euphony, thus grétan, gaigrát; blaupan, blaiblaup (not grégrét or blaublaup); this accounts for the fact that the ablaut is heterogeneous, viz. does not change a into á, u into ú, etc., as in simple absorption (see above), but into a different kind of vowel, e. g. fara, fór; geta, gátu; bjóða, bauð, buðu; falla, féll, etc. This, as well as a comparison with the Latin and Greck irregular verbs, seems to shew that the strong verbs in the Tcutonic languages are akin to the irregular and reduplicated in Latin and Greck, although in a contracted form. The characteristic of weak verbs is the formation of the preterite by inserting an auxiliary.

Vaul shifting

¥ 106 -

verb between the root and inflexion, heyr-0-a (bear-d-I); the characteristic of strong verbs is the formation of the preterite by reduplication, which in most cases remains only in a contracted form. There seems to be no other way of forming the preterite. In Gothic, out of about 130 strong verbs, about 26 are still reduplicated, chiefly belonging to the 6th class; some few of the others, e.g. taka, to take, are reduplicated in Gothic.

The classes have here been arranged simply according to the number of words in each; they might have been arranged as fola. those in which the long vowel remains through both numbers (the 4th and 6th classes). β . those in which it remains only in one number, that one being short (the 2nd, 3rd, and 5th). γ . those in which it is short in both numbers (the 1st class). That in the 5th class the long vowel originally belonged to both sing. and plur. is shewn by eta, pret. sing. at; the short vowel in one or both numbers of the preterite is probably a corruption, though old, as it is so even in the Gothic. The ablaut belongs to the earliest stage of the language, and the long vowels thus formed are far more ancient than those caused by simple absorption; centuries must have elapsed between the formation, for instance, of the á in at or sat and in ass or átta, and long afterwards there was a distinction in the pronunciation, the former being pure long vowels, whereas the latter retained a nasal or guttural sound from the absorbed consonant. For the nasals see Lyngbye in Tidskrift for Philol., Copenhagen, vol. ii.

In a few cases the Icel, has a long vowel, which is merely due to phonetic causes: I. a, o, and u are sounded and spelt long before the double consonants lf, lk, lm, lp, thus kálf-r, a calf; hálf-r, balf; sjálf-r, self; sálm-r, a psalm; hálm-r, balm or straw; málm-r (Dan. and Swed. malm), metal; úlf-r, a wolf; hjálpa, to belp; skjálfa, to sbudder; alpt, a swan; golf, a floor; tolf, twelve; alka, an auk; bálkr, a balk; fálki, a falcon; fólk, folk; mjólk, milk; gálgi, the gallows; bólga, ólga, etc.; so also háls, qs. hals, a neck; frjáls, qs. frjals, free. The true pronunciation only remains in skalf, skulfu, not skálf, skúlfu. This was in fact the first step towards absorption of the l as in other languages (e.g. Engl. auk, baum), but in Icel. it remained incomplete. In popular Norse the old simple vowels are still sounded (Ivar Aasen) as well as in modern Danish and Swedish, which shews that this change is purely Icel, and must have taken place after the separation from Norway; yet it is old, as we see from old MSS., Ann. Reg. of the end of the 13th century, that at that time the present pronunciation was in use; hardly any other MSS. distin-II. in ing, ung, which guish between short and long vowels. are spelt and pronounced with a long vowel instead of a short, ing, ung. In this Dictionary the long vowels \acute{a} and \acute{u} are kept in the former case (álfr, álmr, hálmr), but in the latter case always the short, ing, ung, tunga, not tunga; angi, not ángi; as also lengi, not leingi. Again, in a few instances a long vowel has passed into a short, viz. in the possessive pronoun minn binn sinn, neuter mitt bitt sitt, which the ancients wrote and pronounced minn binn sinn, mitt bitt sitt, cp. the Goth. meins, Germ. mein, etc.; even in MSS., as the Fb. (14th century latter part), we find mijtt, i.e. mitt: the word illr, evil, ill, is usually spelt so, but is still frequently pronounced illr, illt, which is the true form, the long vowel being due to the contraction, cp. Germ. ubel, Engl. evil; (Icel. say mér er ilt, not illt): drottinn, drottning, and drottna, instead of drottinn, drottning, and drottna; gott for gott; (the Ann. Reg. spells dróttning.) The distinction (by an acute) between a long and short vowel was a century ago resumed in Icel. printed books, so as to follow the present pronunciation; and since etymology and comparison with foreign languages support this practice, with the few exceptions now mentioned, it has been retained in modern Editions as well as in modern writing.

\[\beta \], the syllable vá is in modern usage throughout changed into vo, svá svo, tvá tvo, vátr votr, ván von, vápn vopn, etc., but the vowel change remains as before, e.g. væta weiness, vænta to expect, etc.; hánum (bim) is changed into honum: ve sometimes changes into w or y, Siguror= Sigvaror, dögurðr and dagverðr, yrkja from verk: of into æ, Svenskr and Scenskr, Swedish; koemi and kvæmi, veniret; scefi and svæfi, dormiret, etc.: this and other less important vowel changes are noticed in the Dictionary, especially in the introduction to each letter.

Formation by way of Inflexions.

Words are either formed from verbs or from nouns or roots.

A. From verbs: I. from the 1st weak conjugation feminines are formed by adding -n to the infinitive, boda-n, announcement; skipa-n, order; hugga-n, comfort; skapa-n, creation; ibra-n, repentance; helga-n, ballowing; vitra-n, vision; hindra-n, bindrance; talma-n, id.; jata-n, confession; neita-n, denial; hugsa-n, thinking; hegda-n, conduct; blessa-n, blessing; bölva-n, cursing; undra-n, admir-dion; efa-n, doubling; fjölga-n, multiplication; lifga-n, calling to life; holdga-n, incarnation; atla-n, opinion; prédika-n, a sermon; prenta-n, printing; menta-n, breeding; tapa-n, perdition; kalla-n, vocation; vara-n, admonition; svala-n, refresbing; langa-n, desire; hreinsa-n, purification; saurga-n, pollution; byrja-n, beginning; dýrka-n, worsbip; betra-n, bettering; rotna-n, rotting, decomposition; visna-n and fölna-n, withering; hnigna-n, decay; una-n, charm (4th conjugation), etc. In mod. usage the -an is often changed into -un, thus köllun and kallan, iorun and ioran, byrjun and byrjan, the later form being even the more usual. This change freq. occurs even in very old MSS., e. g. skemton, Mork. 72, 168; etlon, devise, 10, 34; vingon, friendsbip, 166, 178; eptir-leiton, seeking, 168; flimton, reviling, 28. from the 2nd weak conjugation feminines are formed in -ing, which is added to the root, doem-ing, judgment, damnation; fylk-ing, a rank or bost; leys-ing, loosening; kenn-ing, doctrine; lik-ing, likeness, parable; viro-ing, esteem; hegn-ing and hirt-ing, chastisement; birt-ing, brightening, publication; bekk-ing, knowledge; læg-ing, bumiliation; melt-ing, digestion; send-ing, despatcb; legg-ing, laying; freist-ing, temptation; fyll-ing, fulfilment; bygg-ing, building; rign-ing, pouring with rain; foed-ing, birth; lext-ing, teaching; scem-ing, beseeming; groed-ing, bealing; upp-freed-ing, information; tæl-ing and ginn-ing, deception; adgrein-ing, distinction; menn-ing, manliness; hring-ing, pealing; deil-ing, division; beyg-ing and hneig-ing, inflexion; bend-ing, beckoning; lend-ing, alighting; ending, finishing; gerd-ing, bedging; eld-ing, lighting; efn-ing, fulfilment; preyng-ing, pressing; and a great many others: a few, as kerling a carling, prenn-ing trinity, ein-ing unity, are formed from nouns, as are also the masculines in -ingr; lækn-ing, bealing, from lækna, ad, is irregular or refers to a lost strong verb. The feminines in -an and -ing are counted by hundreds. III. from the 3rd weak conjugation and from the strong verbs, feminines are formed in -ning: -from the 3rd weak, glad-ning, gladdening; kvad-ning, greeting; sab-ning, filling; vaf-ning, entanglement; hrak-ning, tossing; vak-ning, awakening; tal-ning, counting; sam-ning, agreement; tam-ning, taming; ar-ning, tilling; far-ning, passage; var-ning, ware; hvat-ning, exbortation; set-ning, a position, thesis; lag-ning, laying down; skil-ning, understanding, discerning; rud-ning, clearing; stud-ning, upbolding; smur-ning, smearing, anointing; spur-ning, speering, asking; flut-ning, carrying; a-ning, baiting (z)a), etc. strong verbs, rit-uing, writing; lot-ning, 'louting,' veneration (luta); get-ning, begetting; kos-ning, election; sod-ning, cooking; les-ning, gleaning; rad-ning, rebuke (rada); fra-drag-ning, subtraction; uppal-ning, breeding; hlut-tek-ning, partaking; haf-ning, elevation (hefja); upp-stig-ning, ascension (stiga); snú-ning, turning (snúa); nú-ning, rubbing (gnúa): bú-ningr, dress (búa), is masc. : gör-ning, a deed (göra). shews that this word has had a strong inflexion: jat-ning, confession (játa, tt), is irregular from the 3rd weak conjugation: drótt-ning, a mistress, a queen, is formed from drottinn, a lord. This n is undoubtedly a remnant of the part. pass. In the case of the 3rd weak conjugation, this formation is an evidence that the participles in -inn were of early growth; it is curious that feminines in -ning were formed even from verbs in which that participle is not used, e. g. glad-ning, from gledja, see p. xxiv. Some of the above words are in modern usage also masculine, e. g. barning and barningr, skilning and skilningr, görning and görningr; but the feminine is older and 2. a few masculines in -natr are also formed more correct. from the same verbs, e.g. prif-naðr, tbrift (prifa); snú-naðr, profit (snúa); bú-naðr, busbandry (búa); met-naðr, ambition (meta); get-naor, begetting (geta); skap-naor, shape (skapa); skil-naor, departing (skilja): from other verbs, her-naor, barrying, freebooting (herja); as also kost-naor, cost (kosta); spar-naor, saving (spara); tru-naor, trust (trua); té-naor, belp (tœja); fé-naor, cattle; dug-naor, energy (duga); lif-naor, living (lifa): unaor, delight (una); verk-naor, working (yrkja); fögn-uðr, joy; jöfn-uðr, equity; hagn-aðr, comfort; sökn-uor, sorrow (for a lost thing); söfn-uor, congregation; vörn-uor, caution; árn-aor, intercession; þjóf-naor, theft; (mán-uor, a month, is different.) Altogether different are the old words, höl-or a bero, from- j-u or ubr a promoter, gröndubr a destroyer; mjöt-ubr, A. S. meotod = ruler; these words are very few, mostly poetical, and are used in an active IV. feminines in -sla are formed -s, a +. sense, (see Grimm's Gr.iii. 241.) from the 2nd weak conjugation, skir-sla, ordeal; geym-sla, keeping; fced-sla, food; kenn-sla, teaching; frced-sla, information; eyb-sla, spending; vig-sla, inauguration; reyn-sla, experience; gat-sla, guarding, keeping; greid-sla, payment; veit-sla, banquet; hræd-sla, fright; for-sla, sbifting; neyt-sla, taking food; been-heyt-sla, grant; reid-sla, leidsla, herð-sla, hirð-sla, etc.; often spelt with z, veizla, etc. the monosyllabic feminines in -n are chiefly formed from the roots of - n J verbs, not from the infinitive; heyr-n, bearing; spur-n, speering, news; skir-n, baptism; eig-n, owning, possession; sög-n, a saw, saying, tale; þög-n, silence; vör-n, defence; stjór-n, sway; sók-n, prosecution; fys-n, desire; aub-n, voidness; for-n, offerings; freg-n, news; ib-n, activity; njos-n, espying; laus-n, freedom; raus-n, liberality; gaup-n, a gowpen; sjó-n and sý-n, sight; þjá-n, oppression; smá-n, disgrace; bæ-n, begging;

Digitized by GOOSI

-dz. A

-st sh.

min.

. urr - am

lik-n. bealing. mercy; og-n. awe, etc., but not very many; a few are from adjectives, as feik-n immensity, tig-n lordship, from feikinn immense, tiginn lordly: aub-na luck, stiar-na a star. VI. masculines in -dr (-tr): 1. with a radical r; al-dr, age (ala); gal-dr, spell (gala); hjal-dr, sound, battle (hjala); hlá-tr, laughter; lá-tr, litter (liggja); ar-or, a plough (erja); gro-or, growth (groa); ro-or, rowing (roa); les-tr, gleaning, reading (lesa).

2. with in-81 m flexive r; stul-or, theft (stela); bur-or, birth (bera); skur-or, a cut (skera); vör-ör, a warder (verja); bur-ör, wane (þverra); gröf-tr, digging, burial (grafa); vöx-tr, growth (vaxa); fun-dr, finding; kos-tr, chose (kjosa); má-ttr, might; þvá-ttr, a wash; drá-ttr, a draught; sla-ttr (cp. Engl. slaughter), mowing; ha-ttr, mode (haga); snu-or (snúa). a twirl; blás-tr, a blast: ó-tti, awe (óg); fló-tti, flight (flýja); bó-tti, conceit (bykkja); skjálf-ti, trembling: cp. also kul-ði, cold; foil-di, multitude; van-di, custom;—which however are not formed from verbs.

VII. in -st, -str, masc., fem., and neut.; bak-str, baking: rak-str. raking: rek-str. a drove: bor-sti. thirst (burr): trau-st, trust (from trua); fre-st, delay (from firra); ri-st, step, cp. Engl. wrist; and rei-str, a serpent, poët. (from vrida, to writbe); ba-st (from binda); flau-st (from fljóta), etc.

B. From nouns and roots. Masculines: I. with inflexive n, r, l, -unn, a few words; apt-ann, evening; jot-unn, a giant; him-inn, beaven; drótt-inn, a lord; morg-inn, morning; ar-inn, bearth: in pr. names, Od-inn, þrá-inn, etc.; Aud-unn. 2. in -urr, -arr; fjöt-urr, a fetter; bid-urr, wood-grouse; jöf-urr, cp. Germ. eber; töt-urr, tatters; kög-urr and köng-urr, texture; jad-arr, a rim; ham-arr, a bammer; hum-arr, a lobster; naf-arr, a gimlet; goll-urr, q. v.; gag-arr, q. v.; sum-arr, sum-mer (obsolete as masc.): in pr. names, Hjúlm-arr, Ein-arr, Böðv-arr, Stein-arr, Ott-arr, Gunn-arr, Iv-arr, Agn-arr, Yngv-arr, Ragn-arr, Gizurr, Vid-arr, Ulf-arr, etc. are of a different kind, viz. the latter part = -bari or -bere or -bard, thus Gunnarr = Gundebere; Einarr = Einbard. The pr. names in -an are chiefly of Gaelic origin, thus Bek-an, Kjart-an, Kalm-an, Kvar-an, Hnok-an, Kjar-an, Kyl-an, Feil-an, Bjól-an, Duf-an, Koðr-an, Kamb-an, Lun-an, Trost-an, etc., see - ull - il. ni Landn. 3. in -ull, -ill; jök-ull, an icicle; kögg-ull, articulus; röd-ull, anedge; söd-ull, a saddle; mond-ull, axle-tree; skok-ull, a sbaft; bong-ull, a stalk of seaweed; ong-ull, a book; rio-ull, a detachment of troops; bit-ull, a mouth-piece; tig-ull, a brick, a square; seg-ull, a magnet; stöp-ull, a steeple; fer-ill, a track; snig-ill, a snail; lyk-ill, a key; bist-ill, thistle; fif-ill, dandelion; bio-ill, a wooer; ket-ill, a kettle; ref-ill, tapestry; hnyk-ill, a clew; skut-ill, a barpoon; dras-ill, a charger, borse; beit-ill, a berb; smyr-ill, a bawk; dep-ill, a blot; hef-ill, brails; hvirf-ill, the crown of the head: foreign, eng-ill, an angel; kyndill, a candle. Many of these were originally diminutives, but most of them have lost that sense, as jökull from jaki. B. in -all : kað-all, a chain; vað-all, shallow water; kap-all, a borse. a few diminutives in -lingr; ket-lingr, a kitten; kid-lingr, a kidling; yrm-lingt, Lat. vermicula; bæk-lingt, Lat. libellus; ung-lingt, a youngling, youlb. III. in -ungr and -ingr, -lingr: 1. patronymic in plur.; Nish-ungar, Germ. Niebelung; Völs-ungar, Skjöld-ungar, Skán-ungar, Kush-ungar; Gyð-ingar, Jews; Yng-lingar, Knyt-lingar: in -lendingr, Green-lendingar, etc.: in -firdingar, Vest-firdingar; Vik-ingar, Vikings, etc. 2. in many poët. words; siklingr, ödlingr, an etbeling; mildingr; hildingr: in pr. names, Erl-ingr, Hær-ingr, etc. other words; kon-ungr, a king; sifj-ungr, a kinsman (poët.); bræðrungr and systr-ungr, a cousin; ná-ungr, a neighbour (eccl.); helm-ingr, a balf; fjord-ungt, the fourth part, a farthing; funt-ungt, the fifth part; sett-ungr, the sixth part; att-ungr, the eighth part; vetr-ungr and gemlingr, a yearling; höfr-ungr, a dolpbin; öld-ungr, an elder; bun-ingr, dress; görn-ingr, a deed; sköfn-ungr, a sbin-bone; gar-ungr, a jester; spek-ingr, a philosopher; vitr-ingr, a wise man; huml-ungr, an inch; grad-ungr, a bull: of boats, sexcer-ingr, six-oared; atter-ingr, eightoared; teinœr-ingr, ten-oared; byrd-ingr, a ship of burden. in -ingi; höfð-ingi, a captain; ætt-ingi, a kinsman; heið-ingi, a beathen; band-ingi, a prisoner; foed-ingi, a native; leys-ingi, a free man; ræningi, a robber; mord-ingi, a murderer; let-ingi, a lazy man; aumingi, a poor wretch; œr-ingi, a springal; sæl-ingi, an epicurean; Skrælingi, an Esquimaux; kunn-ingi, a friend; loem-ingi, a bird. in -undr; hof-undr, an author; vol-undr, q.v.; vis-undr, a bison: in -uni (obsolete), arf-uni, an beir; sif-uni, Goth. siponeis, a disciple; beim-uni, etc., Lex. Poët.

VI. in -ari, especially words such as dom-ari, a doomster, judge; les-ari, a reader; skrif-ari, rit-ari, a writer; skap-ari, creator; skir-ari, baptist; gjaf-ari, giver; græð-ari, bealer; Lausn-ari, Frels-ari, Redeemer; Keis-ari, Kaiser; mut-ari (poët.); vartari; ridd-ari, a knight; stall-ari, stabularius; kval-ari, tormenter:there are few of these words in old writers, but they have increased, especially in nouns denoting business, leik-ari, a jester; skó-ari, a sboemaker; vef-ari, a weaver; pront-ari, a printer; songv-ari, a singer, musician; ekinn-ari, sút-ari, bak-ari, fiòl-ari, bof-ari, hatt-ari; roed-ari, an oarsman,—some of which occur in olden times: foreign, kjall-ari, a cellar : salt-ari, a psalter : in -ali, -li, a few words, abi-li : rang-ali, a lobby; skark-ali, tumult; taf-ali, trouble; saf-ali, a sable: kast-ali, a castle: in -aldi, glóp-aldi, digr-aldi, Tas-aldi, pumb-aldi, leggj-aldi, VII. in -andi, active - 4... him-aldi, ribb-aldi, a very few words. participles; veg-andi, a slayer; bú-andi or bón-di (hús-bó-ndi, Engl. busband); fiá-ndi, a foe; fræ-ndi, a kinsman; and numberless participles when used as substantives, e.g. grat-andi, weeper; eig-andi, VIII. in -si; van-si, disowner; fagn-endr, heyr-andi, etc.

grace; of-si, passion; gal-si, gaiety. I. in -d, -b, or -t, formed chiefly from adjec-Feminines: tives, and feminine also in cognate languages (e. g. old Germ. -ida); a vowel change takes place wherever the root vowel is changeable: the d, d, and t are phonetical changes depending on the final letter. In this way a great many feminines (more than a hundred) are formed, hx-0. beight; dyp-d, depth; vid-d, width; breid-d, breadth; leng-d, length; fz-d, fewness; merg-d, multitude; stoer-d, size; byk-t, thickness; byng-d, beaviness; erf-d, inberitance; grim-d, ferocity; heil-d, wholeness; heli-t, a balf; deil-d, a sbare; grein-d, distinction; frem-d, q.v.; scem-d, bonour; elisi-d, eternity; tryg-d, fidelity; hryg-d, sorrow; sek-t, guilt; spek-t, wisdom; nek-t, nakedness; hefn-d, revenge; nefn-d, a committee; vern-d, protection; gren-d, vicinity; vil-d, willingness; girn-d, desire; dirf-d, daring; dýt-d, glory; lyg-d, a lie: kyr-b. calmness; hvil-d, rest; reyn-d, experience; eym-d, misery; deyf-o, numbness; leyn-d, secrecy; fræg-o, fame; gnæg-o, wealtb; heg-o, ease; væg-o, mercy; mæg-o, affinity; vinsæl-d, popularity; van-d, expectation; fegr-d, beauty; megr-d, meagreness; feig-d, feyness; mýk-ð, meekness: all in -sem-d, skyn-sem-d, reason; unaðsem-d, delight; and many others formed from nouns and adjectives indiscriminately. Of a different kind are hul-d, mystery; skul-d, debt; afun-d, envy; nán-d, neighbourbood; vis-t, abiding; frét-t. news; dyg-o, virtue; gnot-t, abundance; sot-t, sickness; sæt-t, settlement: and still more nat-t, night; rod-d, voice; and similar words, which can be seen if compared with kindred languages (Germ., II. in -ska, prop. -iska, and thus causing umlaut; bernska, childhood; mæl-ska, eloquence; gced-ska, grace; græ-ska, spite; gleym-ska, forgetfulness; fyrn-ska, age, decay; vit-ska, wisdom; menn- he will ska, manbood (and in compds, ragmenn-ska, cowardice; karlmenn-ska, valour; gód-mennska, gentleness; ill-mennska, cruelty; ú-m., slotb; var-m., meanness, etc.); heim-ska, foolishness; el-ska, love; il-ska and vánd-ska, evil passion; œr-ska, youtb; fifl-ska, folly; dæl-ska, liberty; tíð-ska and lýð-ska, usage, custom; kæn-ska, craft: in names of people or their tongues, En-ska, English; Scen-ska, Swedish; Grik-ska, Greek; Ir-ska, Irisb: irreg. and without umlaut, in Val-ska, Welsb; Dan-ska, Danish; and mod. as in Ital-ska, Italian; Spán-ska, Spanish: in -eskja or -neskja, inserting n, forn-eskja, antiquity; vitn-eskja, knowledge; flat-neskja, flat land, plain, level; manneskja, a man (mod.); haro-neskja, barsbness, barness. III. indecl. fem. in -i, -gi, -ni, formed from adjectives; bræð-i anger, from bráðr bot; mæð-i from móðr; hreyst-i valour, from hraustr; helt-i lameness, from haltr lame, etc., see p. xviii. (-usta), a few words; orr-osta, fight (cp. Germ. ernst); fulln-usta, fulfilment; holl-usta, bomage; kunn-usta, knowledge (Germ. kunst); þjónusta. service (Germ. dienst); for-osta, beadsbip; unn-usta, a spouse, (unn-V. in -átta, a few words; víð-átta, abroad; kunn--eHa usti.m. a lover.) átta, knowledge; bar-átta, battle; vedr-átta, weather, temperature, (forátta, q. v., is different.) VI. in -ung; hörm-ung, vexation; launung, secrecy; laus-ung, looseness; naud-ung, constraint; hád-ung, indignity; sundr-ung, scattering; verð-ung (poet.), king's bousebold. in -und, a few words; pus-und, thousand; hör-und, Lat. cutis; teg-und, species, kind; of-und, spite; vit-und, knowledge; ti-und, teind, titbe; átt-und, the eighth part, fjaor-und (obsolete): in local names, as Sól-und, Borg-und (Burgundy), Eik-und; bus-und and hör-und are also used as 2. in -ynja, Lat. -ina, a very few words; ás-ynja, a goddess; -4 n/4 for-ynja, an ogre; ulf-ynja and varg-ynja, a sbe-wolf, lup-ina: mod. -inna, keisara-inna, is scarcely used, and is borrowed through Dan. VIII. special; man from Germ, and cannot therefore be called Icel. in -ingja, ham-ingja, luck: in -sa, heil-sa, bealtb. IX. a kind of diminutive; in -la, hris-la, a little twig; hynd-la, Lat. canicula (Mar. 494, v. l.); tvævet-la, a ewe two years old: in -ka, stúl-ka, qs. staul-ka (from stauli), a girl. Different are hal-ka, slippiness; hlú-ka, thaw; har-ka, bardness: as also ga in mæð-gur, mother and daughter.

2. in a few names of mares; Mús-ka, a mouse-grey mare; Brun-ka, black; Raud-ka, red; Ljós-ka, light: in -na (and -ni masc.), also of horses, Skjó-na and Skjó-ni, pie-bald; Grá-na and Grá-ni, grey: in -lin, cp. Germ. -lein, of cows, Hringa-lin, Randa-lin, etc.

I. the derivated neuters in -i (see p. xviii); they -i + are formed from adjectives or from roots of words, as -leysi want, from -lauss; félauss penniless, whence féleysi 'pennilessness;' tíki might, kingdom, from rikt mighty; lýti fault, from ljótt ugly; æði madness, from oor mad; goods goods, from good; frelsi freedom, from frjals free; ágæti goodness, from ágæti good. They sometimes have a collective sense: and in compounds any word may become neuter, regardless of its gender when simple, e. g. -berni from barn. a bairn: -menni from maor (stór-menni, ung-menni, góð-menni, ill-menni); -gresi from gras, (ill-gresi weeds, blom-gresi flowers); -nevti from nautr. (föru-nevti. fellowship); al-pingi, but ping; vald and veldi, power; nafn and -nefni, a name: stafn and stefni, a stem; band and -bendi, a string; garor and -gerði, a fence: ból and -bœli, a den: land and -lendi: sáð and sæði. seed; lund and -lyndi, temper; orð and -yrði, a word; fugl and -fygli, a fowl; munnr and -mynni, moutb; helsi a necktie, from háls a neck: vætti testimony, from váttr a witness: hall-æri a bad season, famine, from ar a year; edli and adal, nature; -indeed any word may thus be changed into neuter. 2. in -endi; eyr-endi, errand; kvik-endi, a creature; heil-indi, bealth; væl-indi, gullet; chiefly only in plur., as vis-indi, science; hygg-endi, good sense; sannindi, truth : tid-indi, tidings : lik-indi, likelibood : hlunn-endi, endowments: dvr-endi, costly things: rang-indi, injustice: rett-indi, rights: leid-indi, tediousness; hard-indi, a bad season; sár-indi, soreness; klókendi, sbrewdness; frio-endi, fine things: in -erni, denoting kin, cp. - Sui 4 Ulf. fabrein = πάτρα and γονείε, brebrabans = άδελφοί, whence Engl. breibren, cp. also Lat. -ernitas; fad-erni, brod-erni, mod-erni, fatberbood, etc.; þjóð-erni, nationality (mod.); lund-erni, temper; líf-erni, conduct of life; besides sal-erni, síð-erni (q.v.): in -elsi, 2 very few words, reyk-elsi, incense; fang-elsi, a prison; hrokk-elsi, a stone grig, is prob. different: in -ildi, fifr-ildi, a butterfly; pykk-ildi, callousness: in -di, el-di, q. v. (ala); upp-el-di, education: in -in, bynd-in, a sheaf; ald-in, fruit: in -ili, heim-ili, bome. II. in -sl (-sli); brig-sl, rebuke: kvn-sl. prodigy; smyr-sl, ointment; byng-sl, beaviness; bæg-sl, fins, (bogr, a bow); eym-sl, soreness; œxl (qs. œk-sl, from vaxa), excrescence; skrim-sl, a monster; cer-sl, mad pranks, (cerr, mad); bei-sl, a bridle; byrm-sl, mercy; renn-sli, a watercourse, 2. in -sn: hoensn, poultry; rzk-sn, rags; fylg-sni, q. v. III. in -al. etc.: oðal, a feud; með-al, medicine (mod.); að-al, nature: in -an, gam-an, joy; and a few other words but little used, e.g. 6-ár-an, a bad season; 6-lyfj-an, poison; 6-at-an, offal of food: in -in, -n, ald-in, fruit; megin, main power; teg-in, gods; meg-n, power; teg-n, rain; vat-n, water: in -gin, sed-gin, father and daughter; syst-kin, brother and tister; moed-gin, mother and daughter: in -ad, her-ad, a county; hundr-að, bundred; for-að, q.v.; höf-uð, a bead; in -ald, kaf-ald, snow; fol-ald, a foal; ker-ald, a tub; haf-ald, q.v.; gim-ald, an opening; eisk-ald (poët.), beart; rek-ald, a wreck: in -arn, is-arn (poët.), iron; ak-arn, an acorn; fo-arn, a crop; und-arn, afternoon: in -t. fros-t, frose, from frjósa: in -ang, hun-ang, boney.

Digitized by GOOGIC

The following are to be regarded in the light of compds: + masculines in -leikr and -leiki; kær-leikr, love; sann-leikr, trutb; heilag-leiki, boliness, (many words): in -domr, -dæmi (n.), Engl. -dom, Germ. -thurn, helgi-domr, bolidom; Kristin-domr, Christendom; heiðindómr, beathendom; mann-dómr, manbood; lær-dómr, learning; vísdomr, wisdom; konung-domr, kingdom; jarl-domr, earldom, etc.: in -shapr, Germ. -schaft, vin-skapr, friendship; fjand-skapr, enmity; félag-skapr, fellowsbip; skáld-skapr, poetry; fifl-skapr, folly; greyskapr, meanness; greið-skapr, readiness, etc. (several words): in farangr, leið-angr, levy; far-angr, baggage, etc. (several worts):

in -úð and -vðgi, contr. from bygð, cp. A. S. bygð; denotting temper, mind, Öl-uð, sincerity; ill-uð, spite; var-uð, beedfulness; ást-uð, love; mann-uð, bumanity; harð-uð, barðness; grimm-uð, cruelty;
grunn-yðgi, sballow mind, gullibility; harð-yðgi, etc.: different are misk-unn, mercy; vark-unn, excuse (from unna, cp. afund, envy): in -semi from -samr, miskun-semi, mercy, etc. III. neuters in -afi; aud-cefi, riches; ör-cefi, wilderness (only in plur.): in -ord, akin to A.S. wyrth = weird = fate, god-ord, priestbood; met-ord, dignity; gjaf-orð, marriage; vit-orð, intelligence; ban-orð, death weird; bón-orð, courting; lof-ord and heit-ord, promise; vatt-ord, testimony; leg-ord, q. v., in many of which it is simply derived from ord = word: in -læti, from adjectives in -látr, rétt-læti, righteousness; ör-læti, liberality, etc.

Masculines in -dagi; bar-dagi, battle; ein-dagi, term; mál-dagi, a deed; skil-dagi, condition: feminine pr. names in -unnr, -ny, Steinunnr, Ing-unn, Þór-unn, Sæ-unn, etc.; Sig-ný, Ás-ný, Þór-ný, etc.: in beiðr or -eiðr, -ríðr, Ragn-eiðr, Sig-ríðr: masculine pr. names in -mundr, -ndr, -or, Guò-mundr, þrá-ndr, Eyv-indr, Ön-undr, Bár-ðr (qs. Bár-röðr), þór-ðr (qs. þór-röðr), and many others.

ADJECTIVES.—They are either simple, as fag-r, góð-r, sæt-r, or formed by inflexion:

I. in -ligr, Engl. -ly, Germ. -lieb, in mod. usage spelt and pronounced -ligr, counted by hundreds,

a. twofold adjectives, e.g. sein-ligr (seinn, slow, and -ligr); eilfi-ligr, eternal; sæl-ligr (sæll); grimm-ligr (grimmr), vitr-ligr, fagr-ligr, harð-ligr, fram-ligr, spak-ligr, fróð-ligr, kát-ligr, hag-ligr, rang-ligr, hein-ligr, góð-ligr, feig-ligr, hljóð-ligr(hljóðr, silent), væn-ligr, þung-ligr; veik-ligr, weakly; ung-ligr, heil-ligr; mín-ligr, like myself, etc.

B. with a binding vowel i or u, most of which seem to be formed from verbs; virðu-ligr, wortby (virða); mátu-ligr, deserved; kostu-ligr, costly (kosta); skipu-ligr, orderly (skipa); tígu-ligr, magnificent; tíku-ligr, rich, opulent; risu-ligr, elevated, grand ;-often in mod. usage spelt with ug, viroug-ligr, rikugligr, etc.: with i, sœmi-ligr, seeming (sœma); œski-ligr, desirable (œskja); hæði-ligr, ridiculous (hæða); œsi-ligr, violent (œsa); þægiligr, agreeable (bægja); drengi-ligr, bold; senni-ligr, probable (sanna); skyndi-ligr, sudden (skynda); zeti-ligr, eatable (eta); hoefi-ligr, prodent (hoefa); hyggi-ligr, prudent (hyggja); skemti-ligr, amusing (skemta); girni-ligr and fysi-ligr, desirable (fysa); glæsi-ligr, splendid (glæsa); leyni-ligr, a secret (leyna); heyri-ligr (heyra); eydi-ligr, empty (eyda); heppi-ligr, lucky; gzti-ligr, cautious (gzta); illi-ligr, ill-looking. formed from nouns; dyro-ligr, glorious; and-ligr, spiritual; hold-ligr, carnal; likam-ligr, bodily; verald-ligr, worldly; Guo-ligr, godly; dag-ligr, daily; ár-ligr, yearly; stund-ligr, temporary; siò-ligr, wellbred; mann-ligr, manly; gæfu-ligr, lucky; elli-ligr, aged; prek-ligr, stout; undar-ligr, wonderful; vig-ligr, martial; grút-ligr, wailing; hlæg-ligr, laugbable; kvenn-ligr, womanlike; karlmann-ligr, manly; hof-ligr, moderate; hegom-ligr, vain: inserting s, yndis-ligr, charming.

8. with double inflexion; heilag-ligr, boly; vesal-ligr, wretched; mikil-ligr, grand; gamal-ligr, old-looking; frækn-ligr, valiant; ad-dáanligr, wonderful; ymis-ligr, various; heimol-ligr, intimate. 1. as from strong verbs, a. participles of strong ticinial adjectives B. participial adjectives from lost verbs; bog-inn, verbs, in -inn. bowed : tog-inn, stretched : hrokk-inn, curled : rot-inn, rotten : hok-inn, stooping; lod-inn, shaggy; las-inn, dilapidated; snod-inn, shorn; fúinn, rotten; bolg-inn, bulged, swoln; lu-inn, weary; solg-inn, gloaty. sundry adjectives formed from verbs with a radical n: heidinn, beathen; Krist-inn, Christian; tig-inn, noble; feg-inn, fain; eig-inn, own; cer-inn, ample; yfr-inn, id.; op-inn, open. 5. with a single n; jaf-n, even; for-n, old; gjar-n, willing; freek-n, valiant; syk-n, sackless; grœn-n, green (from gróa). e. many adjectives denoting apt, given to, or the like; id-inn, busy, sedulous; had-inn, mocking; hrees-inn, conceited; roed-inn, talkative; kost-gæf-inn, painstaking; hygg-inn, prudent; gæt-inn, watchful; skrýt-inn, funny; hlýð-inn, obedient; lyg-inn, mendacious; gleym-inn, forgetful; skreit-inn, untruthful; breyt-inn, fickle, sbifty; feim-inn, sby; kim-inn, ironical; grett-inn, frowning; bell-inn, tricking; rýn-inn, prying; frétt-inn, enquiring; hitt-inn, bitting; styrfinn, peevisb; slys-inn, bapless; hepp-inn, bappy, lucky; uf-inn, rough; glim-inn, a nimble wrestler; send-inn, sandy, etc. 2 as from weak verbs: in -aor; participles, tal-aor, bod-aor, kall-aor, etc.: participial, aldr-aor, aged; gaml-aor, doted; vilj-aor, willing; blessaor, blessed; bolv-aor, cursed; hug-aor, daring; olv-aor, tipsy; in -or, hær-or, boary; lær-or, learned; reyn-dr, experienced; eyg-or, eyed; grein-dr, clever, discerning : different is kal-dr, cold, etc. ciples in -andi; les-andi, able to read: often in a gerundial sense, opolandi, intolerable; ohaf-andi, unfit; over-andi; oger-andi, impossible, etc.: from those in -andi come the Engl. words in -ing, d being changed III. in -igr, -ugr, -agr; in Goth. etc. all three forms are used indiscriminately; in Icel. the ancients prefer-igr, the modern-ugr; (-agr remains only in heil-agr, boly, from heil-l); aud-igr, wealthy; matt-igr, migbty; blod-igr, bloody; naud-igr, unwilling; mod-igr, moody; gof-ugr, noble; of-ugr, backward, inverse; hof-ugr, beavy; kunnigr, known; prott-ugr and öfl-ugr, strong; örd-ugr, arduus; grad-igr, greedy; vit-ugt, witty, clever; sid-ugt, well-bred; stöd-ugt, steady; synd-ugr, sinful; verd-ugr, wortby; minn-ugr, mindful; skyld-ugr, dutiful; heipt-igr, bating; kröpt-ugr, powerful; ráo-ugr, ready, sagacious; slott-ugr, wily; leir-ugr, clayey; mold-ugr and ryk-ugr, dusty; snjó-ugr, snowy; hróð-ugr, exultant: in -úðigr, -minded; grimm-úðigr, fierce, etc. 2. simple forms, mostly poët., as spár-kar, prophecying; mein-gir, moaning, Lex. Poët. IV. in -ottr, O. H. G. -obt, A. S. -ibt, Germ. -icht; denoting colour, shape, etc.; dumb-ottr, dusky; skj-óttr, chequered; frekn-óttr, freckly; rönd-óttr, striped; flekkóttr, q.v.; skjöld-óttr; brönd-óttr, brindled; dröfn-óttr, q.v.; bild-óttr, sokk-óttr, bles-óttr, gols-óttr, bleikál-óttr, móál-óttr, vind-óttr, etc., all of colour: of shape, or, as Lat.-osus, denoting all over, covered with; knöttóttr, ball-sbaped; tind-óttr, with peaks; bár-óttr, waved; kringl-óttr, round; hnöll-óttr, böll-óttr, ball-formed; hlykkj-óttr, crooked; göt-óttr, full of boles, ragged; sköll-óttr, bald; koll-óttr, bumble (cow); hruf-óttr, rugged; hnyfl-óttr, etc. := Lat. -osus, hrukk-óttr, rugosus; bylj-óttr, gusty; refj-óttr, crafty; göldr-óttr, a wily wizard; skerj-óttr, full of skerries; gör-óttr, poisoned; kvist-óttr, knotty; sök-ótt, baving many enemies, etc. etc. :—a rich harvest of such words is found in Hjaltalin's Icel. Botany, rendering the Lat. technical terms in -osus. -all, -ull, -ill; lit-ill, little; mik-ill, great, muckle; gam-all, old; ves-all, poor: as a kind of iterative adjective, denoting frequency or tendency, hverf-ull, shifty, changeable; svik-all, false; gjöf-ull, open-handed; pag-all, taciturn; spur-ull, speering, curious; stop-all, sbifting; for-ull, vagrant; smug-all, penetrating; tos-ull, stumbling, tottering (of a horse); at-all, fierce; hvik-ull, wavering; gong-ull and reik-all, rambling; hug-all, minding, observing; ris-ull, early rising; sog-ull, telling tales; svip-all, sbifty; (these words are not very numerous.) In mod. usage -ull; pög-ull = pag-all; öt-ull, pert: but -all is kept in gam-all, vet-all.

VI. in -samr; hóf-samr, tbrifty; skyn-samr, clever, all, ves-all.

Digitized by GOOGLE

intelligent; feng-samt, q.v.; lan-samt, lucky; sid-samt, upright, bonest;] frið-samr, peaceful; líkn-samr and miskun-samr, merciful; ró-samr, calm: grun-samr, suspicious: idiu-samr, busy: atorku-samr, starf-samr, bard-working; vorkun-samr, forbearing; rok-samr, officious; gamansamr, merry; ard-samr, profitable; and many others. -skr, Germ. -sch, Engl. -isb; bern-skr, childish; mæl-skr. eloquent: brjót-skr, stubborn; ní-skr, stingy; bei-skr, bitter; dæl-skr, easy; fift-skr, foolish: heim-skr. silly: brei-skr. brittle: va-skr. kar-skr. hor-skr. röskr. vigorous; fri-skr. fresb: esp. in names of nations, Dan-skr. Danish; Scen-skr, Swedish; En-skr, English; Ir-skr, Irish; Skot-skr, Scottish; Val-skr. Welsb: Gri-skr. Greek; Finn-skr, Finnisb; Ger-skr, Russian; Bret-skr, Britisb (i. e. Welsb); Gaut-skr, Gautisb: in -eyskr, Suorevskr, Orkn-evskr, Fær-evskr, from Sudor, the Orkneys, the Faroes; in -lend-skr, -lenzkr (-land), Is-lenzkr, Icelandic; Green-lenzkr, Greenlandish (but Gren-skr of the county in Norway): in -del-skr (dalr): in -ver-skr (-verjar). Vík-verskr. bjóð-verskr (German). Róm-verskr (Roman), formed from Vik-verjar, bjóð-verjar, Róm-verjar (Romans): in -neskr, Sax-neskr, Saxon; Got-neskr, Gotbic; Frakk-neskr, Frankish or French:—this n belongs to the noun, cp. Saxon, Gotnar, Lat. Gothones: hence the mod. names (formed by a false analogy, since the noun has no n), Rúss-neskr, Russian; Prúss-neskr, Prussian, etc.: in appellatives, him-neskr, beavenly (himinn); jard-neskr, eartbly VIII. in -cenn; cp. Goth, -cin; O. H. G. -in; A. S. (irreg.) -en; in five words, esp. denoting the quarters of heaven, austr-cenn, eastern: nor-cenn, northern, Norse: suor-cenn, southern, Scot, southron; vestr-cenn, western: also aldr-cenn, aged; -in all these words the r seems to belong to the root: út-rœnn, haf-rænn, blowing from the sea, are mod. words formed by analogy: ein-roenn, peculiar, odd, is qs. ein-rynn; but how can we explain fjall-roenn in Kristni S. ch. 6 in a verse of the year 908, unless this too is due to a false analogy? adjectives in -latr, -mannered; dramb-latr, stor-latr; mikil-latr, proud; litil-latr, bumble; vand-latr, zealous; rett-latr, righteous; or-latr, liberal; fá-latr, silent, cold; bakk-latr, thankful, etc.: in -leitr, -faced, looking, fol-leitr, pale; bykk-leitr, etc.: in -eygr, -eyed, fagrevgr, fair-eyed, etc.: in lyndr, -mooded, tempered, god-lyndr, gentle; ill-lyndr, pettisb; grá-lyndr, spiteful; fjöl-lyndr, fickle; fá-lyndr, melancholy; fljót-lyndr, bot-tempered; ör-lyndr, liberal, etc.: in -karr, varkarr, cautious; laun-karr, lurking: in -rædr, att-rædr, ni-rædr, tiræðr, tolf-ræðr (see p. xxi), prob. akin to Goth. ga-rahjan = numerare; cp. also rod, a row: - these with several others may be regarded VERBS .- The 1st and 4th weak conjugations, as also the strong, consist of primitive words; the 2nd and 3rd weak consist of derivatives from nouns, adjectives, and preterites of strong verbs (see the remarks on the umlaut); the exceptions are the verbs of the 1st with inflexive syllables. Inflexions: I. in -na, denoting to become, grow so and so; these words seem originally to be formed from strong participles or adjectives in -inn, whence the n in the inflexion; and so they may serve as guides in tracing lost strong verbal in-1. where a participle or adjective in -inn exists; rod-na, to blush (rodinn); vis-na, to wither (visinn); sof-na, to go to sleep (sofinn); dof-na, to get benumbed (dofinn); vak-na, to awake (vakinn); bog-na, to be bowed (boginn); klök-na, to be softened; drukk-na, to drown (drukkinn); prot-na, to come to an end (protinn); stork-na, to be curdled (storkinn); brot-na, to break (brotinn); rot-na, to rot (rotinn); sod-na, to be cooked (sod-inn); hlot-nast, to fall to one's lot (hlotinn); skrid-na, to slip (skridinn); svid-na, to be singed (sviðinn); blik-na, to turn pale (blikja); slit-na, to be torn (slitinn); rif-na, to be rent (rifinn); vik-na, to give way (vikinn); hnip-na, to quail (hnip-inn); fú-na, to rot (fúinn); brád-na, to melt (brádinn); togna, to become leady (toginn); bólg-na, to bulge, swell (bólginn); hnigna, to decay (hniginn); gis-na, to be 'geizened' (gisinn); las-na, to decay (lasinn); slok-na, to be quenched; hang-na, to become hanginn. where a lost participle can be suggested; pag-na, to become silent; glupna, q. v.; kvik-na, to be engendered; hit-na, to become bot; fit-na, to grow fat; dig-na, to get wet; glid-na, q.v.; dod-na, q.v.; los-na, to get loose; stik-na, to be roasted; por-na, to be dry (purr, porrinn); lif-na, to become alive; bid-na, hlá-na, and bá-na, to thaw; kaf-na, to be choked; 2. formed from plain adjectives, perhaps by way of analogy to the above; hard-na, to barden, grow bard (hardr); stirdna (stiror, stiff); bykk-na (bykkr, stout); sort-na, to become black (svartr); hljóð-na, to become silent (hljóðr); föl-na, to grow pale (fölr); gul-na, to grow yellow (gulr); ves-na, to grow worse (verri); bat-na, to grow better (bati); bla-na, to grow blue (blat); gra-na (grar, grey); dökk-na, to darken (dökkr, black); vök-na, to get wet (vökvi); súr-na, to get sour (súr); hvít-na, to whiten (hvítr); sár-na, to smart (sárt); volg-na (volgt, lukewarm); glad-na, to be gladdened (gladt); meyr-na (meyrt, Germ. murbe); hlý-na, to get warm (hlýt); tré-na, to dry (tré, a log); ré-na, to sink, dwindle; gild-na (gildr, stout). 3. the sense is different in such words as sam-na, to collect (saman); gam-na (gaman); fag-na, to rejoice (feg-inn); sak-na, to miss; gag-na, to gain; tig-na, to bomour (tiginn): as also Ktist-na, to Christianize (Kristinn); drótt-na, to rule (dróttinn); var-na, to shun; spyr-na, to spurn, etc.

in -ga, from adjectives in -igr; aud-ga, to enrich (audigr); hel-ga, to hallow (heilagr); rád-gast, to take counsel, see p. xxiv.

2. im -ka, formed from adjectives, to become (and to make) so and so; hæk-ka, to beighten; læk-ka, to lower; fæk-ka, to become few; dýp-ka, to deepen; min-ka, to lessen; smæk-ka, to become smaller; stok-ka, to become larger; breid-ka, to become broad; vid-ka, to widen; mjók-ka, to make narrow; sid-ka, to become 'sid;' sein-ka, to make slow, etc., see p. xxiv; some of these are also intrans., e. g. min-ka, to lessen and to become less.

III. in -sa and -ra, a kind of iterative verb mentioned in p. xxiv.

IV. in -la, id.

Final Remarks on the Formation of Words. From the roots fresh words branch out by means of prefixed or suffixed syllables: the ablaut is probably due to a prefix (reduplication), the umlaut to a lost inflexion; root vowels seem not to change of themselves, but from some outward cause. Ablaut, umlaut, and inflexions are the three chief agents in forming words. All three degrees of formation may be found in a single word; e. g. kann (knew) is a strong preterite, formed by way of ablaut; whence kenna, to teach, by umlaut; whence kenn-sla, teaching, by inflexion: or to take another example,-from heil-l. whole, comes heil-agr. holy, whence hel-ga, to sanctify, whence helgan (i. e. hel-g-a-n), where we have ablaut + threefold inflexion: so also from són atonement, sacrifice (in sónar-göltr, sónar-drevri, sacrificial blood, Germ, subne), is formed syn-0 (in old MSS, spelt syn-b), a sin, a thing to be atoned for, whence synd-ugr sinful, whence syndg-a to sin, whence syndga-n (syn-d-g-a-n) sinfulness. Yet beyond son with its long vowel, as well as heill with its diphthong, lie primitive words whence son and heill were formed by means of ablaut, and so in many other cases. The growth of words is slow, and between the first and last of these formations centuries elapsed: -- son is a heathen word, synd and derivatives are Christian; heill, heilagr, and helga are heathen, whereas helgan is Christian. Many of the inflexions are the latest, and from them were formed fresh words to express ideas unknown in heathen times: such especially are most of the feminines in -n and -ing (from verbs) of late growth, and but few of them perhaps known to the men of the 10th century (the Saga time); some of the new words displaced older, e.g. hugga-n, comfort; but likn is older: again, the umlaut belongs to the early, the ablaut to the earliest stage of the language, -domr (doom), doema (deem), dæming (deeming, damnation), represent the three steps. In some instances the succession is different, and an inflexion comes between ablaut and umlaut, thus purr dry, por-sti thirst, whence pyr-str thirsty; gróa to grow, gró-or growth, whence græða to beal, whence græð-sla bealing; and many others.

Pet Names.

These are diminutives, and in compound names are chiefly formed by a sort of contraction and by changing a strong declension into a weak (usually in the latter, but sometimes in the former part of the name), or by adding -si, -ka, or the like: I. girls; Sigga from Sig-rior; Gunna from Guo-run; Inga from Ing-unn, Ing-veldr; Imba from Ingi-björg; Gudda from Guð-riðr; Manga from Margrét; Valka from Val-gerðr; Ranka from Ragn-eiðr and Ragn-hildr; Júka from Jú-hanna; Tobba from Þor-björg; Sissa from Sig-þrúðr; Kata (Engl. Kate) from Katrin; Kitta from Kristin; Asta from As-trior; pura from pur-ior; Dora from Hall-dora, etc.; Disa from Val-dis, Vig-dis, Her-dis, etc.; Geira from Geir-laug; Frida from Hólm-fríðr, etc.; þrúða from Jar-þrúðr, Sig-þrúðr; Lauga from Guðlaug; Asa from As-laug. II. boys; Siggi from Sig-uror; Gvendr from Guð-mundr; Simbi from Sig-mundr; Brynki from Bryn-jólfr; Steinki from Stein-grimr; Mangi from Magnús; Rúnki from Rún-ólfr; Sveinki from Sveinn; Sebbi from Sig-björn, Svein-björn (rare); Erli from Erl-indr (Erlingr); Gutti from Guthormr, or rarely Guð-brandr, - nú skal hann Gutti (Guddi?) setja ofan, Safn ii. 128; Kobbi from Jakob; Valdi from bor-valdr; Mundi or Asi from As-mundr, etc.; Láki from borlákr; Leifi from þor-leifr; Láfi from Ólafr; Eyvi from Eyj-ólfr; Keli from bor-kell; Laugi from Gunn-laugr; Tumi (Engl. Tommy) from Thomas occurs in Icel, as an independent name about the middle of the 12th century (Sturl.), and was probably borrowed from the English; Fúsi from Vig-fús; Grímsi from Grímr; Jónsi from Jón (Engl. Johnny); Björsi from Björn; Bensi from Benedikt. These names, and others similar to them, are not of yesterday, but can be traced back even to the heathen time; many of the old names with weak declension in -i and -a were probably originally pet names, e. g. Bjarni from Björn; Arni (Arne) from Örn; Bersi from Björn; Karli (Engl. Charley) from Karl; Jóra from Jóreiðr; Ragna from compounds in Ragn-, Ragn-eiðr; Ingi and Inga from compounds in Ing-; Goddi (Laxd., cp. Germ. Götze) probably from compounds in God- (Gudmundr) as the present Gudda of girls; Boddi (a name of the 8th century) from those in Bod-

stetched

151

(A.S. Beadus); Daði (occurs in an Icel. colonist family from the British Isles in the 10th century) probably from Davíð (Davy); Sebbi and Ubbi occur on Swedish Runic stones; Helgi (old form Hülgi) from Hä-leygr, Nj. ch. 94. Only a few instances in the Sagas bear directly on this subject; one is the dream of earl Hakon (year 994) of his son Erling's death; 'nú er Ulli dauðr,' qs. Erli or Erlingr; cp. also the name of Snorri Goði from Snerrir, Eb. ch. 12. (12) of a similar kind are At-li, Goth. att-ila, Lat. paterculus; Gam-li.

Compound Words.

Of these the Dictionary gives the best account; when the former part is an uninflected root word a hyphen is usually printed between the component parts, with a few exceptions, such as words compounded with particles like afar-, all-, fjöl-, full-, gagn-, etc.; and some other words, as fé-, goð-, gull-, etc. Again, the Icel, has an almost unlimited stock of compound words formed by means of the genitive. Many of these are used both as compounds and as two separate words, and are therefore given under the head of the principal word, e. g. barn with barns- and barna-: in these cases it depends upon the genitive whether the alphabetical order is preserved or not; this is mostly the case in words like batr, bats-bord, but not so in bedr, gen. bedjar-; or in beini, beina-; baula, baulu-. As compounds are made from both gen. plur. and sing. they are sometimes double, e.g. under the head barn, both barns- and barna-. But chiefly are to be noticed words with the u- umlaut, because a is the first and ö the last letter in the alphabet; thus e.g. foour- is the compound form of fadir (father), and would if simple stand at the end of the letter, whereas now it stands near the beginning, s. v. fadir; as also bjarnar-under björn: bjarkar- under björk: still greater is the leap in compounds from words such as alda, a wave, gen. oldu- (p. 11); so also the compounds from öld (age), önd (soul), örk (arcb), örn (eagle), öxl (shoulder), which are aldar-, andar-, arkar-, amar-, axlar-; but these words are few. Icel. printing, in editions of Sagas as well as in modern books, has no fixed rule as to the spelling of such compound words, and often connects them in hundreds of cases where they are evidently separate; in old writers, e. g. in Mar. S., musterisfero, journey to the temple, 14; freistnistormr, storm of temptation, 433; uppstigningarstadr, place of ascension, 588; snubbanarordum, snubbing language, 567; uppsprettubrunnr, 27; stjörnubókarmenn, astronomers, 30; spektarbogn, silence of wisdom, id.; umskurdarskirn, baptism of circumcision, 35; Austrvegskonungar, the kings of the East, id.; vistarveizluna, giving shelter, Mork. 67, etc.; and in mod. writers, e.g. in the 4th hymn of the Passiu-Salmar, truarsjonin, the eye of faith; dreyralækir, brooks of blood; lausnargjald, 'lease-gild,' ransom; lifszbarnar, life veins; Arkargluggi, window of the Ark; hrygbarskuggi, the shadow of sorrow; solarbjarmi, the brightness of the sun; hrygoarmyrkr, the darkness of grief; svalavatn, the refreshing water; reidisproti, wrath's rod; svalalind, a refreshing well: hjartablod. beart's blood, all spelt as one word, even without a hyphen between them. Again, the old MSS separate too much, or rather keep no rule whatever. We have not thought of giving a full list of these and similar words, for this would be impossible. From such words asmaor, barn, fótr, hönd, etc. hundreds of similar compounds may easily be formed, most of which are in a grammatical sense rather sentences than single words; but many are given, especially from old writers. For a native these things are of little moment; but for the sake of lexicography a more distinct and regular spelling is much needed.

REMARKS ON THE SPELLING IN VELLUM MSS.

A regular spelling has been adopted in most editions during the last hundred years—before that time few editions had been issued: this spelling was fixed by Icel. scholars of that time, and was chiefly founded upon the average spelling in the vellums, partly upon a few noted MSS. (e.g. the Arna-Magn. 132 folio, and 66 folio), and with reference to the living Icel. language. But of late many of the oldest MSS, and fragments have been carefully and exactly printed. A few hints are therefore needed to guide the reader how in these cases to use the Dictionary, which in the main holds to the normal spelling. The spelling varies much, not only in MSS. of different times, but in the same MS.; very few of them follow any fixed plan, and the same word is differently spelt even in the same line; yet in many particular instances the spelling is instructive, and even more correct than the accepted orthography, and must not be left out of sight by those who study the growth and history of the language.

A. In inflexions:

I. vowels:—the MSS. use o and u as well as e and i indiscriminately in declensions of nouns and verbs, the oldest almost always o and e, as tungor, tongues; oldor, waves; timom, xmes; bododot, kollodom, gordosk, etc.: e, i, as time, a time; elle, age; fader, father; timenn, the time; bodader, fylger, etc.: most MSS. (the later) prefer u, and so it has come into the normal spelling; for the use of e, see introduction to that letter (signif. B), p. 114: in inflexions, -oll, -orr, -odr, -osta, -on, instead of -ull, -urr, -udr, -usta, -un (see pp. xxxii, xxxiii); as also in dat. pl. with the article, timonom, hondonom; the pret. tolod, dicta; kollod, vocata; kollodom, vocavimus: also-endi, -enn, -ell, instead of -indi, -inn, -ill.

II. consonants:—the reflex. is in very old MSS. spelt -sc (-zc or -sp), but in the usual way -z, -zt, -szt,

B. In root syllables: I. vowels: 1. long and short vowels are usually not distinguished, except in very few MSS., e. g. Ann. Reg., which MS. is of a like interest for Icel. in this respect, as the Ormulum for Early English. Later MSS, began to distinguish by doubling the long vowels, $aa = \acute{a}$, $ij = \acute{i}$, $oo = \acute{o}$, $w = \acute{u}$, but mostly without a fixed rule; this way of spelling has remained in English, e.g. Engl. foot = Icel. fot, blood = bloo. At last the marking the long vowels with an accent was resumed, as taught by Thorodd. special letters, a. the spelling of ö varies very much; the ancients had a double ö sound (ø and o), but both were soon confounded, and o was spelt indiscriminately in a sixfold or eightfold fashion, o, a, au, av, . 6 (born, barn, baurn, bavrn, born, born), and was thus confounded with several vowels, e. g. with the diphthong av, the o and δ , the α and a. e. g. rad may be = raud red or rod a row, log may be log a lowe or log laws, lavg may be laug a bath or log laws, holl may be hall a beel or holl a ball, etc.; in print \(\psi \) was used for about two hundred years, till at the beginning of this century it was replaced by the present ö, which was probably borrowed from the German. B. the e and æ were confounded, and in some few MSS, it is almost a rule, as the Mork., the Njála (Arna-Magn. 468), the Kb. of Sæm., and the fragment Arna-Magn. 748, cp. e. g. the print of Baldrs Draumar in Sæm. Edda by Möbius, pp. 255, 256; thus teki = tœki, seti = sæti, reður = rœður, beta = bœta, be = bœ (a bouse), sekia = sækja, fela = fæla, mela = mæla, and vice versa; e, a, instead of e, setti = setti, ælli = elli, see introduction to letter E, p. 113; $\alpha i = ei$ freq. In the east of Icel. the æ and æ were, up to the beginning of the 18th century, sounded not = Engl. long i as they are at present, but as Germ. ē or ä, Engl. ā, with a protracted sound: many puns referring to this provincialism are recorded by Jon Olafsson, e. g. the ditty, mer sú merin (= mærin) ljósa í minni er,—the pun is in merr=a mare and mær ≈ a maid being sounded alike; Hann Bersi minn í Bēl Hún er gengin á reður með honum, see Jon Olassson, Essay on Icel. Orthography of the year 1756 (in MS.) The poet Stefan Olafsson, a native of the east of Icel. (died 1688), still rhymes brekr (i. e. brækr) and lekr (= stillat). It is likely that the MSS, above named were written, if not composed, in the) east of Icel. In still earlier times this pronunciation was no doubt universal, but not so six or seven hundred years ago. Icel. (see p. xxix) confounded the two sounds $\alpha(e)$ and $\alpha(a)$; yet for a long time afterwards both characters g and o were still used, but upside down, without any regard to etymology, till at last the Roman & took the place in writing of both g and o. δ , the u and v were used. indiscriminately, e. g. tvngv = tungu, bvndv = bundu; and, on the other hand, ualld = valld, uera = vera, uit = vit, etc. €. the i served for i and j (ior $\delta = j\ddot{o}r\dot{\delta}$): ja is especially in very old MSS, often spelt ea, earn = jarn (cp. Thorodd in Skálda): in old poems the j always serves as a vowel in alliteration, which in mod. usage sounds harsh, though it may be used; but ia, io, etc. were, on the other hand, one syllable, and old grammarians speak of i as a 'changeling,' being sometimes a vowel and sometimes a consonant: it is likely that the pronunciation was similar to ea in Engl. tears, fear, whereas in mod. Icel. usage j before a vowel is sounded as Engl. y before a vowel. \(\zeta\). in Norse MSS. ey is usually spelt øy, høyra, øyra, = heyra, eyra, and is sounded thus in mod. Norse n. many old Icel. MSS, confound y and i in a few words and forms, especially in the prepositions firir, ifir, = fyrir, yfir; the verbs skildi, mindi (subj.), þikkir, = skyldi, myndi, þykkir; minni = mynni (ostium) and minnask = mynnask, 'to mouth,' to kiss; kirkja = kyrkja, cp. Scot. kirk; before ngv, as singva = syngja to sing, Ingvi = Yngvi, lingva = lyngva, etc.: mikill and mykill, mickle, much: the inflex. -indi and 0. the ey is used in some few MSS, instead of o in such words as seynir, seyni, = synir, syni; geyrva = $g\phi rva$. 6. the o instead of the later u in a few words, but only in very old MSS., as $go\delta = gu\delta$, goll = gull, fogl = fugl, oxi = uxi, mon (the verb) = mun, cp. Engl. God, gold, K. the s and æ are in very old MSS, spelt eo, e. g. keomr fowl. ox.

=kømr (i. e. kemr), feoða=fæða. II. consonants: 1. 2 | radical 1 is almost always doubled before the dentals d or t without regard to etymology; the MSS. thus spell holld flesh, molld mould, valld power, skalld poet, hallda to bold, hollt a bolt, kallt cold; but not so if the d is inflexive and soft, e.g. skyl-oi, pol-oi, val-oi, hul-oi, etc., from skulu, bola, velja, hylja; as also gal-or from gala, kul-oi from kul, skul-o from skulu a debt, etc. This was no doubt due to the I having in the former case been pronounced aspirate (as it still is), similar to Welsh II, the I in hollt being sounded exactly as bl at the beginning of syllables. β. the z instead of s was almost always used after the double consonants (with a dental sound), ll, nn, nd, ld, dd, tt, lt, nt, rô, and t, e.g. in the genitives gullz, munnz, sandz, valdz, oddz, hattz, holltz or hollz, fantz, garoz, knutz or knúz, as also in botz, vaz or vatz, from gull, munnr, ... knútr, botn, vatn; in the common spelling gulls, munns, etc.: again, guls from gulr, dals from dalr, etc. This is not a mere variation of spelling; the sibilant in the former cases was no doubt sounded as Engl. z, viz. with a lisping sound; the z sound is now lost in Icel., and s is spelt wherever it is etymologically required. γ , the \dot{p} instead of $\delta(t)$ was used throughout as final (inlaut, auslaut) in very old MSS., in later p and o indiscriminately, e. g. gub, orb, sech, dyph, = guo, oro, sekt, dypt (qs. seko, dypo); as also in inflexions, tocob, vitob, scolob, hafib, = tókut, vituo, skulut, hafit; in modern and better spelling tókuð, vituð, skuluð, hafið, etc., see introduction to letter D (signif. \ddot{B}), p. 93. 8. the qu = kv | many special usages see the introduction to each letter.

in imitating Latin MSS., e. g. quama, necquerr, quior, quiquan, quequa, = kváma, nekkverr, kvior, kvikvan, kveykja, (kv very seldom occurs in good old MSS.); perhaps the qu had a peculiar sound, like that of the English queen; in mod. Icel. pronunciation there is only a single k sound throughout: for the use of c, see Dictionary, p. 93. Norwegianisms, a. the spelling with v before u in verbal forms, as vultu, vurðu, vorðinn, from velta, verða, = ultu, urðu, orðinn; these neither occur in very old MSS, nor in alliteration in old poets nor in β . the dropping of b before the liquids l, n, r, mod. pronunciation. and writing lutr, not, ringr, instead of hlutr a lot, hnot a nut, hringr a ring; this dropping of the b seems to have come into fashion with Icel. writers and transcribers after the union with Norway; but as early as the 15th century MSS. had resumed the old correct form, which had never been lost, and which has been preserved in speech as well as writing up to the present day, Icelanders being now the only people of all the Teutonic races who have preserved this sound; but it is curious that the Icel. transcribers, having the b sound in their ears, frequently blundered, and br, bn occur now and then, which never happens with Norse transcribers; there is, for example, no need of any stronger evidence that Hauk Erlendsson (the writer of the vellum Hauks-bók) was a native Icelander, than that, although he tries to spell in the Norse way, the b creeps in, see, for instance, facsimile I in Landn. (Isl. i, Ed. 1843), where l. 11 hrafnkels, but l. 12 rafnkels.

ICELANDIC GRAMMARS.

- Runolfr Jónsson (died 1654); he wrote in Latin the first Icelandic Grammar, Grammaticae Islandicae Rudimenta, Copenhagen 1651: it was republished by Hickes at Oxford in 1688, but with many misprints, and in his Thesaurus in 1703: Hickes also made the index of the words occurring in the book. This Grammar is formed upon the Latin principle, and is a useful book; the author was an Icelandic schoolman, rector of the College at Holar in Iceland, and a learned man.
- Jón Magnússon (born 1664, died 1739, a brother to Arni Magnússon); his Grammatica Islandica (also in Latin) was never published, but exists at Copenhagen in the author's autograph; it is less interesting than the above.
- Rask (Rasmus Kristian), the famous Danish linguist (born 1787, died 1832), wrote three Icelandic Grammars:
 - a. Veiledning til det Islandske Sprog, Copenhagen 1811 (in Danish).
 - B. Anvisning til Isländskan, written in Swedish and published at Stockholm in 1818; this is the best of the three which Rask wrote, and it was rendered into English by Mr. Dasent in 1843.
 - y. Kortfattet Veiledning til det Old-nordiske eller Gamle Islandske Sprog, Copenhagen 1832 (in Danish), rendered into English by B. Thorpe.
- Grimm, Jacob (born 1785, died 1863), in his Deutsche Grammatik, first in 1819 in one volume, but recast in the great Teutonic Grammar of 1822 sqq.; the Icelandic paradigms are contained in vol. i,—the nouns, pp. 650-665; the adjectives, pp. 736-743; the verbs, pp. 911-928; the formation of words etc. in the following volumes (ii-iv). The work of Grimm is rightly regarded as the key-stone for the knowledge of Teutonic languages.
- Unger, C. B. (and P. A. Munch), Det Norske Sprogs Grammatik, Christiania 1847, chiefly founded on Grimm's work.
- Halldór Friðriksson, Íslenzk Múlmynda-lýsing, Reykjavík 1861; a small book, but curious as being the only Icelandic Grammar written in Icelandic.
- GRAMMATICAL ESSATS ON THE SPELLING OF MSS. 1 a. Frumpartar Islenzkrar Tungu by Konrad Gislason, Copenhagen 1846. B. The Prefaces to the various Editions, especially in those edited within the last twenty years.

AN ALPHABETICAL LIST OF VERBS,

Including the Strong Verbs, the Irregular Verbs, and the Verbs of the 3rd and 4th Conjugation, cp. the Paradigms, Gramm. pp. xxii-xxv. They contain almost all the chief Verbs in the language, as well as all the Defective and Obsolete Verbs. The vowel changes (ablaut) in the Preterite and Participle forms are the most important to bear in mind; those of the Present and Subjunctive (umlaut) are secondary. The chief Verbs are here marked with capitals or thick type.

	Infin.	Pres.	Plur.	Pret.	and Pers.	Plur.	Subj. Pret.	Part.
	aka (to drive)	ek	ökum	ók		óku	œki	ekinn ala (to feed, beget)	el	ölum	ól		ólu	œli	alinn auka (to eke, augment)	eyk	aukum	jók		jóku	jyki	aukinn ausa (to sprinkle)	eys	ausum	jós		jósu .	eysi, jysi	ausinn
٠	(bauta, to beat) defect.	•	bautu	•		,	•	bautinn
_	belgja (to swell) defect.							bolginn bella (to bit) defect.	bellr		ball				-
	BERA (to bear)	berr		bar	bart	báru & b₀ćru	bæri	borinn berja (to beat)	berr	berjum	barði		börðu	berði	barðr, bart bioja (to beg)	bi ð	biðjum	bað	batt	báðu	bæði	beðinn binda (to bind)	bind		batt	batzt	bundu	byndi	bundinn bíða (to bide, wait)	bíð		bei ð	beitt	biou	biði	beðið bita (to bite)	bít	1	beit	beizt	bitu	biti	bitinn bjarga (to save)	bergr	björgum	barg	bargt	burgu	byrgi	borginn bjóða (to bid)	bý ð	bjóðum	bauð	bautt	buðu bugurla	byði	boðinn (bjúga, to bend) defect.	blend	hitto Jum	blétt	blézt	bugusk blendu		boginn blandinn blanda (to blend) blasa (to blow)	blæs	blöndum blásum	blés	blést	blésu	blési	blásinn bleðja (to lop) defect.	bleðr	Diasuiti	(bladdi)		Diesu	Diesi	Oldsilli blíkja (to blink) defect.	blíkir		(Diaddi)		bliku blóta (to worship, sacrifice)	blœt		blét	blézt	blétu	bléti	blótinn
	BREGDA (to move, draw)	bregð		brá	brátt	brugðu	brygði	brugðinn brenna (to burn)	brenn		brann	brannt	brunnu	brynni	brunninn bresta (to break)	brest		brast		brustu	brysti	brostinn • brjóta (to break)	brýt	brjótum	braut	brautt	brutu	bryti	brotinn /	brosa (to smile)	brosi	•	brosti		•	brosi	brosat brugga (to brew) defect.							brugginn
	BUA (to abide, make ready)	bý	búum .	, bjó	bjótt	bjoggu	bjoggi	búinn, búit, búð bylja (to resound) defect.	byll		bulði
,	bysja (to gusb) defect.	byss		busti	_			• detta (to drop)	dett		datt	datzt	duttu	dytti	dottinn deyja (to die)	dey	1	dó	dótt	dó	dœi	dáinn
	DRAGA (to draw)	dreg	drögum	dró	drótt	drógu	drægi	dreginn deutsteinn drekka (to drink)	drek k		drak k	drakkt	drukku drúmu	drykki demoi	drukkinn drepinn drepa (to smite, kill) drifa (to drive like spray)	drep dríf		drap dreif	drapt dreift	drápu drifu	dræpi drifi	drifinn drita (cacare)	drítr		dreit	dreizt	dritu	Giii	dritinn .
-	drjúpa (to drip)	drýp	drjúpum	draup	draupt	drupú	drypi	dropið drúpa (to droop)	drúpi		drúpði	u.u.p.		(drýpði)	1 drynja (to roar)	drynr		drunði			()1 -) duga (to belp)	dugi		dugði			dygði	dugat dvelja (to dwell, delay)	dvel	dveljum	dvalði		dvölðu	dvelði	dvalðr, dvölð, dvalt dvija (to conceal)	dyl	dyljum	dulði			dylði	dulðr, dult dynja (to pair)	dynr		dun ð i				dunið dýja (to sbake)	dýr	(dúum)	dúði			(dýði)
	EIGA (to own)	á, átt	eigum	átti		áttu & óttu	ætti	áttr, átt, átzk
_	erja (to ear, plougb)	er	erjuni	агði		örðu	erði	arðr eta (to eat)	et	etum	át	ázt	átu & otu	æti	etinn
1	etja (to goad) falda (to fold, bood)	et	etjum	atti		öttu CUA	etti féldi	att falding
/	FALLA (to fall)	feld fell	földum föllum	félt féll	féllt	féldu féllu	félli	faldinn fallinn
	FARA (to fare, go)	ferr	förum	fór	fórt	fóru	fœri	farinn
	PA (to fetcb)	fæ	fám & f.óm	fékk	fékkt	fengu	fengi	fenginn fá (to polisb)	fái	rain oc ramii	fáði	ICARL	renga	.cg.	fánn fela (to bide)	fel		fal	falt	fálu & folu	fæli	folginn /	ferja (to ferry)	ferr		farði		(förðu)		farðr feta (to step) defect.			fat		fátu
_	FINNA (to find)	finn		fann	fannt	fundu	f y ndi	fundinn _	fisa (pedere) defect.			feis			•
1	Juka (to be driven by the wind)	fýk	fjúkum	fauk	faukt	fuku	fyki	fokinn flaka (to gape)	flaki		flakði				flakað fix (to flay)	flæ	flám	fló		flógu	flœgi	fleginn fletja (to slit)	flet	0:/-	flatti		flöttu	fletti	flattr, flött, flatt fljóta (to float)	flýt	fljótum	flaut	flauzt	flutu	flyti	flotinn

OUTLINES OF GRAMMAR.

			OCILII		0 2022112
	Infin.	Pres.	Plur.	Pret.	2nd Pers.	Plur.	Subj. Pret.	Part.
	fljúga (to fly)	flyg	fljúgum	flaug &		flugu	flygi	floginn flytja (to flit)	flyt	flytjum	flutti		gu	flytti	fluttr, flutzk flýja (to flee)	flv	flýjum	fló & fly	έði	fló	flýði	flýiðr, flúinn fregna (to ask, bear)	fregn	- 55	frá	frátt	frágu & frágu	frægi	freginn fremja (to furtber)	frem	fremjum	framði		fröm ðu	fremði	framðr, frömð freta (pedere) defect.		•	frat				·
′.	frjá (to love) defect.							frjándi frjósa (to freeze)	frýs	frjósum	fraus		frusu	frysi & freri	frosinn & frörinn trýja (to challenge)	frý		frýði				frýð
•	tyrva (to ebb) defect.	_		furði (G	irág. ii. 187)
,	gala (to crow)	gel .	gölum	gól		gólu	gœli	g2li ð
	gana (to rusb)	gani		g a n ð i				ganat GANGA (to go)	geng	göngum	gékk	gékkt	géngu	gengi	gengit gapa (to gape)	gapı		gapði gá (to beed, mark)	gái		gáði	6	. 16.	gæði	gá ð
	GEFA (to give)	gef		gaf	gaft	gáfu	gæfi	gefinn geta (to get, guess)	get		gat	gazt	gátu & gaótu	gæti	getið & getað
,	geyja (to bark)	geyr		gύ		gó	gœi gina (to gape)	gin	mi Sldum	gein	1-4	ginu	gini	gini ð gjalda (to pay)	geld	gjöldum.	galt	galzt	guldu	gyldi	goldinn gjalla (to yell)	gell	gjöllum	gall		gullu	gylli	gollið gjósa (to gusb)	gýs	gjósum	gaus		gusu	gysi	gosinn
-	gjóta (to cast young) gleðja (to gladden)	gýt glað	gleðjum	gaut		gutu glöddu	gyti gladdi	gotinn glepja (to confound)	gleð glep	glepjum	gladdi glandi		glöpðu	gleddi glendi	gladdr, glödd, glatt glotta (to grin)	glotti	gicpjuiii	glapði glotti		Riobon	glepði	glapðr glymja (to clasb)	glymr		glumði			glymði	glott gnaga (to gnaw) defect.			(gnóg)			grynnor gnapa (to jut out)	gnegr gnapi		gnapði		gnöp ð u gnella (to yell) defect.	P		gnall		gnullu gnesta (to crack)	gnestr		gnast		gnustu gnúa (to rub)	guý	gnúum	gnöri &	gneri	Silustu	gnöri	gnúinn gnyðja (to murmur) defect.	67	8	gnuddi	P		6	6
	gnýa (to sound) defect.	gnýr		gnúði grafa (to grave, dig)	gref	gröfum	gróf	gróft	grófu	grœfi	grafinn gráta (to greet, weep)	græt	grátum	grét	grézt	grétu	gréti	grátinn gremja (to anger, provoke)	gremr	8	gramði	8.0-0	grömðu	gremði	B gripa (to grasp)	gríp		greip	greipt	gripu	gripi	gripinn gróa (to grow)	grœ	gróm	gröri &		0-4-	gröri	gróinn grúfa (to grovel)	grúfi	8	grúfði	0		(grýfði)	0
-	gyggva (to quail) defect.	gyggvi	r	Ŭ			(0)	gugginn
	GÖRA, gjöra, gera (to do) .	görr &		görði, gi	örði,& gerði		gör ði	görr, gört, görzk
	HAFA (to bave)	hefi	höfum	hafði	. 0	höfðu	hefði	hafðr, höfð, haft
	HALDA (to bold)	held	höldum	hélt	hélzt	લું héldu	héldi	haldinn hanga (to bang)	hangi	höngum	hékk	hékkt	h éngu	héngi	hanginn há (to vex)	hái	· ·	háði		•	(hæði)	háið
	HEFJA (to lift, beave, begin)	hef	hefjum	hóf	hóft	hófu	hœfi	hafinn
	HEITA (to be called, promise)	heit &	heiti	hét	hézt	hétu	héti	heitinn hemja (to bem, restrain)	hem		hamði				hami ð heyja (to perform)	hey		háði			(hæði)	háinn hjálpa (to belp)	helpr	hjálpum	halp	• • •	hulp u	hylpi	holpinn hlada (to build up)	hleð	hlöðum	hlóð	hlótt	hlóðu	hlæði	hlaðinn hlaupa (to leap)	hleyp	hlaupum	hljóp	hljópt	hljópu	hlypi, hlœpi	hlaupinu hljóta (to get allotted, must)	hlyt	hljótuni	hlaut	hlauzt	hlutu	hlyti	hlotinn
	- hlymja (to dasb)	hlymr		hlumði	$1.7 $?
-	hlýja (to sbelter)	hlýr	Marine.	hlýði	hlúði	h17	L1	k1*$
	hlæja (to laugb)	hlæ hvia	hlæjum	hló hneig	hlótt hneigt	hlógu hnigu	hlœgi huigi	hlegið hviginn hniga (to sink)	hnig		hneig	hneigt	hnigu	hnigi	hniginn hnipa (to droop, crouch) defect. hnita (to strike against) defect.			hneit		hnitu	hniti	hnipinn hnýð		hnau ð	hnautt	hnuðu	mitti	hnoðinn hnjóða (to rivet)	hnýss		hnauss	mautt	midod		mioonni hnjósa (to sneeze) hnúfa (to cbop) defect.	1111 y 33		hnauf hnöggva (to bumble)	hnyggr		hnögg				hnuggin n
•	horfa (to look)	horfi		horfði			hyrfði	horft hrekja (to toss)	hrek	•	hrakði		hrökðu	hrekði	hrakðr hrinda (to pusb)	hrind	•	hratt	hratzt	hrundu	hryndi	hrundinn hrifa (to grapple)	hríf		hreif	hreift	hrifu	hrifi	hrifinn hrina (to squeal)	hrín		hrein	-	hrinu	hrini	hrinið hrjóða (to rid, clear)	hrýð	hrjóðum	hrauð	hrautt	hruðu	hryði	hroðina hrjósa (to sbudder)	hryss	.,	hraus		_	hrysi	- hrjóta (to rebound)	hrýt	hrjótum	hraut	hrauzt	hrutu	hryti	hroti ð hrymja (to weaken)	J -	3	hrumði			• hrynja (to fall into ruin)	hryn		hrunði			hrynði	hrunið hrökkva (to recoil)	hrökk		hrök k	hrökkt	hrukku	hrykki	hrokkinn, hverfa (to rotate)	hverf		hvarf	hvarft	hurf u	hyrfi	horfinn
•	hvetja (to whet)	hvet	hvetjum	hvatti		hvöttu	hvetti	hvattr, hvött, hvatt hvína (to wbistle)	hvín	•	hvein		hvinu		(hvinið) hyggja (to tbink)	hygg	hyggjum	hugði			hygði	hugt, hugzt hylja (to bide)	hyl	hyljum	hulði			hylði	hulðr, hult

	Infin.	Pres.	Plur.	Pret.	and Pers.	Plur.	Subj. Pret.	Part.
	höggva (to bew)	högg	höggum	hjó	hjótt	hjoggu	hjoggi	höggvinn kala (to cool, freeze)	kell	nog5um	kól	injute	kólu	kœli	kalinn
•	kaupa (to chaffer, buy)	kaupi		keypti			keypti	keyptr, keypzk kelja (to submerge)	kef '		kafði		köfðu	• •	kafðr kjósa (to choose)	kýss	k jósum	kjöri &		kuru & kusu	k jöri	kjörinn & kosinn klá (to claw, scratch)	klæ		kló	klótt	1 5	1111	kleginn
•	klekja (to batch)	klekr		klakði Islaif		klökðu klifu	klekði klifi	klakðr
-	klifa (to climb) kljúfa (to cleave)	klíf klýf	kljúfum	kleif klauf		klufu	klyfi	klofinn klyfja (to split)	Ely i	Kijaiaii	klufði		· ·	Kiyii	klufðr klökkva (to sob) defect.			klökk		klukku (knega, to be able) defect.	kná, knátt	knegum	knátti		knáttu&knáttu	knætti knyja (to knock)	kný	knýjum	knúði			knýði	knúinn
	KOMA (to come)	kømr&kemr		kom, ko	mt	kómu, kvámu	kœmi, kvæmi	kominn
,	krefiz (to crave)	kref	krefjum	krafði		kröfðu	krefði	krafðr, kröfð
	Accompa (10 by access)	krem	kremjum	kramði		krömðu	kremði	kramðr, krömð
-	kreppa (to clench) defect. krjúpa (to creep)	krýp	krjúpum	kraup, k	raunt	krupu	krypi	kroppinn kropinn kryfja (to embowel)	kryf	kryfjum	krufði	. Laupt	K. upu	kryfði	krufðr . '	krysja (to croueb)	K.y.	2 1.y1.)u	krusti		•	A. , krytja (to murmur)			krutti
	krýja (to swarm)			krúði			(krýði)	(krúð)
	KUNNA (to know, be able)	kann, kannt	kuunu	kunni	_		kynni	kunnað
	KVEĐA (to say)	kveð		kvað	kvatt	kváðu & kóðu	kvæði	kveðinn kvedja (to call on, request)	kveð	kveðjum	kvaddi		kvöddu	kveddi	kvaddr, kvödd kvelja (to torment)	kvel lafi	kveljum löfum	kvalði lafði		kvölðu löfðu	kvelði (lefði)	kvalðr, kvöld lafat
, '	lafa (to dangle) LATA (to let)	læt	látum & látum	lét	lézt	létu	léti	látinn
	LEGGJA (to lay)	legg	leggjum	lagði	icac	lögðu	legði	lagðr, lögð, lagt leika (to play)	leik	2000/200	lék	lékt	léku	léki	leikinn leks (to leak)	lek		lak	lakt	láku	læki	lekit lemja (to tbrasb)	lem	lemjum	lamði		lömðu	lemði	lamðr, lömð lepja (to lap)	lep		lapði		löpðu	lepði	lapit less (to gather, to read)	les	1.2	las	last	lásu	læsi	lesinn letja (to bold back)	let lifi	letjum	latti lifði		löttu lifðu	letti lifði	lattr, lött lifað
	LIFA (to live) LIGGJA (to lie)	ligg	liggjum	lá.	látt	lágu & Lógu	lægi	legið LÍĐA (to glide)	líð	65)	leið	leitt	liðu	liði	liðinn lita (to look)	lít		leit	leizt	litu	liti	litinn ljá (to lend)	lé	ljám	· léði			léði	léðr ljósta (to strike)	lyst	ljóstum	laust		lustu	lysti	lostinn ljúga (to lie)	lýg	ljúgum.	laug&lú	lótt .	lugu	lygi	loginn loða (to stick to)	loði		loddi				loðat
• •	luma (to keep) lúka (to sbut, end)	lumi lýk	inkum.	(lumði) lauk	laukt	luku	lyki	lumat lokinn lúta (to lout, stoop)	lýt	lútum	laut	lauzt	lutu	lyti	lotinn lykja (to lock)	lyk	lykjum	lukði		1414	lykði	lukðr, lukt, lukzk
,	lýja (to beat soft)	lý	lýjum	lúði .			(lýði)	lúinn
•	mala (to grind)	(mel)	mölum	mól		mólu	nıœli	malinn mara (to be water-logged)	mari	mörum	marði		mörðu		marad
,	má (to blot)	mái		máði			•	máðr, mázt
	MEGA (may, to bave might) merja (to crush)	má, mátt merr	meguni	mátti marði		máttu& m∡óttu mörðu	mætti merði	mátt mariðr, marinn meta (to tax)	met		mat	mazt	mátu & mátu	mæti	mation metja (to eat, consume) defect.	met		matti		mata & mata miga (mingere)	míg		meig	meigt	migu	migi	migi ð muna (to remember)	man, mant	munum	munði	_	Ü	mynði	munað
	MUNU and monu (will, sball)	man, mant	munu, monu	mundi &	z möndi		möndi & myndi mylja (to crusb)	myl		mulði			mölði, mylði	mulðr, mulinn mýgja (to destroy) defect.	mái		mugði		mögðu		náð, názk na (to reach) NEMA (to take, learn)	nái nem		náði nam	namt	námu	næði næmi	numinn njóta (to enjoy)	nýt	njótum	naut	nauzt	nutum	nyti	notinn
	RADA (to advise, rule)	ræð	ráðum	réð	rétt	réðu	réði	ráðinn reka (to drive)	rek	rekum	rak	rakt	ráku & r o iku	ræki	rekinn tekja (to unfold)	rek	rekjum	rakði		rökðu	rekði	rakðr, rökt, rakzt renna (to run, flow)	renn		rann		runnu	rynni	runninn ride (to ride, swing)	ríð -/X		reið	reitt	riðu -:3	riði -:%:	riðinn -iðinn rida (to writhe, knit) rifa (to rive, tear)	ríð ríf		reið reif	reitt reift	riðu rifu	riði rifi	riðinn rifinn riss (to rise)	τίs		reis	reist	risu	risi	risinn rista (to slasb)	ríst		reist	reist	ristu	risti	ristinn rita (to trench, to write)	rít		reit	reizt	ritu	riti	rition rjóða (to redden)	rýð	rjóðum	rauð	rautt	ruðu	ryði	roðinn
_	rjota (to roar, snore) * Eout	rýt	rjótum	raut	_	rutu	ryti	rotið
-	rjúfa (to dissolve)	rýf	rjúfum	rauf	rauft	rufu	ryfi	rofinn rjúka (to reek, steam)	rýk	rjúkum	rauk		ruku	ryki	rokina roa (to row) Tydja (to rid, clear away)	rœ ryð	róm & róum ryðjum	röri & ret ruddi	•		röri & reri ryddi	róinn ruddr, rutt, ruzt Tymja (to rown)	rymr	- y O) u	rumði			-,	,,
-		•				d a		م م ح آ م

OUTLINES OF GRAMMAR.

	Infin.	Pres.	Plur.	Pret. 2	nd Pers.	Plur.	Subj. Pret.	Part.
	rýja (to pluck)	rýr	2 747 .	rúði	1 67 6.	1	(rýði)	rúin n
-	sama (to beseem)	samir		samði		sömðu	semði	samat sá (to sow)	sær & sáir		söri & ser	ri	söru	söri	sáinn sedja (to satille)	seð	seðjum	saddi		söddu	seddi	saddr, södd, satt
	SEGJA (to say)	segi	segjum	sagði		sügðu	segð	sagðr, sögð, sagt selja (to sell)	sel	seljum	seldi			seldi .	seldr, selt semja (to compose)	sem	semju m	samði		sömðu	semði	samðr, sömð serða (stuprare) defect. SETJA (to set)	set	setjum	sarð setti			setti	sorðinn
	SITJA (to sit)	sit	sitjum	sat	satzt*	sátu & sátu	sæti	settr, sezk setinn
	-síða (to work a charm)	síð	,	seið		siðu		siðit
-	siga (to sink)	síg		seig & ség	3	sigu	sigi	siginn
	SJA (to see)	sé	sjám & sj.óm	sá	sátt	sú & s.o	sæi	sénn (séðr), sésk sjóða (to cook)	sýð	sjó ðum	sauð	sautt	ទប ្សភា	syði	soðinn sjúga & súga (to suck)	sýg	sjúgum	saug & só		sugu	sygi	soginn skafa (to scrape) -skaga (to jut out)	skef skagi	sköfum skögum	skóf skagði	skóft	skófu skögðu	skœfi	skafinn skagat
•	skaka (to sbake)	skek	skökum	skágoi skók	skókt	skóku	skœki	skagat skekinn skapa (to sbape, make)	(skep)	sköpum	skóp	J. Collins	skópu		JRCK!!!!
	skedja (to burt)	skeðr	•	skaddi		•		skaddr, sködd, skatt
•	skepja (to sbape)			skapði				skapðr skera (to cut)	skerr		skar	skart	skáru & sk₃óru		skorinn SKILJA (to separate, understand)	skil	skiljum	skilði	ale alua	eleion.	skilði eleini	skilör, skilt, skilzk skina (to sbine)	skinn skit		skein skeit	skeint	skinu skitu	skini	skininn skitinn skita (cacare) skjalla (to clasb)	skellr		skall	skallt	skullu	skylli	skollinn skjálfa (to sbiver)	skélf	skjálfum	skalf	skalft	skulfu	skylfi	skolfit skjóta (to sboot)	skýt	skjótum	skaut	skauzt	skutu	skyti	skotinn skolla (to dangle)	skolli	•	skolldi				skollat skorta (to lack)	skorti		skorti		•	skyrti	skort
-	skreppa (to slip)	skrepp		skrapp	skrappt	skruppu	skryppi	skroppinn skriða (to creep)	skrið	aleulu.	skreið	skreitt	skriðu	skriði	skriðinn
	SKULU (sball) sl6 (to smite)	skal, skalt slæ	slám & slám	skyldi sló	slótt	slógu	skyldi slægi	sleginn sleppa (to slip)	slepp	siam & siam	slapp	slappt	sluppu	slyppi	sloppinn slita (to slit)	slít		sleit	sleizt	slitu	sliti	slitinn slyngva and slöngva (to sling)	slyng		slaung		slungu	slyngvi	slunginn slokkva (to extinguish) defect.	slökk						slokinn smella (to smack) defect.	smell	. ,	small	,			• smjúga (to creep through)	smýg	smjúgum	smaug &	smo	smug u	smygi	smoginn smyrja (to anoint) snerta (to touch)	smyr snertr	smyrjum	smurði snart	snarzt	snurtu	smyrði snyrti	smurðr snortinn
•	sníða (to slice)	snið		sneið	sneitt	sniðu	sniði	sniðinn snjóa (to snow) defect.	snýr ·						suifinn snúa (to turn)	sný	snúm	snöri & sı	еті	snöru	snöri	snúinn snyoja (to snuff) defect.		_	snuddi			_	_ sofa (to sleep)	söfr & sefr	sofum	svaf	svaft	sváfu & sófu	svæfi	sofinn sóa (to sacrifice) defect.	eno ri	coëmo	enar h i		enőr á u	cnerăi	sóit spata (to spare) spá (to spae, prophesy)	spari spái	spörum	sparði spáði		spörðu -	sperði	sparat spáð spenja (to decoy)	spenr	spenjum	spanði		spönðu	spenði	spanið, spönð
Ţ.	sperna (to spurn) defect.			sparn			• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •	-1 spinna (to spin)	spinn		spann	spannt	spunnu	spynni	spunninn spretta (to spirt, spring)	sprettr		spratt	sprazt	s pruttu	sprytti	sprottinn springs (to spring, crack)	spring	•	sprakk	sprakkt	sprungu	spryngi	sprunginn spyrja (to speer, ask)	spyr	spyrjum	spurði	anidea	enić	spyrði	spurðr, spurt, spurzt spýja (to spew) STANDA (to stand)	spý stend	spúm stondum	spjó stóð	spjótt stótt	spjó stóðu	spýi stæði	spúð staðit stara (to stare)	stari	störum	starði	31011	störðu	sterði	starat stedja (to steady, stop) defect.	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •		staddi		stöddu		staddr, stödd, statt stela (to steal)	stel		stal	stalt	stálu & st ó lu	stæli	stolinn stinga (to stick)	sting		stakk	stakkt	stungu	styngi	stunginn stiga (to step)	stig		steig & sté	stétt	stigu	stigi	stiginn strá (to strew)	strái	4-1-11	stráði	1	-41		stráð strjúka (to strike) stúpa (to stoop) defect.	strýk	strjúkum	strauk	straukt	struku	stryki	strokinn stopðir (?)
- 1	stúra (to mope) defect.	stúri		stúrði				stopon (1) stydja (to prop)	styð	styðjum	studdi			styddi	studdr, stutt, stuzt stynja (to groan)	styn	stynjum	stunði			stynði	stunið stokkva (to leap)	stökk		stökk	stökkt	stukku	stykki	stokkinn súpa (to sip)	sýp .	súpum	saup	saupt	supu	sypi	sopinn svedja (to glance off)	sveðr		svaddi		svöddu svelja (to sootbe) svelgja (to swallow)	svefr svelgr	svelgjum	svafði svalg	sval at	svöfðu sulgu	sylgi	solginn svelja (to swell)	sveigi	ar ergjuin	svalg svalði	svalgt	suigu svölðu	~J '6'	2015 IIII
		svellr		svali	svallt.	sullu	sylli	sollinn SVOIIS (10 SWELL)
	svella (to swell) svelta (to starve, die)	sveltr		svalt	svalzt	sultu	sylti	soltin n svelta (to starve, die) sverfa (to file)	sveltr sverf		svarf	svarft	surfu	(syrfi)	sorfinn svelta (to starve, die)	sveltr	sverjuni

Infin.	Pres.	Plur.	Pret. 2	nd Pers.	Plur.	Subj. Pret.	Part.
avíða (to singe)	svíð		sveið	sveitt	sviðu	sviði	sviðin n svifa (to rove, drift)	svíf		sveif		svifu	svifi	svifit svikja (to betray)	svík	svíkjum	sveik	sveikt	sviku	sviki	svikinn svípa (to swoop) defect.	svípr	•	sveip				svipinn (?)
syngja (to sing)	syng	syngjum	saung	saungt	sungu	syngi	sunginn sýja (to sew) defect.	, ,	-7 60	séði or sö			7 6	söðr
SCEKJA (to seek)	sœki	sœkjum	sótti			sœtti	sóttr, sótzk sökkva (to sink)	sökk	,	sökk	sökkt	sukku	sykki	sokkinn
TAKA (to take)	tek	tökum	tók	tókt	tóku	tœki	tekinn tedja (to dung)	teð		taddi		töddu		taddr, tödd, tatt tefja (to delay)	tef	tefjum	tafði		töfðu	tefði	tafðr, töfð telja (to tell, count)	tel	teljum	talði		tölðu	telði	taldr, tölð, talt temja (to tame)	tem	temjum	tamði		tömðu	temði	tamðr, tömð tjá (to sbew)	té	tempum	tjáði		tomou	temot	téðr (tjúga, to draw) defect. Fug			ijaoi				toginn tolla (to bang fast)	tolli		tolldi				toliað tredja (to tread)	treð & tre	.X.	traddi		tröddu		traddr, trödd
		JO1			troduu		trafiðr
/ trefja (to tear)	(trefr)		(tratði)				_ trega (to grieve)	tregr	-1-	tregði		tráðu & tráðu	træði	tregað troos (to tread)	tröðr & tr	eor	trað		traou oc traoou		troðinn trúa A trus (to trow)	trúi		trúði	~~* *·· ~ *:	A	trýði	trúað tyggja (to chew)	tygg	tyggjum		ggt tugði	tuggu	tyggı	tugginn týja, tœja, tjá (to avail, grant)	týr.		týði & to	eoi ugga (to fear)	uggi		uggði			yggði	uggat una (to rest)	uni		undi			ynði	unað unna (to grant, love)	ann, annt		unni .			ynni	unnat, unnt vada (to wade)	veð	vöðum	ό δ	(ótt)	óðu	œdi 🗸 📆	vaðið vaka (to wake, be awake)	vaki	vökum	vakði		vökðu	vekði	vakað valda (to wield, rule)	veld	völdum	voldi & o	lli		ylli & voldi	valdit vara (to be aware of)	vari		varði	_			varat vaxa (to wax)	vex	vöxum	óχ	óxt	óxu	yxi	vaxinn vefa (to weave)	vef		vaf & óf	óft	ófu	væfi,œfi	ofinn
, vefja (to wrap)	vef	vefjum	vafði		vöfðu	vefði	vafðr, vöfð vega (to weigh, fight)	veg		vá.	vátt	vágu & vágu	vægi	veginn vekja (to wake, rouse from sleep)	vek	vekjum	vakði		vökðu	vekði	vakðr, vökt velja (to cboose)	vel	veljum	valði		völðu	velði	valðr, völð vella (to boil)	vell		vall		uliu	ylli	ollinn velta (to roll)	velt		valt	valtzt	ultu	ylti	oltinn venja (to accustom to)	ven ·		vanði		vön ð u	ven ð i	vanðr, vönð em & ert	erum	var &	vart &	váru & váru	væri	verit , VERA & vesa (to be)	es, er		vas	vast		(pres. subj. sé,
VERDA (to become)	verð		varð	vart	urðu	vrði	orðinn verja (to defend, clothe)	ver		varði		vörðu	verði	varðr
						_
	vern		varp	varnt		VIDI	orpinn
verpa (to warp, tbrow)	verp vil & vilia	vilium	varp vildi	varpt	urpu	yrpi vildi	orpinn viliað verpa (to warp, tbrow) VILJA (to will)	vil & vilja	viljum	vildi			vildi	viljað verpa (to warp, tbrow) VILJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong)	vil & vilja vind	viljum	vildi vatt	vatzt	undu	vildi yndi	viljað undinn verpa (to warp, tbrow) VILJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work)	vil & vilja vind vinn		vildi vatt vann			vildi yndi ynni	viljað undinn unninn verpa (to warp, tbrow) VII.JA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know)	vil & vilja vind vinn veit, veizt		vildi vatt vann vissi	vatzt vannt	undu unnu	vildi yndi ynni vissi	viljað undinn unninn vitað verpa (to warp, tbrow) VILJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move)	vil & vilja vind vinn veit, veizt vík	vitu	vildi vatt vann vissi veik	vatzt	undu unnu viku	vildi yndi ynni	viljað undinn unninn
verpa (to warp, tbrow) VII.JA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vinga = to wring) defect.	vil & vilja vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii		vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse)	vatzt vannt	undu unnu	vildi yndi ynni vissi	viljað undinn unninn vitað verpa (to warp, tbrow) VIIJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem)	vil & vilja vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrit ymr	vitu	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umdi	vatzt vannt	undu unnu viku	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn verpa (to warp, throw) VILJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vinga = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to work, compose)	vil & vilja vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii	vitu	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umdi orti	vatzt vannt	undu unnu viku	vildi yndi ynni vissi	viljað undinn unninn vitað verpa (to warp, tbrow) VILJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to work, compose) ýja (to swarm) defect.	vil & vilja vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrit ymr	vitu	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umđi orti úði	vatzt vannt	undu unnu viku	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn
verpa (to warp, throw) VILJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to work, compose) tja (to swarm) defect. þefja (to tbicken) defect.	vil & vilja vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki	vitu	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umõi orti uði þafði	vatzt vannt	undu unnu viku vrungu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk
verpa (to warp, tbrow) VIIJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vinga = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to work, compose) vja (to swarm) defect. þefja (to tbicken) defect. þegja (to be silent)	vil & vilja vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki	vitu ng (?), Grett (in þegjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þagði	vatzt vannt	undu unnu viku vrungu þögðu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk
verpa (to warp, throw) VII.JA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vinga = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to work, compose) tja (to swarm) defect. pefja (to thicken) defect. pegja (to be silent) pekja (to thatcb)	vil & vilja vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki	vitu	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þagði þakði	vatzt vannt veikt	undu unnu viku vrungu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk
verpa (to warp, throw) VII.JA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to swarm) defect. þefja (to thicken) defect. þegja (to be silent) þekja (to thatch) þekkja (to thatch)	vil & vilja vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki pegi pek	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in þegjum þekjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þagði þakði þákti & þ	vatzt vannt veikt	undu unnu viku vrungu þögðu þökðu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn
verpa (to warp, throw) VILJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to work, compose) vja (to swarm) defect. þefja (to thicken) defect. þefja (to to silent) þekkja (to thatcb) þekkja (to know) defect. þenja (to stretcb)	vil & vilja vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki	vitu ng (?), Grett (in þegjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti uði þafði þafði þakði þakði þakði	vatzt vannt veikt	undu unnu viku vrungu þögðu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk
verpa (to warp, throw) VIIJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to work, compose) vja (to swarm) defect. pefja (to thicken) defect. pegja (to to silent) pekkja (to thoub) pekkja (to thoub) pekkja (to stretch) peyja (to thaw) defect.	vil & vilja vind vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi bek	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti uði þafði þagði þakði þátti & þ hanði þá	vatzt vannt veikt	undu unnu viku vrungu þögðu þökðu þönðu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð
verpa (to warp, throw) VII.JA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vinga = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to work, compose) tja (to swarm) defect. pefja (to thicken) defect. pegja (to be silent) pekja (to thatcb) pekkja (to know) defect. penja (to stretcb) peyja (to thaw) defect. penja (to thaw) defect. penja (to thaw) defect. piggja (to receive)	vil & vilja vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki pegi pek	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in þegjum þekjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þagði þakði þátti & þ þanði þú	vatzt vannt veikt	undu unnu viku vrungu þögðu þökðu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn
verpa (to warp, throw) VILJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to to work, compose) vja (to swarm) defect. perja (to thicken) defect. perja (to thicken) pekia (to thatch) pekia (to thatch) pekia (to stretch) peyja (to thaw) defect. piggja (to receive) pilja (to board)	vil & vilja vind vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi bek	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti uði þafði þagði þakði þátti & þ hanði þá	vatzt vannt veikt	undu unnu viku vrungu þögðu þökðu þönðu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr
verpa (to warp, throw) VIIJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to to work, compose) vja (to swarm) defect. pefja (to thicken) defect. pefja (to thicken) pekja (to thatcb) pekkja (to thatcb) pekkja (to thatcb) peyja (to stretcb) peyja (to thaw) defect. piggja (to receive) pilja (to board) pida (to melt) defect.	vil & vilja vind vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi bek ben bigg	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þagði þakði þakði þátti & þ hanði þú	vatzt vannt veikt	undu unnu viku vrungu þögðu þökðu þönðu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn
verpa (to warp, throw) VILJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to to work, compose) vja (to tbicken) defect. þefja (to tbicken) defect. þefja (to tbicken) þekkja (to tbatch) þekkja (to tbatch) þekkja (to tsare) þerja (to tsaw) defect. þenja (to tsretch) þevja (to tbaw) defect. þiggja (to receive) þilja (to board) þiða (to melt) defect. þjá (to coerce)	vil & vilja vind vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi þek þen þigg	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þagði þakði þátti & þ þanði þú þi þiði	vatzt vannt veikt veikt pekði	undu unnu viku vrungu þögðu þökðu þönðu þágu & þ. ógu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði þenði þægi	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn pilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk
verpa (to warp, throw) VII.JA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vinga = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to towork, compose) tja (to swarm) defect. pefja (to thicken) defect. pegja (to the silent) pekja (to thatch) pekkja (to know) defect. penja (to stretch) peyja (to thaw) defect. piggja (to receive) pilja (to board) pida (to mell) defect. pija (to coerce) pióta (to whistle)	vil & vilja vind vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi bek ben bigg bjái byt	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umōi orti tiði þafði þagði þakði þáthi ð þanði þá hi þi þaut	vatzt vannt veikt	undu unnu viku vrungu þögðu þökðu þönðu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði þenði þægi	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn
verpa (to warp, throw) VII.JA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to work, compose) vja (to swarm) defect. pefja (to thicken) defect. pefja (to thicken) defect. pejja (to thatcb) pekkja (to know) defect. penja (to stretcb) peyja (to thaw) defect. piggja (to receive) pilja (to board) pida (to melt) defect. pjá (to coerce) pióta (to whistle) pola (to thole, bear)	vil & vilja vind vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi bek ben bigg bjái být boli	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þakði þakði þákti & þ þanði þú þilði þjáði	vatzt vannt veikt veikt pekði	undu unnu viku vrungu þögðu þökðu þönðu þágu & þ. ógu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði þenði þægi	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat
verpa (to warp, throw) VII.JA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to swarm) defect. pefja (to thicken) defect. pegja (to thicken) pekja (to thatch) pekja (to thatch) pekja (to thatch) pekja (to thatch) peija (to stretch) peyja (to tow) defect. pinga (to stretch) pejja (to tow) pija (to tow) pija (to receive) pija (to coerce) pija (to coerce) pija (to whistle) pola (to thole, bear) pora (to dare)	vil & vilja vind vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi bek ben bigg bjái být boli bori	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umōi orti tiði þafði þagði þakði þáthi ð þanði þá hi þi þaut	vatzt vannt veikt veikt pekði	undu unnu viku vrungu þögðu þökðu þönðu þágu & þ. ógu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði þenði þægi	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn
verpa (to warp, throw) VILJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to work, compose) vja (to swarm) defect. þefja (to theken) defect. þefja (to the silent) þekkja (to thateb) þekkja (to thateb) þekkja (to treive) þilja (to toreive) þilja (to melt) defect. þjá (to coerce) þjóta (to whistle) þola (to thole, bear) þora (to dare) þrasa (to talk big) defect.	vil & vilja vind vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi þek þen þigg þjái þýt þoli þori þrasi	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þagði þakði þátti & þ anði þú þú þú þí þí þí þí þoiði þorði	vatzt vannt veikt veikt pekði	undu unnu viku vrungu þögðu þökðu þönðu þágu & þ. ógu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði þenði þægi	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat þorat, þort
verpa (to warp, throw) VII.JA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vinga = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to work, compose) tja (to swarm) defect. pefja (to thicken) defect. pegja (to the silent) pekja (to thatch) pekkja (to know) defect. penja (to stretch) peyja (to thaw) defect. piggja (to receive) pilja (to board) pida (to mell) defect. piá (to coerce) pióta (to whistle) pola (to talk big) defect. prá (to dare) prasa (to talk big) defect. prá (to long)	vil & vilja vind vind vind ving veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi bek ben bigg bjái byt boli bori brasi brái	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þakði þakði þákti & þ þanði þú þilði þjáði	vatzt vannt veikt veikt pekði	undu unnu viku vrungu þögðu þökðu þönðu þágu & þ. ógu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði þenði þægi	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat þorat, þort
verpa (to warp, throw) VIIJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vinga = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to swarm) defect. peija (to tbicken) defect. peija (to tbicken) defect. peija (to tbatch) pekkja (to know) defect. penja (to stretch) pevja (to tbaw) defect. piggja (to receive) pilja (to beat) pida (to melt) defect. pjá (to cerce) pióta (to wbissle) pola (to tbole, bear) pora (to dare) prasa (to talk big) defect. piá (to long) prifa (to seize)	vil & vilja vind vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrit ymr yrki begi bek ben bigg bjái být boli bori brasi brái bríf	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þagði þakði þákti & þ þanði þú þilði þjáði þaut þolði þorði þráði	vatzt vannt veikt veikt pekði	undu unnu viku vrungu pögðu pökðu pönðu págu & þ.ógu putu	vildi yndi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði þenði þægi þyti þölði, þylði þörði, þyrði	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat þorat, þort þráðr
verpa (to warp, throw) VILJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to to work, compose) vja (to swarm) defect. perja (to thicken) defect. perja (to thicken) defect. perja (to thatch) pekia (to thatch) pekia (to thatch) peija (to stretch) peyja (to thaw) defect. piggja (to receive) pijda (to melt) defect. pijda (to melt) defect. pijd (to coerce) pijda (to thiste) pola (to thiste) pola (to thole, bear) pora (to dare) prisa (to talk big) defect. pia (to long) prifa (to seize) prjota (to cease)	vil & vilja vind vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi pek pen pigg bjái pýt poli pori prasi prái príf prýtr	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þakði þakði þátti & þanði þú þilði þjuði þolði þorði þraðt	vatzt vannt veikt veikt bekði þátt	undu unnu viku vrungu pögðu pökðu pönðu pågu & þ.ógu putu	vildi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði þenði þægi	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat þorat, þort
verpa (to warp, throw) VII.JA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to swarm) defect. þefja (to thicken) defect. þefja (to thicken) defect. þegja (to thatcb) þekkja (to thatcb) þekkja (to thatcb) þekkja (to thaw) defect. þenja (to stretch) þeyja (to trecive) þilja (to coerce) þiða (to melt) defect. þjá (to coerce) þjó (to coerce) þjó (to thole, bear) þora (to dare) þrasa (to talk big) defect. þrá (to long) þrifa (to seize) þriðta (to seize) þriðta (to seizes) þruma (to sit fast)	vil & vilja vind vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrit ymr yrki begi bek ben bigg bjái být boli bori brasi brái bríf	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þagði þakði þákti & þ þanði þú þilði þjáði þaut þolði þorði þráði	vatzt vannt veikt veikt bekði þátt	undu unnu viku vrungu pögðu pökðu pönðu págu & þ.ógu putu	vildi yndi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði þenði þægi þyti þölði, þylði þörði, þyrði	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat þorat, þort þráðr
verpa (to warp, throw) VII.JA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vinga = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to work, compose) tja (to swarm) defect. pefja (to thicken) defect. pegja (to the silent) pekja (to thatch) pekkja (to know) defect. penja (to stretch) pevja (to thaw) defect. piggja (to receive) pilija (to board) pida (to mell) defect. piá (to coerce) pióta (to whistle) pola (to talk big) pria (to talk big) pria (to long) prifa (to seize) pripóta (to seize) pripóta (to seize) prima (to sit fast) prima (to sit fast) primay, pryngja (to press, throng)	vil & vilja vind vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi pek pen pigg bjái pýt poli pori prasi prái príf prýtr	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þakði þakði þátti & þanði þú þilði þjuði þolði þorði þraðt	vatzt vannt veikt veikt bekði þátt	undu unnu viku vrungu pögðu pökðu pönðu págu & þ.ógu putu	vildi yndi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði þenði þægi þyti þölði, þylði þörði, þyrði	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat þorat, þort þráðr
verpa (to warp, throw) VII.JA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to swarm) defect. þefja (to thicken) defect. þefja (to thicken) defect. þegja (to thatcb) þekkja (to thatcb) þekkja (to thatcb) þekkja (to thaw) defect. þenja (to stretch) þeyja (to trecive) þilja (to coerce) þiða (to melt) defect. þjá (to coerce) þjó (to coerce) þjó (to thole, bear) þora (to dare) þrasa (to talk big) defect. þrá (to long) þrifa (to seize) þriðta (to seize) þriðta (to seizes) þruma (to sit fast)	vil & vilja vind vind vind vind veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi þek ben þigg þjái þýt þoli þori þrasi þráf þrýtr þrumi	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum piggjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þagði þakði þátti & þanði þú þilði þjáði þaut þolði þorði þreif þraut þrumði	vatzt vannt veikt veikt bekði þátt	undu unnu viku vrungu pögðu pökðu pönðu págu & þøgu putu prifu (prutu)	vildi yndi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði þenði þægi þyti þölði, þylði þörði, þyrði þrifi þryti	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat þorat, þort þráðr þrifinn þrotinn
verpa (to warp, throw) VII.JA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vinga = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to work, compose) tja (to swarm) defect. pefja (to thicken) defect. pegja (to the silent) pekja (to thatch) pekkja (to know) defect. penja (to stretch) pevja (to thaw) defect. piggja (to receive) pilija (to board) pida (to mell) defect. piá (to coerce) pióta (to whistle) pola (to talk big) pria (to talk big) pria (to long) prifa (to seize) pripóta (to seize) pripóta (to seize) prima (to sit fast) prima (to sit fast) primay, pryngja (to press, throng)	vil & vilja vind vind vind vind veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi bek ben bigg bjái být poli bori brasi bráí práf prýtr brumi bröng	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum piggjum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti uði þafði þagði þakði þátti & þ hanði þú þiði þiði þráði þráði þraði þraði þraði þraði	vatzt vannt veikt veikt bekði þátt	undu unnu viku vrungu pögðu pökðu pönðu págu & þøgu putu prifu (prutu)	vildi yndi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti begði þekði þenði þægi byti þölði, þylði þörði, þyrði þryti þryngvi	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat þorat, þort þráðr þrifinn þrotinn þrunginn
verpa (to warp, throw) VIIJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vinga = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to swarm) defect. peija (to tbicken) defect. peija (to tbicken) defect. peija (to tbatch) pekkja (to know) defect. penja (to stretch) pevja (to tbaw) defect. piggja (to receive) pilja (to todav) defect. pija (to todav) plota (to woll) defect. pija (to todav) plota (to well) defect. pija (to todav) plota (to wbistle) pola (to tbole, bear) pora (to dare) prasa (to talk big) defect. pra (to long) prifa (to seize) priota (to cease) pruma (to sit fast) pitongva, pryngja (to press, tbrong) pURFA (to need)	vil & vilja vind vind vind vind veit, veizt vik ving = vrit ymr yrki begi pek ben bigg bjái pýt poli pori prasi práf prýtr prumi pröng parf, parft	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum pjótum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þagði þakði þátti & þ þanði þú þilði þjáði þorði þreif þraut þrumði þröng þurfti	vatzt vannt veikt bekði pátt pauzt preift	undu unnu viku vrungu pögðu pökðu pönðu págu & þ.ógu putu prifu (þrutu) prungu	vildi yndi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti pegði pekði penði þægi þyti pölði, þylði pörði, þyrði prifi pryti pryti	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjúðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat þorat, þort þráðr þrifinn þrotinn þrunginn þurfat (þurt)
verpa (to warp, throw) VILJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to to work, compose) vja (to swarm) defect. perja (to theken) defect. perja (to theken) defect. perja (to theto) pekia (to thatch) pekia (to thatch) pevja (to tretch) jevja (to tretch) jevja (to trecive) pilja (to melt) defect. pjá (to coerce) pjóta (to wissle) pola (to thole, bear) pora (to dare) prasa (to talk big) defect. prá (to long) prifa (to seize) prifa (to seize) prifa (to seize) prima (to sit fast) ptongva, pryngja (to press, throng) pURFA (to need) pvá (to wasb)	vil & vilja vind vinn veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi bek ben bigg bjái byt boli bori brasi bráf brýtr brumi bröng barf, þarft	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum pjótum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þakði þakði þákti & þanði þú þilði þidði þorði þraði þreif þraut þrumði þrumði þromg	vatzt vannt veikt bekði pátt pauzt preift	undu unnu viku vrungu pögðu pökðu pönðu págu & þ.ógu putu prifu (þrutu) prungu pógu	vildi yndi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði þenði þægi þrifi þörði, þylði þörði, þyrði þryngvi þyrfti þvægi	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þidðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat þorat, þort þráðr þrinnn þrotinn þrunginn þurfat (þurt) þveginn
verpa (to warp, throw) VII.JA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinda (to wind wrong) vinda (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to swarm) defect. perja (to thicken) defect. perja (to thicken) defect. perja (to thicken) pekja (to thatch) pekja (to thatch) pekja (to thatch) pekja (to thatch) peija (to stretch) peija (to stretch) peija (to todaw) defect. pinggja (to receive) pija (to coerce) pija (to coerce) pija (to coerce) pija (to thicken) pora (to dare) prasa (to talk big) defect. prasa (to talk big) prifa (to seize) prifat (to needs) pva (to wash) pverra (to wane)	vil & vilja vind vind vind vind veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi þek þen þigg þjái þýt þoli þori þrasi þrái þrýtr þrumi þröng þarf, þarft þvæ þverr þykkir	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum pjótum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þagði þakði þátti & þanði þú þilði þjáði þorði þraði þraði þraði þraðt þraut þrumði þrumði þrumði þrumði þrumti þó	vatzt vannt veikt bekði pátt pauzt preift	undu unnu viku vrungu pögðu pökðu pönðu págu & þ.ógu putu prifu (þrutu) prungu pógu	vildi yndi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti begði þekði þenði þægi byti þölði, þylði þörði, þyrði prifi þryti þryngvi þyrfti þvægi þyrri þoætti	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjaðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat þorat, þort þráðr þrinnn þrunginn þurfat (þurt) þveginn þortinn
verpa (to warp, throw) VIIJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vinga = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to work, compose) tja (to swarm) defect. pefja (to tbicken) defect. pegja (to tbicken) defect. pegja (to tbatcb) pekkja (to know) defect. penja (to tbatcb) peyja (to tbaw) defect. piggja (to receive) pilja (to board) pida (to mell) defect. piá (to coerce) pióta (to wbistle) pola (to tbloke, bear) pora (to dare) pras (to talk big) defect. prá (to long) prifa (to seize) prima (to sietze) proma (to sietze) proma (to coesce) proma (to coesce) proma (to coesce) proma (to sietze) proma (to coesce) proma (to sietze) proma (to sietze) proma (to med) pverra (to wane) pyekkeja (to tbink, seem)	vil & vilja vind vind vind vind veit, veizt vik ving = vrii ymr yrki begi þek ben þigg þjái þýt þoli þori þrasi þrái þríf þrýtr þrumi þröng þarf, þarft þvæ pverr	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum pjótum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umdi orti úði þafði þagði þakði þátti & þanði þúti & þiáði þoiði þreif þraut þrumði þrumði þrumði þröng þvarr þótti	vatzt vannt veikt bekði pátt pauzt preift	undu unnu viku vrungu pögðu pökðu pönðu págu & þ.ógu putu prifu (þrutu) prungu pógu	vildi yndi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti þegði þekði þenði þægi þyti þölði, þylði þörði, þyrði þryngvi þyrfti þvægi þyrti þvægi þyrti	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat þorat, þort þráðr þrifinn þrotinn þrunginn þurfat (þurt) þveginn þorrinn þott, þótzk
verpa (to warp, throw) VIIJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vinga = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to swarm) defect. peija (to tbicken) defect. peija (to tbicken) defect. peija (to tbatch) pekkja (to know) defect. penja (to stretch) pevja (to tbaw) defect. pinja (to to work) pilja (to to work) pilja (to to work) pilja (to to work) pilja (to work) pora (to dare) prasa (to talk big) defect. pra (to long) prifa (to seize) prota (to cease) proma (to sit fast) promya, pryngja (to press, throng) purfa (to wash) pverra (to wane) pvikKAJA (to tbink, seem) pyija (to recite)	vil & vilja vind vind vind vind veit, veizt vik ving = vril ymr yrki begi bek ben bigg bjái byt boli bori brasi brái bríf brýtr brumi bröng barf, þarft byæ bverr bykkir byl byrr	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum pjótum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þafði þafði þakði þákði þátti & þanði þú þilði þriði þrut þrolði þrut þrumði	vatzt vannt veikt bekði pátt pauzt preift	undu unnu viku vrungu pögðu pökðu pönðu págu & þ.ógu putu prifu (þrutu) prungu pógu	vildi yndi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti begði þekði þenði þægi byti þölði, þylði þörði, þyrði prifi þryti þryngvi þyrfti þvægi þyrri þoætti	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat þorat, þort þráðr þrifinn þrotinn þrunginn þurfat (þurt) þveginn þorrinn þott, þótzk
verpa (to warp, throw) VILJA (to will) vinda (to wind wrong) vinna (to work) VITA (to wit, know) vikja (to move) (vringa = to wring) defect. ymja (to bem) yrkja (to swarm) defect. perja (to thicken) defect. perja (to thatch) pekja (to thatch) pekja (to thatch) pekja (to thatch) pevja (to thaw) defect. perja (to sveretch) pevja (to thaw) defect. piggja (to receive) pilja (to ocorce) pilja (to whistle) pola (to whistle) pola (to talk hig) defect. pia (to talk hig) defect. pia (to long) prifa (to seize) priota (to cease) piuma (to sit fast) prongva, pryngja (to press, throng) purf (to wash) pverra (to wane) pyrkKJA (to think, seem) pyrja (to recite) pyrja (to recite) pyrja (to recite)	vil & vilja vind vind vind vind veit, veizt vik ving = vrit ymr yrki begi pek ben bigg bjái být poli bori brái bráf brýtr prumi bröng barf, þarft bvæ bvert bykkir	vitu ng (?), Grett. (in pegjum pekjum penjum piggjum pjótum	vildi vatt vann vissi veik a verse) umði orti úði þagði þakði þátti & þ hanði þú þilði þiáði þorði þradt þrut þrumði þröng þurfti þó þvatt þó þvatt þó þvatt þolði	vatzt vannt veikt bekði pátt pauzt preift	undu unnu viku vrungu pögðu pökðu pönðu págu & þ.ógu putu prifu (þrutu) prungu pógu	vildi yndi yndi ynni vissi viki yrti begði þekði þenði þægi byti þölði, þylði þörði, þyrði prifi þryti þryngvi þyrfti þvægi þyrri þoætti	viljað undinn unninn vitað vikinn ortr, ort, orzk þagat þakðr, þökð, þakinn þanðr, þönð þeginn þilðr þiðinn þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þotinn þolt, þolat þorat, þort þráðr þrifinn þrotinn þrunginn þurfat (þurt) þveginn þorrinn þott, þótzk

A LIST OF IRREGULAR FORMS.

I. Verbal Forms.

ann, annt, from unna. arði, from erja. utti, from etja. á, átt, from eiga. áði, áit, from æja. át, ázt, átu, from eta. bað, báðu, from biðja. bar, báru, from bera. barði, from berja. barg, from bjarga. batt, batzt, from binda. bauð, bautt, from bjóða. heðið, from biðja & bíða. beið, biðu, from bíða. beit, bitu, from bita. bergr, from bjarga. bittu, from binda. bjó, bjoggu, bjuggu, from búa. blend, from blanda. blés, from blása.

blanda.
blæs, from blása.
boðinn, buðu, from bjóða.
borginn, from bera.
brann, from brenna.
brast, brustu, from bresta.
braut, brotinn, from brjóta.
brá, brygði, from bregða. brostinn, brysti, from

blét, blétt, from blóta and

bresta. brugðinn, from bregða. brunninn, from brenna. brýt, bryti, from brjóta. bundinn, from binda. byndi, from binda. byrgi, from bjarga. bý, from búa. býð, byði, from bjóða. bæði, from biðja. bæri, from bera. datt, dottinn, from detta. dáinn, from devia. dó, dœi, from deyja. drakk, from drekka. drap, drápu, from drepa. draup, dropið, from drjúpa. dreg, from draga. dreginn, from draga. dreif, drifinn, from drifa. dró, drógu, from draga. drukkinn, from drekka. drundi, from drynja. drykki, from drekka. drýp, from drjúpa. drœgi, from draga. dulði, dult, from dylja. dunði, from dynja. duttu, from detta. dúði, from dýja. dvalði, dvalið, from dvelja. dygði, from duga. dytti, from detta. dœi, from deyja. ek, from aka. el, from ala. em, er, eru, from vera. eyk, from auka. eys, from ausa. fal, fálu, from fela. fann, from finna. fat, fátu, from feta. fauk, from fjúka.

fékk, fenginn, from få. feld, from falda. féll, from falla. fell, from falla. ferr, from fara. fior = finnr, from finna. flatti, from fletja. flaug, fló, from fljúga. flaut, flutu, from fljóta. floginn, from fljúga. flotinn, from fljóta. fló, flúinn, from flýja. fló, flógu, fleginn, from flá. flutti, from flytja. flýg, flygi, from fljúga. flýt, flyti, from fljóta. flæ, from flá. flægi, from flá. fokinn, from fjúka. folginn, from fela, fór, fóru, from fara. framði, from fremja. fraus, frusu, frosinn, frörinn, from frjósa. frá, frágu, from fregna. frys, frysi, from frjósa. frömd, from fremja. fundinn, from finna. fyndi, from finna, fýk, fyki, from fjúka. fæ, from fá. fœli, from fela. gaf, gáfu, from gefa. gakk, from ganga. gall, from gjalla. galt, from gjalda. gat, gátu, from geta. gaus, gusu, from gjósa. gaut, gotinn, from gióta. gein, ginu, from gina. gékk, gengu, gengit, from ganga. geld, from gjalda. gellr, from gjalla. geng, from ganga. gladdi, glatt, from gleðja. glapði, from glepja. glumði, from glymja. glödd, from gleðja. gnast, gnustu, from gnesta. gny, from gnúa. gnýr, from gnúa. gnöri, gneri, from gnúa. goldinn, guldu, from gjalda. gollið, gullu, from gjalla. gosio, gusu, from gjósa. gotinn, gutu, from gjóta. gó, from geyja. gól, from gala. gramði, from gremja. gref, from grafa. grét, græt, from gráta. gróf, from grafa. grœ, from gróa. groefi, from grafa. græt, from gráta gröri, greri, grœ, from gróa. gyldi, from gjalda. gylli, from gjalla. gyss, gysi, from gjósa. gæði, from gá. gæfi, from gefa. gœli, from gala. gæti, from geta.

göra, gjöra, = gera.

halp, from hjálpa.
hamði, from hemja.
háði, háið, from heyja.
hefi, hefði, from hafa.
hékk, hengu, from hanga.
held, from halda.
helpr, from hjálpa.
hélt (held), from halda.
hét, from heita.
hjó, hjoggu, höggvinn,
from höggva.
haut hlutu from hliáta

hlaut, hlutu, from hljóta. hleð, from hlaða. hlegið, from hlæja. hleyp, from hlaupa. hljóp, hlypi, hlæpi, hlupu, from hlaupa.

hlotinn, from hljóta. hló, hlógu, from hlæja. hlóð, from hlaða. hlýt, from hljóta. hnauð, hnoðinn, from hnjóða. hnaus, from hnjósa. hneig, hné, hniginn, from hniga.

hneit, hnitu, from hnita.
hnugginn, from hnöggva.
hnys, from hnjósa.
holpinn, from hjálpa.
horfinn, from hverfa.
hóf, from hefja.
hrakði, from hrekja.
hratt, hritt, from hrinda.
hrauð, from hrjóða.
hraut, hrutu, hrotið, from hrjóta. hreif, hrifinn, from hrífa. hrein, from hrína. hroðinn, from hrjóða. hrokkið, hrukku, from hrökkva.

hrundi, from hrynja.

hrundinn, from hrinda. hryndi, from hrinda. hrýð, from hrjóða. hrýs, from hrjósa. hugoi, from hyggja. huldi, hult, from hylja. hulpu, hylpi, from hjálpa. hurfu, hyrfi, from hverfa. hvatti, from hvetja. hvein, from hvina. hvött, from hvetja. hœfi, from hefja. höfð, from hafa. jók, jyki, from auka. jós, jysi, from ausa. kafði, from kefja. kann, from kunna. kaus, from kjósa. kell, from kala. kemr, kømr, from koma.

klauf, klufu, klofinn, from kljúfa. kleif, klifu, from klífa. kló, kleginn, from klá. klýf, klyfi, from kljúfa. kná, knátti, from (knega). knúði, knúinn, from knýja. kosinn, from kjósa. kóðu, from kveða.

keypti, from kaupa.

klakoi, from klekja.

kjöri, keyri, from kjósa.

kól, from kala.
kómu, from koma.
krafði, from krefja.
kramði, from kremja.
kraup, krupu, kropinn,
from krjúpa.
krufði, from kryfja.
krýp, krypi, from krjúpa.
kvað, kváðu, from kveða.
kvaddi, kvatt, from kveðja.
kvaldi, from kvelja.
kvámu, kvæmi, kœmi,
from koma.
kvödd, from kveðja.

kvölð, from kvelja. kynni, from kunna. kýs, kysi, from kjósa. kœli, from kala. lagði, lagt, from leggja. lak, láku, from leka. lamði, from lemja. lapõi, from lepja. las, lásu, from lesa. latti, from letja. laug, from ljúga. lauk, from lúka. laust, from ljósta. laut, from luta. lá, látt, lágu, leginn, from liggja. lé, lédi, from liá.

lék, from leika. leið, liðinn, from líða. leit, litu, litinn, from lita. loginn, from ljúga. lokinn, luku, from lúka. lostinn, lustu, from ljósta. lotinn, lutu, from lúta. ló, lótt, from ljúga. lukoi, from lykja. lúinn, from lýja. lýg, lygi, from ljúga. lýk, lyki, from lúka. lýt, lyti, from lúta. lægi, from liggja. læki, from leka. læt, from láta. lögð, from leggja. man, from muna, munu. marði, from merja. mat, mátu, from meta. má, mátti, mætti, from mega. meig, from miga. mól, from mala. mulði, from mylja.

myndi, or möndi, from munu.
mœli, from mala.
mætti, from mega.
nam, námu, from nema.
naut, nutu, notinn, nýt, from njóta.
numinn, from nema.
næmi, from nema.
ofinn, from vefa.
olli, from valda.

olli, from valda.
ollinn, from vella.
oltinn, from velta.
orðinn, from verða.
orpinn, from verða.
orti, ort, from yrkja.
6ð, óðu, from vaða.
óf, ófu, from vefa.
ók, from aka.

ól, from ala. óru, from vera. óx, óxu, from vaxa. rak, ráku, from reka. rakôi, from rekja. rann, from renna. rauð, ruðu, from rjóða. rauf, rufu, from rjúfa. rauk, ruku, from rjúka. raut, rutu, from rjóta. réð, réðu, from ráða. reið, riðinn, from ríða. reif, rifinn, from rifa. reis, risinn, from rísa. reist, ristu, from rista. reit, ritinn, from rita. ro, i. e. ero, from vera. roðinn, from rjóða. rofinn, from rjúfa. rokinn, from rjúka. ruddi, rutt, from rybja. runninn, from renna. rýð, ryði, from rjóða. ryf, ryfi, from rjúfa. rýk, ryki, from rjúka. rœ, from róa. ræð, from ráða. röri, reri, from róa. saddi, from seðja. sagði, sagt, from segja. samoi, from semja. sard, from serda. sat, sátu, from sitja. saud, from sjóða. saug & só, from sjúga. saung, from syngja. saup, from súpa. sá, sátt, from sjá. sé, sér, sém, séð, from vera. sé, séðu, sénn, from sjá. séðu, from sýja. sef, söf, from sofa. seig & ség, sigu, from síga. seri, söri, from sá. setio, from sitja. skaddi, from skeðja. skal, skalt, from skulu. skalf, from skjálfa. skall, from skjalla. skapoi, from skepja. skar, skáru, from skera. skaut, from skjóta. skef, from skafa.

skein, skinu, skininn, from skína. skek, from skaka. skekinn, from skaka. skelf, from skjálfa. skellr, from skjálfa. skorinn, from skera. skotinn, from skjóta. skóf, skófu, from skafa. skók, from skaka. skóp, from skapa. skrapp, skruppu, skroppinn, from skreppa.

inn, from skreppa. skreið, skriðu, from skríða. skulfu, skolfið, from skjálfa. skullu, skollið, from skjalla, skutu, skyti, from skjóta. skylði, from skulu. skylli, from skjalla. sködd, from skeðja. slapp, sluppu, from sleppa.

slaung, slungu, from slöngsleginn, from slá. sleit, slitu, slitinn, from sloppinn, from sleppa. sló, slógu, from slá. slæ, from slá. small, from smella. smaug, smó, smoginn, from smjúga. smurði, from smyrja. smvg, from smjuga. snart, snurtu, snyrti, snortinn, from snerta. sneið, sniðinn, from sníða. sný, from snúa. snöri, sneri, from snúa. soðinn, from sjóða. soginn, from sjuga. sokkinn, from sökkva. solginn, from svelgja. sollinn, from svella. soltinn, from svelta. sopina, from súpa. sorðinn, from serða. sorinn, from sverfa. sór, sóru, from sverja. sótti, sótt, from sækja. spandi, from spenja. spann, from spinna. spio, from spyja. sprakk, sprungu, sprunginn, from springa. spratt, spruttu, sprottinn, from spretta. spunninn, from spinna.

spurdi, spurt, from spyrja. spönő, from spenia. staðið, from standa. stakk, from stinga. stal, stálu, from stela. steig, sté, stigu, from stiga. stend, from standa. stikk, from stinga. stokkinn, from stökkva. stolinn, from stela. stóð, stóðu, from standa. strauk, struku, strokinn, from striúka. studdi, stutt, from styðja. stukku, from stökkva. stundi, from stynja. stœði, from standa. stæli, from stela. stödd, from steðja. suðu, from sjóða. sugu, from súga. sukku, from sökkva. sulgu, from svelgja. sullu, from svella. sultu, from svelta. summu, from svimma. sunginn, sungu, syngja. supu, sypi, from súpa. surfu, from sverfa. svaf, sváfu, svæfi, from sofa. svalg, from svelgja. svalt, from svelta. svamm, from svimma. svarf, surfu, from sverfa. svarinn, from sveria. sveið, sviðinn, from svíða. sveik, sviku, from svíkja. sykki, from sökkva. sylgi, from svelgja. sýð, syði, from sjóða. sýg, sygi, from sjúga. sýp, sypi, from súpa. sæi, from sjá. sœri, from sverja. sæti, from sitja. södd, from seðia. söör, from svia. sögð, from segja. söri, from sá. taddi, from teðja. tafði, from tefja. talði, from telja. tamòi, from temja. té, téor, from tiá. trað, tráðu, træði, from troða. treð, from troða. trýði, from trúa. trödd, from treðja. tœki, from taka. töfð, from tefja. tögg, tugði, tugginn, from tyggja. tölð, from telja. ullu, from velta. ultu, from velta. umdi, from ymja. undu, undinn, from vinda. unnu, unninn, from vinna. urðu, from verða. urpu, from verpa, uxu, from vaxa.

vafði, from vefja. vakði, from vekja. valdi, from velia. vall, from vella. valt, from velta. vandi, from venja, vann, from vinna. var, váru, from vera. varð, from verða. varði, from veria. varp, from verpa. vatt. from vinda. vá, vátt, vágu, from vega. veð, from vaða. veik, vikinn, from víkja. veit, vitu, veizt, from vita. veld, from valda. vex. from vaxa. viðr = vinnr, from vinna. vittu, from vinda. voldi, from valda. væri, from vera. vöfð, from vefja. vökð, from vekia. vönd, from venja. yggi, from ugga. yki, from auka. ylli, from valda. vlti, from velta. yndi, from una. yndi, from vinda. ynni, from unna & vinna. vrði, from verða. yrpi, from verpa. yxi, from vaxa. þagði, from þegja. þakði, from þekja.

bandi, from benja. barf, barft, from burfa. baut, from þjóta. þá, þágu, from þiggja. borrinn, from bverra. botinn, from bióta. þó, þógu, from þvá. þótti, þótt, from þykkja. braut, brotinn, from brjóta. breif, brifu, from brifa. bryt, from brjóta. pulði, from bylja. burru, from bverra. busti, from bysia. bvarr, burru, byrri, borrinn, from bverra. bveginn, from bvá. þvæ, from þvú. pylði, þölði, from þola. þyrði, þörði, from þora. þyrfti, from þurfa. byrri, from bverra. byti, from bjóta. þýt, from þjóta. bægi, from biggia. þætti, from þykkja. Þökð, from þekja. bönd, from benja. œði, from vaða. œki, from aka. œli, from ala. æti, from eta. ætti, from eiga. örðu, from erja. öttu, from etia. cottu = áttu, from eiga. otu = atu, from eta.

II. Nominal Forms.

vaf, from vefa,

adrir, from annarr, other. Agli, from Egill. agnar, from ögn, chaff. aldar, from öld, age. alnar, from öln or alin, ell. andar, from önd, breath, duck. annar, from önn, labour. ardar, from örð, tilling. arkar, from örk, chest. amar, from orn, eagle. aspar, from ösp, asp. aungan, aungva, etc., from eingi, none. aurar, from eyrir, ounce. axar, from ox, axe. axlar, from öxl, sboulder. à & ána, from á, river. a, from zr. ewe. ár, from á, river. ballar, from böllr, ball. barkar, from borkr, bark. beggja, from báðir, botb. birni, bjarnar, from björn, bear. bjargar, from björg, belp. björg, from bjarg, rock. bjort, from bjartr, bright. blatt, from blar, blue. blint, from blindr, blind. blod, from blad, blade, leaf. botz, from botn, bottom. breitt, from breior, broad. brýnn, from brún, brow. brýr, from brú, bridge. bræbr, from bróðir, brother. brækr, from brók, breeches. brogd, from bragd, exploit. brott, from brattr, steep.

búendr, from búandi, franklin. bæði, from báðir, both. bægi, from bógr, bow. bæjar, býjar, from bær, býr, town. bækr, from bók, book bælki, from bálkr, bulk, partition. bændr, from bóndi, franklin. bætr, from bót, remedy. bök, from bak, back. bönd, from band, bond. börð, from barð, brim. börn, from barn, bairn, child. degi, from dagr, day. djorf, from djarfr, daring. drætti, from dráttr, pulling. dura, from dyrr, door. dvalar, from dvöl, delay. dýpri, from djúpr, deep. dætr, from dóttir, daughter. dögum, from dagr, day. dogurðr = dagverðr, dinner. dölum, from dalr, dale. Dönum, from Danir, Danes. döpr, from dapr, dismal. eitt, from einn, one. elptr, from alpt, swan. endr, from önd, duck. erni, from örn, eagle. eyjar, from ey, island. fanna, from fonn, snow. farar, from för, journey. fått, from får, few. fedr, from fadir, fatber. fegri, fegrstr, from fagr, fair. firði, from fjörðr, firib. firri, firstr, from fjarr, far. fjadrar, from fjödr, feather.

fjalar, from fjöl, deal. fjardar, from fjördr, firtb. fjår, from fé, cattle. fjögur, from fjórir, four. fjöll, from fjall, fell. flatar, fleti, from flötr, flat. flær, from fló, flea. flöt, from flatr, flat. fremri, fremstr, fr. fram, forward. fritt, from frior, bandsome. fyllri, fyllstr, from fullr, full. færi, fæstr, from får, few. fætr, from fótr, foot. födur, from fadir, fatber. fignuðr = fagnaðr, joy. fögr, from fagr, fair. foll, from fall, fall. för, from far, footprint. föst, from fastr, firm. fot, from fat, garment. galtar, gelti, from göltr, bog. garnir, from görn, gut. gjafar, from gjöf, gift. gjarðar, from gjörð, girdle. gjöld, from gjald, payment. gjörn, from gjarn, willing. glatt, from gladr, glad. glæðr, from glóð, embers. glod, from gladr, glad. gott, from góðr, good. grafar, from gröf, grave. graftar, grefti, from gröftr, digging. grátt, from grár, gray. grynnri, grynnstr, from grunnr, sballow.

grös, from gras, grass. gæss, from gás, goose.

gömul, from gamall, old. götu, from gata, patb. Haðar, Heði, from Höðr, hafnar, from höfn, baven. hallar, from höll, ball. handar, from hönd, band. Hardar, Herdi, from Hördr. hattar, hetti, from höttr, bood. hátt, from hár, bigb. heilög, from heilagr, boly. helgan, helgari, from heilagr, boly. hendi, hendr, from hond, band, himni, from himinn, beaven. hirti, from hjörtr, bart. hitt, from hinn, the. hjarðar, from hjörð, berd. hjörtu, from hjarta, beart. hlvtt, from hlvr, warm. hnotr, hnetr, from hnot, nut. hrátt, from hrár, raw. hundruð, from hundrað, bundred. hvannar, from hvönn, angelica. hvöss, from hvass, sharp. hvöt, from hvatr, vigorous. hæri, hæstr, from har, bigb. hætti, from håttr, mode. höf, from haf, sea. höfði, from höfuð, bead. hög, from hagr, bandy. holl, from hallr, slant. hölt, from haltr, lame. höpt, from hapt, bond. hörð, from harðr, bard. jarðar, from jörð, eartb. jöfn, jömn, from jafn, jamn, even. karar, from kör, bed of a bedridden person.

Digitized by GOGIC

kastar, kesti, from köstr, pile. katli, from ketill, kettle. kattar, ketti, from köttr, cat. kili, from klör, keel. kljá, from klé, weaver's weight. knarrar, knerri, from knörr, ship. knjá, knjám, from kné, knee. kramar, from kröm, wasting sickness. kú, from kýr, cow. kvalar, from kvöl, torment. kvenna, from kona, woman, köku, from kaka, cake, köld from kaldr, cold. köll, from kall, call, kolluð, from kallaðr, called. ladar, from löð, bidding, laga, from lög, law. lagar, legi, from lögr, water. lanz, from land, land. lasta, lesti, from löstr, fault. latum, from læti, manners. leitt, from leidt, loatbed. litið, from litill, little. liá, from lé, scythe. lukli, from lykill, key. lýss, from lús, louse. lægri, lægstr, from lágr, low. lœr, from ló. lark. lömb, from lamb, lamb. lönd, from land, land. long, from langr, long, magar, megi, from mögr, son. malar, from möl, gravel. manar, from mon, mane. manna, manni, mannr, from maðr, man. marðar, merði, from mörðr. marten. markar, from mörk, mark, march, mart, from margr, many. máttkan, from máttigr, mighty. megri, from magr, meager. menn, meðr, from maðr, man. merkt, from mörk, mark. mey, meyjar, from mær, maid. miði, from mjöðr, mead, mikit, from mikill. mickle. mitt, from minn, mine. mitt, from mior, middle. mjaðar, from mjöðr, mead. mjallar, from mjöll, snow. mjótt, from mjór, slim. morni, from morginn, morning. monoðr = mánuðr, montb. muðr = munnr, moutb. mykill = mikill, mickle, myss, from mus, mouse. mæðr, from móðir, motber. mætti, from måttr, migbt. möðru, from maðra, madder. mögn, from magn, might. mögr, from magr, meagre.

mörg, from margr, many, mörk, from mark, march, border. mol. from mál, speech. nasar, from nos, nostril. nánari, from náinn, near náttar, from nótt, night. negl, from nagl, nail. Nirði, Niarðar, from Niörðr. nýtt, from nýr, new. nætr, from nótt, night. nœtr, from nót, net. nöfn, nömn, from nafn, namn, · name. nörðri, nerðri, = nyrðri, more nortb. orz, from orð, word. ótt, from óðr, enraged. radar, from röd, row, series. raddar, from rödd, voice. randar, from rönd, stripe. rastar, from röst, mile. rótt, from rór, resting. rœr, from ró, nail. rœtr. from rót. root. röm, from ramnir, strong, bitter, röng, from rangr, wrong. rönn, from rann, bouse. r = r = r = nook, yard. saor = sannr, sootb. sagar, from sog, saw, (to saw.) sagnar, from sögn, saw, (to say.) sakar, from sök, sake. sannz, from sandr, sand. satt, from sannr, sootb, sitt, from sinn, suus, sitt, from sidr, long. skátt, from skár, open. skemri, skemstr, from skammr, short skildi, from skjöldr, sbield. skúar, from skór, sboe. skömm, from skammr, sbort.

sköpt, from skapt, sbaft, bandle. sköpuð, from skapaðr, sbaped. skörð, from skarð, cleft. slætt, from slær, blunt. slætti, from slåttr, smiting, smæri, smæstr, from smár, small, snær = snjór, snow. spalar, speli, from spölr, rail. spjöld, from spjald, tablet. spjöll, from spjall, spell. spæni, from spánn, chip. spök, from spakr, wise. stangar, stengr, from stong, pole. stedia, from stedi, stithy. strandar, strendr, from strönd, strand. styttri, styztr, from stuttr, sbort.

strand.

styttni, styztr, from stuttr, sbort.

stoðr, steðr, from stoð, pillar.

sumur, from sumar, summer.

sú, from sú, tbat.

sú, from sýr, sow. svarðar, sverði, from svörðr, sword. sveppi, from svoppr, musbroom, svior = svinnr, wise. svör, from svar, answer. syni, soni, from sonr, son. sætt, from sær, seeing. sævar, from sær, sea. sögu, from saga, story. sölt, from saltr, salt, sölu, from sala, sale, som, from samr, same, sönn, from sannr, true. söx, from sax, sword. sor = sar, sore, wound. tafar, from töf, delav. tangar, from tong, tongs.

tennr, teðr, tanna, from tönn. tootb. tiarnar, from tiörn, tarn. tradar, from trod, enclosure. triá, triám, from tré, tree. tritt, from trur, true. tugli, from tygill, strap. tveggia, from tveir, two. tvær, tvá, tvau, from tveir, two. tær, from tá, toe. töðu, from taða, bay. töfl, from tafl, same. tölu, from tala, speech, tale. töluð, from talaðr, told, spoken, töm, from tamr, tame, töpuð, from tapaðr, lost. tösku, from taska, bag. tor = tar, tears. vakar, from vök, bole, valar, veli, from völr, stick, vallar, velli, from völlr, field. vambar, from vomb, womb. vamma, from vömm, fault. vandar, vendi, from vöndr, wand. vant, from vandr, difficult. varðar, verði, from vörðr, ward. varnar, from vörn, defence. varrar, from vörr, lip. varrar, verri, from vörr, pull. vattar, vetti, from vöttr, glove. vatz, from vatn, water. vaxtar, vexti, from vöxtr, growth. vánd, from vándr, bad. veraldar, from veröld, world. vesöl, from vesall, wretched. vilja, from vili, will. vinz, from vindr, wind. vítt, from víðr, wide. vöð, from vað, ford. vöknuð, from vaknaðr, awake. vöku, from vaka, waking. völd, from vald, power. völu, from vala, knuckle. von, from vanr, want. vönd, from vandr, difficult.

vör, from varr, ware, vörðu, from varða, beacon. vörm. from varmr, warm. vörtu, from varta, wart. voru, from vara, wares vösk. from vaskr, valiant. vötn, from vatn, water. von = ván, bope. v opn = vapn, weapon. yngri, yngstr, from ungr, young. vxn. from uxi. ox. þagnar, from þögn, silence. þakkar, from þökk, tbanks. bau, bær, from beir, they, belli, from bollr, young fir. bitt, from binn, thine. bramar, bremi, from brömr, rim.

border. brastar, bresti, from bröstr, thrush. briggja, from brir, three. þrjár, þrjú, from þrír, tbree. bræði, from bráðr, tbread. bvætti, from bváttr, wash. byngri, byngstr, from bungr, beavy. bynnri, bynnstr, from bunur, thin. bætti, from báttr, strand. bök, from bak, thatch. ærir, from arr, messenger. æsir, from áss, god. öðli, from óðal, property. öðrum, from annarr, other öðu, from aða, shell. öfl, from afl, strength, ögn, from agn, bait. ökrum, from akr, acre. öldruð, from aldraðr, aged. öldrum, from aldr, eld, age. öldur, from alda, wave. ömmu, from amma, grandmother. önduð, from andaðr, dear. öndurðr = öndverðr, opposed. öngan, öngir, from einginn, none. önnur, from annarr, other. öpnum, from aptan, evening. örðla, örðlum, from óðal, property. örg, from argr, mean. örm, from armr, poor. örmum, from armr, arm. ornum, from arinn, bearth, örvar, from ör, arrow. ösku, from aska, asbes. osnu, from asna, she-ass. ötul, from atall, dire. öx, from ax, ear of corn. $\dot{\mathbf{o}} = \dot{\mathbf{a}}, river.$ $\delta = \hat{a}$, from zer, ewe. ol = al, strap. ώτι = art, messenger.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Dictionary projected by the late Richard Cleasby, and completed, remodelled, and extended by Gudbrand Vigfusson, is now printed and published by the Delegates of the Clarendon Press, and it only remains to point out briefly the advantages which philology in general and English philology in particular will derive from a work on which so much money and such persistent labour have been expended. And first let it be said that the Delegates have well appreciated the importance of the object by undertaking such a work. It is peculiarly fitting that a great Icelandic Dictionary should be printed in England, and that the vocabulary of that noble tongue should be rendered and explained in English. It is well known that the Icelandic language, which has been preserved almost incorrupt in that remarkable island, has remained for many centuries the depository of literary treasures the common property of all the Scandinavian and Teutonic races, which would otherwise have perished, as they have perished in Norway, Denmark, Sweden, Germany, and England. There was a time when all these countries had a common mythology, when the royal race in each of them traced its descent in varying genealogies up to Odin and the gods of Asgard. Of that mythology, which may hold its own against any other that the world has seen, all memory, as a systematic whole, has vanished from the medieval literature of Teutonic Europe. With the introduction of Christianity the ancient gods had been deposed and their places assigned to devils and witches. Here and there a tradition, a popular tale, or a superstition bore testimony to what had been lost; and though in this century the skill and wisdom of the Grimms and their school have shewn the world what power of restoration and reconstruction abides in intelligent scholarship and laborious research, even the genius of the great master of that school of criticism would have lost nine-tenths of its power had not faithful Iceland preserved through the dark ages the two Eddas, which present to us in features which cannot be mistaken, and in words which cannot die, the very form and fashion of that wondrous edifice of mythology which our forefathers in the dawn of time imagined to themselves as the temple at once of their gods and of the worship due to them from all mankind on this middle earth. For man, according to their system of belief, could have no existence but for those good and stalwart divinities, who, from their abode in Asgard, were ever watchful to protect him and crush the common foes of both, the loathly race of giants, or, in other words, the chaotic Any one, therefore, that desires to see what manner of men his forefathers were in their relation to the gods, how they conceived their theogony, how they imagined and constructed their cosmogony, must betake himself to the Eddas as illustrated by the Sagas, and he will there find ample details on all those points, while the Anglo-Saxon and Teutonic literatures only throw out vague hints and allusions. As we read Beowulf and the Traveller's Song, for instance, we meet at every step references to mythological stories and mythical events which would be utterly unintelligible were it not for the full light thrown upon them by the Icelandic literature.

But it is not in mythology alone that the Icelandic affords us help and sheds a flood of light on ways which would otherwise be obscure and darksome. the Sagas we learn literally how our ancestors lived and moved and had their being. And here let us point out that there are Sagas of all kinds. There are the mythical Sagas, which deal of heroes, half gods and half men, who lived in the times when the belief in the preternatural prevailed, and when the human was eked out with the divine whenever man fell short of the occasion. These, too, next to the Eddas, are valuable helps by which to reconstruct that old mythological edifice, but they are not by any means the most interesting histories of their kind. Then there are the so-called historical Sagas, lives, for the most part, of the Kings of Denmark or of Norway, which sometimes exist in several recensions, the most famous of all being the Heimskringla, ascribed to Snorri Sturluson, who seems to have aimed at a critical arrange-Such Sagas as these, written at various periods by ment of the whole series. scribes more or less fitted for the task they had undertaken, are evidently of very varying authority, the most authentic of them being beyond doubt the Saga of Swerrir, King of Norway, who flourished at the end of the 12th century. way it is equal to Thucydides, and of it it may be said that the king was lucky in finding such an historian, and the writer in finding such a king to chronicle. These are still more valuable than the mythical Sagas, inasmuch as they are more full of the blood and stronger with the bone and sinew of daily life. With the exception of some incredible traits and occasional legends and superstitions inseparable from the age which produced them, the Sagas of the Kings of Norway give a faithful representation of the kings and earls of the time, as they ruled the Scandinavian lands and lived as lords over their subjects, who, on their side, possessed rights of which no king or noble could deprive them. These stories are filled with adventures and expeditions, such as that of Harold Hardrada against England, or of Magnus Barelegs against Scotland and Ireland, when they called out their levies and sailed with twenty or thirty thousand men at their back, to harry and plunder in the regions of the West. Not unlike these expeditions were those undertaken to the East as Crusaders by King Sigurd of Norway and Earl Rognvald of Orkney, the accounts of which are full of daring deeds on sea and land. And yet, although these Sagas are filled with the might and glory of kings and jarls, they are thickly sown with the brave deeds and outspoken utterances of sturdy freemen, and of those allodial owners of land which belonged to them in their own right, who did not scruple, if the king wronged them, to resist him, and even to defy him to the death. a man was Sveinki Steinarsson, who would only answer the messengers of King Magnus Barelegs in biting proverbs when they came to demand his submission, and at last made them fly home in deep disgrace.

Besides these there is still another series of Sagas. Those relating to events in the lives of Icelanders at home and abroad. These are the most interesting, because they are the most truthful of all. The Sagas of gods and heroes are mythical, altogether out of our horizon, and deal with supernatural beings which do not breathe our common air. In those elevated mythological regions respiration is impeded, and we only half live; the gods and heroes have it too much their own way, and we are amazed rather than sympathetic. In the lives of the kings, again, it requires an effort of the imagination to raise ourselves to the level of their daily life, rough and rude as it often was. We are more at our ease than when we are witnesses of the wanderings of Odin and the feats of Thor, but still we are not quite at our ease, and feel as many a stranger must have felt in the halls of Harold Hardrada and Magnus Barelegs. It is with the every-day life of the Icelanders that we feel ourselves thoroughly at home. In the hall of the gallant Gunnar at Lithend, or with the peaceful and law-skilled Njal at Bergthorshvol, we meet men who think and act as men of noble minds and gentle hearts have ever acted, and will never cease to act so long as human nature remains the same. Gisli the generous outlaw and Snorri the worldly-wise priest, Mord Valgardson the wily traitor and Hallgerda the overbearing hateful wife, are characters true for all time, whose works and ways are but eminent examples of our common humanity, and at once arouse our sympathy or our antipathy. It is this great store of Sagas relating to daily life in an age eminently poetic and attractive that forms the wealth of the medieval vernacular literature of Iceland. It may be said to begin with Landnáma, the Doomsday-Book of the colonisation of Iceland in the 9th century, and it extends down to the Sturlunga Saga in the 14th century, ending with that, perhaps the most interesting of all the Sagas, and thus bringing down the domestic history of the island to the day when it lost its independence. No other country in Europe possesses an ancient vernacular literature to be compared with this; and if to this be added the translations and adaptations from the cycle of Romance literature, and the homilies and works of religious edification, as well as those on physical and moral science, of which Iceland possesses her full share, we shall see that, whether in a literary or in a philological point of view, no literature in Europe in the Middle Ages can compete in interest with that of Iceland. It is not certainly in forma pauperis that she appears at the bar of the tribunal of learning.

Nor should it be forgotten that the early customs and laws of Iceland are of great importance for England. While our jurists have wearied themselves in tracing at home the origin of many of the institutions now peculiar to England, and while our legal antiquaries have fathered trial by jury, the bulwark of Englishmen's rights, on King Alfred, the source of that mode of trial, as well as of our special demurrers and other subtleties of pleading, is to be found in Iceland, where, as early as the 10th century, a form of trial almost exactly answering to that in which our juries de vicineto played a part in the 13th century, may be seen in full vigour as described in the famous trial of the Burners in Njála.

There can be little doubt that this form of trial and these legal subtleties are due in great part to a Northern influence in the Danelagh, or Scandinavianized portion of England, which at the time of the Conquest may be roughly reckoned at half the kingdom. It may be objected indeed that these institutions came in with the Normans; but unfortunately for this theory, the form of trial prevalent in Normandy was not, as in Iceland, trial by jury, but that by compurgation, or witnesses brought forward by the accused to swear that he did not do or was not capable of doing the deed laid at his door. And it is very remarkable that this trial by compurgation was also that common in Norway itself, as well as in all the Teutonic races; thus it existed in England among the Anglo-Saxons, and it came from Norway into Normandy along with the followers of Rollo, and thence it went with them into England. But in the Danelagh it found the form of trial peculiar to Iceland, and which had been developed in that island alone. This was a process not in general by compurgation, but before judges by witnesses to the fact, who made up the well-known kviðr of the Sagas. After the Conquest, in that general scramble of tongues and local institutions which took place among the native populations which the Normans had subdued, this form of trial held its own in the Danelagh, and ultimately asserted its supremacy over the compurgations both of the Saxons and the Normans, and thus we find it formally recognised as the law of the land at the end of the 13th century. 'From the analogy of the Icelandic customs,' says Mr. Vigfusson under the word kviðr, 'it can be inferred with certainty that along with the invasions of the Danes and Norsemen, the judgment by verdict was also transplanted to English ground; for the settlers of England were kith and kin to those of Iceland, carrying with them the same laws and customs.' The difference between the Scandinavian lands and England being that while the institution was never developed in Norway, and only struck faint root in the 'Sandemand' and 'nämd' of the Danish and Swedish laws, and while it languished and died out in Iceland itself with the fall of the Commonwealth towards the end of the 13th century, it grew more and more naturalised in England under the rule of the Normans, supplanting all other forms of trial between man and man, until England came to be considered the 'classical land of trial by jury.'

Digitized by GOOGLE

From whatever point of view, therefore, we consider the relations which exist between England and Iceland, whether from that of primæval affinity and a community of race, religion, and law, or from that of connexion by commerce, immigration, or conquest, we shall find the two languages and peoples so closely bound together, that whatever throws light on the beliefs, institutions, and customs of the one, must necessarily illustrate and explain those of the other. Nor should it be forgotten that in the 10th and 11th centuries the Icelanders were foremost in the history of the time. They were at once the most learned and the boldest and most adventurous of men. From Iceland they pushed on to Greenland and America, and their ships swarmed in commerce or in viking voyages on all the seas. At the courts of kings and earls, whether Norwegian, Danish, Swedish, or Anglo-Saxon, they were welcome guests, for though none were more dreaded as foes, none were more greeted as friends for their gifts of wit and song. Thus we find Egil Skallagrimsson playing a great part, both as a warrior and a skald, at the court of the Anglo-Saxon King Athelstane, whose relations with the mighty King Harold Fair-hair, the founder of the Norwegian monarchy, was such that he fostered his son Hacon the Good, who thenceforth was known in the history of the North as Hacon Athelstane's foster-child. But where such mighty men as Egil came we may be sure that many others of lesser mark followed, and that when Eric Bloodyaxe held the North of England as a fief from Athelstane, he had many Icelanders in his train. As time wore on, and the Danish invasions under Sweyn and Canute followed, there was a still further infusion of Northern life into the North of England, until, as we have seen before, the Danelagh, or that portion of England in which the Northmen lived, as they lived at home, under their own laws and customs, stretched itself over half the kingdom. We have already seen something of the effect which these had on the laws of England, and how trial by jury first rose in the Danelagh, and then spread over the whole land; but the presence of the Northern element in the country shewed itself in other ways besides those of law. The language of the North of England, and especially the dialect called Lowland Scotch, was full, and to this day is full, of words and expressions which can only be explained by the help of the Icelandic as the representative of the old Northern language spoken by the Scandinavian settlers in England. When the Streoneshalch of the Anglo-Saxons was called Whitby by the Danish invaders, and when Northworthige became Deoraby, our Derby, the new names were full of meaning to the Danes and meaningless to the old possessors. 'The town on the white cliff' was a name that spoke at once to Scandinavian sea-rovers as they neared that part of the Yorkshire coast to which they gave the name of Kliflönd or Cleveland; and in the case of Derby, 'the town of deer,' the town near the wooded hills full of beasts and game, spoke more forcibly to the feelings of a race that equalled the Anglo-Saxons in their love of vert and venison than the old name; derived from the position of the town towards the North. It is scarcely necessary to repeat the fact, now so well known, that this final by of names of places in England is the invariable sign of Scandinavian settlement and possession. It was a local termination unknown to the Anglo-Saxons, but so common among one of the Northern races, that the towns and places to which they gave it may be traced by hundreds on the map of England. Rugby is about the farthest south that we find it; but Temby in South Wales shews that when the Northmen settled on the remotest parts of the sea-coast they left their mark there as well as in the very heart of the country.

Digitized by GOOGLE

Besides these names of places, very many modern English words shew early Northern influence; and even in Anglo-Saxon times the language was so blended with Scandinavian words that there were often double expressions for the same thing. One of the most common of these is egg, not originally an Anglo-Saxon, but a pure Scandinavian form, which, existing at first side by side with its old English equivalent, has at last thrown it entirely out, much in the same way as in certain counties the English rat has been eradicated by its Norwegian cousin. The story told by Caxton in his Eneydos throws light on the gradual progress of this word south. A traveller was at an inn at one of the Forelands, probably the South, in Kent, and 'asked for eggs, but was answered by the landlady that she knew no French; and it then came out that what he in London called eggs, she in Kent called 'eyren,' for in that part of England the old Anglo-Saxon word still lingered. Like traces of Scandinavian influence may be found in the form are of the verb substantive, which, in the three persons of the present plural, has expelled the old Anglo-Saxon 'syndon,' a form akin to the German 'seyn.' But perhaps the most remarkable instances of the displacement of old Anglo-Saxon words by their Scandinavian equivalents are 'law,' which, even in the time of Edgar, had begun to throw out the old Anglo-Saxon 'æw' and 'dóm,' and the two verbs to 'take' and to 'call,' which are now in every man's mouth, but which long sounded strange to English ears. For ages the Anglo-Saxon forms 'clepe' and 'nim' held their own, but now the first is only just understood in archaic poetry, while the last is utterly obsolete. The same may be asserted of 'cast,' 'same,' 'skill,' 'skin,' 'score,' and numberless others.

Enough has now been said to shew both the general and particular importance of the study of Icelandic for English philologists. Mythology, laws, customs, literature, the names of places, and even the every-day vocabulary of life cannot be thoroughly understood except by comparison with those of the North as preserved in the language and literature of Iceland. For the interest of English therefore the projection and publication of an Icelandic-English Dictionary on a large scale needs no justification, for it is simply the greatest help to English philology that has ever been undertaken and completed. When we possess an Anglo-Saxon Dictionary of the same proportions and authority we shall be better able to say what the Anglo-Saxon language really was in its earliest stage, what it afterwards became when a great infusion of Scandinavian words was thrown into it, and what it was as it degenerated into semi-Saxon after the Conquest. But while it is so important for England that she should possess this Icelandic-English Dictionary, it may easily be shewn that it is no less advantageous for the world at large that English should be the language into which the Icelandic is rendered and explained. It would, for instance, be little gain to the literary world if there had been an Icelandic-Danish or Icelandic-Norse or Icelandic-Swedish Dictionary. In any of those cases the language of a small people would have been the exponent of a language and literature which for its beauty and richness is worthy of being known to the greatest possible number of readers. From this point of view no language, not even German itself, could supply the place of English, which is already the mother-tongue of half the civilised earth, and in days to come will fill a still ampler space on the surface of the globe. In India, Australia, and, though last not least, America; wherever the English tongue is spoken and the Anglo-Saxon race has taken its stubborn root, it will be possible for scholars to avail themselves of this great treasure—a Thesaurus in every sense of the word, which, had it been explained and rendered in a Scandinavian tongue, would have remained to all but a few a sealed book.

Nor let it be for a moment supposed that any of the dialects we have named lie in reality any closer to the Icelandic than the English itself. No philologer would deny for an instant the importance of the labours of scholars in both the modern Danish and Norwegian; but those languages as vehicles of expression have suffered so much from the infusion of German words and from the adoption and assimilation of German forms and phrases, that it is often far more difficult to give the meaning of an Icelandic word or phrase in them than in English. The Swedish has remained more faithful to her old form of speech so far as the vocabulary is concerned, and her literature is the noblest of all the sister languages. Tegner and Geijer are names in poetry and history of European importance; but with all the richness of her store of words, from immemorial time Sweden has held herself aloof from the rest of the Scandinavian tongues and has remained distant, though closely cognate. Of all the kindred tongues, English, and that form of English which is called Lowland Scotch, has remained nearest in form, feeling, and often in vocabulary to the Icelandic. As for German and French, with all their richness and facility, they cannot dispute the claims of English in this particular respect; and this no doubt is owing, besides the natural and spiritual affinity existing between English and Icelandic, to the flexibility of the former tongue, which enables her to make foreign words more thoroughly her own than any other language. The Danish, the Swedish, and the German, if we may be allowed the expression, swallow many foreign words, but they seem to want the power to digest and assimilate them. They remain, so to speak, sticking in their throats for ages, while the English has long since made them part and parcel of her own flesh and blood. The courage of the Delegates of the Oxford Press in undertaking this work, and the care and time bestowed on printing it, will meet with their reward in the undoubted fact that they have not only given to the world one of the greatest helps to comparative philology that has ever appeared, but that this Dictionary is peculiarly a work to be published in England and by a great English University. Oxford now possesses a work on Northern philology which may be matched with the labours of Rask and Petersen in Denmark, with those of Munch and Keyser and Unger and Aasen in Norway, with those of Schlyter, the Nestor of Early Northern Jurisprudence, and Klemming in Sweden, and with those of Maurer, Juris Islandici peritissimus, in Germany; and in this Dictionary she holds out a sure light to every student of Northern literature.

After these general remarks we proceed to consider this particular Dictionary, and to shew that it is worthy of being the interpreter of a language so rich, and of a literature so noble. It is no less strange than true that, till very recent times, never was language worse off for helps and appliances by which it might be learnt than this very Icelandic. The works of earlier scholars, among the chief of which are the Glossary of Junius, the Thesaurus of Hickes, and Ihre's Lexicon Suio-Gothicum, were so antiquated and imperfect as rather to mislead than assist the student. As to more modern works, any one who has had to learn Icelandic by the feeble light afforded by Björn Halldorsson's Lexicon, published in two volumes at Copenhagen in 1814, or aided by the various Glossaries annexed to Editions of the Sagas, will feel, when he consults this Oxford Dictionary, that the days before its appearance were indeed the dark ages of Icelandic philology, and be ever grateful to the Delegates of the University Press for undertaking and publishing this sure guide. The history of the book, for books have histories just as much as men, has already been partly told in the Preface. Projected by Richard Cleasby, whose name should never be mentioned by Icelandic scholars without pious respect, it was supposed to be about to be published, when death cut short his days and arrested the progress of the work, which scholars like Grimm and Schmeller anxiously expected. No one perhaps, both by his knowledge of the Teutonic dialects and by his indefatigable love of his subject, was better fitted than Richard Cleasby to carry out his great plan of printing a Dictionary of the Icelandic language, as exhibited by quotations drawn from the prose literature of Iceland in that golden age which ended with the 14th century. At the same time Dr. Egilsson was busy with his Dictionary of the Poetic Diction of Iceland, so that between these two works no want or desire of the philologist would have been left unsupplied. Dr. Egilsson's work has been published for many years, but the Dictionary which Cleasby projected has only just seen the light. It is due in this place to declare that the heirs of the deceased, when the hand and head which should have superintended the completion of his work were cold in death, were equal to the emergency. They determined that the work should not be abandoned, and advanced a large sum of money for its completion. It has already been mentioned in the Preface that when the MS. was transmitted to England it was found to be in such an unsatisfactory condition that in the end it had to be entirely rewritten and remodelled. This most responsible duty was ultimately undertaken in the year 1866 by Mr. Gudbrand Vigfusson, then one of the first, as he is now undoubtedly the first, of Icelandic philologers.

Many years after the transmission of the MS., and when the first part of the Dictionary had been published and the second and third were far advanced towards completion, Mr. Cleasby's own materials were returned from Copenhagen and handed over to the writer. Acting on his own discretion, he determined that it would be most unfair to Mr. Vigfusson to interrupt him by new matter, which might have been of great assistance at an earlier period, but which could only have been an encumbrance to him when his labours were drawing to an end. Two boxes, which contained what may be called Mr. Cleasby's literary remains, were left unopened till the Dictionary was completed and the last sheet had gone to press. On the 25th of August last they were opened by Dr. Dasent and Mr. Vigfusson, and were found to contain three volumes in folio; in one of which were entered, in Mr. Cleasby's own hand, the principal verbs of the language, 112 in number, and filling 500 written pages*. In a second volume, 84 nouns, particles, and pronouns are contained, filling 230 written pages*. In the third volume were entered the prepositions to the number: of 44, filling 160 written pages †; added to which it appears, from pencil marks and notes. that it was the intention of the writer to enter into the volume several important verbs and substantives not to be found in the first volume. These three volumes are estimated by Mr. Vigfusson to contain about 15,000 quotations, written out at length and posted most methodically and neatly, like entries in a ledger, the references being double to book and chapter, and page and line. These volumes are written in a bold running hand, and the correctness of the spelling and accentuation of Icelandic words shews the writer's thorough mastery over the language. Besides the beautiful writing in ink, there are frequent pencil marks and marginal notes in a fine English hand. These notes often contain valuable remarks, though all in a rough state, and affording rather hints and suggestions as to the plan of the Besides, there are frequent renderings of Icelandic words into Latin as well as English. It has been a pious duty to print specimens of these remarks on pp. cv-cviii, where will be found Cleasby's entries under the word mal, to which has been added, for purposes of comparison, the same word as it appeared in the Copenhagen transcripts based on these very materials of the lamented philologer t.

^{*} These verbs are auka, ætla, bei\(\alpha\), beita, bera, bi\(\beta\)ja, binda, b\(\text{ita}\), bj\(\delta\)a, blanda, bl\(\delta\)a, bæta, breg\(\delta\)a, brj\(\delta\)ta, beg\(\delta\), deila, draga, drepa, dvelja, eiga, ey\(\delta\)a, falla, fara, f\(\delta\), fela, fella, festa, f\(\text{era}\), ganga, g\(\text{ora}\), gefa, geta, grei\(\delta\)a, hafa, halda, hefja, hefna, hr\(\delta\)fa, kalla, kaupa, kenna, kj\(\delta\)sa, koma, kunna, kve\(\delta\)a, kve\(\delta\)ja, l\(\delta\)ta, leigaja, lei\(\delta\)a, leita, l\(\delta\)sa, l\(\delta\)ta, l\(\delta\)ta, l\(\delta\)sa, m\(\text{ela}\), mega, munu, nema, r\(\delta\)a, rei\(\delta\), reka, rekja, renna, renna (trans.), reyna, r\(\delta\)a, r\(\delta\), segja, selja, semja, setja, sitja, sj\(\delta\), skera, skilja, skipa, skipta, skj\(\delta\)ta, sl\(\delta\), sl\(\delta\), sn\(\delta\), segja, senja, stiga, taka, tala, tj\(\delta\) (t\(\text{eija}\), ty\(\delta\)ja, var\(\delta\)a, veza, vega, veita, vera, ver\(\delta\)a, vera, ver\(\delta\), vera, ver\(\delta\), vera, verja, verpa, vilja, vinna, vita, vikja.

The remainder of the Cleasby collections in the boxes consisted of slips, on each of which was entered a single Icelandic word, followed by quotations and references, for the most part in a very elementary state. About half the writing on these slips is that of Cleasby, who seems to have extended and completed the work first begun in rough by his amanuenses. In one respect these slips, rude and incomplete as they are, contrast very favourably with the Copenhagen transcripts. The quotations in them are written out in full, and the references are to chapter, page, and line. In another particular, the care taken by Cleasby in quotation and reference was remarkable, in cases where several Sagas are contained in one volume; such, for instance, as the Islendinga Sögur (of 1830), he is not content to quote the collective volume, but invariably specifies the particular Saga from which the quotation is made. If this excellent rule had been observed in the Copenhagen transcripts, immense labour would have been spared to Mr. Vigfusson, who has returned to Cleasby's method, though in ignorance that he was pursuing the plan of the originator of the Dictionary. The references and quotations in these slips may be roughly estimated at 50,000. They contain the rest of the Icelandic vocables, the 240 words already mentioned as entered in the three volumes being omitted.

^{*} These words are the nouns alin, bragð, borð, braut, dagr, efni, eyrir, fall, fang, fótr, för, garðr, grein, gripr, hlutr, hugr, hundrað, hús, höfuð, hönd, kostr, lag, leið, maðr, mörk, mál, mánaðr, megin, munr, nótt, orð, penningr, ráð, sök, staðr, stafr, stokkr, stund, þing, ván, vegr, viðr, örendi, örtug: and the pronouns, adverbs, particles, and adjectives—at, en = er, en or enn (conj.), hér, fieldr, ok, nema, svá, þar, þá, þó, þótt, upp, uppi; allr, annarr, einn, eingi, hann, hinn, hvárr, hvárrtveggja, hverr, hvárrgi, hverrgi, nakkvarr (= nekkverr), sá, sem, sér-hverr, þessi; fár, fullr, góðr, harðr, hár, íllr, lauss, lítill, mikill, víss.

[†] These prepositions are af, at, &, án, eptir, fjarr fjarri, frá, fyrir, gagnvart, gegn, gegnum, handa, hjá, í, innan, kring, með, meðal, megin, miðil, milli millim, mót, móti móts, nær nærri, of, or or ór, sakar sökum, til, um, um-fram, um-hverfis, undan, undir, upp-á, upp-í, úr, útan, yfir, vegna, við,—about 44 in 160 written pages. From pencil marks it is clear that Cleasby intended to insert the verbs bíða, finna, flytja, hlaupa, höggva, kasta, kosta, leysa, leita, skulu; as also the words land, lið, mjök. Of this volume Cleasby left a foul copy also in his own hand, being a rough outline, while the fair copy contains a more careful, though still very elementary, arrangement of his materials. All these words are entered in no order, but evidently just as each word occurred to him; but on the fly-leaves Mr. Cleasby has drawn up an alphabetical list of the words contained in each volume. From this we are enabled to see the alphabetical order he intended to follow in the Dictionary. He distinguishes short and long vowels as in this present Dictionary: but, besides, he puts ö after a (thus divorcing a and b), thus, a, á, ö, b, c...; b he places after t (as in Icelandic-German Glossaries); and a and a he inserts respectively under a and o, as ae, oe.—G. V.

[‡] In the Copenhagen transcripts important words have been omitted, no doubt from carelessness: thus there is no verb lúka and no preposition milli; lúka is in Cleasby's volume represented by 60 references, in the present Dictionary there are some 65, of course only partly the same as in Cleasby.—G. V.

Even from a glance at these, his own materials, Cleasby stands out as a clear-sighted ready worker. Some time before his death he had printed a specimen of his Glossary, a portion of which will be found appended to the Memoir which follows this Introduction. So far as we can judge from these materials, it is plain that he intended to complete the work on the same scale; and it is very satisfactory to see that in one or two cases of doubtful etymology his views as now revealed are identical with those of the Ophilologer to whom the laborious task of restoring order to his collections has devolved*. Such is the nature of the literary remains of Cleasby now restored to his native land,

* Thus, on the slip which contains the Icelandic word röst, a mile, he has entered in pencil 'rest,' shewing that he was aware of the identity between the Icelandic and the English words, though their modern senses are different. So again, under the word eingi, he has drawn up in parallel columns the various forms of the word, thus striving to arrange them methodically. Under pessi Cleasby notes a Runic form, but adds in pencil that such forms are 'not otherwise included in this Dictionary;' and then he adds 'it would appear as if the lengthened form (pessari etc.) arose from a desire to avoid so many cases terminating in pessi, pessa, etc.; perhaps annarr was taken as a model for the new form.' His subdivisions are very precise, though perhaps a little too formal and old-fashioned; thus he draws up the verbs in activae and passivae formae, having probably adopted the expression from German Dictionaries. 'Tropical' is the term he uses for the 'metaphorical' of the present Dictionary, in which the example set by Liddell and Scott has been followed. Under goti, leit, ping, Cleasby has begun collecting a few historical names; thus we notice,—under leit, Hvamms-leit, Pverár-leit, Band.: under ping, Borgundar- or Borgar-ping, Fms. vi. 233; Hornboru-ping, ix. 269; Rauma-ping, 247, Ann. 1214 (in Norway); Lambaness-ping, Dropl. (in Iceland).

The word eyrendi or prendi, an errand, Mr. Cleasby has arranged as follows:—'1. intervallum respirandi, 2. stropha, 3. oratio, 4. negotium.' But in an inserted slip of paper he has reconsidered the matter. 'This word,' he says, 'in its present form appears derived from $\ddot{o}r = 6r = out of$, and $\ddot{o}nd$, and $\ddot{i} = breath$, in the same manner as the adjective ör-endr = exanimatus (sic), with which may be compared f-endr = alive, which likewise well accords with the signification No. 1. Nos. 2 and 3 might also perhaps be possibly explained as extension of the same signification, though they may also belong to what follows. But,' Mr. Cleasby adds, 'its more frequent use in the signification of affair or business, an errand (No. 4), and especially the passage 677. 352 [see arr, line 8], leave no doubt also of its original connection with arr, a messenger, G. airus, A. S. ærend, O. H. G. arunti, which the frequent use of -indi rather than -endi also favours. It is not improbable that originally there were two distinct words, which later, after a correct feeling of their origin had been lost, became confounded.' He then says, 'erendi as head-form, and all to be altered; árr probably lengthened from arr, Goth. airus, æendi, arunti.' Whence it appears that Cleasby intended to arrange the etymology of the word afresh, and in the same way as it now stands in this Dictionary. Eyrendi, qs. ör-endi, out of breath, is an old popular, home-made Icelandic etymology, which probably originated from the well-known passage in the Edda of Thor's drinking the sea dry until he became short of his 'eyrendi.' But nevertheless it is only a false etymology, as is borne out by comparison with the form the word takes in the sister languages (A. S., O. H. G.) To put 'intervallum respirandi' together with many valuable works from his library, nearly twenty years after his Dictionary was said to have been completed. Better far would it have been had they been restored on his death. As it was, a hard fate neither permitted him to complete worthily the great work which he had sketched out in these volumes, nor suffered the threads which had fallen from his hands to be taken up by those who were competent to unravel them till many years after his decease.

From the thankless task of contemplating the short-comings of others, it is grateful to turn to the part which Mr. Vigfusson has had in this undertaking. With the most praiseworthy determination, neither turning to the right nor to the left, he has pursued his course and fulfilled his task unflinchingly for seven years, during which he has resided in Oxford. Those only who, like the writer, were acquainted with the Cleasby transcripts as they came from Copenhagen, can tell how far more meritorious and scientific the printed Dictionary is than those undigested collections. Mr. Vigfusson might have been contented with restoring order and in imparting life and spirit into the rude mass which had been handed over to him; but in reality he did much more. He has embodied into the work the materials to be found in the Poetic Dictionary of Dr. Egilsson, and he has also largely availed himself of the quotations and references in the excellent Icelandic-Norse Dictionary of Fritzner, as well as the greater part of the Glossary of Möbius. Added to which he has sought words and phrases and proverbs from very many glossaries too numerous to The result has been that as the Oxford Dictionary now appears, about one-third of the references has been derived from the Cleasby transcripts, which were originally meant to illustrate, as we have already said, the golden age of prose Icelandic literature. Thus it is that we find copious quotations in them from such classical works as Niála, Grágás, and the Laxdæla and Egils Sagas. Besides these, the following list will pretty nearly exhaust the works quoted in the Cleasby collections, and from these the quotations were less copious:—the Heiðarvíga Saga, Hrafnkels Saga, Vápnfirðinga Saga, Ljósvetninga Saga, Víga Glúms Saga, Gísla Saga, Fóstbræðra Saga, Bjarnar Saga Hitdæla-kappa, Gunnlaugs Saga, Bandamanna Saga, Grettis Saga, the Sturlunga, Árna Biskups Saga, and the Sagas of some other Bishops extending to about one-third of the first volume of the Biskupa Sögur. So far as the Laws are concerned, besides the Grágás, quotations are made from the first and part of the second volume of Norges Gamle Love and the two Kristinréttir. Besides the domestic Sagas of Iceland mentioned above, quotations and references were made from and to the Fornmanna Sögur, the Fornaldar Sögur, and from the Skuggsjá, the Snorra Edda, and the Sæmunds Edda and Skálda, so far as the prose diction was concerned. In addition to these, copious use was made of some moral and biblical treatises and paraphrases, such as Stjórn and the Homilies, now printed, but then quoted from the MSS. 226, 619, as the head sense is to take the word by the wrong end. In Iceland all notion of the true origin of eyrendi became lost; arr, a messenger, being an obsolete poetical word, unknown except in the bad sense of an imp, devil, evil spirit,—a remnant, we believe, of Biblical sentences like Matth. xxv. 41, where, in the Icelandic version, arr happens to be used, whence the bad sense clung to the word even when detached and alone.—G. V.

and 677 in the Arna-Magnaean collection, as well as the Sagas and legends contained in the MSS. Nos. 623, 645, 655, and 656 in that collection*. In what may be called the translations and adaptations from the Romance cycle, references and quotations were made from the Alexanders Saga and the Strengleikar, as well as from the Flovents Saga, the Elis Saga, the Bærings Saga, under the common head of Arn. M. 580, a MS. which has not as yet been printed. These, with a few Deeds out of Finn Jónsson's Historia Ecclesiastica, vol. i. and ii. reaching down to the year 1400, and some of the Máldagar or Agreements of various monasteries in Iceland, complete the list of works made use of in Cleasby's own materials and in the transcripts made from them at Copenhagen after his death.

That they were quotations from a great body of works belonging to the best age of Icelandic literature cannot be contested, but it is also undeniable that a mass of works of the greatest importance to the philology of the language were entirely omitted. It must ever be remembered that a Dictionary has to deal with words, and not with literature, except as affording a matrix, so to speak, from which words may be extracted. A very ignoble author may thus afford a very precious word; and a Dictionary, in the true sense of the word, must open her doors to all her children of whatever age, whether of high or low degree, alike. principle, we find that this Dictionary, besides embodying the whole vocabulary of the poetic language, includes not only very many words contained in the modern language of Iceland, but also numberless quotations from Sagas and writings altogether ignored in the Cleasby transcripts. Not to speak of particular MSS., such as the Codex Regius, the Flateyjarbók, and Morkinskinna, we shall find a whole host of works quoted, to which reference is never made in Cleasby's collections. Such are the Barlaams Saga, the Legendary Olafs Saga, the Fagrskinna, the Tristrams Saga, the Rómverja Saga, the Parcevals Saga, the Ívents Saga, the Thomas Saga Erkibiskups, the Játvardar Saga, the Karlamagnús Saga, the Piðreks Saga, the Saga of Porstein the son of Sidu-Hall, and several others. Besides these, the end of the second volume and the whole of the third volume of Norges Gamle Love, the Diplomatarium Norvagicum, the remaining Sagas of the Bishops, and the Runic Inscriptions have been left unnoticed in the Cleasby transcripts. If we add to this that the quotations from such standard works as Landnáma, Eyrbyggja, Vatnsdæla, the Flóamanna Saga, the Rafns Saga, the Laurentius Saga, the Arons Saga, the Kristni Saga, the İslendingabók, the Orkneyinga Saga, the Maríu Saga, and many others were very scanty and imperfect,—and if we consider that no extracts were made from the ancient poetical literature, not even from the rhymed names of trees, fishes, birds, and nautical words, etc., in the Edda (Edda Gl.); that there were no quotations from any prose work after A.D. 1400 or 1350; nor from any work of the time of the Reformation downwards; and that no regard was had to the modern living language, which in every nation remains a true Lexicographical Cornucopia,—we must confess that a large field of unexplored country remained to cover.

^{*} Nearly all these vellum fragments—in Cleasby's life-time mere black and torn shreds—have now been published in the Maríu Sögur and the Postula Sögur by the learned industry of C. R. Unger in Christiania.

But besides this extended field of reference and quotation, Mr. Vigfusson has done much more than improve and arrange the Cleasby transcripts. So far as can be ascertained from the printed specimen, it was Cleasby's intention to pay particular attention to the etymology of the Icelandic language, and this intention has been followed in the new Dictionary, though there was scarcely a trace of etymology in the transcripts. At the head of the account of each word its etymology and affiliation with other tongues are given, and this information will be found to be both ample and reliable. There may be, as there must always be, differences of opinion as to the etymology of certain words—for the region of etymology contains some of the darkest paths to be found in the realm of philology. But in every case the etymologies here given are scientific and reasonable, which cannot be said of most Dictionaries. In a word, they are free from that wildness and extravagance which have so often brought this branch of philology into disrepute, and on the whole are stamped with a modesty and forbearance which speak loudly for the good sense and discretion of their author. Under another point of view this Dictionary presents a feature never seen, or at least far less prominently seen in other Dictionaries. This feature may be called the literary life of important Icelandic words. It contains an exhaustive collection of Icelandic proverbs, which are, as it were, the marrow of the language; and whenever a word occurs which has played a great part in the laws or literature or history of the Northern races, the fullest account of it is given. If the reader will refer to such natural words as 'Nótt,' 'Sól,' and 'Sumar,' such law terms as 'Lyritr,' 'Mál,' 'Mót,' and 'Ping,' such mythological compounds as 'Múspell' and 'Ragna-rök,' such religious and social words as 'Baugr,' 'Bauta-steinn,' 'Goði,' and 'Lögmaðr,' and to words of reckoning, such as 'Fimmt,' 'Tigr,' 'Hundrað,' and 'Púsund,' he will find not only an exact etymological account of each, but a whole history of the word in the various relations which it bore to the development of religious, social, and political feeling in the Icelandic Commonwealth. These instances have been taken almost at random, but what is true of them is true also of hundreds of words in this Dictionary, which in this characteristic is matchless of its kind.

And now nearly all has been said that could be said of the origin, progress, and completion of this Icelandic Dictionary. The writer, who has watched over it, so to speak, from its birth, and who has been, as it were, a second father to it ever since the untimely death of its natural parent, cannot but feel a glow of exultation as he beholds it issuing from the press in all the maturity and fulness which it at one time seemed hopeless that it could ever assume. In it the English student now possesses a key to that rich store of knowledge which the early literature of Iceland possesses. He may read the Eddas and the Sagas, which contain sources of delight and treasures of learning such as no other language but that of Iceland can furnish. But when he wanders through these fresh pastures, and his heart warms as he reads the mighty deeds of the gods and heroes, of the kings and earls and simple yeomen of the North, let him not forget to honour those to whom honour is due. The time and trouble bestowed upon this work would have been of little avail had it not found a hearty welcome from the Delegates of the Oxford Press. To those Delegates past and present, to the Bishop of Chester and Dean of Christ Church in particular, the thanks of all lovers of Northern learning are due for having so generously fostered this Icelandic Dictionary, and made it a child of this famous University.

To no one has the Dictionary been more indebted than to the Dean of Christ Church, so far as advice with respect to the English is concerned; but this acknowledgment really represents very feebly the services rendered by Dr. Liddell to the work. From the very first, not only did its general superintendence devolve on him, but for the whole time during which it was passing through the press, his assistance was invaluable, in correcting the English, in adding to the philological character of the work, and in suggesting alterations and improvements. In the autumn of 1870, indeed when the serious responsibilities of the Vice-Chancellorship were added to his other duties, Dr. Liddell was unable to bestow so much time on this labour; it then fell to Mr. Kitchin, who had also revised the sheets from the beginning, to supply his place, but to the very last every sheet as it was printed was first submitted to the Dean, then passed on with his suggestions to Mr. Kitchin, and finally settled by him with Mr. Vigfusson. For such constant and laborious care the thanks of all Icelandic scholars are due to Dr. Liddell and Mr. Kitchin, as without their supervision and advice the English portion of the work could not have attained its present excellence. In another point too the experience of the Dean of Christ Church was specially valuable; this was in the arrangement and simplification of what may be called the mechanical part of the Dictionary. The eye and hand so practised by the toil of preparing successive editions of Liddell and Scott's Greek Dictionary stood this Icelandic follower in good stead; and it may be affirmed without fear of contradiction that in no city or university in the world has the art and science of printing and publishing a Dictionary with the utmost economy of space, and at the same time with such distinct and beautiful typography, been carried to a greater pitch of perfection than at the University Press in Oxford.

To another well-known name in Oxford Mr. Vigfusson has been indebted for much valuable information and assistance. The Icelandic language is full of seafaring terms, as befits the speech of those hardy seamen who swarmed in early times on every sea in Europe. Throughout the whole literature it may be said that there is a wholesome smack of the salt sea, and mast and sail and rope and pump fill many a page in the Sagas of the North. When these sea terms had to be rendered into English there was but one in Oxford to whom Mr. Vigfusson could betake himself. This was Dr. Henry Acland, whose knowledge of the seafaring terms of England is as exact as his medical skill. To him, to Mr. Kitchin, to Mr. Coxe, and to many others in Oxford, Mr. Vigfusson desires through the writer to express his thanks for the help rendered on these and many other points, as well as for the uniform kindness with which they welcomed the stranger to Oxford, and relieved to the utmost of their power the monotony inevitably attending the execution of such work as that in which he was engaged. It will be a recompense to him for the labour which he has bestowed on this Dictionary, if it should be the means of attracting the attention of students in England to the literature of Iceland. Nor, though the wealth of the language lies in the early Sagas, is it to be supposed that the Icelandic of later days is not worthy of being known. In no portion of the world, in proportion to its population, has there been such continuous literary life as in that distant isle. Still more would he feel himself rewarded if his labours should be the means of restoring her Old Bible to Iceland. It would be for the good of all, and even for the beginner in Icelandic if he could find a sure stay to his first footsteps in the grand old Icelandic translation of the Bible by Bishop Gudbrand of the year 1584, which may compare with our own Authorised Version for purity and strength; but this version has, most unhappily for Iceland, been replaced in recent years by a paraphrastic translation, which it should be the aim of all true friends of piety and learning to discourage and disclaim. Were that pure and faithful version restored to its rightful position, the first footsteps of the student would be far more sure, and, strengthened by that literal translation, he might proceed to the Sagas and the Eddas, when he will certainly not regret the time and trouble spent in learning the language, especially when the time has been shortened and the labour lightened by the help of this Dictionary.

Nor, finally, should it be forgotten that even without its aid many Englishmen have become students of Icelandic. The late Sir Edmund Head, too early lost to these and other studies, Mr. Garnett of the British Museum, and Principal Barclay of Glasgow, were all of them in their day sound scholars in the language; Dr. Carlyle, in Edinburgh, is also well acquainted with Icelandic; and here in Oxford it will be enough to mention one living instance in the Right Hon. Robert Lowe, who, instead of burning his books, like too many of his contemporaries, when he turned his mind to politics, found time to enter into new fields of learning, and to possess them. To few Englishmen has it been granted to attain to such mastery both over the language of Iceland and the spirit of her people and literature. Nor can this Introduction be more fitly closed than by quoting an epigram by that skilful hand, and repeating in this University the greeting with which he addresses that island so smitten with snow-storms, so veiled in mist, so seamed with volcanic fire, so shaken by earthquakes as never Delos was shaken; and yet, in spite of all this, so mighty in the indomitable spirit of her sons, so subtle and far-sighted in her laws, and so free and independent for centuries against the tyranny of Norwegian kings:-

Χαίρε καὶ ἐν νεφέλησι καὶ ἐν νιφάδεσσι βαρείαις καὶ πυρὶ καὶ σεισμοῖς νῆσε σαλευομένη ἐνθάδε γὰρ βασιλῆος ὑπέρβιον ὕβριν ἀλύξας δῆμος Ὑπερβορέων, πόντου ἐπ' ἐσχατιῆ, αὐτάρκη βίστον θείων τ' ἐρεθίσματα Μουσῶν καὶ θεσμοὺς ἀγνῆς εὖρεν ἐλευθερίης.

GEORGE WEBBE DASENT.

RICHARD CLEASBY.

RICHARD CLEASBY was born on the 30th of November in the year 1797; the son of Stephen Cleasby of Craig House in Westmoreland, descended from a Yorkshire family of that name, derived from a village in that county, the by in the termination of which is a sure proof of original Scandinavian extraction. His mother was a daughter of George John of Penzance; and during the latter portion of their lives his parents lived at No. 3, Cornwall Terrace, Regent's Park, London. Cleasby was in business in the City as a Russia broker, and was altogether in affluent circumstances. He had one daughter, Mary, afterwards Mrs. Jones; and three sons: Richard, the eldest; Anthony, of Trinity College, Cambridge, who was Third Wrangler, and in the First Class of the Classical Tripos in 1827, now Sir Anthony Cleasby, and one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer; Stephen, a third brother, who came between the two, died in November, 1835, and the intelligence of his death called forth a remarkable letter from Richard to Anthony in December of that year. It seems to have been the determination of Mr. Stephen Cleasby that his eldest son should be associated with him in pursuits in which he took a just pride; and so it was that Richard Cleasby was neither at a Public School nor one of the Universities; but, after a sound classical education at a school in the neighbourhood of London, where he gained a love of learning which was the foundation of that philological knowledge for which he was afterwards so well known, he entered his father's counting-house at the early age of fifteen, and for a while seemed entirely devoted to commercial pursuits. The regular and industrious habits engrafted in him and both his brothers by the example of the father, whom they all loved and respected, coupled with great natural ability, would have made success certain in any sphere of life; but of him it may be said, that while his hand was on the desk in the City, his heart was away among his books in his library at home; his tastes for literary and philological knowledge grew with his growth and strengthened with his strength, until, as the drudgery of the merchant's office became irksome to him, he gave up business in the year 1824, and obtained his father's consent to reside abroad on an ample allowance, that he might devote himself entirely to his literary labours. One great advantage he had over many They are often tied and tethered, as it were, to one field, through want of means to change their abode, and so are apt to grow one-sided and undeveloped in all aspects but one. The case of Richard Cleasby was altogether different. He had both the power to roam, and the will to make his flitting from one city or country to another a means, not of idle amusement, but of advancement in sound learning and fruitful He was not one of those butterflies which pass from flower to flower, and gain nothing at the end of the day but death; but rather like the bee, which seems to spend its time in the same way, and yet returns to the hive laden with honey. Thus, shortly after leaving England, Richard Cleasby took up his residence at Geneva, where he stayed a while to practise himself in French, and then crossed the Alps into Italy, where he settled down at Florence, and spent more than two years in the study of the ancient languages, and of Italian, in which he acquired such mastery as both to speak and write it with fluency and elegance, as draughts of letters in Italian still remaining among his correspondence abundantly testify. About the year 1830 he recrossed the Alps, and established himself at Munich, where he worked indefatigably both at philology and philosophy under Schelling, then the great master of the transcendental school, who had caught the torch of thought as it fell from the dying In philology, Massmann and Schmeller, well known as the author hand of Kant. of the Dictionary on the Dialects of Bavaria, were his teachers; but in the first period of his residence at Munich, philosophy rather than philology seems to have been the object which he had in view, and the earlier volumes of the copious Diaries which he kept from this time to his death, and which are now before the writer of this notice, are full of notes of Schelling's lectures, who possessed a greater power of fascinating his pupils even than his great rival, Hegel himself. But though he worked faithfully and laboriously at his philosophy, that regular practical mind was not one to sink itself altogether in cobweb speculations on German metaphysics. Philology afforded him a firmer footing, and, having once taken his stand on that rock of learning, he clung to it to the end. For several years he remained abroad, deaf to the entreaties of his friends to return home, pursuing his favourite study in all parts of Germany, which he visited now on foot, and now on horseback, until there was no district to which he had not penetrated, and no dialect over which he had not attained a mastery. His acquirements in this respect were well known to the great German scholars, now dead and gone. Schmeller, his old teacher, had the greatest respect for his judgment, as is shewn by his letters among Richard Cleasby's correspondence; and Jacob Grimm told the writer, in the year 1844, that no one knew the dialects of Germany, as a whole, more profoundly than Cleasby. 'Some of us,' he said, 'know one or two dialects better, but Richard Cleasby knows them all, as his leisure and means have allowed him to traverse the country in every direction and make them his own.'

But though thus laborious in the pursuit of knowledge, it must not be supposed that Richard Cleasby was a mere bookworm. The same Diaries which attest his unwearying efforts to acquire knowledge are filled with passages which prove his keen enjoyment of society and his delight in the natural beauties of the countries in which he was from time to time a sojourner. He was never so happy as when, after months of patient study, he broke away with some congenial companion from Leipzig or Dresden, or from Munich, the capital of his choice, to take a pedestrian tour in Saxon Switzerland or in the Bavarian Tyrol. In later years, after he had settled down in Denmark, he sought relaxation from his philological labours in the smiling neighbourhood of Copenhagen, and, as he is careful to note the fall of the first winter's snow and the pinching cold of Yule, so in the early spring the first chirping of the chaffinch and the coming of the welcome swallow are not lost upon him. With literary men his acquaintance both in Germany and the North was most extensive, and it may safely be said that there was no learned man in either country whom he had not seen and known. Most of his friends, both at home and abroad, have now ceased to live, but still, in England, it will be sufficient to mention the names of Sir John Shaw Lefevre and Henry Reeve to prove that, though he was best known to foreigners, there were not wanting those among his own countrymen who yet survive to appreciate his worth. It would take volumes to exhaust the notices of men and manners and science that might be drawn from twelve thick volumes of Diaries; but the following extracts from them and from his letters will at once present a sketch of Richard Cleasby's life, and shew what manner of man he was. The first years of his foreign pilgrimage must be passed over lightly. Thus, though in the years 1824, 1825, and 1826 he was in Italy and Switzerland, we only pause at the 21st of March in the last year to note his words on entering Rome:

'I entered the city standing, and with my head uncovered, a feeble tribute to the memory of the great writers and men of all descriptions whom she nursed. I had Byron in my hand, and felt the force of his beautiful line—

"Oh Rome, my country, city of the soul!"'

On the 18th of May he makes the following entry:

'Wrote a very long letter to my father in answer to his, telling him that, as far as my present feelings went, I had no idea of returning to business; that I was in a few days about to leave Florence for Carlsbad by the Tyrol.... and that I should require a letter either on Dresden or Leipzig.'

This is the first mention of his many visits to Carlsbad, rendered necessary by rheumatism and an affection of the liver, which seemed to yield to no other treatment.

On the 7th of June we find him for the first time at Munich, and on the 16th at Carlsbad, consulting Dr. Leo, and confessing that the place would be much more agreeable if he could speak German. On the 22nd of July he left Carlsbad 'without regret,' and went by way of Prague to Dresden, where he paid due homage to the pictures, of which he seems to have been an excellent judge. On the 12th of August he left Dresden for Berlin, arriving on the 13th. He did not make a very long stay in the Prussian capital, for on the 19th he was at Leipzig, and on the 21st attended a lecture in Latin on Theocritus, by Hermann, the famous Greek Professor, of whom an entry in the Diary gives us the following glimpse:

'Hermann lectured in Latin, in which language indeed almost the whole business of the University of Leipzig is carried on... There were about 70 young men present, a sadly raffish-looking set; Hermann himself, with a stand-up collar, blue coat, and woollen winter-looking waistcoat, had all the appearance of a little mechanic—a man one would expect to see at a turning-machine.'

On the 22nd he left for Dresden, where he determined to learn German, and for that purpose settled at Tharandt, about ten miles from the capital, in the house of the clergyman, a charming man named Prietsch. This was on the 29th of August, where he stayed, delighted with his master and the neighbourhood, till the 30th of February, when a letter from Florence induced him to recross the Alps. At Florence he stayed till the 5th of April, 1827; receiving there the news of his brother Anthony's success at Cambridge, and also a letter as to his mother's health, which induced him to return at once to England. With all his generosity, of which these Diaries contain many proofs, he was not the man to submit to imposition, and in this journey at Dijon he makes the following entry:

'Had the clerk of the diligence up before the Judge de Paix, and, for insolence relative to the mistake with my portmanteau, made him pay the expenses of my detention here, 24 francs; got my portmanteau and went to Paris by diligence.'

On arriving in London he found that his return had been caused by a false alarm. After spending two months in London, and seeing in particular the Stafford and Grosvenor galleries, Cleasby took 'a very feeling parting from his parents, and left London for Liverpool and Dublin.' Passengers who now cross from Liverpool to Dublin and find the voyage long, may be consoled at finding that it then took 56 hours to make the passage. On the 15th of August he left Dublin for Bordeaux, where he arrived on the 19th. On the morning of the 20th he notes:

'The moment I went out I felt enamoured with the fine Southern climate. Oh, such a change from Albion's and Erin's shores!'

From Bordeaux he made his way back to Italy, visiting Naples and the South, returning to Rome for the winter. There he stayed till the 18th of March, 1828, on which day he notes:

'I left Rome with Dr. Bromfield in the carriage of a vetturino, in which were an actress, a dancer, a Bolognese mezzo-litterato, two canaries, a parcel, and at times a poodle-dog, though he was in general outside; and proceeded to Ronciglione, where we slept, and ought to have supped, if there had been anything to eat.'

He was now on his way to Vienna, via Trieste, seeing Pola and its amphitheatre on the road. On the 12th of April he was in Vienna, and on the 22nd he left it for Dresden, where he arrived on the 24th, and went immediately to his old quarters with the clergyman at Tharandt; but after staying there not quite a month, he was seized with a complicated attack of liver and rheumatism, which reduced him 'to an almost total privation of the use of his limbs, being unable to walk without a stick, in much pain and scarcely able to stand upright.' In this condition it was not wonderful that 'Carlsbad was considered essential to his recovery,' and that we find him there again on the 1st of June. On the 7th of July he left that bath, and after staying till the 30th of July in Dresden, diligently learning German, in which he now became proficient, he started for home on that day, reaching London on the 12th of October.

The object of this visit to England was to pass the winter in Edinburgh in the study of Scotch metaphysics. There he attended Sir William Hamilton's lectures, as well as those of Professor Wilson, Dr. Chalmers, and Professors Pillans, Leslie, and Ritchie. The first he considered not a very pleasing lecturer, though a man of great erudition and information. Dr. Chalmers reminded him of the pictures of Luther, and his vast powers of eloquence and argument quite enchanted him. With all these, as well as with Jeffrey, Cleasby became intimate. On the 1st of April, 1829, his work in Edinburgh was at an end, and he thus sums up his experiences:

'I cannot take leave of Edinburgh without the expression of my extreme satisfaction as to the manner in which I have passed this winter. My leading object was to attend the Moral Philosophy Class and get some insight into the Scotch philosophy and metaphysics. Wilson, though a clever and amiable man, is not, I think, exactly calculated for the Chair he fills. He has a great deal of talent, but it is of a poetical cast; his imagination seems to hold the reins. I cannot, however, but say that he made from time to time some very good and genuine observations displaying considerable insight into human nature, especially as to the passions. His appearance is very commanding, and the index of his mind; it resembles much more an Apollo than a Socrates.... As to Wilson's political economy, I regret to say he had neglected to get up the subject; and certainly, upon the whole, cut but a poor figure, often coming before us quite unprepared.... Chalmers and Leslie seem to be the great lights.... I consider Edinburgh a most desirable residence; it has almost all the advantages of a capital without the follies and excesses.'

On the 2nd of April he left Edinburgh with his friend Forbes, a son of Lord Medwyn, on a visit to Abbotsford. He was delighted, as so many were, with Sir Walter Scott, and left him on the 4th, copying, before he went, the following epitaph in Melrose Churchyard:

'The earth goeth on the earth glistering like gold, The earth goeth to the earth sooner than it wold; The earth buildeth on the earth castles and towers, The earth sayeth to the earth, all shall be ours.'

On the 11th of April he was at his father's house in Cornwall Terrace, Regent's Park, having taken a peep at the family property in Westmoreland on his way south.

Fortified with his Scotch metaphysics, he was now ready to face German philosophy. On the 25th of April he left London, and on the 8th of May was back at Dresden and Tharandt. After studying steadily till the middle of August, on the 21st of that month he started on a tour in Poland, from which he returned on the 16th of September, highly pleased with his journey, but still more delighted to be back 'in delightful Saxony.' In Dresden he remained till the year was out, entering in his Diary on the 31st of December the following note:

'Since my return from Poland I have been diligently occupied in the study of history, especially German.'

The years 1830, 1831, and 1832 were spent for the most part by Cleasby in Germany in the earnest pursuit of knowledge. At Dresden he remained during the early part of 1830, continuing his German studies, with occasional outbreaks for recreation. Thus, on the 8th of March, he sets out for a pedestrian tour to Leipzig, distant about 55 English miles, which he and his friends accomplished in two days. On the 11th he attended a lecture in philosophy by Professor Krug, and 'Was not a little surprised to see him mount the desk in regular cavalry spurs, which rang so as he came in that I thought a dragoon had entered the room. He is a man, I suppose, towards 60 years old, his physiognomy serious, his delivery clear and impressive, perhaps a little too mannered. At eleven o'clock I heard the animated little Greek professor Hermann, likewise towards 60 years old, who also lectured in spurs and a drab great-coat. He speaks an easy clear Latin. The Agememnon of Æschylus was the subject, and he appeared to illustrate it ably. I heard Wachsmuth on Universal History, a man 40 or 45 years old: he maintained a constant smile, almost a laugh, was full of wit in his remarks, and so restless that he could scarcely remain a minute in the same position. Had his French pronunciation been more perfect I should rather have taken him for a Frenchman than a German. After that I went and saw the "Convict," as it is called; this is an immense old hall, in which 300 or 400 poor hungry students, mostly theologians, are fed twice a day at Government cost; mid-day they get meat and vegetables, in the evening a soup, and what they call a "brei," i.e. a sort of porridge, and each a loaf about the size of an English twopenny loaf.'

On the 15th of March he was back at Dresden, by Eilwagen, where he resumed his studies. On the 5th of May his friend Professor Chalybæus took him to see Tieck and to hear him read, as he was in the habit of doing every Sunday evening to a select circle of twenty or thirty persons. On the 15th he set off with the same friend for a pedestrian tour in Saxon Switzerland, and on the 17th he quitted Dresden with much regret. He was now on his way home again, passing by Cassell, Göttingen, Brunswick, Hamburg, Bremen, and Holland, taking the steamer for London at Rotterdam, and arriving on the 14th of June. In England Cleasby stayed till the outbreak of the French Revolution in that year; as soon as it was thought safe to visit France, he crossed on the 17th of August from Brighton to Dieppe, and made his way by Rouen to Paris. There he was surprised to see no traces of any recent tumult or excitement. The only thing unusual which he seems to have remarked was the utter absence of priests in the streets. On the 17th of August he left Paris for Nancy and Strasburg, and, crossing the Rhine, arrived at Leipzig on the 4th of September, just in time to see a little riot in the streets, in which, while the troops remained inactive, the populace entered the houses of obnoxious persons and destroyed their furniture. On the 5th Cleasby notes:

'The police establishment ceased yesterday to exist, and all military interference seems to be forbidden.'

On the 6th he left Leipzig, and travelled to Munich by way of Baireuth and Nuremberg, and on the 12th he reached the Bavarian capital, which ever after he considered his head-quarters in Germany, and to which, in his latest years, he fondly imagined that he should return after he had finished his labours in the North. His first friend in Munich was the eccentric Hoffmann, who shewed him all the lions which he had not already seen, and introduced him to many literary men. By this time Cleasby was a very good German scholar, and he began at once to attend Schelling's lectures on Philosophy, and to study Old German under Massmann and Schmeller, with the last of whom he contracted a lasting friendship. On the 16th of November he notes:

'I heard yesterday Professor Schelling deliver his introductory lecture to the course he intends reading this season on the Philosophy of Mythology, in which he expressed the deepest regret at the declining state of the Gymnasia, i.e. the schools where the youths are prepared for the universities. . . . He received a treble "Lebe Hoch" on appearing, and was much moved in reading the first part of his lecture.'

On the 29th of December he writes:

'There had been a little row with a few tipsy students on Christmas Eve, which the Government foolishly made a great fuss about, and pretended to see in it a Revolution, so that the military have been ordered out, and the National Guard placed on duty at once. Several people were hacked about by the Cuirassiers, and the University ordered to be closed for two months; however, this has been countermanded. The absurd conduct of the King and Government on this occasion is enough to make any one desire a change in the order of things.'

On the 5th of January, 1831, he notes:

'I dined with a large party of Professors, who met to-day and celebrated Schelling's birthday, but "Deutscher Ernst" was too leading an ingredient in the assembly, and it went off heavily. He is 56 years old.'

On the 3rd of March the first mention occurs of Schmeller's name: 'Walked with Schmeller' to Hesloe, and dined there.' On the 1st of May he does not omit to mention the annual festival of tapping the 'Bock' beer, which he found admirable at the price of a penny a pint. On the 2nd he notes:

'Schelling commenced his lectures for the summer half-year, continuing the Philosophy of Mythology. Oken did the same, but said, as only 4 or 5 had inscribed their names, he should not continue to lecture unless all those present, about 30 or 40, did the same; the subject is Natural History. The students here, many from poverty, many from shabbiness, are excessively shy about paying the fees.'

Later on in his Diaries he mentions the fact that he found Ranke and other professors at Berlin lecturing to very scanty classes.

On the 8th of May he notes that his physician, Dr. Walther, had recommended a new cure for his old ailments: this was a Kräuter-Kur, or herbal course of medicine, according to which he would have to drink, every morning before breakfast, half a pint of a decoction of dandelion and other herbs. But the end of this Krüuter-Kur and of the many Trauben and Molken-Kurs which he underwent was that he was ordered again to Carlsbad, where we find him drinking the waters on the 12th of June, on which occasion Cleasby notes: 'Found there were 13 English here.' On the 18th of July he left Carlsbad, and was back at Munich on the 24th, whence he wrote to his father, telling him that he had made up his mind to go to Greece with Thiersch; for then all the world in Bavaria, it must be remembered, were mad to go with King Otho to his new kingdom. But preparatory to this expedition, which, had it been carried out, might have changed the whole tenor of his life, Cleasby set off on the 20th of August with Constantin Höfler, a young German, for the Tyrol, Switzerland, and Upper Italy. The reason why the trip to Greece was abandoned is given in the following letter to his mother:

'ZURICH, Sept. 18th, 1831.—My dear mother, I wrote my dear father at the beginning of the month from Tyrol, expressive of my disappointment at being prevented visiting Greece, from the numerous difficulties of quarantine etc. occasioned by cholera morbus in the north and south, and plague in the east... It was, notwithstanding, with great reluctance that I relinquished my plan ..., for I confess that after the manner in which my life has been employed for some time past, I look upon a visit to classical Greece as a great desideratum. We bachelors with a literary turn of mind are in our way like the good folks in the City,—the more we have, the more we want; but still the circle of my perambulations is nearly completed, and I look forward to setting myself down permanently by your side at no very distant period, but wish, if possible, not to have to come home in the mean time, in order to avoid those terrible parting scenes which have been more than once so painful.'

Then he goes on to describe how he had consoled his disappointment at not seeing Greece by a tour through the Tyrol, Switzerland, and the Italian Lakes, and says his address till further advices will still be Munich.

On the 27th of October he returned to his old quarters in that city, and on the 1st of November dined with Dr. Martius, Professor of Botany, where he 'Heard the famous amateur piano-player, Mendelsohn, quite a young man....he executed some sonatas of Beethoven in a style perfectly wonderful.'

On the 2nd he resumed his Greek with Joseph Müller, and on the 22nd of November he notes:

'We began to-day with Professor Schmeller to read the Anglo-Saxon version of the Gospel of St. Matthew belonging to the 7th century, to be continued every Wednesday.'

At Munich he remained hard at work till the 23rd of April, 1832, when he started with Louis Halm for a pedestrian tour to Gastein and Salzburg, returning on the 9th of May, and almost immediately set off for England, via Frankfort and the Rhine, where we find him, in London, on the 20th of that month. Nothing particular occurred on this visit to England, except that his horrible Krüuter-Kur followed him home, for we find him taking every morning half a pint of a mixture of dandelion, ground-ivy, and white horehound, prepared by a herbalist in Covent Garden. At the same time he procured from Dr. Bandinel, of the Bodleian Library, a copy of the Anno Lied for his friend Baron Lassberg. On the 4th of June he was off again for Germany, and on the 24th of the month was back at the everlasting Carlsbad drinking the Sprüdel. On the 29th of July his cure was over, and he was at Munich attending Schelling's lectures. On the 15th of August Cleasby notes:

'Schelling closed his lectures on the Philosophy of Revelation, completing, with his Philosophy of Mythology, an entire and perfect course. I gave a crown dollar (4s. 6d.) towards a serenade for him this evening.'

On the 30th of the month Cleasby set off for a lengthened tour in the Austrian Tyrol, Styria, and the Upper Engadine, from whence he returned on the 5th of October. Philosophy rather than Philology seems still his favourite study; his Diary is full of Schelling's lectures, and on the 29th of November he writes:

'Schelling told me to-day, that during the troubles of the war in Germany, when there was scarcely any telling what might be the result, he had formed a plan for going to England to give instruction in the Latin language, having excogitated a method by which to teach it in half the usual time.'

On the 6th of December he notes:

'Otto, the second son of the King of Bavaria, King of Greece, left Munich this morning to take possession of his new kingdom.'

In Munich Cleasby remained till the year turned and spring came again, and on the 22nd of April, 1833, he set off on a lengthened tour through Austria and Hungary, in which latter country he was treated with marked distinction by Graf Mailath and Pyrker the Archbishop of Erlau. Having covered an immensity of ground, he was back at Munich on the 26th of May. On the 8th of June he wrote to his father, saying that he should return to England by way of Carlsbad, Dresden, Berlin, Westphalia, and Holland. The 10th of that month was a day of leave-taking at Munich, where Cleasby had now concluded the studies which he deemed necessary to repair a neglected education. On that day he dined with his friend Martius—

'Whose general kindness, together with the agreeable society of his excellent wife and three charming little daughters, have had a great share in causing me to leave Munich with so much regret. My excellent friend Schmeller was likewise there, a sterling character of a sort at present rare in the extreme.'

On the 19th he was again at Carlsbad, drinking steadily. There, on the 8th of July, he notes:

'I received a packet from Andreas Schmeller of Munich, containing, as a present, his Mundarten Baierns, and other works.'

It was at this visit that he made the acquaintance of Bishop Tegner, who talked philosophy with him, and urged him to visit Sweden, and especially Vexio, where his see was. It is evident also, from later letters to Schmeller, that the two friends had discussed this Scandinavian expedition, which, besides visiting Tegner, had in view the famous Codex Argenteus at Upsala. On the 6th of August Cleasby reached Berlin, and presented letters of introduction to Von Raumer, Professor Ehrenberg, Graff the Old German philologer, Lachmann, and Boeckh. On the 7th he heard Lachmann lecture on the Niebelungen at 8 A.M.; at 11, Ranke, Professor of History, the class consisting of only four persons besides himself. By all these celebrities, and especially by Ehrenberg, Graff, and Ranke, Cleasby was courteously received and hospitably entertained, and on the 16th left for Magdeburg, taking with him the impression that Berlin and her inhabitants, as compared with Munich and South Germany, might be described as 'vornehm und traurig.' From Magdeburg he passed into the Hartz country, and on the 22nd ascended the Brocken. On Sunday the 25th he was at Göttingen, where he found the students 'very rough and unpolished in their manners,' and the University much reduced in number, having sunk from 1500 to 850, chiefly in consequence of the political troubles of 1831. Here comes a very interesting entry in the Diary:

'I presented Schmeller's letter to Jacob Grimm, the librarian, and was received in the most friendly manner. He seems an excellently amiable, mild, good creature, perfectly wrapped up in his grammatical enquiries. He invited me to pass the evening with him and his brother William, who is married, and an uncommonly animated jovial fellow. They both live in the same house, and in such harmony and community that one might almost imagine the children were common property. William read us a sort of farce written in the Frankfort dialect, depicting the "malheurs" of a rich Frankfort tradesman on a holiday jaunt on Sunday. It was very droll, and he read it admirably.'

On the 27th Cleasby left Göttingen, making his way through Westphalia to the Rhine. At Bonn he called one morning on A. W. Schlegel, and found he was in his bath. In the afternoon he called again, and observed—

'A great effeminacy of manner about him. He is a vast crier out against the system of the English Universities, seemed dissatisfied that the geologist Buckland and the like should be D.D.'s in holy orders, and that on the other hand a good classic and a tory was all that was required of a bishop; then found fault with the fixed salaries of professors, when all got alike, whether superior or not; and said professors were like players, the best went where they got the most money.'

On the 18th of September Cleasby crossed from Ostend to Dover, and arrived in London the following day, where he made the following entries in his Diary:

'Sept. 19th, 1833.—After returning yesterday evening from the Continent with a view to make some lengthened stay in England after my long peregrinations, I got on to the coach this morning at Dover, about 8 o'clock, for London, and arrived about 5 P.M. in Cornwall Terrace, where I found my father, mother, and sister in excellent health. Stephen came from the City later in the evening in his accustomed steadiness of garb, and Anthony was in Yorkshire occupied as a revising barrister. I cannot say that I approached without some misgivings the over-grown Metropolis,—the head and centre of all ceaseless toiling after wealth and endless striving after rank and consequence, the matchless emporium of smoke and fog,—for after the many quiet winters passed in philosophical research, and the tranquillity of literary pursuit in the less aspiring circles of German capitals, I feared that the rush and bustle and ambitious contendings of the great city would be sadly at variance with the tendency of my feelings and the whole tenor of my mind.'

'Oct. 12th, 1833.—Paid Mr. Henry Reeve a visit at No. 3, Well Walk, Hampstead, and presented him with a Bocksbeutel tobacco-bag. I bought for him in Pesth two Debrecziner pipes, for which he paid me my disbursement of five shillings.'

'March 1st, 1834.—Dined with Reeve at Hampstead,' and on the 4th 'wrote to Schmeller, and begged Martius would remember me to Schelling, and say I should have long ago written him if "Herr Reeve mir nicht gesagt hätte, er stände mit ihm in Briefwechsel und hätte ihm über den hiesigen Standpunkt der Philosophie benachrichtiget; ich kann nicht sagen, dass die Deutsche Schule sehr schnellen Fortschritt macht. Die Engländer begeben sich in das Transcendentale erstaunlich langsam."

On the 22nd of March, 1834, he is in Oxford, on which day he says,

'I accompanied Mr. Thorpe (Benjamin), the Anglo-Saxon scholar, to the Clarendon Press, which is an enormous building, where various works in Greek, Latin, and English were in course of printing by hand-presses, there being no machines at present; but what most surprised me was the enormous room, I think above 200 feet long, in which nothing but Bibles and Prayer Books are printed: there seemed to be 70 or 80 men or more hard at work, and yet all they could do from morning till night is scarcely capable of meeting the demand.'

As yet he knows nothing of Icelandic, and is uncertain whether he will go to the North. Thorpe begs him if he went to Denmark to bring him a copy of 'Hervara Saga, edit. Rafen.'

On the 31st of March, 1834, he wrote a long letter in German to his friend Schmeller in Munich, giving an account of the collation of certain Latin MSS. in Oxford. In it he says:

'Vielleicht kann ich diesen Frühling die Wahlfahrt nach Scandinavien nicht machen; dann komme ich wahrscheinlich nach Carlsbad.'

However, this doubt was solved in the affirmative, for on the 14th of May he left London by steamer for Hamburg, and on the 21st he paid his first visit to Copenhagen by steamer from Travemunde through the Danish Isles, and is 'much struck by the width of the streets and spaciousness of the large open squares and the general large scale of the houses.' Here his banker, Herr Brandt, 'Informed' him 'on the 23rd that such was the abundance of wheat from the total absence of export that the price had fallen below that of rye, so that the common people were beginning to ask

Digitized by GOOGLE

after wheaten bread....; had not the Russian corn crops failed last season there is no saying what would have been the price of grain.'

On the 24th of May he set off for Elsinore, where he makes the following entry in his Diary, shewing how much he had yet to learn in Northern philology:

'Helsing-oer from the corner of land being in the shape of an ear; thus, formerly the Sound was called Ore-sund.'

Thence he crossed to Helsingborg in twenty-six minutes, and, landing in Sweden, at once fell into the agonies of their paper money:

'Got 100 dollar note, about £8, changed into smaller money, for which I got a bundle of shabby rags fitter in bulk to put under one's arm than into one's pocket.'

The cheapness of Swedish posting was, however, much to his mind, and with great courage he made his way to Stockholm posting, though quite ignorant of the language, and finding no one who could speak German. At Vexiö he stopped to respond to the invitation of Tegner, the great Swedish poet, whom he had met at Carlsbad the year before, and who had warmly besought him to visit him at his episcopal residence; but to his disappointment he adds,

'I found him so depressed in spirits and suffering in body that he seemed to have forgotten all his promises about Schelling's philosophy, etc., complained of being too unwell to attend the Diet at Stockholm, where he ought to have been, and let me leave Vexio without paying me any other attention than giving me a cup of coffee and giving me one of the teachers of the gymnasium as an interpreter.'

At Stockholm Cleasby arrived on this his first visit on the 30th of May, and was much struck, as every one must be, with the beauty of the city and its lovely 'Djurgård,' or park. After making several acquaintances, whom after intimacy ripened into friends, he left on the 8th for Upsala, and admired the quaint old wooden town, the grand cathedral, and the library. In it was contained the great object of his admiration, the Gothic Gospels of Ulphilas, with which he was to be better acquainted in In this his first visit he remarks that Professor Schröder, the chief librarian, though he received him with remarkable civility and attention, could not conceal his anxiety when his visitor took the Codex Argenteus in his hand. On this occasion there was no question of a collation of the manuscript. In fact, it appears from sundry entries in the Diary as to linseed, rape, corn, etc., that this Northern visit of Cleasby was as much commercial as literary. After visiting the iron districts, Cleasby returned to Stockholm and crossed the country to Norway, starting from Stockholm on the 18th of June, and reaching the Norwegian capital on the 23rd, and finding, as he crossed the frontier, how very much dearer posting was in the one country than in the After seeing a little of the country round Christiania, Cleasby went by steamer to Göttenburg, which he reached on the 1st of July, and having made some commercial enquiries, and seen a little of the neighbourhood, he returned to Copenhagen on the 10th of that month. Here he notes:

'After seeing the other Northern capitals I was struck with surprise at seeing Copenhagen again, which has all the solidity and traffic and shop conveniences of the largest German capitals, and is, I think, more varied and picturesque than most of them.'

"

On the 12th of July he took his first lesson in Danish, and set himself seriously to work to acquire the language, as well as to drink the imitation Carlsbad waters, which were now so necessary to his existence.

At Copenhagen or in its neighbourhood Cleasby remained for nearly a year, only leaving it for a month in the autumn to take a grape-cure on the Rhine; on the return from which he visited the Grimms at Cassel, when Jacob gave him a letter of introduction to Finn Magnusen, which he delivered on the 27th of October, making the following entry:

'I delivered Grimm's parcel to Finn Magnusen, whom I found in a very brown-studious looking room and mood; but he was very obliging. He has all the appearance of a dry "Gelehrter."

On the 24th of November Cleasby moved from the Hotel Royale, where he had hitherto stayed, into lodgings in the Kongens Nytorv. On the 12th of December he dined with Öhlenschläger, 'who,' he says, 'at my instigation, and with some assistance from me in English, translated part of Moore's Lallah Rookh.' On a former occasion, in making the poet's acquaintance, Cleasby says of him:

'Öhlenschläger is an exceedingly jovial, open-hearted man, but with more of the sensualist in his look than of the poet of deep feeling. His conversation is light, and even almost flimsy at times.... He related to me that he had applied to Sir Walter Scott about publishing one of his romances in England, which had been very well received in Denmark and Germany, and wished to have £100 for the copyright; but Sir Walter wrote back to say there was no entrepreneurs for foreign novels. It was before Sir Walter's misfortunes, and Öhlenschläger seemed to think he ought to have sent him the £100, as a sum of no kind of consequence to him and of much assistance to a fellow-poet. Such is the generous open nature of Öhlenschläger's disposition, that I doubt not he would have done it under similar circumstances; but in this he belongs no doubt to the few, and not to the many.'

On the 25th of February, 1835, Cleasby looked out for lodgings for a month or so at Roeskilde, 'in order to read in quietude,' and, having found them, went thither on the 3rd of March. On the 2nd occurs the first mention of Rasn's name in the Diary, thus:

'Paid Mr. Rasn, the Secretary of the Nordiske Oldskrift Selskab, the see on becoming a member, being 25 specie dollars. I was elected on the 31st of January. Rasn and Finn Magnusen were proposer and seconder.'

On the 3rd of April he returned from Roeskilde, and on the 23rd started for Lund in Scania, in Sweden, at which University he spent about a month learning Swedish, as he had already learnt Danish, and becoming intimate with the Professors Reuterdahl, Agardh, and, though last not least, Nilson, so well known for his geological and ethnological writings. On the 10th of June Cleasby left Copenhagen for his annual visit to Carlsbad, by way of Stettin, Berlin, and Dresden, reaching it on the 15th. He had not intended to return home this year, but at the close of his cure he received such an alarming letter from his brother Anthony as to his brother Stephen's health that he came home immediately, arriving in London on the 22nd of July. His brother was then at Malvern, being threatened with consumption. He found him better than he had expected, and, after staying in England till the 25th of September, left for Germany and Dresden, where he arrived on the 5th of October, and he went into lodgings for the winter. Early in November he heard of his brother Stephen's death, which is thus commemorated in his Diary:

'November 14th.—This is the severest day with which it has as yet pleased Providence to visit me. I lost my dear and much-loved brother Stephen. He died at Cheltenham between 7 and 8 A.M. Multis ille bonis, etc.'

Further on he describes this bereavement as 'A loss quite irreparable; a rapid decline tore him away from us, a visitor which all former circumstances of his life and of the family never led us to dream of. He himself has made a change for the better; it is his mourning relations who suffer. He was in his thirty-seventh year.'

Later, on the 15th of December, Cleasby wrote a long letter to his brother Anthony, in which he says:

'The loss of such a brother cannot be repaired, but we must seek by all possible unity and mutual approximation in desire and deed, and by clinging closely to each other, to close up as far as possible the cruel gap which the envious Giant has made in our ranks; not unreminded by what has happened of the uncertainty of the period during which it may be granted to us to range in the already diminished space of fraternal love and friendship.'

Whether it were that the death of his brother gave his mind a more serious turn, it is plain from the Diary that Richard Cleasby studied divinity and associated with clergymen during this winter. His friends, the Hof-Prediger Franke and the Ober-Hof-Prediger Ammon, were those whose society he most sought in Dresden; nor did he forget to visit his old friend Pastor Prietsch at Tharandt. On the 3rd of January, 1836, he left Dresden for Leipzig, where he had many friends; but the religious turn of his mind is best shewn by the following little entry on the 11th of January:

'Took a young man of the name of Stegman to assist me in an attentive reading of the Bible.'

Old Professor Hermann was still alive, and Cleasby gave him a memorandum which Thiersch had left with him at Munich in 1833. At Leipzig he stayed engaged in his theological studies till the 18th of May, when he went leisurely home by Jena, the Odenwald, Heidelberg, the Rhine, and the Moselle. Treves and Luxemburg were duly visited, and on the 8th of June he crossed to Dover. In the winter his brother Anthony had married Miss Fawkes. On the 3rd of July is the following entry:

'Dr. Lappenberg of Hamburgh, Brönsted of Copenhagen, and the Librarian Falkenstein of Dresden dined with us, and met Reeve.'

On the 27th of August Cleasby left Dover for Ostend. On the 19th of September we find him at Munich:

'This town, to which so many agreeable recollections are attached, as well as regards the acquisition of knowledge as that of sincere friends.'

Here he went into lodgings in the house of his friend Professor Martius, and on the 14th of October began reading Mœso-Gothic with his friend Professor Schmeller. At Munich he remained till May, 1837, hard at work; and early in that month took a tour in the Bavarian Tyrol, during which he stayed at Kreuth to take a whey (molken) cure. On the 3rd of July he returned to Munich, 'very well satisfied with the effects of the molken.' On the 2nd of September he set off with his friend Schmeller on a tour through Switzerland, returning on the 24th of the month, and making good use of the journey in studying the dialects. He now resumed his Old German and Philological studies, but a report of his mother's ill-health took him to England for a fortnight. He found his mother better than he expected, and on the 5th of December he was back at Munich. The winter of 1837–38 now passed away, and the spring found him still at work. We only pause to note that on the 27th of January, 1838, he writes, 'Was at a ball at Staatsrath Maurer's,' Konrad Maurer's father, and Schmeller's trusty friend. Then he again drinks the molken at Kreuth, climbs the Bavarian hills, and returns to England in July. On the 13th he was present at a dinner in Guildhall, to congratulate the Queen on her coronation. There he sees

'The Duke de Némours, a nice, amiable-looking, blonde youth; Soult, a broad, tough-looking warrior, a good deal knocked about, but still hale and firm. Sebastiani's countenance is intelligent. Esterhazy, Schwartzenberg, Stroganoff, Putbus, Spanish and Portuguese grandees, etc., excited less interest, but the splendid diamonds on the sabre of the first-mentioned could not escape notice. Wellington, Peel, Melbourne, Sir J. Graham, Stanley, little Lord John Russell, and the massive pair, O'Connell and Hume, with numerous other contrasts, sat peaceably and apparently well-pleased side by side.'

After a visit to the patrimonial acres in Westmoreland he departed for Germany on the 25th of August, and reached Munich by way of Augsburg and Nuremberg, carrying with him some facsimiles of Old German MSS. for his friend Schmeller. He still takes lessons in Greek and German philology. In these studies he again passed the winter of 1838–39.

On the 13th of February he wrote to his father to say that he thought of leaving Munich about the end of the month by Leipzig to Hamburg, and thence to Denmark and St. Petersburg. On the 1st of March, 1839, stands an entry like many others in these volumes:

'Made Joseph Müller, Orientalist, a present of a hundred gulden, to forward the publication of a work he is preparing for the press.'

Now he buys a britschka for his journey, and extra strong shoes and boots, acquires statistical works on Russia, packs up his books and sends them to Cotta to take care of, and departs on the 2nd on his travels. At Leipzig, on the 6th of March, he gave Dr. Cruzius a hundred dollars, fifty in his own name, and fifty in that of his friend Vipan, 'For the five exiled Göttingen professors. Two of the seven, Ewald and Gervinus, forego their shares.'

Three of the five were his friends Dahlmann and Jacob and William Grimm.

At Halle, of which he says, 'A more narrow-cornering, dirty, wretched-built town I scarcely recollect,' he saw Professor Leo, 'Who, though terribly pugnacious and bitterly persecuting with his pen, is a lively and very agreeable person in conversation. We immediately got on to the subject of his Anglo-Saxon Lesebuch, when he quite agreed to my suggestions as to certain passages.'

On the 8th he was at Berlin, struck more than ever with its imposing appearance—'Munich is quite a village to it.' His friend Raumer was in Italy, but he saw Graff, and found him, 'as usual, complaining, but he brightened up when I talked of consulting him as to some passages in Ottfried's Christ.' Then follows the discussion, at the end of which Graff remarked that the passages were the more difficult because they were nearly all of them $\delta \pi \alpha \xi \lambda \epsilon \gamma \delta \mu \epsilon \nu \alpha$. On the 12th he reached Hamburg, and, after seeing Lappenberg, went on slowly to Copenhagen, lingering in Schleswig and Jutland more than a month, and accurately observing the dialects and the people. On the 4th of May he reached the Danish capital, and called on his friends. On the 6th he went with Professor Thiele to the Museum of Sculpture and saw Thorwaldsen, who had been absent in Italy on his former visits:

'Among the sculptures there is his own bust, by himself, some twenty years younger, a magnificent countenance. On expressing my strong desire to see him, Thiele was so kind as to go in to him and announce me, though he had let his servant know he was not very well this morning; and I believe I should not have seen him but for my being able to speak Danish, for immediately on my going in he received me most cordially, and his first words were, "Feg hörer at de taler Dansk." I passed about three-quarters of an hour with him alone, and I never recollect having more enjoyment in the same time. There is earnestness and great depth of expression in his countenance, with great placidness and serenity. He talked little, but moved slowly about in his silk dressing-gown, letting fall every now and then a remark either voluntarily or in answer to some observation of mine upon a picture or a piece of sculpture. He seemed, as far as I could judge, to be very favourably impressed as to England, and dwelt especially upon the merits of one or two pictures he has, painted by Englishmen. . . . He said he wished to see England, but feared, from the great number of very kind friends he had there, he should be detained too long, and his years reminded him that his time was growing short. I saw in his studio numerous works, partly now in execution, especially reliefs of the "Triumph of Alexander," and a colossal and most noble figure, just modelled, representing Ocean, which is to form part of a group.... I left him with the impression of having been in the company of a great man. There is something half sacred about his still, pensive manner, with his white hair and figure a little bent forward.'

Cleasby had now made up his mind more clearly as to his Northern journey. On the same day he wrote to his father that he was going first to Stockholm, and then to Upsala, to stay there fourteen days. After that he should go to Petersburg, by way of Riga and Reval. On the 7th of May he left Copenhagen by steamer for Malmoe in Scania. From Malmoe he posted in his carriage to Calmar, and thence to Stockholm, which he reached on the 16th. Cleasby was now better fitted to enjoy Sweden than on his former visit in 1834. He knew the language, and had letters to many literary men from his friends in Copenhagen. Dr. Hildebrand, the archivarius and great Anglo-Saxon numismatist, took him to the Library, and put him in the way of obtaining some facsimiles and transcripts from Icelandic Sagas of the Romance cycle for Lady Charlotte Guest. Having put this in train, Cleasby turned to the main object of his visit—the inspection and collation of the Codex Argenteus at Upsala. He was fortunate in finding his friend Dr. Reuterdahl, of Lund, in Stockholm, who gave him a letter to the chief librarian Schröder, a man who was known, for his difficulty of access, by the nickname of 'Ingalunda;' 'Certainly not,' or 'Not by any means,' that being the word with which he usually met applicants who desired to avail themselves of the literary treasures under his care. Fortified with this letter, Cleasby presented himself at Upsala on the 19th of May, and saw Schröder, whom he calls 'an obliging, friendly man.' He made no objection to the collation of the MS. with Gabelentz and Löbe's edition, and, while he went to Stockholm, confided Cleasby to the care of the under-librarian Afzelius, with whom he spent the morning of the 20th in trying to find his 'Colleague Fant, who was said to have the key of the glass case in which the Codex Argenteus is kept. It looked as if I should have to wait Schröder's return from Stockholm.'

Digitized by GOOGIC

So the 20th was lost, but on the 21st Cleasby notes:

'This morning I was rejoiced to find that the valuable key was found. . . . I accordingly accompanied Afzelius to the Library, but partly because it was more convenient for him to sit at home than come to the Library and sit there while I was at work, and partly, as he said, because he could there ask me questions as to English, which language he was reading and desirous of my help, he determined upon taking out the Codex and carrying it to his house, where I was to have leave to work before and after noon; and indeed I began at 10 o'clock A.M. and remained till I o'clock, and then went again at 4 and remained till 7.'

Next day, and every day, he worked at the Codex, but on the 22nd he saw Geijer the historian, who had been absent on his former visit; and this is his account of a very remarkable man:

'Passed the evening with Geijer, who speaks a little English. There is nothing striking in his outward appearance or manner; nor is he especially conversant, though, after being with him a time, he becomes more so; but there is a good deal of inward thought in him, and perceptible in his countenance.'

At Upsala he also saw Tullberg, a young Sanskrit Professor. He complained of the little interest taken in Sanskrit by the students, but this, he added,

'Was less to be wondered at, for he had seen Bopp with not more than half-a-dozen hearers at Berlin, Rosen with only four or five in London, and Wilson with not more in Oxford.'

On the 28th Cleasby notes:

'Spent the evening with Geijer; as pleasant a one as I ever passed. He was in good humour, and communicative, which is not always the case, and is a man decidedly of the first order. On my departure he presented me with a monthly periodical, which he edits, containing a notice of Lockhart's Life of Walter Scott, and I think there has scarcely anywhere been set a more interesting and touching monument to the memory of this good and great man. . . Besides being perhaps the first historian of the day, Geijer is a poet of a very high order, and a musical composer of great merit.'

On the 1st of June Cleasby's labours on the Codex Argenteus were concluded for the present, and he speaks in high praise of the text as he found it in the edition of Gabelentz and Löbe, though it is now superseded by Professor Upström's splendid facsimile edition. On the same day he received a number of letters of introduction from his father to influential persons in Russia. On his return to Stockholm he saw the magnificent collection of Northern antiquities in the royal palace, and especially the Anglo-Saxon coins and those some of the rarest; a proof, if any were wanting, that among the Northern Vikings there must have been many Swedes who, on their return from the West, buried their treasure in the earth.

On the 4th of June Cleasby left Stockholm for Finnland and Russia, on which journey we forbear to dwell, except to say that wherever he went he saw everything and every person of any importance to whom he could get access. On the 19th of July he returned to Stockholm. There he found the facsimiles for Lady Charlotte Guest were ready; and having inspected the Icelandic MSS. in the Royal Library, and made the acquaintance of Mr. George Stephens, the translator of Frithiof's Saga, then resident in Stockholm and an ardent collector of popular tales, but now Professor at Copenhagen, and a great authority on Runes, one of the most obliging and learned of men, he hired a servant for a journey to Norway, and set out on his expedition by way of Upsala. His object was, as we know, to complete his collation of the Codex Argenteus—but alas! the fates were against him, as the following entry in his Diary shews:

'July 29th, 1839.—I left Stockholm for Upsala. The librarian, Schröder, was not there,—the second one, Afzelius, took me to the library, but could not find the key, precisely as on the last occasion, and I am inclined to think the reason was that he would not find it, which prevented my looking at the first 16 pages of the Codex Argenteus, which I wished to do, to see the state of the leaves, and also p. 118, to see how the Latin Gloss was written at the beginning of Luke's Evangelium.'

Thence he passed through the Swedish mining districts, and, passing on to Dalecarlia, was delighted, as all must be, with the primitive people who dwell along the banks of the two Dal Elvs and round the shores of the lovely Siljan Lake. Crossing the fells called the Kjölen or Keel, he came down by Veradal on Drontheim, very nearly by the same route which St. Olaf took when he went to meet his death at Sticklastad. At Drontheim he passed several pleasant days with Rector Bugge, and left it on the 10th of August for the South, crossing the Dovre Fjeld, and then turning up by Romsdale and Gudbrandsdale to Christiania, which he reached on the 16th, and thought not to be compared to Drontheim. Having renewed his acquaintance with Keyser, Professor of History in the University there, he left Christiania on the 18th for Gottenburg, by way of Drammen, following the route which he had taken in 1834. On the 23rd he reached Copenhagen, and thus reviews his Swedish and Russian tour:

'I thus finished, very much to my satisfaction, a most agreeable and, at the same time, instructive tour, in which I learned much as to the state of the countries I visited, which, doubtless, is not to be acquired from books. I was everywhere received with great kindness, and all facilities were given me for the attainment of the objects I had in view, with the sole exception of Petersburg, where I cannot but allow that the literary introductions I had were but coldly responded to.'

After a little tour among the smaller Danish Isles, during which he was amazed at the prosperity and ease of the peasantry, he left Copenhagen on the 9th of September for England, meaning to go by steamer from Hamburg, but the vessel having broken down at the mouth of the Elbe, he left her, and went home by Lower Germany and Friesland, and embarked at Ostend on the 13th of that month for London. His return had been hastened by the intelligence of his father's failing health; but this, it seems, was a false alarm. After seeing friends, writing to Dr. Bowring, and giving him an account of the Romance literature in Icelandic in the Royal Library at Stockholm, and enclosing the facsimiles which Lady Charlotte Guest was anxious to have for her edition of the Mabinogion, he sailed on the 16th of October for Rotterdam, and, making the acquaintance of Dr. Bosworth, then chaplain in that city, and editor of an Anglo-Saxon Dictionary, he returned through Holland and Friesland, stopping on his way at Deventer to see the great Frisian scholar, Dr. Halbertsma:

'A somewhat rigid-looking man, who seemed, in silence, keeping his wife—quite a model of a Dutch frow—and his two children company.... We talked upon Frisian.... He is about a work on the language, a complete Dictionary, which I encouraged him to make haste with. He has no doubt collected such stores as no other man possesses; but I am in general a little afraid of the speculative nature of his philology, for on my asking him what he considered was the derivation of the name of the Frisians, he said it was the same word as Persians,—the p becomes f, etc., etc., but I asked him for some connecting links.'

Stopping at Hamburg to see Lappenberg the historian, and at Kiel to have a chat with his good friend Chalybæus, who had taught him Speculative Theology at Dresden, and was now professor in the same branch of study in the Holstein University, he passed on by Eckernförde and Schleswig into that land of the Angeln of which so much was heard in the Schleswig-Holstein controversy, which in those happy days had hardly begun to lift its horrid head. At Gelting, in the heart of that district, Cleasby stayed a few days, and made up his mind that 'The basis of the population of Angeln is Danish, mixed, no doubt, a great deal with German settlers, but whose language was obliged to give way to the predominant one;.... the names of the towns, localities, and inhabitants seem a sufficient proof of this, and I am much inclined to doubt whether the name of the country, "Angle," has anything to do with the Angles who went over to England with the Saxons, and who sat at the mouth of the Saal or the Elbe, according to the testimony of Ptolemy.'

On the 29th of October he was back at Copenhagen, and was busy greeting his old friends in that capital, among whom were Professor Molbech, Finn Magnusen, Öhlenschläger the poet, Brönsted, and Rafn.

Now his Diary is full of his arrangements for taking lodgings, hiring and buying furniture, preparatory to a lengthened stay in Copenhagen. He was gradually settling down more and more to Northern studies. Just about this time the old King of Denmark, Frederick VI, died after a long reign, and was succeeded by his son, Christian VIII; but Cleasby is more occupied with his books than the royal death and funeral, on which occasion the population of Copenhagen 'evinced a curiosity and love of sight-seeing' which 'astonished' him:

'I took the Danes,' he says, 'for a more staid and solid people; high and low, lords and servants, cookmaids and shoeblacks, all have been up to see these sights—that is, the lying-in-state.'

But Cleasby cares for none of these things. On the 5th of November, nearly a month before the old king died, comes the following entry in his Diary:—'4 degrees heat,'—he was always most exact in noting the state of the weather,—'began to read Icelandic—Sæmund's Edda—with a native Icelander, Giselsen.' This is the first mention of Konrad Gislason, and for some time longer he is to Cleasby in his Diaries 'Giselsen,' and not Gislason. With him he reads four times a week. But he was soon to feel that reading Icelandic in those days was to read a language without a Dictionary, for that of Björn Haldorsen was little help. On the 10th of January, 1840, comes this entry:—'Talked with Rafn about editing an Icelandic Dictionary.' And on the 12th of February we find him writing to his friend Kemble, the well-known Anglo-Saxon scholar:

'I am up to my chin in Islandicis, and doing what I can to promote the preparation of a good sound old Northern Lexicon, and so get this, for so late in the 19th century, unaccountable and most scandalous blank filled up in this grand branch of Teutonic development; but there are many difficulties.'

And to Arfwedson, the librarian at Stockholm, on the 26th of February in Danish, which he wrote fluently, if not always correctly:

'Jeg har tilbragt vinteren her totus in Islandicis og havde næsten i sinn at tage op til dem igjen i sommer.'

On the 18th of April stands, 'Bought four reams of paper, 5 dalers per ream.' And on the 5th, 'Sent three reams of paper to Konrad Giselsen in preparation for the Dictionary of the Icelandic Language I intend to edit.' And on the 22nd, 'Paid Konrad Giselsen this day 8 daler for instruction this month, and 50 daler for work to be undertaken by him, exclusively for me, relative to an Icelandic Dictionary I intend to publish. The 50 daler are regarded as a payment at the rate of 50 daler per month, from this day till the 1st of June, and he gave me an acknowledgment in writing.'

And accordingly we find among Cleasby's papers the following:

'Jeg har faaet i dag Kjöbenhavn den 22 April 1840 af Herr Richard Cleasby Halvtresindstyve Rigsbank Daler Dansk, som belönning indtil den förste dag of næstkommende Juni, for et Arbed jeg har paataget mig at udrætte udelukkende for hans Brug, angaaende en Ord-bog han agter at give ud paa Islandsk og et eller flere andre sprog.—KONRAD GISLASON.'

After which entry follow similar acknowledgments from Mr. Gislason and Cleasby's other Icelandic amanuenses, down to that sad entry of the 6th of September, 1847, when he paid Mr. Fridriksson 20 dollars.

Having started his amanuensis, Cleasby left for home on the same day for a month, again passing through Hanover and Holland, and taking the steamer from Antwerp to London, where he arrived on the 4th of May, and found all well at home. On his way he had met his father, and assisted him on some business matters which had rendered his presence in Antwerp necessary. After visiting friends, and especially Kemble, then settled at Addlestone, under the Hog's Back, Cleasby left for Copenhagen on the 24th of May, loaded as usual with letters from his literary friends in England to scholars abroad. He again took the route by Rotterdam and Lower Germany, and reached Hamburgh on the 29th, whence he wrote the following letter to his old friend Schmeller, on the subject of his Icelandic undertaking:

'Bei meiner Rückkehr (nach Copenhagen) wand ich mich mit vielem Fleiss dem Isländischen zu, und fand bald den grossen Mangel der ohne Zweifel die Hauptursache ist des versäumten Studiums dieser herrlichen Sprache, nämlich der Mangel an Hülfsmitteln, und besonders an einem brauchbaren Lexicon; denn Björn Haldorson's ist so gut wie keiner. Da ich nun mich über die Aussicht für die Zukunst erkundigte, fand ich, dass zwei Männer in Iceland hatten seit 20 Jahren, der eine an ein poetisches, der andere an ein prosaisches Wörterbuch gearbeitet; und begierig ungefähr den Zustand ihrer Arbeit zu kennen, liess ich nach Iceland schreiben, und ersuhr, dass das poetische Werk so vorwärts geschritten war, dass die let zte Revision und das Fertigmachen zum

Digiti & Google

Druck in ungefähr einem Jahr geschehen könnten, falls der Verfasser nicht zu sehr mit anderer Arbeit pressirt wurde, welches ich auch erfuhr wie ich früher in Correspondenz mit der "Old Nordisches Selskabet"—unter uns gesagt für ihren wahren Zweck auf das anpassendste constituirt und administrirt was sich nur denken kann—gewesen war. Da ich nun nicht wünschte diesem zu nahe zu treten, so besuchte ich den Secretair Rafn, und durch dringende Zumuthung und das Versprechen von Unterstützung wenn nothwendig, bewog ich ihn an den Verfasser zu schreiben ihm ein passendes Honorar anzubieten, und den Druck des Werkes entweder für die Gesellschaft allein oder in Verbindung mit mir zu übernehmen; so dass ich hoffe, dass wir bald um diese ohne Zweifel treffliche Arbeit werden reicher werden, was, wenn ich nicht sehr entschieden dazwischen getreten wäre, wäre Gott weiss wie lange unvollendet geblieben.

'Was das prosaische Werk angeht *, so scheint es als eine Art Thesaurus angelegt zu sein, von grossem Umfang, umfassend alte und neue Sprach-Dialecte, Redensarten, u. s. w.; aber ohne alle Ansicht der Vollendung in der Lebenszeit des Verfassers, der schon etwas bei Jahren ist, und ein bischen der Sache müde zu sein scheint, und es nicht unwahrscheinlich erst in seinem Testament jemanden zur Ausgabe übermachen wird. Diese aber ist eine so weite Aussicht, und die Sache scheint mir so dringend Noth zu thun, dass ich mich beinahe entschlossen habe mich selbst an ein prosaisches Lexicon zu machen; nicht Thesaurus-artig, aber von brauchbarem Umfange, und die alte Skandinavische Sprache umfassend von den frühesten Denkmälern bis ungefähr zum A.D. 1400, mit Englischer Übersetzung; ein Werk dessen Schwierigkeiten, wenn ordentlich vollführt und dem jetzigen philologischen Standpunkt entsprechend, mir nicht verborgen ist; aber mit redlichen Willen und fleissiger Arbeit ich doch denke in ungefähr 3 Jahren zu Stande gebracht werden könnte; und es würde mir eine grosse Befriedigung gewähren, wenn ich für die vielen, sehr vielen, lehrreichen, beherzigenden, angenehmen Stunden die ich, und besonders in München, zugebracht habe in dem Studium der Germanischen Sprachkunde, dadurch meine Dankbarkeit an den Tag zu legen, dass ich eben diesem Studium einen gründlichen und nützlichen Beitrag brächte, und einen Mangel abhülfe der gewiss mit jedem Jahr muss mehr und mehr gefühlt werden, und ich bitte Sie, sagen Sie mir in einem recht baldigen Briefe ihre Meinung über dieses mein Beginnen.'

On the 1st of June he was back at Copenhagen, and 'Found Giselsen employed with his friend —— in writing out Icelandic words for my Dictionary, but not much above half way through the alphabet, he having found the job much longer than he expected.'

On the 3rd of that month he 'Went into splendidly roomy lodgings, No. 14, Gammel Strand, three fine front rooms, a back room and entrance hall, furnished, and with attendance, for 22 dollars a month.' And on the 4th he 'bought two reams more of paper for 10 dollars, and sent them to Giselsen.' And, again, on the 22nd, 'bought another ream of paper, and paid 5 dollars 3 marks for it, and sent it to Giselsen.'

On the 24th he wrote as follows to Kemble:

'Finn Magnusen has read your treatise on Anglo-Saxon Runes, and trembled; he says you have been sadly hard upon him; I told him you were an earnest "Forscher." I am hard at work upon the foundations of the edifice I told you at Addlestone I had an intention of rearing. I find them, I rather regret to say, covering a good deal more ground than I expected, but hope they will prove all the better for the superstructure; every day convinces me more and more that "Zeit und Muth," on a large scale, will be among the leadingly necessary implements.'

On the same day he wrote thus to Mr. John Shaw Lefevre:

- 'My dear Sir,—The making your personal acquaintance during my last stay in London was a source of great gratification to me; to find a man like yourself, under so heavy a weight of public
 - * This refers to the Lexicographical collection of the late Dr. Hallgrim Scheving, of Bessestad in Iceland.

business, seeking recreation in the extension of the wide range of your knowledge, is not less attractive than rare, and truly encouraging. The circumstance of your having directed your attention to these parts made it the more interesting to me, for a native partiality for the Scandinavian North,—a sort, as it were, of veneration for the primitivi Penates,—has induced me to devote much time to its vulgar, as well as its more archaic literature, and which will, I hope, end in enabling me to facilitate to my countrymen the acquirement of the knowledge of a great store of interesting matter—interesting not only in itself, but also as intimately bound up with the early manners, institutions, and destinies of our own ancestry.'

On the same day we find the following entry: 'Received a most agreeable letter from my valued friend Schmeller in Munich.' This was in answer to his letter of the 29th of May, and the following is an extract from it:

'Wie sehr uns alle das was Sie zum Besten der Nordischen Sprachkunde zu thun im Begriffe sind, erfreue, brauche ich Ihnen nicht erst zu sagen. Dacht' ich doch oft wie Schade es wäre, wenn so viel beharrlicher, gründlicher, wahrhaft ausserordentlicher Fleiss, auf diesen noch so vernachlässigten Theil des Sprachstudiums, verwendet, nicht auch zur Hülfe, zum Segen für andere ausschlagen sollte. Schon die edelmüthige Dazwischenkunft durch die Sie die endliche Herausgabe des poetischen Wörterbuchs fördern, wird Ihnen den bleibenden Dank aller Freunde der Germanischen Zunge sichern. Noch weit mehr aber wird dieses der Fall seyn, wenn Sie dem tagtäglich bitterer gefühlten Bedürfnissen nach einem wahrhaft brauchbaren prosaischen Handlexicon der älteren Nordsprache entgegen zu kommen, Ihre eigene Kraft und Mühe daran setzen. Die Aufgabe ist freylich kein Kinderspiel. Es wollen dazu nicht blos alle bereits vorhandenen Vorarbeiten, sondern auch sämtliche sowohl gedruckte als handschriftliche Literaturstücke durchgelesen und methodisch excerpiert seyn. Hiefür aber werden Sie hülfreiche Amanuensen finden. Einem klaren, umsichtigen, ausharrenden Geiste wird keine Aufgabe zu schwer. Sollten mehr als die drei Jahre darüber hingehen, so würde mich die Liebe zu demselben Zweig des Wissens dafür trösten müssen, so lange ohne das hertzlich gewünschte Wiedersehen zu seyn.

'Bleiben Sie eingedenk
'Ihres
'J. A. SCHMELLER.'

On the 3rd of July he enters:

'Yesterday Etatsraad Rasn brought me from Egilsson in Iceland a specimen of his poetical Icelandic Dictionary, which had been from negligence lying at the Icelandic merchant Knutsen's 14 days. . . . As a ship was to sail again for Iceland to-morrow morning, by which it was to be returned to Egilsson, I had only an hour or two to look through it. I told Rasn I thought the work upon the whole good, but that it appeared to me much too prolix, there being also an immense number of prose words. I therefore recommended his writing back, that (1st) he should leave out all the prose words which occurred with no other meaning than what they have in prose: (2nd) that he should not give more than one citation in full for one meaning of a word, but at all events only mention the place where it besides occurred in that sense: (3rd) that he should not regard the modern language as his norm, which he seemed to have done at the beginning of letters, giving a list of how the words were written or pronounced, hodiernis vocabulis. If this was done it might shorten the work a third.'

On the 31st of July we find him paying Gislason 40 dollars 'for his labours for the month of July relating to the Icelandic Dictionary which I propose editing;' and a day or two afterwards he writes to his sister that he thinks of leaving Copenhagen for Carlsbad on the 17th of August, and being back about the end of September. On the 18th of August he started for a little walking excursion with a young Icelandic 'Candidat Juris,' Pjeturson, taking with them the Hrafnkels Saga to read on the way—the first mention of Pjeturson, one of his amanuenses, whom he took the next year with him to Germany and England, and with whom he was in constant communication for some years. this time the Dictionary was progressing, and on the 11th of August he 'paid the bookbinder Lerche 3 dollars I mark and 8 sk. for bookbinding and pasteboard cases for letters for my Icelandic Dictionary.' On the 17th he paid Gislason 40 dollars 'as remuneration for the month of August,' and left for Carlsbad by the steamer for Travemünde. He took the way by Schwerin, Perleburg, and Spandau to Berlin, which he reached on the 20th, and called on Lachmann and Graff, to consult with them as to his Dictionary, finding the latter ill in bed, and then set off for Leipzig, where he arrived on the 21st, and on the 22nd was at Carlsbad, where he began drinking and bathing with great assiduity, swallowing as much as three glasses of the Mühlbrunn and eight of the Sprüdel a day, and amusing himself with translating the Hrafnkels Saga into English. Here he notes that on the 28th of August he received a letter from Schmeller, and on the 10th of September was gladdened by 'a visit from my good friend Schmeller from Munich, whom I was glad to see again in good health and spirits, with a scarcely perceptible alteration externally, and none internally; the subject of the Icelandic Dictionary was, of course, largely discussed, and we walked after dinner to Eich.'

Digitized by GOOGLE

The next two days were occupied in shewing Schmeller the lions of the place and neighbourhood, and here he notes:

'It was interesting too with Schmeller to remark his attention to dialects in any villages we passed through yesterday or to-day, and the result was that quite up to and in Carlsbad, and I suppose one may say the whole valley of the Eger up to the Saxon border, the dialect is decidedly that of the Upper Palatinate (Ober-Pfalz) and not Saxon.'

On the 12th Schmeller departed for Toeplitz, and on the 23rd Cleasby took leave of his English friends at that bath, among whom were Mr. Senior and Mr. Charles Villiers 'of Corn-Law fame,' and left Carlsbad, which he had often before visited, with the following remarks:

'I cannot notice my departure from Carlsbad without saying that, upon the whole, I was more delighted with the various beauties of its environs than on any former occasion; nor was I otherwise than satisfied with the immediate operation of the waters—God give that the permanent effect may not be less beneficial.'

On the 24th he wrote in German from Leipzig to Gislason at Copenhagen, telling him that he should be home in about eight days, and nothing doubting that he had been 'recht fleissig.' As for himself, he had not been 'unthätig,' 'und sehe mit grossem Vergnügen einem arbeitsamen Winter entgegen.' On the 26th he was at Cassell, where the brothers Grimm then were, having, as is well known, been expelled for their political opinions, by the King of Hanover, from Göttingen. Here he tells us:

'I immediately paid Jacob Grimm a visit, whom I rejoiced to find looking, as I thought, younger and better than when I saw him six years ago; he received me most cordially: and in the afternoon I went again and passed two or three hours with him, discussing various points as to the old Scandinavian language.'

On the 27th he writes:

'I passed the forenoon with Jacob Grimm, entering widely into detail as to a variety of orthographical points relating to the old Scandinavian language, and found him most amiably communicative. In the afternoon I returned and took a walk with him, and enjoyed from an eminence on the brink of the town a beautiful prospect.'

On the 28th he says:

'Passed the forenoon again with Jacob Grimm, and dined with, I suppose I must say, William Grimm, as he is the married man with the family to whom the ménage more especially belongs, though Jacob lives with them.'

And on the 29th:

'I had again the satisfaction of passing my forenoon with J. Grimm, and witnessing his acuteness, his fulness of candour, and voidness of all pedantry and pretentiousness. I shewed him what I had done at Upsala touching the Codex Argenteus, with which he seemed much pleased, and noted some points,... I took tea with the Grimms in the evening, and, after a couple of hours' chat, left them reluctantly at 9 o'clock. Nothing can be more delightful than the truly fraternal relation in which these brothers live to one another; one soul seems to animate them both, although their individual characters appear to me not a little subjectively different. All their concerns seem to be mutual, one can scarcely perceive to which of them the ménage, the wife, the children, belong; indeed she, when speaking of them both, makes use of the expression "meine Männer," which in truth, in a circle where there could be a shadow of doubt as to its purity, would sound somewhat equivocal. Jacob seems to have got over the Göttingen affair better than his brother; he is more hasty, but once fairly expectorated, is more easily reconciled again; it seems to prey more on William, who altogether seems to me to have less elasticity, less vigour of character; he broods more over it; indeed, though doubtless an excellently sterling man, yet there seems to me a little more sarcasm and more form about him than about his brother, in whom there is really something of infantine simplicity of manner. I do not know that I ever passed three or four days more to my mind than those at Cassell, where so much of the instructive was mixed with the agreeable.'

On the 6th of October he was back at Copenhagen, returning by Hanover, Hamburg, and Kiel; and the day after his return there is the usual entry:

'Paid K. Gislason 40 dollars as remuneration for the month of September.'

On the 14th of October we find the following entry:

'A meeting took place this evening at Etatsraad Rasn's rooms, at 7 o'clock, and ended at 10 o'clock, where himself, Etatsraad Finn Magnusen, Registrator Petersen, the two Arna Magnæan stipendiaries Sivertsen and Gislason, and myself were present, to discuss the orthographical rules to be observed in the edition of the Islendinga Sögur about to be published by the Old Nordisk Selskabet, wherein it was agreed to adhere to the orthography observed by Rask in the 7th vol. of the Fornmanna Sögur, excepting that,—1st, that the circumflex over the class of words hanum, vapn, varum, sva, etc., should be exchanged for an acute accent, the same as that used for the long a in general; 2nd, that the two diphthongs and should be distinguished from one another; 3rd, that where the root has a double consonant this should always be written, even where a third consonant follows—as "brennda" from at brenna, not "brenda," and "allt" from allr, not "alt," etc.; 4th, that the acute accent shall be discontinued over the a, i, and u in -ang, -ing, and -ung.'

On the 16th of the same month he writes in Danish to Finn Magnusen, as head of the Arna Magnæan Commission:

'Jeg har alrede opholdt mig i nogen Tid i Kjöbenhavn og have i Sind at blive her endnu i længere Tid, for at kunne affatte en Ordbog i det gamle islandske Sprog. For ret at kunne udföre dette Arbed, er det mig magtpaaliggende med Hensyn især til Retskrivning at have Membraner ved Haanden til fornödent Eftersyn. Jeg tager mig derfor den ærbodige Frihed at bede den Kongelige Commission om gunstig Tilladelse til at erholde til Laans og Afbenyttelse i Huset af de Arna Magnæanske Membraner fra en til to ad Gangen, da jeg skal være ansvarlig for samme (og) drage den yderste Omhue for deres vedbörlige Conservation medens de ere i min Værge.'

The purport of this letter being to obtain from the Commission the loan, in his lodgings, of certain MSS. in that splendid collection, which he proposed to borrow two or three at a time. It need scarcely be said that the Commission complied with the foreigner's request with a liberality which, alas! seldom or never has its parallel in English libraries.

On the 9th of November he writes: 'P. G. Thorsen, under-librarian of the University Library, drank tea with me: a nice unassuming young man.' This is the Thorsen now so well known as the writer on Runic stones. On the 30th he paid Gislason 40 dollars for the month of November, and 'the carpenter Möhring for a polished wooden stand for the boxes containing my Icelandic Alphabet, 8 dollars.'

On the 22nd of December we find the following entry: 'Thank God the shortest day is past. Took Gislason and his friend Petersen to dine with me at the Skydeban, and we drank a toast to Balder and one to Iceland's prosperity.'

On the 31st of December he paid Gislason 40 dollars for the month of December.

The winter of 1841 was very cold in the North; the Sound was frozen over, so that sledges came over from Sweden. On the 13th of February Cleasby writes:

'Yesterday evening a movement took place in the ice in the Sound, so that to-day a ship or two came up to Copenhagen—after its having been firmly frozen over between five and six weeks.'

A few days before he had remarked 'the first solitary song of a chaffinch.' On the 18th of March Cleasby received a polite letter from the Arna Magnæan Commission, accompanied by a present of several works printed at their expense.

'The signatures to the letter were Örsted, Wehrlauff, Engletoft, F. Magnusen, Rafn, and Kolderup Rosenvinge, all of whom I thanked.'

On the 21st he writes: 'Dined with Kolderup Rosenvinge; met the Stifts-Probst Tryge and the young Professor of Philosophy, Martensen, and had a famous dose of philosopho-theological discussion interestingly conducted. The Probst rather accusing Protestantism of a degree of one-sidedness, and thinking that there were points in Catholicismus which it might adopt; and that perhaps a sort of union might be accomplished. The philosopher, on the contrary, arguing correctly that irenical attempts were altogether vain with the Catholic Church.'

During these months the payments of 40 dollars to Gislason continue, and on the 29th Cleasby writes:

'On the evening of the 29th of March, in consequence of a note from Etatsraad Rafn of the 25th inst., a meeting took place at his dwelling, consisting of the same persons as that on the 14th of October, which see; viz. Finn Magnusen, Professor Petersen, Gislason, Sivertsen, Rafn, and myself, on the subject of the orthography to be used in the edition of Islendinga Saga about to be edited by the Old Nordisk Selskabet. The letter from Rafn was accompanied with two proof-sheets of Ari Frodi's Islendinga-book, and the commencement of the Landnama-book, to my utter astonishment printed totally at variance with the agreement which had been entered into at the meeting of the 14th of October; the Islendinga-book especially, after no kind of system whatever, with the retention of certain forms and rejection of others of the MS., of the most capricious nature; which is the more blameworthy, as a precise copy of this MS. is to be given which will satisfy every want of learned research; and the other might have been printed in conformity with the rest of the series, for the better understanding of the other class of readers. But even in the Landnama-book the circumflex over words like hanum, var, vapn, etc., is retained; the accent also over ang, ing, and ung, and with the greatest difficulty the separation of α and α has been retained; but it appears uncertain if it will be done in future volumes. I, at the meeting, expressed my greatest dissatisfaction at this variance from the agreement entered into, and Petersen, Gislason and myself, and F. Magnusen after hearing my grounds, decidedly acquiesced in the abolition of the circumflex over hánum, vár, svá, and the like; also that of the 'over ang, ing, and ung, and in the separation of α and α . Sivertsen was almost silent on the subject, but, even reckoning him with Rafn, we were four against two; notwithstanding which Rafn has refused to make any alteration. As to α and α , he seemed at one time to admit the chief objection to separating them was their incapacity to correctly distinguish them, and indeed shewed throughout the whole argument the greatest ignorance of the first principles of the language.'

On the 27th of April he wrote thus to Kemble:

'I have been toiling very hard in the Icelandic field all this winter, and am not a little exhausted. The further I get from the beginning the further I seem to be from the end; but in time I suppose the perspective will change. I expect to leave this in a fortnight or three weeks for Germany, and shall, I think, very likely be in England towards the beginning of July.'

On the same day he wrote to Mr. John Shaw Lefevre:

'As to the Icelandic Opus, I have been toiling incessantly since I wrote you last, grubbing away at the foundations; but it is a slow operation; indeed the further I get from the beginning the more I think the end seems to recede; a quality which, at ten or twelve years of age, one would doubtless have hailed with joy in a plum-cake, but which in a pursuit like the one in question is not so attractive; one is involuntarily reminded of the Will o' the Wisp. To judge from the basement, of which portions here and there are beginning to be visible above the ground, I fear the edifice in point of extent much exceeds what I at first expected.'

Then, passing to politics, that being the time of the Turco-Egyptian quarrel with France, he says:

'Denmark partakes, with the whole world besides, of that disquieting sensation of envy occasioned by the unrivalled position England occupies, her gigantic power, and her unexampled successes; the radiance which surrounds her is too bright for a weak vision; eyes of such a class are unable to even gaze at it without smarting, and this annoys their possessor. I cannot, however, doubt that every sensible and impartial man must be rejoiced at the result of the whole affair—a bold and straightforward, decided course crowned with success—veering and truckling and cunning by-views completely put to the rout! If the French would however but have seen their error, and acknowledged it, and profited by it for the future, the injury sustained by them would have been comparatively trifling; but instead of this they seek to mask the truth, and attempt to glory in their error; still further deceiving themselves with, as it were, the celebration of a sort of triumph in their fortification of Paris; a measure which I regard as the commencement of a new epoch for that unstable nation, and one decidedly of "decadence." The Icelandic labours have exhausted me not a little, and I am looking to my departure from this place in two or three weeks for Germany.'

On the 4th of May he notes:

'Paid N. C. Möller for bookbinding nine dollars; seven dollars of it for the two books for my Icelandic Dictionary.'

On the 10th he says:

'Universal fast-day. The only day in the year that one has no new bread; the bakers getting a night's rest.'

On the 17th of May he left Copenhagen for Lubeck, but before he went he sent

'the cases in which my Dictionary-papers stand to Serena d'Acqueria,' an intimate friend.

On this occasion Cleasby took with him as his companion a young Icelander,. Brynjolfr Pjeturson, whom he occasionally calls Petersen in the Danish form, a lawstudent, and clerk in the Chamber of Accounts, in whom he seems to have taken great interest, and to whom he did the honours, and shewed the lions of Germany and England. The travellers we need scarcely say were bound for Carlsbad, and took the route by Dessau, Halle, Leipzig, and Dresden, staying in each sufficient time to examine and admire their natural and artistic beauties. On the 26th of May they reached Carlsbad, where the cure as usual consisted in bathing and drinking for a month or more. In the midst of it, on the 12th of June, Cleasby wrote to his father to say that he should 'come home about that day month, and bring a young Icelander with him, but not remain more than a fortnight.' On the 1st of July the travellers left Carlsbad, Cleasby for Toeplitz, to remain three weeks, and take twenty baths in the Neu-Bad, and then to pay a visit to his friend Count Thun-Hohenstein, at his magnificent seat at Tetschen, while the Icelander went on to Prague. Both these objects having been accomplished, they met again at Prague, where Cleasby, by the introduction of Count Thun, made the acquaintance of the Sclavonic historians Palacsky and Saffaric, who received him most kindly and imparted very valuable statistics as to the various Sclavonic nationalities and their languages. Before he left Toeplitz, as he was wandering through Prince Clary's woods, he came upon some of that grand seigneur's foresters, who told him an anecdote which illustrates very well the relation then existing between landlord and peasant:

'Prince Clary had,' he says, 'in the heat of sport trespassed with his dogs on a piece of oats belonging to one of the peasants here, which the peasant warmly resented; and though the Prince immediately expressed his readiness to make the damage good, and even more, still continued turbulent and offensive; upon which one of these foresters, to use his own term, "hat ihn ordentlich geblescht," a provincialism expressing about the same as geprügelt; and the other related how the peasant was for two days hardly able to move from the damage he received; he added further, "it was not to be supposed that the Prince would have his sport spoilt for a little bit of oats,"

From Prague Cleasby and Pjeturson went to Frankfort, and going down the Rhine to Rotterdam, took the steamer for London, which they reached on the 5th of August. While he had been absent his only sister, Mary, had been married to Mr. Jones of the Crown Office.

On the 13th of August we find the following entry:

'Dined at Dolly's with Pjeturson, whose praise of the beefsteak was unbounded.'

And on the 22nd:

'Walked with Pjeturson over Primrose Hill, up on to Hampstead Heath. He was charmed with the situation and views.'

On another day he took his Icelandic friend a walk round part of Streatham by Beulah Spa, and through Norwood home again to Brixton Hill—'a most charming ramble;' and on another by steamer up to Richmond, and then ascended the hill, though they were disappointed in the view owing to the clouds and rain.

On the 8th of September the two friends set off by Great Western Railway to Oxford, or rather to Steventon, accomplishing the remaining 10 miles by coach. They were up betimes, starting at 6 A.M., and reaching the University by a quarter past 9. There they saw the Bodleian, the fine hall at Christ Church, and many gardens.

'Nothing struck us upon the whole more than the back of Magdalen College, the beautiful green open space between a newly-erected Gothic side and an elder one in plain modern style, with the park on one side abounding in the grandest elms and plenty of deer, and the walks and meadows on the other.'

The same day they left by coach for Cheltenham, and on the following returned by rail from Birmingham to London.

The next ten days of September were devoted to shewing Pjeturson the wonders of London, and among others the British Museum, where, among the Icelandic MSS., he notes No. 11,127 of the Additional MSS., 'a very middling copy of Sturlunga;' but this is a mistake, as the MS. in question contains the best text of the Saga known. On the 22nd Cleasby saw Pjeturson safe on board the 'Countess of Lonsdale' steamer for Hamburg, and on taking leave of him says he was

'In all respects satisfied with, his conduct during the whole of his sojourn both abroad and at home in my company, in which time he sorted the whole of the words which I wrote into the two large volumes for the Icelandic Dictionary, and also carefully went through Njáll and took a list of all the words contained therein.'

On the 22nd he 'penned a circular for his father, to be sent round to his connexion, informing them of his intending to retire from business on the 29th inst.' On the 6th of October comes the following entry:

'Visited Copeland,' the famous surgeon, 'who, after my laying open to him my complaint, told me what I knew and had long felt, that my nervous system was in a very deranged state, and that it would take a long course of medicine to get it right again; and began by ordering me sarsaparilla twice a day, with a little potash and manna.'

On the 15th he saw Copeland again, who now ordered him blue-pill and colocynth, and on the 26th calomel and senna and magnesia. But these were minor evils. On the 28th his mother was seized with paralysis, which deprived her of speech, and though she rallied a little and lingered through the month of November, she died on the 8th of December, surrounded by her family, by whom she was most tenderly loved.

'We all deplored in tears the loss of an excellent wife, a most affectionate mother, and a good, kind, and upright woman. She was born,' he adds, 'on the 25th of July, 1768, and therefore in her 74th year.'

On the 14th she was buried in the burial-ground of the old church of St. Maryle-bone.

'Where,' says her son, 'my poor mother's remains were placed upon those of my brother Stephen, who had been deposited there in 1835 in a dry vault which runs under the street. In addition to my present severe bereavement, I was not a little affected at seeing for the first time the coffin of my lamented brother, who was so cruelly snatched away from us in the very prime of life.'

Digitized by GOOGLE

All this time Copeland was treating him, and at last, seeing his prescriptions did little good, advised him to consult a physician. This he accordingly did, and called in Dr. Seymour, who agreed with Copeland that 'a singing in his head and a numbness in his left leg would end in paralysis,' but completely differed with him as to the means to be taken to arrest the evil.

'He said immediate bleeding was necessary, and ordered me to lose 12 or 14 oz. of blood from the arm; placed in prospect my losing some more by cupping next week, and gave hopes of a final complete recovery. I was bled, and lost about 19 oz. from the right arm.'

After such drastic treatment it is not surprising that Cleasby's entries in his Diaries for the rest of December, 1841, and the first ten days of January, 1842, are limited to notices of the weather and the frost, which was very hard for England. On the 10th of that month he wrote to Pjeturson, announcing his mother's death and the probability of his longer stay in England. As to Icelandic, he writes:

'Hvad De sige med Hensyn til Sivertsens Reise til Sverge er meget tilfredsstillende, thi hvis Byttet er ikke saa stort dog er det af megen Vigtighed at vide at man har, hvad der kan haves; om de to fortrinlige Codices of Riddersagaerne i Stockholm viste Jeg alrede, thi da jeg ophold mig i denne By i 1839, lod jeg gjöre nogle Fac-similes derfra for en Dame i Wallis der udgiver visse Keltiske Sagaer som behandle de samme gjenstände; fra den vigtige Pergament Codex imperial Octav angaaende gudelige Ting og deslige haaber jeg i det mindste nogen Berigelse for Sproget, og vist ikke liden Fornöielse vil det skaffe mig at nærmere omtale og undersöge disse Ting med vor Ven Gislason og Dem. Det glædede mig meget at höre so gode Efterretninger om Gislasons Helbred og saa at han var beskæftigt ved at conferere Haandskrifterne af Snorro; denne Anmodning paa Selskabets Side viser dets Önske at den nye Udgave skal nöde en udvalgt Text; der er blott tilbage at önske at det vilde höre paa ham ved Hensyn til Orthographien; naar han er færdig dermed, i Fald der ikke proponeres ham noget andet umittelbart Arbeide, (sic) vil det være mig kjært at han igjen tager fat paa Læsning of nogle utrykkede Haandskrifter som Gretli, visse Máldagar etc. hvilke vi omtalte förend jeg forlod Kjöbenhavn, og jeg bede Dem at berette mig om naar han tænker omtrent at være i Stand til at begynde, og jeg vil arrangere Penge-remiser igjennem Brandt eller noget andet Hus indtil jeg selv viser mig igjen i Kjöbenhavn i Foraaret.'

After this letter, shewing the liveliest interest in Icelandic study, it is sad to read that on the 24th of January Dr. Seymour ordered him to be cupped. 'Mr. Watkins, of Saville Row, took 15 oz. of blood from the back of my neck, at half-past 9 o'clock P.M.' A little later Copeland calls and orders his left leg to be bandaged with 'eight yards of middle-breadth stocking-roller.'

On the 16th of February it is a relief to find Cleasby leaving London to visit his friend Robertson, Rector of Shorwell in the Isle of Wight. On the 28th he returns to town, delighted with his excursion, and writes as follows to Pjeturson:

'Det glædede mig at höre at vor Ven Gislason for færdig med Snorro, og som jeg anseer det for hans Fordeel at han beskæftiges paa Regjerings vei, finder jeg mig gjærne i det Tab af en Deel af hans Tienster, og dess lettere som De tilbyder Deres, og siger at De vil gaae ham til Haande og anvende nogle Timer dagligen; og jeg svarer ikke andet end at jeg önsker at De ville begge begynde saa umittelbart som det er Dem behageligt, vælgende af de Haandskrifter som jeg nævnde i mit sidste (brev) i saadan Orden son det kan synes Dem raadligst; paa Excerpten-maade kan det ikke være nödvendigt at jeg siger Dem noget, ti De kenne desangaaende nöiaktigt min Plan og mine Önske. Jeg haaber inden omtrent en Maaned at vore i Stand til at skrive og sige Dem temmeligt bestemt Tiden naar De kan vente at see mig igjen ibland mine Danske Venner. Jeg har beskæftiget mig meget, saa meget som Helbreden har tilladt det, med Snorro og Fornmanna-Sögur ogsaa med Islendinga (sögur) og Vatnsdæla og jeg haaber förend jeg tager bort igjen jeg skal have sorgfaltigt gjennemgaaet en anseelig Portion.'

We now find him, in better health, dining with Henry Reeve at 16 Chester Square, and running down to see Kemble at Addlestone. On the 5th of April he set off with his father on an expedition to look at the family property in Westmoreland, which, what with leases and repairs and tythe squabbles, seems to have been a perpetual trouble. While Richard Cleasby was enquiring into all these things and struggling to reduce them to order, his father spent the morning of the 13th of April

'Searching the registers at the clergyman's, the result of which was its appearing probable that our family came over to Stainmoor from Yorkshire somewhat before the middle of the seventeenth century.'

On the same day they left Westmoreland to return home, starting from Brough in a post-chaise, and 'crossing bleak Stainmoor, with a shower of hail to conduct us out of Westmoreland.' That night they got to Barnard's Castle, and the next day, about four miles from Darlington, on the Yorkshire side of the Tees, 'saw the little village of Cleasby, with its beautiful land running down to the river.'

On the 15th of April they were back in town again. For the next few days he buys presents of cutlery and creature comforts for his friends at Copenhagen, and on the 23rd he embarked in the 'Neptune' for Hamburg. In that city he stayed a day, leaving it on the 24th, and reaching Copenhagen on the 27th. As soon as he returned he resumed his labour at the Dictionary, and his two amanuenses are now Pjeturson and Gislason, who each receive twenty dollars a month for four hours' work a-day. On the 3rd of May he begins taking his 'juice of spring herbs' again; and on the 18th left Copenhagen for Germany, making before leaving the following entry in his Diary:

'Left Copenhagen. Left with Gislason Preposition-book, also Verb-book; also the two books, one of Njall etc. begun by Pjeturson, the other my own extracts *; also fourteen bundles, A to G of the slips with words upon them; also paid him twenty dollars for this month of May, and was not a little surprised, when offering to pay him for June, to find that he talked of going to Sweden for the summer, which, and his remaining silent upon up to this moment, appeared very strange, and quite contrary to what I thought was understood between us. . . . I sent to Captain Röder a deal case containing my two folio books containing skeleton of the Icelandic Dictionary †.'

He was now bound for Marienbad, as a change from Carlsbad. On the 25th of May he reached his 'beloved Munich,' and immediately called on the Martius's, 'my cherished friends, whom I found in even increased domestic felicity, from the delightful promise with which the daughters have grown or are growing up.' Next he called on Schmeller and Professor Joseph Müller, who told him all that had passed since he was last there; 'almost all, I regret to say, of a most discouraging nature; especially the arbitrary conduct of the king as respects the "Academie der Wissenschaften," in arrogating to himself the appointment of the President, who had hitherto always been chosen by the Society; and other acts of violence.' He called on his old friend, Minist.-Rath Holler, 'who almost shed tears at seeing me.' Accompanied by Schmeller he then saw the new Library, and was shocked to find it built mostly of fir, and about to be heated by hot air. On the 28th he left Munich for Ratisbon, 'pleased in the extreme with his very hearty reception by his old friends,' and 'longing for the time when the situation of' his 'Scandinavian labours will allow of' his 'transplanting his head-quarters to Munich: though,' he adds, 'the clearness and intenseness of the light of the Munich atmosphere has always struck me, yet I think I never remarked it so strongly, compared with other places where I have resided, as during this visit.' Not for him clearly was Munich, even under the 'violent' Ludwig, what it was to Gustavus Adolphus—'a golden saddle on an ass's back.'

[†] These two 'skeleton books' are probably the same as those which Cleasby elsewhere calls 'control books;' they have not been returned from Copenhagen.

^{*} These two books have not as yet been returned from Copenhagen.

On the 30th he reached Marienbad, just across the Austrian frontier. There for a month he drinks the Kreutz-Brunn, and bathes in the Schlammbad, that is to say, 'in a bath of turf or peat, of about hasty-pudding consistency, at a heat of from twenty-eight to twenty-nine degrees, in which one remains half an hour; and then, to cleanse oneself, enters a simple water-bath for about ten minutes.' In these pursuits he remained till the 30th of June, when he left Marienbad, 'upon the whole very well pleased with' his 'residence there.' During his stay he found time to think of Icelandic, and to write the following letter to Pjeturson:

'1842, June 10th.—Jeg bad Gislason, i Tilfældet at han skulde komme til at reise at overlevere Dem de Verb & Præposition-Register saa vel som de to Lister af excerpirte Ord hvilke jeg efterlod med ham, at bede Dem at fortsætte Læsning hvor hann skulde have ophört; ok Hensynet med dette Brev er at forandre denne Bestemmelse og tilkjendegive Dem mit Önske at De saa snart som De faae det skal begynde at læse de to Binde af Sturlunga og fortsætte denne Læsning med Anvendelsen af saa megen Tid som De kann disponere over indtil min Tilbagekomst, hvilken vill finde Sted i den förste Hælfte af næste Maaned. De ere allerede tilstrækkeligt i Besiddelsen af min Plan med Hensyn til den Maade paa hvilken denne Læsning skal udföres og jeg bede Dem at anvende stor Precision og ikke overgaa Ord som er ikke endnu tagne: hvor de i de trykte Bind finde steder over deres Rigtighed de tvivle, kann De gjöre en liden Bemærkning, og saa kann jeg sammenligne dem med Haandskriftene i Kjöbenhavn; i det Tilfælde Gislason er bleven i Byen vær saa god at sige ham, at jeg önsker Sturlunga læst for (fra?) de Haandskrifter om hvilke vi talte, jeg haaber siltigst mitte (sic) næsten Maaneds (sic) at træffe dem vel og munter i Kjöbenhavn og forbliver imidlertid, deres hengivne Ven

'RICHARD CLEASBY.'

On leaving Marienbad he went to Leipzig, and thence to Berlin, which he reached on the 2nd of July. He called immediately on Jacob Grimm, who gave him letters to Kosegarten in Greifswald, and to Professor Hegel, son of the philosopher, in Rostock. After a chat with Raumer, he called on his old instructor Schelling, who had been called to Berlin by the king, 'whom,' Cleasby says, 'I found looking on the whole lively and well. He said he had every reason to be satisfied here, but still I thought did not seem able altogether to relinquish the idea of returning to Munich, and I thought this seemed still more the case with his wife and daughters.' On the 3rd he left Berlin for the Mark and Pomerania, visiting Greifswald and Stralsund, with both of which he was much pleased. At the latter he saw outside the Rathhaus door 'a flat stone in form of a grave-stone, on which Charles XII slept during the siege of Stralsund in 1715; a hard bed enough.' On the 8th of July he left for Ystad in Sweden by steamer, and in fifteen hours from Stralsund was back in Copenhagen, where he found, to his greatsatisfaction, that Gislason had remained working during his absence, and not gone to Sweden at all. The next day he paid him 40 dollars for the month of June. He now took lodgings for the winter at No. 52, Vesterbro, opposite the entrance to Fredberg's Allee, from July to the Flitting Day in April, for eight guineas, and settled down to work. On the 6th of September he determined to explore Jutland thoroughly, and started laden with letters of recommendation to various residents in that interesting part of Denmark. Before he left he notes that he 'left Pjeturson in charge of' his 'rooms, 52 Vesterbro, giving him permission to use' his 'bed and remain there till' his 'return. I also,' he adds, 'gave Gislason leave to take out his bed and be there if he chose.' On the 26th of September he returned to Copenhagen, 'delighted with' his 'little tour, having most satisfactorily attained the object for which it was undertaken.' He found his lodgings as he had left them, his Icelandic secretaries not having made use of his permission to be there. Awaiting him was a letter from Mr. John Shaw Lefevre, relating to a proposition of Laing, the Swedish and Norwegian traveller, to publish a work on the Sagas; which he answered on the 28th as follows:

'I did not receive your letter of the 1st inst. till yesterday, on my return from a three weeks' excursion into the provinces, and cannot allow a day to pass without thanking you for your kindness in thinking of me and my labours, and for your desire that the latter should not be interfered with by another and later hand; and I will in return proceed to state, without further preface, according to your request, the more especial field of my Northern toils. My first object is to publish a Lexicon of the ancient Scandinavian language, as preserved to us chiefly in Icelandic, but also in small part in Norwegian remains, with an English and Latin translation. Not an inconsiderable part of these remains have been printed and published, but generally not satisfactorily, and with a very uncritical treatment of the text, especially when regard is had to the position which this branch of philological study now occupies; a considerable portion exists only in MSS,, and it is my intention to embrace all we possess, from the earliest documents down to about the close of the 14th or beginning of the 15th century, about which period the language ceases to retain its ancient form and texture, influenced by the modern Danish and Norwegian dialects, which, as well as Swedishthough no doubt each had from olden time some dialectical peculiarities of its own-had long been more and more separating themselves from the common stock and forming a character proper to themselves. This period will embrace the Laws, Civil and Ecclesiastical, Snorro's History, the whole of the Sagas not of later origin than the said period, a considerable collection of legends, a number of writings of religious or ascetic character, the Younger Edda, some treatises of calendaric (sic) character, and a few pieces on other subjects. The very extensive and careful study necessary to such a compilation can scarcely have failed to make me intimately acquainted with the whole Saga-world, and a future translation of some of them, not without commentary, has not been foreign to my intentions; indeed, I did think of giving two or three smaller ones last year, and commenced with the translation of one, but found the Lexicon extending into a work of such circumference, that I saw, if I divided my strength, no moderate term would see it finished. Having said thus much, I cannot but add that I reserve to myself the liberty of dealing with the whole subject, both as regards remarks and translation—anything I did in the latter I should especially be desirous of accompanying with a critically correct text as far as existing documents allow—in such a manner as may most accord with the future course of my studies; but I cannot at the same time for a moment on this account seek to interfere with Mr. Laing's entering the field, which is an open and public one, and elucidating the theme after his own views, which may possibly in some respects differ from mine, and may probably cast a new and valuable light on the subject, since he has been so successful in his treatment of modern Norway and Sweden.'

Truly an admirable letter. As for Mr. Laing's venture on the Sagas, it only came to translating the Heimskringla from the Norwegian translation of Aall. With all his merits, Mr. Laing was no Icelandic scholar, and though Cleasby was, we know that his whole undivided strength was unequal during his lifetime to finish his Dictionary.

For some reason, Cleasby on the 15th of October relet his lodgings in Vesterbro, and moved into others, 4, Gammel Strand, where he remained the winter over, working away at the Dictionary with his two secretaries, taking walks with them and other of his friends in the hours of relaxation, and very often asking them out to dine with him in the suburbs. It was about this time that Gislason's eyes began to fail. On the 26th of November Cleasby wrote to his father to say that 'the hard weather, and my leading amanuensis being threatened with blindness and not able to write so much, threw more labour on me, and made it difficult for me to fix the time of my return.' As yet, however, Gislason worked on with Pjeturson, and the monthly payments of 20 dollars each continue. On the 8th of December we find the following entry, enclosed in deep black lines: 'Anniversary of a day of severe bereavement.' On that day, the year before, he had lost his mother. On the 22nd, the day after the shortest day, he enters, 'Took my two amanuenses, Gislason and Pjeturson, to dine at Fredericksberg, and drank Balder's health in commemoration of the recommencement of the reign of light.' On the 31st comes the usual entry of 20 dollars each to those two Icelanders.

On the 2nd of January, 1843, he paid Möller, the stationer, six dollars four marks for 'a book for inserting substantives' and 'cut slips of paper,' and on the 11th, 'to the same for a book for the words ú—jafn, all, at, ný;' but, strange to say, he has omitted to enter the amount. On the 27th he notes: 'The half-yearly meeting of the Nordisk Oldskrift Selskab: the Crown Prince'—the late King of Denmark—'presided, and cut a much better figure than I expected from what general report says of him. He took a good deal of interest in the thing, and was sometimes smart.' Shortly before this he had written to his brother Anthony that he could not come home for the Athenæum election, but hoped he should be elected; and on the 27th he heard from him that his election had taken place. On the 10th of March he enters: 'My amanuensis Gislason entered the Fredericks Hospital to-day, to put himself under the care of Dr. Möller for his eyes.' On the 8th of April he lent Pjeturson 50 dollars. It had been very cold that year, and it was not till the 26th of April that he notes the coming of the first swallow. On the 1st of May he paid Gislason 20 dollars for this month of May, previous to his departure; and on the 3rd left two cases at the University Library, one with slips, and the other with some slips and the verb, preposition, and substantive-books. 'Paid Pjeturson 10 dollars further in addition to the 50 he received of me as loan, which is considered as payment for his labours for April, May, and June. I also gave him 20 dollars, which he was to convey to Gislason, not as payment for June labours, but, as I told him, together with the 20 dollars he received on the 1st instant, he was to apply as he pleased, without regard to any occupation for me, but for the improvement of his health.' On the evening of the same day he started for Malmoe and Travemunde, whence he went to Berlin viå Rostock, delivering his letter to Professor Hegel, whom he describes as 'a very agreeable and obliging young man,' and admiring the memorial to Marshal Blücher. At Berlin, which he reached on the 8th of May, he paid the Grimms a visit, and 'was sorry to find Jacob so unwell from the remains of the grippe, as to be forbid to speak or lecture for the present.' On leaving Berlin he again passed through Halle, the town of his detestation, at which, as usual, he flings a stone in passing: 'Halle has always appeared to me the ugliest, least liveable town I know, and appeared so this time in an almost increased degree.' On the 11th of May he reached Marienbad, and for a month was immersed in Schlammbäder and drenched with Kreutz-Brunn; but on the 20th, after seven glasses of Kreutz-Brunn, comes an ominous entry: 'I have been plagued with a rather severe catarrh since my arrival, which has prevented my following up my Schlamm Baths.' On the 28th he had a letter from his father complaining of illness. On the 8th of June he wrote to him to say he should not be home before the autumn. On the 11th of June he left Marienbad for the North, taking a round by Coburg and Magdeburg, from which city he descended the Elbe to Hamburg. There, as usual, he saw Lappenberg, and thence returned to Copenhagen by way of the west coast of Holstein and Schleswig. On the 26th of June he had made his way round to Flensburg, where he took steamer for Copenhagen, and arrived on the morning of the 27th. 'On my arrival,' he says, 'I found Gislason still in the same state as to his eyes, and that Pjeturson, pressed by office business, had made much less progress in Sturlunga than I expected.' In the Danish capital Cleasby stayed till the 4th of September, superintending the progress of his Dictionary, which always slackened when he left it to others. As Gislason's eyes were still bad, we find the following entry on the 31st of August: 'Paid Gislason 20 dollars for this month, and paid to a friend of his, B. Thorlacius, who read aloud to him, for the months of July and August, 40 dollars; together 60 dollars.' On the 4th of September he wrote to Anthony, 'and told him I was but poorly, going to Sweden, and should endeavour when I came home to make some stay.' On the 5th he left for Sweden, his object being to collate the Icelandic MSS. in that country. On this occasion he posted up the country, only taking the steamer at Norrköping for Stockholm, where he arrived on the 10th of September. On the 11th he went to his friends Hildebrand and Arfwedson, now chief-librarian, who at once put him in the way to effect his object. For several days he worked in the Royal Library from 11 A.M. to 2 P.M., passing the rest of the day in admiring Stockholm, and, above all, its beautiful Djurgård.

On the 15th he went to Upsala, to see his old friend Schröder, and inspected this time. not the Codex Argenteus, but the Icelandic MSS. in that library, of which, as well as those in the Royal Library at Stockholm, there are many pages of collation and comment in the Diary. On the 16th he enters: 'I passed the evening with Geijer, and find, though age has in the last four years made considerable external impression, yet his mind is as fresh and genial as ever.' On the 18th he was back at Stockholm, and 'went to the library, and saw a very curious little Erse MS, of a few pages only, which Sir W. Betham has pronounced to be poetry, and of the 8th century. is a curious Old English medical MS. of the 14th century, also one of the court rolls and records of the reign of Edward the Third, and a beautifully-written and preserved MS. on parchment, in Old French, being a History of the World... in which the Anglo-Saxon-English kings are treated very fully, and no doubt a work of English birth. Mr. Stephens has had the merit of discovering these objects. Drank tea and passed the evening with Mr. Hildebrand, the best specimen of the Swedish "Gelehrte" I have seen; really a sound, serious person, and zealous in his department. Mr. Stephens gave me a memorandum, begging me to make inquiry among Icelanders at Copenhagen as to any Folk-Sagor, Barn-Sagor, Folk-Visor, Barn-Visor, Vagg-Visor, and Folk-Gåtor, etc.; and of any with melodies; also as to Danska and Norrska Folk-Visor and Folk-Sagor from 1500 to 1800.'

After making the acquaintance of Dr. Retzius, the ethnologist, and seeing his collection of skulls, Cleasby left Stockholm on the 21st of September, and reached Calmar by steamer on the 22nd. Thence he posted to Malmoe, stopping at a parsonage called Hoby on the way, to inspect the celebrated stone called 'Runamo,' on which Finn Magnusen had read many Runes which no one else could decipher: Nilson of Lund and Berzelius, as 'Naturforskare,' having, on the other hand, declared the marks on the trapp rock to be the work of nature. After this inspection Cleasby was not disposed to offer any decided opinion upon so short a survey, and left the spot admiring Finn Magnusen's 'extreme boldness in making out of them a long Runic inscription.' Before leaving the parsonage Cleasby heard a piece of superstition which shewed the state of mind of the middling agricultural class. 'A bönde (farmer) came to arrange for the clergyman's marrying him, and after all was settled, hastened back to remind him on no account to publish the banns when the moon was on the wane, but when it was increasing,—the expressions he made use of were "ny" and "ne8an." At Lund Cleasby stopped to inspect some Icelandic MSS. which Professor Schlyter, the veteran editor of the Ancient Laws of Sweden, had borrowed from the Royal Library at Stockholm, and found very few of them of such an age and character as to be worthy his attention; besides which they had been fully collated by Professor On the 27th of September he crossed from Malmoe to Copenhagen in two hours, where he found all in statu quo, 'pleased to get back again to the seat of my labours, but at the same time satisfied to the last degree with my three weeks' trip.'

Cleasby now settled down to work, and it appears from a letter to his father, written on the 18th of December, that he did not intend to return home before the middle of March, 1844. In the meantime he had gone on swimmingly with his Dictionary, and as Gislason's health was still weak and Pjeturson's not much better, on the 4th of November a young man of the name of Brynjolfr Snorrason, an Icelander, was engaged to assist; and after that the payments of 20 dollars are regularly made monthly to the three amanuenses. So the year passed on, and on the 22nd of December we have the usual entry, 'Took Gislason and Pjeturson to dine with me at Fredericksberg, and drank Balder's health in commemoration of the reign of darkness having again given way to that of light;' but on the 25th he received an unwelcome letter from Anthony, stating that his father's health was precarious; and on the 29th another, speaking so unfavourably of his state that Cleasby determined to leave for London immediately. He was just in time to catch the last steamer of the season for Kiel, and departed that day, having first packed up all his papers and sent most of them to the University Library, and the two control books and remaining slips to his friend Capt. Röder. Before he went he paid up his amanuenses for December, and two of them in advance for January. On the 6th of January, 1844, he reached London,—having travelled extra post through Lower Germany, and by rail from Cologne,—where he happily found his father much better than he had been or than he expected to find him. On the 27th of the month he wrote to Pjeturson, telling him that though he found his father better, his health was so weak that he might have to stay a month or two in England. He hoped, however, to return to Copenhagen, 'Saa snart vi skrive Martz,' and to be ready to set to work again. In the meantime he hoped both Pjeturson's and Gislason's health would mend, and that they would be prepared to work during the coming spring and summer. As for himself, he was doing what little work he could in London. Soon after this letter his father's health somewhat mended, and Cleasby determined to return to Copenhagen for a while. On the 5th of March, 'after taking an affectionate leave of my dear father, who, though very weak, appeared a good deal better than he had been, and after having received assurances from Dr. Arnott that there was no danger at present,' Cleasby started for Dover, and took the steamer for Ostend. In spite of the ice, which was thick on the Belts, he reached Copenhagen on the 15th, and immediately pays his amanuenses as usual. On the 28th he wrote to his father to say that he should be back by the middle of April. On the 20th he enters: 'Thorwaldsen died suddenly this evening at the theatre during the overture; and on the 30th, Thorwaldsen's funeral took place to-day. The king, queen, and whole royal family attended at the service, and 7000 or 8000 persons at least followed in the procession. That may be said of him which can be said of few, that he has not left his like behind him.'

All this time the winter had been very severe, and it was not till the 9th of April that the ice which filled up the harbour of Copenhagen moved off. On the 15th Cleasby wrote to his father that he should leave on the 22nd. On the 16th he writes: 'Rafn sent me the first part of a to f of Egilsson's MSS. of the Poetic Dictionary, 699 sides in 4to;' and on the 20th, 'had a conversation with Rafn to-day concerning Egilsson's Poetic Dictionary, and told him I thought 500 or 600 dollars would be fair honorar. for the work, and that I had no objection to go as far as 300 dollars towards its coming out, provided it was printed in connexion with mine, and so reduced that the two together should form a key to the whole [language?], and words partly prosal without poetical signification be not taken up in his.'

Dightzed by GOOGLE

On the 22nd he paid up his three amanuenses; Gislason 20 dollars, Snorrason the same, and Pjeturson 10, 'for what little he has done this month; leaving 12 packets of slips, i, i, and j inclusive, with Snorrason for him to work upon during my absence, with various MSS.;' and departed for Kiel and England, which he reached on the 1st of May, only to find his father very poorly. In truth it was now plain that the poor old man's days were numbered; a chronic disease of the bladder had got so inveterate that surgical skill could only prolong but not save his life. With the exception of a flying visit to Copenhagen, which began on the 26th of June and ended on the 8th of July, Cleasby stayed with his father to the last. Before he left London he wrote to Pjeturson on the 9th of June to say that he was coming for a few days, and in the meantime begged him to look after Snorrason and see how he was getting on in his work, and to write at once to say how he himself was, and whether Gislason was in Copenhagen. As Sir Benjamin Brodie on the 9th of June said that his father was in no immediate danger, the flying visit took place, as has been said. During the five days he was in Copenhagen he paid up his amanuenses and settled his accounts. On the 4th of July he writes: 'I leave behind in Copenhagen 22 packets of slips in the care of Pjeturson and Snorrason, viz. 5 packets of H; 1 of I, Í, J; 3 of K; 2 of L; 2 of M; 1 of N; 1 of O, Ó, Œ, and P; 1 of R; and 6 of S.' At the same time he wrote full instructions to his two amanuenses; Gislason's name is now wanting, and is explained by the following entry of the same day: 'I gave Pjeturson 60 dollars to be sent to Gislason to the Bath Kreischa, if he thought fit, in order that he might have the full benefit of September there if his own means would not carry him so far. I also gave Pjeturson for himself in advance, for work that might be done in my absence, 20 dollars; and paid Pjeturson, for Snorrason, 20 dollars in advance.' On the same day he left Copenhagen, and, as has been said, was back in London on the 8th, finding his father 'a shade better.'

All that month the old man lingered, and it was not till the 31st of August that he sank under his disease. His deathbed, like that of his wife, was cheered by the tenderness of his children. After the last scene, Richard Cleasby lay down for an hour or two, and on returning to his father's room 'found him stretched out upon the bed in which he died, covered over with a white sheet, with a little bunch of flowering sprigs of jasmine placed on his chest, gathered out of the little garden at the back of the house.' On the 7th he writes: 'The last ceremony was this day performed over my poor father's remains in the burial-ground of Paddington. The coffin was placed on that of my mother, who herself lies upon that of poor Stephen, in one of the vaults. Then a last adieu was said to our much-lamented parent.'

On the 4th of September, as soon as the first shock was over, Cleasby had written as follows to Pjeturson:

'Deres gode Bref af 27 ult. fand mig i den dybeste Bedrövelse, ti min kjære Faders lange Lidelser tog en Ende den 31 Aug., kl. 5, formiddag, til hvilken Tid det behagede Forsynet at beröve mig min nærmeste Slægtning og ælteste (sic) og beste Ven! jeg maa söge Understöttelse under dette haarde Slag i den tröstende Tanke at jeg ved min Nærværelse og uafladelige Opmærksomheder bidrog alt mueligt til at lindre den tunge Pröve hann gik igjennem, og i den kjærlige Medlidelse og Condolence of mine Venner; Gud alene er den som veed hvad er det Beste!

'Det har gjort mig meget ondt at höre saa daarlige Efterretninger om Snorrason, alligevel er det ikke meget andet end hvad vi var besörget om forleden Höst, naar De huske, en Reise op til Island var anseet som nödvendigt for Ham, indtil i Vinterens Löb hann blev saa hurtigt ok uvæntet bedrei jeg haaber dog hann vil komme sig snarere end De synes formode. Den andre (sic) unge Mands Indvielse bliver om saa nödvendigere.

'Saa snart visse Affairer ere arrangerede, hvilke vil nödvendigt kræve min förste Opmærksomhed har jeg i sind at reise til Kjöbenhavn og haaber ved min Ankomst at höre bedre Efterretning om Gislasons Öien hvilket jeg tænker vil sandsynligt fölge en bedre Tilstand af den almindelige Sundhed; det vil være meget vigtigt at hann yde den Tjeneste hann kann i den kommende Vinter. ... Haabende inden temmelig kort Tid at see Dem igjen jeg forbliver Deres hengivne

'R. CLEASBY.'

The death of his father plunged Cleasby into business, and it was some time before he could think of his Icelandic Dictionary in the pressure of family affairs. He had to go hither and thither, to Brighton and to Westmoreland, where, as far as we can discern, the family property came to him; and what with executorships and business letters, it was long before he could see his way. It is amusing, however, to see how strong his water-drinking propensity was, for on his return from Westmoreland, in September 1844, we find him stopping at Harrogate to drink its abominable sulphur spring, which he confesses did him little good. At last, on the 2nd of October, he broke away from London, laden with presents for his Copenhagen friends, in which city he arrived on the There he 'found all in order at' his 'lodgings, 159 Gammel Strand, but that unfortunately very little had been done in the Icelandic, Snorrason having been ill again, and Pjeturson had very little time; Gislason not yet returned from his watercure.' Under these circumstances it was necessary to engage other assistance, and so on the 23rd of November we find this entry: 'Snorrason left off to-day writing into the slips, and it was agreed that the money he had had, 40 dollars in June and August, should be considered as his payment up to this time.' On the 25th of the same month we read, 'An Icelander, Fridriksson-who had for Gislason written out the words out of the Collection of Fragments, No. 655, and assisted Snorrason latterly in writing them into the slips-came to-day and began to write them on in my rooms, commencing with S.'

So the year came to an end, which, if it brought him an increase of means, added much to the burden of his correspondence. His Diaries are now full of notices on letters of business, and his time for Icelandic must have been much straitened. Still he went bravely on, and his new amanuensis seems to be the best he had. This year the 22nd of December passes over without that annual party to drink 'Balder's health.' The night was now drawing near from which there was to be no return of light. Before the year was out he was called home by business, and on the 28th of December he paid up Fridriksson, Pjeturson, and Thorlacius, set them work to do, left some of his MS. of the Dictionary in Copenhagen, and had some sent to him in England. On the 3rd of January, 1845, he was again in London, and for the next three months entirely engrossed by business. The winter of 1845 was unusually prolonged both in the North and in England, and so late as the 18th of March Cleasby noticed persons skating on the water in the Regent's Park, before the house in Cornwall Terrace. Shortly after, the house having been sold, he is busy moving his father's wine and chattels to No. 5, Harley Place, Harley Street, as to which he notes on the 28th of March: 'After having had two or three days of dislocation and transportation of chattels, once in a man's life is often enough to move.' Poor man, that was his first and last moving in England!

On the 2nd of April he embarked for Hamburg, and on the 8th reached Copenhagen. As soon as he arrived Thorlacius and Snorrason came to work again, and Gislason and Pjeturson also assisted. On the 10th of June he set off for an excursion to Danzig, embarking first for Stettin. Having seen Danzig and Marienburg, with its grand old castle of the Deutscher Ritter, he returned by way of Berlin, where he saw the two Grimms, 'who were both brisk and well, and seem satisfied with Berlin. In the evening,' he writes, 'I went to Professor Ehrenberg's, where Berzelius from Stockholm was one of the guests; altogether an agreeable assembly of "Gelehrte." I called also on Schelling, who, though 70 years of age, seemed little altered.' On the 21st of June he was back at Copenhagen in time to witness the arrival of the Swedish and Norwegian students, who visited Denmark in a body, and amused the inhabitants with demonstrations in favour of an United Scandinavia.

On the 4th of July, 1845, he says: 'I was weighed at Tivoli, a place of entertainment just outside the gates of Copenhagen, and found to be equal to 148 lbs. Danish weight, which is somewhat heavier than English; I think about 11 st. 8 lb. English.' On the 8th of August he 'accompanied Christian Lange, a Norwegian, who is here taking copies of old Norwegian diplomas, to the Office of the Archives, where he shewed me a large number of the first and some of the second half of the fourteenth century, which he had copied, which were in great part in perfectly pure old language, like Gula-Þings Log or Skuggsjá, the orthography of the vowels, as usual, very varied.'

On the 15th he paid Fridriksson twenty dollars 'for work from the 15th of June till this day;' on the 22nd he paid Thorlacius the same sum for the same purpose; and on the 25th 'made Dr. Egilsson's acquaintance; he called on me to-day.' On the 28th he left Copenhagen and went by steam to Kiel, and embarked at Hamburg, arriving in London on the 31st of August, the anniversary of his father's death, which he enters in his Diary as an 'anniversary of a day of severe bereavement,' and surrounds it with deep black lines.

He had now, as we have seen, sold the old house in Cornwall Terrace and taken 5 Harley Place, at the top of Harley Street, into which his books and effects had been moved. He notes on the 11th September that he 'found all in very nice order there.'

After travelling in England, partly for business and partly for pleasure, he left England again in September, and returned to Copenhagen on the 12th of October, having passed some days in Schleswig, where he observes:

'Heard throughout Schleswig that the Dano-German question as to language has rather increased than diminished in heat and difficulty of solution.'

He was now living at 159 Gammel Strand, where he 'found all in order to receive him.' On this occasion he returned loaded with creature comforts for his Danish friends, and on the 10th of October he distributed to them; but finding that the authorities of the town had overcharged him for the tax on his horse, he 'Wrote to the magistracy on the 14th, begging them to rectify their demand for tax on my horse from ten dollars, yearly charge as a foreign horse, to two dollars, the proper tax for a Danish one, which he is.'

On the 16th he was delighted at hearing Jenny Lind for the first time; and, after expressing his admiration in warm terms, he adds:

'Such was the rage to get a seat in the theatre to hear her, that people stood last week in the most horrid storm and rain all the night through, from the time of the theatrical performance closing at ten o'clock at night till eleven o'clock the next morning, when the doors were opened again for the disposal of tickets. Those costing a dollar were easily sold at five or six dollars!!'

For the rest of the year 1845 he worked steadily on with his amanuenses, paying them regularly for their work. On the very last day of the year he dined with his friend Ellis, the English clergyman, and on his way back 'heard everywhere the firing which here begins on New-Year's Eve as soon as it gets dark. It is a sort of compliment in this country to fire off a pistol or two before folks' windows! Every land has its customs!' With January, 1846, his health seemed to fail him, and he went to consult a Dr. Bendz, who prescribed leeches and herb-tea and physic, and advised him not to drink too much cold water in the morning; and for some time after this the recurrence of the name of Bendz in the Diary shews that Cleasby was still in his hands. On the 6th of April he left for England, having paid Fridriksson 20 dollars 'for work to be done for me, of which I gave him particulars, during my absence.' On the 9th he reached London, and was soon deep in business. On the 14th, however, he 'had a visit from Sir Benjamin Brodie, before whom I laid my complaints of the three past months,' and accordingly had to take blue-pill and senna. His property at Brighton and in Westmoreland, besides some house-property at Chelsea, were an endless trouble to him. After struggling with his tenants and agents for the rest of that month and all the next, he left Dover for Ostend on the 31st of May, on his way to Marienbad, which he reached on the 5th of June. There it is the same old story of Kreutz-Brunn and Schlammbäder for a month. On the 8th of July he left it, and went by way of Magdeburg to Wölfenbüttel, to inspect the Icelandic MSS. there, which he collated. Thence he returned to England, reaching it on the 15th of the As soon as he got back he rushed down to Brighton, on hearing that his next-door neighbour was building up a wall behind his premises. On the 27th of July, 1846, he writes:

'Went to Brown, Great Russell Street; ordered finally a slab to be erected to my father's memory, to cost £23, and £1 per 100 for the letters the inscription may contain. Told him to chalk the plan in Marylebone Church, which he said he would do, and apply to my sister for the inscription etc. when wanted.'

After this came letter on letter on business, but on the 28th he left for Hamburg, and reached Copenhagen on the 1st of August. On the 10th he took part in a 'Gilde,' or banquet, given to his old friend Geijer, 'and was sorry to see him both mentally and bodily sadly altered since' his 'visit to Upsala in September 1843.' On the 9th of September he wrote to the Manager of the Hotel d'Angleterre at Frankfort-onthe-Maine to keep a room ready for him on the 24th; and on the 17th he set off to be present at the meeting of Germanische Sprach und Geschichts-Forscher, which was to be held at Frankfort. On the 25th he reached that city, having done a little grape-cure by the way, and soon found out the Grimms. He was most cordially received, and invited to the meeting, attended by about 150 professors and There he met most of his old friends, Schmeller, jurists and as many spectators. Massmann, Dahlmann, Pertz, and others, of whom Dahlmann read a paper in his section, 'shewing that the English jury is of Scandinavian, and not of Anglo-Saxon origin.' The meeting was followed by a dinner, of which Cleasby tells that 'it was bad, noisy, and cold; but, worst of all, that froward Professor Massmann must needs propose my health after some few others had been given, but when no mention had yet been made of names like Grimm and Schmeller. It annoyed me exceedingly; however, there was nothing left for it but to return thanks, and I did so; ending with proposing the health of the Grimms, the heroes of modern Sprach-Forschung-which was upon the whole, perhaps, getting out of it as well as I could.' When the sittings of the sections were over, on the 28th Cleasby says: 'Saw the two Grimms this morning, and conversed with them on various points as to the Dictionary, and shall note some of their remarks.' On the same day he had 'a final hour-and-a-half's conversation with Schmeller,' and 'shewed him part of my substantive etc. book of the Dictionary.' The same night Cleasby left Frankfort, and returned to Copenhagen, reaching it on the 4th of October.

After his return he worked on steadily with his Dictionary; but he now has 'a spasmodic cough,' for which he called in Bendz, who gave him a 'tinctura pectoralis and some herb-tea.' At the end of November Bendz was called in again, to attend him for a carbuncle, which kept him in-doors for some days, and led to six visits from the doctor; and so, with failing health but still full of work, the year 1846 came to an end.

The first days of January, 1847, are filled with letters written to England on business and family matters. On the 28th he notes: 'At a meeting of the Society of Northern Antiquaries this evening the subject of Egilsson's Poetic Lexicon was brought under discussion. It was stated that I had given 150 dollars towards the Jonovar. and the Society 150 dollars, and that 800 dollars had been regarded as what he—Egilsson—should have. Some members found that too little, and the Society agreed to pay him 500 dollars, at 100 dollars per annum. Finn Magnusen moved that the thanks of the Society should be publicly given to me for forwarding the work; and all persons turned towards me to thank me.' Then come entries of business letters till the 31st of March, when Cleasby wrote to his sister to say that he should be home between the 8th and the 20th of April. Accordingly he paid up his amanuenses and his doctor, and to Professor Rafn 100 dollars more in addition to the 150 he had already paid towards Egilsson's Dictionary. On the 8th of April he writes: 'Before leaving ordered my box of slips and that containing the two "control books" to be sent to Captain Röder's, and left 20 dollars with Fridriksson for this month, and left him a variety of things to be done in my absence.' On the 15th he returned to England, and was soon as much occupied as ever with business. He had, however, taken a specimen of his Dictionary with him; and on the 10th of May he writes: 'Took back to-day to Taylor's the proof of the first four pages of my Icelandic Prose Dictionary, which I had set up on trial*. There was, unluckily, a great deal to correct, their not understanding the language making it impossible to know where words ought to be divided at the end of a line; and not being used to my writing also no doubt does something.' On the 12th he went down to consult his friend Kemble at his cottage near Rickmansworth, who 'expressed himself highly pleased at the appearance of the proof.' On the 16th he was off to Germany, to try a new bath. This time it was towards Homburg, then only a rising watering-place, that he turned his steps. had better have returned to Carlsbad or Marienbad, for his cure at Homburg did him little good, though he left it delighted with the scenery. On the 16th of June he returned to England for his last visit. On the 17th he wrote to Copenhagen, to announce his speedy return, and in particular to Fridriksson, stating that he should be back at the end of the month, and that he hoped he would have got a good deal of the work ready which he left him in April, and be ready 'til videre Anvendelse af Flid;' and to tell Gislason of the time of his return, and to greet him and Pjeturson heartily. On the 19th he paid Messrs. Taylor £5 18s. for the six sides of the Icelandic Dictionary printed as an 'ensample.' During the few next days he packed up his deeds and effects, and left them in safe custody till his return-which was never to happen; and on the 23rd set off in the steamer 'Wilberforce' for Hamburg. On the 26th he reached Copenhagen, and drove at once to No. 40 B, Gamle Kongens Gade, 2 Sal., which he had taken in April for the three months ending October 1st, paying for them 75 dollars in advance. He came out as usual bringing presents to his friends, and, amongst others, to Mr. Ellis, the British Chaplain, with whom he was very intimate. In stopping at Hamburg he had enclosed proofs of the specimen of the Dictionary both to Jacob Grimm and Schmeller; but he now found on reaching Copenhagen that he had brought none of the second and third sheets for himself. He therefore wrote on the 27th of June to Grimm, begging him to be good enough to send him the two sheets 'containing the end of af and at-bragt', búa, and ok.' Cleasby seems to have spent the month of July hopefully enough, in riding and walking with his friends in the beautiful neighbourhood of the Danish capital; and on the 7th

^{*} A specimen of these is printed at the end of this Memoir.

he writes to Thorpe to say that N. M. Petersen the historian was quite willing that he—Thorpe—should translate one of his works into English; and he pays his amanuenses regularly and keeps them to work. On the 28th of July he received the following charming letter from Jacob Grimm as to his Dictionary, on returning the proofs as desired:

'Wie werden Sie, verehrter Freund, mein langes Schweigen auf ihre gütige Mittheilung sich erklärt haben? Es hat folgende leidige Ursache: Bald nachdem Ihr erster Brief eingetroffen war, gerieth unser ganzes Haus in die lebhafteste Unruhe, aus der es sich noch nicht erholt hat. Meine gute Schwägerin, die Sie, so viel ich weiss, persönlich kennen, war nach Jena gereist, um einen dortigen Arzt für die kränkelnde Tochter zu gebrauchen. Nun aber erkrankte sie selbst aufs gefährlichste. Nachdem wir einige Tage in Angst geschwebt hatten, reiste mein Bruder auch fort, um ihr beizustehen. Die Gefahr scheint zwar verschwunden, aber wir müssen doch noch in beständiger Sorge sein.

'In solcher lage verliert man alle Arbeitsfahigkeit, und thut nur noch einzelne Geschäfte mechanisch ab. Jetzt, beim genauen Wiederlesen Ihres zweiten Briefes, sehe ich, dass Ihnen an schnelle Rücksendung der Druckbogen gelegen war, und erschrecke sie versäumt zu haben. Also folgen die Bogen nunmehr augenblicklich, ohne dass ich Zeit oder rechten Sinn dafür hätte, mich über Ihre schöne Arbeit im einzelnen auszulassen. Mein Trost ist, dass Sie keines Raths von anderen bedürfen; alles innere und äussere scheint aufs beste bedacht und gerathen. Der Himmel lasse Ihnen alles gelingen.—Ihr herzlich ergebener Freund, 'Berlin, 22 Juli, 1847.'

'JAC. GRIMM.'

But on the 1st of August a change took place. On that day he writes: 'Dr. Bendz stethoscoped me to-day, my cough, hoarseness, etc. continuing; pronounced lungs sound, but said my chest was weak; prescribed a large plaster called Manus Dei, and a draft of senega, to take a table-spoonful four times a day.' On the 2nd he notes, 'put on the plaster this evening before going to bed.' He still, however, works some hours every day, and takes little excursions into the country. On the 24th of August he enters the arrival of a man now very distinguished in the North: 'Unger from Christiania drank tea with me.'

After this he is full of home business again, and writes a letter to Anthony on the 30th, enclosing letters to his agents, and at the end, 'Said I was a little better; the monster plaster had stilled but not taken away the cough, and especially worked well with the nightly perspiration, which had become only occasional and not so violent.' On the same day he notes: 'Paid Gislason 10 dollars, with 20 last month equals 30 for two months.' On the 2nd of September he paid Fridriksson '10 dollars on account for this month.' On the 4th he enters: 'Received as a present by Mr. C. R. Unger, from him and the other editor, Mr. C. Lange, Diplomatarium Norvegicum, 1st vol. Christiania, 1847. 4to.' On the 5th he received his last letter of business from his agent in England; and on the 6th stands the last entry in these Diaries: 'Paid Fridriksson remaining 10 dollars, making 20 for this month. Answered Miles'—the agent's—letter of 28th ult. as at back of same.' So end his Diaries: the little that is left to tell of his life must be drawn from the letters of his friend Mr. Ellis, the English chaplain, to his sorrowing family.

But indeed there is little more to tell. On the 7th of September, having been, as has been shewn, under medical care for an affection of the chest, he was seized with a slight fever, at first supposed to be of a rheumatic character, but which towards the end of the month rapidly passed into a low typhoid type. On Monday, the 27th, though confined to his bed, he 'dictated in a firm voice and collected manner' a letter to his brother, in which he said that he was in no danger, but that time was needful for his recovery. Complaints were made of his treatment; but upon this subject it is now needless to enter. It is enough to say that he grew rapidly worse and never rallied. On Wednesday, the 6th of October, at 10 A.M., he had finished his mortal course. His relations had no opportunity of being with him in his last moments, for they never heard of his danger till they received the intelligence of his death. On the 14th of October his remains were deposited in a vault below the church of St. Peter, where they still remain.

So passed away the spirit of Richard Cleasby, one of the most indefatigable students that ever lived. If he were fortunate in the circumstances of his life, he was surely most unhappy in his death,-snatched away just as the mechanical part of his labours was drawing to a close, but before he could bring his philological power to bear upon the mass of materials which he had collected. His methodical and yet poetic mind, his far-sighted and yet microscopic eye, will no longer note day by day the last penny of his expenses and the very spot where he took his friends to dine, side by side with entries full of a lively interest in philology, literature, and art, and of delight at the smiling face of nature as she revives at the soft breath of spring. For him the first chaffinch will chirp in vain, the earliest swallow twitter, and the beech and willow burst out into tender green. He is gone like Balder to the realm of night, never to return. .It is poor compensation for the cessation of an existence so full of spirit and work to reflect that at the same time came rest and peace; that all that weary trouble which wealth brought with it was over for ever; that no letters on business from London or Westmoreland would now pursue him; that his life-long chase after health at German Baths was at an end; and that as he passed from city to city surgeons and physicians would no longer torture and torment These were but accidents, and, though troublesome, Richard Cleasby bore them like a man, in the firm faith that the task which he had set himself to do would still be fulfilled. It has been at last fulfilled, but not in the way which either Cleasby or his heirs at first proposed. As soon as the first shock caused by his unlooked-for death had passed over, the question arose, what was to be done with the Dictionary, which it was well known he had been on the very eve of publishing? The greatest interest in the subject was naturally shewn in Copenhagen, and Mr. Anthony Cleasby received a message from the Crown Prince, as President of the Society of Northern Antiquaries, expressing his 'deeply-felt sympathy at his decease, and' his 'desire that the work might be completed to which he had devoted himself with such zeal and perseverance for so many years.' After mature deliberation it was resolved that the MS. should be completed at Copenhagen, under the care of a committee of three-two of whom were M. Krieger, the well-known statesman and antagonist of Prince Bismark; and M. Konrad

Gislason, Cleasby's chief amanuensis, on whom devolved the literary direction of the For this purpose the heirs of Richard Cleasby devoted several hundred pounds to erect what they naturally regarded as the best monument to his memory. the meantime the writer had succeeded in interesting the Delegates of the Oxford University Press in favour of the work, which, when completed, was to be edited by hint and printed at the expense of the University. But when the MS. of the Dictionary was forwarded after several years from Copenhagen, so far was it from being in a fit state for publication, that, after struggling with it for some years, he found it necessary to call in other assistance to complete the work. This he was fortunate enough to find in Mr. Gudbrand Vigfusson, then one of the Stipendiaries in the Arna Magnæan Library at Copenhagen, an institution which has done so much for Icelandic scholarship. After inspecting the materials placed at his disposal, Mr. Vigfusson found them so crude and in such an unsatisfactory state, that he resolved on rewriting and remodelling This Herculean task he has now completed, and in so doing has raised a monument to his own scholarship as well as one to the memory of Richard Cleasby. It is needless to say more of these Copenhagen transcripts in this place. Their nature has been sufficiently explained and exposed in the Introduction. It is enough here to point at them and pass by. The Dictionary as it now stands is far more the work of Vigfusson than of Cleasby; but if the dead take heed of aught here below, it must be a consolation to the spirit of Richard Cleasby to know that the work which he so boldly projected has at last been worthily completed, though by other hands; and if there be speech or language in those mansions, the solemn words of Hávamál will ring through them:

> 'Deyr fé, deyja frændr; Deyr sjálfr it sama; En orð-stírr deyr aldregi Hveim sér góðan getr.'

SPECIMENS.

I.—SPECIMEN OF MR. CLEASBY'S MS. WORKED OUT BY HIMSELF.

mál, s, pl. n., pl. m.ol, Gr. þþ. 30, i. 83¹² Cod. B, lb. 41. ii. 318²⁴ Cod. A, Ísl. S. i. 374⁴; mol, Norske Love 335³³. Two leading significations characterise this word, each of which present a number of subdivisions. 1. speech, cp. mæla, to speak. 2. measure, cp. mæla, to measure.

I. Leading signification.

a.-facultas voces articulatas proferendi, loquela, a speech. Bors synir tóku upp tréin, sköpuðu af menn,... gaf hinn fyrsti önd ok líf... þriði ásjónu, málit ok heyrn ok sjón, Sn. E. gg. c. 9. 10¹⁴. aldri hræðumsk ek þau guð er þú göfgar, þvíat þau hafa ekki mál, Fms. i. 9719. þröngdi svá sóttarfari konungsins, at hann missti málsins, x. 14817. þá spurði konungrinn ef Sigvaldi hefði mál sitt, xi. 10222. hefi ek marga vega leitað mála við hana ok hefi ek aldri fengit orð af henni, Laxd. c. 12. 3017. þeir glötuðu einnar tungu máli er forðum vildu stöpul smíða i gegn Gudi (speech in one language), No. 677. 1918. peir menn er & er hunds höfuð ok hafa gauð fyrir mál (latratus pro loquela), Rímb. iii. 39. 347.
 beir hafa eigi manns rödd ne mál, voice or speech, Rímb.
 iii. 45. 348ⁿ.
 honocentaurus hefir tvenn mel, voices, organs, manners of speech, 673. A. 47².

b.—sermo, oratio, verba, hvárt eru þeir Steinarr ok Önundr hér, svá at hann beir megi skilja mál mitt, Eg. c. 86. 7354. hvárt er Flosi svá nær, at hann megi heyra mál mitt, Nj. 129. 2005. ver eigi nær honum en mál nemi, Fms. iv. 2819. þér er mikit fyrir máli, v. 32519. var hann snjallr í máli ok talaðr vel á þingi, ix. 53513. skilr þú nökkut hér manna mál? Amundis egir: eigi heldr enn fugla klið, Fas. ii. 51220. sumum gefsk mála þýðing, No. 677. 2023. skáldskapr var honum svá tiltækr sem hann mælti af tungu fram sem annat mål, other speech, i. e. prose, Fms. iv. 374°, cf. 91, var. 5. engi var svá vitr hjá, at snjallara mál (sermo, oratio) myndi fram bera, Fms. vii. 15820. eigi man þat svá skjótt rúðask, segir Þorsteinn ok tók annat mál, Gunnl. c. 5. 70⁷. engi hafði hón orð um fyrr en Gestr lauk sínu máli, Laxd. c. 33. 130⁶. ok er Ólafr lauk sínu máli, þá var góðr rómr gerr, 27. 106¹⁶. en er hann hafði þetta mælt fylldisk þegar mál hans, was fulfilled, came to pass, MS. 623. 424. þau eru upphöf af máli mínu (of a sermon), Isl. S. i. 38521. bar Gizurr þar á mikit mál, at hann mundi því auðveldliga á leið koma, insisted much, Fms. x. 9318. þurfu þér firi því at ... sýna fyrir mér öll þau mál ok athæfi er hafa barf fyrir konungi, expressions, modes of expressions, Sks. 301² = Cod. 61^a. 29: pl., pá svarar drottinn vár með málum David propheta, in the words of David, No. 619. 31^{as}. In specie, colloquium, begar er beir fundu menn at máli, Fms. i. 2049. mælti hann jafnan fyrst við Norðmenn ef þeir vildu hafa mál hans, audients bos bam, -paven, vii. 241°. Ölvir hnúfa var með konungi ok kom opt á mál við konung, Eg. 24. 1062. hann lagðisk niðr ok skaut fyrir loku, engi þorði at krefja 24. 100°. Halli lagoise, filot o skaut i máls við Egil, 89, 764¹². síðan hættu þau málinu (var. talinu), Nj. c. 6. 10². þegar er hvárir ná máli annarra stóð Atli upp ok mælti. 5. 8¹⁴. In specie, responsum, hann annarra stóð Atli upp ok mælti, 5. 814. leitaði þá máls um við Ásgerði, hverju þat gegndi, Eg. c. 83. 7037. sendimönnum bikkir hun svara furðu stórliga ok spyrja hana máls um, hvar til svör þessi skulu koma, S. i. Har. Hárf. 3. 7723, cf. Fms. i. 31. mælti hann mál af þeim, ok spurðu þau hversu bardaginn hefði gengit, Sermonis argumentum, judicium (de aliqua re) verbis portatum, þat var mál manna at henni hafi allt verit illa gefit, þat er etc., Nj. c. 154. 268¹⁹. þat var mál manna um þá þórólf ok Búrð, at þeir væri etc., Eg. c. 8. 39¹¹. þat er mál manna at eigi hafi meiri skörungr verit i Noregi, Fms. vii. 1507. ok höfðu menn at máli, at þat sumar höfðu Marcus-menn byr hvert er þeir vildu, 3011. allir menn höfðu á mali er Ólaf sá, hversu friðr maðr hann var, Laxd. c. 22. 8828. ratio, nú er þar til máls at taka er Þorkell Eyjólfsson sitr í búi sínu, Laxd. c. 74. 314²⁶. jarlarnir Urgu-þrjótr ok Brinieskjarr er fyrr var getið í þessu máli, Fms. xi. 41². Proverbium, saying, þat er fornt mál, at bysna skal at betr verði, Fms. x. 261²⁶. Runæ incisæ vel sententiæ? hann haíði króka-spjót í hendi haugtekit ok mál í, (the runes were legible? or of important signification?), Laxd. c. 21. 789. nú eru tekin Grásíðu brot, ok görir Þorgrímr þar af spjót...mál vóru í, ok fært í hepti spannar-langt, (i. e. fært spjót í hepti), Gísl. Cod. 11356, cf. mála sax, Fas. i. 51418. Unus integer sensus, logice-a complete period, her er mál fullt í hverju vísu-orði, Sn. E. brh. 86. 234°. hér er tvau mál full komin í hverju vísu-orði, 85. 233°. ok er sa vísu-helmingr ei elligar réttr at máli, 91. 235°. The mode (either with an usual or artificial term) of appellation in poetry (as, for instance, that a man be called 'maor,' or be called 'skjald-tré,' or the like); tvenn eru kyn þau er greina skáldskap allan: hver tvenn? mál ok hættir, hvert máltak er haft til skáldskapar? þrenn er etc., Sn. E. skm. I. 93³. þá þykkja nýgörvingar vel kveðnar ef þat mál er upp er tekit haldi of alla vísu-lengð, Sn. E. brh. 82. 230¹⁷. þeir ámæltu skáldskapnum Sighvats, ok kölluðu at hann hefði eigi rétt ort at máli, Fms. v. 2005, cf. bragar-mál, Sn. brh. 84. 232 (a poetical . . .). Lingua, idioma, er þú lætr eigi purfa í váru máli þessa níu raddar-stafi, Sn. E. lat. c. 3. 277²⁴. mæl þú nú við mik girzkt mál, No. 677. 75¹⁹. Haraldi var mjök stirt um nor-rænt mál, Fms. vii. 165⁴. Postulatum, demand, assertion, Hákon konungr hafði skrá látið allar Eyjar fyrir vestan Skotland þær sem hann kallaði sér, en Skota-konungr hafði nefnt þær sem hann vildi eigi lausar láta,...en um aðra hluti var skamt milli máls konunga, en þó gekk eigi sættin saman, Fms. x. 1329. (ok miðlum svá mál á miðli þeirra) at hvárir tveggju hafi nakkvat síns máls, Ísl. S. i. 1220. hann festi járnburð at svá skyldi sanna mál hans, Fms. vii. 23019. hefir hann í marga staði mikit til síns máls, 22110. hafa hér hvárir tveggju mikit til síns máls, Nj. c. 56. 882. þá skal sá þeirra hafa sitt mál er eið vill at vinna, Gr. i. 18). c. 50. 30. på skar så perra nara sitt mål hafa er fleiri eru saman þar, 29. 430¹⁷. Gunnlaugr skal fyrr flytja fyrir, þvíat hánum eirir verr ef hann hefir eigi sitt mål, Gunnl. 9. 110²². þessi eru þau dæmi er sýna hit sama mål, (i. e. at guð görði brigð á skipaðum dómi), Sks. Cod. 1184. 17. Pactum, stipulatio, agreement, stipulation, condition, enda á þat at halda med þeim . . nema þau vili annat mál á göra, Gr. i fþ. 23. 336¹⁶; and 22. 335⁴. nú bregðr hann (griðmaðr) máli, við fleiri menn, i. þþ. 56. 148²⁰. en ek skal lauss allra mála ef hann kemr eigi þá út, Gunul. c. 5. 80⁵, cf. 9. 116¹⁵. Effatum. mandatum, sá er . . fyrlitr mál Guðs ok setning laga, No. 677¹⁸. sá er elskar mik mun halda mál mín, 1733. Diversæ formulæ processuariæ, . . . decisio, effatum etc., enda er eigi heimting til málsins, Gr. i. Kb. c. 81. 497¹⁵. skulut mál hans standask um þá sök, Gr. i. þþ. c. 21. 64¹⁵. enda er svá sem þeir mæli eigi þeim málum, nema þeir vinni eiða at, ii. lb. 46. 34220, cf. 21. 25. skulu þeirra manna mál standask...hvar þess er þeir taka eigi af alþingis-máli, Gr. i. umb. 31. 29622. enn er sá hlutr í lögum er þú hefir eigi kennt mér, þat er at sesta mér konu, þorsteinn segir: þat er lítið mál, ok kendi honum atferli, Gunnl. c. 4. 549. hann skal segja í annat sinn fram sökina, ok fara svá öllu máli um, sem hann hafi áðr ekki um mælt, Gr. i. þþ. c. 12. 4026. kveðr Óttarr jarl þings, ok mælti þeim málum á þinginu, at Hákon jarl skyldi heita vargr í veum, Fms. xi. 4022. ef hann kveðr svá at, ok hafði í máli sínu 'heilt ráð ok heimilt,' en eigi ella, Gr. i. fp. 7. 31716.

Negotium, res, status.

1. negotium et res simili sensu, þórólfr bað Ölvi byrja mál sitt, Eg. c. 16. 6215. Svertingr gekk á konungs fund ok flutti mál sitt, Laxd. 41. 18016. hann fann páfann, ok tók hann þar lausn af honum allra sinna múla (of all be bad committed), Orkn. 21. 86. ok muntú nú verða mér at trúa til málanna þinna allra, Fms. xi. 104¹⁹, cf. Nj. c. 6. 10¹⁷. sitr hann þar nú at málum sínum við vegsemd, xi. 4⁵. vit leituðum ekki fyrst þessa mála við Brynjólf, E. c. 9. 40⁴. þikki mér nú vandask málit er ek hefi áðr ráðit brúðlaup mitt, Nj. 2. 414. takit er nú höfðingja þann er yðr þikkir bezt til fallinn, því at einhverr mun þurfa at vera fyrir málinn, 124. 1927. ef maðr handsalar manni sátt...ok skilja þeir þat múl eigi görr enn svá (the matter, affair, almost stipulation), Gr. i. þþ. 50. 136°. vil ek því heita, at eiga síðan allt mitt mál undir yor fostbræðrum, Fas. 2. 53234. en þessi maðr er keisari hafði verit gjörði slíkt af sínu máli sem hafði hann áðr rædt, | hann hefir mál á höndum, Gr. i. þþ. 10. 381. Fms. vi. 73, var. 3 (af sin Sag). því hverr hann vill leggjask í at iðka betta mál, bá hlýtr hann etc. (buic materiæ incumbere), Rímb. ii. 90. 3122. eingi maðr á annat mál at deila í kirkju nema biðja fyrir sér ok öllu Kristnu fólki, No. 619. 34². Negotium nuptiale, Austmaðrinn heldr nú á málinu við bónda, svá at Flosi var hjá, Nj. c. 149. 259¹⁶. en er þetta mál var við Jórunni rædt, þá svarar hún etc., Laxd. c. 9. 227. ek skal fara á fund Burizláfs konungs ok vitja málanna fyrir hönd okkra beggja, Fms. xi. 10419. þó lézk hann enn tala mundu málit fyrir hans hönd, Fas. i. 3644. en svá er mál með vexti at fátt hefir verit etc., Lvs. c. 14. 434. svá er mál með grenni, at etc. (of tenderness), Fas. iii. 5910. The use below carried further and generalized? mun honum bo eigi miklu bikkja launaðr uxinn...at ek hitta hann ef hónum bikkir máli skipta, Eg. c. 87, 74210. hann kveðsk ok engu máli þikkja skipta, Heiðv. c. 1. 28221. þótti henni allmiklu máli skipta, S. ii. Ól. Helg. c. 31. 338. um þá hluti er mér þikkja miklu máli skipta, Fms. xi. 21314. ef hánum þætti máli varða, VV, 12. 2605. ef yðr þætti nökkuru c. 31. 33⁸. máli varða um hans vináttu, S. ii. Ól. Helg. c. 135, 229¹. en þá skiptir eigi máli hver gögn þá fara á lengr, Gr. i. þþ. 13. 43⁸. um þat er þú kvaddir þess kviðar er eigi átti máli at skipta um víg Auðólís, Nj. c. 56. 87²⁷. 2. res, status, lá ek þá í vöggu er þær (sc. völvur) skyldu tala um mitt mál, Fas. i. 340¹⁹. faðir minn fór vestr til Írlands, ok er pat vitað hver stórtíðendi gerðusk um hans mál, Fms. vii. 124²¹. vit förum kynliga með okkr um málin segir Hrappr, Nj. c. 87. 130²⁴. allt var þat annat mál segir Hallr, ér várut þá vígreiðir, hafit ér nú of mikit at gert, Nj. 147. 2562. ekki eru þau efni um várt mál, þvíat ek sé at bodar eru á bæði borð, Laxd. c. 21. 763. en þó skalt þú svá um þitt mál hugsa, ef þetta berr saman, at etc., Nj. c. 55. 8521. em ek þá þegar skildr við þin mál . . . kvað hann at heimilu skiljask við sín mál ef hann ryfi sættina (partes), Fms. xi. 396. 19 seqq. þeir fóru á konungs fund, ok töluðu mál Íslendinga (cause, part), Fms. x. 296. 29. er mál Causa, lis, actio, hans stendr í svá miklum háska, No. 655. xxxii. 113. et fortasse, injuria delictum sæpius usurpatur promiscue cum 'sok.' sokn skal fara fyrr fram hvers máls enn vörn, Gr. i. pp. 18. 591. ek . . . seg þat Guði, at ek mun svá færa mál öll fram hér at féránsdómi etc., 48. 135^{1} , cf. Nj. 64. 997 ubi = sök l. 5; et Gr. i. fb. 46. 361^{21} . þá skal fþ. 134. 348¹⁹. harðráðr við úvini sína enn tillaga goðr hinna stærri mála, Nj. c. 1. 2¹⁰. Gunnarr sækir mál hatt. beim er med mål ferr . . . rétt at taka til sóknar etc., Kb. 72. 49015, cf. maia, NJ. c. 1. 2".

búa til máls, 24. 36¹⁰, cf. Gr. i. umb. 32. 297¹⁰. Rútr nefridi vátta ok sagði únýtt málit, Nj. 24. 36¹⁶. Njáll ... kveðsk borgit munu geta málinu ok sökinni, (as well the form as the action itself), 3619. þeir váru . . . lagamenn miklir . . . þeir veittu Gizuri hvíta at hverju máli, c. 56. þeir . . . létu þat standa fyrir kviðburði um mál Auðúlís at aðili var í Noregi, 8713. ef sá maðr andask er sök hefir selda eða til búna, bá er hann er aðili, ok þá hverfr mál þat undir hans erfingja, Gr. i. þb. 55. 1428. sá ríðr síðast, segir Kári, at ek vil eigi drepa . . . hánum hefir farit þó bezt í málum várum áðr, Nj. c. 146. 2547.

veit hann vánir leyndra mála með þeim...eru eigi þá sakarnar settri enn áðr, fþ. 47. 3628. priggja alþinga mál eru þetta allt, Gr. i. sp. 32. 34612. ens meira mals fœra, ok skal hann stefna, etc., Gr. i. Kb. 29. 43017. sama mál á bróðir sammæðr, Gþl. m. eb. 7. 240. ok ef kona á þann hluta máls, Krr. 9. 17. 124. Fere insimulatio, reatus, stefndi Sigurðr konungr þá þing,...ok bað Sigurð Hranason svara þar málum fyrir sik, Fms. vii. 130¹⁸. ok mun þá verða svarat máli því, Nj. c. 64. 99⁸. Njáll . . . spurði alla hina beztu menn . . . hvert mál þeim þætti Gunnarr eiga á þeim nöfnum fyrir fjörráðin, c. 70. 10526. Þá eru þeir varðir máli ef þeir fá þann bjargkvið, Gr. i. þþ. 16. 542. versk hann þá málinu, fp. 7. 31728. en þau ur málinu ef þórólft hittisk ei þar, Laxd. c. 15. 4412. ?en um xii mánaði stendr þeirra mál, Gr. i. þþ. 55. 14316. compounds, lis, Vestsjarda-mál, = process tilbörende Vestsirðir, Stu. A B. c. 53. ii. 8110. Bæjarhögna-mál, angaaende Bæjarhögni, Guðin. 1910. Áshildar-mál, angaaends Áshildr, 10324. XL. marka-mál, Ghl. 18516. II. Leading signification.

a.-mensura, fimm álna er hátt mál hans, Fms. vi. 42915. at þeir hafi jammiklir menn verit þá er þeir gengu undir mál, Laxd. c. 41. 17819 and Fms. ii. 7914. hann lagði mál við öll en stærstu tré, bæði bita ok staflægjur etc., Laxd. c. 74. 31622. ef málit gengi saman þá er optarr væri reynt etc., Korm. c. 3. 8. hann lyptir honum ór söðlinum ok kastar honum máls-lengð frá sér á leik-völlinn svá at í sundr ganga iii rifin i hanum, No. 580 . 717. Tempus (facere aliquid), time, fitting time, point of time, period (mæl or mél), en húsbóndi sá sveri um, er hann hafði inni sitt, at hann var þar þá nótt ok á því máli, Norske love 309²³. skipverjum þótti mál ór hafi, er á liðit var mjök sumarit, L N B. þ. iii. c. 12. 156²⁵ (= Isl. S⁷. i. 206⁹). fara síðan niðr þriðja sinni, þar til er Kjartani þikkir allt mál upp, S. i. Ól. þar til er Njáll talar at mönnum væri mál at lýsa Tryggv. 88. 2973. sökum sínum, Nj. c. 97. 14925. þá minnti biskup konung á, at mál væri at ganga at sofa, Fms. ii.... 13827. ok er mål at vér farim til Austreyjar, it is bigb time, Fær. c. 55. 255. mál er at leita at hestum várum, Kor. c. 19. 182. konungr spurði ef þegar væri mál at ríða, Fms. ii. 139¹⁴. ii. 130¹⁴. ok er allt mál at ættvig þessi takisk af, Laxd. c. 59. 258². ? þá metask kviðr þeirra sem þá at í mál yrði borinn kviðrinn (in due time? or = i dóm?), Gr. i. pp. c. 16. 54^{22} . 2. tempus prandendi et cænandi? (morning and evening meal-time), ef hanum er eigi deildr matr at málum, Gr. i. þþ. 56. 1944. ok ala þá hvára tveggju í eitt mál ef rúmheilagt er (cf. l. 23 i tvö mál), Gr. i. umb. 30. 2931. Cod. A. en styrimenn skulu fœða þá í tvau mál, (Cod. B.) Gr. ii. Skmf. 2. 40029. ok oxa barf hann (sc. ormrinn) í mál, Fas. i. 2387. ok láta gefa fátækum mönnum mat í tvö mál, Stu. þ. 3. c. 13. ia. 21614. þat er ok mitt ráð, þó þat sé at fyrra múli, at menn snæði nökkut ok drekki, though before the meal (meal)-time, Fms. viii. 381, var. 18 (al. var. í fyrra lagi).

b.—quarta pars anni, i misseri eru mál tvau, en i máli eru mánuðir ok hefir sá sök er | þrír, Rb. i. c. 3. 611. mánuðr iii. Ann. No. 415. 423.

(Finis, being altogether about 180 references in seven somewhat closely-written pages in Mr. Cleasby's volume.)

2.—THE SAME WORD IN THE COPENHAGEN TRANSCRIPTS

(Transmitted to England in 1854, from which Mr. Vigfusson had to work).

mal, n., A) speech, 1) speech, power of expressing thoughts by words: Sn.... Fms. i 97, x 148. Rb. 347, 348. Deir glötudu einnar tungu mali (speech in one language), er fordum vildu stöpul smida í gegn guði, 677 p. 19 .- b) voice, organ of speech: Honocentaurus hefir tvenn m. (wr. mól), 673 p. 47.-c) language, tongue, idiom: Fins. vii 165. Mæl þú við mik gerzkt m., 677 p. 75. Sn. 161. Sumum (gessk) mála þýðing, 677 p. 20.—2) speech, talk, verbal utterance: Eg. 735. Nj. 200. Fms. iv 28, 374 (lit. other speech = prose), vii 158, ix 535. Fas. ii 512. Ld. 106, 130. En er hann hafði þetta mælt, fylldisk m. hans, 623 p. 43. på svarar drottinn varr med malum Davids propheta (in the words of David), 619 p. 31. (hann) bar mikit m. a, at (be) insisted much: Fms. x 93.-b) expression, mode of expression, form of a language (= Lat. effatum): Sks. 301. Grag. i 40, 317. Fms. xi 40.—c) celloquy, discourse: Nj. 10. Eg. 106, 601, 764. Fms. i 204. Ef þeir vildu hafa hans m. if they wished his audience: Fms, vii 241.—Espec., answer, refly: Eg. 703. Hkr. i 77. Fas. iii 525.-3) anything told, spoken, or written: bat var m. manna it was told, Nj. 268. Eg. 29. Fms. vii 150. hafa at (a) mali to speak of, make mention of: Fms. vii 301. Ld. 88 .- narration, relation: Ld. 314. Fms. xi 41.-b) appointment, judgment, decision: Grag. i 69, 296, ii 342.—c) assertion, demand: Isl. i 12. Fms. vii 221, 230. Nj. 58. Grág. i 393. Isl. ii 237.—d) agreement, stipulation, condition: Grag. i 148, 336. Isl. ii 217 .- e) command, commandment . . : Sa er litt...m. guds ok setning laga, 677 p. 1. Så er elskar mik mun halda m. min, 677 p. 17.—f) proverb, saying: Fms. x 261.—g) a complete period: Su. 124, 125,-h) the mode of appellation (either with an usual or artificial term) in poetry: Su. 49, 123. Fins. v 209,—i) engraved Runes or Runic words: Ld. 78. NO, viii 18.—B) something to be managed or transacted, 1) business, affair: Engi maor á annat m. at deila í kirkju, nema bidja fyrir sér ok öllu kristnu fólki, 619 p. 34. Eg. 62, 40. Ld. 180. Fms. xi 104. Fas. ii 532. Nj. 192 .- Espec., affair, business of courtship: Nj. 259. Ld. 22. Fas. i 364. Fms. xi 104.—b) matter, affair: Nj. 4. Rb. 312. Grag. i 136 (stipulation?).-sva er m. med vexti the was another affair: Nj. 256.—e-t skiptir (varðar) máli (miklu, litlu or the like) a thing is of importance: Eg. 742. Hkr. ii 32, 207. Fms. xi 313. 1. 260.—skiptir þá eigi máli then it is indifferent: Grág. i 43. e-t à eigi máli at skipta a thing is not relating to: Nj. 87.—c) state, eircumstance, condition: Fas. i 340. Fms. vii 124. Ld. 76. Nj. 85. En m. hans stendr í svá miklum háska, 655 xxxii p. 1.-d) eause: Fms. x 296, xi 396. Grág. i 143.—2) cause, process, action: Grág. i 38, 59, 135, 362. Nj. 2, 36, 86, 87, 254.—the form of an action: Nj. 36.—b) legal right, right of inheritance: Gpl. 240.—c) charge, indictment, complaint, accusation: Grag. i 54, 317. Nj. 99. Ld. 44. Fms. vii 130 .- affair is this, of that condition: 1. 43. Fas. iii 59.—var pat annat m. it | guilt (=Lat. reatus): Grág. i 430. Nj. 105.—C) measure, 1) of local character, 2) measure, dimension (beight, longitude): Korm. 8. Fms. vi 429.-b) measure, that by which anything is measured: Ld. 178, 316.-Also it seems to have been used in notion of a certain measure; cfr. málslengd.—2) of temporal character, 2) time, feriod, point of time: Ngl. i 309, 240.—b) time, fitting time: 1sl. i 206. Nj. 149. Fms. ii 138, 139. bat er m., at it is bigb time: Fær. 255. Korm. 182. Ld. 258-c) meal (morning and evening with regard to milking of cattle, sheep, twice a day): Grag. ii 230, 231. Cf. i II, B, I, e.-d) meal time (also with regard to morning and evening): Grag. i 149 .- at fyrra mali before the usual (meal) time: Fms. viii 381 (var.).-e) quarter (of a year): Rb. 6.

N. B.—This word is (with very few exceptions) a fair specimen of the Copenhagen transcripts for the whole of the letters A. B. E. G. L. M. R, T, b, Æ, Ö, and for the half or two-thirds of H. See the Preface, p. vi.—G. V.

II.—A SPECIMEN OF MR. CLEASBY'S VERBS. THE VERB 'FA', but leaving out all references, only shewing the frame-work or model on which Mr. Cleasby worked out his verbs. The references given by Mr. Cleasby are about 110.

fá-fz, föngum * (sic), fékk, fengum, fenginn, v. a. et n.

I. Forma activa—sensus activus.

A. to get, receive, obtain, take, procure, as well willingly as without one's consent.

1. to get, receive, take, willingly as something desired, accipere, nancisci cum acc.: at ek munda lítið brauð fá eðr annan mat, Fms. x. 184. (References follow.)

cum genitivo: peir borðusk við lands-menn ok fengu þar fjár mikils, Nj. 89. 1372. Haraldr konungr fékk þeirrar konu er Ragnhildr hét, Fms. i. 418, Nj. 13. 2410. (More references follow.)

2. to get, receive, without one's consent, or something disagreeable, unwished, or which comes upon a person. (References follow.)

3. with the signification to procure, provide. (References follow.) This verb is also used in the signification 'to be able' to accomplish (posse), in connexion with the participle preterite ... fá e-n veiddan ...

with the participle omitted. (References follow.) (absolute) without subject, i.e. 'maôr' understood, vápn svá góð at eigi fær önnur slik, Nj. 30. 442.

B. sensus neuter.

impersonal. (References.)

C. sensus activa (sic), with the signification to deliver, make over, give, etc., tradere. (References.)

Il. Forma passiva. I. recipr. signification (references). signification (references). 3. passive signification (references). 4. participle adjective (references).

* Thus by a slip of the pen for fam, mod. faum.

III.—A SPECIMEN OF MR. CLEASBY'S PRINTED MATTER. THE WORD 'AT.'

AT

at. conj. (G. þatei. A.S. þæt. Ohg. daz). It is also sometimes found in good MSS. written ad.-ut, quod, and as relative pron. qui, quæ, quod.

A. tbat. to.

1. of consecutive character-that. hann var svå mikill lagamaor at öngir þóttu lögligir dómar nema hann væri í. Nj. 1, 1. hárit...svá mikit at þat tók ofan á belti. I, 213. svá kom of síðir því máli, at Sigvaldi letti undan. Fms. xi. 95 .- also without a preceding sva. Bæringr var til seinn eptir hánum, at hann komst fyrr í borgina en hann fengi náð hanum. 580 a. 1528. so that be got into, &c. skyrtunnar dugnaðr hlitdi konungssynni, at hann sakadi ekki. Fas. iii. 441.

2. where design, intention is expressed—that = in order that. frest bu oss undan valdi Serkja at öll veraldarbyggðin viti at þú einn er drottinn. Sti. 437. þeir...skáru fyrir þá melinn, at þeir dæi eigi af sulti. Nj. 152, 265. fyrsti lutr bókarinnar er Kristindóms-bólkr, at menn skili kristiliga trú vera grundvöll ok upphaf allra góða verka. Gul. M. fm. viii.

3. connecting two propositions—that. bat var einhverju sinni, at Höskuldr hafði vinaboð. Nj. 1, 2. þat var á palmdrottinsdag at Olafr konungi gekk úti um stræti. Fms. ii. 244. vilda ek at þú reðiz austr í fjórðu. Nj. 38, 57. ef svá kann at verða, að þeir láti síga ok renni undan. Fms. xi. 94.—used in connexion—a. with bo, signifying together, although.-svarar hann bo rett at hann svari sva. Grag. bs. 3. i. 23. þó er rett at nýta hann, at hann se fyrir skorinn. I Krist. g. 32, 134. gef þú mer, þó at úverðugri...at geta son. Stj. 315. þó at nökkurum mönnum sýnist þetta með freku sett...þávilj um vèr gjarna eiða vinna. Fins. vi. 21.—also witbout þú, in the same signification. eigi mundi hon þá meirr hvata göngunni, at hon hræddiz bana sinn. Sn. Ed. 99. 12. 12²².—b. with því, signifying together, because.—pví pégi ek, at ek undrumst hvè mikil ógnarraust, &c. Fms. iii. 201. því er þessa getit at þat þótti vera rausn mikil. Laxd. 19, 684. því at allir voru gerviligir synir hans. id. því at af íþróttum verðr maðr froor. Skuggs. 243 b. 36. 20.—but as bo and bvi (which see) are often used alone in this signification, without at, this latter has something of a superfluous character; this is much more decidedly the case in-c. of modern appearance after ef. ef at bu laggr hlut binn við betta. Ljósv. 14, 45.—also in relative propositions, see B. 4.—d. it is used elliptically at the beginning of a proposition in forensic language, a preceding phrase or formula being left out, or to be understood, as, it is decreed, the law ordains, or the like.—at þeir skulu með váttorð þá sok sækja. Grág. þs. 22. i. 6530. ef sök kömr á hendr þeim manni er í dóm er nefndr, at hánum er rètt hvárt sem hann vill, at verja sök þa eða, &c. 21, 642. 28, 7919. 38, 1063.—e, used also with a pret. participle, where the personal pron. and auxiliary verb are left out .- nú hefi ek gort sem bú beiddist, at lokit upp með (noccorum) nökkurum orðum fyrir þer hví ormrinn mælti. Skuggs. 243 b. 109 a^{15} . i.e. at ek hefi lokit upp. þá hafa þeir med bessu efni skýringar görvar, at hugleitt hverr grundvöllr eða hvert 2. i. e. at beir hafa hugleitt. nú hefir guð eini hefir, &c. id. 113 a.

AT

pat hefnt er hann hefir heitit pèr, at sent i hendr per úvin pinn. id. 147 a. b. i. e. at hann hefir sent.

4. used before an infinitive-to. mikit mant þú þurfa fram at leggja med honum. Nj. 2, 317. hafa þeir þó yrit at vinna. Fms. xi. 9511. ok varð nú við að snúast ok veita vörn. 96°. after certain verbs, as kunna, láta, mega, munu, skulu, þykkja, vilja; when used as incomplete ones before the infinitive of another verb, it is left out before this infinitive. beir er mildliga kunnu styra guðs hjörð. 619. 37¹⁶. svá hygginn at hann kunni fyrir sökum ráða. Grág. vs. 37. ii. 75²³. Gunnarr mun af því láta vaxa óþokka við þik. Nj. 71. 107². þeir Hvamverjar lètu fara ordum, at, &c. Laxd. 16. 50¹⁷. lèt hún þar fjandskap í móti koma. 16. 5014. litlar sögur megu ganga frá hesti mínum. Nj. 58. 907. í alluni lutum þeim er þryða má góðan höfðingja. Fms. x. 230. þar man vera Gunnarr frændi þinn. Nj. 54, 85. þat mundi jörunn systir mín ætla. 180²⁵. ek veit þann mann er kunna man. Guðm. 13²⁰. nú skalt þú deyja. Nj. 42, 64. skyldi Unnr sitja þrjá vetr í festum. 2, 424. Sveinn... pikki þat tjá at hann fær eigi haldit tign sinni. Fms. xi. 86°. fyrir sakastaði þá er hann þótti á eiga. Nj. 106, 166. hann þótti játa því. Nj. 81, 121. nú vil ek spyrja yðr hvat þer sáb. 23. 35. Guðrún kvaðst vildu vita hvat þeir vildu at hafast. Laxd. 48, 216.—$. It is also sometimes the case with eiga and ganga. modur sina a madr fyrst fram fœra. Grág. ú. 1. i. 2324. þá á þann kvið enskis meta-bs. 18. i. 5919. but 1. 26. å pat enskis at meta, er konungr var sofa genginn, var sveinninn eptir í höllinni. Fms. vi. 6. and on the whole not uncommon in both constructions. - y. with the verbs hliota and verba, when used in the signification, must, and placed after the infinitive of the other verb (when placed before it, at is retained: see hljota and verba)-her mantu vera hljóta. Nj. 86, 129. en fara hlýtr bú með mer til Jómsborgar. Fms. i. 159¹⁶. þat munu þeir ok vita verða. Fóstb. 9, 32. en vita verð ek, hvar til þetta heyrir. Fms. ii. 146¹². but cases also occur where verða is placed first. pó verðr maðr eptir mann lífa. Fas, ii. 552. hann man verða sækja. Fms. viii. 19.—b. as an exception it is sometimes found retained. ok ef svá kann at verða. Fms. xi. 94. hvárt sem hann vill AΤ at verja sök þa, eða, &c. Grág, þs. 21, i. 64. fyrr viljum vèr önga kórónu at bera, en nökkut ófrelsi á oss at taka. Fms. x. 12.—c. it is also occasionally left out where it should be used. þessa hátíð lögtaka. þá er guð gefr oss, finnast á prestastefnu. Dipl. ii. 14¹⁰. tak lög af læknisgrasi...ok gef hánum drekka. 655. xxx. 1⁸.—2. it sometimes expresses intention, design—to =in order to. Öxur bauð þeim inn í búðina at drekka. Nj. 2, 4. þenna myrginn gekk Kolr...í borg at kaupa silír. 158, 280. (hann) sendi riddara sína með þeim at vorveita (= varðveita) þær. 623, 45²⁶.

B. used relatively—as the indecl. relat. pron. et is sometimes used for at, we also find at sometimes used for ex.

1. eausative—since, because. hann skal...mæla sva: at ek færi yðr (sc. ómaga) at þèr erut í einum hrepp allir. Grág. ú. 8. i. 260¹³. as, in that, because you all inhabit the same district. eigi er kynligt at Skarpheðinn sè hraustr, at þat er mælt at fjórðungi bregði til fóstrs. Nj. 42, 64. since it is said—these approach nearly to at = því at, with þvi left out.

2. temporal—as, when. jafnan er mèr þá verra í hug er ek ferr á braut þaðan, enn þá at ek kem. Gretl. Cod. 165¹³. sem ek kvað þú at ek lýsta. Nj. 142, 233. þar til at vèr vitum hvárt fundr várr mun verða, ok bónda. Fms. v. 53.

3. as a relative pronoun—wbo, which. en engi mun sá, at minnisamara mun vera um þenna athurð...enn mèr. Laxd. 55, 242. Guðrún er komin gegnt rekkju þeirri, at Kjartan var vanr at liggja í. 46, 202.

svà mikil sem bau blótnaut at stærst verða. Fms. ii. 214.

4. used superfluously in relative propositions. með fullkommun ávexti ...hverr at þekkr ok þægiligr mun verða hinum hæstum himnakonungi. Fms. v. 159. Ólafr konungr spurði Önund konung hvern styrk at hann mundi fá honum. 44. allir kirkjusóknarmenn, þeir sem at færir eru til, skulu koma til sóknarkirkju. Hist. ii. 82. ek undrumst hvè mikil ógnarraust at liggr í þèr. Fms. iii. 201. nú mun ek segja, yðr því at ek em Nornagestr kallaðr. Fas. i. 3407. wberefore I am.

in attu, which see-enclitically for at bu. Fms. xi. 66-81.

A is the first letter in all the alphabets of Phenician extraction. The Runic alphabet, being confused and arbitrary, makes the sole exception to this rule.

A. Pronunciation: it is either simple (a) or diphthongal (a). The simple a is pronounced long or short; when long it is sounded like the long Italian a as in padre, or as in Engl. father; when short, like the short Italian a as in cambio, or as in Engl. marry. The á—though in grammars commonly called a long vowel—is phonetically diphthongal (a + u), and sounds like Engl. ou or ow: Engl. thou and Icel. pá, now and ná, have almost the same sound. Again a and a have, like all other vowels, diphthongs or simple, a deep, full chest-sound if followed by a single consonant, or by more than one weak consonant (a liquid followed by a media). They sound short if followed by two or more strong consonants (a double mute or liquid): thus the a and a sound long in tal, sermo; sat, sedebat; man, mancipium; tal, dolus; ar, remus; sat, sessio; hatr, odium; haror, durus; kaldr, frigidus; vandr, difficilis; tamdr, domitus, etc. But short in hatt, pileum; hatt, modum; mann, bominem; bann, interdictum; hall, lubricus; kalt, frigidum; ramt, acidum; hart, durum; vant, assuetum, etc.; the consonants shortening the sound of the preceding vowel. The a is also short in all endings, verbal or nominal, tālā, tālār, tālāðā, dixi; tālāst, dicitur; vākā, vigilia; fāgrān, pulcbrum, etc. Etymologically a distinction must be made between the primitive á, as in sátu (sedebant), átu (edebant), gátu (poterant), and the á produced by suppressing consonants; either nasals, as in á, ást, áss, báss, gás, = an, anst, ans, bans, gans; or gutturals, b, g, k, as in & (aqua), så (videbat), lå (jacebat), må (debet), nått (nox), dråttr (tractus), and a great many others; or labials, v, f, as in a = af, air = afr, har but hafan; or dentals, as in nál (acus) [Goth. nepla, Engl. needle], vál (ambitus, mendicitas) [A.S. vädl], etc. In very early times there was no doubt an audible distinction between these two kinds of \acute{a} , which however is not observed even by the earliest poets, those of the 10th century. The marking of the diphthongal vowels with an acute accent is due to the Icelandic philologist Thorodd (circa 1080-1140), and was probably an imitation of Anglo-Saxon. The circumflex, applied by Jacob Grimm, is unknown to Icel. authors of whatever age. Thorodd, in his treatise on the vowels (Skálda, pp. 160 sqq.), distinguishes between three kinds of vowels, viz. sbort, long (i.e. diphthongal), and nasal. The long ones he proposes to mark with an acute ('); the nasals by a dot above the line ('). The vowels of his alphabet are thirty-six in number. According to his rule we should have to write, af (ex), at (esus), a (in). No doubt the a was also nasal in the verbs and the weak nouns, koma (=koman), auga (gen.); and also when followed by an n, e.g. vanr (assuefactus). The distinctive marking of the nasals never came into practice, and their proper sound also disappeared; neither is this distinction observed by the poets in their rhymes. The marking of the diphthongal vowels-either the primitive vowels or those formed by agglutination—by an acute accent, according to the rule of Thorodd, is indeed used in a very few old Icel, parchment fragments of the 12th century. The only MS. of any considerable length which strictly observes this distinction is the Ann. Reg. Isl. 2087. 4b. Royal Libr. Copenhagen, written in Icel. at the end of the 13th century. In the great bulk of MSS. both kinds of vowels are treated alike, as in Latin. About the middle of the 14th century the doubling of vowels, especially that of aa (a) = a, came into use, and was employed through more than three centuries, until about 1770 the Icelanders resumed the spelling of Thorodd, marking diphthongal vowels by an acute accent, but following the rules of modern pronunciation. The diphthong auin Norse freq. spelt on—has at present in Icel. a peculiar sound, answering to au or eu in German, and nearly to Engl. of. The Norse pronunciation is different and perhaps more genuine.

B. CHANGES.

I. a changes into e, & into æ: this change—a part of a more general transformation, by Grimm termed umlaut, vowel-change'—is common to all the Teutonic idioms, except the Gothic (v. letter E and E).

II. a changes into e, & into æ: this change—is band (vinculum), id. 163; tungan er målin
at tönnunum er bitsins von (morsús exsp Gothic (v. letter E and E).

III. a changes into e, & into æ: this change—is band (vinculum), id. 163; tungan er målin
at tönnunum er bitsins von (morsús exsp Grágás, lýsa sár sitt (vulnus) eðr sor (vulnus) sor en minni (vulnera leviora), 170; en síðan es sor eða ben voru lýst, 175; engi rað, 176, 177; mol, ii. 51; vor, 158, etc.

place. 1. in monosyllabic nouns with a for their radical vowel, feminines, öld, periodus; önd, anima; örk, arca; för, iter; höll, aula; hönd, manus; sök, causa, etc. β. adjectives in fem. sing. and in neut. pl., öll, tota; fögr, pulcbra; hörð, dura; hölt, clauda; sönn, vera; from Y. in plur. neut., bond, vincula; born, rénva; lond, terrae; from band, etc. 8. in singular masculines with a suppressed u in the root, hjörtr, cervus; fjördr, sinus; björn, ursus; örn, aquila, 2. in dissyllables a radical a, when followed by a final u (-u, -ur, -um, etc.), in Icel. constantly changes into ö,-öllum, cunctis; mönnum, bominibus; köllum, vocamus; vökum, vigiliis and vigilamus; vökur, vigiliae, etc. Danes and Swedes here retained the a; so did a great part of Norway. The change only prevailed in the west of Norway and the whole of Iceland. Some Norse MSS. therefore constantly keep a in those cases, e. g. Cd. Ups. De la Gard. 8 (Ed. C. R. Unger, 1849), which spells allum, cunctis; hafub, caput; jasur, rex; andveror, adversus; afund, invidia, etc. (v. Pref. viii.) Other Norse MSS. spell a and ö promiscuously; allum or öllum, kallum or köllum. In Icel. this change prevailed about the year 1000. Even at the end of the 10th century we still frequently meet with rhymes such as bard-jardu, pang-3. a in inflexions, in penultimate syllables, if followed by u, changes into u (or ö); thus keisurum, caesaribus; vitrurum, sapientioribus; hörðurum, durioribus; hörðustum, durissimis: pret. pl., sköpuðu, creabant; töluðu, dicebant; orrustu, pugnam. In part. pass. fem. sing. and neut. pl., sköpuð, creata; töluð, dicta; töpuð, perdita. Neut. pl. in words, as sumur, aestates; heruð, pagi. This change is peculiar to Iceland, and is altogether strange to Norse MSS., where we constantly find such forms as ztladu, putabant; gnagadu, mordebant; aukadu, augebant; skapad, creata; kallað, dicta; skaparum, tapaðum, ágætastum, harðarum, skín-andum; kunnastu, artem, etc. This difference, as it frequently occurred at early times, soon gave the Icel. idiom a peculiar and strange sound,—amarunt would, in Icelandic, be ömurunt. Norse phrases—as með bænum ok fastu (föstu) hafðu (höfðu) með sér vaxljós, ok dýrkaðu (dýrkuðu) þa hælgu hátíð með fastu (föstu) ok vaktu (vöktu) þar um nóttina með margum (mörgum) aðrum (öðrum) vanfærum mannum (mönnum), O. H. L. 87-sound uncouth and strange to Icel. ears; and so no doubt did the Icel. vowel transformations to Norse ears. 4. endings in -an, -all, e.g. feminines in -an, as hugsan, atlan, idran, frequently change into -un,—hugsun, atlun, idrun, and are now always used so: gamall, vetus, f. gömul; einsamall, solus, f. einsömul. In modern Norse, gomol, eismol (Ivar Aasen); atall, atrox; ötull, strenuus; svikall, perfidus, and svikull; prifnaðr, mundities, and 5. in the cases correlative to II. 1, 2, the a in its turn changes into a vowel, by Thorodd marked &; this vowel change seems, to have been satisfed about the beginning of the 11th century, and in full on prevailed in Iceland during the 12th, being constantly employed in MSS. of that time; about the end of that century, however, and the beginning of the next, it fell off, and at last became extinct. Its phonetical value, therefore, cannot now be precisely stated: it no doubt had an intermediate sound between \dot{a} and \dot{o} , such as \ddot{o} (o) has between a and o. Thorodd proposed to mark the short 'umlaut' o by o; and the vowel change of a by & (in the MSS. however commonly written o). INSTANCES: sem., &, amnis; &st, amor; &sl, funis; &sr, remus; &sg, lignum; skr&, libellus; sott, pax; sol, anima; nol, acus; von, spes: masc., hottr, modus; prodt, filum; pottr, funis; mottr, vis; des, deus; der, nuntius: neut. pl., sor, vulnera; tor, δάκρυα; mol, dicta; rod, consilia; vor, vera: adj. fem. and neut., kot, læta; f.o, pauca; sm.o, parva; h.o, alta; f.om, paucis; hom, altis: verbs, so, videbant (but sá, videbat); gotu, capie-bant; otu, edebant (but át, edebat), etc.: v. Frump. 26-28: e. g. sár (vulnus) veitti maor mer eitt (unum), sor morg (multa vulnera) veitta ek hánum, Skálda (Thorodd), 162; ol (= öl, cerevisia) er drykkr, ol er band (vinculum), id. 163; tungan er málinu von (= von, assuefacta), en at tonnunum er bitsins von (morsus exspectatio), id.: frequently in the Gragas, lýsa sar sitt (vulnus) eor sor (vulnera) ef fleiri eru, Kb. i. 151; sór en minni (vulnera leviora), 170; en meire sór (graviora), 174; síðan es sór eða ben voru lýst, 175; engi sór (nulla vulnera), sor, and changed into vo; v6 of the 14th century being an intermediate form: thus von, spes; votr, madidus; vor, ver; vorr, noster; vodi, periculum; koma, adventus; voru, erant, etc.: so also the á in the dat. hánum, illi, now honum, which is also employed in the editions of old writings; kómu = kvámu = kvómu, veniebant, etc. In Norway a was often changed into a in the pronominal and adverbial forms; as hæna, illam; bær, bænn, bæt, ibi, illum, illud; hence originate the mod. Dan. bende, der, den, det; in some Norse dialects even still dar, dat. The short a in endings in mod. Dan. changed into e (a), e. g. komme, uge, talede, Icel. koma, vika; whereas the Swedes still preserve the simple a, which makes their language more euphonious than the mod. Dan. In most districts of Icel. an a before ng, nk, has changed into a, thus langr (longus), strangr (durus), krankr (aegrotus) are spelt långr, kránkr, etc. In the west of Iceland however we still say langr, strangr, etc., which is the pure old form. The a becomes long when followed by If, Im, Ip, thus alfr, genius; alpt, cygnus; halfr, dimidius; kalfr, vitulus; sjalfr, ipse; this is very old: the fem. holf, dimidia, which occurs in the 12th century, points to an \vec{a} , not \vec{a} ; $j\vec{a} = j\vec{a}$ in hjálpa, skjálfa, etc. The lengthening before lmis later,-álmr, ulmus; hálmr, calamus; sálmr, psalmus; hjálmr, galea; málmr, metallum, etc. In all these cases the \acute{a} is not etymological. Also before In in the plur. of alin, alnar not alnar: Ik, alka = alka, alca; bálkr = balkr; fálki = falki, falco: háls = hals; frjáls = frjals; járn = jarn; skald = skald; v. those words: aarni, dat. of arinn, v. that word: the proper name Árni, properly Arni: abbati, abbas, ábóti: Adám, on the contrary, changed into Adam; María into Maria, Mary. The old spelling is still kept in máriatla, motacilla pectore albo, etc. In the 1st pers. pret, indic, and in the pres, and pret, conj. we have a changed into i, e.g. talaða to talaði, locutus sum; sagða, dixi, vilda, volui, hafða, babui, to sagði, vildi, haíði: in the 1st pers. pres. and pret. conj., heíða, baberem, haía, babeam, to heíði, haíi. These forms occur as early as the beginning of the 13th century (e. g. in the Hulda, Cd. A. M. 66, fol. = Fms. vi. and vii). In the south of Iceland however (Reykjavík, the Árnes and Gullbringusýsla) the old forms are still frequently heard in bisyllabic preterites, esp. ek vilda, sagða, hafða, and are also employed in writing by natives of those districts.

D. a answers to Goth. a; A. S. ea (a, ä); allr, totus; Goth. alls; A. S. eall: the primitive & to Goth. ê, satu, Goth. sêtun, sedebant; grata, grêtan, lacrymari; láta, lêtan; vápn, vêpn, arma; vágr, vêgs, fluctus. The Icel. secondary &, on the contrary, must in the kindred Teutonic idioms be sought for under a vowel plus a consonant, such as an, ab, or the like. A.S. a commonly answers to Icel. 4, láta, A.S. latan; dáð, A.S. dað; þráðr, A.S. præö, Engl. thread; mál (καιρόs), A.S. mæl, cp. Engl. meal. The A.S. â, on the contrary, etymologically answers to Icel. ei. The diphthong au answers to Goth. au, A. S. ea,-raudr, Goth. rauds, A. S. read, Engl. red. In English the a seems at very early times to have assumed its present ambiguous sound; this we may infer from A.S. words introduced into Icelandic. The river Thames in Icel, is spelt, as it is still pronounced in England, as Tems, which form occurs in a poem of the year 1016.

E. The Runic character for a was in the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon Runes (so termed by P. A. Munch) | [A. S. |]; so in the Golden horn, on the stone in Thune in Norway (Ed. by P. A. Munch, 1857), The Saxons called it ôs = ass, deus. and in the Bracteats. Runes it was the fourth letter in the first group (fubork). The Scandinavians in their Runes used this character for o, and called it óss, ostium, probably misled by the A.S. pronunciation of the homely word ass. This character, however, occurs only a few times in the common Runes, which in its stead used the A.S. Rune j, gor, annona, which is the fourth Rune in the second group (hnias, A.S. hnijs), called according to the northern pronunciation ar, annona: this letter, I or I, has the form, as well as the name and place, of the A. S. j, ϕ .

-A or -AT or -T, a negative suffix to verbs, peculiar to Iceland and a part, at least, of Norway. Occurs frequently in old Icelandic poetry and laws, so as almost to form a complete negative voice. In the 1st pers. a personal pronoun k(g) = ek is inserted before the negative suffix, in the 2nd pers. a t or tt. As a rule the pron. is thus repeated; má-k-at-ek, non possum; sé-k-at-ek, non video; hef-k-at-ek, non babeo; skal-k-at-ek; vil-k-at-ek, nolo; mon-k-at-ek, non ero, etc.: 2nd pers. skal-t-at-tu; mon-t-at-tu; gaf-t-at-tu, non dabas: and after a long vowel a tt, matt-attu, sátt-at-tu; so almost invariably in all monosyllabic verbal forms; but not so in bisyllabic ones, máttir-a-bú, non poteras: yet in some instances in the 1st pers. a pronominal g is inserted, e.g. bjargi-g-a-k, verbally servem ego non ego; höggvi-g-a-k, non caedam; stodvi-g-a-k, quin sistam; vildi-g-a-k, nolui; hafði-g-a-k, non babui; mátti-g-a-k, non potui; görði-g-a-k, non feci: if the verb has gg as final radical consonants, they change into kk, e.g. pikk-at-ek = pigg-k-at-ek, nolo skalat fŷl telja, 89; skalat hann banna fiskför, 123; skalat hann lóga

C. OTHER CHANGES:—in modern Icel. the old syllable vá has accipere. In the 3rd pers. a and at or t are used indifferently, t being particularly suffixed to bisyllabic verbal flexions ending in a vowel, in order to avoid an hiatus,-skal-at or skal-a, non erit; but skolo-t, non sunto: forms with an hiatus, however, occur, -biti-a, non mordat; renni-a, ne currat; skridi-a, id.; leti-a, ne retardet; væri-a, ne esset; urdu-a. non erant; but biti-t, renni-t, skriði-t, urðu-t are more current forms: v. Lex. Poët. The negative suffix is almost peculiar to indic., conj., and imperat. moods; the neg. infin. hardly occurs. Nothing analogous to this form is to be found in any South-Teutonic idiom; neither do there remain any traces of its having been used in Sweden or Denmark. A single exception is the Runic verse on a stone monument in Oland, an old Danish province, now Swedish, where however the inscriptions may proceed from a Norse or Icel. hand. The Runic inscriptions run thus, sa'r aigi flo, who did not fly, old Icel. 'flo-at,' Baut. 1169. Neither does it occur in any Norse prose monuments (laws): but its use may yet be inferred from its occurrence in Norse poets of the 10th century, e.g. the poets Eyvind and Thiodolf; some of which instances, however, may be due to their being transmitted through Icel. oral tradition. Bragi Gamli (9th century) it occurs twice or thrice; in the Haustlöng four times, in Ynglingatal four times, in Hákonarmál once (all Norse poems of the 10th century). In Icel, the suffixed negation was in full force through the whole of the 10th century. A slight difference in idioms, however, may be observed: Völuspá, e.g., prefers the negation by no (using vas-at only once, verse 3). In the old Hávamal the suffix abounds (being used thirty-five times), see the verses 6, 10, 11, 18, 26, 29, 30, 34, 37-39, 49, 51, 52, 68, 74, 88, 113-115, 126-128, 130, 134, 136, 147, 149, 151, 153, 159. In Skirnismál, Harbarðsljóð, Lokasenna—all these poems probably composed by the same author, and not before the 10th century-about thirty times, viz. Hbl. 3. 4. 8, 14, 26, 35, 56; Skm. 5, 18, 22; Ls. 15, 16, 18, 25, 28, 30, 36, 42, 47, 49, 56, 60, 62. Egil (born circa 900, died circa 990) abounds in the use of the suffixed neg. (he most commonly avails himself of -at, -gi, or né): so, too, does Hallfred (born circa 968, died 1008), Einar Skálaglam in Vellekla (circa 940-995), and Thorarin in the Mahliðingavísur (composed in the year 981); and in the few epigrams relating to the introduction of Christianity in Icel. (995-1000) there occur mon-k-a0-ek, tekk-at-ek, vil-k-at-ek, hlífði-t, mon-a, es-a; cp. the Kristni S. and Njala. From this time, however, its use becomes more rare. Sighvat (born circa 995, died 1040) still makes a frequent but not exclusive use of it. Subsequent poets use it now and then as an epic form, until it disappeared almost entirely in poetry at the middle or end of the 13th century. In the Sólarljóð there is not a single instance. The verses of some of our Sagas are probably later than the Sagas themselves; the greatest part of the Völsungakviður are scarcely older than the 11th century. In all these -at and conj. eigi are used indifferently. In prose the laws continued to employ the old forms long after they were abolished in common prose. The suffixed verbal negation was used, a. in the delivering of the oath in the Icel. Courts, esp. the Fifth Court, instituted about the year 1004; and it seems to have been used through the whole of the Icel. Commonwealth (till the year 1272). The oath of the Fifth (High) Court, as preserved in the Grágás, runs in the 1st pers., hefca ck fé borit í dóm þenna til liðs mér um sök þessa, ok ek monka bjóða, hefka ek fundit, ok monka ek finna, hvárki til laga né ólaga, p. 79; and again p. 81, only different as to ek hefka, ek monka (new Ed.): 3rd pers., hefirat hann fé borit i dóm þenna ok monat hann bjóða, ok hefirat hann fundit, ok monat hann finna, 80, 81; cp. also 82, and Nj. l. c. ch. 145, where it is interesting to observe that the author confounds the 1st and 3rd persons, a sign of decay in grammatical form. β. the Speaker (lögsögumaðr), in publicly reciting and explaining the law, and speaking in the name of the law, from the Hill of Laws (lögberg), frequently employed the old form, esp. in the legal words of command es and skal (yet seldom in plur.): erat in the dictatorial phrases, erat skyldr (skylt), non esto obligatus; erat landeigandi skyldr, Grag. (Kb.) i. 17; erat hinn skyldr, 21; yngri maor era skyldr at fasta, 35; enda erat honum þá skylt at..., 48; erat þat sakar spell, 127; era hinn þá skyldr at lýsa, 154; erat hann framar skyldr sakráða, 216; ok erat hann skyldr at ábyrgjask þat fé, 238; ok erat hann skyldr, id.; ok erat sakar aðili ella skyldr, ii. 74; erat hinn skyldr við at taka, 142; erat manni skylt at taka búfé, 143; enda erat heimting til fjár þess, 169; era hann þá skyldr at taka við í öðru fé nema hann vili, 209; ok erat beim skylt at tiunda fé sitt, 211; ok erat hann skyldr at gjalda tíund af því, 212; erat kirkjudrottinn þá skyldr, 228; ef hann erat landeigandi, i. 136. Skalat: skalat maor eiga fé óborit, i. 23: skalat honum þat verða optar en um sinn, 55; skalat maðr ryðja við sjálfan sik, 62; skalat hann þat svá dvelja, 68; skalat hann til véfangs ganga, 71; skalat adilja i stefnuvætti hafa, 127; ok skala hann gjalda fyrir þat, 135; ok skalat hann með sök fara, 171; enda skalat hann fleirum baugum bœta, 199; skalat hann skilja félagit, 240; skalat hann meiri skuld eiga en, ii. 4; skalat þeim meðan á brott skipta, 5; skalat hann lögvillr verða, svá, 34; skalat hon at heldr varðveita þat fé, 59; skalat enn sami maðr þar lengr vera, 71; ok skala honum bæta þat, 79;

Digitized by

sé því á engi veg, 158; skalat drepa þá menn, 167; skalat svá skipta manneldi, 173; skalat maðr reiðast við fjórðungi vísu, 183. Plur.: skolut menn andvitni bera ok hér á þingi, i. 68; skolut mál hans standast, 71; skolut þeir færi til vefangs ganga en, 75, etc. etc. Other instances are rare: tekrat bar fé er eigi er til (a proverb), i. 9; ok um telrat þat til sakbóta, ok of telrat þá til sakbóta (it does not count), 178; ef hann villat (will not) lýsa sár sitt, 51; ok ræðrat hann öðrum mönnum á hendr þann úmaga, 248; ræðrat sá sínum ómögum á hendr, ii. 18; verðrat honum at sakarspelli and verðrat honum þat at s., i. 63; verðrat honum þat at sakarvörn, 149; kömrat hann öðru við, ii. 141; þarfat hann bíða til pess, i. 70; ok skilrat hann fra adra aura, ii. 141, i. 136. Reflexive form: komskat hann til heimtingar um þat fé, be loses the claim to the money, ii. 180, etc. All these instances are taken from the Kb. (Ed. 1853). Remarkable is also the ambiguity in the oath of Glum (see Sir Edm. Head, Viga-Glum, pp. 102, 103, note, l.c.), who, instead of the plain common formal oathvask-at-ek þar, vák-at-ek þar, rauðk-at-ek þar odd ok egg-said, vask at par, vak at par, raudk at par. He inverted the sense by dropping the intermediate pronominal ek between the verb and par, and pronouncing - instead of - o. It further occurs in some few proverbs: varat af voru, sleikði um þvoru, Fs. 159; veldrat sá er varir, Nj. 61 (now commonly ekki veldr sá er v., so in Grett.); erat héra at borgnara þótt hæna beri skjöld, Fms. vii. 116; era hlums vant kvað refr, dró hörpu á ísi, 19: also in some phrases, referred to as verba ipsissima from the heathen ageerat vinum lift Ingimundar, Fs. 39; erat sjá draumr minni, Ld. 128. Thorodd employs it twice or thrice: því at ek sékk-a þess meiri þörf, because I do not see any more reason for this, Skálda 167; kannka ek til þess meiri ráð en lítil, I do not know, id.; mona (will not) mín móna (my mammy) við mik göra verst hjóna, 163. In sacred translations of the 12th century it occurs now and then. In the Homilies and Dialogues of Gregory the Great: monathu i því flóði verða, thou shalt not; esa þat undarligt bott, it is not to be wondered at; hann mattia sofna, be could not sleep; moncap ek banna, I sball not mind, Greg. 51, 53; vasat kall heyrt á strætum, was not, Post. 645. 84; nú mona friðir menn hér koma, Niðrst. 623. 7. In later writers as an archaism; a few times in the Al. (MS. A. M. 519), 3, 5, 6, 44, 108; and about as many times in the MS. Eirspennill (A. M. 47, fol.) [Etymon uncertain; that at is the right form may be inferred from the assimilation in at-tu, and the anastrophe in t, though the reason for the frequent dropping of the t is still unexplained. The coincidence with the Scottish dinna, canna is quite accidental.]

abbadís, f. abbess, Hkr. iii. 398, Fms. vii. 239, Gpl. 365.

abbast, 20, dep. (= amast), to be incensed at, vex, molest; a-vio e-t, Clem. 50, Fms. vii. 166; a-uppá e-t, Nj. 194.

abbindi = af-bindi, n. tenesmus, Hm. 140; cp. Fél. ix. 185, where it is spelt af bendi.

AD = at, v. that word. ao- in compds, v. at-. -ao, suff. neg., v. -a. ADA, u, f. (and compo öou-skel, f.) a. mytulus testa planiuscula, β. fem. pr. n., Edda.

ADAL, [O. H. G. adal, genus; cp. also A. S. édele, nobilis; Old Engl. and Scot. etbel; Germ. edel; cola- and coal- came from mod. Dan. into Icel. adall, nobility. It does not occur in old writings in this sense.] nature, disposition, inborn native quality, used only in poetry; jobs a., childish, Yt. 13; osnotrs adal, foolish, insipid, Hm. 106; args a., dastardly, Ls. 23, 24; drengs a., noble, Km. 23; odyggs a., bad, Hsm. 19. the sense of offspring; adul Njardar (where it is n. pl.?), the gods, the off-pring of Njord, Hallfred in a poem, vide Fs. 59. II. used in a great many compos, chief-, bead-. abal-akkeri, n. sheet-anchor, Fms. great many compos, chief-, bead-. x. 130: β. metaph., Bs. i. 756. aðal-bjórr, s, m. prime beaver skin, Eb. (in a verse). aðal-borinn, part., v. óðalborinn. aðal-ból, n. a manor-bouse, farm inhabited by its master, opp. to tenant farms, Grág. (Kb.) ii. 150; also the name of a farm, Hrafn. 4. aðal-festr, f., v. alaðsfestr. aðal-fylking, f. main force, main body, Hkr. ii. 361. adal-haf, n. the main, Fms. iv. 177. aðal-henda, u, f., v. alhenda. soal-hending, f. full, complete rbymes, such as all-ball, opp. to skothending, q. v., Edda (Ht.) aðal-hendr, adj. verse in full rhyme, Edda, aðal-kelda, u. f. chief well, Karl. 442. aðal-kirkja, ju, f. chief part of a church, viz. choir and nave, opp. to forkirkja, Sturl. ii. 59. aballiga, adv. completely, thoroughly; a. daudr, quite dead, 656 C. 31, Fms. ii. 313; a. gamall, quite old, iii. 171. aoal-mein, n. great pain, Fms. vi. (in a verse). aðal-merki, n. the head-standard, Pr. 177. aðalritning, f. chief writing, Sks. 13. aðal-skáli, a, m. the chief apartment of a skáli, the ball, as distinguished from a forhús, Eb. 43. aðaltré, n. trunk of a tree; eigi munu kvistir betri en a. (a proverb), Fms. iv.

the ground on which a manor-house is built, toft of an allodial farm (Norse), flytja hús af aðaltóptum, remove it, N.G.L. i. 379. Add. abild, older form abilo, pl. ir, f. [root abal], v. the following word It doubtless originally meant chiefdom, bendship, but it only occurs in the limited legal sense of chief-prosecutorship or defendantship, and this only, as it seems, in Icel. not in Norse law. It is a standing abal-troll, n. downright ogre, Fas. iii. 179.

chief advocate, Bs. i. 445.

aðal-túlkr, s, m.

aðal-túpt, f. esp. in pl. ir = óðals-toptir, obsolete after the year 1272, and does not occur in the codes Jb. or Js. In early times there were no public prosecutions or lawsuits; the abild devolved together with the erfo (beirsbip) on the principal male heir, if of age; erfo and aoild go together, the first as a right, the last as an incumbent duty, like an English trusteeship; til erfdar ok adildar, Eb. ch. 38. In the year 993 a law was passed to the effect that male heirs under sixteen years of age should be exempted from adild, neither should heiresses ever be adili. In such cases the adild devolved on the next male heir above sixteen years of age, who then got a fee for executing this duty, Bs. i. 675. The adild also could be undertaken by a delegate, called at fara með handselda sök, sök handseld, vörn handseld, fara með sök, carry on a suit, etc., v. Grágás Vs. ch. 35, (of aðild in a case of manslaughter,) and in many other places; Eb. ch. 38, Bs. i. 675 (Rs. in fine), Bjarn. (in fine), Njála, and many others: v. Dasent, Introd. to Burnt Njal. COMPD: aðilðar-maðr, m. = aðili, Sturl. iii. 240, Orkn. 212.

abili, ja, m. the chief-defendant or prosecutor in an Icel. lawsuit in the time of the Commonwealth. It seems to have meant originally bead, chieftain, princeps. A standing word in the Gragas and the Sagas. As to the form, the older one is that which preserves the j in the terminations, gen. dat. acc. aðilja, plur. -jar, acc. -ja, dat. -jum. The Grágás constantly employs this form. The Njála and some of the Sagas drop the j and write aðila etc. In the Grágás aðilja seems to occur as an indecl. word—at least four times in the Kb .- used as nom. pl.: but as -ar in old MSS. is frequently marked by a single 'a' with a little stroke (a), this may be a misinterpretation. The indeclinable form occurs in the Kb. (b. b.) 25 and 109 (only preserved in the Kb.); Kb. 147, 170 has adilja, where the Sb. has in both passages adiljar: cp. however gudsifja and -bræðra. There is a distinction between a sóknar-aðili or sakar-aðili, prosecutor, and a varnaraðili, defendant. Either with gen. or prep. at, varnar-a., sóknar-a., sakar-a.; or inversely, a. sakar, a. varnar, a. frumsakar, Kb. 42, 124; a. máls, 126; a. vígsakar, in a case of manslaughter, 167; or vígsakar a. (often); a. fésakar, in a lawsuit about compensation, 123; a. legorðssakar, case of legord, 194: with at, varnir pær er hann er adili at, 175; adili at legords sekt, App. iv. 46, Grag. Kb. 15, 211; cp. also § 58, p. 103: hann er aðili at sök, bæði sækjandi ok seljandi, chief-plaintiff, either for carrying it on bimself or by a delegate, Kb. 208. In the case of a delegate being the adili, the challenge of jurors and judges on account of relationship was to be made in respect to the chief abili, not the delegate, Kb. 127.

AF, prep. often used elliptically by dropping the case, or even merely adverbially, [Ulf. af; A. S. and Engl. of, off; Hel. ab; Germ. ab; Gr. dnó; Lat. a, ab.] With DAT. denoting a motion a loco; one of the three prepp. af, ór, frá, corresponding to those in loco-á, í, við, and ad locum-á, í, at. It in general corresponds to the prepp. in $loco-\acute{a}$, or in locum-til, whilst \acute{or} answers more to i; but it also frequently corresponds to yfir, um or i. It ranges between or and fra, generally denoting the idea from the surface of, while or means from the inner part, and fra from the outer part or border. The motion from a bill, plain, open place is thus denoted by af; by or that from an enclosed space, depth, cavity, thus af fjalli, but or of a valley, dale; af Englandi, but or Danmörk, as mörk implies the notion of a deep wood, forest. The wind blows af landi, but a ship sets sail frá landi; frá landi also means a distance from: af hendi, of a glove, ring; or hendi, of whatever has been kept in the band (correl. to a hendi and i hendi). On the other hand af is more general, whilst $fr\acute{a}$ and $\acute{o}r$ are of a more special character; $fr\acute{a}$ denoting a departure, or an impulse or force; a member goes home of bingi, whereas or may denote an inmate of a district, or convey the notion of secession or exclusion from, Eb. 105 new Ed.; the traveller goes af landi, the exile or landi: taka e-t af e-m is to take a thing out of one's band, that of taka frá e-m to remove out of one's sight, etc. In general af answers to Engl. of, off, or to out of, and frá to from: the Lat. prepp. ab, de, and ex do not exactly correspond to the Icelandic, yet as a rule or may answer to ex, af sometimes to ab, sometimes to de. Of, off, from among; with, by; on account of, by means of, because of, concerning, in respect of.

A. Loc. I. WITH MOTION, off. from: 1. prop. corresp. a. konungr dró gullhring af hendi sér (but á hendi), Ld. 32; Höskuldr lætr bera farm af skipi, unload the ship (but bera farm á skip), id.; var tekit af hestum þeirra, they were unsaddled, Nj. 4; Gunnarr hafði farit heiman af bæ sínum, be was away from bome, 82; Gunnarr hljóp af hesti sinum, jumped off bis borse (but hl. á hest), 83; hlaupa, stökkva af baki, id., 112, 264; Gunnarr skýtr til hans af boganum, from the bow, where af has a slight notion of instrumentality, 96; flyja af fundinum, to fly from off the battle-field, 102; rida af prihyrningshalsum, 206; út af Langaholti, Eg. 744; sunnan ór Danmörk ok af Saxlandi, 560; ganga af mótinu, to go from the meeting, Fms. vii. 130; af þeirra fundi reis María upp ok fór, 625. 85; Flosi kastaði af sér skikkjunni, threw bis cloak off bim (but kasta á sik), Nj. 176; taka Hrungnis fót af honum, of a load, burden, Edda 58; land þat er hann fiskði af, from which he set off to fish, Grag.i.151, is irregular, frd would suit better; slita af baki e-s, from off one's back, ii. 9; bera af bordi, to clear the table, Nj. 75. β. where it more nearly answers to i; beir koma af hafi, of sailors coming in (but leggia i haf), Nj. 128; fara til Noregs af Orkneyjum (but f or til O.), 131; beim Agli word in the Icel, codes and histories of the Commonwealth. It became forst vel ok komu af hafi i Borgarfjörd, Eg. 392; hann var útlagi (outchanged into vo; vo of the 14th century being an intermediate form: thus von, spes; votr, madidus; vor, ver; vorr, noster; vooi, periculum; koma, adventus: voru, erant, etc.: so also the á in the dat, hánum, illi, now honum, which is also employed in the editions of old writings; kómu = kvámu = kvómu, veniebant, etc. In Norway a was often changed into a in the pronominal and adverbial forms; as hæna, illam; bær, bænn, bæt, ibi, illum, illud; hence originate the mod. Dan. bende, der, den, det; in some Norse dialects even still dar, dat. The short a in endings in mod. Dan. changed into e (a), e. g. komme, uge, talede, Icel. koma, vika: whereas the Swedes still preserve the simple a, which makes their language more euphonious than the mod. Dan. In most districts of Icel. an a before ng, nk, has changed into a, thus langr (longus), strangr (durus), krankr (aegrotus) are spelt lángr, kránkr, etc. In the west of Iceland however we still say langr, strangr, etc., which is the pure old form. The a becomes long when followed by If, Im, Ip, thus alfr, genius; alpt, cygnus; halfr, dimidius; kalfr, vitulus; sjalfr, ipse; this is very old: the fem. holf, dimidia, which occurs in the 12th century, points to an \vec{a} , not \vec{a} ; $j\vec{a} = j\vec{a}$ in hjálpa, skjálfa, etc. The lengthening before lmis later,-álmr, ulmus; hálmr, calamus; sálmr, psalmus; hjálmr, galea; málmr, metallum, etc. In all these cases the \acute{a} is not etymological. Also before ln in the plur, of alin, alnar not alnar: lk, alka = alka, alca; bálkr = balkr; fálki = falki, falco: háls = hals; frjáls = frjals; járn = jarn; skald = skald; v. those words: aarni, dat. of arinn, v. that word: the proper name Árni, properly Arni: abbati, abbas, ábóti: Adám, on the contrary, changed into Adam; María into Maria, Mary. The old spelling is still kept in máriatla, motacilla pectore albo, etc. In the 1st pers. pret. indic. and in the pres. and pret. conj. we have a changed into i, e.g. talada to taladi, locutus sum; sagda, dixi, vilda, volui, hafda, babui, to sagði, vildi, hafði: in the 1st pers. pres. and pret. conj., hefða, baberem, hafa, babeam, to hefði, hafi. These forms occur as early as the beginning of the 13th century (e. g. in the Hulda, Cd. A. M. 66, fol. = Fms. vi. and vii). In the south of Iceland however (Reykjavík, the Årnes and Gullbringusysla) the old forms are still frequently heard in bisyllabic preterites, esp. ek vilda, sagða, hafða, and are also employed in writing by natives of those districts.

D. a answers to Goth. a; A. S. ea (a, ä); allr, totus; Goth. alls; A. S. eall: the primitive & to Goth. ê, satu, Goth. setun, sedebant; grata, grêtan, lacrymari; láta, lêtan; vápn, vêpn, arma; vágr, vêgs, fluctus. The Icel. secondary 6, on the contrary, must in the kindred Teutonic idioms be sought for under a vowel plus a consonant, such as an, ab, or the like. A.S. a commonly answers to Icel. 4, láta, A.S. latan; dáð, A.S. dað; þráðr, A.S. præδ, Engl. thread; mál (καιρόs), A.S. mæl, cp. Engl. meal. The A.S. â, on the contrary, etymologically answers to Icel. et. The diphthong au answers to Goth. au, A. S. ea, -raudr, Goth. rauds, A. S. read, Engl. red. In English the a seems at very early times to have assumed its present ambiguous sound; this we may infer from A.S. words introduced into Icelandic. The river Thames in Icel, is spelt, as it is still pronounced in England, as Tems, which form occurs in a poem of the year 1016.

E. The Runic character for a was in the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon Runes (so termed by P. A. Munch) [A. S.]; so in the Golden horn, on the stone in Thune in Norway (Ed. by P. A. Munch, 1857), The Saxons called it 68 = ass, deus. and in the Bracteats. In the Runes it was the fourth letter in the first group (fupork). The Scandinavians in their Runes used this character for o, and called it 688, ostium, probably misled by the A. S. pronunciation of the homely word $88. This character, however, occurs only a few times in the common Runes, which in its stead used the A.S. Rune j, ger, annona, which is the fourth Rune in the second group (hnias, A.S. hnijs), called according to the northern pronunciation ar, annona: this letter, I or I, has the form, as well as the name and place, of the A. S. j, ϕ .

-A or -AT or -T, a negative suffix to verbs, peculiar to Iceland and a part, at least, of Norway. Occurs frequently in old Icelandic poetry and laws, so as almost to form a complete negative voice. In the 1st pers. a personal pronoun k(g) = ek is inserted before the negative suffix, in the 2nd pers. a t or tt. As a rule the pron. is thus repeated; má-k-at-ek, non possum; sé-k-at-ek, non video; hef-k-at-ek, non babeo; skal-k-at-ek; vil-k-at-ek, nolo; mon-k-at-ek, non ero, etc.: 2nd pers. skal-t-at-tu; mon-t-at-tu; gaf-t-at-tu, non dabas: and after a long vowel a tt, matt-attu, sátt-at-tu; so almost invariably in all monosyllabic verbal forms; but not so in bisyllabic ones, máttir-a-pú, non poteras: yet in some instances in the 1st pers. a pronominal g is inserted, e.g. bjargi-g-a-k, verbally servem ego non ego; höggvi-g-a-k, non caedam; stödvi-g-a-k, quin sistam; vildi-g-a-k, nolui; hafði-g-a-k, non babui; mátti-g-a-k, non potui; görði-g-a-k, non feci: if the verb has gg as final radical consonants, they change into kk, e. g. pikk-at-ek = pigg-k-at-ek, nolo skalat fyl telja, 80; skalat hann banna fiskför, 123; skalat hann löga

C. Other Changes:—in modern Icel, the old syllable vá has accipere. In the ard pers, a and at or t are used indifferently, t being particularly suffixed to bisyllabic verbal flexions ending in a vowel, in order to avoid an hiatus,—skal-at or skal-a, non erit; but skolo-t, non sunto: forms with an hiatus, however, occur, -biti-a, non mordat: renni-a, ne currat; skridi-a, id.; leti-a, ne retardet; væri-a, ne esset; urdu-a, non erant: but biti-t, renni-t, skriði-t, urðu-t are more current forms: v. Lex. Poët. The negative suffix is almost peculiar to indic., conj., and imperat. moods; the neg. infin. hardly occurs. Nothing analogous to this form is to be found in any South-Teutonic idiom; neither do there remain any traces of its having been used in Sweden or Denmark. A single exception is the Runic verse on a stone monument in Oland, an old Danish province, now Swedish, where however the inscriptions may proceed from a Norse or Icel. hand. The Runic inscriptions run thus, sa'r aigi flo, who did not fly, old Icel. 'fló-at,' Baut. 1160. Neither does it occur in any Norse prose monuments (laws): but its use may yet be inferred from its occurrence in Norse poets of the 10th century, e. g. the poets Eyvind and Thiodolf; some of which instances, however, may be due to their being transmitted through Icel. oral tradition. In Bragi Gamli (9th century) it occurs twice or thrice; in the Haustlöng four times, in Ynglingatal four times, in Hakonarmal once (all Norse poems of the 10th century). In Icel, the suffixed negation was in full force through the whole of the 10th century. A slight difference in idioms, however, may be observed: Völuspá, e.g., prefers the negation by no (using vas-at only once, verse 3). In the old Havamal the suffix abounds (being used thirty-five times), see the verses 6, 10, 11, 18, 26, 29, 30, 34, 37-39, 49, 51, 52, 68, 74, 88, 113-115, 126-128, 130, 134, 136, 147, 149, 151, 153, 159. In Skirnismál, Harbarðsljóð, Lokasenna—all these poems probably composed by the same author, and not before the 10th century-about thirty times, viz. Hbl. 3, 4, 8, 14, 26, 35, 56; Skm. 5, 18, 22; Ls. 15, 16, 18, 25, 28, 30, 36, 42, 47, 49, 56, 60, 62. Egil (born circa 900, died circa 990) abounds in the use of the suffixed neg. (he most commonly avails himself of -at, -gi, or né): so, too, does Hallfred (born circa 968, died 1008), Einar Skálaglam in Vellekla (circa 940-995), and Thorarin in the Mahlidingavisur (composed in the year 981); and in the few epigrams relating to the introduction of Christianity in Icel. (995-1000) there occur mon-k-ad-ek, tekk-at-ek, vil-k-at-ek, hlifði-t, mon-a, es-a; cp. the Kristni S. and Njala. From this time, however, its use becomes more rare. Sighvat (born circa 995, died 1040) still makes a frequent but not exclusive use of it. Subsequent poets use it now and then as an epic form, until it disappeared almost entirely in poetry at the middle or end of the 13th century. In the Sólarljóð there is not a single instance. The verses of some of our Sagas are probably later than the Sagas themselves; the greatest part of the Völsungakviður are scarcely older than the 11th century. In all these -at and conj. eigi are used indifferently. In prose the laws continued to employ the old forms long after they were abolished in common prose. a. in the delivering of the oath The suffixed verbal negation was used, in the Icel. Courts, esp. the Fifth Court, instituted about the year 1004; and it seems to have been used through the whole of the Icel. Commonwealth (till the year 1272). The oath of the Fifth (High) Court, as preserved in the Grágás, runs in the 1st pers., hesca ek fé borit í dóm þenna til liðs mér um sök þessa, ok ek monka bjóða, hefka ek fundit, ok monka ek finna, hvárki til laga né ólaga, p. 79; and again p. 81, only different as to ek hefka, ek monka (new Ed.): 3rd pers., hefirat hann fé borit í dóm þenna ok monat hann bjóða, ok hefirat hann fundit, ok monat hann finna, 80, 81; cp. also 82, and Nj. l. c. ch. 145, where it is interesting to observe that the author confounds the 1st and 3rd persons, a sign of decay in grammatical form. β. the Speaker (lögsögumaðr), in publicly reciting and explaining the law, and speaking in the name of the law, from the Hill of Laws (lögberg), frequently employed the old form, esp. in the legal words of command es and skal (yet seldom in plur.): erat in the dictatorial phrases, erat skyldr (skylt), non esto obligatus; erat landeigandi skyldr, Grag. (Kb.) i. 17; erat hinn skyldr, 21; yngri maor era skyldr at fasta, 35; enda erat honum þá skylt at..., 48; erat þat sakar spell, 127; era hinn þá skyldr at lýsa, 154; erat hann framar skyldr sakráða, 216; ok erat hann skyldr at ábyrgjask þat fé, 238; ok erat hann skyldr, id.; ok erat sakar aðili ella skyldr, ii. 74; erat hinn skyldr við at taka, 142; erat manni skylt at taka búfé, 143; enda erat heimting til fjár þess, 160; era hann þá skyldr at taka við í öðru fé nema hann vili, 209; ok erat beim skylt at tíunda fé sitt, 211; ok erat hann skyldr at gjalda tíund af því, 212; erat kirkjudrottinn þá skyldr, 228; ef hann Skalat: skalat maor eiga fé óborit, i. 23: erat landeigandi, i. 136. skalat honum þat verða optar en um sinn, 55; skalat maðr ryðja við sjálfan sik, 62; skalat hann þat svá dvelja, 68; skalat hann til véfangs ganga, 71; skalat adilja i stefnuvætti hafa, 127; ok skala hann gjalda fyrir bat, 135; ok skalat hann með sök fara, 171; enda skalat hann fleirum baugum bœta, 199; skalat hann skilja félagit, 240; skalat hann meiri skuld eiga en, ii. 4; skalat þeim meðan á brott skipta, 5; skalat hann lögvillr verða, svá, 34; skalat hon at heldr varðveita þat fé, 59; skalat enn sami maðr þar lengr vera, 71; ok skala honum bæta þat, 79;

sé því á engi veg. 158; skalat drepa þá menn, 167; skalat svá skipta manneldi, 173; skalat maðr reiðast við fjórðungi vísu, 183. skolut menn andvitni bera ok hér á þingi, i. 68; skolut mál hans standast, 71; skolut þeir færi til vefangs ganga en, 75, etc. etc. Other instances are rare: tekrat bar fé er eigi er til (a proverb), i. 9; ok um telrat þat til sakbóta, ok of telrat þá til sakbóta (it does not count), 178; ef hann villat (will not) lýsa sár sitt, 51; ok ræðrat hann öðrum mönnum á hendr þann úmaga, 248; ræðrat sá sínum ómögum á hendr, ii. 18: verðrat honum at sakarspelli and verðrat honum þat at s., i. 63; verðrat honum bat at sakarvörn, 140; kömrat hann öðru við, ii. 141; þarfat hann bíða til pess, i. 70; ok skilrat hann frá aðra aura, ii. 141, i. 136. Reflexive form: komskat hann til heimtingar um þat sé, be loses the claim to the money, ii. 180. etc. All these instances are taken from the Kb. (Ed. 1853). Remarkable is also the ambiguity in the oath of Glum (see Sir Edm. Head, Viga-Glum, pp. 102, 103, note, l.c.), who, instead of the plain common formal oathvask-at-ek þar, vák-at-ek þar, rauðk-at-ek þar odd ok egg-said, vask at bar, vak at bar, raudk at bar. He inverted the sense by dropping the intermediate pronominal ek between the verb and bar, and pronouncing - instead of - o. It further occurs in some few proverbs: varat af voru, sleikdi um þvoru, Fs. 159; veldrat sá er varir, Nj. 61 (now commonly ekki veldr så er v., so in Grett.); erat héra at borgnara bótt hæna beri skjöld, Fms. vii. 116; era hlums vant kvað refr, dró hörpu á ísi, 19: also in some phrases, referred to as verba ipsissima from the heathen ageerat vinum lift Ingimundar, Fs. 39; erat sjá draumr minni, Ld. 128. Thorodd employs it twice or thrice: því at ek sékk-a þess meiri þörf, because I do not see any more reason for tbis, Skálda 167; kannka ek til bess meiri ráð en lítil, I do not know, id.; mona (will not) mín móna (my mammy) við mik göra verst hjóna, 163. In sacred translations of the 12th century it occurs now and then. In the Homilies and Dialogues of Gregory the Great: monathu i pvi flódi verða, thou shalt not; esa bat undarligt bott, it is not to be wondered at; hann mattia sofna, be could not sleep: moncap ek banna, I sball not mind, Greg. 51, 53; vasat kall heyrt á strætum, was not, Post. 645. 84; nú mona friðir menn hér koma, Niðrst. 623. 7. In later writers as an archaism; a few times in the Al. (MS. A. M. 519), 3, 5, 6, 44, 108; and about as many times in the MS. Eirspennill (A. M. 47, fol.) [Etymon uncertain; that at is the right form may be inferred from the assimilation in at-tu, and the anastrophe in t, though the reason for the frequent dropping of the t is still unexplained. The coincidence with the Scottish dinna, canna is quite accidental.]

abbadís, f. abbess, Hkr. iii. 398, Fms. vii. 239, Gpl. 365.

abbast, 20, dep. (= amast), to be incensed at, vex, molest; a-vio e-t, Clem. 50, Fms. vii. 166; a-uppá e-t, Nj. 194.

abbindi = 2f-bindi, n. tenesmus, Hm. 140; cp. Fél. ix. 185, where it is spelt af bendi.

AD = at, v. that word. ao- in compds, v. at-. -ao, suff. neg., v. -a. ADA, u, f. (and compp ööu-skel, f.)

a. mytulus testa planiuscula, sbell. B. fem. pr. n., Edda.
ADAL, O. H. G. adal, genus; cp. also A. S. évele, nobilis; Old Engl.

and Scot, etbel; Germ, edel; eola- and eoal- came from mod. Dan, into Icel, adall, nobility. It does not occur in old writings in this sense.] nature, disposition, inborn native quality, used only in poetry; jobs a., childish, Yt. 13; osnotrs adal, foolish, insipid, Hm. 106; args a., dastardly, Ls. 23, 24; drengs a., noble, Km. 23; 6dyggs a., bad, Hsm. 19. the sense of offspring; abul Njardar (where it is n. pl.?), the gods, the offspring of Njord, Hallfred in a poem, vide Fs. 59.

II. used in a aðal-akkeri, n. sbeet-ancbor, Fms. great many compos, chief-, bead-. B. metaph., Bs. i. 756. X. 130: aðal-bjórr, s, m. prime beaver skin, aðal-borinn, part., v. óðalborinn. aðal-ból, n. Eb. (in a verse). a manor-bouse, farm inhabited by its master, opp. to tenant farms, Grag. (Kb.) ii. 150; also the name of a farm, Hrafn. 4. aðal-festr, f., v. abal-fylking, f. main force, main body, Hkr. ii. 361. soal-haf, n. the main, Fms. iv. 177. aðal-henda, u, f., v. alhenda. adal-hending, f. full, complete rbymes, such as all—ball, opp. to skothending, q.v., Edda (Ht.) aoal-hendr, adj. verse in full rhyme, Edda, aðal-kelda, u, f. chief well, Karl. 442. aðal-kirkja, ju, f. chief part of a church, viz. choir and nave, opp. to forkirkja, Sturl. ii. 59. aballiga, adv. completely, thoroughly; a. daubt, quite dead, 656 C. 31, Fms. ii. 313; a. gamall, quite old, iii. 171. adal-mein, n. great pain, Fms. vi. (in a verse). aoal-merki, n. the bead-standard, Pr. 177. aoalritning, f. chief writing, Sks. 13. aðal-skáli, a, m. the chief apartment of a skáli, the ball, as distinguished from a forhús, Eb. 43. tré, n. trunk of a tree; eigi munu kvistir betri en a. (a proverb), Fms. iv. aðal-troll, n. downright ogre, Fas. iii. 179. aðal-túlkr. s, m. chief advocate, Bs. i. 445. abal-tupt, f. esp. in pl. ir = odals-toptir, the ground on which a manor-house is built, toft of an allodial farm (Norse), flytja hús af aðaltóptum, remove it, N.G. L. i. 379. A.A. adild, older form adild, pl. ir, f. [root adal], v. the following word abili. It doubtless originally meant chiefdom, beadship, but it only occurs in the limited legal sense of chief-prosecutorship or defendantship, and this only, as it seems, in Icel. not in Norse law. It is a standing obsolete after the year 1272, and does not occur in the codes Jb. or Js. In early times there were no public prosecutions or lawsuits; the abild devolved together with the erfo (beirsbip) on the principal male heir, if of age; erfo and adild go together, the first as a right, the last as an incumbent duty, like an English trusteeship; til erfdar ok adildar, Eb. ch. 38. In the year 993 a law was passed to the effect that male heirs under sixteen years of age should be exempted from abild, neither should heiresses ever be abili. In such cases the abild devolved on the next male heir above sixteen years of age, who then got a fee for executing this duty, Bs. i. 675. The adild also could be undertaken by a delegate, called at fara með handselda sök, sök handseld, vörn handseld, fara með sök, carry on a suit, etc., v. Grágás Vs. ch. 35, (of abild in a case of manslaughter,) and in many other places; Eb. ch. 38, Bs. i. 675 (Rs. in fine), Bjarn. (in fine), Njála, and many others: v. Dasent, Introd. to Burnt Njal. COMPD: aðilðar-maðr, m. = 20ili, Sturl. iii. 240, Orkn. 212.

adili, ja, m. the chief-defendant or prosecutor in an Icel. lawsuit in the time of the Commonwealth. It seems to have meant originally bead, chieftain, princeps. A standing word in the Gragas and the Sagas. As to the form, the older one is that which preserves the j in the terminations, gen. dat. acc. aðilja, plur. -jar, acc. -ja, dat. -jum. The Grágás constantly employs this form. The Njála and some of the Sagas drop the j and write aðila etc. In the Grágás aðilja seems to occur as an indecl. word—at least four times in the Kb.—used as nom. pl.: but as -ar in old MSS. is frequently marked by a single 'a' with a little stroke (a), this may be a misinterpretation. The indeclinable form occurs in the Kb. (b. b.) 25 and 100 (only preserved in the Kb.); Kb. 147, 170 has adilja, where the Sb. has in both passages adiljar: cp. however gudsifja and -bræðra. There is a distinction between a sóknar-aðili or sakar-aðili. prosecutor, and a varnaraðili, defendant. Either with gen. or prep. at, varnar-a., sóknar-a., sakar-a.; or inversely, a. sakar, a. varnar, a. frumsakar, Kb. 42, 124; a. máls, 126; a. vígsakar, in a case of manslaughter, 167; or vígsakar a. (often); a. fésakar, in a lawsuit about compensation, 123; a. legordssakar, case of legorð, 194: with at, varnir þær er hann er aðili at, 175; aðili at legorðs sekt, App. iv. 46, Grag. Kb. 15, 211; cp. also § 58, p. 103: hann er aðili at sök, bæði sækjandi ok seljandi, chief-plaintiff, either for carrying it on himself or by a delegate, Kb. 208. In the case of a delegate being the adili, the challenge of jurors and judges on account of relationship was to be made in respect to the chief adili, not the delegate, Kb. 127.

AF, prep. often used elliptically by dropping the case, or even merely adverbially, [Ulf. af; A. S. and Engl. of, off; Hel. ab; Germ. ab; Gr. dπό; Lat. a, ab.] WITH DAT. denoting a motion a loco; one of the three prepp. af, or, frá, corresponding to those in loco-á, í, við, and ad locum-á, í, at. It in general corresponds to the prepp. in loco-a, or in locum-til, whilst or answers more to i; but it also frequently corresponds to yfir, um or i. It ranges between or and frá, generally denoting the idea from the surface of, while or means from the inner part, and fra from the outer part or border. The motion from a bill, plain, open place is thus denoted by af; by 6r that from an enclosed space, depth, cavity, thus af fjalli, but or of a valley, dale; af Englandi, but or Danmörk, as mork implies the notion of a deep wood, forest. The wind blows af landi, but a ship sets sail frá landi; frá landi also means a distance from: af hendi, of a glove, ring; or hendi, of whatever has been kept in the band (correl, to á hendi and í hendi). On the other hand af is more general, whilst $fr\acute{a}$ and $\acute{o}r$ are of a more special character; $fr\acute{a}$ denoting a departure, or an impulse or force; a member goes home of bingi, whereas or may denote an inmate of a district, or convey the notion of secession or exclusion from, Eb. 105 new Ed.; the traveller goes of landi, the exile or landi: taka e-t af e-m is to take a thing out of one's band, that of taka frá e-m to remove out of one's sight, etc. In general af answers to Engl. of, off, or to out of, and frá to from: the Lat. prepp. ab, de, and ex do not exactly correspond to the Icelandic, yet as a rule or may answer to ex, af sometimes to ab, sometimes to de. Of, off, from among;

with, by; on account of, by means of, because of, concerning, in respect of.

A. Loc.

I. with motion, off. from:

1. prop. corresp a. konungr dró gullhring af hendi sér (but á hendi), Ld. 32; Höskuldr lætr bera farm af skipi, unload the ship (but bera farm á skip), id.; var tekit af hestum þeirra, they were unsaddled, Nj. 4; Gunnarr hafði farit heiman af bæ sínum, be was away from bome, 82; Gunnarr hljóp af hesti sinum, jumped off bis borse (but hl. á hest), 83; hlaupa, stökkva af baki, id., 112, 264; Gunnarr skýtr til hans af boganum, from the bow, where af has a slight notion of instrumentality, 96; flýja af fundinum, to fly from off the battle-field, 102; ríða af þríhyrningshálsum, 206; út af Langaholti, Eg. 744; sunnan ór Danmörk ok af Saxlandi, 560; ganga af mótinu, to go from the meeting, Fms. vii. 130; af þeirra fundi reis María upp ok fór, 625. 85; Flosi kastaði af sér skikkjunni, tbrew bis cloak off bim (but kasta á sik), Nj. 176; taka Hrungnis fót af honum, of a load, burden, Edda 58; land þat er hann fiskði af, from which be set off to fish, Grág.i.151, is irregular, frá would suit better; slíta af baki e-s, from off one's back, ii. 9; bera af bordi, to clear the table, Nj. 75. \quad \beta. where it more nearly answers to i; beir koma af hafi, of sailors coming in (but leggia i haf), Nj. 128; fara til Noregs af Orkneyjum (but for til O.), 131; beim Agli word in the Icel, codes and histories of the Commonwealth. It became forst velok komu af hafi i Borgarfiord, Eg. 392 hann var utlagi (out-

C. OTHER CHANGES:—in modern Icel. the old syllable vá has acipere. In the 3rd pers. a and at or t are used indifferently, t being changed into vo; vó of the 14th century being an intermediate form; thus von, spes; votr, madidus; vor, ver; vorr, noster; vodi, periculum; koma, adventus; voru, erant, etc.: so also the á in the dat. hánum, illi, now honum, which is also employed in the editions of old writings; kómu = kvámu = kvómu, veniebant, etc. In Norway a was often changed into æ in the pronominal and adverbial forms; as hæna, illam; þær, þænn, þæt, ibi, illum, illud; hence originate the mod. Dan. bende, der, den, det; in some Norse dialects even still dar, dat. The short a in endings in mod. Dan. changed into e (a), e. g. komme, uge, talede, Icel. koma, vika; whereas the Swedes still preserve the simple a, which makes their language more euphonious than the mod. Dan. In most districts of Icel. an a before ng, nk, has changed into a, thus langr (longus), strangr (durus), krankr (aegrotus) are spelt långr, krankr, etc. In the west of Iceland however we still say langr, strangr, etc., which is the pure old form. The a becomes long when followed by If, Im, Ip, thus alfr, genius; alpt, cygnus; halfr, dimidius; kalfr, vitulus; sjalfr, ipse; this is very old: the fem. holf, dimidia, which occurs in the 12th century, points to an \vec{a} , not \vec{a} ; $j\vec{a} = j\vec{a}$ in hjálpa, skjálfa, etc. The lengthening before lmis later,-álmr, ulmus; hálmr, calamus; sálmr, psalmus; hjálmr, galea; málmr, metallum, etc. In all these cases the α is not etymological. Also before In in the plur. of alin, alnar not alnar: Ik, alka = alka, alca; bálkr = balkr; fálki = falki, falco: háls = hals; frjáls = frjals; járn = jarn; skald = skald; v. those words: aarni, dat. of arinn, v. that word: the proper name Árni, properly Arni: abbati, abbas, ábóti: Adám, on the contrary, changed into Adam; Máría into Maria, Mary. The old spelling is still kept in mariatla, motacilla pectore albo, etc. In the 1st pers. pret, indic, and in the pres, and pret, conj. we have a changed into i, e.g. talada to taladi, locutus sum; sagda, dixi, vilda, volui, hafda, babui, to sagði, vildi, hafði: in the 1st pers. pres. and pret. conj., hefða, baberem, hafa, babeam, to hefoi, hafi. These forms occur as early as the beginning of the 13th century (e. g. in the Hulda, Cd. A. M. 66, fol. = Fms. vi. and vii). In the south of Iceland however (Reykjavík, the Arnes and Gullbringusysla) the old forms are still frequently heard in bisyllabic preterites, esp. ek vilda, sagða, hafða, and are also employed in writing by natives of those districts.

D. a answers to Goth. a; A. S. ea (2, ä); allr, totus; Goth. alls; A. S. eall: the primitive & to Goth. ê, satu, Goth. sêtun, sedebant; grata, grêtan, lacrymari; láta, lêtan; vápn, vêpn, arma; vágr, vêgs, fluctus. The Icel. secondary &, on the contrary, must in the kindred Teutonic idioms be sought for under a vowel plus a consonant, such as an, ab, or the like. A.S. a commonly answers to Icel. 6, láta, A.S. latan; dáð, A.S. dað; þráðr, A.S. þræð, Engl. thread; mál (καιρόs), A.S. mæl, cp. Engl. meal. A.S. â, on the contrary, etymologically answers to Icel. ei. The diphthong au answers to Goth. au, A. S. eù,-raudr, Goth. rauds, A. S. read, Engl. red. In English the a seems at very early times to have assumed its present ambiguous sound; this we may infer from A.S. words introduced into Icelandic. The river Thames in Icel. is spelt, as it is still pronounced in England, as Tems, which form occurs in a poem of the year 1016.

E. The Runic character for a was in the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon Runes (so termed by P. A. Munch) [A. S.]; so in the Golden horn, on the stone in Thune in Norway (Ed. by P. A. Munch, 1857), The Saxons called it 8s = ass, deus. In the and in the Bracteats. Runes it was the fourth letter in the first group (fubork). navians in their Runes used this character for o, and called it 688, ostium, probably misled by the A. S. pronunciation of the homely word 888. This character, however, occurs only a few times in the common Runes, which in its stead used the A.S. Rune j, ger, annona, which is the fourth Rune in the second group (hnias, A. S. hnijs), called according to the northern pronunciation ar, annona: this letter, 4 or +, has the form, as well as the name and place, of the A. S. j, ϕ .

-A or -AT or -T, a negative suffix to verbs, peculiar to Iceland and a part, at least, of Norway. Occurs frequently in old Icelandic poetry and laws, so as almost to form a complete negative voice. In the 1st pers. a personal pronoun k(g) = ek is inserted before the negative suffix, in the 2nd pers. a t or tt. As a rule the pron. is thus repeated; má-k-at-ek, non possum; sé-k-at-ek, non video; hef-k-at-ek, non babeo; skal-k-at-ek; vil-k-at-ek, nolo; mon-k-at-ek, non ero, etc.: 2nd pers. skal-t-at-tu; mon-t-at-tu; gaf-t-at-tu, non dabas: and after a long vowel a tt, mátt-attu, sátt-at-tu; so almost invariably in all monosyllabic verbal forms; but not so in bisyllabic ones, máttir-a-bú, non poteras: yet in some instances in the 1st pers, a pronominal g is inserted, e.g. bjargi-g-a-k, verbally servem ego non ego; höggvi-g-a-k, non caedam; stöðvi-g-a-k, quin sistam; vildi-g-a-k, nolui; hafði-g-a-k, non babui; mátti-g-a-k, non potui; görði-g-a-k, non feci: if the verb has gg as final radical con-particularly suffixed to bisyllabic verbal flexions ending in a vowel, in order to avoid an hiatus,-skal-at or skal-a, non erit; but skolo-t, non sunto: forms with an hiatus, however, occur,-biti-a, non mordat; renni-a, ne currat; skridi-a, id.; leti-a, ne retardet; væri-a, ne esset; urdu-a, non erant: but biti-t, renni-t, skridi-t, urdu-t are more current forms: v. Lex. Poët. The negative suffix is almost peculiar to indic., conj., and imperat. moods; the neg. infin. hardly occurs. Nothing analogous to this form is to be found in any South-Teutonic idiom; neither do there remain any traces of its having been used in Sweden or Denmark. A single exception is the Runic verse on a stone monument in Öland, an old Danish province, now Swedish, where however the inscriptions may proceed from a Norse or Icel. hand. The Runic inscriptions run thus, sa'r aigi flo, wbo did not fly, old Icel. flo-at,' Baut. 1169. Neither does it occur in any Norse prose monuments (laws): but its use may yet be inferred from its occurrence in Norse poets of the 10th century, e.g. the poets Eyvind and Thiodolf; some of which instances, however, may be due to their being transmitted through Icel. oral tradition. In Bragi Gamli (9th century) it occurs twice or thrice; in the Haustlöng four times, in Ynglingatal four times, in Hákonarmál once (all Norse poems of the 10th century). In Icel, the suffixed negation was in full force through the whole of the 10th century. A slight difference in idioms, however, may be observed: Völuspá, e.g., prefers the negation by ne (using vas-at only once, verse 3). In the old Hávamal the suffix abounds (being used thirty-five times), see the verses 6, 10, 11, 18, 26, 29, 30, 34, 37-39, 49, 51, 52, 68, 74, 88, 113-115, 126-128, 130, 134, 136, 147, 149, 151, 153, 159. In Skirnismal, Harbarðsljóð, Lokasenna—all these poems probably composed by the same author, and not before the 10th century-about thirty times, viz. Hbl. 3, 4, 8, 14, 26, 35, 56; Skm. 5, 18, 22; Ls. 15, 16, 18, 25, 28, 30, 36, 42, 47, 49, 56, 60, 62. Egil (born circa 900, died circa 990) abounds in the use of the suffixed neg. (he most commonly avails himself of -at, -gi, or né): so, too, does Hallfred (born circa 968, died 1008), Einar Skálaglam in Vellekla (circa 940-995), and Thorarin in the Mahliðingavísur (composed in the year 981); and in the few epigrams relating to the introduction of Christianity in Icel. (995-1000) there occur mon-k-ad-ck, tekk-at-ek, vil-k-at-ek, hlífði-t, mon-a, es-a; cp. the Kristni S. and Njala. From this time, however, its use becomes more rare. Sighvat (born circa 995, died 1040) still makes a frequent but not exclusive use of it. Subsequent poets use it now and then as an epic form, until it disappeared almost entirely in poetry at the middle or end of the 13th century. In the Sólarljóð there is not a single instance. The verses of some of our Sagas are probably later than the Sagas themselves; the greatest part of the Völsungakviður are scarcely older than the 11th century. In all these -at and conj. eigi are used indifferently. In prose the laws continued to employ the old forms long after they were abolished in common prose. The suffixed verbal negation was used, a. in the delivering of the oath in the Icel. Courts, esp. the Fifth Court, instituted about the year 1004; and it seems to have been used through the whole of the Icel. Commonwealth (till the year 1272). The oath of the Fifth (High) Court, as preserved in the Grágás, runs in the 1st pers., hefca ek fé borit í dóm þenna til liðs mér um sök þessa, ok ek monka bjóða, hefka ek fundit, ok monka ek finna, hvárki til laga né ólaga, p. 79; and again p. 81, only different as to ek hefka, ek monka (new Ed.): 3rd pers., hefirat hann fé borit í dóm þenna ok monat hann bjóða, ok hefirat hann fundit, ok monat hann finna, 80, 81; cp. also 82, and Nj. l. c. ch. 145, where it is interesting to observe that the author confounds the 1st and 3rd persons, a sign of decay in grammatical form. β. the Speaker (lögsögumaðr), in publicly reciting and explaining the law, and speaking in the name of the law, from the Hill of Laws (lögberg), frequently employed the old form, esp. in the legal words of command es and skal (yet seldom in plur.): erat in the dictatorial phrases, erat skyldr (skylt), non esto obligatus; erat landeigandi skyldr, Grág. (Kb.) i. 17; erat hinn skyldr, 21; yngri maðr era skyldr at fasta, 35; enda erat honum þá skylt at..., 48; erat þat sakar spell, 127; era hinn þá skyldr at lýsa, 154; erat hann framar skyldr sakráða, 216; ok erat hann skyldr at ábyrgjask þat fé, 238; ok erat hann skyldr, id.; ok erat sakar aðili ella skyldr, ii. 74; erat hinn skyldr við at taka, 142; erat manni skylt at taka búsé, 143; enda erat heimting til fjár þess, 169; era hann þá skyldr at taka við í öðru fé nema hann vili, 200; ok erat þeim skylt at túnda fó sitt, 211; ok erat hann skyldr at gjalda tíund af því, 212; erat kirkjudrottinn þá skyldr, 228; ef hann erat landeigandi, i. 136. Skalat: skalat maor eiga fé óborit, i. 23; skalat honum þat verða optar en um sinn, 55; skalat maðr ryðja við sjálfan sik, 62; skalat hann þat svá dvelja, 68; skalat hann til véfangs ganga, 71; skalat adilja i stefnuvætti hafa, 127; ok skala hann gjalda fyrir þat, 135; ok skalat hann með sök fara, 171; enda skalat hann fleirum baugum bæta, 199; skalat hann skilja félagit, 240; skalat hann, meiri skuld eiga en, ii. 4; skalat þeim meðan á brott skipta, 5; skalat hann lögvillr verða, svá, 34; skalat hon at heldr varðveita þat sé, 59; skalat enn sami maor þar lengr vera, 71; ok skala honum bæta þat, 79; sonants, they change into kk, c. g. pikk-at-ek = pigg-k-at-ek, nolo skalat fyl telja, 89; skalat hann banna fiskför. 123; skalat hann löga manneldi, 173; skalat maðr reiðast við fjórðungi vísu, 183. Plur.: skolut menn andvitni bera ok hér á þingi, i. 68; skolut mál hans standast, 71; skolut þeir færi til vefangs ganga en, 75, etc. etc. Other instances are rare: tekrat þar fé er eigi er til (a proverb), i. 9; ok um telrat þat til sakbóta, ok of telrat þá til sakbóta (it does not count), 178; ef hann villat (will not) lýsa sár sitt, 51; ok ræðrat hann öðrum mönnum á hendr þann úmaga, 248; ræðrat sá sínum ómögum á hendr, ii. 18; verðrat bonum at sakarspelli and verðrat honum þat at s., i. 63; verðrat honum þat at sakarvörn, 149; kömrat hann öðru við, ii. 141; þarfat hann bíða til pess, i. 70; ok skilrat hann frá aðra aura, ii. 141, i. 136. Reflexive form : komskat hann til heimtingar um þat sé, be loses the claim to the money, ii. 180, etc. All these instances are taken from the Kb. (Ed. 1853). Remarkable is also the ambiguity in the oath of Glum (see Sir Edm. Head, Viga-Glum, pp. 103, 103, note, l.c.), who, instead of the plain common formal oathvask-at-ek þar, vák-at-ek þar, rauðk-at-ek þar odd ok egg-said, vask at har, vák at har, rauðk at har. He inverted the sense by dropping the intermediate pronominal ek between the verb and par, and pronouncing + - instead of - o. It further occurs in some few proverbs: varat af voru, sleikdi um þvoru, Fs. 159; veldrat sá er varir, Nj. 61 (now commonly ekki veldr så er v., so in Grett.); erat héra at borgnara þótt hæna beri skjöld, Fms. vii. 116; era hlums vant kvað refr, dró hörpu á ísi, 19: also in some phrases, referred to as verba ipsissima from the heathen ageerat vinum lift Ingimundar, Fs. 39; erat sjá draumr minni, Ld. 128. Thorodd employs it twice or thrice: því at ek sékk-a þess meiri þörf, because I do not see any more reason for this, Skálda 167; kannka ek til þess meiri ráð en lítil, I do not know, id.; mona (will not) mín móna (my mammy) við mik göra verst hjóna, 163. In sacred translations of the 12th century it occurs now and then. In the Homilies and Dialogues of Gregory the Great: monathu i því flóði verða, thou shalt not; esa hat undarligt bott, it is not to be wondered at; hann mattia sofna, be could not sleep; moncap ek banna, I sball not mind, Greg. 51, 53; vasat kall heyrt á strætum, was not, Post. 645. 84; nú mona friðir menn hér koma, Niðrst. 623. 7. In later writers as an archaism; a few times in the Al. (MS. A. M. 519), 3, 5, 6, 44, 108; and about as many times in the MS. Eirspennill (A. M. 47, fol.) [Etymon uncertain; that at is the right form may be inferred from the assimilation in at-tu, and the anastrophe in t, though the reason for the frequent dropping of the t is still unexplained. The coincidence with the Scottish dinna, canna is quite accidental.]

abbadis, f. abbess, Hkr. iii. 398, Fms. vii. 239, Gpl. 365.

abbast, 20, dep. (= amast), to be incensed at, vex, molest; a-vio e-t, Clem. 50, Fms. vii. 166; a-uppa e-t, Nj. 194.

abbindi = af-bindi, n. tenesmus, Hm. 140; cp. Fél. ix. 185, where it is spelt afhendi

AD = at, v. that word. ao- in compds, v. at-. -ao, suff. neg., v. -a. ADA, u, f. (and compo ööu-skel, f.) a. mytulus testa planiuscula, a shell. B. fem. pr. n., Edda.

ADAL, [O. H. G. adal, genus; cp. also A. S. &Sele, nobilis; Old Engl. and Scot. etbel; Germ. edel; edla- and edal- came from mod. Dan. into Icel. adali, nobility. It does not occur in old writings in this sense.] nature, disposition, inborn native quality, used only in poetry; jobs a., childish, Yt. 13; osnotrs adal, foolish, insipid, Hm. 106; args a., dastardly, Ls. 23, 24; drengs a., noble, Km. 23; ódyggs a., bad, Hsm. 19. the sense of offspring; adul Njardar (where it is n. pl.?), the gods, the offspring of Njord, Hallfred in a poem, vide Fs. 59. II. used in a aðal-akkeri, n. sbeet-ancbor, Fms. great many compos, chief-, head-. X. 130: β. metaph., Bs. i. 756. aðal-bjórr, s, m. prime beaver skin, Eb. (in a verse). aðal-borinn, part., v. óðalborinn. aðal-ból, n. a manor-bouse, farm inhabited by its master, opp. to tenant farms, Grag. (Kb.) ii. 150; also the name of a farm, Hrafn. 4. aðal-festr, f., v. alaðsfestr. aoal-fylking, f. main force, main body, Hkr. ii. 361. soal-haf, n. the main, Fms. iv. 177. aðal-henda, u, f., v. alhenda. soal-hending, f. full, complete rhymes, such as all-ball, opp. to skothending, q.v., Edda (Ht.) aoal-hendr, adj. verse in full rhyme, Edda, aðal-kelda, u, f. chief well, Karl. 442. aðal-kirkja, ju, f. chief part of a church, viz. choir and nave, opp. to forkirkja, Sturl. ii. 59. söalliga, 2dv. completely, thoroughly; a. dauor, quite dead, 656 C. 31, Fms. ii. 313; a. gamall, quite old, iii. 171. aöal-mein, n. great pain, Fms. vi. (in a verse). aöal-merki, n. the head-standard, Pr. 177. aöalritning, f. chief writing, Sks. 13. aðal-skáli, a, m. the chief apartment of a skáli, the ball, as distinguished from a forhús, Eb. 43. tré, n. trunk of a tree; eigi munu kvistir betri en a. (a proverb), Fms. iv. aoal-troll, n. downright ogre, Fas. iii. 179. aoal-túlkr., s. m. chief advocate, Bs. i. 445. abal-tupt, f. esp. in pl. ir = obals-toptir, the ground on which a manor-house is built, toft of an allodial farm (Norse), flytja hús af aðaltóptum, remove it, N. G. L. i. 379. A.A. abild, older form abilb, pl. ir, f. [root abal], v. the following word adili. It doubtless originally meant chiefdom, bendship, but it only occurs in the limited legal sense of chief-prosecutorship or defendantship, and this only, as it seems, in Icel. not in Norse law. It is a standing tế því á engi veg, 158; skalat drepa þá menn, 167; skalat svá skipta obsolete after the year 1272, and does not occur in the codes Jb. or Js. In early times there were no public prosecutions or lawsuits; the abild devolved together with the erfo (beirsbip) on the principal male heir, if of age; erfo and adild go together, the first as a right, the last as an incumbent duty, like an English trusteeship; til erfðar ok aðilðar, Eb. ch. 38. In the year 993 a law was passed to the effect that male heirs under sixteen years of age should be exempted from abild, neither should heiresses ever be aoili. In such cases the aoild devolved on the next male heir above sixteen years of age, who then got a fee for executing this duty, Bs. i. 675. The abild also could be undertaken by a delegate, called at fara með handselda sök, sök handseld, vörn handseld, fara með sök, carry on a suit, etc., v. Grágás Vs. ch. 35, (of adild in a case of manslaughter,) and in many other places; Eb. ch. 38, Bs. i. 675 (Rs. in fine), Bjarn. (in fine), Njála, and many others: v. Dasent, Introd. to Burnt Njal. сомрр: aðilðar-maðr, m. = 2ðili, Sturl. iii. 240, Orkn. 212.

aðili, ja, m. the chief-defendant or prosecutor in an Icel. lawsuit in the time of the Commonwealth. It seems to have meant originally bead, chieftain, princeps. A standing word in the Gragas and the Sagas. As to the form, the older one is that which preserves the j in the terminations, gen. dat. acc. aðilja, plur. -jar, acc. -ja, dat. -jum. The Grágás constantly employs this form. The Njála and some of the Sagas drop the j and write aðila etc. In the Grágás aðilja seems to occur as an indecl. word—at least four times in the Kb.—used as nom. pl.: but as -ar in old MSS. is frequently marked by a single 'a' with a little stroke (a), this may be a misinterpretation. The indeclinable form occurs in the Kb. (p. p.) 25 and 109 (only preserved in the Kb.); Kb. 147, 170 has adilja, where the Sb. has in both passages adiljar: cp. however gudsifja and -bræðra. There is a distinction between a sóknar-aðili or sakar-aðili, prosecutor, and a varnaraðili, defendant. Either with gen. or prep. at, varnar-a., sóknar-a., sakar-a.; or inversely, a. sakar, a. varnar, a. frumsakar, Kb. 42, 124; a. máls, 126; a. vígsakar, in a case of manslaughter, 167; or vígsakar a. (often); a. fésakar, in a lawsuit about compensation, 123; a. legordssakar, case of legord, 194: with at, varnir pær er hann er adili at, 175; adili at legords sekt, App. iv. 46, Grag. Kb. 15, 211; cp. also § 58, p. 103: hann er aðili at sök, bæði sækjandi ok seljandi, chief-plaintiff, either for carrying it on himself or by a delegate, Kb. 208. In the case of a delegate being the abili, the challenge of jurors and judges on account of relationship was to be made in respect to the chief adili, not the delegate, Kb. 127.

AF, prep. often used elliptically by dropping the case, or even merely adverbially, [Ulf. af; A. S. and Engl. of, off; Hel. ab; Germ. ab; Gr. d#6; Lat. a, ab.] With DAT. denoting a motion a loco; one of the three prepp. af, or, frá, corresponding to those in loco-á, í, við, and ad locum-á, í, at. It in general corresponds to the prepp. in loco—á, or in locum—til, whilst ór answers more to i; but it also frequently corresponds to yfir, um or i. It ranges between or and fra, generally denoting the idea from the surface of, while or means from the inner part, and fra from the outer part or border. The motion from a bill, plain, open place is thus denoted by af; by or that from an enclosed space, depth, cavity, thus af fjalli, but or of a valley, dale; af Englandi, but or Danmörk, as mörk implies the notion of a deep wood, forest. The wind blows af landi, but a ship sets sail frá landi; frá landi also means a distance from: af hendi, of a glove, ring; or hendi, of whatever has been kept in the band (correl. to á hendi and í hendi). On the other hand af is more general, whilst frá and ór are of a more special character; frá denoting a departure, or an impulse or force; a member goes home af bingi, whereas or may denote an inmate of a district, or convey the notion of secession or exclusion from, Eb. 105 new Ed.; the traveller goes af landi, the exile or landi: taka e-t af e-m is to take a thing out of one's band, that of taka frá e-m to remove out of one's sight, etc. In general af answers to Engl. of, off, or to out of, and frá to from: the Lat. prepp. ab, de, and ex do not exactly correspond to the Icelandic, yet as a rule or may answer to ex, af sometimes to ab, sometimes to de. Of, off, from among; with, by; on account of, by means of, because of, concerning, in respect of.

I. WITH MOTION, off, from: 1. prop. corresp. a. konungr dró gullhring af hendi sér (but á hendi), Ld. 32; Höskuldr lætr bera farm af skipi, unload the ship (but bera farm á skip), id.; var tekit af hestum þeirra, they were unsaddled, Nj. 4; Gunnarr hafði farit heiman af bæ sínum, be was away from bome, 82; Gunnarr hljóp af hesti sinum, jumped off bis borse (but hl. a hest), 83; hlaupa, stokkva af baki, id., 112, 264; Gunnart skýtr til hans af boganum, from the bow, where af has a slight notion of instrumentality, 96; flýja af fundinum, to fly from off the battle-field, 102; rida af þríhyrningshálsum, 206; út af Langaholti, Eg. 744; sunnan ór Danmörk ok af Saxlandi, 560; ganga af mótinu, to go from the meeting, Fms. vii. 130; af þeirra fundi reis María upp ok for, 625. 85; Flosi kastaði af sér skikkjunni, tbrew bis cloak off bim (but kasta á sik), Nj. 176; taka Hrungnis fót af honum, of a load, burden, Edda 58; land þát er hann fiskði af, from which he set off to fish, Grág.i.151, is irregular, frá would suit better; slita af baki e-s, from off one's back, ii. 9; bera af bordi, to clear the table, Nj. 75. B. where it more nearly answers to i; peir koma af hafi, of sailors coming in (but leggia i haf), Nj. 128; fara til Noregs af Orkneyjum (but i or til O.), 131; þeim Agli word in the Icel. codes and histories of the Commonwealth. It became forst vel ok komu af hafi i Borgarfjord, Eg. 392; hann var útlagi (out-Digitized by badly, Hkr. i. 226.

```
afar-kostir, m. pl. bard condition, Eg. 14, 353, Hkr. i. 144, Ld. 222. afarkosta-laust, n. adj. on fair terms, Jb. 361, Sturl. ii. 79.
                                           afar-litill, adj. very small, ligr, adj. immense, buge, Nj. 183, v. l.
Merl. 2. 46.
                 afar-menni, n. an overpowering man, Orkn. 256 old Ed., Landn. 124, Isl. ii. 190. afar-oro, n. overbearing words, Bs. ii. 9. afar-stórr, adj. big, Lex. Poët. afar-sætr, adj. very sweet, Sks. 534.
afar-uðigr, adj. [hugð], overbearing, of violent temper, Fms. vii. 20.
afar-vel, adv. very well, Hkr. i. 204, Isl. ii. 140; cp. ofa.
n. = afarorð, Orkn. 274.
                            afar-hungr, adj. beavy, Edda (Ht.) 46.
af-audit, part. pass.; verda a. e-s, to fail, bave bad luck, Gisl. 61.
 af-at = ofat, over-eating, gluttony, gormandizing.
 af-blomgaor, part. pass. 'off-bloomed,' deflowered, 655 xxxii. 3.
 af-boo, n. threats, high words, Fms. x. 199; ofboo, n., is used of panic, afar-kaup, n. bard bargain, Sturl. (in a verse).
```

fear, agony, and as a prefix in compds of boos = exceedingly. So now the modern verb ofbjóða, mostly used impers., e-m ofbýðr, to be sbocked at, etc. af-brago, n. used of persons, a superior, excellent person; hann var a. i vizku sinni, wonderfully clever, Fms. x. 397; a. annarra manna, man of mark, vi. 144. 2. gen. asbragds is now frequently used as a prefix to nouns to express something surpassing—a. fagr, goor, frior, etc.—a. vænleikr, surpassing beauty, Stj. 195. сомер: afbragðs-maðr, m. a great man, Fins. x. 293 (where spelt abb-).

afbragoliga, adv. surpassingly, Fas. i. 220. afbragoligr, adj. surpassing, Eb. 256, Fms. ix. 535, x. 230 (where spelt abb-), xi. 335.

af-brigo and rarely afbrigoi, n .- the compound afbrigoar-tré points to a fem.—deviation, transgression, offence, (cp. bregoa af, to deviate from,) esp. in pl., þeir sökuðu hann um nokkuð afbrigð þinga sinna, Post. 645. 97; sættarof ok asbrigð við guð, trespasses, 671. 1; asbrigð, wrongs, Ld. 66; í asbrigðum boðorða Guðs, transgressions against the commandments of God, 671. 3; þórðr afsakar sik um öll afbrigði við þik, for baving wronged thee, Sturl.ii. 132, Fms. vii. 24, Isl. ii. 201. compd: afbrigðartré, n. tree of transgression, Niorst. 623. 7.

af-brot, n. pl. trespasses, sin, K. A. 36, Fms. xi. 443; very frequent in religious writings after the Reformation.

af-brugoning, f. deviation from, 656 B. 7.

af-brúðigr and ábrúðigr, adj. jealous, Str. 5, 75; v. the following. af-bryoa, dd, [af- intens. and bruor, sponsa], to be jealous, also contracted ábrýða; þeir vandlæta ok afbrýða sem karldýrin eru borin, Stj. 94.

af-brýði and contr. ábrýði, . (now obsol.) jealousy; en er Sisinnus sá Clemens páfa standa hjá konu sinni, þá viltist hugr hans mjök af mikilli ílsku ok afbrýði, Clem. 41, 42, Fms. i. 9, Ýt. 11; in all these places spelt with af-, but abryoi is more common, and occurs Hkr. i. 111; in the poem Gkv. 1. 10-hon ægði mér af ábrýði-it is used of the jealousy of a wife to her husband.

af-buror, m. (also spelt abb-), odds, balance, bias, success (cp. bera af, to prevail); kvað honum eigi annat vænna til afburðar, in order to get the better of it, Sd. 166; sa hann at engi vard afburdrinn, they fought 'aequo Marte, Sturl. ii. 74; hann ætlaði sér afburð, be meant to keep the odds in bis own band, Isl. ii. 450; skal nú fara í haustvíking, ok vilda ek, at hon yrði eigi med minnum afburdum, less glorious, Orkn. 464. II. gen. sing, and pl. afburðar-, a-, freq. used as a prefix in some compos with the notion of gloriously, with distinction. afburðar-digr, adj. very thick, pior. 24. afburða-fræknligr, 2dj. very gallant, Isl. ii. 369. burðar-járn, n. excellent iron, Fms. x. 173. afburðar-maðr, m. a man of mark, Rb. 316, Orkn. 474, Grett. 133, Finnb. 318. af burðarmikill, adj. conspicuous, Fms. v. 181. afburðar-skip, n. a fine sbip, Fas. iii. 106. afburðar-vel, adv. very well, Hkr. ii. 265, Fms. ix. afburðar-vænn, adj. very fine, Fas. i. 182.

af-buo, f. an 'off-booth,' side-booth, apartment, Korm. 116.

af-dalr, m. an 'off-dale,' remote valley; freq. in tales and rhymes of bidden valleys, esp. in pl., e. g. Hvað hét hundr karls er í afdölum bjó, in a nursery rhyme, K. p. K. 38, Fms. v. 183.

af-deilingr, m. part, portion, sbare, Bs. i. 881.

of dup $

af-drattr, m. [draga af, to detract], diminution, deduction, Ann. 1358 (of duties, fines), Dipl. i. 7, Jm. 135 = costs. β. in arithmetic, subtraction, Alg. 358, now frádragning.

af-drif, n. pl. [drifa], destiny, fate; barn likligt til storra afdrifa, a bairn likely to grow into a great man, Fms. iii. 112 (of an exposed child); bykir mer litil okkur a. verða munu, inglorious life, Fær. 53. It is now also used of final fate, end. 2. offspring, Stj. 191.

af-drykkja, u, f. over-drinking, drunkenness, = ofdrykkja [af- intens.] af-eggja, ad, to dissuade, (as we might say to egg off), Fins. ix. 352. af-eira, d, to curtail, deprive of, with dat. of the thing; a. há sinni sæmd, to disgrace them, Bær. 3; riddaradómi, to degrade from knighthood, 4. af-eista, t, to castrate, Bs. ii. 118.

> af-eyringr, m. an animal, sheep with cropped ears, Bs. i. 723, Sturl. iii. 47; also afeyra, o, to cut the ears off, and afeyrt, n. adj. a mark on sheep. af-fall, n. diminution, discount, falling off, in the phrase, selja e-t með afföllum, to sell at a discount, Sd. 189.

af-fangadagr, v. atfangadagr, day preceding a feast.

```
af-fara, v. afför.
```

af-fari, adj. wbo deviates, trespasses, Fms. viii. 237, v. l. af-feorast, 20, dep. to fall short of bis father, to degenerate, Fms. xi. 423. af-feldr, m. the spoon of Hela, Edda 231.

af-ferma, d and d, [farmr], to unload a ship, Fas. ii. 448.

af-flutning, f. and afflutningr, m. disparaging, depreciation, Bs. i. 714. af-flytja, flutta, to disparage, Fms. x. 41, Grett. 100 A.

af-for, ar, f. departure, in the following compos: affara-dagr and affarar-dagr, m. the last day of a feast, esp. of Yule or the like; a. jóla = Twelftb-night, opp. to affanga-dagr = at-fangadagr, Christmas Eve, Hkr. iii. 304, Fbr. 139, Fms. vii. 272; a. veizlunnar, Bs. i. 287, Fms. iii. 121. affara-kveld, n. the last evening of a feast, Fms. xi. 424.

af-gamall, adj. [af- intens. ?], very old, decrepid from age, Nj. 190; a. karl, Fms. ii. 182, Sks. 92.

af-ganga, u, f. surplus, Fms. iii. 208, v. l. II. deviation, digression, Skálda 203. COMPD: afgöngu-dagr, m. = affaradagr, day of departure, Fas. iii. 600.

af-gangr, s, m. surplus, store, Ver. 17, Dipl. v. 10, Fms. iv. 236, K. b. K. 163, in the phrase, med afgöngum, to spare, Fms. iii. 108; afgangs, gen. used adverbially, over, to spare, 1. c., v. l. death [ganga af, to die], Fas. iii. 596.

af-gelja, u, f. [gala, cp. hégilja], chattering, Edda 110.

af-gipt, f. [gefa af], tribute, K. A. 170. II. indulgence, absolution, Bs. i. 712, H. E. i. 523, Dipl. i. 5. COMPDS: afgiptar-bréf, n. letter of indulgence, Bs. i. 699. afgiptar-fé, n. a Norse law term, escheatable property, N.G.L. i. 324.

af-gjald, n. tribute, Vm. 78 (freq.)

af-gjarn, adj. eager to be off, flying away, in the proverb, afgjarnt verðr öfundarfé, Fas. ii. 332; cp. assæll. af-gjöf, f. = afgipt, K. A. 170, 174, H. E. i. 430.

af-glapa, ad. [cp. glepja], an Icel. law term, to disturb or break the peace of a court or public meeting, by violence, crowding, shouting, brawling, or the like; ef menn troðast svá mjök at lögréttu fyrir önnkost, eðr göra þar hrang þat eðr háreysti, at fyrir því afglapast mál manna, ok varðar þat fjörbaugsgarð, Grág. i. 5; ef várþing verðr afglapat, at eigi megu mál lúkast, 105; ef menn afglapa görð allir þeir er til vóru teknir, i. 495.

af-glapan and afglopun, f. [v. the preceding word], used of rioting or brawling in a court or at a meeting, to break the law or the peace; it is also used of any illegal steps to stop the course of law, so that the pleadings are interrupted, and there is a flaw in the procedure, v. bingsafglöpun; frequent in the Gragas and the Sagas; it was liable to the lesser outlawry, v. above: bribery and false witness seem to be counted as pingsafglöpun in Nj. 150, and were to be challenged to the High Court, Lv. 12, 31, Nj., Grág., esp. in the p. p. etc.: v. Dasent, Introd. to Burnt Njal.

af-glapi, a, m. an oaf, fool, simpleton, Fms. i. 156, Ld. 34, Sd. 145. COMPD: afglapa-orð, n. words of a fool, in the proverb, úmæt eru afglapa-orð, a fool's word is nothing worth — now úmæt eru ómagaorð—Boll. 352.

af-greizla, u, f. payment, contribution, Vm. 141. af-guðliga, adv. ungodly, N. G. L. i. 376, v. l. = óguðliga.

af-gezla, u, f. taking care of, H. E. i. 396, uncert. read.

af-gora, d, to offend, do amiss, transgress, Nj. 254, Fms. vii. 104, viii. 300. af-gord, f. transgression, offence, mostly in pl., trespasses in a religious sense, Sks. 601, Hkr. iii. 225.

af-görvi, v. atgörfi.

af-hallinn, false read. = ofjarlar, Vall. L. 206, v. l.

af-hallr, adj. sloping downward, Eg. 277. af-haugr, m. a side-mound, Isl. ii. 46.

af-hefd, f. [hefd, possessio], ousting, D. N. iv. 881.

af-hegna, d, to enclose, bedge, D. N. iii. 774.

af-heima, gen. pl. n. [heima], from bome, out of doors, abroad; fara til afheima, to go abroad, opp. to at heimili, at bome, N. G. L. i. 158.

af-helgast, 20, dep. to become unboly, to be profaned, Sks. 782 B.

af-hellir, m. side-cave, Fms. iii. 570, Fas. ii. 152, Brandkr. 62.

af-henda, d and t, to band over, Lv. 6, Dipl. ii. 14, 16; a. skuld, to pay a debt, Vápn. 41; 2. heit, to pay a vow, Bs. i. 121.

af-hending, f. a metrical term, a subdivision of the sambenda, when the final assonance of a verse is repeated in the next one, e. g. seimbverrir gefr seima | seimörr . . . , Edda (Ht. 47 and 24). In mod. Icel. metric, afhenda is quite different, viz. a short metre in only two lines.

af-hendis, adv. off one's band, N.G.L. i. 180.

af-hendr, adj. out of one's band, in the phrase, segja e-n sér afhendan, to give one up, of a client or the like; leitt er mer at segja bik afhendan, því at þat hefi ek aldri gert ef ek hefi við manni tekit, Fs. 34, Fms. iii. 51 (of the poet Hallfred and king Olaf). II. n. afhent impers., e-m er e-t afhent, unfit for, unable to, Fms. viii. 21.

af-heyrandi, part. act. out of bearing, absent, Grag. ii. 143.

af-heyris, adv. out of bearing, opp. to aheyris, Bs. i. 771.

af-hlaoning, f. unloading, N. G. L. i. 410.

af-hlaup, n. surplus, Fms. iv. 336; til afhlaups, to spare, Alg. 370. COMPD: afhlaups-korn, n. surplus corn, Gpl. 352. af-hlutr, m. sbare of a thing, v. fjár-afhlutr.

af-hlyoast, dd, to disobey, D. N. ii. 173, af-hrapi, a, m. offscourings, outcasts, (an aπ. λεγ.,—afhirak being now used); ok ræðr hann sér einum á hendr afhrapa hans, Grág. i. 294 (of the consequences of harbouring a vagabond).

af-hroo, n. destruction, v. afrad, Fas. iii. 169.

af-huga, adj. ind. averse, baving turned one's mind from; verða a. e-u or viðe-t, to forget, mind no more, Isl. ii. 274, Stj. 202, Fs. 47, Bs. i. 78, 655 xi. 3. af-hugast, að, dep. gov. dat. to forget, Fms. viii. 252; part. afhugaðr við e-t = afhuga, baving put it out of one's mind, ii. 336.

af-hus, n. out-bouse, side-apartment, Eb. 10.

af-hvarf, n. [hverfa], a diversion, turning aside, Hm. 33, in which passage it is opp. to gagnvegr, the straight path, Ld. 204.

af-hyoa, dd, to scourge thoroughly, 'bide,' Grett. 135, Sturl. iii. 295.

af-höfða, 20, to bebead, Fms. i. 217, Stj. 464.

af-hogg, n. 2 law term, 'off-bewing,' mutilation, maiming, N. G. L. i. 170. Bs. i. 675, H. E. i. 237.

II. ebips, splinters, Fms. ii. 290.

AFI, a, m. [cp. Lat. avus, Ulf. avo = μάμμα, and aba = ἀνῆρ, vir], grandfatber: it is now frequent, but occurs very rarely in old writers, who almost always use móðurfaðir or föðurfaðir. Yet it occurs in the poem Rm. 16—afi ok amma—and Vpm. 29, where it = föðurfaðir. It is curious to observe that in the poem Skm.—whence it is again transferred into the Grógaldr—it is used in the sense of a boy or a son; cp. as an illustration of this use the Norse phrase—D. N. iv. 848—afi eptir afa = son after fatber, man after man in uninterrupted succession, in accordance to the Gothic aba; Edda 108, Fms. iv. 288, vi. 346, xi. 6. We also say lang-afi, great-grandfatber, and langamma, great-grandmother. compo: afa-systir, f. great aunt, Landn. 317.

af-kaup, n. bad bargain, Fms. v. 255.

af-káraligr, v. afkárligr.

af-kárligr, adj. = afkárr, Lex. Poët.; now freq. afkáralegr, adj. and -lega, adv. of manners, odd, like a madman.

af-kárr, adj. [af- intens.; kárr does not occur; cp. the modern kári, a gale, tempest, (poět.)], strange, prodigious; er hér nokkut afkárt inn, of a giant pulling a bear out of his den by the ears, Fas. ii. 237; it occurs repeatedly in Lex. Poět. = very strong, remarkable; afkárr söngr, discordant song, of shouting, Akv. 38; cp. launkárr.

af-kleyfi, n. in the compo afkleyfis-orð, n. a metric. term, a superfluous word, syllable, in a verse, an enclitic syllable preceding the höfuðstaft in a verse. compo: afkleyfis-samstafs, u, f. syllaba bypermetra, Edda (Ht.)

af-klæda, dd, to undress, Stj. 194. B. reflex. to undress oneself, Eg. 420. Fms. x. 294.

af-komandi, part. descendant, Hkr. iii. 170.

af-kvæmi, n. [kvám], 'off-coming,' offspring, in a collect. sense, Fms. i. 212, Hkr. i. 325, Orkn. 142, Stj. 39.

compp: afkvæmis-maðr, m. descendant, Stj. 39, 160.

af-kymi, a, m. nook, 1sl. ii. 471 (paper MS.); kymi, id., is now freq. AFL, s, m. bearth of a forge, Edda 69, 70, Stj. 312, Fms. viii. 8; in afl, m. [Grimm mentions an O. H. G. aval; abal is a dub. απ. λεγ. in A.S. poetry, Ormul. avell], strength, esp. physical force; afreksmadr at afli ok áraði, Eg. 1; styrkr at afli, Fms. i. 19; ramr at afli, 155; fullkominn at affi ok hyggju, bodily and mental vigour, Ld. 256; stillt þú þó vel affinu, at bu verdir eigi kendr, Nj. 32; hafa afl til e-s, be a match for, be able to do, Gpl. 411. B. virtue; afl daudfærandi grasa, virtue of poisonous berbs, 623. 26. 2. metaph. strength, power, might, 3. a law term, force, validity; dæmdu vér betta boð Bjarna ilogligt ok ekki afl hafa, void, Dipl. iii. 3. 4. a law term. majority, odds, in the phrase, ok skal afl rada, plurima vota valeant; ef gerðarmenn (umpires) verða eigi ásáttir ok skal a. ráða, Grág. i. 493; nú verða fjórðungsmenn eigi ásáttir, þá skal afl ráða með þeim, i. 1, P. 44. 531 (where it is used of a jury); en ef beir verða eigi ásáttir er í logrettu sitja hvat þeir vilja lofa eðr í lög leiða, þá skolu þeir ryðja logréttu (viz. divide) ok skal ráða a. með þeim, Nj. 150. 5. force. ticlence; taka með afli, Stj. 430; bjóða e-m afl, Bs. ii. 106. afls-munr, m. odds, superiority of strength, esp. in the phrase, kenna afismunar, where there is a short struggle, the one being soon overcome, Eb. 182, Eg. 508, Hkr. i. 286: \beta. kenna aflsmuna = kosta afls, to exert oneself to the utmost; vard hann at kenna a. (to exert the whole of his strength) áðr hann kæmi honum undir, Eb. 172. afts-raun = aftraun.

N.G.L. i. 328 it seems to mean bearth (in general).

AFILA, ab, [cp. Swed. afvel, breed, stock: Dan. avling, farming; avlsgard, farm; faareavl, qvægavl, breed of sbeep or cattle. In Norse (mod.) avle is to barvest; Swed. afla, to beget. In the Icel. verb afla the idea of producing or gathering prevails, whereas the nouns branch off; the weak afi chiefly denotes produce, means, stores, resources, troops, forces; the strong one—afl—force alone. Yet such phrases as ramr at afli indicate something besides the mere notion of strength. In the mod. Scandin. idioms—Dan., Swed., Norse—there are no traces left of the idea of force? Op. the Lat. opes and copiae. The Icel. spelling and pronunciation with bl (abl) is modern, perhaps from the time of the Reformation: cp. the words efla etc. with a changed vowel. The root is OP-, as shewn in Lat. ope, Topes, the o being changed into a?]. I. with gen, of the thing, to gain, acquire, earn, procure; vandara at gæta fengins fjár en afla bess (a proverb): bá bjöggu beir skip ok öfluðu manna til, got men to man it, Eg. 170. the phrase, afla ser fjar ok frægðar, to earn fame and wealth, of young heroes going sea-roving: fóru um sumarit í víking ok öfluðu sér fjár, Eg. 4; afla sér fjár ok frama, Fs. 5; fjár ok virðingar, id.; hann hafði aflat sér fjár (made money) í hólmgöngum, Eg. 49; aflaði þessi bardagi honum mikillar frægðar, brought bim great fame, Fms. ii. 307; kom honum i hug, at honum mundi mikillar framkvæmdar afla, bring bim great advantage, Eb. 112. 2. as a law term, to cause, inflict a wound; ef madr aflar einum blods edr bens af heiptugri hendi, N.G.L. i. 387. with acc., mostly in unclassical writers, but now rare, to earn; afladi hann bar fé mikit, Fms. vii. 80; aflandi bann thesaur er, 655 xxxii. 1; hafit ér ok mikit í aflat, Al. 150; mun ek til hafa atferð ok eljun at afla mér annan viò, to contrive, Ld. 318, where, however, the excellent vellum MS. A.M. 300, 4to, has gen.—annars vioar—more classically, as the Saga in other passages uses the gen., e. g. afla ser manna ok hrossa, to procure borses and men, l. c. little below. β. reflex., e-m aflask e-t, gains, y. absol., njót sem þú hefir aflat, of ill-earned means, Fb. 163. 8. part. aflandi, Njard. 366. 2. now used absol. to fish. Ni. 37. always with acc.; a standing phrase in Icel., the acc. only being used in that particular connection. III. with dat, in the sense of to perform, manage, be able to; hann afladi brutt mikilli vinnu. ok var hagr vel, Fms. i. 289; fyr mun hann því afla en ek færa honum höfuð mitt, it will sooner bappen, Fms. iv. 201, where the Hkr. reads orka: baud út leiðangri, sem honum þótti landit mestu mega afla, to the utmost that the country could produce, Fms. x. 118; ekki aflar hann því at standa í móti yor, be is not man enough to stand against you, Fas. iii. 138.

af-lag, n. [leggja af], gen. aflags. I. used as adv. = afgangs, sparingly, Fas. iii. 477. In modern Icel. hafa aflögum or aflögu, to bave to spare.

II. slaughtering of cattle, killing off: leggja af margan fénað... minti biskup enn á um aflögin, the slaughtering, Bs. i. 913.

af-laga, adv. unlawfully, Grág. i. 473, ii. 367, Gpl. 294, 432, 473, Hkr. ii. 246, Al. 153; ganga a., Stj. 430.

2. now used in the sense to be out of joint, things going wrong.

af-lagliga, adv. = aflögliga, 655 xxxii. 4.

aflan and öflun, f. gain, acquisition, Hkr. ii. 218, Sks. 232. compp: öflunar-maör, m. a good steward, Sturl. iii. 130.

af-langr, adj. oblong, Ann. year 1414; formed from the Lat. (?), now common.

af-lausn, f., Lat. absolutio. 1. some small release, ransom, compensation, Sturl. iii. 142, 239; gjöra a. um e-t, to relieve, release oneself in regard to a thing: Olafr konungr mælti, 'Framar hefir bu ba gert um vigin & Grænlandi, en fiskimaðrinn kallar a. vera fiskinnar; því at hann kallast leysa sik, ef hann dregr fisk fyrir sik, enn annan fyrir skip sitt, bridja fyrir öngul, fjórða fyrir vað, king Olaf said, 'Thou bast done more then in the matter of manslayings in Greenland, than what the fisherman calls the ransom of his fishing; for he says that he has freed himself (of bis fishing), if be draws (up) a fish for himself, but another for his boat, a third for his angle, a fourth for his line,' (this way of reckoning their catch is still common with fishermen in many parts of England and Scotland), Fbr. 154: cp. a stanza in a Scottish ballad, 'I launched my boat in Largo Bay, | And fishes caught I three; | One for wad and one for book, | And one was left for me.' 2. eccles. = absolution, K. A. 226, Hom. 137, Grett. 162, Fms. x. 18.

af-lát, n. leaving off, relinquisbing; a. synda, Stj. 567, Sks. 612 B; án afláti, used adverb. incessantly, 625, p. 77, Th. 20.

B. remission, pardon; aflát misgörninga, Hom. 160; a. synda, 159.

COMPD: aflátskorn, n. surplus corn, store corn, Gpl. 352, v.l. aflaupskorn.

af-latr, adj. negligent, lazy, Hom. 152.

af-leiðing, f. 'off-leading:'

1. now generally used in the pl. consequences, result;

2. in old writers, on the contrary, it seldom occurs, and then in a peculiar sense. So Sturl. iii. 128, goðar afteiðingar eru með e-m, they are on good terms, things go on pretty well between them.

3. metric. continuation; her er hinn fyrri vísuhelmingr leiddr af þeirri vísu, er áðr var kveðin ok fylgir þat málsorð, er afteiðing (continuation) er kölluð, Edda (Ht.) 126.

af-leiðingr, s, m., skilja góðan afleiðing, used adverb. to part on friendly terms, Sturl. iii. 134: cp. the preceding word, 128; both passages are taken from the porgils S. Skarða, to which the phrase seems to be peculiar.

af-leiðis, adv.

1. loc. astray, out of the path, Sd. 146, 655 xvii. 4.

2. metaph., færa a., to pervert. Stj. 227, 519; þeir lugu á okkr, en þú færðir orð þeirra a., you perverted their words, Bs. i. 7, Glüm. 327; Snúa e-m a., to seduce, Andr. 625. 75.

$\beta$ impers., e-u þokar a., turns out wrong, Bs. i. 340.

af-leifar, f. pl. scraps, remnants, leavings, Stj. 383, Bs. i. 237; f. búsafleifar, Grág. i. 299.

af-leitinn, adj. = afleitr, of odd appearance, Fas. ii. 329.

af-leitliga, adv. perversely, Stj. 55; illa ok a., 173.

af-leitligr, adj. = afleitr, perverse, deformed, Stj. 274, Al. 96. af-leitr, adj. [lita, cp. also -leitr in compounds], strange, bideous; neut., hversu afleitt (bow disgusting) oss virðist um þeirra háttu, Hks. iii. 425; Psafala, Eg. 57. hversu afleitir (stupid) oss synast þeirra hættir, Fms. vii. 296, l. c.; þeir fyrirlita ok halda alla saudahirda sem afleita, odd, peculiar, Stj. 293; afleitt edr eligt, vile, I Sam. xv. 9. B. abandoned, the face turned from, deserted by, with dat.; afleita hamingjunni, luckless, Stj. 421. Ruth i. 12.

/2 man a shi

af-lendis, adv. = erlendis, abroad, N. G. L. i. 244.

af-lendr, adj. far from land, in open sea, Bs. ii. 47.

a. with infin., Bs. i. 39. af-letja, latti, to dissuade: B. with acc., aflatti hann mjök fyrir sér ferðina, Fms. ix. 437. y. or with an acc. of the person and gen. of the thing; a. e-n e-s, v. letja.

af-létta, tt, to cease, Fr.

af-léttr, prompt, ready, v. ofléttr.

afl-fatt, n. adj. sbort of strength; verda a., to fail in strength, Fms. i. 55, iii. 150.

afl-grof, f. [afl, m.], bole below the forge, cinder-pit, or a water-pit wherein to cool the iron (?); cp. Vkv. 22, pior. 72.

afl-hella, u, f. bearth-stone in a forge; er hann hafdi þau (viz. the bones) niðrgrafit undir sina afihellu, þiðr. 95.

afli, a, m. I. means, acquisition, gain, produce, stores, fruits; afli ok herfang, Fms. ii. 106; hafði Þórir einn forráð þess liðs ok svá afla þess alls er verðr í ferðinni, iv. 297; eignir . . . með öllum afla ok ávexti, increase and interest, K. Á. 54. 2. now used, a. partic. β. gener. of provisions and stores of any
 1. might, power; hafa afla til eingis, of fishing stores, fishing, and kind. II. metaph.: bave might or means for nothing, be unable to do anything, to be powerless, Nj. 27. 2. forces, troops, body, Lat. copiae, opes; Asgrimr sagði þat mikinn afla, great support, Nj. 210; en þat sýnist mér þó ráðligast at biðja sér liðs, þvíat þeir draga afla at yðr, they gather forces against you, 222; munu vér skjótt eiga af honum ván hins mesta úfriðar ef hann fær nokkurn afla, troops, resources, Fms. i. 188; at herja á þá feðga með allmikinn afla, strong body, 184; ok er hirð Sverris konungs sú, at afinn Magnúss konungs (the main body) flyði allr, viii. COMPDS: afla-brogo, n. pl. [brago], stores of fish, A. A. 276. afla-fátt, n. adj. = aflfátt, Fms. iii. 133. afla-fé, n. acquired property, afla-litill, adj. baving little power, Finnb. 320 (compar. N.G.L. i. 448. aflaminni). afla-maör, m. powerful, strong, Lv. 12, 109. afla-mikill, adj. opp. to aflalitill, powerful, strong, Ld.; harðgjörr ok aflamikill, Bs. i. 635; var Sæmundr aflamestr, the strongest in men, Sturl. ii. 44: (=afimikill), used of physical strength, Stj. Judg. iii. 29; verða menn eigi ásáttir hvárr sterkari er, en þó ætla flestir Gísla aflameira (=aflmeira), Gísl. 26. afla-munr, m. odds, Sturl.; at etja við aflamuninn, to fight afla-skortr, m. sbortcoming in power, opp. against odds, Al. 110. to aflamunr, Bs. i. 525. afla-stund, f. fishing season, Bs. ii. 179. af-lima, adj. ind., veroa e-m a., to be cut off, separated from, Post. 95, af-lima, 28, to 'off-limb,' to dismember, maim, mutilate, Js. 37, Ann. 1342. af-liman, f. 'off-limbing,' mutilation, Bs. ii. 75.

afi-lauss, adj. weak, strengthless, a medical term, palsied, paralytic, afl-leysi, n. palsy, v. Fél. ix.

afl-litill, adj. weak, Fms. ii. 201, vii. 208.

afl-mikill, adj. of great strength, Sturl. i. 23, Fms. i. 261.

af-lofa, ad, to refuse, Fr.

afl-raun, f. trial (proof) of strength; in plur. bodily exercises; Skallagrimr hendi mikit gaman at affraunum ok leikum, Eg. 187; er þat flestra manna ætlan, at Grettir hafi verit sterkastr hérlandsmanna, síðan þeir Ormr ok Þórálír lögðu af aflraunir, Grett. 133; þótti þetta mikil a., Fms. iii. 210, Finnb. 274: cp. aftsraun.

afl-skortr, m. failing of strength, Fms. ii. 149.

aflugr, adj. strong, v. öflugr.

afl-vani, adj. ind. deficient in strength; verda a., to succumb; taka beir fang, ok verðr Gunnarr mjök 2., Fms. ii. 75 (in wrestling); enda varð hann a. fyrir lids sakir, was overpowered, got the worst of it, Isl. ii. 172; Eustachius sá sik aslvani (acc.) í móti þeim, 655 x. p. 2.

afl-voovi, 2, m. [voovi, a muscle], the biceps muscle, Sturl. 51, Ld. 220, Fas. ii. 344.

Am. 26.

af-lögliga, adv. = aflaga, unlawfully, D. N. i. 80, Stj. 154.

af-ma, b, to 'mow off,' to blot out, destroy, Fms. ii. 238, Stj. 208, 346. af-man, f. [af, ma], degradation, shame, v. the following.

af-mána, að, = aímá, to degrade, pollute.

af-manaor, part. polluted, defiled, Rb. 332.

af-mynda, 20, to deform; dep. afmyndask, to be deformed, Fas. i. 425 (paper MS.); the word is now very freq.

af-moeding, f. [modir], right of weaning lambs, by taking them from the mother; kirkja á lamba a. (perhaps wrongly for afmæðring) í Mölvíkrhöfða, Vm. 164.

af-nám, n. gener. taking away, removal, Stj. 2 Sam. iv. 11. in the phrase, at asnami, of something reserved, before the division of spoil, property, or inheritance; now, taka af óskiptu, Dan. forlods, Grág. i. 330, 336, Jb. 289 (Ed. af námi); konungr skildi hafa úr af-neita, að and tt, and afnita, tt, now always afneita, að, to deny, refuse; with dat., hefir afneitað tiltekinni trú, Fms. iii. 166; eigi vil ek því afneita, refuse, Fs. II; ek afneitta eigi hans orðsending, Stj. I Kings xx. 7; en er hann afneitti eigi med öllu (refused not), ba badu beir hann því meir, Grett. 146. 2. absol. afnita; en þar es Jökull bróðir minn laust þik högg, þat skaltú hafa bótalaust, því at þú afníttir þá er þér vóru boðnar, Fs. 57.

2. metaph. privation, loss; ok hann verör at skaba þeim mönnum nokkrum, er oss mun þykkja a. í, Eg. 114, Fms. vii. COMPDS: afnams-fe, n. a law term, sbare, which is reserved before the division of property, spoil, inheritance, or the like, Eg. 240, Fms. iv. athams-gripr, m. something reserved or set aside, Fms. x. 214. af-nefja, 20, to cut off one's nose, Str. 35.

af-neiting, f. denial, renunciation, Th. 17.

af-neyala, u, f. use, consumption; a. skógarins, Fs. 125, Nj. 78; a. fjár (pl.), Jb. 404 A, B (Ed. ofneyzlur).

afr, v. afr, buttermilk.

af-rao, afrao, afroo, and afhroo, n. (Fas. iii. 169), [cp. Swed. afrad; from rod, rud, fundus, ager (?)]. I. prop. a Norse and Swedish law term, tribute, ground tax, payable to the king; a. ok landaura, N. G. L. i. 257, D. N. iii. 408. So also in Vsp. 27, hvárt skyldu æsir a. gjalda, where it is opp. to gildi, league. II. metaph. loss. 1. in the phrase, gjalda a., to pay a beavy fine, suffer a great loss; en þat a. munu vér gjalda, at margir munu eigi kunna írá at segja hvárit sigrast, there will be so beavy a loss in men, such a bavoc in killed, Nj. 197 (where most MSS. read afrod, some afrad, Ed. afraud); töluðu þeir opt um málaferlin, sagði Flosi, at þeir hefði mikit a. goldit þegar, 254 (MSS. afrað, afroð, and afhroð); Lýtingr mun þykjast áðr mikit a. goldit hafa í láti bræðra sinna, 155 (MSS. afrað, afroð, and afhroð), Fms. x. 324. 2. in the phrase, göra mikit a., to make a great bavoc; görði hann mikit afhroð í sinni vörn, great slaughter, Fas. iii. 169: cp. Lex. Poët. 3. advice, Vtkv. 5; the verse is spurious and the meaning false. afraös-kollr, m. cognom., Germ. 'steuerkopf,' cp. nefgildi, Engl. polltax, v. the preceding.

af-reizla, u, f. = afgreizla, outlay, payment, Am. 13.

af-rok, n. [af-intens.], a deed of prowess, a deed of derring do; margir lofuðu mjök afrek Egils, ok sigr þann sem hann vann, Fms. xi. 234; vinna afrek, Fs. 6; ekki a. gerði hann meira í Noregi, Fagrsk. 94; hann lét ok göra þar í Níðarósi naust bæði mörg, ok svá stór, at afrek var í, compos: afreks-gripr, n. a grand, magnificent, Hkr. iii. 268. splendid object, a thing of price, Ld. 144. afreks-maör, m. a valiant man; a. at afli ok úræði, Eg. I; en þat hefi ek spurt, at hirð hans er skipuð afreksmönnum einum, beroes, 19, 84; a. um vöxt eðr afl, Ísl. ii. afreks-verk, n. valiant deed, Fær. 51, Al. 30.

af-reka, að, to achieve, perform; munu þér mikit afreka, Lv. 33; hvat peir höfðu afrekat, Fas. iii. 221; a. vel, to succeed, Bárð. 175.

af-remma, u, f. [ramr], restriction, encumbrance, obligation; su er a. meðr þessum tillögum, at prestr skal vera at heimilishúsi ok syngja allar heimilistíðir, Ám. 37.

afrendi, f. [afrendr], strength, prowess, valour, Hým. 28.

afrendr, adj. [frequently or almost constantly spelt afreyndr, as if from 'af-' intens. and 'raun,' of great prowess; but the derivation from 'afr-=afar-' and 'endi or -indi' is better].

I. in the phrase, a. at afli, very strong, valiant, Fms. ii. 87, Finnb. 254; compar. afrendari, Fms. x. 321, Fs. 33, 48 (where the MS. Vh. spells afreyndr, so also does the Fb. i. 341, II. absol. without adding at affi, Lv.101 (where written afreyndr).

af-réttr, m. and afrétt, f. (now always f.; cp. rétt), [probably akin to reka, viz. afrekt, contr. afrétt], compascuum, common pasture; it is now prop. used of mountain pastures, whither the cattle (sheep) are driven in the summer in order to graze during July and August, and again collected and driven down in the autumn (Sept.); in Norway called almen-I. masc., thus defined, en þat er afréttr, er ij menn eigu saman eor fleiri, hverngi hlut sem hverr þeirra á í, Grág. ii. 303, 330; i afrétt pann, er, i. 397, ii. 303; afréttu, acc. pl., ii. 301, Jb. 198 A, K. p. K. 90, Olk. 37; hálfan afrétt, Vm. 29. II. f. afréttinni (dat.), Grug. (Kb.) ii. 301, 325 A; gen. afréttar (gender uncert.), 303 A; afréttin, id., Cod. A; afrétt (dat. f.?), Isl. ii. 330, Háv. 39; afréttum, dat. pl. (gender uncert.), Boll. 336. COMPDS: afréttar-domr, m. court beld for deciding causes concerning common pasture, Grag. ii. 323. afréttamenn, m. pl. owners or partners in common pasture, Grag. ii. 331. af-roð, v. afráð.

af-rog, n. excuse, justification, Str. 71.

af-ruoningr, m. [ryoja], clearing off, defence, repeal, Pr. 425.

af-runi, 2, m. [runi, renna], deviation; metaph. sin, trespasses; umbot ok iðran afruna (gen.), 125. 174; iðrun fyrir görva afruna (acc. pl.), id.; tárfelling er hann hefir fyrir afruna þá, er verða í þessa heims lífi, id. β. injury, offence, D. N. iii. 367 (Fr.)

afr-yrði, n. = afaryrði, insolent words.

af-resoi, n. [2f- intens. and ráo], absolute rule, D. N. ii. 336 several times (Fr.)

hlutskipti pridjung vid lidsmenn, en umfram at asnumi bjórskinn öll ok af-rækja, t and d, to neglect, contemn, II. E. 1, 257; reslex, afrækjast, in the same signification, a. with dat., a. lögunum, to break, neglect the law, Al. 4. β . with acc. (now always so), a. sitt höfuðmerki, Karl. 189. γ . uncert. dat. or acc., a. Guðs hlýðni, Edda (pref.) 144, Stj. 241. δ . with at and a following infin., Ghl. 183; konungar afræktust at sitja at Uppsölum, left off, Hkr. ii. 97. e. absol., Fms. vii. 221, 188, Ghl. 506.

af-saka, ad, to excuse, exculpate, K. A. 230, Stj. 37. B. pass. afsakast, to be (stand) excused, K. A. 226, Stj. 125.

af-sakan and afsökun, f. a begging off, excuse, exculpation, K. A. 228, Stj. 152. comp: afsakanar-orð, n. pl. excuses, Stj.

af-saki, a, m. excuse, 623. 60.

af-sanna, ao, to refute, prove to be false ('unsooth'), 655 xvii. I.

af-sáo, n. seed-corn, N.G.L. i. 240.

af-negja, sagði, to resign, renounce; a. sér e-t, Barl. 210. Now used in the sense of to refuse, deny.

af-setja, setti, to depose, put down, v. the following.

af-setning, f. and afsetningr, m. deposition, (off-setting, cp. Scot. 'aff-set,' Jam., which means dismissal, the act of putting away), H. E. ii. 74,523. af-sion, adj. ind. immoral, of loose manners, Grag. i. 338.

af-sifja, að, [sifjar], a law term, to cut off from one's 'sib,' alienate from one's family, renounce; gefa má maðr vingjafir at sér lifanda, hest eða yxn, vápn eða þvílíka gripi, ok afsifjar (Cod. A reads afsitjar, but doubtless wrongly) hann sér þó at sex skynsömum mönnum þyki eigi arfsvik gör við erfingja, Jb. 163, D. N. i. 141, Pál Vidal. p. 84. The word appears to be a Norse law term, and does not occur in the laws of the Icel. Commonwealth, but came into use with the code Jb.

af-síða, adv. aside, apart, Krók. 56.

af-akapligt, adj. [skapligt], missbapen, monstrous, buge, sbocking; 2. áfelli, sbocking accident, Stj. 90; herfiligt ok a., 655 xiii. A. 1; 2. ok úmannligt, Stj. 272; 2. úmenska, Fms. ii. 225, K. Á. (App.) 230.

af-akeiðis, adv. astray, H.E. i. 252, 655 xi. 3, Hom. 99.

af-skipan, f. deposition, dismissal, D. N. (Fr.)

af-skipta, adj. ind. cut off, from an inheritance or the like, Lat. expers; in the phrase, vera görr a., to be wronged, Hrafn. 14.

af-skipti, n. pl. dealing with, intercourse, (cp. the phrase, skipta sér af e-u, to meddle with, care about); ok eingi a. veita heiðnum goðum, Fms. ii. 160; ef hann veitir sér engi a., does not deal with, Grág. ii. 121. COMPDS: afskipta-lauss, adj. beedless, careless, baving notbing to do with, Fb. i. 392. afskipta-litill, adj. caring little about, Fms. vii. 181, Orkn. 142. afskipta-samr, adj. meddling, partaking, v. úafskiptasamr.

af-skiptinn, adj. meddling, partaking, Ld. 66.

af-akiptr, part. = afskipta, wronged, cheated, Fas. iii. 619. Metaph. void of, baving no interest in, Stj. 155, 195.

af-skirrandi, participial noun, [skirrast], an offscouring, outcast; leidi ber benna a. út or borginni, 656 C. 33.

af-akrámliga, adv. bideously, Hom. 155.

af-skrámligr, adj. [af-intens.; skrámr means a giant; skrimsl, a monster; cp. Engl. to scream], bideous, monstrous; a. illvirki, a sacrilege, K.A. 222: also spelt askramligr and askramliga, Al. 142, Hom. 155. af-skræmi, n. a monster, v. the following.

af-akreemiliga, adv. bideously:
a. of a scream; þá lét út á stöðli a., bouled piteously, of a ghost, Hkr. ii. 312, Eb. 320, of the bellowing of a mad bull.

B. of a monstrous shape; prællinn (of a ghost) rétti inn höluðit, ok sýndist honum a. mikit, Grett. 83 new Ed.

y. metaph., óttast a., to be sbocked at, Stj. 101.

af-skurðr, ar, m. a chip, lappet, Dipl. iii. 3.

af-akyld, f. a law term, due, obligation, encumbrance, several times in the Cartularies and deeds of gift, in the phrase, sú er a. pessa fjár, D. I. i. 273, etc.; með pessi a. fara þessir fjárhlutir, 282, Vm. 108: cp. the still more freq. phrase, sú er afvinna, cp. afvinna.

af-mio, n. a lappet, snip, Pr. 412.

af-sniðning, f. snipping off. afsniðningar-járn, n. a chopper, Fr.

af-sníðis, adv. cut through, across, Bs. i. 388.

af-spraki, a, m. [cp. A.S. spreean; Germ. spreeben], rumour, bearsay; Hákon jarl hafði fengit afspraka nokkurn (perh. better in two words), Fms. i. 187.

af-springr, m., Al. II, Hkr. iii. 277, Edda (pref.) 146, and various other forms; afsprengr, m. and afspringi, n., Gpl. 47, Fms. viii. 237, Sks. 46 B, Stj. 63, Orkn. 176; the form now usual is afsprengi, n., Fms. v. 217, Fas. ii. 391, Bret. II2.

1. gener. offspring, progeny, v. the quotations above.

2. in pl. used of the produce of the earth, Sks. 48 B (rare).

3. metaph.:

a. a band, a detached part of a body; búttist Hrafin þegar vita, at þessi a. mundi vera af ferð þeirra Þorgils, that this detachment must be from the bost of Thorgils and his followers, Sturl. iii. 274.

B. a branch, ramification; ok er mikil ván, at þar verði nokkurr 2. (offsboot) af þessum ófriði á Limafirði, Fms. xi. 13.

rumour, notice, = afspraki; fá nokkurn 2. um e-t, Fms. viii. 160.

af-spurn, f. a 'speering of,' news, notice, Fms. i. 187.

af-spfttr, part. spit out of, deprived of, Anecd. 42.

af-standa, stód, [Germ. absteben], to cede, part with, Sturl. i. 164, v.l. midla, Fms. iii. 208.

af-stigr, s, m. by-path, Fs. 5, Fær. 102.

af-stúsa, 28, or asstýsa, 8, to lop, prune, of trees; 2. við, N. G. L. i. 350, Lex. Poet., v. stúsr.

af-stúka, u, f. side-nook, 655 xxxii. 4; a side-room in a temple, Fas. iii. 213; now stúka is almost always used of a sacristy.

af-svar, n. refusal, in pl. in the phrase, veita e-u afsvor, to refuse, Ld. 114, Fas. i. 444, Fbr. 120.

af-svara, ab, to deny, refuse, Fas. i. 528; with dat. of pers. and thing, Sturl. iii. 180.

as-sviptr, part. stripped; with dat., assviptr pinni asjonu, cut off from thy countenance, Stj. 228. Gen. xlviii. 11, Sks. 342, H. E. i. 457.

af-synis, adv. out of sight, Fms. viii. 344.

af-seell, adj. luckless, in the proverb, a veror annars glys jafnan, (another version of the proverb is quoted s.v. afgjarn), coveted wealth, which is eagerly looked for by another, is luckless, difficult to keep safe, Stj. 78.

1. gener. taking away, B. K. 108. af-tak, n. off' (Shaksp.), slaying, executing; hvat hann vill bjóða fyrir a. Geirsteins, compensation for the slaughter of G., Fms. vii. 360; en a. hans (slaying) segja eigi allir einum hætti, x. 390; með aftaki Ólafs, by slaying bim, 195; um manna aftök, executions, Gpl. 137: cp. aftaka, and taka af, to execute, bebead. 3. in pl. commonly used of, a. flat denial, in such phrases as, hafa aftök um e-t, to deny flatly. In some compds this signification can be traced, as in aftaka-minni, Fms. i. 130. B. it is also now used in many compds of whatever is excessive, above all measure, e.g. aftaka-veðr, a burricane. compos: aftaks-skjöldr, m. a buge aftaka-maor, m. a determined, obstinate person; sbield, Fas. i. 415. hón var a. mikill um þetta mál, be was very stubborn in this case, Hkr. ii. 74. aftaka-minni, adj. compar. less obstinate, more pliable; stód konungr í fyrstu fast á móti, en drottning var allt aftakaminni, the king at first stood fast against it, but the queen was all along less stubborn, Fms. i. 139.

af-taka, u, f. = aftak:

1. gener. loss, privation; a. ok missa, of a personal loss by death, Edda 37.

2. death by violent means, slaughter; til aftöku manna eðr fé upp at taka, for the cutting off of men or the confiscation of their goods, Eg. 73, 252; hann hafði verit at aftöku þorkels fóstra, Fms. vii. 201, Orkn. 22 old Ed. Formerly there were no public executions in Icel., except the stoning of wizards or witches, Ld. ch. 98, Eb. ch. 20, Vd. ch. 26; and the hanging of thieves, Fbr. ch. 19, Eb. l. c. Now, however, used in the sense of public execution, and in various compds, e.g. aftöku-staðr, m. place of execution, etc.

af-tekja, u, f. dues, collections, revenues, or the like; til forræðis ok allra aftekna (gen. pl.), Bs. i. 692; ábúð ok a. staðanna, revenue, 752. af-tekning, f. taking away, a grammatical term, an apostropbe, Skálda 182. af-tekt, f. = aftekja, Fms. v. 274, xi. 441, Bs. i. 68.

af-telja, talči, to dissuade, Fms. x. 27.

af-tigna, að, now antigna, v. andtigna, to disgrace, Sks. 225. af-trú, f. unbelief, beresy, Orkn. 188.

af-trúast, 20, dep. to fall into unbelief, Bs. ii. 181.

af-tækiligt, n. adj. advisable, feasible, [cp. taka e-t af, to decide for], Fms. viii. 348.

af-tækt, n. adj. blamable; er þat ok ætlun mín at fátt muni vera aftækt um yðra skapsmuni, I 'ettle' that there will be little blameworthy about your turn of mind, Fms. v. 341.

af-tæma, d, to 'toom' off, to empty, Fr.

afugr, backwards, going the wrong way, v. öfugr.

afund, envy, v. öfund.

af-undinn, adj. cross, uncivil.

afusa, gratitude, pleasure, v. aufusa.

af-vega, adv. [afvegar, Bs. ii. 92], off the way, astray, Sd. 149. Metaph, in moral sense; leida a., to mislead; ganga a., to go astray.

af-vegaor, part. misled, Mar.

af-vogis = afvega, astray, Skálda 203.

af-velta, adj. [the Scot. awald or awalt], cast, used of cattle, sheep, or horses that have fallen on the back and are unable to rise, Háv. 44. af-vensla, u, f. expenses, outlay; auðræði (means) urðu brátt eigi mikil, en afvenslur þóttu varla með mikilli stillingu, Bs. i. 136.

af-vik, n. a creek, recess, Stj. 195; metaph. a biding-place, pior. 137.

af-vikinn, part. secluded, retired; a. staor = afvik.

af-vinna, u, f. encumbrance, due, fees, outgoings, = afskyld. Freq. in deeds of gift, e.g. D. I. i. 203, 266; þá lágu öngar gjafir til staðarins, en a. varð öngu minni, tben no gifts came in to the see, but the outlay was in nothing less, Bs. i. 84; þá görðust fjúrhagir úhægir í Skálaholti, urðu afvinnur miklar (great outgoings) en tillög (incomings) eingin, Bs. i. 99. af-virða, ð and t, to despise, Barl. several times.

af-virðiligr, adj. wortbless, poor, despicable, Barl. 75, 154; v. auvirðiligr and auðv., which are the Icel. forms.

af-virðing, f., contr. ávirðing, disrepute, disgrace, fault, Bs. ii. 187.

af-vænn, adj. unexpected, Fas. ii. 552.

af-voxtr, m. 'off-wax,' i. e. decrease, N. G. L. i. 214; opp. to avoxtr. af-perra, b, and mod. 20, to wipe off: metaph. to expunge, St. 1142.

af-pokka, að, in the phrase, a. e-t fyrir e-m, to throw discredit on, run down, set against, Fms. ii 145; hann útti fátt við jarl, en af pokkaði heldr fyrir peim fyrir ödrum mönnum, be bad little to do with the earl, "Pér á bug, if they be too strong for thee, Stj. 512. 2 Sam. x. 11, Mkv. 7; also but rather ran them down before other men, Orkn. 378.

af-pváttr, m. a wasbing off, ablution, Fr.

af-esta, u, f. [af and eta], prop. a voracious beast, a glutton, a great bully; ér langfeðgar erut garpar miklir ok afætor, Fms. xi. III; sterkir menn ok afætur miklar, iii. 143. It is perhaps identical with the present óféti, n. a vile thing, offscouring.

AGG, n. brawl, strife, now freq.
AGI, a, m. [A. S. oga; Dan. ave; Engl. awe: cp. Ulf. agis, n., and perh. dyos or dyos], gener. awe, terror; ba skelfr jörð öll í aga miklum, then all the earth quakes in great awe, Hom. 100; agi ok otti, awe and β. metaph. turbulence, uproar, disorder, esp. in terror, Fms. vi. 442. the phrase, agi ok úfrior, uproar and war, Fms. ii. 241, vi. 298, 430 awe, respect; var eigi sá annarr konungr, er mönnum stæði af jafnmikill agi af fyrir vizku sakir, there was not another king who inspired his men with so much awe for his wits' sake, Fms. x. 406; Guds a., fear of God, Sks. 354, 667. 8. discipline, constraint, now freq. in this sense; i æskunni meðan hann er undir aga, Sks. 26. II. moisture, wet, now freq., cp. vatnsagi. Also a verb aga, ad, to ebastise, is now freq. COMPDS: aga-samligr, adj. unruly, Fins. vii. 274. aga-samr, adj. turbulent, in uproar; agasamt mun på verða í héraðinu, ef allir þorláks synir eru drepnir, there will be uproar in the district if all Thorlak's sons are slain, Eb. 230.

AGN, n. bait, Barl. 123, Niðrst. 623. 3. There is now in many cases a distinction between agn, bait for foxes and land animals, and beita, bait for fish; but in the poem Hym. 18, 22, at least, agn is used of fishing; ganga á agnið is to nibble or take the bait: cp. egna.

agn-hald, n. a barb of a book.

agn-sax, n. fishing knife, with which bait for fish is cut, Edda 36, Nj. 19 (arnsax is a false reading), Fas. i. 489.

agn-ui, a, m. the barb of a book for keeping on the agn; skal a. vera & hverjum borni, Sks. 419 (B. reads agnör).

agn-ör, f. a barbed book, Sks. 89 new Ed.

AKA, ók, óku, ekit; pres. ek. It also occurs in a weak form, að, Fagrsk. 104, which form is now perhaps the most common. [Neither Ulf. nor Hel. use this word, which appears also to be alien to the South-Teut. idioms. The Germans say fabren; the English to drive, carry; cp. Engl. yoke. In Latin, however, agere; Gr. ayew.] Gener. to move, drive, transport, carry:

I. to drive in barness in a sledge or other vebicle (where the vehicle is in dat.), as also the animal driven; bryggjur svá breiðar, at aka mátti vögnum á víxl, 'briggs' (i.e. wbarfs or piers, cp. 'Filey Brigg') so broad, that wains might meet and pass each other, Hkr. ii. II; gott er heilum vagni heim at aka, 'tis good to drive bome with a whole wain, to get home safe and sound, cp. Horace solve senescentem, Orkn. 464, Al. 61; Þórr á hafra tvá, ok reið þá er hann ekr, in wbich be drives, Edda 14, Ob. adds i (viz. reið þá er h. ekr i), which may be the genuine reading. Edda 38. y. a β. with the prep. i; Freyr ok ok i kerru med gelti, y. absol. to drive, i. e. travel by driving; beir óku upp á land, Eg. 543; fóru þeir í sleðann ok óku nóttina alla, drove the whole night, Fms. iv. 317. With the road taken in acc.; aka úrgar brautir, Rm. 36; báðu hennar ok heim óku (dat. henni being understood), carrying a bride II. to carry or cart a load, (to lead, in the north of England):-in Iceland, where vehicles are rare, it may perhaps now and then be used of carrying on horseback. The load carried is commonly a. acc.: aka saman hey, to cart bay, Eb. 150; saman ók hann heyit, Ísl. ii. 330; hann ók saman alla töðu sína, Landn. 94; þá tekr Gísli eyki tvá, ok ekr fé sitt til skógar, Gísl. 121; but absol., ok ekr til skógar með fjárhlut sinn, l. c. 36; þá lét konungr aka til haugsins vist ok drykk, then the king let meat and drink be carted to the 'bow' (barrow), Fms. x. 186; vill hann húsit ór stað færa, ok vill hann aka þat, carry it away, Grág. li. 257; líkin váru ekin í sleða, carried in a sledge, Bs. i. β. dat. more freq., as now; hann ók heyjum sínum á öxnum, carried bis bay on oxen, Fbr. 43 new Ed.; einn ók skarni á hóla, carted dung alone on the fields, Nj. 67, Rd. 277. Y. with the animals in dat., porolifi let aka prennum cykjum um daginn, with three yoke of oxen, Eb. 152; or with the prep. á, ríðr Þórðr hesti þeim er hann hafði ekit á um aptaninn, Ísl. ii. 331, Fbr. 43; ef madr ekr edt bert klyfjar á, leads or carries on packsaddles, Grag. i. 441. 8. absol., þat mun ek til finna, at hann ók eigi i skegg ser, that he did not cart it on his own heard, Nj. 67. part., ekinn uxi, a yoked, tamed ox. Vm. 152. III. used by sailors, in the phrase, aka segli, to trim the sail; aka seglum at endilöngum skipum, Fms. vii. 94; bað hann þá aka skjótt seglunum, ok víkja út í sund nokkut, 131. In mod. Icel. metaph., aka seglum eptir vindi, to set one's sail after (with) the wind, to act according to circumstances; cp. IV. metaph. in a great many proverbs and phrases, e. g. aka heilum vagni heim, v. above; aka höllu fyrir e-m, to get the worst of it, Ld. 206; aka undan (milit.), to retire, retreat slowly in a battle; óku þeir Erlingr undan ofan með garðinum, Fms. vii. 317; akast undan (reflex.), id., 278; þeir ökuðust undan ok tóku á skógana, they took to the woods, Fagrsk. 174 (where the weak form is used); sumir Noromenn óku undan á hæli ofan með sjónum, x. 139: aka e-m á bug, the figure probably taken from the ranks in a battle, to make one give way, repel, en ef Ammonite aka metaph., aka bug á e-n, id.; mun oss þat til Birkibeinum, at þeir aki á oss engan bug, to stand firm, with unbroken ranks, Fms. viii. 412. It is now used impers., e-m á ekki ór að aka, of one who has always bad luck, probably ellipt., or steini or the like being understood; cp. Gisl. 54, the phrase, bykir ekki or steini hefja, in the same sense, the figure being taken from a stone clogging the wheels; ok hann af ser fjötrinum, threw it off by rubbing, Fas. ii. 573; bá ekr Oddr sér þar at, creeps, rolls bimself thither, of a fettered prisoner, id.; the mod. phrase, 20 aka sér, is to sbrug the shoulders 25 2 mark of displeasure: aka or öngum, ex angustiis, to clear one's way, get out of a scrape, Bjarn. 52; aka i moinn, to strive against, a cant phrase. Impers. in the phrase, e-m veror nær ekit, is almost run over, bas a narrow escape, varo honum svá nær ekit at hann hleypti inn í kirkju, be was so bard driven that be ran into the church, Fms. ix. 485; hart ekr at e-m, to be in great straits, ok er porri kemr, på ekr hart at mönnum, they were pressed bard, Isl. ii. 132; ekr nú mjök at, I am bard pressed, Gísl. 52; er honum pótti at sér aka, when death drew near, of a dying man, Grett. 119 A. Reflex., e-m ekst e-t i tauma, to be thwarted in a thing, where the figure is taken from trimming the sail when the sheet is foul, Fms. xi. 121. In later Icelandic there is a verb akka, ao, to beap together, a. e-u saman, no doubt a corruption from aka with a double radical consonant, a caut word. Aka is at present a rare word, and is, at least in common speech, used in a weak form, akar instead of ekr; akaði = ók; akat = ekit.

AKARN, n. [Ulf. akran = καρπόε; Engl. acorn; Germ. ecker; Dan. agern], acorn, Edda 30 and Gl.

ak-braut, n. carriage road, Hkr. ii. 253, Fær. 102, vide Fb. i. 144. ak-færi, n. driving gear, carriage and barness, Fms. iii. 206, Nj. 153. AKKERI, n. [no doubt, like Engl. anchor, of foreign origin; cp. Gr. άγκύρα; Lat. ancora. It occurs, however, in a verse as early as the year 996], ankeri, Lv. 99, is a corrupt form from a paper MS., so is also atkeri, Hkr. i. 311; liggja um akkeri, to lie at ancbor, Fbr. 52; leggjast um a., to cast ancbor, Fms. iv. 301; heimta upp a., to weigh ancbor, 302; a. hrift við, the anchor bolds, Ld. 21, Grág. ii. 397, Jb. 397, Eg. 129, Fms. vii. 264, ix. 44, x. 136, Hkr. i. 311, Lv. 99, Fas. i. 511, 515. Metaph., a. vánar, anchor of hope, 677. 17. COMPDS: akkeris-fleinn, m. the fluke, palm of an anchor, Fms. ix. 387, Orkn. 362. akkeris-lauss, adj. without an anchor, Ann. 1347. akkeris-lægi, n. anchorage, Jb. 396. akkeris-sát, f. id., Grág. ii. 402, 408. akkeris-stokkr, m. an anchor-stock, Orkn. 362. akkeris-strengr, m. an anchor-rope, akkeris-sæti, n. anchorage, Jb. 397 B. cable, Fms. ii. 10.

AKKORDA, 20, [for. word], to accord, Rb. 446.

AKR, rs, pl. rar, [Ulf. akrs; A.S. æcer; Engl. acre; Germ. acker; Lat. ager; Gr. αγρός], arable land, ground for tillage: engi, a meadow; cp. the law term, þar er hvárki sé a. né engi, Grág. i. 123, Hrafn. 21. B. opp. to tun, the 'town' or enclosed bomefield: bleikir akrar en slegin tún, the corn-fields are white to barvest and the 'town,' i. e. the 'infield,' is mown, Nj. 112; helgi tuns ok akra ok engja, Bs. i. 719; teðja akra, Rm. 12. 2. metaph. the crop; beir höfdu nidrbrotio akra hans alla, destroyed all the crop in the fields, Fms. v. 50; ok er hann óð rúgakrinn fullvaxinn, þá tók döggskórinn á sverðinu akrinn uppstandanda, and when he (Sigurd Fafnir's bane) strode through the full-waxen rye-field, the tip of his sword's sheath just touched the upstanding ears, Fas. i. 173; sá hinn góði akr (crop) er upp rann af þeirri hinni góðu jörð, Hom. 68. B. name of several farms. compos: akraavoxtr, m. produce of the fields, Ver. 1. akra-gerði, n. a 'fieldgarth, enclosure of arable land, N.G.L. i. 22. akra-karl, m. cognom. Acre-carle,' Lv. 40. akra-spillir, m. cognom. destroyer of fields, Glúm. 333, Fas. ii. 362, better askaspillir, q. v.

akr-dai, n. (?), wild gourds; veit ek eigi hvat þat heitir (adds the translator) þat var því líkast sem a., Stj. 615. 2 Kings iv. 39.

akr-deili, n. a plot of arable land, D. N. ii. 123 (Fr.) akr-gerői, n. enclosure of arable land, Fms. vii. 178.

akr-görő, f. agriculture. akrgörðar-maðr, m. plougbman, Nj. 54. akr-hæna, u, f.a'field-ben, quail, opp. to heiðarhæna or lynghæns, Stj. 292. akri, a, m. a bird, Edda (Gl.)

akr-karl, m. a 'field-carle,' ploughman or reaper, Stj. 273, 441, El. 4, 19. akr-kal, n. 'field-kale,' potberbs, Stj. 615. 2 Kings iv. 30 akr-land, n. land for tillage, Grag. ii. 258, D. I. i. 268, Bs. i. 348, Fms. iii. 18. akrlands-deild, f. division of a field, Grag. ii. 260. akr-lengd, f. a field's length (now in Icel. tunlengd, i. e. a short distance); svá at a. var í milli þeirra, so that there was a field's length between them, Bev. 14 (Norse). akr-maör, m. ploughman, tiller of ground, Fms. vi. 187.

akr-neyttr, part. used as arable land, tilled, Sks. 630, v. l.

akr-plógsmaðr, m. ploughman, Stj. 255. akr-rein, f. a strip of arable land, D. N. ii. 561.

akr-skipti, n. a division of a field, Fms. xi. 441.

akr-skurðr, ar, m. reaping. akrskurðar-maðr, m. a reaper, Stj. Ruth ii. 21 (young men).

akr-súra, u, f. field-sorrel, Hom. 82, 83.

akr-tiund, f. titbe paid on arable land (Norse), N. G. L. i. 391.

akrverks-maor, m. ploughman, tiller of the ground, Ver. 5. Gen. iv. 2. ak-stóll, m. probably a chair on wheels or castors; Ketilbjörn sat á akstóli mjök við pall, in the banquet at Flugumýri in the year 1253, Sturl. iii. 182. AKTA, ad, [for. word, which therefore does not observe the contraction into &, which is the rule with genuine words; it appears esp. in eccl. writers and annalists at the end of the 13th and 14th centuries, Arna b. S., K. A., Stj., the Norse Ghl., etc.: cp. A. S. eabtan; Hel. abton, censere, considerare; Germ. achten; mid. Lat. actare, determinare et actare, Du Cange in a letter of the year 1284.] number, tax, value, take a census; akta fólkið, Stj. 2 Sam. xxiv. 10; foru þeir víða um land ok öktuðu vísaeyri konungs, taxed, Bs. i. 707; nú byggir maðr dýrra en vandi hefir á verit, akti (tax) því fremr dýrra ok fremr til leidangrs ok landvarnar, be shall be taxed in due proportion, 2. to examine, enquire; aktio inniliga öll bau leyni sem hann ma i felast, to take diligent beed of all the lurking-places, Stj. 479. 1 Sam. xxiii. 23; aktib þó áðr, and look, that, id. 2 Kings x. 23; hann aktadi eptir (looked after) um eignir stadarins, Bs. i. 778. devote attention to, study; hann aktadi mjök bókligar listir, Bs. i. 666, II. a law term, esp. in the Arna b. S., to debate, discuss in parliament; nú er þetta var aktað (debated) gengu menn til lögréttu, Bs. i. 719; var þá gengit til lögréttu, ok lesit bréf konungs ok drottningar ok aktað (stated) af leikmanna hendi hversu prestar höfðu af stöðum gengit, 735; lögbók öktuð á alþingi, the code of law debated at the althing, H. Ann. 419. 19. Now only used in the sense of to care for, feel respect for, but a rare and unclassical Danism.

ak-tamr, adj. tame under the yoke; gribungr a., Grág. ii. 122. aktan, f. [Germ. achtung], beed, consideration, H. E. i. 410.

ak-taumr, m. esp. in pl. ar, lines (taumar) to trim (aka) the sail, distinguished from hosubendur, the stays of the mast, perhaps the braces of a sail (used by Egilsson to transl. inépas in Od. 5. 260), porarinn stýrði ok hafði aktaumana um herðar sér, þvíat þröngt var á skipinu, bad the braces round his shoulders, because the boat was blocked up with goods, Ld. 56; the phrase, sitja i aktaumum, to manage the sail; ef ek sigli med landi fram, ok sit ek í aktaumum, þá skal engi snekkja tvítugsessa sigla fyrir mér, eða ek vilja svipta (reef the sail) fyr en þeir, Fms. v. 337; reiði slitnaði, svá at bæði gékk í sundr höfuðbendur ok aktaumar, Fas. iii. 118; reki segl ofan, en a. allir slitni, 204; slitnuðu höfuðbendur ok aktaumar, Bær. 5, Edda (Gl.) That the braces were generally two may be inferred from the words við aktaum hvárntveggja hálf mörk, N. G. L. i. 199. metaph., sitja i aktaumum, to have the whole management of a thing; mun yor þat eigi greitt ganga ef þer erut einir í aktaumum, if you are alone in the management of it, 1sl. ii. 49; einir um hituna is now used in the same sense. (The Engl. yoke-lines, as aktaumar is sometimes interpreted (as in the Lat. transl. of the Ld.), are now called stjórntaumar. Aktaumr is obsolete. See 'Stones of Scotland,' tab. liv. sqq.)

AI- [A.S. eal-; Engl. all, al-; Germ. all-], a prefix to a great many nouns and participles, but only a few verbs, denoting thoroughly, quite, perfectly, completely, answering to Lat. omni- and Gr. παν- or παντο-. If sollowed by a u or v it sometimes changes into öl, e.g. ölúð, benignitas; olvzro, laetitia: ölteiti, bilaritas, is irregular, instead of alteiti. The prefixed particle al- differs from all-, which answers to Lat. per-, A.S.

eall-, Engl. very: v. the following compds. AI.A., ól., ólu, alið; pres. el, [Ulf. a single time uses the partic. alans = έντρεφόμενοs, and twice a weak verb alibs = σιτευτόs, a fatling. The word seems alien to other Teut. idioms, but in Lat. we find alere; cp. the Shetland word alie, to nourish.] Gener. to give birth to, nourish, support, etc.

I. to bear, esp. of the mother; but also of both parents; rarely of the father alone, to beget: born olu pau, they begat children, Rm. 12; pat bam er þau ala skal eigi arf taka, Grág. i. 178: of the father alone, enda eru born þan eigi arfgeng, er hann elr við þeirri konu, wbich be begets by that woman, 181; but esp. of the mother, to bear, give birth to; job ol Amma, Rm. 7; póra ól barn um sumarit, Eg. 166, Fms. iv. 32, i. 14; hon fær eigi alit barnit, Fas. i. 118. β. metaph. to produce, give rise to; en nú elr hvert bessara stafa níu annan staf undir sér, Skálda 162. to be born, begotten; born bau öll er alin eru fyrir jól, who are born, N.G. L. i. 377; the phrase, alnir ok úbornir, born and unborn, present and future generations, has now become aldir ok óbornir; eigu þau börn er þar alask (wbo are born there) at taka arf út hingat, Grag. i. 181; barn hvert skal fara til kirkju sem alit er, every child that is born, K.p.K. 1; ef barn elsk sva nær páskum, is born, 16. B. of animals (rarely), justus heitir forað, pat elsk (is engendered) i kviði eins dýrs, 655 xxx. 4. wurish, support, Lat. alere: 1. esp. to bring up, of children; the Christian Jus Eccl., in opposition to the heathen custom of exposing children, begins with the words, ala skal barn hvert er borit veror, every child that is born shall be brought up, K. A. ch. I. β. adding the particle upp; skal eigi upp ala, heldr skal út bera barn þetta, this bairn shall not be brought up, but rather be borne out (i. e. exposed to perish), Finnb. 112. to feed, give food to, barbour, entertain; ala gest ok ganganda, guests; ala burfamenn, the poor, D.I. in deeds of gift; en sá maor er par býr skal ala menn alla þá er hann hyggr til góðs at alnir sé, be sball barbour them, D.I.

akr-verk, n. field-work, barvest-work, Bret. 6, Fms. vi. 187, Stj. Ruth ii. 7 i. 169; ala hvern at ósekju er vill, to barbour, 200; Guð elr gesti (a proverb), God pays for the guests, Bs. i. 247; soft elr sjúkan, fever is the food of the sick; utanhrepps göngumenn skal enga ala, ok eigi gefa mat, hvárki meira né minna, gangrels of an outlying district shall none of them be harboured, nor bave meat given them, neither more nor less, Grag. i. 293, 117. of animals, to nourisb, breed; einn smásauð er hann ól heima í húsi sínu, one pet lamb which he had reared at home in his own house, Stj. 516; segir allæliligan, ok kvað verða mundu ágæta naut ef upp væri alinn, of a live calf, Eb. 318. 2. pass. to be brought up, educated; ólusk (grew up) i ætt þar, æstir kappar (or were born), Hdl. 18; alask upp, to be brought up; hence uppeldi, n. III, metaph, in such phrases as, ala aldr sinn, vitam degere, to pass one's days, Bard. 165: the phrase, ala e-t eptir e-m, to give one encouragement in a thing, bring one up in, esp. in a bad sense; ól hann eptir engum manni ódúðir, Joh. 625. 93: ala á mál, to persist in, urge on a thing; karl elt à malio (begs bard) at Gunnar mundi til hans fara, Sd. 172, Isl. ii. 133, 163:—the present phrase is, að ala e-t vid e-n, to bear a grudge against ...; and in a negative sense, ala ekki, to let bygones be bygones: ala onn fyrir, to provide for: a. ofund, sorg, um e-t, to grudge, feel pang (poët.), etc.

alaos-festr, ar, f. [obsolete alaor, alimentum, Yt. 13, v.l.], alaw term in the Icel. Commonwealth, viz. the eighth part of the sum fjörbaugt (lifemoney), amounting to an ounce, a fee to be paid by a convict in the Court of Execution (féránsdómr); if a convict, liable to the lesser outlawry, failed in paying off the alaosfestr, he thereby became a complete outlaw, ualandi; hence the name life-money or blood-money. It is thus defined: þar skal gjaldast mörk lögaura at féránsdómi, goða þeim er féránsdóminn nefndi; þat fé heitir fjörbaugr, en einn eyrir (ounce) þess fjár heitir a. ef þat fé (the alaðsf. or the whole fjörb.?) gelzt eigi, þá verði hann skógarmaðr úæll, Grág. i. 88; nú gelzt fjörbaugr ok a. þá skal dæma svá sekðarfé hans sem skógarmanns, 132: Njála uses the less classic form, aðalfestr (per metath.), Nj. 240; cp. Johnsonius (Lat. transl.), p. 529, note 8.

al-auon, f. devastation, pior. 233.

al-auor, adj. altogether waste, Bret. 168.

al-bata and al-bati, adj. ind. completely cured, quite well, Isl. ii. 469. (62) al-berr, adj., now allsberr, quite bare, stark-naked, metaph. manifest. Sturl. iii. 118.

al-bitinn, adj. part. bitten all over, Rd. 298.

al-bjartr, adj. quite bright, brilliant, Eluc. 10, Fas. i. 663.

al-blindr, adj. stone-blind, Post. 745. 87.

al-bloougr, adj. all-bloody, Nj. 62, Fms. i. 121, Isl. ii. 271.

al-bogi = alnbogi, elbow, v. ölnbogi and ölbogi.

al-breiðr, adj. of the full breadth of stuff; a. lérept, Jb. 348.

al-brotinn, adj. part. all-broken, sbattered, Fms. ii. 246.

al-brynjaör, part. cased in mail, Hkr. ii. 26, Fms. vii. 45, Fas. i. 91. al-búa, bjó, to fit out, furnish or equip completely, at albúa kirkju, N. G. L. i. 387; but spec. in part. albuinn, completely equipped, esp. of ships bound for sea [where bound is a corruption of boun, the old English and Scottish equivalent of buinn. Thus a ship is bound for sea or outward bound or homeward bound, when she is completely fitted and furnished for either voyage; windbound is a different word, where bound is the past part, of bind. Again, a bride is boun when she has her wedding dress on; v. below, búa and búask, which last answers to busk]: nú býst hann út til Islands, ok er þeir vóru albúnir, Nj. 10; ok er Björn var a. ok byrr rann á, Eg. 158, 194: a. sem til bardaga, all-armed for the battle, B. in the phrase, a. e-s, quite ready, willing to do a Fms. xi. 22. thing; hann kvaðst þess a., Nj. 100, Eg. 74: also with infin., a. at ganga hédan, ready to part, Fms. vii. 243.

al-buinn, ready, v. the preceding word.

al-bygor, part. completely inhabited, taken into possession, esp. used of the colonisation of Iceland; porbjörn súrr kom út at albygðu landi, after the colonisation was finished, Landn. 142, several times, Hrain. 3, Eg. 191, etc.

ALDA, u, f. a wave, freq. as a synonyme to bylgja, bára, etc.; it is esp. used of rollers, thus undiralda means the rollers in open sea in calm 2. metaph. in the phrase, skil ek, hvaðan a. weather, Edda (Gl.) sjá rennr undan (whence this wave rolls), hafa mér þaðan jafnan köld ráð komið, veit ek at þetta eru ráð Snorra goða, of deep, well-planned schemes, Ld. 284. Now used in many compos: öldu-gangr, m. unruly sea; öldu-stokkr, m. bulwarks of a ship, etc.

alda- and aldar-, v. öld, time, period; (poët. = people.)

al-dauði and aldauða, adj. ind. dead and gone, extinct, of families, races, esp. in the neg. phrase, vera enn ekki a., to be still in full vigour; ok óru (váru) eigi þeir a., Ísl. ii. 310; eptir dauða Haralds var a. hin forna ætt Danakonunga, died out with king H., Fms. xi. 206; aldauda eru þá Mosfellingar ef ér Sigfússynir skuluð ræna þá, Nj. 73; ella eru mjök a. várir foreldrar, Fms. vi. 37; opt finn ek þat, at mér er a. Magnús konungt, I often feel that for me king M. is dead and gone, Hkr. iii. 107. COMPD: aldauda-arir, m. a law term, an inheritance to which there is no beir alive, Ghl. 282, N.G.L. i. 49; cp. Hkv. Hjörv. 11, where aldaudraarfr is a mis-reading; the meaning of the passage hyggsk a. ráða is, that he would destroy them to the last man.

ALDIN, n., dat. aldini, [Dan. olden; a Scandinavian radical word (?)

aldr-lok, n. pl. close of life, death, Hkv. 2, 10.

aldr-mali, a, m, tenure for life, D, N., unknown in Icel., Dan, livsfæste.

aldr-nari, a, m. [A.S. ealdornere, nutritor vitae], poët, name of fire, not found in Ulf.], gener, fruit of trees, including apples, nuts. acoms, and sometimes berries; gras ok aldin ok jarðar ávöxtr allr, berbs, fruits, and earth's produce, K. b. K. 138; korni ok öllu aldini (dat.), K. A. 178; þá verðr þegar eitr í öllu aldini á því tré, Rb. 358. It originally meant wild fruits, nuts and acorns; hafði hann enga aðra fæðu en aldin skógar ok vatn. Hom. 105: af korninu vex rót, en vöndr af rótinni, en af vendi a., 677. 14; lesa a., to gather nuts, acorns, Dropl. 5; úskapligt er at taka

```
12
                a. af trénu fyr en fullvaxio er, unripe fruit, Al. 18; epli stór ok fíktrés aldin, great apples and the fruit of fig-trees, Stj. 325. Numb. xiii.
                         β. of garden fruit; allt þat a. er menn verja með görðum eðr gæzlu, Gbl. 544; akr einn harla góðr lá til kirkjunnar, óx þar it bezta aldini, the finest fruits. Fms. xi. 440.
                                                           y. metaph., blezað sé a. kviðar pins, the fruit of thy womb, Hom. 30. Luke i. 42.
                                                                          COMPD: aldinsgaror, m. a fruit-garden, orchard, Gbl. 543.
                  aldin-berandi, part. bearing fruit, Sks. 630.
                  aldin-falda, u, f. a lady with an old-fashioned bead-dress, Rm. 2. aldin-garor, m. garden, orchard, Lat. bortus; vingaroa, akra ok aldingarða, Stj. 441. 1 Sam, viii. 14, where aldingarða answers to olive-yards, Fms. iii. 194.
                  aldini, fruit, v. aldin.
                  aldin-lauss, adj. without fruit, sterile, barren; a. tré, Greg. 48.
                  aldinn, adj. [Engl. old; Germ. alt; Ulf. albeis = apxalos]. In Icel. only poët. The Scandinavians say gamall in the posit., but in compar, and superl. ellri, elztr, from another root ald: it very seldom appears in prose authors: v. Lex. Poët.; Sks. 630; cp. aldrænn. aldin-skogr, ar, m. wood of fruit-trees, Stj. Judg. xv. 5, where vingarðar, olivatré ok aldinskógar answer to the Engl. vineyards and olives.
                  aldin-tré, n. fruit-tree, Stj. 68.
aldin-vior, ar, m. fruit-trees, a poët, paraphrase, Fms. ix. 265, Sks. 105.
                  ALDR, rs, pl. rar, m. [Ulf. alps = alow or Lat. aevum; Engl. old; z (aldorman flaGerm. alter), age, life, period, old age, everlasting time.
                                                                                1. age, lifetime, Lat. vita, netas; hniginn at aldri, stricken in years, Eg. 187; hniginn & aldr, advanced in years, Orkn. 216; ungr at aldri, in youth, Fms. iii.
                 90; á léttasta aldri, in the prime of life, v. 71; á gamals aldri, old, iii.
                 71; & tvitugs, britugs aldri, etc.; halfbritugr at aldri, twenty-five years of age, Eg. 84; vera svá aldrs kominn, at that time of life, Fs. 4; hasa aldr til e-s, to be so old, be of age, Fms. i. 30; ala aldr, to live, v. ala, Fs.
                 146; allan aldr, during the whole of one's life, Ver. 45; lifa langan a., to enjoy a long life, Nj. 252.
                                                    2. old age, senectus; aldri orpinn, de-crepid, lit. overwhelmed by age, Fms. iv. 233, xi. 21; vera vid aldr, to be advanced in years.
                                             3. manns aldr is now used = generation; lifa marga manns aldra, to outlive many generations: sometimes denoting a period of thirty to thirty-three years.
                                                                4. seculum, aevum, an age, period; the time from the creation of the world is divided into six such ages (aldrar) in Rb. 134: cp. öld.
                                                            5. eternity; in the phrase, um aldr, for ever and ever; mun ek engan mann um aldr (no man ever) virda framar en Eystein konung, medan ek lifi, as long as I live, Fms. vii. 147, Th. 25; af aldri, from times of yore, D. N. ii. 501; um aldr ok æfi, for ever and ever, Gpl. 251, N. G. L. i. 41. aldraör, adj. elderly, Fms. i. 70, 655 xiv. B. I; öldruð kona, Greg. 27. aldr-bot, f. fame, bonour, Lex. Poët, aldr-dagar, m. pl. everlasting life; um a., for ever and ever, Vsp. 63.
                  aldr-fremd, f. everlasting bonour, Eluc. 51.
                  aldri qs. aldri-gi, [dat, from aldr and the negative nominal suffix
                 -gi; Dan. aldrig], with dropped neg. suffix; the modern form is aldrei; unusual Norse forms, with an n or t paragogical, aldregin, aldregit: aldregin, N.G.L. i. 8, Sks. 192, 202 B, Hom. ii. 150, Stj. 62 (in MS.
                 A. M. 227. Ed. aldri), O. H. L. 17, 79, and several times; aldregit, N. G. L. i. 356. The mod. Icel. form with ei indicates a contraction; the old aldri no doubt was sounded as aldrí with a final diphthong, which was later (in the 15th century) changed into ei. The contr. form aldri occurs over and over again in the Sagas, the complete aldregi or aldrigi is more rare, but occurs in Grág. i. 220 A, 321 A, ii. 167, etc.; aldrei appears now and then in the Edd. and in MSS. of the 15th century, but hardly earlier 1. temp., mun þik a. konur skorta, Ísl. ii. 250; never, nunquam:
                 koma aldregi til Noregs síðan, Nj. 9; verðr henni þat aldregi rétt, Grág.
                 ii. 214; ella liggr féit aldregi, in nowise, i. 220; sú sök fyrnist aldregi, 361; ok skal aldregi í land koma síðan, ii. 167.

2. loc. (rare), mörk var svá þykk upp frá tungunni at aldri (nowbere) var rjóðr í (= II. ever, unquam, after a preceding negative, hvergi), Sd. 170.
                 appears twice in the Völs. kviður; en Atli kveðst eigi vilja mund aldregi (eigi aldregi = never), Og. 23; hnékat ek af því til hjálpar þér, at þú værir pess verð aldregi (now, nokkurn tíma), not that thou ever hadst deserved it, B. following a comparative, without the strict notion of negation; verr en a. fyr, worse than ever before, Stj. 404; framar en a. fyr, l. c. Čod. A; meiri vesöld en áðr hafði hann aldregi þolat, greater misery than be ever before bad undergone, Barl. 196.
                                                      III. aldr' = aldri = semper; aldr' hefi ek frétt ..., I bave always beard tell that ..., in a verse in Orkn. 304.
                  aldr-lag, n. laying down of life, death, destruction, a poet, word, in the phrase, veroa e-m at aldrlagi, to bring to one's life's end, Fms. viii.
                 108, Al. 106; esp. in pl. aldrlög, exitium, Bret. 59, 66, 67.
```

```
sp. 57, Edda (Gl.)
 aldr-runar, f. pl. life-runes, charms for preserving life, Rm. 40.
 aldr-sattr, adi, on terms of peace for ever, D. N. in a law phrase, a. ok æfinsáttr. Fr.
 aldr-slit, n. pl. death, in the phrase, til aldrslita, ad urnam, Sturl. iii.
 aldr-stamr (perh. aldrscamr), adj. = fey, only in Akv. 42.
 aldr-tili, a, m. [cp. as to the last part, Germ. ziel], death, loss of life, exitium: rather poet.; or in prose only used in emphatic phrases:
hefir bó lokit sumum stöðum með aldrtila, bas ended fatally, Fms. viii.
153; ætla ek bær lyktir munu á verða, at vér munim a, hljóta af þeim konungi, be will prove fatal to our family, Eg. 19; mun ek þangað sækja heldr yndi en a. (an alliterative phrase), Bret, 36; údæmi ok a., 38:-the words, Acts ix. I, 'breathing out threatenings and slaughter,' are in the Icel. translation of the year 1540 rendered 'Saul blés ogn og aldrtila.' aldr-tjón, n. loss of life, Lex. Poët. aldr-tregi, a, m. deadly sorrow; etr sér aldrirega, Hm. 10.
 ald-rænn, adj. elderly, aged (rare), Lex. Poët.; hinn aldræni maor, Fms. vi. 65, but a little below aldraor; a. kona, Bs. i. 201, v. l. öldruð.
 aldur-maor, m. alderman, [A. S. ealdorman], Pd. 13.
 al-dyggiliga, adv. truly, with perfect fidelity, Hom. 135.
 al-dyggr, adj. faithful, Barl. 5.
 al-dæli, adj. very easy to treat, Jv. 24, Mag. 115.
 al-dell, adj. easy to deal with, gentle, Grett. 108; A and B dell. 2 ald sale al-eiga, u, f. a person's entire property, Gpl. 543, Hkr. ii. 344, iii. 141, Rus A COMPD: aleigu-mal, n. a suit involving a person's whole Bs ii 66.
property, Ghl. 550:-so also aleigu-sok, f., Hkr. ii. 163.
                                                                                  ul eth
 al-eyoa, u, f. devastation, esp. by fire and sword; gora aleyou, to turn into a wilderness, Fms. xi. 42, Hkr. iii. 141.
 al-eyőa, adj. ind. altogetber waste, empty, void of people; a. af mönnum, Hkr. i. 98, ii. 197; brennir ok görir a. landit, burns and makes the land an utter waste, Hkr. i. 39; sumir lagu úti a fjöllum, sva at a. voru bæirnir eptir, some lay out on the fells, so that the dwellings were utterly empty and wasted behind them, Sturl. iii. 75.
 al-eyoa, dd, to devastate, Karl. 370.
 al-faoir, m. father of all, a name of Odin, v. alfödur.
 al-far, n., better alfar [all], channel, B. K. 110.
 al-fari, adj. ind., now alfarinn; in phrases like fara, koma alfari, to start, set off for good and all, Fms. iii. 92, Bret. 80, Fas. i. 249; ríða í brott a., Nj. 112, Bs. i. 481; koma til skips a., Grág. ii. 75. [Probably an obsolete dat. from alfar.]
al-farinn, adj. part. worn out, very far gone, Stj. 201, of the kine of Pharaoh, 'ill-favoured and lean-flesbed,' Gen. xli. 3.

B. now = alfari.
 al-feginn, adj. very glad ('fain'), Lex. Poët.
 al-feigr, adj. very 'fey,' i.e. in extravagant spirits, in the frame of mind which betokens speedy death, a. augu, Eg. in a verse.
 alfr, alfheimr, etc., elves etc., v. alfr etc.
 al-framr, adj. (poët.) excellent, Lex. Poët.
 al-fríor, adj. very fair, Lex. Poët. al-frials, adj. quite free, Sks. 621.
 al-frjóvaðr, part. in full flower, Lex. Poët.
 alft, f. swan, v. álpt.
 al-fullr, adj. quite full, Greg. 26.
 al-fuinn, adj. quite rotten, Fms. vi. 164.
 al-færr, adj. quite fit, quite good, Vm. 177, v. ölforr. al-fært, n. of weather, fit for travelling, Sd. = fært. al-foor, m. father of all, the name of Odin as the supreme god in Scandinavian mythology, Edda i. 37 (Ed. Havn.) Now used (theol.) of God.
 al-gangsi and algangsa, adj. ind. quite common, current, Sks. 199, al-geldr, adj. part. quite gelded, of cattle, Grag. i. 503.
                                                                         B. now
also = giving no milk.
 al-gildi, n. a law term, full value, Ghl. 392.
                                                     COMPD: algildis-vitni,
n. 2 law term, lawful testimony, competent witness; defin., N.G.L. i. 211.
 al-gildr, adj. of full value, in a verse in Fs. 94; now common, opp. to hálfgildr, of balf value, or ógildr, valueless. al-gjafi, prob. a false reading, N. G. L. i. 347 = frjálsgjafi.
 al-glafta, adj. ind. stall-fed, of cattle, Isl. ii. 38.
al-gleymingr, m. [glaumr], great glee, great mirth, in the phrase, sia a algleyming, to be in great glee, to be very merry, Sturl. iii. 123. The Icel. now say, at komast i algleyming, to run high, to the highest point.

al-goor, adj. perfectly good, now used of God.

β. albeztr kostr, by
                                                           β. albeztr kostr, by far the best match (Germ. allerbester), Ld. 88. al-grar, adj. quite grey, porf. Karl. 424.
al-groinn, adj. part. perfectly bealed, Eluc. 57 al-green, adj. quite green, flourishing, Lex. Poet, al-gullinn, adj. (poët.) all-golden, Hým. 8.
al-gyldr, adj. all-gill, Vm. 52.
```

al-gors, d. to finish, of buildings, Hkr. iii. 180, Ld. 114. Metaph. to TN.G.L. i. 323 (in an Icel. transcript). The present declension is, nom. fulfil, Fms. iii. 49, Hom. 8, Stj. 18. Reflex. to become completed. Post. 656 B. 11. Part. algorr, perfect; perfectam fortitudinem is rendered by algörvan styrkleik, thorough strength, Fms. viii. (pref.), i. 96, Sks. 44, 274, Stj. 563, 114; hid algörvasta, 677. 7.

al-gorloga, adv. altogether, quite, Fms. ii. 42, Greg. 34, etc.

al-görleikr, now algörlegleikr, s, m. (theol.) perfectness, perfection, Stj. 21, Fms. x. 337, Rb. 316.

al-görr, adj. part. perfect, finished, v. algöra.

I. perfection, maturity, Stj. 376, Hom. 25. al-görvi, f. full dress [v. görvi, dress], Sks. 208.

al-heidinn, adj. altogether beathen; landit (Iceland) var a. nær hundradi vetra, the land was utterly beathen near a hundred (i. c. one hundred and twenty) winters, Landn. 322.

al-heilagr, adj. all-ballowed, N. G. L. i. 141.

1. completely whole, entire, Lat. integer, Stj. 439. al-heill, adj. I Sam. vii. 9 (wbolly), Sks. 604, translation from Lat. individua. perfectly bealthy, safe and sound, Fms. xi. 38, ii. 232, Magn. 516.

al-heilsa, u, f. complete restoration to bealth, Bs. i. 313, v.l.

al-henda, u. f. a metrical term, a subdivision of dróttkvætt, a metre baving two rbymed couplets in every line; if one of these be half rhyme it is called a. hin minni (the minor alhenda), if both be full rhymes it is a. meiri (complete alhenda), Edda (Ht.) 132, Sturl. ii. 56: thus bard-mula vard Skúli is a complete alhenda.

al-hending, f. = alhenda.

al-hendr, adj. used of a metre in alhenda, Edda 132; drápa alhend, Sturl. ii. 56.

al-hnepptr, adj. part. (metric.) an apocopate (hneppt) species of the metre drottkvætt with masculine rhymes, v. hnept and halfhnept. defined, Edda (Ht.), verse 78; it is called allneppt, where all the rhymes are masculine; but halfhneppt, where feminines and masculines are used al-hreinn, adj. quite pure, clean, Hom. 107.

al-huga and ölhuga or öluga, by eliding the b and changing the vowel through the following u, adj. ind. [hugr], wbole-bearted, in full earnest, Sturl. iii. 272, v.l.; ölhuga dost, sincere love, Greg. 17 al-hugat, alugat, or alogat, n. part. in real earnest, whole-hearted, baving made one's mind up; ef ber er bat alhugat, if thou be in earnest, Nj. 49; sodur hans var alogat at drepa David, bis father's heart was set on slaving David. Sti. 473. 1 Sam. xx. 33.

B. used substantively, on slaying David, Stj. 473. 1 Sam. xx. 33. serious matters; blanda hégóma við alhugat (now alvara), to blend trifles with serious things. y. adverb. steadfastly, earnestly; iorast a., to repent sincerely, Hom. 166; en ef þú sér at alogat (really) tekr fé þitt at vaxa, Sks. 34, 339; þá er hann alogat úsekr, really guiltless, 677. 9.

al-hugi and alogi, 2, m. earnest; betta er a. minn en engi hégómi, I am in full earnest, Isl. ii. 214; hvárt er bessa leitað með alhuga, in earnest, Eb. 130; er hitt heldr a. minn, I am determined, Fms. ii. 94; med enum mesta alhuga, with the most steadfast will, Hkr. i. 258, Fms. viii. 186. Bs. i. 732.

al-hugligr, adj. sincere; ekki þótti mér Ólafr frændi várr a., methought our kinsman Olaf was not quite sincere, Sturl. i. 81.

al-hungraör, adj. part. very much an-hungered, Barl. 200.

al-husa, 20, to 'bouse,' roof in, Fms. x. 153.

al-hvitr, adj. quite white, Fms. xi. 16, Stj. 260.

al-hysa, t, = alhúsa. Part. alhyst, when all the buildings are finished, in a complete state, Sturl, i. 68.

al-hfei, n. farm-buildings, bomestead, Gisl. 38, Bs. i. 144, Fas. iii. 15. al-hago, f. perfect ease, Sturl. i. 56, v. l. and dub.

al-hagr, adj. perfectly easy, smooth; a. tungubrago, a smooth, glib tongue, Skálda 170, Fas. ii. 65.

ali-, used of bousebold or tame animals in some compos: ali-björn, m. a tame bear, Grág. ii. 118, cp. Fms. vi. 297-307, Bs. i. 61. n. a domestic animal, cattle; alidýr þat sem vér köllum búsmala, bouselamb, Stj. 18, Finnb. 226, of a tame bear. ali-fé, n. fatlings, Matth. xxii. 4, in the transl. of 1540. ali-fiskr, m. fish fattened in a stew or fond, in the local name Alifiskalækr, m. the brook of fattened trout, Gpl. ali-fugl and -fogl, m. tame fowl, Stj. 560, pior. 79; öxn min ok ali-gas, f. a fattened goose, Fms. vi. alifoglar, Greg. 43. Matth. l.c. ali-karl, m. a nickname, cp. in familiar language fat carle, Sturl. i. 123. ali-sauor, m. a pet sbeep, Stj. 516. 2 Sam. xii. 3.

ALIN, f. A dissyllabic form alun appears in old poetry, v. Lex. Poët. In early prose writers a monosyllabic form öln prevails in nom. dat. acc. sing., D. I. i. 310. l. 22 (MS. of the year 1275), 314. l. 16 (MS. year 1250), 311, 312. l. 16, 313. l. 7, 89. l. 1. Nom. pl., a. the old, alnar; B. the later, alnir: the former in -ar, in D. I. i. 309 (a MS. of the year 1275), 310-312 (MS. year 1370), 313, 316. l. 19, 318. l. 15. The pl. in -ir, D. I. i. 89 sqq., in MSS. of the 13th and 14th centuries. In the contracted form aln- the simple radical vowel soon became a diphthongal á, viz. álnar, álnir, álnum, álna, and is at present so spelt and pronounced. We find an acute accent indeed in alna (gen. pl.), D. I. i. 313. l. 25 (MS. year 1275), and álnar, id. l. 7; álnom, l. 28; ölnum with changed vowel, acc. alin, gen. álnar; pl. nom. acc. álnir, gen. álna, dat. álnum. properly the arm from the elbow to the end of the middle finger [Gr. whern, Lat. ulna, cp. A.S. el-boga, Engl. el-bow, etc.]; almost obsolete, but still found in the words ölbogi qs. öln-bogi, 'elbow,' and úlf-liðr, prop. uln- or ölnlior, wrist, commonly pronounced unl-lior [false etymol., v. Edda, p. 17]; cp. Isl. biods, ii. 10. where tungl (lung) and unl-rhyme. Freq. in poetry in such compounds as alun-leygr, -brandr, ölun-grjót, alnar-gim, alin-leygr, the standing poët. name of gold and gems being ignis or lapis eubiti. II. mostly metaph.: 1. an ell, [Ulf. aleina; A. S. eln; Engl. ell; O. H. G. elina; Dan. alen; Lat. ulna, cp. cubitum]; the finger, arm, foot were the original standards for measure. The primitive ell measured the length from the elbow to the point of the second finger, and answered to about half a yard Engl. = 18 inches. The Icel, ell before the year 1200 measured just half a yard. About this year, by a law of bishop Paul, the ell was doubled into a stika, a stika being precisely = two ells = an Engl. ell of that time. To prevent the use of bad measure, a just and lawful stika (yard) was marked on the walls of the churches, esp. that at Thingvellir, as an authorised standard, Pals S. ch. 9, Bs. i. 135, D. I. i. 309, 316, Jb. Kb. 26; ensk lérept tyeggia álna. English linen of two ells measure, id.; bat er mælt, at at graftar kirkju hverri skal mæla stiku lengd, þá er rétt sé at hafa til álna máls, ok megi menn þar til ganga ef á skilr um álnar, 309. During the whole of the 15th century the Icel, trade was mainly in British hands; thus the Engl. double ell probably prevailed till the end of the 15th or beginning of the 16th century. The Hanse Towns ell = 21 1 inches was then introduced, and abolished in the year 1776, when the Dan. ell = 24 inches came into use. At present the Hanse Towns ell is called Islenzk alin (Icel. ell), and the original half-yard ell is quite obsolete; cp. Jón Sigurðsson in D. I. i. 306-308, and Pál Vidal. s. v. alin. 2. a unit of value, viz. an ell (half-yard measure) of woollen stuff (vaðmál); the vaðmál (Halliwell wadmal, Engl. woadmal, Orkn. and Shetl. wadmaal and vadmel) was in Icel, the common medium of payment, whence an ell became the standard unit of value or property, whether in land or chattels; 120 ells make a bundred, v. that word. In D. I. i. 316 we are told that, about the year 1200, three ells were equal in value to one ounce of ordinary silver, whence the expression priggja alna eyrir (a common phrase during the 13th century). The value of the ell of vaomal, however, varied greatly; during the 11th and 12th centuries six ells made an ounce, D. I. i. 88. In Norway we find mentioned niu, ellifu álna aurar (nine, eleven ells to an ounce). In Grag. (Kb.) ii. 192, § 245, it is said that, about the year 1000, four ells in Icel. made an ounce, and so on; vide Dasent, Essay in 2nd vol. of Burnt Njal., and Pál Vidal. s. v. alin. álnar-borð, n. a board an ell long, N.G.L. i. 100. álnar-breiðr, álnar-kefli, n. a staff an ell long, adj. an ell broad, Fas. ii. 118. Grag. ii. 339, Ld. 318. Sinar-langr, adj. ell-lor Sinar-tfund, f. tithe of the value of an ell, K. A. 100. álnar-langr, adj. ell-long, Grág. ii. 359. álnar-virði. álna-sök, f. action for bad n. equal in value to an ell, K. A. 194. measure, Grag. i. 472.

al-jafn, adj. quite equal, 677. 12, 655 A. 2.

al-járnaör, adj. part. sbod all round, sbod on all four feet, Mag. 5. alka, alca, the awk, v. álka.

al-keypt, n. part. dearly bought, in a metaph. sense, Fms. ix. 302, Eb. 266, Glum. 365, = fullkevpt.

al-kirkja, u, f. a parisb church, Pm. 41.

al-klæonaor, m. a full suit of clothes, Nj. 73, Eg. 518, Bs. i. 655, 876. al-kristinn, adj. completely christianised, Fms. i. 279, Hkr. i. 259.

al-kristnaör, part. id., Hkr. ii. 178, Fms. x. 273.

a. of a thing or event, notorious, universally al-kunna, adj. ind. known; sem 2. er ordit, Fms. xi. 201; en sem vinátta þeirra görðist 2., but when their friendship was noised abroad, Hkr. ii. 281. B. of a person. knowing, fully informed; unz 2., until I know the whole, Vtkv. 8, 10, 12.

al-kunnigr, adj. notorious, Hkr. iii. 26, Stj. Gen. iv. 10, 655 xxxi. 1, Fms. vii. 5, Hkr. ii. 328.

al-kunnr, adj. id., Fms. v. 40.

al-kyrra, adj. ind. completely calm, tranquil, Fms. xi. 72.

ALL- may in old writers be prefixed to almost every adjective and adverb in an intensive sense, like Engl. very, Lat. per-, Gr. 81a-, Sa-. In common talk and modern writings it is rare (except after a negative), and denotes something below the average, viz. tolerably, pretty well, not very well; but in the Sagas, something capital, exceeding. In high style it may perhaps be used in the old sense, e. g. allfagrt ljós oss birtist bratt, a transl. of the Ambrosian hymn, Aurora lucis rutilat. alla ju ua The instances in old writers are nearly endless, e.g. all-annt, n. adj. very eager, Fms. ii. 41; ironically, 150. all-apr, adj. very barsb, v. apr. all-auosottligt, n. adj. very easy, Fs. 40. all-apr, adj. very sore, auöveldliga, adv. very easily, Fms. iv. 129. all-auöveldligr, adj. very easy, Fms. v. 331. all-auoveldr, adj. id., Fbr. 158: neut. as adv., Hkr. ii. 76. all-ágætr, adj. very famous, Fms. ii. 76. alláhyggjusamliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very careful, Fms. vi. 184. ákafilga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very bot, impetuous, Hkr. i. 234, ii. 32. all-ákaft, adj. very fast, Nj. 196. all-ákæft, adv. very likely, Fær.

all-ástúðligt, 🕆 all-armöislítill, adj. very timid, Fms. vi. 217. n. adj. very bearty, intimate, Fms. ii. 20. all-banvænn, adj. very all-beinn, adj. very bospitable, likely to prove mortal, Orkn. 148. Fms. ii. 84, Eb. 286: neut. as adv., Fær. 259. all-beiskr, adj. very all-bort, n. adj. very manifest, Lex. barsb, bitter, Sturl. iii. 167. all-bitr, adj. very biting, sbarp, Sks. 548. all-bitrligr, adj. of a very sharp appearance, Vigi. 20. all-bjartr, adj. very bright, Fms. viii. 361. all-bjugr, adj. very much bent, curved, Ölkofr. 39. all-blar, adj. very blue, Glum. 394. all-blibliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very blitbely, kindly, Fær. 132. all-blior, adj. very mild, amiaall-bráðgörr, adj. very soon mature, Eb. ble, Sd. 158, Fms. i. 202. all-bráðliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very bastily, Orkn. 72. bráor, adj. very bot-beaded, Njaro. 370: neut. as adv. very soon, Fms. xi. 51: dat. pl. all-bráðum, as adv. very suddenly, 139. all-brosligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very funny, laughable, Fms. iii. 113. alldasigr, adj. very sluggish, Lex. Poët. all-digr, adj, very big, stout; metaph. puffed up, Nj. 236. all-djarfliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very boldly, Fms. ii. 313, Orkn. 102. all-djupsettr, adj. very deep, all-drengiliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very bold, thoughtful, Bret. 158. all-dræmt, n. adj. very boastfully, from dramb, gallant, Lv. 110. superbia, (the modern word is dræmt = slowly, sluggishly); peir létu a. yfir sér, boasted, Sturl. ii. 56. MS. Mus. Brit. 1127; Cod. A. M. has allvænt, prob. wrongly. all-dyggr, adj. very doughty, Lex. Poët. dýrr, adj. very dear, Fms. iii. 159. all-eiguligr, adj. very worth baving, Sd. 146. all-eina (theol.), á Guð alleina (a hymn), alone: all-einaröliga, adv. and -ligr, Hkr. iii. 339 (in a spurious chapter). adj. very sincere, candid, open, Ld. 334. all-eldiligr and -elliligr, adj. of a very aged appearance, Fms. iii. 125. all-fagr, ad fair, Orkn. 296 old Ed.: neut. as adv. very fairly, Sturl. i. 72. all-fagr, adj. very bright, all-fast, n. adj. very firmly, steadfastly, Eb. 290, Fær. 259. all-fastoror, adj. very 'wordfast,' very true to bis word, Fms. vii. 120. all-fálátr, adj. very taciturn, close, Fas. iii. 408. all-fáliga, adv. on very cold terms, all-fámáligr, adj. very close, of very few words, Fms. Sturl. iii. 208. all-famennr, adj. followed by very few people, Sturl. iii. 85, iv. 366. ii. 122, Magn. 386. all-far, adj. very few, Eg. 512, Ld. 272, Isl. ii. 356: neut. on very cold terms, Fms. xi. 55. all-fáræðinn, adj. of all-feginn, adj. very 'fain,' glad, Eg. very few words, Fms. iv. 312. 240, Ld. 330. all-feginsamliga, adv. very 'fain,' gladly, Eg. 27. all-feigligt, adj. baving the mark of death very plain on one's face, v. feigr, Sturl. iii. 234. all-feitr, adj. very fat, Fms. x. 303. ferliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very rudely, Fms. iv. 263. all-femikill, adj. very costly, Ld. 208. all-fjarri, adv. very far, far from, metaph., Hkr. ii. 246; eigi 2., not improper, Fbr. 15. all-fjartekit, part. very all-fjölgan, adj. acc. very numerous (does far-fetched, Skálda 166. not exist in nom.), Sks. 138 A. all-fjölkunnigr, adj. very deeply versed in sorcery, Fms. ii. 175, Fas. i. 412. all-fjölmeor and -mennr, adj. followed, attended by very many people, much frequented, Eg. 724, 188, Hkr. i. 215: n. sing. in very great numbers, Fms. i. 36. all-fjölrætt, n. adj. very beedful, much talked of, Nj. 109. all-forsjáll, adj. very prudent, Hom. 115. all-framr, adj. very famous, Lex. Poët.; very far forward, Grett.161 A. all-frekliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very daringly, all-frekr, adj. too eager, too daring, Fms. vii. impudently, Fas. i. 24. 164. all-friöliga, adv. in very great peace, Lex. Poët. all-fríðr, adj. very beautiful, Eg. 23, Hkr. i. 225, ii. 354, Fms. i. 2. all-frjáls, all-fróðligr, adj. and -liga, adj. very free, independent, v. alfrjáls. all-fróðr, adj. very learned, Sks. adv. very wise, learned, Sks. 306 B. all-frægr, adj. very famous, Fms. ii. 324, Hkr. i. 232, ii. 187, all-frækiliga, adv. and -ligr, adj., and all-frækn, adj. and -liga, adv. very bold, boldly, Isl. ii. 267, Hkr. i. 239, Fms. i. 121. all_ fúss, adj. and -liga, adv. very eager, eagerly, Eg. 488, Fms. xi. 89. all-fýsiligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very desirable, Eg. 19, 468. alĺfölr, adj. very pale, Lex. Poët. all-gagnsamr, adj. very profitable, all-gamall, adj. very old, Hkr. i. 34. gainful, Isl. ii. 56. allgegniliga and -gegnliga, adv. very fittingly, Sturl. ii. 63. allgemsmikill, adj. very wanton, frolicsome, Sturl. ii. 57. and -gorviligr, v. -gorla, -gorviligr. all-gestrisinn, adj. very bosall-geysilegr, adj. and -liga, adv. very impetuous, pitable, Háv. 40. all-gildliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. with a very grand air, Grett. 121. all-gildr, adj. very grand, Lex. Poët. all-giptusamliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very lucky, Fms. x. 53. all-glaðliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very joyfully, joyful, Fms. iii. 143, Lv. 55. adj. very joyful, Eg. 163, Ld. 176. all-gleymr, ad all-glaðr, all-gleymr, adj. very gleeful, mirthful, in high spirits, [glaumr], verda a. vid e-t, Sturl. iii. 152, Eb. 36. all-glasiliga, adj. and -ligr, adv. very shiny, Eb. 34, Fas. iii. 626, Fms. all-glöggsær, adj. very transparent, clearly visible, metaph., ix. 430. porf. Karl. 380. all-gloggt, n. adj. very exactly, Hkr. iii. 253, Fas. all-goomannliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very kindly, kind, iii. 13. Mag. 6. all-góðr, adj. very good, Nj. 222, Eg. 36, 198. groioliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very easy, easily, Eb. 268: neut. as adv., Eb. all-grimmliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very grimly, fiercely, Fas. iii. l.c.

samliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very suspiciously, Isl. ii. 364. göfugr, adj. very distinguished, Eg. 598, Bs. i. 60. all-görla, adv. very clearly, precisely, Hkr. iii. 133, Fms. xi. 15. all-görviligr, adj. very stout, manly, Fms. ii. 28. all-hagsteor, adj. with a very fair wind, Sturl. iii. 109. all-haroligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very bard, stern, Fas. i. 382. all-haror, adj. very bard, stern, Fms. i. 177: n. sing. severely, Ni. 165, Grág. i. 261. all-haskasamligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very bazardous, Fms. v. 135. all-heiðinn, adj. quite beatben, Fs. 89 (in a verse). all-heilagr, adj. very sacred, Lex. Poët. all-heimskliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very foolish, frantic, Hkr. ii. 190, Fas. iii. 293. all-heimskr. adj. very silly, stupid, Eg. 376, Grett. 159. all-heppinn, adj. very all-heröimikill, adj. very broad-shouldered, lucky, bappy, Lex. Poët. Eg. 305. all-hermannliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very martial, Fms. xi. 233. all-hjaldrjugr, adj. very gossipping, chattering, Lv. 57: all-hogliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very gently, neut. as adv., Vápn. 10. all-holeitr and -haleitr, adj. very sublime, Fms. xi. 240, vi. 274. all-hor and -har, adj. very bigb, tall, v. -har. Hom. 23. hratt, n. adj. in all speed, Lex. Poët. all-hraustliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very bravely, Fms. viii. 289, Eb. 34. all-hraustr, adj. very valiant, all-hreystimannliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very Fms. viii. 267. all-hrumliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very invaliantly, Fms. xi. 95. firmly from age, Fas. ii. 91. all-hræddr, adj. very much afraid, Fbr. all-hræðinn, adj. very timid, Fms. vi. 155. all-hugsjúkr. adj. very grieved, beart-sick, Hkr. i. 243, Fms. vi. 133. all-hvass, adj. of the wind, blowing very sbarp, Fms. ix. 20, Lex. Poët. all-hyggiligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very carefully, Fas. iii. 610. all-hyrliga. adv. and -ligr, adj. very blandly, with a very bright face, Fas. iii. 636. all-heodiligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very ridiculous, Finnb. 312. allhældreginn, adj. walking very much on one's beels, dragging the beels very much in walking, of an aged or beggarly person, Band. 9. hongliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very softly, meekly, Fms. xi. 389. hoelinn, adj. very bragging, Lex. Poet. all-idinn, adj. very diligent, laborious, Bs. i. 278. all-illa, adv. and -illr, adj. very badly, bad, wicked, Nj. 242, cp. illa; ill-willed, Eg. 542: compar., vera allver um, to be worse off, Nj. 221 (Ed. allvant); angry, Lv. 145; disgraceful, Eg. 237; unfortunate, Sturl. ii. 47. all-jafnlyndr, adj. very calm, even-temall-kaldr, adj. very cold, Vápn. 21. pered, Fms. vi. 287. kappsamliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. with very much zeal, liberally, Hkr. i. 271; veita a., of bospitality, Ld. 292; mæla a., frankly, peremptorily, all-kappsamr, adj. very eager, vebement, Eg. 187. karlmannliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very manfully, Fms. x. 141. kaupmannliga, adv. in a very businesslike, tradesmanlike way, Fms. v. all-katligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very funny, Grett. 112. kåtr, adj. very joyful, Nj. 18, Eg. 44, 332. all-keppinn, adj. very snappish, Lcx. Poët. all-kerskiligr and -keskiligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very sarcastic, biting, Sturl. ii. 196. all-klókr, adj. very sbrewd, Hkr. iii. 317. all-knaliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very stoutly, vigorously, Rd. 312. all-kostgæfiliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very earnestly, in a very painstaking way, Stj. all-kostigr, adj. very excellent, Lex. Poët. all-kviklátr, adj. very quick, lively, Ld. 270. all-kynliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very strangely, strange, Isl. ii. 58, Fms. ii. 227, Grett. 160. all-kyrrligr, adj. very quiet, tranquil, Hav. 49. all-kterr, adj. very dear, beloved, Eg. 139, Fms. i. 48; very fond of, Hkr. i. 194: neut., Eg. 116, of mutual love. all-langr, adj. very long, Háv. 49. alllaust, n. adj. very loosely, Fms. xi. 103. all-lagr, adj. very low, short of stature, Fbr. 68. all-lengi, adv. very long, K. p. K. 158. léttbrunn, adj. of very brightened, cheerful countenance, Ld. 94. léttiliga, adv. very lightly, Fas. iii. 612. all-léttmælt, n. adj., vera a. um e-t, to speak in a very lively way, Fms. iv. 261. all-léttr, adj. very light (in weight), Fas. iii. 487. all-likliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. in very agreeable, courteous terms, Fas. i. 84. all-likligr, adj. very likely, Fas. ii. 247, Sks. 669. all-likr, adj. very like, Fas. iii. 579, Sd. 160, all-litilfjörligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very puny, prop. bav-Korm. 142. ing little life in one, Hav. 54. all-litill, adj. very little, Fær. 268: n. sing. all-litt, as adv. very little, Nj. 108, 130, Korm. 172; poorly, Grett. 116. all-makligr, adj. and all-lyginn, adj. very given to lying, Fbr. 157. -liga, adv. very deserving, fitting, Sturl. iii. 127, Bjarn. 22. all-mannfatt, n. adj. with very few people, Gisl. 31. all-mannhættr, adj. very dangerous, Fas. iii. 34. all-mannskæör, adj. very full of manskathe, very murderous, Fms.ii. 512. all-mannvænligr, adj. a very promising man, Fms. iv. 254. all-mannvænn, adj. a man of very great promise, Hkr. ii. 182. all-margliga, adv. very affably, Sturl. iii. 27. all-margmæltr, part. very talkative, Sturl. ii. 179. all-margr, adj. very numerous, pl. very many, Nj. 32, Grág, ii. 176, Sks. 328, Gpl. 329. all-margrætt, n. all-málugr, adj. very adj. part. very much spoken of, Fms. viii. 275. loquacious, Hkr. iii. 152, 655 xi. 2. all-mattfarinn, adj. very much worn out, with very little strength left. Fas. ii. 356. all-máttlítill, adj. very weak, Fms. i. 159. all-meginlauss, adj. very void of strength, all-mikilfengligr, adj. very bigb and migbly, very imall-mikill, adj. very great, Isl. ii. 269, Nj. 193, Eg. 29, Fms. xi. 103. posing, Fs. all-grimmr, adj. very cruel, fierce, Hkr. iii. 167. all-grun- 🖁 39: neut. as adv. greatly, Fms. i 24, vii, 1190 all-mikilmannligaall-misjam, adj. very variously, unadv. very nobly, Sturl. i. 33. favourably, in such phrases as, mæla a. um e-t, there were very different stories about the matter, leggja a. til, ganga a. undir, taka a. á, Eg. 242, Hkr. ii. 122, Fms. i. 86, vii. 110, Ld. 166. all-mjór, adj. very slim, slender, narrow, Hkr. iii. 117, Gbl. 173. all-mjök, adv. very much, Nj. 134, Ld. 196, Eg. 19; féllu þá a. menn, in very great numbers, Fms. all-myrkr, adj. very dark, Fms. ix. 23. all-mæðiliga, adv. with very great effort, beavily, Fms. ix. 16. all-nauðigr, adj. and -liga, adv. very reluctant, unwilling, Grett. 153; a. staddr, dangerously, Fms. v. 212. all-nainn, adj. very near, nearly related, Sks. all-nattforull, adj. very much given to wandering by night, Lex. Poët. all-níðskárr, adj. of a poet, given to mocking, satirical verse, [nið and skáld (?)], Fms. ii. 7. all-nog, adv. very abundantly, all-neer, adv. very near, Fms. vii. 289; metaph., lagoi a. at, pretty nearly, well-nigh, Fs., Sks. 684 B. all-nærri, adv. very near, Ld. 202, Fas. iii. 339. all-opt, adv. very often, Anecd. 38, Gbl. 169 all-orofatt, n. adj. in the phrase, gora a. um, to be very short of words as to, Bjarn. 31. all-ogurligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very frightful, all-6lmliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very furiously, Fas. iii Edda 41. 546, Bárð. 177. all-ottalaust, n. adj. with very little to fear, Eg all-ramskipaör, adj. part. very strongly manned, Fms. iii. 371, v. l. all-raudr, adj. very red, Ld. 182. all-radligr, adj. very ex 13. pedient, advisable, Grett. 145. all-reibiligr, adj. looking very wrathall-reior, adj. very wroth, angry, Edda 57, Nj. 135, ful, Fms. iv. 161. all-rikmannligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very grand, pompous, magnificent, Fms. i. 213. all-rikr, adj. very powerful, Fms. i. 115. all-ryrliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very feebly, puny, Fbr. 28. all-röskliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very smart, brisk, Fms. viii. 317. all-sannligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very likely, 'sootblike,' Fms. iv. 270. all-sattgjarnliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very placable, of mild disposition, all-seinn, adj. very slow, Bs. i. 192: neut. as adv Sturl. iii. 288. slowly, Grett. 151 A. all-sigrsæll, adj. very victorious, baving very good luck in war, Hkr. i. 28. all-skammr, adj. very sbort, very scant, Nj. 264: neut. substantively, a very sbort way, Finnb. 324; sbort distance, all-skapliga, adv. very fittingly, properly, Grett. 120. Fms. iv. 320. all-skapværr, adj. of a very gentle, meek disposition, Sturl. all-skapbungt, n. adj., vera a., to be in a very gloomy, depressed state of mind, Fms. iv. 26. all-skarpr, 2dj. very sbarp, Lex. Poët. all-skeinuhættr, adj. very dangerous, vulnerable, Sturl. ii. 139. all-skemtiligr, adj. very amusing, Sturl. ii. 77. all-skillitill, adj. very slowwitted, dull, Sturl. i. 89. all-skjallkænliga, adv. [skjalla, to flatter], very coaxingly, Grett. 131 A. all-skjótt, n. adj. as adv. very soon all-skrautligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very smart, splendid, Nj. 236. Fas. ii. 366, Mag. 11. all-skygn, adj. very sbarp-sighted, Hrafn. 33. all-akyldr, adj. bound to, very obligatory; neut. = bounden duty, Sks. 484; deserved, Gpl. 61:

β. nearly related, near akin, Fms. xi. 75. all-skyndiliga, adv. very quickly, Blas. 40. all-skynsamliga, adv. very judiciously, Sturl. iii. 161. all-skyrugr, adj. all curd-besprent, Grett. 107 A. all-sköruliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very frankly boldly, dignified, Sturl. iii. 39, Fms. ix. 5, Ld. 94 C, 226, Bs. i. aljaliga, adv. very slowly, sluggishly, Grett. 101 A. all-smár, adj very small, Fms. v. 55, xi. 61. all-snarpliga, adv. and -ligr, adj very sbarply, smartly, Fms. viii. 346. all-snarpr, adj. very sbarp, all-snemma, adv. very early, Fms. ii. 223. Fms. i. 38, Nj. 246. all-snjalle, adj. very sbrewd, clever, Fms. viii. 367. all-snúðula. adv. very quickly, Lex. Poët. all-snæfr, adj. very brisk, id. snofurmannligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very brisk and energetic looking of a man, Fms. xi. 79. all-spakliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very mildly. moderately, wisely, Hkr. ii. 41. all-spakr, adj. very gentle, wise, all-starsynn, adj. who stares very bard at a thing, Fms. vi. 298. looking fixedly upon, Fms. vi. 203. all-sterkliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very briskly, strongly, Ld. 158, Fas. iii. 612. all-sterkr, adj. very strong, Hkr. i. 238, Eg. 285; Isl. ii. 461 (very vebement); as a pr. name. Fms. iii. 183. all-stilliliga, adv. very calmly, in a very composed manner, Ld. 318. all-stirör, adj. very stiff, Háv. 46. all-stór-höggr, adj. dealing very bard blows, Fms. i. 171. all-stórliga, adv. very baugbtily, Hkr. ii. 63, Ld. 168. all-stórmannliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very munificently, nobly, Fas. iii. 45; baughtily, Sd. 146. allstororor, adj. using very big words, Eg. 340, Ld. 38 (very boisterous). all-storr, adj. very great, metaph. big, puffed up, Ld. 318; dat. all-storum, as adv. very largely, Edda 32. all-strangr, adj. very rapid, Lex. all-styggr, adj. very ill-bumoured, cross, Grett. 103 A. styrkliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very stoutly, Stj. 402. all-styrkr, adj. all-svangr, adj. very bungry, Lex. Poet. very strong, Fms. i. 177. all-svinnliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very wisely, prudently, wise, Fas. i. 95, ii. 266. all-sættfúss, adj. very placable, peace-loving, very willing to accept an atonement, Sturl. iii. 19. all-scemiliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very seemly, decorous, bonourable, Hkr. i. 215, Isl. ii. 163. all-tiginn, adj. very princely, Lex. Poët. all-tillátsamr, adj. very indulgent, lenient, pord. 12. all-tiorætt, n. adj. very much talked of, work, Fms. xi. 377. all-torfyndr, adj. very bard to find, Fms. vii. all-torfært, n. adj. very bard to pass, cross, Eg. 546. 356. torsott, n. adj. part. very difficult to reach, Eg. 546. all-tortryggiliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very suspiciously, Sturl. ii. 47. all-torveldligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very difficult, Str. all-trauor, adj. very slow, unwilling, Fms. xi. 39. all-tregr, adj. very tardy, Fær. 114, Bárð. 178. all-trur, adj. very true, Fms. vi. 377. all-tryggr. adj. very trusty, Hkr. iii. 167. all-tvítugr, false reading, instead of eigi alls t., not quite twenty, Sturl. i. 181. all-undarligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very odd, wonderful, Fms. ii. 150. all-ungr, adj. very young, Eg. 268, Fms. i. 14, Ld. 274. all-úbeinskeyttr, adj. shooting very badly, Fins. ii. 103. all-úblíðr, adj. very barsh, unkind, Fas. ii. all-úbragðligr, adj. very ill-looking, Sturl. iii. 234. all-údæll, adj. very spiteful, untractable, Sturl. i. 99. all-ufagr, adj. very ugly, metaph., Fms. iii. 154. all-ufimliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very awkwardly, Fas. all-uframliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very backward, sby, timid, ii. 543. Fbr. 38 C. all-úfríðr, adj. very ugly, Fms. xi. 227. all-úfrýnn, adj. very sullen, 'frowning,' sour, Eg. 525. all-úfrægt, adj. very inglorious, Fms. iv. 259. all-úglaðt, adj. very gloomy, sad, Hkr. iii. 379. all-úhægr, adj. very difficult, Eg. 227. all-úhöfðingligr. adj. very low-looking, very plebeian, Finnb. 222. all-úkátr, adj. very sorrowful, Edda 35, Eg. 223, Fms. i. 37. all-uknár, adj. very weak of frame, Grett. 119 A, very badly knit; Bs. i. 461 (of boys). úkonungligr, adj. very unkingly, Fms. viii. 158. all-úkunnigr, adj. quite unknown, Ísl. ii. 412. all-úlífligr, adj. very unlikely to live, Hkr. all-ulikliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very unlikely, Gisl. 24, Sd. 123, Finnb. 310. all-úlíkr, adj. very unlike, Glúm. 364. ulyginn, adj. not at all given to lie, trutbful, Fbr. 157. all-úmáttuliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. weakly, very weak, tender, Fms. iv. 318. úráðinn, adj. part. very 'unready' (cp. Ethelred the 'unready'), undeall-úráðliga, adv. very unadvisedly, rashly, Odd. 12 cided, Lv. 9. all-usannligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very untruthful, unjust; all-úsáttfúss, 2dj. very implacable, unalso, unlikely, Fms. vii. 141. willing to come to terms, Sturl. iii. 275. all-uskyldr, adj. very strange to, not at all bound to ..., Eg. 10. all-uspakr, adi. very unruly, Sturl. ii. 61. all-usvass, adj. very uncomfortable, of weather, cold and rainy, Bs. i. 509. all-úsýnn, adj. very uncertain, doubtful, Glúm. 358, Sturl. i. 105. all-useligr, adj. of very poor, wretched appearance, Niorst. 109. all-uvinsæll, adj. very unpopular, Fms. iv. 369, Fas. iii. all-tivisliga, adv. very unwisely, Nidrst. 6. all-úvænliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. of very unfavourable prospect, Fas. ii. 266; n. adj. very all-úvænn, adj. very ugly, Fas. i. 234; unpromising, Grett. 148 A. very unpromising, unfavourable, Isl. ii. 225: neut. as 2dv. unfavourably, Fms. xi. 134. all-ubarfr, adj. very untbrifty, very unprofitable, something that had better be prevented. Eg. 576, Hkr. ii. 245. 1atr, adj. very difficult, bard to please, Fms. vi. 387. all-vandall-vandliga, adv. with very great pains, exactly, carefully, Sks. 658 B. all-vant, n. adj., vera a. um e-t, to be in a very great strait, Nj. 221. all-varfærr, adj. very careful, solicitous, Eg. 63. all-vaskligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very brisk, smart, gallant, Hkr. i. 104; compar. v. alvaskligr. all-vaskr, adj. very brisk, gallant, Fms. viii. 226. all-vándr, adj. very bad, of all-vápndjarfr, adj. very bold, daring clothes, much worn, Pm. 11. in arms, Hkr. iii. 63. all-veorlitio, n. adj. very calm, with little wind, Fms. vi. 360. all-vegliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very grand, princely, nobly, Fms. i. 20, Eg. 332, Hkr. i. 15. all-vel, adv. very well, Nj. 12, Eg. 78, 198; compar. albetr, v. alvel. all-vesall, adj. very puny, wretched, Nj. 97. all-vesalliga, adv. very wretchedly, Ölk. 35. vesalmannliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. id., 1sl. ii. 416. all-vesæll, adj. very miserable, base, vile, Nj. 97. all-vi adj. very friendly, amicable, Sturl. ii. 168. all-vingjarnliga, adv. and -ligr, all-vingott, n. adj. on all-vinsæll, adj. very popular, used of very friendly terms, Fbr. 129. a man blessed with many friends, Fms. i. 184, ii. 44, Orkn. 104 old Ed. all-virouligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very worthy, dignified, Fms. x. 84, all-vitr, adj. very wise, Sks. 29 B puperl.) all-vitrliga, Bs. i. 83. adv. very wisely, Fas. ii. 66. all-viða and all-vitt, n. adj. very widely, Hkr. iii. 141, Lex. Poët. all-vigliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. in a very warlike manner, Fms. ix. 488, F2s. ii. 112. all-vígmannliga, adv. all-vigmoor, adj. quite wearied out with very martially, Fas. iii. 150. fighting, Introd. to Helgakviða (Sæm.) all-viss, adj. very wise, sure, Sks. 520, Lex. Poët.: neut. to a dead certainty, Lex. Poët. all-vænliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very promising, bandsome, Glum. 349, Fms. v. 260, Fbr. 114. all-vænn, adj. id., Clem. 24, Bs. i. 340: neut., þykja a. um, to be in high spirits, Isl. ii. 361; make much of, Fms. ii. 76; as adv. favourably, Fms. iv. 192. all-vörpuligr, adj. of a very stout, stately Fas. iii. 627. all-pakkligr, adj. very pretty, = pekkiligr, Lex. Poët. all-pakksamliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very thankfully, Fms. i. 120, Ld. 298. all-parfliga, adv. very thrifily, very pressingly; bidja a., to beg very bard, Edda 45. all-parfr, adj. very thrifty, Lex. Poet. allpettr, adj. very crowded, cp. Lex. Poët. all-prekligr, adj. of a very much spoken of, Eg. 99, Sturl. i. 199. all-tiovirkr, adj. very quick at robust frame, Hkr. ii. 2. all-brongr, adj. as neut. in a very great fort a met wen a quite wen crowd, Edda 24. all-bungliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very bard, unwilling. reluctant. Sturl, ii, 120; taka a, & e-m, to be very bard upon, Mag. I. all-bungr, adj. very unfavourable, Hkr. ii. 358; bostile, badly disposed towards, Eb. 108, Eg. 332; bykja a., to dislike, Fms. viii. 441; a. ord, to all-bykkr, adi. very thick, Fas. i. 339: n. sing. blame, Sturl. ii. 62. as adv. thickly, Fms. vii. 70 (of great numbers slain on the battle-field). all-efr, adj. very furious, wrath, Isl. ii. 258, Lv. 60, Fas. i. 404. ægiligr, adj. very terrible. Dropl. 18. all-mstr, adj. very incited. uchement. Ni. 231. all-ororor, adj. very quick-tongued, frank, outspoken, Eg. 340. all-örnegliga, adv. very steadfastly, very firmly. all-öruggr, adj. very unflinching, Bs. i. 624. Grett. 153 A.

all-föör, m. father of all, Edda 2, 6, 13 (a name of Odin), v. alföör. al-ljóss, adj. quite light; dagr 2., broad daylight, Eg. 219; n. sing., vera alljóst, in broad daylight, Grett. 95 A, 112 A, Fms. ix. 35, Sturl. ii, 108; metaph. quite clear, Sks. 490.

al-lodinn, adj. very bairy, sbaggy all over, Fms. iii. 125.

al-lokit, n. part., a. allri van, when all hope is gone, Bs. i. 198.

ALLR, öll, allt, and alt, adj. [Ulf. alls = πâs, ἄπαs, ὅλοs; A.S. eall;

Engl. and Germ. all 1.

A. In sing. as adj. or substantively, cunctus, totus, omnis: all, entire, the whole; hon a allan arf eptir mik, she has all my beritage after me, Nj. 3; um alla þingsafglöpun, every kind of þ., 150; gaf hann bat allt, all, 101; at öllum hluta, in totum, Grag. i. 245; allr heilagr domr, the whole body of Christians, ii. 165; & öllu því máli, Fms. vii, 311; allu fólki, the whole people, x. 273; hvítr allr, white all over, 655 xxxii. 21; bú allt, the whole estate, Grag. i. 244; fyrir allt dagsljós, hefore any dawn of light. Hom. 41: with the addition of saman = anas.—Icel. now in fem. sing, and n. pl. say öll sömun, and even n. sing, allt samant; in old writers saman is indecl., -the whole, Germ, sämmtlich, zusammen; allt saman féit, the whole amount, entire, Grag. ii. 148; benna hernad allan saman, all together, Fms. i. 144; fyrir allan saman ójafnað þann, Sd. 157. Metaph. in the phrase, at vera ekki allr þar sem hann er sénn (séðr), of persons of deep, shrewd characters, not to be seen through, but also with a feeling of something 'uncanny' about them, Fms. xi. 157 (a familiar phrase); ekki er öll nótt úti enn, sagði draugrinn, the night is not all over yet, said the ghost, 'the Ides are not past' (a proverb), v. Isl. biods. entire, full; allan halfan manuo, for the entire fortnight, Nj. 7; bar til er Kjartani bykir allt mál upp, until Kjartan thought it was bigb time, of one nearly (or) well-nigh drowned, Hkr. i, 286, past, gone, dead, extinct; perh. ellipt., vera allr i brottu, quite gone, Eb. 112 new Ed.; var Hrappr þá allr í brottu, Nj. 132; then by an ellipsis of 'brottu,' or the like, allr simply = past, gone: a. past, of time; seg þú svá fremi frá því er þessi dagr er allr, when this day is past, Nj. 96, Fms. ii. 38, 301; var bá öll beirra vinátta, their friendship was all gone, Fms. ix. 428; allt er nú mitt megin, my strength is gone, exhausted, Str. B. dead; bá er Geirmundr var allt. gone dead I and a (III.) β. dead; bá er Geirmundr var allr, gone, dead, Landn. (Hb.) 124; siz Gunnarr at Hlidarenda var allr, since G. of Litbend was dead and gone (v. l. to lezt), Nj. 142; sem fabir beirra væri allr, after bis death, Stj. 127; bá er Nói var allr, 66; en sem hann var allr, 100; eptir bat er Sara var öll, after all Sara's days were over, 139, 140, 405; & vegum allr hygg ek at at ek verða munu, that I shall perish on the way, Gg. verse 5; með því at þú ert gamlaðr mjök, þá munu þeir eigi út koma fyr en þú ert allr, Hav. 57; still freq. in Swed., e.g. blifwa all af bekumring, be worn out with sorrow; vinet blev alt, fell short; tiden er all, past. almost adverbially, when it may be translated by all, quite, just, entirely; klofnaði hann allr í sundr, was all cloven asunder, Nj. 205; er sá nú allr einn í þínu liði er nú hefir eigi höfuðs, ok hinn, er þá eggjaði hins versta verks er eigi var fram komit, where it seems, however, rather to mean one and the same ... or the very same ..., thus, and he is now one and the same man in thy band, who has now lost his head, and he who then egged thee on to the worst work when it was still undone, or the very same ... who, Nj. 213; vil ek at sú görð haldist öll, in all its parts, 256; kváðu Örn allan villast, that he was all bewildered, Ld. 74. IV. neut. sing. used as a subst. in the sense of all, everything, in every respect; ok for svá með öllu, sem ..., acted in everything as ..., Nj. 14, Ld. 54; ok lát sem þú þykist þar allt eiga, that you depend upon him in all, Fms. xi. 113; eigi er enn beirra allt, they have not yet altogether won the game, Nj. 235: i alls vesöld, in all misery, Ver. 4; alls mest, most of all, especially, Fms. ii. 137 C, Fs. 80 (in a verse); in mod. usage, allra mest, cp. below. The neut. with a gen.; allt misscra, all the year round, Hom. 73; allt annars, all the rest, Grug. ii. 141; at öllu annars, in all other respects, K. b. K. 98; bá var allt (all, everybody) við bá hrætt, Fas. i. 338. In the phrases, at öllu, in all respects, Fms. i. 21, Grug. i. 431; ef hann á eigi at öllu framfærsluna, if be be not the sole supporter, 275: ureyndr at öllu, untried in every way, Nj. 90; cp. Engl. not at all, prop. not in every respect, analogous to never, prop. not always: fyrir alls sakir, in every respect, Grag. ii. 47, Fas. i. 252: i öllu, in everything, Nj. 90, 228: med öllu, wbolly, quite, daudr med öllu, quite dead, 153; neita med öllu, to refuse outright, Fms. i. 35, 232, Boll. 342; um allt, in respect of everything, Nj. 89; hence comes the adverb avalt, ever = of allt = um allt, prop. in every respect, v. avalt.

as an adv., right up to, as far as, all the way; Brynjólfr gengr allt at honum. close to bim, Nj. 58; kómu allt at bænum, 70; allt at búðardvrunum. right up to the very door of the booth, 247; allt nordr um Stad, all along north, round Cape Stad, Fms. vii, 7; suor allt i Englands haf, iv. 329; verit allt út í Miklagaro, as far out as Constantinople, ii. 7, iv. 250, 25; allt á klofa, Bárð. 171. 2. everywbere, in all places; at riki Eireks konungs mundi allt yfir standa i Eyjunum, might stretch over the whole of the Islands, Eg. 405; Sigröbr var konungr allt um brændalög, over all Drontbeim, Fms. i. 19; bjoggu þar allt fyrir þingmenn Runólfs goda, the liegemen of R. the priest were in every bouse, ii. 234 (= i hverju húsi, Bs. i. 20); allt noror um Rogaland, all the way north over the whole of R., Fms. iv. 251; voru svírar allt gulli búnir, all overlaid with gold, vi. 308; hafið svá allt kesjurnar fyrir, at ekki megi á ganga, bold your spears everywhere (all along the line) straight before you, that they (the enemy) may not come up to you, 413; allt undir innviouna ok stafnana, vii. 82. nearly = Lat. jam, soon, already; voru allt komin fyrir hann bref, warrants of arrest were already in bis way, Fms. vii. 207; var allt skipat lidinu til fylkingar, the troops were at once drawn up in array, 205; en allt hugdum vér (still we thought) at fara med spekt um bessi hérud, Boll. 346. temp. all through, until; allt til Jónsvöku, Ann. 1205; allt um daga Hákonar konungs, all through the reign of king Hacon, Bs. i. 731. phrases such as, allt at einu, all one, all in the same way, Fms. i. 113. In Icel, at present allt ab einu means all the same; allt eins, nevertheless; ek ætla bó utan a. eins, Isl. ii. 216; hann neitaði allt eins at ..., refused all the same, Dipl. iii. 13; allt eins hraustliga, not the less manly, Fms. xi. 443. The mod. Icel, use is a little different, namely = as, in similes = just as: allt eins og blómstrið eina (a simile), just as the flower, the initial words of the famous hymn by Hallgrim.

much too..., Karl. 301 (now freq.)

6. by adding 'of' = far too...,
7. with a comparative, much, VI. neut. gen. alls [cp. Ulf. allis = ολως; far, Fms. vi. 45 (freq.) A.S. ealles], used as an adv., esp. before a negative (ekki, hvergi), not a bit, not at all, no bow, by no means; peir ugdu alls ekki at sér, they were not a bit afraid, Nj. 252; hræðumst vér hann nú alls ekki, we do not care a bit for bim, 260; á hólmgöngu er vandi en alls ekki (none at all) á einvígi, Korm. 84; en junkherra Eiríkr þóttist ekki hafa, ok kalladi sik Eirik alls ekki (cp. Engl. lackland), Fms. x. 160; alls hvergi skal sök koma undir enn þriðja mann, no bow, in no case, by no means, Grág. i. 144: sometimes without a negative following it; zr alls geldar, ewes quite barren, Grag. i. 502; hafrar alls geldir, id.; alls vesall, altogether wretched, Nj. 124; alls mjök stærist hann nú, very much, Sti.; a. mest, especially, Fs. 89, Fms. ii. 137. In connection with numbers, in all, in the whole; tolf voru bau alls & skipi, twelve were they all told in the sbip, Ld. 142; tíu Íslenzkir menn alls, 164; alls fórust níu menn, the slain were nine in all, Isl. ii. 385; verða alls sárir þrír eða fleiri, Grág. ii. 10; alls mánuð, a full month, i. 163; þeir ala eitt barn alls á æfi sinn. Rb. 346.

\[\beta \]

B. with addition of 'til' or 'of' = far too much; alls of lengi, far too long a time, Fms. i. 140; hefnd alls til litil, much too little, vi. 35. B. In pl. allir, allar, öll, as adj. or substantively: 1. used absol. all; beir gengu út allir, all men, altogetber, Nj. 80; Sídan bjoggust beir heiman allir, 212; Gunnarr reid ok þeir allir, 48; hvikit þér allir, 78, 2. as adj., alla höfðingja, all the chiefs, Nj. 213; or öllum fjórðungum á landinu, all the quarters of the land, 222; at vitni guðs ok allra heilagra manna, all the saints, Grag. ii. 22; i allum orrostum, in all the battles, Fms. x. 273; Josep ok allir hans ellifu bræðr, Stj., etc. adding adrir, flestir, etc.; allir adrir, all other, every one else, Nj. 89, Fms. xi. 135: flestir allir, nearly all, the greatest part of, v. flestr; in mod. use flestallir, flest being indecl.: allir saman, altogetber, Nj. 80. adverb., Gregorius hafði eigi öll fjögr hundruð, not all, not quite, four bundred, Fms. vii. 255.

5. used ellipt., aun (everyone), ber vees. Nj. 78.

6. gen. pl. allra, when followed by superl. neut. er ..., all the more likely, as ..., Ld. 34; allra helzt er beir heyra, particularly now when they bear, Fms. ix. 330; allra helzt ef hann fellr meir, all the rather, if . . ., Grag. ii. 8; allra sizt, least of all, 686 B. 2; ban sú kemr til bess allra mest, especially, Hom. 149: very freq. at present in Icel., and used nearly as Engl. very, e.g. allra bezt, the very best; a. hast, neost, fyrst, the very bigbest, lowest, foremost, etc.

C. alls is used as a prefix to several nouns in the gen., in order to express something common, general, universal. COMPDS: alls-endis or alls-hendis, adv.-scarcely to be derived from 'hond'-in every respect, quite, thoroughly, used almost exclusively in connection with a preceding negative, eigi, eingi, or the like, and giving additional force to the negation; er bat hugbod mitt, at vér berim eigi a. gæfu til um vár skipti, it is my foreboding, that we shall not carry luck with us to the very end of our dealings, Ld. 160; eigi til allsendis, id., Eg. 75; þat er reynt at eingi maðr heldr sínum þrifnaði til allsendis, it is proved that no man bolds bis thriving thoroughly, Fms. i. 295. alls-háttar, adv. [hattr], of every sort, kind; a. kurteysi, thoroughly good manners. Fms. i. 17 (freq.) alls-herjar, an old, obsolete gen. from herr; Drottinn Sabaoth is in the Icel. transl. of the Bible rendered by Drottinn Allsherjar, V. the neut, sing, allt is used the Lord of Hosts. It is esp, used as an adv. in some political and legal terms, denoting something general, public, common. allsherjar-búð, f. the booth in the parliament (albingi) belonging to the allsherjargodi. Its site is fixed, Sturl. ii. 44, 126 (referring to events in the year 1215). allaherjar-domr, m. a doom of the supreme court, a lawful public sentence, judgment of the full court; ber rusud allsherjardom, violated lawful judgment, the law of the land, Fms. iv. 205. allsherjar-fé, n. public property, a domain, 1b. ch. 3, viz. the ground of the Icel. albingi. herjar-godi, a, m. (v. godi), the supreme priest, pontifex maximus. As the albingi (q. v.) was within the jurisdiction of the great temple (hof) in Kjalarnes, the keeper or priest of that temple—the descendant of its founder Thorstein Ingolfsson-had the title of supreme priest, and opened the albingi during the heathen age. At the introduction of Christianity this office remained with the supreme priest, who retained his name; and he, and not the bishop of Skalholt, opened the albing every year; porsteinn Ingólfsson lét setja fyrstr manna þing á Kjalarnesi áðr alþingi var sett, ok fylgir þar enn (still, viz. in the 13th century) sökum þess því godorði (viz. the priesthood of Kjalarnes, aliter allsherjar godorð) alþingis helgun, Landn. 336 (the text as found in the Melabók), Landn. 39, Þórð. 94 (Ed. 1860), and Landn. Mantissa. allsherjar-lio, n. public troops, army (Norse), Fms. x. 411. allsherjar-lýor, pl. ir, m. the people, commonalty, Hkr. iii. 194. allsherjar-lög, n. pl. public law, statute law of the land, in the phrase, at albingis mali ok allsherjar lögum, Nj. allsherjar-bing, n. general assembly, Fms. i. 224. In Icel. at present allsherjar- is prefixed to a great many other words in order to express what is public, general, universal. alls-konar [Old Engl. alkyn], prop. an obsolete gen. from a masc. konr: G. as adi. ind. of every hind; a. fanga, Eg. 65; a. ár, good season in all respects, Hkr. i. 15: used simply as adv.; hinn ágætasti a., in every respect, Fms. xi. 157 (rare). alls-kostar, adv. [kostr], in all respects, quite, altogether; a. illa, bad altogetber, Ld. 232; þykjast nú a. hafa unninn mikinn sigr (a full victory), Fms. xi. 147; frjáls ok a. geymandi, to be observed in every respect, K. A. 50; hann lofadi a., made a full allowance, Bs. i. alls-kyns, adv. [kyn] = allskonar, Fms. x. 380. ll. 2, 25, where it is spelt allsalls-staðar, adv. [staðr], freq. alstaðar or allstaðar in a single word, everywhere, ubique; cp. margstadar, in many places; sumstadar, in some places; einhversstadar, somewbere; nokkursstadar, anywbere; allstadar par sem, Fms. ii. 81, x. 182. Metaph. in every way (rare); a. mun ek gera at binu skapi, nema bar, in everything, except that . . . , Nj. alls-valdandi, part. [A.S. ealwalda], 'all-wielding,' of God, Almighty, Dipl. iv. 8, Fms. i. 121, Bs. several times. allra-handa = allskonar, a mod. word. allra-heilagra in compds, a. messa, -dagr, -kirkja, All-Saints'-day, -church, Bs., K. A., Fms., etc.

Digitized by GOOSIC

ALLS and als, conj. [Ulf. allis = $\gamma d\rho$; Engl. as, contr. = als; cp. the consecutive als in Grimm D.W. sub voce, col. 257 sqq.], as, while, since; freq. in Lex. Poët. in old poets, less freq. in old prose writers, rare in the classics of the 13th century: used four times in the treatise of Thorodd,alls hann sjálfr er hebreskr stafr, Skálda 167; alls vér erum einnar tungu, 161; alls engi grein er enn á gör, 162; alls þeir höfðu áðr allir eitt hljóð, 166,—and as often in the old Heiðarv. S.—alls þú ert góðr drengr kallaðr, Ísl. ii. 366; alls Barði var eigi bítr á fébætr, 386; alls þú rekr þitt erendi, 483; alls þú hefir þó hér til nokkorar ásjá ætlað, Ld. 42; alls beir máttu ekki sínum vilja fram koma, Boll. 348; alls hann trúir mér til, Fs. (Hallfr. S.) 90: alls bu hefir bo dor giptu til min sott, Fms. v. 254; alls þeir höfðu fritt lið, viii. 362. With the addition of 'er' (21); en þó, alls er þú ert svá þráhaldr á þínu máli, Fms. i. 305; alls er ek reyni, at..., as I..., ii. 262, (Grág. i. 142 is a false reading = allt), Fas. ii. 283: with addition of 'bo,' alls bo hefir petta með meirum fádæmum gengið, heldr en hvert annara, þá vil ek ..., but considering that ..., Band. 32 new Ed.; cp. Lex. Poët.

all-tio, adv. at all times, Fas. i. 505 (paper MS.), freq. in mod. use.

al-lusigr, adj. all-lousy, Fbr. 156.

all-vald,n.absolute power. allvalds-konungr,m.sovereign,Fms.x.378. all-valdr, pl. ar, m. = alvaldr (poët. word), sovereign king, Lex. Poët., Hkr. i. 432; heilir allvaldar báðir, a poetical salute, Fms. vi. 195; mikil er allvalds raun (a proverb), 'tis bard to strive against the powerful, Lv. III.

allyngis, quite, altogether, v. öllungis.

al-manna-, gen. pl. from an obsolete almenn [cp. Alemanni], a prefix to some nouns, denoting general, common, universal, Ad. 21. Freq. now in Icel., e. g. almanna-rómr, m. public opinion, in the proverb, sjaldan lýgr ei. COMPDS: almanna-bygo, f. an inbabited almanna-gjá, f. local name of the great lava rift 2., vox populi vox Dei. country, Fas. iii. 3. close to the albing, where all the people met; vide Nj. 244, Sturl. i. 206, almanna-leið, f. a public road, Lv. 29. almanna-lof, n. almanna-skript, f. general confession, Hom. praise of all, Nj. 251. almanna-stofa, u, f. the common ball, a large room in the Icel. dwellings of the 12th and 13th centuries; opp. to litla stofa, Sturl. ii. 153, iii. 194, 198; it seems to be identical with skáli. almanna-tal. n. common reckoning, 1b. 18: β. (Norse), general census, with a view to making a levy, N.G.L. i. 98; Fr. = almannaping. almanna-vegr, m. a bigb road, Nj. 261, Fms. ii. 99, = þjóðvegr, þjóðleið. almannaping, n. (Norse), a public meeting, = alping, Fr.

al-máttigr, adj. [A.S. ealmeathig; Hel. ala-; Germ. allmächtig], almighty, seems to be a Christian (eccl.) word, translated from the Latin omnipotens; but the phrase 'hinn almattki ass' in the heathen oath (used of Thor) implies its use in very early times. The old form is contracted before -ir, -ar, -an, -um, etc., and changes g into k; almattkan, -kir, -kum (now almattugan, -ugir, -ugum, through all cases), v. mattigr: used of God, Fms. i. 231, Eluc. 10, Sks. 305, etc.: heathen use, Landn. 258, cp.

al-mattr, ar, m., dat. -mætti, almightiness, omnipotence (eccl.), of God, 671. 3; sinn almott (acc.), Isl. i. (Hom.) 386, Fms. i. 226, 655 vi.

2; vide almætti, n.

al-menni, n. the people, public, Fr. (Norse).

al-menniliga, adv. generally, H. E. i. 465, K. Á. 80. al-menniligr, adj. [Germ. allgemein], general, common, rare in old writers, Stj.; a. (catbolic) trú, Mar. 656 B. 8, 623, 18; a. þing, concilium oecumenicum, Rb. 338; a. Kristni, 390, 208, Ghl., etc. Freq. in mod. Icel.,

= common, good, real.

al-menning, f. and almenningr, m. I. in Icel. almost always fem. in the sense of fundus communis, ager compascuus, common land, belonging to a whole 'fjordungr' (quarter) of the country, and thus wider than the mod, 'afrétt.' It still remains in the local name of the deserts round Cape Horn at the north-west point of Icel., cp. Fbr. and Landn. 124; cp. also the passage in 1b. ch. 3. The word is now seldom used except of wastes belonging to nobody: pat er almenning er fjórðungs menn eigu allir saman, Grág. ii. 392-394, Js. 107, Ib. ch. 3, Grág. ii. 345, 352, 359, 385, K. D. K. 26, Fbr. 41, Landn. 124, in all those cases II. masc. (Norse), [cp. Swed. almanning, pascuum, and Germ. almeinde, via publica or ager compascuus, Grimm R. A. p. 498], common or public pasture (answering nearly to the Icel. afrétt), where cattle are grazed during the summer months, cp. the Norse setr, Icel. sel: rarely used in Icel. writers. In O. H., ch. 114, used of Grimsey, an island off the north coast of Iceland, Ghl. 450, Jb. 299, 311. 2. the high-street, in a Norse town, N.G.L. ii. 241. 8. the people, the public in general, common now in Icel. in this sense, Stj. 292, 493, Fbr. 194; almennings 4. a levy, conscription; fullr, allr, matr, common food, Bs. ii. 5, 179. halfr a., a full, balf levy of men and sbips; fullr a. in Norway meant a levy of one in every seven male adults, N. G. L. ii. 199, Fms. iv. 142, i. 165, D.I. i. 66 (of the milit. duties of Icelanders when residing in Norway). Metaph. (as a phrase) in Nj. 207, of raising the country, the institution being unknown in the Icel. Commonwealth. COMPDS: almenningsbréf, n. a proclamation, Sturl. iii. 29. almennings-drykkja, u, f. almennings-far, n. a public ferry, Gpl. a public banquet, Bs. i. 108. 415. almennings-mörk, f. a public forest, Gpl. 454. almennings-streeti, n. a public street, Grett. 158 A. almennings-tollr, m. a almennings-vegr, m. a public way. public toll, tax, 126 C. 173 (?). al-mennr, adj. common, public, Grett. 115, where MSS. A and B have almælt. Now freq.

ALMR, elm-tree, v. álmr.

almusa, u, f. = ölmusa, alms, [Scot. almous, Germ. almosen, (ἐλεημοσύνη.)] al-mugi, a, and almugr, s, m., at present the first form is always used [cp. mugi and mugr, Dan. almue, plebs], prop. the commons, people; konungrinn ok almuginn, king and commons, Stj.; eigi vissi almuginn (people in general) hvat fram for i sottinni, Bs. i. 74; almugrinn (the people) geystist, Bret. 37, 94; allvinsælir við almugann, baving very many friends among the commonalty, Fms. i. 184. B. now in Icel. = plebs, the masses, opp. to the higher classes; so in many compds, e.g. almugamaör, m., almúga-legr, adj., etc.

al-meeli, n. what all people say, a common saying, general report; pat er a. at ..., all people say, agree that ..., Fms. xi. 326, Hkr. iii. 398; pat voru sér, Hom. 83; þótt almælit sannaðist, at móðurbræðrum verði menn likastir, though the saying proved sooth, that men are likest to their uncles by the mother's side, 1sl. ii. 29.

al-mæltr, adj. part. spoken by all, what all say; esp. in the phrase, almælt tíðindi, news; spyrjast almæltra tíðinda, what news? Nj. 227, Ld. B. of a child that has learnt to 80, Fms. xi. 118 (a standing phrase). talk; en þá er sveinninn var tvævetr, þá rann hann einn saman ok var a. sem fjögra vetra gömul börn, but when the boy was two years old, then he ran alone and could say everything as well as bairns of four years, Ld. 34, (altalandi is the word now used.)

al-mætti, n. omnipotence, Skálda 161; esp. theol., now more freq. than the masc. almáttr.

al-naktr, adj. part. quite naked, Rd. 295; now alnakinn.

aln-bogi, a, m. = ölbogi, elbow, Edda 110.

al-nýr, adj. quite new, Fms. viii. 61, Grág. i. 491. al-ogaor, adj. quite in earnest, = alhugaor.

ALPT, swan, v. alpt.

ALR, s, m. pl. ir, awl, Edda 71. B. in the phrase, 'leika á als oddi,' skjálfa þótti húsit, sem á als oddi léki (MS. allsolla), the bouse quivered, as if it were balanced on the point of an awl, Fas. i. 89; the Icel. now use the phrase, ad leika a als oddi, of the excitement produced by joy, to be sincerity, freq. in mod. Icel. in this sense. But in old writers prop. used merry, in high spirits, full of life and vigour, (cp. the Engl. to be on pins and needles.)

Digitized by GOOGLE

al-rauor, adj. quite red, Rd. 298.

al-ráðinn, adj. part. quite determined, Fms. viii. 145.

al-rann, adj. utterly plundered; beir munu görvir fyrst alranir er næstir oru, Isl. ii. 93 (dub.)

al-reyndr, part. fully proved, Fms. xi. 441, Mirm. 74.

alri, elder-tree, v. elri.

al-roskinn, adj. quite grown up, Fms. i. 5, Ld. 256.

al-rotinn, adj. all rotten, Stj. Exod. xvi. 20.

a. neut. rumoured of all, of bad news; a. al-ræmdr, adj. part. er, all people say, Nj. 76, Fms. vii. 113, Stj. B. in mod. Icel. both masc. and fem. in a bad sense, e.g. a. bjófr, a noted thief.

al-sagor, adj. part. spoken of by all, Fms. ii. 50.

al-satt, f. in the phrases, sattr alsattum, completely reconciled, atoned with a full atonement, Dipl. ii. 11; sættast alsáttum, Grág. ii. 141.

al-sattr, adj. fully reconciled, Nj. 120, Boll. 362.

al-sekr, adj. a law term, an utter felon, an outlaw of the greater degree, = skógarmaðr, opp. to fjörbaugsmaðr, Nj. 240, Hrafn. 18, Grág. i. 463.

al-sioa, adj. ind. [sior, faith], en er Kristni var a., but when the Christian faith was universally accepted, Hkr. ii. 97; en bo Kristnin væri nú a. þá ..., Grett. 150 (the old Ed. wrongly & landi).

a. of a ship; skúta, tvítugal-skipaðr, adj. part. fully manned: B. a law sessa, langskip a., Nj. 280, Eg. 13, Fms. iv. 70, Hkr. i. 176. term, bekkr, pallr a., full court, Grag. i. 7. y. of a bench in a banquethall, quite full, Eg. 43.

al-skjaldaor, adj. part. lined, covered with shields: lined with shields along the bulwarks from stem to stern, as a ship of war, Landn, 156, Sturl, iii. 61. β. of troops in full armour, Sturl. ii. 47.

al-skrifaor, adj. part. written all over, of vellum, Th. 76.

al-skyldr, adj. quite binding, Sks. 636.

al-slitinn, adj. part. quite ragged, worn out, Vm. 161.

al-slikr, adj. quite the same, Fms. iv. 157.

al-smíðaðr, part. completely built, Fms. xi. 436.

Alsujea : 3 sal-snotr, adj. all-wise, Hm. 54: very clever, pkv. 26, 28.

al-spakr, adj. all-wise, cognom., Eg. 466.

al-staðar, everywbere, v. alls-staðar, sub allr.

al-stýfor, part. a metre in masculine rbymes (stýfa), Edda (Ht.) 134.

ale starbuch Masculine final rhymes are called styft.

al-styfingr, m. an animal with close-cropped ears; he who marked sheep in this way was liable to the lesser outlawry, unless it were publicly announced in the lögrétta, Grág. i. 426.

al-svartr, adj. quite black, Nj. 80.

al-sveittr, adj. all-sweaty, Al. 22.

al-sveitugr, adj. reeking with sweat, now kofsveittr, Gisl. 137.

al-sykn, adj. a law term, altogether free, released from all punishment, Grág. ii. 160.

al-sýkna, u, f. complete immunity from punishment. pardon, Grág. i. 359. willbahin st al-sett, f. complete reconciliation, Nj. 101, Js. 40, B. K. 126.

ALTARI, n. and rarely altara, n. or altari, a, m.; mod. heteroclite altari, n. pl. ölturu; the forms-eri, -era [altare] also appear:—an altar, a Christian word, the altar in heathen temples being called 'stallr,' Nj. 279, K. A. 28, 208, Stj. freq.; altaris, 625. 84; altari þín, 655 xxiii. 2; altari (nom. pl.), xiv B. 2, Pm. 47: masc., altara (acc.) fim alna langan . . ., but bat (neut.) skal með eiri búa, a little below, altarans (gen.), altarann (nom. sing.), altaris (gen. neut.), altarit (neut. nom.), Stj. 307, 308, indifferently neut. or masc., Symb. 24; alteri, 1812. 17; altera (dat. neut.), 655 iii. COMPDS: altaris-blæja, u, f. an altar-cloth, Am. 33, Vm. 2, 623. 54. 37, B. K. 83; altara-blæja, D. l. i. 404. altaris-bók, f. an altar-book, Vm. 6, Dipl. v. 18. altaris-brik, f. an altar-piece, Vm. 12. bunaor, m. altar-furniture, H. E. i. 489. altaris-dagr, m. anniversary of the foundation of an altar, H.E. i. 310. altaris-dúkr, m. an altar-cloth, Vm. 1, D. I. i. 244. altaris-fórn, f. a victim offered on altaris-gólf, n. the floor round an altar, N.G.L. an altar, Mart. 122. altaris-horn, n. the born of an altar, Fms. xi. 444. altaris-klæði, n. an altar-cloth, Hkr. iii. hús, n. a chapel, Bs. ii. 80. 81, D. I. i. 266; altara-, Fms. iii. 28, Vm. I. altaris-líkneski, n. an image placed on an altar, Pm. 61. altaris-messa, u, f. mass at an altar, altaris-plata, u, f. a candlestick, Pm. 93. altaris-skrá, f. an altar-book, Pm. 109. altaris-staðr, m. the place where an altar stands, Eg. 768. altaris-steinn, m. an altar-slab, D. I. i. 266, 443, K. Á. 28, Vm. 31, Am. 55, Pm. 106. altaris-stika, u, f. a candlestick d High & for an aliar, Vm. 3. altaris-pjónusta, u, f. aliar-service, 655 xxxii. 1. al-tiliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. civilly, Bs. i. 812.

Al. svilla.m

see swift the

makozós gm

altingis = alþingis, adv. [þing, res], quite, altogetber, Pm. 24.

al-tjaldaðr, adj. part. bung with tapestry all round, Fms. xi. 17, Sturl. iii. 193, Háv. 52.

al-ugaðr, sincere, v. alhugaðr.

ál-úð, f. and in old writers almost constantly ölúð (with changed vowel), alyo, Clem. 43, [a contracted form from al-hugo, -hugr], affection, of bospitality, in such phrases as, taka vio e-m med ö., to give a bearty reception to, Ld. 196, Fær. 156, Fs. 15; veita med ö., to give bospitable treatment, Fms. vi. 120. B. affection; hann gaf mer hringinn med mikilli o., Fms. ii. 171; sakir gæzku þeirrar ok alúðar (affection) er Guð hafði við Abraham, for the sake of that kindness and love which God had toward Abrabam, Ver. 78; Björn spyr tíðinda heldr tómliga af engri a., coolly, Bjarn. 53. Mod. also alúðliga, adv. beartily; alúðligr, adj. kind, bearty. COMPDS: alúðar-maðr, m. devoted friend, Fms. vi. 34. alúðarvinr, m. sincere friend, Hkr. ii. 210, Ver. 15; ölúðarvinr, Fms. iv. 287. al-valdr, almighty; alvald, omnipotence; v. allv-.

al-vara, u, f. [appears neither in Engl. nor Germ.; Dan. alvor]. seriousness, earnestness; Gunnarr segir sér þat alvöru, Nj. 49, þorst. Stang. 50; áhyggjusamliga ok með mikilli a., with much earnestness, Fms. i. 141; taka e-t fyrir a., to take it in earnest, x. 77; vissa ek eigi at bér var a. vid at taka, that you were in earnest, Band. 3. 2. affection = alúð (not used at present in that sense); hverigir lögðu fulla alvöru til annarra, Bs. i. 288; elskulig a. til e-s, bearty love, Fms. iii. 63; með alvoru ok blíðu, 144; er öll hans a. (inclination) til Ólafs konungs, vi. 32. alvoru-liga, adv. earnestly, Fms. ii. 211. alvöru-ligr, adj. earnest. devoted; a. vinátta, Fms. ii. 144. alvoru-samligr, adj. earnest looking, devoted; a. þjónosta, Fms. i. 261.

al-varliga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), seriously, earnestly, 655 xxxii. 21. intimately, devotedly; fagna e-m a., to receive beartily, Grett. 98 A.

al-vaskligr, m. brisk, martial, Ld. 196, (Ed. allvaskligr.) al-vaxinn, adj. part. quite grown up, Ld. 132.

al-vapnaor, adj. part. in full armour, Eg. 422, 460, Fms. i. 81. al-vátr, adj. thoroughly wet, Fær. 184, Fbr. 23, K. p. K. 10.

al-vel = allvell, adv. very well; albetr at ser, of much better appearance, Ld. 332, Glúm. 353: so the vellum MS. A. M. 132 in both these passages. al-vepni = aivæpni, full armour.

al-verki and alverkja, adj. ind. aching, feeling pains all over the body [cp. the Scot. wark and werk and the provincial Engl. wark in the sense of acbe, racking pain], Fms. v. 223, Bs. i. 615.
al-wirkr and alyrkr, adj. [verk], a. dagr, a working day, opp. to a holy day, N. G. L. i. 429, 153; cp. virkr.

al-vista, adj. ind. paralysed, Fél. ix. 186.

al-vitr, adj. all-wise, now partic, used of God, Clem. 33; superl. alvitrastr, of greatest wisdom, used of a man of science, Sturl. i. 167. MS. Brit. Mus. 1127.

al-vænn, adj. fair.

al-væpni, n. [vápn], complete arms; hafa a., to be in full armour, fully 🛕 armed, Nj. 93, 107, Eg. 46, 74, 88; med a., fully armed, 1b. ch. 7.

al-værð, f., almost constantly ölværð (the change of vowel being caused 🚜 by the following v), Bs. i. 593. l. 19, even spelt ölbærð, probably akin with alvara; bospitality, bearty reception, good treatment; taka vio c-m med o., Fms. xi. 52, 27, Fas. iii. 70; var par uppi öll ö. af Gríms hendi, i. 172; bjóða honum með allri ö., kindness, bospitality, ii. 510; cp. also Bs. i. 1. c., where full er ölbærð öllum means there is open house; the word is now obsolete.

al-værliga and ölværliga, adv. bospitably, Ísl. ii. 348.

al-yrkr, adj., a. dagr, a working day, v. alvirkr.

al-bakinn, adj. part. thatched all over, Fms. i. 89; older form -ior.

al-biljaor, adj. part., old form -bilor, completely wainscotted, Sturl. iii.

193: the vellum MS. has -bildir, the Ed. -biljadir.

al-pingi, n. [ping], mod. form alping, by dropping the inflective i; the gen., however, still remains unchanged, alpingis. The parliament or general assembly of the Icel. Commonwealth, invested with the supreme legislative and judicial power, consisting of the legislative lögretta (q.v.), and the courts, v. dómr, fimtardómr, fjórðungsdómar; v. also goði, goðorð, lögsögumaðr, lögsaga, lögberg, and many other words referring to the constitution and functions of the albingi. It was founded by Ulrijot about A.D. 930, 1b. ch. 3; and reformed by Thord Gellir A.D. 964, who instituted the courts and carried out the political divisions of Icel, into godord, sjórðungar, and þing, ch. 5. In the years 1272 and 1281 the albing, to some extent, changed its old forms, in order to comply with the new state of things. In the year 1800 it was abolished altogether. A kind of parliament, under the old name alþingi, was again established in the year 1843, and sat at Revkjavík. Before the year 030 a general assembly was held in Kjalarnes, whence it was removed under the name of albingi to the river Öxará, near to the mountain Armannsfell. The much-debated passage in Hænsaþ. S. ch. 14-en þingit var þá undir Armannsfelli-therefore simply means that the events referred to happened after the removal of the Kjalarnesping. The parliament at first met on the Thursday beginning the tenth week of the summer, which fell between the 11th and the 17th of June; by a law of the year 999 its opening was deferred to the next following Thursday, between the 18th and 24th of June, old style; after the union with Norway, or after A.D. 1272 or 1281, the time of meeting was further deferred to June 29; July 2 (Vis. B. V. M.) is hence called bing-Mariumessa. The parliament lasted for a fortnight; the last day of the session, called vápnatak, because the weapons having been laid aside during the session ambight; Hel. ambaht, servitium; O. H. G. ampaht; hence the mod. Germ. were again taken (cp. Engl. wapentake), thus fell on the first or second Wednesday in July. As to the rules of the alpingi, vide esp, the first chapter of the b. b. Grág. (Kb.) i. p. 38 sqq. The most eventful years in the history of the albingi are, A. D. 930 (foundation), 964 (reform), 1000 (introduction of Christianity), 1004 (institution of the Fifth Court), 1024 (repudiation of the attempt of the king of Norway to annex Iceland), 1006 (introduction of tithes), 1117 (first codification of laws), 1262-1264 (submission to the king of Norway), 1272 and 1281 (new codes introduced). In the year 1238 there was no albing held because of civil disturbances, eytt albingi ok þóttu þat údæmi, Ann. s.a., Grág. (þ. þ.) Íslend. bók, Kristni S., Njála, Sturl., Árna b. S., O. H. (1853), ch. 114; of modern writers, vide esp. Maurer, Entsteh. des Ísl. Staates; Dasent, Introd. to Burnt Njal; some of the Introductions by Jon Sigurosson in D. I., esp. that to the Gamli Sáttmáli of the year 1262. COMPDS: albingis-domr, m. the court of justice in the a., Grag. i. 87, 130. albingis-för, f. a journey to the albingis-helgun, f. ballowing, inauguration of the a., cp. allsherjar goði, Landn. 336. albingis-lof, n. permission, leave given by parliament; ef ... sættist å vig fyrir a. fram, against the rules of the a. = unlawfully, Grág. ii. 173. albingis-mál, n. parliamentary rules. proceedings of parliament; ef beir taka eigi af albingismáli, do not infringe the parliamentary rules, Gråg. i. 103: in the legal phrase, at alþingismáli réttu ok allsherjar lögum, where the first rather denotes the form, the last the substance of the law. albingis-nefna, u, f. nomination to the legislative body and the courts, including domnefina and logréttuskipan, Grág. i. 5; cp. lb. ch. 5. alþingis-reið, f. a journey to the a., Nj. 100, Grág. ii. 78. albingis-satt, f. an agreement entered albingissattar-hald, n. the keeping of such an agreement, Grág. i. 217, Sturl. i. 66. albingis-sekt, f. a conviction in the alþingissektar-hald, n., Sturl. i. 66 (seems to be a false reading); v. the preceding word. Tus 14 229 al-hingis = öllúngis or öldungis, quite, altogether, D. N. (not Icel.) al-þjóð, f. rare and obsolete = alþýða, the commons, Ad. verse 17, Sonatorr. 9, 15; a. manna, Sturl. iii. 229, 125, Fms. vii. 240.

al-bykkr, adj. quite thick, foggy, Stj. I Kings xviii. 45.

al-þýða, u, f. the public, people; svá at a vissi, Sd. 167; sagði þá allri alþýðu, told all people, Eg. 271. 6. people assembled in a body; er þat bænarstaðr minn til allrar alþýðu, all the assembled commons, Nj. 189, y. i alþýðu lífi, in common life, 655 xxi. 3. With gen., a. manna = oll a., everybody, the overwhelming majority, bulk of people assembled, Eg. 193, where it is used of the household; a. manna var á brott farin, nearly all people bad left, 220; a. manna gerðu (pl.) góðan róm at mali hans, the whole meeting cheered his speech, Fms. vii. 242. It is now almost solely used of the common people, allt folk, bæði ríka menn (wealtby) ok alþýðu, Fms. v. 113; cp. alþýðis-fólk. compos: alþýðudrykkja, u, f. a common banquet, Sturl. ii. 245. albýðu-leið, f. a bigb road, Eg. 579, Bjarn. 49. alþýðu-lof, n. popularity, general praise, Hkr. iii. 31. alþýðu-maðr, m. a working man, Vd. 172 old Ed., praise, Hkr. iii. 31. wrongly instead of albyoa manna, Fs. 67. alþýðu-mál, n. common, general report, pat er a. at, Hkr. iii. 34. alþýðu-skap, n., in the phrase, vera ekki við a., to be unpopular, úvinsæll ok lítt við a., Fs. 63. alþýðu-tal, n. reckoning, common calculation, 1b. ch. 7, Rb. 18. þýðu-vápn, n. common weapons, Fas. iii. 620. alþýðu-vegr, m. a public road, Sturl. i. 36, Hkr. iii. 54. alþýðu-virðing, f. public opinion, consensus popularis, Bs. i. 158. alþýðu-vitni, n. universal testimony, Sks. 12. alþýðu-þyss, m. a general tumult, Bs. i. 46, Hom. 46.

al-byoask, dd, dep. in the phrase, a, til e-s, to incline towards, attach oneself to, Fms. vi. 135.

al-þýði, n. = alþýða, and alþýðis-fólk, id., Bs. i. 805.

al-þýðligr, adj. common, general; a. maðr = menskr maðr, a common man, Fas. ii. 251; í alþýðligri ræðu, common parlance, Skálda 185; hitt væri alþýðlegra (more plain), at segja, 208; a. fyrir sakir siðferðis, of plain manners, Finnb. 208.

al-peegr, adj. [piggja], quite acceptable, pleasant to, Hom. 75.

al-æstr, adj. part. excited, stirred up, Sks. 230.

AMA, að, to vex, annoy, molest; with dat. of the person, eigi skuluð þér a. Ruth, Stj. 423, Fms. i. 244. \(\beta\). \(\beta\). dep. (more freq.), amast vi\(\phi\) e-n, to annoy, molest, in order to get rid of one, Landn. 66, Nj. 130, 199, v.l.; ömuðust liðsmenn lítt við hana, Fms. v. 305, vii. 166, Fs. 32; at hann mundi eigi a. við (object to) bygð hans, Sd. 139: absol. to dislike, Nj. 167. ami, 2, m. vexation, annoyance, is now used in the phrase, ad vera e-m til ama, to become a cause of vexation to: ama-samr, adj. and amasemi, f. bad bumour; cp. also ömurligr, distressing; amatligr, loatbsome. amallera, 20, to enamel (Fr. word émailler), Fms. xi. 427, Vm. 152, amathysti, a, m. amethyst (for. word), Str.

amatligr or amatligr, adj. loatbsome, bideous (freq. at the present day), Hkv. 1. 38.

amban, f., ambana, ao, and ambun, ambuna, recompense (Norse); v. ömbun, ömbuna.

AMBATT, pl. ir, f. [cp. Ulf. and tabts = διάκονος, ὑπηρέτης; A.S.]

amt, Dan, embede, Icel, embætti; the mod, Rom, ambassador, ambassade are of the same stock; Ital, ambasciadore, nuntius; cp. Caes, Bell, Gall, 6. 15-circum se ambactos clientesque babent, v. Diez on this root. The Icel. am- is an assimilated form from and-1, a bondwoman, bandmaid: bræll cor a., Grág. ii. 152, 156 (where the older form ambótt), N. G. L. i. 76; konungs a., freq. of a royal concubine, Fms. i. 14, Fagrsk. ch. 21: cp. embætta and embætti. Cp. also mod. ambaga, u, f. an awkward person; amböguligr, adj. and ambögu-skapr, m. clumsy manners, perh. all of them related to ambott. COMPDS: ambáttar-barn, n. ambáttar-dóttir, f. daughter of an a.. Eg. child of an a., Fms. i. 72. ambáttarligr, adi. vile, like an a., Fas. i. 244. mót, n. expression of an a., Fas. i. 147. ambáttar-sonr, m. son of an ambátta-fang, n. a term of contempt, a., Grág. i. 363, Ld. 70, 98. a woman's tussle, as it were between two bondswomen, Sd. 162 (of amb-höfði. a. m. a nickname of uncertain signification. Egilsson supposes that of bi-ceps: most probably amb-denotes some animal; cp. Hjart-höfði, Hart-bead, and Orkn-höfði, Seal-bead, Sturl. i. 35 (in a verse).

amboð, n. utensils, v. andboð.

Ami & m. vepatran. elsen fall.

AMLÓÐI, a, m. 1. the true name of the mythical prince of Denmark, Amlethus of Saxo, Hamlet of Shakespeare. 2. now used metaph. of an imbecile, weak person, one of weak bodily frame, wanting in strength or briskness, unable to do his work, not up to the mark. It is used in phrases such as, bu ert mesti Amlodi, what a great A. you are, i.e. poor, weak fellow. In a poem of the 10th century (Edda 67), the sea- Smelight. shore is called the flour-bin of Amlode (meldr-lio Amloda, navis faringe Amlodii), the sand being the flour, the sea the mill: which recals the words of Hamlet in Saxo,- sabulum perinde ac farra aspicere jussus eadem albicantibus maris procellis permolita esse respondit.' From this poem it may be inferred that in the 10th century the tale of Hamlet was told in Icel., and in a shape much like that given it by Saxo about 250 years later. Did not Saxo (as he mentions in his preface) write his story from the oral tradition of Icelanders? In Iceland this tale was lost, together with the Skjöldunga Saga/ The Icel. Ambales Saga MS. in the Brit. Mus. is a modern composition of the 17th century. COMPDS now in freq. use: amlóðaligr, adj. imbecile; amlóða-skapr, m., or amlóða-háttr, imbecility; also amlooast, dep. Torfaeus, in his Series Reg. Dan. p. 302. quotes an old Swedish rhyme running thus: 'Tha slog konungen handom samman | och log fast och gorde aff gamman | rett some han vore en Amblode | then sig intet godt forstode, where it means a fool, simpleton, denoting a mental imbecility. [Perhaps the A.S. bomola is cognate; thus in the Laws of King Alfred, 'Gif he hine on bismor to bomolan bescire,' if be in mockery shave bis (a churl's) head like a fool, which Lambarde renders morionis in morem: see Thorpe's Anc. Laws ii. Gloss. sub voce, and cp. the quotation from Weber's Metrical Romances ii. 340.]

AMMA, u, f. [cp. afi], grandmother; now in freq. use, but rarely in the Sagas, which use föður-móðir and móður-móðir, Hým. 7, Rm. 16, Edda 109, Nj. 119, Ld. 328. In compds, ömmu-bróðir, ömmusystir, etc.; lang-amma, u, f. is a great-grandmother. [In Germ. amme means a nurse.]

ampli, a, m. and hompull, s, m. [ampulla], a jug, Vm. 6, 47, Dipl. iii. 4, B. K. 31. COMPD: Ompuls-brot, n. a potsberd, Pm. 93.

amra, 20, to bowl piteously, Fs. 45 (of cats); cp. ömurligr, piteous, and imruligr, adj. id. Amorliga Adj. dismal Landscane (years) amstr, n. [cp. Germ. amsteig = palearium], a rick, Orkn. 448, an an. ömruligr, adj. id. λεγ.: amstr now means toil: cp. amstrast, ad, to toil.

AN, conj. tban, Lat. quam, is the old form, and constantly used in MSS. of the 12th century, instead of 'en' or 'enn,' q. v.

ANA, 20, to rush on, now freq.

AND-, a prefixed prep. [Ulf. uses a separate prep. and; A.S. and-; Germ. ant-, ent-, empf-; it exists in Engl. in an-swer; Lat. ante-; Gr. duri-], denoting whatever is opposite, against, towards, and metaph. bostile, adverse; freq. spelt and pronounced an- or ann-; it is used in a great many compds, v. below. If followed by v, the a changes into o. e. g. öndverðr, adversus; in andvirði, prize, however, the a is unchanged.

ANDA, að, [Ulf. has us-anan = ἐκπνείν; cp. Gr. ἄνεμος, wind, and Lat. animus, anima, spirit, breath: the Germans say geist, spirit, and athmen, spirare: Ulf. translates πνεθμα by abma, νοθε by aba; Hel. spiritus by gêst and atbom, whence Germ. atbmen: cp. Swed. and, ande, I. act. to breathe, and of the wind, to waft; spiritus, spirare.] meðan þeir megu anda ok upp standa, Bs. i. 224, Karl. 95; Þórðr andar nú handan, Sturl. i. 21 (in a verse). II. dep. andast, to breathe one's last, expire: Möror Gigja tók sótt ok andaðist, Fiddle Mord 'took sick' and breathed his last, Nj. 29; en ef svå ferr at ek öndumk, but if it fares so that I die, Eg. 127; bar hefir andast fadir minn, Fas. iii. 619. Part. andadr, dead; hon var ba ondud, bad breatbed ber last, Ld. 16; jarlinn var þá a., Fms. i. 149.

anda- and andar-, the compds belonging to ond, anima, and ond, a duck, v. sub voce önd.

and-blasinn, adj. part. [önd], inflated, Skalda 169, Digitized by and-dyri and anndyri, n. [Lat. atrium: from ond, atrium, q. v.], a tin the phrase, ab verba a... to come to words with. Rd. 300. Korm. porch: hón dró hann fram vfir dyrnar ok svá i anddyrit. Grett. 140. Ni. 140, Fms, ii. 148, Bs. i. 804.

and-fang, n. esp. pl. [Germ. empfang], reception, bospitality, Vpm. 8. and-fælur, f. pl. [ond], 'the borrors,' in the phrase, vakna med andfælum, of one suddenly awakening from a bad dream, or from being frightened when asleep, Fas. iii. 256, Fél. ix. 188.

and-fætingr, s, m. [and-], transl. of Antipodes in Pliny, Stj. 94. Now used in the mod, sense of Antipodes; also in the phrase, sofa andfætis, or andfæting, of two sleeping in a bed 'heads and heels.'

and-hlaup, n. suffocation, Eg. 553.

and-hvalr. s. m. balgeng rostrata, now called andarnefia, u. f., Edda (Gl.), Sks. 123 A.

and-heeli, n. monstrosity, absurdity; medic, the beels being in the place of the toes, Fel. ix. 188. andhælisligr, adj. absurd.

1. prop. breath, breathing; af anda fisksins, Edda 10: cp. hverr andalauss lifir, who lives without breathing, in the Riddles of Gestumblindi, Fas. i. 482; af anda hans, Greg. 20, Sks. 41 B; andi er Ingimundar, ekki góðr á bekkinn, of foul breath, Sturl. i. 21 (in 2 verse). a current of air; andi handar binnar, air caused by the waving of the hand, 623. 33: now freq. of a soft breeze. 3. (gramm.) aspiration; linr, snarpr a., Skálda 175, 179. II. metaph, and of Christian origin, spirit. In the Icel, translation of the N. T. andi answers to πνεθμα, sál to ψυχή (cp. Luke i. 46, 47); Guð skapaði líkamann ok andann, Mar. 656; taki bér við líkamanum en Drottinn við andanum, id.; gjalda Guði sinn anda, Mar. 30 (Fr.); hjarta, andi ok vizka, id. In some of these cases it may answer to ψυχή, but the mod, use is more strict: as a rule there is a distinction between 'ond,' f. anima, and 'andi,' m. animus, yet in some cases both are used indifferently, thus Luke xxiii. 46 is translated by 'andi,' yet 'önd' is more freq., Pass. 44. 21, 45. 1. 2. spirit, spiritual being (önd is never used in this sense); John iv. 24, Guð er andi, and, tilbiðja í 3. the Holy Ghost, Nj. 164, Rb. 80. anda. έν πνεύματι. 4. angels; besshattar eldr brennir andana, Sti. 41. 5. in a profane sense; ålfr eða 2., Fas. i. 313. 6. spiritual gift; i krapti ok i anda Heliæ, Hom. 104. Luke i. 17, Sks. 565. COMPDS: anda-gipt, f. inspiration, gift of the Holy Ghost, Fms. iv. 48. anda-kast, n. breathing, Fas. iii. 348. andaliga, adv. spiritually, = andliga, Fms. v. 230. ligr, adj. spiritual, = andligr, Stj. 8, Dipl. ii. 11. and-kostr = annkostr, purpose.

and-langr, m. (poët.) name of one of the heavens, Edda (Gl.) and-lauss, adj. [önd], breatbless, lifeless, examinis; a. hlutir, Eluc. 9. and-lat, n. [ond, anima; lat, damnum], 'loss of breath,' death; ba er þú fregn a. mitt, 623. 43; a. Magnúss konungs, Gizurar biskups, etc., Bs. i. 65, 70, Eg. 119, 367. B. the last gasp, the very moment of death; þá var konungr nær andláti, Hkr. i. 160; var hann þá beint í andlati, Fms. vi. 230; ok er hann fann at nær dró at andlati hans, bis last moments drew near, viii. 446: andlat has the notion of a quiet, easy death; liflát, a violent death; but both are only used in a dignified COMPDS: andlats-dagr, m. day of death, Bs. i. 466. láts-dægr, n. id., 686 B. andlats-sorg, f. grief for a death, Stj. 196. andlats-tic, f. and -timi, a, m. time of death, Greg. 78, Stj. 9.

andliga, adv. spiritually, Sks. 614, 649, Stj. 27, 34, Hom. 57. andligr, adj. [Hel. translates spiritualis by gestlic, Germ. geistlich, Ulf. πνευματικόs by abmeins], spiritual; in the N.T. πνευματικόs is translated by andligr, I Cor. xv. 44: a. fagnaðr, 656 C; a. herklæði, 656 A. ii. 18; a. skilning, Greg. 23; a. líf, Skálda 199; biskup hefir andligt vald til andligra hluta, a bishop bas spiritual power in spiritual things (opp. to veraldligr, κοσμικόε), Gpl. 73; andlig skim, Hom. 52.

and-lit, n. and annlit, [and-, adversus, and lita; Ulf. andavleizns = πρόσωπον; A. S. andvlite; Germ. antlitz], a face, countenance; & andliti beirra, 623. 61; sá ek annlit bitt, id., Nj. 16; þangat horfi anlit er hnakki skyldi, N.G.L. i. 12; Hom. 7 renders in faciem by i andliti. Metaph. auglit is used as more dignified; i augliti Guds (not andliti), ενώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, in the eyes or sight of God. compds: andlitsbjörg, f. visor, Sks. 406. andlits-farinn, adj. in the phrase, vel a., of fair, well-formed features, better in two words (andliti farinn), Sturl. iii. 178 C. andlits-mein, n. cancer in the face, Sturl. ii. 185. andlits-sköp, n. pl. lineaments of the face, N. G. L. i. 339; vel andlits sköpum, of well-formed features, Fms. viii. 238.

and-marki, ann-, and an-, a, m. [and-, mark], a fault, flaw, blemisb; ókostir eðr andmarkar, Grág. í. 313; ef annmarkar þeir verða á búfénu, 429; þú leyndir anmarka á honum, Nj. 8. β. metaph. in moral sense, β. metaph. in moral sense, trespasses; idran annmarka, 625. 90; used as a nickname, Gisl. 32. COMPDS: annmarka-fullr, adj. full of faults, Fms. vi. 110. annmarka-lauss, adj. faultless, Grag. i. 287.

and-maligr, adj. contentious, quarrelsome, Fms. ii. 154, Magn. 448. and-mæli, n. contradiction, 4. 25.

and-nes, n. and annes, [and-, nes], a promontory or point of land, Hkr. i. 313, Fms. viii. 147, Fær. 83.

and-oroa, adj. ind. [cp. Ulf. andavaurd; Germ. antwort], the Icel. use svar or andsvar (Engl. answer) in this sense; andorda only appears [and-and vanr, solitus], destitute, wanting; with gen., a. atu, lifs a., auds 110 (rare).

and-of, n. prob. = and-bof, prop. a paddling with the oars, so as to bring the boat to lie against wind and stream. Metaph., vio nokkuru andon. after a somewhat bard struggle, Fbr. 84. 2. a division in a sbip, fremsta rúm í skipi kallast a., Fél. ix. 3.

and-ramr, adj. (andremma, u, f.) baving foul breath, Sturl. i. 20.

ANDRAB, m. pl. [Ivar Aasen aander], snow shoes, in sing. prob. öndurr, cp. the compds ondor-dis and ondor-goo, used of the goddess Skadi, in the Edda; found only in Norway, where the word is still in use; in Icel, only remaining in the proverb snæliga snuggir kváðu Finnar, áttu andra fala. Fms. vii. 20. of a silly act, to sell one's snow shoes just when it begins to snow. Prob. a Finnish word: v. skið.

and-rá, f. [contr. = anddrag (?), mod. word], breath, in the phrase, i somu a., at the very same breath, instantly.

and-rooi, a, and androor, rs, m. the later form more freq. [and-, roal, pulling against stream and wind: Einarr atti gildan androda, E. bad a bard pull, Fms. vi. 379, v. l. andróðr; róa andróða, vii. 310, (andróðr, Hkr. iii. 440); beir tóku mikinn andróða, they bad a bard pull, Fms. viii. 438, v.l. andróðr; ok er þá sem þeir hafi andróða, Greg. 31; taka andróðra (acc. pl.), Fms. viii. 131, Hkr. iii. 440: cp. the proverb bioendr eigu byr en bráðir andróða, those who bide have a fair wind, those who are hasty a foul, festina lente, 'more baste worse speed;' the last part is omitted in old writers when quoting this proverb.

and-saka, 20, (annsaka, Bret. 162), [A. S. andsüc], to accuse, with acc., Al. 23; hann andsakaði (reprimanded) sveinana harðliga, Sturl. iii. 123. and-skoti and annskoti, a, m. [and-, adversus; skjóta, skoti], propan opponent, adversary, one who 'shoots from the opposite ranks;' lýðs várs ok laga várra, 655 xvi. B; þeir höfðu heyrt at andskotar þeirra vildi verja þeim vígi þingvöllinn, they bad beard that their adversaries would keep them by a fight from the parliament field, 1b. ch. 7; eigi mun 2. metaph. a ek vera í andskota flokki móti honum, Fms. v. 269. fiend, devil, transl, of Satan, now only used in that sense and in swearing; nú hefir a. fundit færi á at freista vovar, Post. 656; far í brott a., Επαγε Σατανα, 146; a. ok beir englar er eptir honum hurfu, Ver. 1; dökvir þik, anskoti (voc.), 623. 31, Hom. 108, 109, K. A. 20. COMPD: Andskota-flokkr, m. a band of enemies, Fms. v. 269, Grág. ii. 19.

and-spilli and andspjall, n. colloquy, discourse, Skm. 11, 12. and-spænis, adv., a. móti e-m, just opposite, the metaph. being taken from a target (spánn), Snót 127.

and-stefna, d, to stem against, Fas. iii. 50 (rare).

and-stroymi, n. prop. against the tide or current; metaph. adversity, Fr. and-streymr, adj. running against stream; metaph. difficult, cross; Sighvatr var heldr a. um eptirmálin, bard to come to terms with, Sturl. ii. 42; andstreym örlög, ill-fate, Al. 69; kvað Svein jafnan andstreyman verit hafa beim frændum, bad always set bis face against, Orkn. 300.

and-stygo, f. disgust; vera a. af e-u (now, at e-u), dislike, Róm. 265.

and-styggiligr, adj. odious, abominable, Hkr. iii. 273. and-styggr, adj. id., Hom. 102, 623. 31, Sks. 539.

and-svar and annsvar, n. [A.S. andsvaru; Hel. uses andvordi and andvordian = respondere; Ulf. andavaurd], an 'answer,' response, but in old writers esp. a decision; vera skjótr í andsvörum, prompt in deciding, Fms. i. 277; sagdist til hans hafa vikit um ansvarit, put the case under bis decision, vi. 354; munu vit tala fleira áðr ek veita því andsvör, before I decide, Ld. 80; in N. G. L. i. 86 it seems to mean protest, intervention: used of the echo in Al. 35. COMPD: andsvara-maor, m. a law term, a respondent, defender, Jb. 30.

and-svara and annsvara, að, to answer; þá annsvarar konungrinn, Fms. xi. 56, rare, and in a more formal sense than the simple verb svara. B. answer, to be responsible for; sem ek vil a, fyrir Guði, as I will answer before God, Ghl. 66; v. anza or ansa.

and-syptir, m. [ond, anima, or and-?], sobbing, sighing, bysterical fit, Hom. 121; [Engl. sob; Germ. seufzen.]

and-sælis, in common talk andhælis, adv. [soil], against the course of the sun (cp. the Scot. 'widdershins,' that is, going against the sunshine or the sun's light, a direction universally considered both in England and Scotland to be most unlucky; see the quot, in Jamieson sub voce), Isl. ii. 154, Rb. 134; esp. used of witches and 'uncanny' appearances; bat gékk öfugt um húsit ok a., it went backwards about the bouse and against the sun's course, Eb. 268, Gisl. 33, cp. Fs. (Vd.) 43, 59; hon gekk öfug a. um tréit, ok hafði þar yfir mörg röm ummæli, Grett. 151.

β. ansælis or andhælis is used of everything that goes backwards, wrong, or perversely; cp. andærr and andæris.

and-vaka, u, f. sleeplessness, dypunvia, caused by care or grief, Fms. i. 82; mostly used in pl. β. medic. agrypnia, Fél. ix. 189, Bs. i. y. wakefulness, Hom. 108. In the Mafhlio. visur, Eb. ch. 19, andvaka unda = a sword, the 'awakener' of wounds; (cp. vekja blob.) and-vaki, adj. ind. sleepless, now andvaka; liggja a., to lie awake, Al. 71, Barl. 10, Mag. 80.

and-vana and andvani, adj. ind., and now andvanr, adj.

Digitized by GOOSI

vils ok vesaldar, Fms. iii. 05; a. heilsu, Magn. 512; alls a., of the beggar Lazarus, Greg. 24; a. peirrar pjónustu, in want of, Post. 656 B; margs a., Bret. 174; a. eigna várra, baving lost our lands, 208. II. [önd, anima], now = exanimis; andvana lik, a lifeless corpse, Pass. 4. 23.

and-varoa, ao, to band over [cp. Dan. overantworde], rare, Fr. and-vari, a, m. I. a fish of prey, gurnard, Lat. miluus, Edda (Gl.); the name of the gurnard-shaped dwarf, Edda 72; the owner of a fatal ring, hence called andvara-nautr: cp. Skv. 1. 2, Andvari ek heiti ... margan hefi ek fors um farit. II. in mod. usage, a soft breeze, and metaph. watchfulness, vigilance, in such phrases as, hafa andvara á sér, Pass. 15. 6: andvara-lauss, adj. beedless; andvara-leysi, f. mostly in COMPD: andvara-gostr, m. an unwelcome guest, in the phrase, vera e-m a., Fbr. 7, 24 new Ed. (now freq.)

and-varp, n. the act of beaving a sob, sigh, 655 xx. 4, Sks. 39, 688. Freq. in theol. writers, Pass. 40. 7.

and-varpa, 20, to sob, sigh, breathe deeply, Fms. x. 338, Hom. 155, Sks. 225 (freq.)

and-varpan, f. sobbing, Hom. 124, Stj. 149.

and-vegi, throne, v. öndvegi. andverör, adverse, v. öndverör.

and-viori, n. [veðr], bead wind, Fbr. 67, Eg. 87, Fms. i. 203. and-virði, n. [verð], worth, equivalent, value, price; þá skal þat kaup ganga aptr en hinn hafi a. sitt, Gþl. 491; haf þú nú allt saman, skikkjuna ok a., Lv. 50; allt a. hvalsins, the whole value of, Greg. ii. 375; hann tekr þar á móti ofdrykkjuna ok hennar a., reward, Fms. viii. 251.

and-virki and annvirki, n. [önn, labour (?); cp. old Germ. antwerk = macbina]. I. in Icel, writers esp. used of bay and bay-stacks; ef eldr kemr í hús manns eðr a., K. p. K. 78, 82; færa, reiða a., to carry into the barn, Grag. ii. 122, Lv. 211; nema fé gangi í akr, engi, tödur eðr a., Grág. ii. 299; nautafjöldi var kominn í tún ok vildi brjóta a.,... tbrow down the cocks, Glúm. 342, Boll. 336; sendi Úlfarr menn upp á hálsinn at sjá um a. sitt þat er þar stóð; cp. little below, stórsæti, large ricks, Eb. 152. II. in Norway more generally used of crop, tillage, agricultural implements; gard pann sem um a. (barley ricks?) stendt, Ghl. 381; ef menn brenna a. manna, N.G.L. i. 244; a. (produce) manna hvatki sem er, 251, Jb. 312; þá skal hann þar etja öllu sínu a. á, 357; viðarköst, timbr, grindr, sleða eðr önnur a., implements (some MSS. read ambod), 258, v. l. Metaph., legit hafa mér a. nær garði, en at berjast vid pik fyrir sakleysi, business more urgent than to ..., Grett. 110 A.

and-vitni, n. a law term. I. Icel. contradictory testimony, such as was contrary to law. Thus defined: pat er a. er menn bera gegn pvi sem áðr er borit, vætti í gegn kvið, eðr kviðr í gegn vætti, svá at eigi má hvárttveggja rétt vera, Grág. i. 59, 60; it was liable to the lesser outlawry, skoluð menn a. bera ok hér á þingi, en ef menn bera, ok varðar þat útlegð, enda á þat einskis at meta, id.; en ef menn bera þat a. varðar pat fjörbaugsgarð, ii. 272; bera þeir a. guðunum, false witness against the II. Norse, where it appears to mean contragods, 655 xiii. B. 1. dictory testimony, such as was usually admissible; ok koma eigi a. móti, N.G.L. ii. 80, v. l.; svá er ef einn ber vitni með manni sem engi beri, en tveir sem tíu, ef maor uggir eigi a. móti, if one bears witness for a man it is as though no man bore witness for him, but two are as good as ten, if a man doth not fear that contradictory evidence will be brought against him, 150.

and-vigr, adj. in the phrase, vera e-m a., a match for . . ., as good a mordsman as ...; hann var eigi meirr enn a. einum þeirra bræðra, Fms. ii. 165; sagði Gellir sik fleirum mönnum a. en einum, Bs. i. 649.

and-yrði, n. pl. [v. andorða], objection, Sks. 76.

and-sefa, d, [v. andof; Ivar Aasen andova and andov], a boating term, to paddle against tide, current, and wind, so as to prevent the boat from difting astern; bå féll å stormr svá mikill, at þeir fengu eigi betr en andæft, bad notbing better than to lay to, Sturl. ii. 121; the vellum MSS, wrongly andhætt. 2. metaph. in the corrupt form andæpta, to reply feebly against; with dat., ekki er þess getið at þórðr andæpti pessari visu, Tb. returned no reply to this libel, Sturl. i. 22. Now absol. to speak in a disjointed way, to ejaculate; andæpti skáld upp úr móðu, fram eru feigs götur; skilja sköp, skamt er að landi, brosir bakki mót, of rhymed incoherent words of a poet in the act of sinking beneath the waves, vide Espól. Isl. Arb. the year 1823, Sigurðr Breiðfjörð in a poem in the Smamunir.

and-eris, adv. [ár, remus], crossly, perversely, a figure taken from pulling, Lex. Poet.; freq. in the corrupt form andhælis.

and-earligr, adj. cross, odd, Lex. Poët.; now andhælislegr.

- layage that stort.

ang, n. sweet savour, fragrance; med unad ok ang, Bs. ii. 10.

ANGA, 20, [Norse aanga; Swed. anga], to give out a sweet scent, odour; ilmr angar mjök sætliga, Mar. Fr.; now freq.

angan, f. sweet odour; angan Friggjar, the love of Frigga, Vsp. 54; some MSS. read angantyr, the sweetheart, bushand of Frigga.

angi, a, m. [Norse angie]. I. sweet odour; pvílikan ilm ok II. [cp. A.S. anga = aculeus, anga sem cedrus, Stj. 73, etc. has f stimulus], a spine or prickle, in the phrase, betta mal hefir anga, bas a sting, is not good to touch, Bs. ii. 52. Now often used in pl. and used of andertbalb. 9 blisyd milit ok andvari Horn Pt. op Pap, andvara ingan hefri um ok alls gamans a., Hkv. 2. 31, Völs. kviður, Lex. Poët.; alls a. nema 4 a sprout, fibre in fruits or plants; metaph. 2 spoilt boy is called angi. a pickle:' as to the root, cp. ongull, bamus, and the English angle: angilja, u, f. is, according to Bjorn, one of the bones of a fish.

angist, f. [Lat. angustia; Fr. angoisse; Engl. anguisb; Germ. angst], anguisb, esp. in theol. writers, Stj. 31, 51, 55, 106, 114. angistar-neyo, f. distress, Stj. angistar-ar, n. a year of misery, Stj. angistar-tími, a, m. an bour of pain, Stj.

angistast, ad (?), dep. to be vexed, Stj. 121.

ANGR, m. (now always n., Pass. 1.4, and so Bs. i. 195); gen. rs, [cp. Engl. anger, Lat. angor.] I. grief, sorrow; bann angr, Bær. 12; upp á minn a. ok skaða, Stj. 215; minn harm ok a., Bær. 14; með margskonar angri, Fms. x. 401; sorg eðr a., Háv. 51; ekki angr(s), Hkv. Hjörv. 10. in Norse local names freq. = bay, firth, e.g. Staf-angr, Hard-angr, etc. etc. (never in Icel.): kaupangr in Norway means a town, village, sinus mercatorius, [cp. the English 'Chipping' in Chipping Norton, Chipping Ongar, etc., and in London, 'Cheapside,'] these places being situated at the bottom of the firths: fjöror hardly ever occurs in local names in Norway, but always angr; cp. the pun on angr, moeror, and angr, sinus, Fas. ii. 91. The word is obsolete in the historical age and scarcely appears as a pure appellative, Edda (Gl.), Fms. xii, Munch's Map and Geogr. of Norway. [Root probably Lat. ang- in ango, angustus, angiportus.] angra, ad, to anger, grieve, vex, with acc., Fms. xi. 393; mik hefir angrad hungr ok frost, Fms. ii. 59: with dat., hvárt sem mér a. reykr eða bruni, Nj. 201, Stj. 21: impers. to be grieved, 2. honum mjök, Fas. ii. 296: more freq. with acc., Finnb. 234, Bs. i. 289; mik angrar mart hvað, B. reflex., angrask, to be angered; a. af e-u, to take offence at, Bs. i. 280; vid e-t, Fas. iii. 364. Y. part. angraor, used as adj. sorrowful, angry; reiðt ok a., El. 14; pronounced angráðr, concerned; in the phrase, gora ser angratt, um, to feel a pang, Gisl. 85. angran, f. sorrow, Fas. iii. 364. angra-fullr. adi. full of care. Str se angr-fullr, adj. full of care, Str. 55.

angr-gapi, a, m. a rude, silly fool, [the French gobemouche], Bs. i. 806, Mag. 64 (Ed.); sem a. at svara fólsku tignum mönnum, Sturl. iii. 138.

angr-lauss, adj. free from care, Lat. securus, Hkv. 2. 45.

angr-ligr, adj. sad, Bs. ii. 163. angr-ljóð, n. pl. funeral songs, dirges, neniae, Hkv. 2. 44.

angr-lyndi, n. [lund], concern, low spirits, Gisl. 85.

angr-mæðask, dd, dep. to be in low spirits, Fr.

angr-samligr, adj. and angr-samliga, adv. sorrowful, sorrowfully, Stj. 655 xxxii.

angr-samt, adj. full of grief, depressed, downcast, Stj., Barl., Vapn. 17; neut., e-m er a., to be in low spirits, Fms. viii. 29. B. troublesome, Stj.

angr-semd and angreemi, f. grief, Mar., Ver. 2. andr-valil m. sword: warut angr-væri, f. dejection, Hkr. iii. 253; now also angr-vær, adj. dejected. (angr-æði, f. moody temper, sullenness, Fr.

an-könn, f. [and-kenna], a flaw, fault, = anmarki, only as gen. pl. in the compos ankanna-fullr, adj. full of faults, Sks. 76 new Ed., v.l. ankanna-laust, n. adj. a law term, uncontested, used of an inheritance or possession where there is no legal claimant; skal hann eignast a, allt Noregs konungs veldi, be shall hold as his own all the power of Norway's king without a rival, Fagrsk. 97; Magnús konungr hafði þá ríki einnsaman ok a., i. e. there were no pretenders, Fms. x. 413.

ann- in several compds, v. and-.

ANNA, 28, [önn, labor; Ivar Aasen anna: the root is not found in Goth.] I. act. but rare; with dat. in the sense to be able to do; eg anna því ekki, I cannot manage that: absol., geldingar svá holdir, at peir anni a degi ofan i Odda, ellipt. = anni at ganga, that they can walk, II. dep. freq.: 1. with acc., a. a law term: in cases involving support, to take care, provide for, to support; bá skal módirin þau börn annast, Grág. i. 240; a. úmaga, 243, 294; a. sik, to support oneself, Fms. vi. 204; únegð, Rd. 234. \beta. more generally to take care of; mál þetta mun ek a., Glúm. 358. \psi. to engage in battle; tveir eare of; mál þetta mun ek a., Glúm. 358. Y. to engage in battle; tveir skyldi annast einnhvern þeirra; þeir Barði ok Steinn skyldi a. Ketil brúsa, Ísl. (Hvs.) ii. 356. 2. a. um e-t, to be busy about, trouble oneself about; a. um matreiðu, to cook, Nj. 75; hann a. ekki um bú, Glúm. 342, 359. annarligr, adj. strange, alien, Stj. 188; metaph., Skálda 193.

ANNARR, önnur, annat, adj.; pl. aðrir; gen. pl. annarra; dat. sing. f. annarri, [Ulf. anþar; A.S. oþar; Engl. other; Germ. andere; Swed. andra and annan: in Icel. assimilated, and, if followed by an r, the nn changes into 0.] $I. = \tilde{\epsilon} \tau \epsilon \rho o s$, alter: 1. one of two, the other; tveir formenn beirra, het annarr, the one of them, Fms. ix. 372; sá er af ödrum ber, be that gets the better of it, Nj. 15; a. augat, Fms. ii. 61; á ödrum fæti, Bs. i. 387, Edda 42; annarri hendi..., en annarri, with the one band ..., with the other, Eb. 250, 238; a 2012 hond, on the one side, Grág. i. 432, Nj. 50; a. kné, Bs. i. 680; til annarrar handar, Nj. 50; annarr-annarr, one-other; gullkross á öðrum en ari af gulli á öðrum, Fms. x. 15. Peculiar is the phrase, við annan, þriðja, fjórða ... mann, = being two, three, four ... altogether; vio annan, oneself and one besides, Eb. 60; cp. the Greek τρίτον ήμιτάλαντον, two talents and a balf, Germ. 2. secundus, a cardinal number, the second; sá madr 1b. ch. 1, 9; a. vetr aldrs hans, Bs. i. 415; höggr hann þegar annat (viz. högg), a second blow, Sturl. ii. 118. β. the next following, Lat. the following year, Bs. i. 437, 417; a. sumar eptir, 415, Fms. i. 237.

Digitized by GOOQ

Metaph. the second, next in value or rank, or the like; annat mest hof i 11.17 5 Noregi, the next greatest temple, Nj. 129; a. mestr höfdingi, the next in power, Isl. ii. 202; fjölmennast þing, annat eptir brennu Njáls, the fullest parliament next to that after the burning of N., 259; vitrastr lögmanna annarr en Skapti, the wisest speaker next after S., Bs. i. 28; a. mestr madr i Danmork, the next greatest man, Fms. xi. 51; annat bezt riki, v. 297; var annarr sterkastr er hét Freysteinn, the next strongest champion, Eb. 156; mestrar náttúru a. en borsteinn, Fs. 74, Fms. iv. 58. άλλοs, alius, one of many, other, both in sing. and pl.; hon lek & gólfinu við aðrar meyjar, Nj. 2; mart var með henni annara kvenna, i.e. many women besides, 50; jafnt sekr sem aðrir menn, as guilty as anybody else, Grág. i. 432; einginn annarra Knúts manna, none besides, Fms. x. 192; ef þeir gerði lönd sin helgari enn aðrar jarðir, ... than all other grounds, Eb. 20; er Þórólfr hafði tignað um fram aðra staði, ... more than any other place, id.; kalla þá jörð nú eigi helgari enn aðra, id.; tók Börkr þann kost er hann hafði öðrum ætlað, 40; Þórarinn vann eið ... ok tíu menn aðrir, Tb. and ten men be-sides, 48; þeir þóttust fyrir öðrum mönnum, ... over all otber people, 20; góðr drengr um fram alla menn aðra, 30; af eyjum ok öðru sjófangi, otber produce of the sea, 12; hann skal två menn nefna aðra en sik, ... besides bimself, Grag. i. 57; hann var örvari af fé enn nokkurr annarr, ... tban anybody else, Bret.; jafnt sem annat fúlgufé, as any other money, Grág. i. 2. other, different, in the proverb, öl er annarr madr, ale (a drunken man) is another man, is not the true man, never mind what be says, Grett. 08; the proverb is also used reversely, ol er innri (the inner) madr, 'in vino veritas:' annad er gæfa ok görfuleiki, luck and achievements are two things (a proverb); önnur var þá æfi, viz. the reverse of what it is now (a proverb), Grett. Q4 (in a verse); ætla ek bik annan mann en bú segir, Fms. xi. 192; hafi ber Danir heldr til annars gört, you deserve something different, worse than that, id.; varo bá annan veg, otherwise, Hkr. ii. 7; Björn varð þess víss at þau höfðu annan átrúnað, . . . different religion, Eb. 12. 8. like ol ἄλλοι, reliqui, the rest, the remains; þá er eigi sagt hversu öðrum var skipað, Nj. 50; at hönd b. sé fyrir innan n., en annarr likami hans (the rest of bis body) fyrir utan, 1812. 18. peated in comparative clauses: annarr-annarr, or connected with einn, hvárr, hverr, ymsir: gékk annarr af öðrum at biðja hann, alius ex alio, one after another, Bs. i. 128; hverja nott adra sem adra, every night in turn, Mag. 2; annat var ord Finns hardara enn annat, every word of Finn was barder than that which went before it, of a climax, Fms. v. 207: einn-annarr, alius atque alius, one and another, various; eina hluti ok aðra, Stj. 81; einar afleiðingar ok aðrar, Barl. 36; einir ok aðrir, various, Stj. 3; ef madr telr svá, at hann var einn edr annarr (that be was anybody, this or that man, viz. if he does not give the name precisely), ok er hinn eigi þá skyldr at rísa ór dómi, Grág. i. 28: ymsir-aðrir, in turn, now this, now the other; ymsir eiga högg í annars garð (a proverb); heita á helga menn, ok nefna ymsa ok aðra (now one, now another), Mar. 35: þágu bessir riddarar veizlur ymsir at öðrum, gave banquets one to another in turn, id.; færðu ymsir aðra niðr, now one was under water and now the other, of two men struggling whilst swimming, Fms. ii. 269: hvárr-annan, hveriraðra, each other; mæltu hvárir vel fyrir öðrum; hétu hvárir öðrum atförum: of a rapid succession, hvert vandræði kom á bak öðru, misfortunes never come singly, but one on the back of the other, Fr.; við þau tiðindi urðu allir gladir ok sagdi hverr odrum, one told the news to another, man to man, Fms. i. 21; þóttust hvárirtveggju meira vald at hafa í borginni en aðrir, 655 xvii. 1; hvárirtveggja—aðrir, ἀλλήλοιs, mutually, reciprocally; skulu nú h. ganga til ok veita öðrum grið, Nj. 100. IV. annat, n. used as a subst.; betta sem annat, as other things, Fas. i. 517; skaltu eigi pora annat, en, Nj. 74; ef eigi bæri a. til, unless something huppened, Bs. i. 350: at öllu annars, in everything else, Grag. ii. 141, K. b. K. 98: annars simply used adverb. = else = ella; now very freq. but very rare in old writers; stendr a. ríki þitt í mikilli hættu, Fas. i. 459, from a paper MS. and in a text most likely interpolated in the 17th century. COMPDS: annars-konar. gen. as adv. of another kind, Hkr. i. 148. annars-kostar, adv. else, otherwise; hvart er hann vill . . . eor a. vill hann, either be should prefer annars-stadar, adv. elsewbere, in other places; sem ..., K. Á. 58. a., as in other similar cases, Grag. i. 228. annars-vegar, adv. on the other hand, Fms. viii. 228, those on the opposite side. annarragen. pl. is used in annarra-bræðra, -bræðri, pl. fourth cousins, Grág. i. 285, ii. 172; cp. D. I. i. 185; v. næsta-bræðra = tbird cousins, þriðjabrædra = fifth cousins.

annarr-hvárr (or in two words), adj. pron. in dual sense, [A. S. obarbue dar], Lat. alteruter, either, one of the two: with gen., annan hvern beirra sona Skallagríms, Eg. 256; væntir mik at aðra hvára (acc. sing. fem., now aðra hverja) skipan taki brátt, Fms. viii. 444. Dual, aðrir hvárir, in a collect, sense, either party, Sd. 138; neut, used as adv., annaohvárt eda, either-or (Lat. aut-aut), Fms. i. 127, Skálda 171, Nj. 190.

var bar a. Islenzkr, Fms. xi. 129; i annat sinn, for the second time, Fras. iv. 81, Symb. 57; annathvert ore, every other (second) word, Nj. 33, Fas. i. 527: at ööruhverju, used as adv., every now and then, Eg. 52. Sturl. i. 82, Hkr. ii. 202.

> annarr-tveggja and annarr-tveggi, adj. or used adverbially, [-tveggja is a gen. form, -tveggi a nom.], plur. (dual) aðrirtveggju, dat. plur. -jum; in other cases tveggja, tveggi are indecl.:—one of twain, either: annattveggja beirra, Grag. i. 236; ok er annattveggja til, at vera her, hinn er annarr, there is choice of two, either to stay here, or ..., Fms. xi. 143, N. G. L. i. 117; ef annarrtveggi hefir haldit öðrum, Grág. i. 29: with gen., a. beirra, either of them, 149: dual, either of two sides, en ba eru peir skildir er adrirtveggju eru lengra i burt komnir en ördrag, but then are they parted when either of the twain is come farther away than an arrow's flight, of combatants on the battle-field, Grag. ii. 19: neut., annattveggja, used as adv.; annattveggja-eðr, eitber-or; a. vestna eðr batna, Clem. 50. The word is rare in old writers, and is now quite out of use; as adv. annadhvort-eda, either-or, is used.

> annarsligr = annarligr; annarstadar, elsewbere, v. annarsstadar. ANNALL, s, m. [Lat. annalis], an annal, record, chronological register, Bs. i. 789, 415.13. It sometimes, esp. in deeds, appears to mean bistories in general (cp. Lat. annales); annálar á tólf bókum norrænir, Vm. in a deed of the 14th century, where it probably means Sagas: fróðir annálar ok visindabækr, bistories, Pr. 402, Al. 29. The true old Icel. annalists cease in the year 1430, and were again resumed in the middle of the 16th > ann-boo, n. pl., rare in sing., proncd. amboo, [old Swed. ambud; Ivar Aasen ambo', from önn, labor (?)], agricultural implements, tools; a. nokkur, Dipl. v. 18, Jb. 258.

> ann-fetlar, m. pl. a sword belt or shield belt, = handfetlar, Lex. Poet. ann-frior, ar, m. [onn], 'work-peace,' work-truce, commonly during April and May, the time when there were to be no lawsuits (Norse), N. G. L. iii. 19, 94, 95.

> ann-kostr, m., also spelt ondkostr and onnkostr [onn], used only in the adverbial phrase, fyrir annkost (önn-önd-kost), wilfully, on purpose, Fms. viii. 367; en bó hafa ek fyrir önnkost (on purpose) svá ritað, Skálda 164; en þat er illvirki, er maðr vill spilla fé manna fyrir ö., Grág. i. 5, 130, 416, ii. 93, 94.

> ann-kvista, t, (= ann-kosta?), to take care (onn) of, Grag. ii. 251, απ. λεγ. spelt anquista; the word is somewhat doubtful.

ann-laust, n. adj. easily, without toil, Lex. Poët.

ann-rikt, n. adj. and annriki, n., eiga a., to be very busy, Rd. 283. ann-samligr, adj. toilsome, laborious, Sks. 549, 550.

ann-samt, n. adj. in the phrase, eiga a., to be busy, Rd. 283: v.l. for angreamt, full of cares, Fms. viii. 29.

ann-semo, f. business, trouble, concern; fá a. af e-u and bera a. fyrir e-u, to be troubled, concerned about, Bs. i. 686, 690.

annt, n. adj. [önn], in such phrases as, vera a. um e-t, to be busy, concerned, eager, anxious about, Hkr. i. 115; mörgum var a. heim, many were eager to get bome, Fins. xi. 278; hví mun honum svá a. at hitta mik, why is be so eager? Eg. 742; ekki er a. um pat, it is not pressing, Sd. 174; Hánefr kvad sér a. um daga (bad so much to do) svá at hann mátti þá eigi at vera, Rd. 241; vera annt til e-s, to be in a very great burry, eager for, Fms. ii: 150, 41. Compar. annara, in impers. phrases, to be more eager, Fms. ii. 38; mér er ckki a. at vita forlög min en fram koma, Fs. 19. Superl., vera annast til e-s, to be most eager, Fms. iii. 187: without prep., hvat er nu annt minum eingasyni, what bath my darling son at beart? Gg. 2. antifona, u, f. antiphon (Gr. word), Hom. 137. antiqua X. = aftigua 1. anti-kristr, m. Anti-Christ, Hom. 132, 71. antvarða, að, to band over (Germ. word), H. E. i. 435, in a Norse deed. anugr, adj., commonly onugr, cross, uncivil, froward; also onuglyndi, f. freaks, ill-temper.

anz, n. reply, now freq. in common language, v. following word. anza, ad, contr. form = andsvara, to pay attention to, take notice of; with dat., (peim) sem hón a. minnr ok vanrækir, cares less about, Stj. 95, 2. to reply, answer (now freq.); a. e-u and til es; illu mun furða, ef nokkurr a. til, where it means to reply, but without the notion of speaking, Fms. i. 194; Oddr anzaði ok heldr stutt, where it seems to mean to return a greeting, but silently by signs, Fb. i. 254; konungr a, því ekki, a reply to a letter, Fms. ix. 339; hann sat kyrr ok a. engu, Bárð. 180; Mirmant heyrði til ræðu hennar ok a. fá, Mirm. 69.

apa, ao, [Engl. to ape; Germ. äffen = deludere], to mock, make sport of; margan hefir audr apat (a proverb), 'auri sacra fames,' Sl. 34, cp. Hm. 74: pass., apask at e-u, to become the fool of, Sl. 62. Now, 2. e-t epter, to mock or imitate as an ape: also, a. e-n útúr, to pervert one's words in a mocking way.

apaldr, rs, m. pl. rar, [O. H. G. aphaltra; A. S. apuldre; Dan. abild; Swed. apel], doubtless a southern word, the inflective syllable dr being a mutilation of 'tré,' arbor, a word now almost extinct in Germany, (for a homely, common word such as 'tré' could not have been corda, either—or (Lat. aut—aut), Fms. i. 127, Skalda 171, Nj. 190.

annarr-hvorr, adj. pron. every other alternately; annan hvern dag, properly, means an apple-tree; fruits and fruit-trees were doubtless imported into Scandinavia from abroad; the word appears only in the later T senda, snúa, sækja, etc., where aptr almost answers to Lat. re-, remittere, heroic poems, such as the Hkv. Hjörv. 6; the verses in Sdm. 5 are in a different metre from the rest of the poem, and probably interpolated, Fas. i. 120; epli á apaldri, Sks. 106; tveir apaldar (with the radical r dropped), Fas. iii. 60; apaldrs flúr, Karl. 200, 311: as the etymological sense in the transmuted word soon got lost, a fresh pleonastic compound was COMPDS: apaldrs-garor, m. [Dan. abildmade, viz. apaldrs-tré. gaard], orchard of apple-trees, pior., D. N. apaldrs-klubba, u, f. club made of an a., El. 22. apaldrs-tré, n. apple-tree, bior. 58.

Digitized by GOOGLE

apal-grar, adj. dapple-gray, i. c. apple-gray, baving the streaky colour of an apple (cp. Fr. pommelé), of a horse, Nj. 274, Karl. 426, Landn. 93 (where it is used of a river horse); of an ox, uxi a. at lit, Ld. 120.

API, a, m. [A.S. apa; Erse apa; Bohem. op; Germ. affe; all of them dropping the initial guttural tenuis: Sanskr. kapi], an ape. It appears in early times in the metaph, sense of a fool in the old poem Hm. and even in a proverb; so also in the poems Fm. 11 and Gm. 34, vide Lex. Poët. A giant is in Edda (Gl.) called api, no doubt because of the stupid nature of the giants. Apavatn, a farm in Icel., probably got its name from a nickname of one of the settlers, at the end of the 9th century. In Hým. 20 a giant is called áttrunnr apa, the kinsman of apes. The passage in the Hm. verse 74 appears to be corrupt, and ought to be restored thus, margr veror af aurum api, the fool of earthly things, cp. the passage in Sl. 34, margan hefir audr apat, which is another version of the very same proverb. It is esp. used in the connection, osvinns-api or osvidra-api, a baboon, big fool, Gm. l. c., Fm. l. c.; (the passage in Hm. 123 ought perhaps to be restored to osvinns-apa or osvinnra-apa in a single word; the sense is no doubt the same in all these passages.) Rare in old prose in the proper sense of ape, vide however 673.55. apa-mynd, n. form of an ape, Th. 76.

APLI, a, m. in Edda (Gl.), a. an ox, or β. a borse, backney: apli according to Björn s.v. means the embryo of animals, e. g. apla-kalfr and apla-lamb, n. abortive lamb or calf; apalgengr, adj. a backney, a rough goer. Björn also mentions apalgryti, n. aspretum, (an unknown and dubious word.)

appella and appellera, ad, to cite, summon to the pope (eccles. Lat.), Fms. ix. 339, 486 (v.l.), x. 99, Bs. i. 776, K. Á. 218.

APB, adj. gen. rs (and thus not akin to api), cold, sbarp, cbilly; en aprasta hrið, sbarp fighting, O. T. 59; sterkastr ok aprastr við at eiga, the worst to deal with, pior. 183; enda voru allöpr tilbrigðin (cold, malignant), 89; því föru vér aprir, we feel sad, chilly, a verse written in 1047, Lex. Poët.: a word quite obsolete. (Björn however mentions it as a living word.) Mod. Icel. napr, adj. nearly in the same sense, cold, chilly, of weather; cold, spiteful, snappish, of temper: nepja, u, f. a chill, piercing cold: nepringr, m. id.: [are these words identical (?).]

aprligr, adj. cold, chilly, of weather; a. veor, Vapn. 11. MS. APTAN and aftan, s, m., dat. aptni, pl. aptnar, sometimes spelt apni and appar, [Hel. aband; Germ. abend; Engl. even, evening; in Ulf. we only find and anabti = Gr. οψέ, οψία; Swed. afton, Dan. aften, - as it is often spelt], evening; not very freq. in prose, where kveld is the common word. It prop. meant the time from 3 till 9 o'clock, like the Old English 'even;' midraptan (middle-eve) is 6 o'clock; at 9 o'clock the night sets in, v. náttmál: a distinction is made between aptan and kveld, einn aptan at kveldi, an afternoon when the kveld (twilight) sets in, Edda 35: but gener. = kveld, um aptaninn síð er myrkt var orðit, Fms. iv. 308, viii. 228, xi. 113; at aptni, 623. 55, Fms. viii. 201, Grag. i. 146; of aptna (apna), Grág. ii. 224; á öptnum, Bjarn. 23; midraptan, Hrasn. 9, Nj. 153; aptans bior oframs sok, a laggard's suit bides till even (a proverb).

aptan and aftan, adv. prop. from bebind, bebind, opp. to framan; augu a. i hnakka, N. G. L. i. 339; a. á milli herða, Vígl. 26; þá greip hann a. undir hendr honum (from behind), Eg. 747; hala sem leo, ok gadd í a., ... at the tip of the tail, Al. 168: now aptan i is opp. to framan i. fyrir a., as prep. with acc., bebind, opp. to fyrir framan; ek hjó varginn i sundr fyrir a. boguna, I bewed the wolf in sunder, just behind the withers, Nj. 95; standa fyrir a., to stand behind, Fas. ii. 516. β. a. at, with dat.; ganga, koma a. at e-m, to approach from behind.

aptan-drykkja, u, f. an evening carouse, Pr. 419.

aptan-langt, n. adj. even-long, all the evening, Karl. 95.

aptan-skæra, u, f. twilight, Lat. crepusculum (cp. morginskæra, dawn, aurora), Sighvat (in a verse).

aptan-stjarna, u, f. the evening star, Al. 54, Stj. 92; now kveldaptan-songr, m. even-song, evening service, Fms. vii. 152, K. p. K. 58. aptari and aptastr, compar. and superl. latter, posterior, and last, v.

aptarla and aptarliga, adv. behind, far in the rear, Lex. Poët. (freq.) aptna, ad, to become evening; partil at aptnadi, Fms. iii. 181. Dep., þá aptnaðisk, Greg. 51; now kvelda.

APTR and aftr (aptar, N. G. L. i. 347), adv., compar. aptar, superl. aptast, [Ulf. aftra = πάλιν], the spelling with p is borne out by the Gr. I. Loc. back, back again: 1. WITH MOTION, CONnected with verbs denoting to go or move, such as fara, ganga, koma, leida, | aptrivarf the movement away from sin, or the repentance put into act.

reducere, reverti . . .; gefa a., reddere; bera a., refellere; kalla a., revocare; reka a., repellere: a. hverfr lygi þá er sönnu mætir (a proverb), a lie turns back when it meets truth, Bs. i. 639. 'aptr' implies a notion a loco or in locum, 'eptir' that of remaining in loco; thus skila a, means remittere; skilja eptir, relinquere; taka a., recipere, in a bad sense; taka eptir, animum attendere; fara a., redire; vera e., remanere, etc.; fara, snúa, koma, senda, sækja, hverfa a., Nj. 260, 281, Fms. x. 395, iv. 300, Edda 30, Eg. 271, Eb. 4, Fs. 6; færa a., to repay, N. G. L. i. 20; snúast a., Lækn. 472. Without actual motion,—as of sounds; peir heyrou a. i rjóðrit óp, they beard shouting behind them, Fms. iv. 300; nú skal eigi prestr ganga svá langt frá kirkju at hann heyri eigi klokkur hljoð aftar (= aftr), be shall not go out of the sound of the bells, N.G.L. B. backwards; fram ok a., to and fro (freq.); reid hann i. 347. sudr aptr, rode back again, Nj. 29; aptr ú bak, supine, bent or turned back, Eg. 380; þeir settu hnakka á bak sér a., bent their necks backwards in order to be able to see, Edda 30; skreiðast a. af hestinum, to slip down backwards from the croup of a borse, to dismount, Fs. 65. connected with many verbs such as, lata, laka a., to close, shut, opp. to láta, lúka upp, Fær. 264, Eg. 7, Landn. 162; in a reverse sense to Lat. 2. without motion = aptan, recludere, reservere, rescindere, resolvere. the bind part, the back of anything; but er made fram (superne), en dyr a., the fore part a man, the bind part a beast, 673. 2; sidan lagdi hann at tennrnar a. við huppinn, be caught the bip with bis teeth, Vigl. 21. The English aft when used of a ship; bæði a. ok fram, stern and stem (of a ship), Fms. ix. 310; Sigurdr sat a. ú kistunni, sate aft on the stern-chest, vii. 201; a. ok frammi, of the parts of the body (of a seal), Sks. 179. Compar. aptarr, farther back, Fins. vi. 76. II. TEMP. again, πάλιν, iterum: this use of the word, general as it is at present, hardly appears in old writers; they seem to have had no special expression for again, but instead of it said síðan, enn, or used a periphrase, á nýja leik, öðru sinni, annat sinn, or some other substitute. It is, however, very freq. in Goth. aftra = πάλιν, Swed. âter, Dan. atter; some passages in the Sagas come near to the mod, use, e. g. bæta a., restituere, to give back (but not temp.); segja fridi a., to recal, N. G. L. i. 103; hann mælti at engi mundi þann fald a. falda, El. 20, uncertain whether loc. (backward) or iterum, most likely the former. It is now used in a great many compounds, answering to Lat. re-, cp. also endr. aph-a-dak-traken aptra, ad, to take back, binder, withdraw; with dat., a. ferd simi, to sit & f. desist from, delay, Fms. x. 17; þorgrímr bað þá niðr setjast, ok skal eigi bodi a., i.e. you shall be welcome as before, Valla L. 217; eigi mun ck a. mér (besitate) at þessu, Grett. 116 A; hversu þeir öptruðu sér þá er þeir kómu à bingit, bow they besitated, wavered, withdrew, Bs. i. 741, Flor. 7: now a. e-u is to binder, probibit.

aptran and optrun, f. a revoking, renouncing, keeping back, 655 xxvii. aptr-bati, adj. ind. convalescent, on the road to recovery, Al. 150, Korm. 220: now used as a masc. (-bati, a, m.), vera i aptrbata, to be getting better, Fas. iii. 524.

aptr-beiðiligr, adj. reciprocal, Skálda 195.

aptr-borinn, adj. part. regenerate, born again; bars hon aptrborin aldri verdi, the sense is doubtful, it seems to mean = endrborin, regenerate; it will suit the context only if we suppose that suicides could not be born again; they certainly could walk again, v. aptrganga. Högni seems to fear that, if she died a natural death, Brynhilda would perhaps be endrborin, Skv. 3. 44.

aptr-byggi, ja, m., esp. in pl. stern-sitters (opp. to frambyggjar) in a sbip of war, Fms. ii. 312, Hkr. iii. 243.

aptr-drattr, m. the undertow, outward suck of the tide, Barl. 130.

aptr-dropa, u, f. relapse, sbock, adversity; medan þeir vissu sér enga ván a., Bs. i. 752, Finnb. 312.

aptr-elding, f. = clding, dawning, Anal. 193. aptr-ferð and aptr-för, f. return, Eg. 279.

aptr-færsla, u, i. bringing back, Gpl. 361.

aptr-ganga, u, f. [ganga aptr], a gbost, apparition, the French revenant; about this superstition vide Isl. pioss. i. 222-317, Grett. ch. 34-37 (the ghost Glam), Eb. ch. 34, 50-55, 63 (Thorolf Bægifót), Ld. ch. 17, Sd. ch. 17-22, 30 (Klaufi), Háv. 41, Flóam. ch. 28, etc. etc.

aptr-gangr, m. = aptrganga, Grett. ch. 78 new Ed.

aptr-gjald, n. repayment, Bs. i. 734.

aptr-hald, n. a checking, bolding back. COMPD: aptrhalds-maor. m. who impedes a thing, Bs. i. 733.

aptr-hlaup, n. a burling back, recoil, Fs. 158.

aptr-hnekking, f. a bending backwards, metaph., Fms. ix. 500. aptr-hryggr, m. the chine, the lower part of the back, of a slaughtered animal, Dipl. vi.

aptr-hvarf, n. a turning back, return, Sturl. ii. 16; illr aftrhvarfs, disinclined to face the enemy again, Fms. vii. 325. B. relapse, Fms. ii. 47. where it is used of apostasy. Since the Reformation always used by theologians in a good sense, repentance, turning away from sin; idran ok a. are freq. used together, idran being repentance, the internal condition,

```
= opes; Hel. arf and urf; Ormul. errfe; v. Ihre, Glossar., and Grimm R. A. aptr-kall, n. withdrawal, recalling, Fr.
                                                                                           p. 467. Edda (Gl.) also mentions an arfi or arfr, bos, v. above.
           aptr-kast, n. a burling back, repulse, Stj. 288. inberitance, patrimony; taka arf eptir e-n, Grag. i. 170, 178; hon a aptr-kemba, u, f. one whose bair is combed back, Finnb. 250.
                                                                                           allan arf eptir mik, is my sole beir, Nj. 3, Eb. 162, Gpl. 252.
           aptr-kváma and later form aptrkoma, u, f. return, coming back, Sks. 550 B; Fms. xi. 312, a vellum MS. of the end of the 15th century, a bull, v. above.
                                                                                           below, Ghl. 267, Grág. i. 170.
         has aptrkoma.
           aptr-kvemt, n. adj. return from exile, used substantively as a law of inberitance, Grag. i. 170.
         term in the phrase, eiga (eigi) a., of a temporary or lifelong exile; bat varðar skóggang...eigi eigi a. nema lof biskupa ok lögréttumanna faist framar, ... not to be suffered to return from exile unless the leave of the bishops and the legislature be first got, Grag. i. 347: in a gener. sense, synist mér sem engum várum sé a., ef hans er eigi hefnt, it seems to me that not one of us can shew his face again, if he be not revenged, Glum. 332.
           aptr-lausn, f. redemption, ransom, Hom. 118; a law term, right of redeeming, Gpl. 304: hence COMPD aptrlausnar-joro, f. land which is redeemable, N. G. L. i. 344.
           aptr-mjór, adj. tapering bebind, Edda 40 (of the salmon's tail).
           aptr-mundr, m. [munr], in the phrase, vera a. at e-u, to want a thing back again, Fas. iii. 278.
           aptr-reka and aptr-reki, adj. ind. (navig.), verðr a., to be driven back by stress of weather, Landn. 148, Bs. i. 76, Grág. i. 274; 2. skip, Ann.
          1347, Bs. Laur. S. aptr-rekstr, rs, m. a driving back, repulse, Grag. ii. 230 (of cattle cipan - grazing).
           aptr-ajá, f. regret, longing, v. eptirsjá.
           aptr-velting, f. recoil, rolling back, Stj. 49.
           ap-ynja, u, f. [old Swed. epin], a she-ape, Stj. 68, 95, Sks. 115.
           AR, n. (qs. arð?), an atom in a sunbeam, mote, Germ. sonnenstäubchen, vide Vídal. Post. 276 (Ed. 1829), Njóla. . Vídal 1. 276 aroa, u, f. medic. scabrum, a little wart.
           aroga, ao, to make upright, and aroigr, adj. erect, arduus, v. öro-.
           ARDR, rs, m. [Lat. aratrum; Gael. arad; cp. erja, Ulf. arjan, arare;
          A. S. erian; Old Engl. ear, etc.; in Norse ar or al is a small plough], a sort of plough, probably different in size and shape from plogr, which is a later word, of foreign stamp, as are all that have p for their initial letter. The poem Rm. distinguishes between both, göra arðr (acc.) and keyra plóg, 19.
The first colonisers of Iceland used arðr, as shewn by Landn. 35 (relating events of the year 875); hann átti einn oxa, ok lét hann þrælana draga arðrinn; eykr fyrir plógi eðr arðri (plough or ard), N.G.L.ii. 115; ef maðr stel jarni af arðri eðr plógi, id.; höggva má maðr sér til plógs eðr arðs (gen. dropping the radical r), id.; draga aror, Al. 52; arori (dat.), Karl. 471, Mar.
          (Fr.), Stj.: um allt þat er miklu varðar er betri sígandi arðr en svífandi (emend. of Dr. Hallgrim Scheving), a proverb, better a slow but deep trenching plough than a quick and shallow one, Bs. i. 139; the old aror was probably bulky and heavy.
                                         2. metaph. in Icel. at present aror (gen. ards, arðar, Snót 90), as well as plógr, means gain, produce, profit: arðsamr, adj. profitable. compp: aros-geldingr, m. a plougb-ox, Fms. vii. 21.
           aror-for, f. a plough-furrow, trench, Stj. 593, I Kings xviii. 32. aror-gangr, m. a coulter, goad, N. G. L. iii. 198.
           aror-járn, n. a coulter, ox goad, Stj. 386, Judges iii. 31.
           arőr-oxi, a, m. a plougb-ox, Grág, i. 502, Jb. 346. arfa, u, f. [Ulf. arbio], an beiress, N. G. L. i. 191 (rare).
           arf-borinn, adj. part., prop. a legitimate son or daughter, Fms. i. 86; defined, så er a. er kominn er til alls réttar, N. G. L. ii. 211. Freq. spelt arborinn by suppressing the f (so N.G.L. ii. 50), and used in Norse law of a freeman, v. the quotation above from N.G.L., which clearly shews the identity of the two words), i. 171; algildis vitni tveggja manna ár-borinna ok skilvænna, ii. 211: the alliterated phrase alnir ok árbornir (the phrase aldir og óbornir may be a corruption from arb.), freeborn and freebred, 310. The passage in Stor. verse 2 is in Lex. Poet. explained by olim ablatus; the poet probably meant to say genuine, pure, in a metaph, sense, of the true poetic beverage, not the adulterated one, mentioned in the Edda 49; the cup from the right cask.
           arf-gengr, adj. entitled to inherit, legitimate heir, Grag. i. 178, Eg. 345. arfi, a, m. [Ulf. arbia; O. H. G. arpis, erpo; Germ. erbe; Hel. abaro = filius; A.S. eafora, afora per metath.], an beir, beiress (and poët. a son in gener.): with gen. pers., arfar veganda, bis beirs, Gbl. 131; bar næst var Osk hennar a., ber beiress, beir to ber property, Ld. 58; Gudridt ok porgeror lögligir arfar (beiresses) Sölva, Dipl. v. I: with gen. of the thing, er hann þá a, hvársttveggja, beir of both things, Grág. i. 221; a. óðala, Gþl.
          294; a. at e-u, beir to a property, Sturl. ii. 197. Not freq., erfingi being II. an ox, bull, Edda (Gl.), vide arfr.
          the common word.
           ARFI, sometimes spelt arbi, a, m. chickweed, alsine media; arfa-sáta, u, f. a weed rick, Nj. 194.
```

arfingi, ja, m. an beir, Eg. (in a verse), vide erfingi.

arf-kaup, n. sum paid for inberitance, Grug. i. 200. arf-leiða, dd, to adopt as an beir, = ættleiða, Jb. 144 A.

ARFR, s, m. [Ulf. arbi, neut.; A. S. yrfe.] It originally meant cattle, arf-nyti, ja, m. (poët.) an beir, Eb. (in a verse).

arf-leiðing, f. adoption, Ann. 1271.

```
arf-ræning, f. id., Mar. 656.
                                                                            arf-ræningr, m. one stripped of bis inberitance, Al. 105.
                                                                           arf-sal, n. cession of right of inheritance, Grag. i. 205, 225, 227, (cp. branderfo, Dan. fledföre, mod. Icel. prófenta, and gefa prófentu sína); a law term, to band over one's own property to another man on condition of getting succour and support for life. In the time of the Commonwealth, arfsal had a political sense, and was a sort of 'clientela;' the chiefs caused rich persons, freedmen, and monied men of low birth to bequeath them all their wealth, and in return supported them in lawsuits during life. Such is the case in Vápn. 13, Hænsaþór. S. ch. 7, Eb. ch. 31; eptir þat handsalaði Ulfarr (a wealthy freedman) Arnkatli fé sitt allt, ok gerðist hann (viz. Arnkell) þá varnaðarmaðr (protector) Úlfars: v. also þórð. S., hann bjó á landi Skeggja ok hafði görzt arfsalsmaðr hans (bis client), 50: it was humiliating; engar mátti hann (the bishop) ölmusur gefa af líkamlegri eign, heldr var hann haldinn sem arfsalsmaðr, Sturl. ii. 119. To the chiefs in olden times it was a source of wealth and influence, often in an COMPDS: arfsals-maör, m., v. above. arfsals-máldagi, unfair wav.
                                                                          a, m. a deed concerning arfsal, Grag. i. 227.
                                                                            arf-skipti, n. sbaring of arfr, Grag. i. 172, Ghl. 266, Fas. iii. 30.
                                                                            arf-skot, n. fraud, cheating in matters of inheritance, Eb. 178, Grag. i.
                                                                          202, 203, 267.
                                                                            arf-sokn, f. a suit in a case of arfr, Gbl. 263.
                                                                            arf-stóll, m. an bereditary throne, Eg. (in a verse).
                                                                            arf-svik, n. pl. fraud, cheating in matters of arfr. Eb. 178, Gbl. 254, 202.
                                                                            arf-svipting, f. disinberiting, cheating in matters of arfr, Stj. 425.
                                                                            arf-tak, n. and arf-taka, u, f. the act of receiving arfsal; taka e-n arftaki, COMPD: arftöku-maör, m. an beir, suc-Grág. i. 267, 268, 187, 229. cessor to an inberitance, Grag. i. 62, Sturl. i. 98, Fms. v. 53. arf-takari, a, m. and arf-taki, a, m. = arftökumaðr, Jb. 148 A, N. G. L.
                                                                           i. 234, Barl. 199.
                                                                            arf-tekinn, adj. part. taken by inberitance, Fms. xi. 306.
                                                                            arf-tekja, u, f. = arftaka, Grág. i. 219.
                                                                                                                       compo: arftekju-land, n.
                                                                           land taken by inberitance, patrimony, Fins. i. 117.
                                                                            arf-tæki, n. = arftaka, Stj. 232.
                                                                            arf-tækr, adj. = arfgengr, Eg. 343.
                                                                            arfuni, a, m. [an old obsol. form], an beir, Edda 108 and in the compd skaporfoni (the vowel change is caused by the following o), legal beir, q. v. arf-van, f. bereditary expectancy, Grag. i. 200, Jb. 177, Sturl. i. 94 arf-voror, m. [A.S. yrfeveard; Hel. erbivard], (poët.) an beir, Lex. Poët. arf-begi, ja, m. [cp. Ulf. arbinumja], (poët.) an beir, Id. 28.
                                                                            arga-fas, n. [argr, craven, and fas = flas by dropping the 1(?); flas, n. means praecipitatio, and flasa, ad, precipitare, which are common words; this etymology is confirmed by the spelling of the word in Gbl. 188, where some of the MSS. have fans or fins, the last is perh. a false reading = flas; fas, n. gait, manner, is a modern word: v. Pál Vídal. in Skýr.; his etymology, however, is doubtless bad], a law term, a feint, a cowardly assault, an aiming at one's body and drawing deadly weapons without carrying the threat into effect, termed 'a coward's assault;' in Icel. it was punishable by fjörbaugsgarðr, cp. Grág.; ef maðr mundar til manns ok stöðvar sjálfr, ok varðar fjörbaugsgarð, ok á hinn eigi vígt í gegn (the injured party must not kill the offender on the spot) skal stefma heiman ok kveðja til níu heimilisbúa þess á þingi er sóttr er, Vsl. ch. 90:
                                                                          ef madr hleypr at manni, ok heldr hann ser sjálfr; þat er a. ok er þat sektalaust (liable to no punishment, only a dishonourable act; so the Norse law), N. G. L. i. 164, Ghl. 188. arga-skattr, m. an abusive word, a dog's tax, Ölkofr. 36.
                                                                            arg-hola, u, f. scortum, Hb. 31 (1865).
                                                                            ARGR, adj. [Paul Diac. inertem et inutilem et vulgari verbo 'arga,' 6. 24; A.S. earg, ignavus; the Scottish arch or argh, v. Jamieson sub voce; and the mod. Engl. arch, archness; Germ. arg; Gr. aργόε], emasculate, effeminate, an abusive term; hefir þú börn borit, ok hugða ek þat args aðal, Ls. 24; mik munu æsir argan kalla, ef ek bindast læt brúðarlíni, þkv. 17: it is more abusive than thrall, cp. the proverb, prællinn hefnir en argr aldri, a thrall takes revenge, but not the a., Grett.
                                                                           92; and, argr er sá sem engu verst (a proverb), be is truly an 'argr'wbo does not defend bimself; argr and ragr are synonymous, vide the Grag.: þau eru orð þrjú er skóggang varða öll, ef maðr kallar mann ragan eðr stroðinn eðr sorðinn, ii. 147.
                                                                                                             2. metaph. a wretch, craven, coward; örg vættr, Fas. ii. 254, Fs. 147: cp. ergi and úargr. arg-skapr, m. cowardice, cowardliness, Fas. i. 487 (in a verse).
                                                                            arg-vitugr, adj. infamous, (cant.)
                                                                            ARI, a, m. [Ulf. ara; O. H. G. aro; cp. Germ. adler = edel-aro; cp. pecus, pecunia, as may be inferred from the A.S. orf = pecus, cattle, and yrfe also the lengthened Icel. form orn, A.S. earn, Engl. earn], an eagle, rare and
```

COMPDS: arfs-skipti, n. and arfs-sókn, f., v. arf-

arf-ran, n. injustice, cheating in matters of inheritance, Hav. 52.

arfa-pattr, m. section of law treating mostly in poetry; örn is the common word; Hom. 89, Stj. 71, Al. 160. Sense of Lat. inops, but only metaph. (as in Goth.), viz.: In the Gloss, Royal Libr. Old Coll. Copenh. 1812 aguila is translated by ari. compo: ara-hreiðr, n. an eyrie, nest of an eagle, Fagrsk. 146.

Ari is also a common pr. name.

General A. 160. Sense of Lat. inops, but only metaph. (as in Goth.), viz.: poor, in a good sense (as in Germ.); pær armu sálur, poor sá armi maðr, poor fellow, 118.

2. Icel. in a bad wicked, nearly always used so, where armr is an abusive, au

An is also a common pr. name.

arin-dómr, m. gossip, 'judgment at the bearth-side,' Hem.; now palldómr.

arin-eldr, m. bearth-fire, Lat. focus; peir eru a., there are three bearths arin-elja, u, f. a concubine if kept at home, med. Lat. focaria; the sense defined in N. G. L. i. 356, 16 (Norse).

(in a Norse dwelling), Gpl. 376.

arin-greypr, adj. occurs thrice in poetry as an epithet of the benches in a hall and of a helmet, encompassing the hearth, or shaped as an eagle's bill, Akv. 1, 3, 17.

arin-haukr, m. a chimney-sitter, an old man; in the phrase, áttræðr er 2. ok eldaskári, an octogenarian is an 2. and a poker, Lex. Run.

arin-hella, u, f. [Norse aarhelle or aarstadhyll, the pavement around the bearth], bearth-stone; i a. par i stofunni, Bs. i. 680. Now in Icel. used in nursery tales of treasures or the like hidden under the arinhella.

ARINN, s, m., dat. aarni = árni, Fs. 42, Rm. 2, [a word still freq. in stime Denmark and in Norway; Dan. arne, arnested; Norse aurstad, Ivar Assen: in Icel. it is very rare], a bearth, Fs. (Vd.) 42; kom madr um nóttina ok tók glæðr af árni, Sturl. ii. 101; þrjá vissa ek elda (fires), prjá vissa ek arna (bearth-stones), Gh. 10; mæli malts af arni hverjum, viz. three for each farm (cp. arineldar, Ghl. 376), Hkr. ii. 384, Fms. x. 398, v. 101.

2. as a law term, used in the phrase, fara eldi ok arni, to remove one's bomestead, fire and hearth together, Grag. ii. 253, 334 (where iarni is a corrupt reading). Now in Icel. eldstó. an elevated balcony, pavement, story, scaffold; stafir fjórir stóðu upp ok syllur upp í milli, ok var þar a. á, Fms. viii. 429; í miðju húsinu var a. vior (raised floor) ... en uppi á arninum var sæng mikil, v. 339, Karl. 190, Stj. 308. β. of a ship, a batchway, Edda (Gl.) COMPDS: arinshorn, n. chimney-piece, chimney-corner; hann a mold at taka sem i lögum er mælt, taka at arinshornum fjórum ok í öndvegis sæti, of an act of conveyance, N.G. L. i. 96, cp. Eb. ch. 4, Landn. 254: arinn is symbolical of the sacredness of home, just as stalli is of a temple, or an altar of a church: the phrase, at drekka at arinshorni, Hkr. i. 43, reminds one of the large chimney-corners in old English farms. arins-járn, n. iron belonging to a bearth, a poker, used in ordeals (járnburðr); karlmaðr skal ganga til arinsjárns en kona til ketiltaks, the man shall betake him to the poker and the woman shall grasp the kettle, N. G. L. i. 389.

ARKA, ad, to limp, bobble, of a sluggish gait; lata arka at audnu, to let smatters take their own course, slow and sure like fate, Nj. 185. v. l., Am. 96.

arka- or arkar-, what belongs to a chest, v. örk.

arma, u, f. misery (ἄπ. λεγ.), Mart. 123; Martinus sá örmu á héranum; now, sjá aumr á e-m, to feel pity for: cp. Germ. arm (poor, wretched). arm-baugr, m. an armlet, Ls. 13.

arm-brysti, n. [Engl. armbrust; old Dan. arburst], a cross bow, Fas. i. 503 (for. word).

1. 503 (tor. word). arm-fylking, f. a wing (armr) of an army, Fms. x. 403; more freq. fylkingar armr.

armingi, ja, m., in Norse sense, a poor fellow, Hom. 117, 119: in Icel.

arm-leggr, jar, and s, m. the arm, lacertus; hann fékk hvergi sveigt hans armleggi, Grett. 61; ofan eptir a. mjök at ölnboga, Sturl. i. 71, Symb. 25, Stj. 265. Exod. vi. 1 (with a strong band), Anecd. 4 (where it is opp. to handleggr, the fore arm). Sometimes armleggr and handleggr are used indifferently; ek mun bera þik á handlegg mér, I will carry thee on my arm; but below, ok bar þær í vinstra a. sér, Grett. ch. 67, Karl. 517.

armliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. pitifully, Fms. iv. 56, Gkv. 3. 11.

ARMR, s, m. [Lat. armus; Ulf. arms; Engl. arm; A.S. earm; 1. Lat. brachium in general, the arm from the shoulder to the wrist; sometimes also used partic, of the upper arm or fore arm; the context only can decide. It is rare in Icel.; in prose armleggr and handleggr are more common; but it is often used in dignified style or in a metaph. sense; undir brynstúkuna í arminn, lacertus (?), Fms. viii. 387; gullhringr á armi, in the wrist, Odd. 18; þá lýsti af höndum hennar bzdi lopt ok lög, Edda 22, where the corresponding passage of the poem Skm. reads armar, armar lýsa, ber arms beamed, spread light. β. poët. phrases; sofa e-m á armi, leggja arma um, to embrace, cp. Germ. umarmen; koma á arm e-m, of a woman marrying, to come into one's embraces, Fms. xi. 100, Lex. Poët. Rings and bracelets are poët. called armlog, armblik, armlinnr, armsól, armsvell, the light, snake, ice of the arm or wrist; arms solbrunninn, the sunburnt arms, Rm. 10. 2. metaph. the wing of a body, opp. to its centre; armar úthafsins, the arms of the ocean ... the bays and firths, Rb. 466; armar krossins, Hom. 103; a wing of a house or building, Sturl. ii. 50; borgar armr, the flanks of a castle, Fms. v. 280; the ends, extremities of a wave, Bs. ii. 50; the yard-arm, Mag. 6; esp. used of the wings of a bost in battle (fylkingar armr), i annan arm fylkingar, Fms. i. 169, 170, vi. 406, 413, Fær. 81; in a seafight, of the line of ships, Fms. vi. 315; the ends of a bed, sofa upp i arminn, opp. to til fóta; and in many other cases.

ARMER, adj. [Ulf. arms; A. S. earm; Germ. arm], never occurs in the by the time of Thorodd and Ari the pure old pronunciation was lost, or is sense of Lat. inops, but only metaph. (as in Goth.), viz.:

1. Norse, poor, in a good sense (as in Germ.); pær armu sálur, poor souls, Hom. 144; sá armi maðr, poor fellow, 118.

2. Icel. in a bad sense, wretebed, wicked, nearly always used so, where armr is an abusive, aumr a benevolent term: used in swearing, at fara, vera, manna armastr; på mælti hann til Sigvalda, at hann skyldi fara m. a., Fms. xi. 141; en allir mæltu, at Egill skyldi fara allra manna a., Eg. 699; enn armi Bjarngrímr, the wretch, scoundrel Bjarngrím, Fær. 239; völvan arma, the accursed witch, Fms. iii. 214; betta arma naut, Fas. iii. 498; örm vættr, Gkv. 1. 22, þkv. 29, Sdm. 23, Og. 32; en arma kerling, the vile old witch, Grett. 154, Fas. i. 60; Inn armi, in exclamations, the wretch!

arm-skapaör, adj. part. [A.S. earmsceapen], poor, miserable, missbapen, Hom. 114, 107 (Norse).

arm-vitugr, adj. (in Mart. 123 spelt harmv.), charitable, compassionate; Glúmr er a. ok vel skapi farinn, Rd. 308; er hann lítt a., bard-bearted, Sturl. iii. 209; a. við fátækja menn, Bs. i. 356.

ar-mæða, v. f. (qs. ör-mæða), distress, toil, Fas. i. 405, Bs. i. 849. arnar-, belonging to an eagle, v. örn. Att höfði reme hað Atukell reme arning, f. [cr]a, arare], earing, tillage, plougbing, Bs. i. 350, 732.17.
arn-súgr, m. (an āx. λeγ.) periphr. from the poem Haustlöng, the 'sough' (Scot.) or rushing sound caused by the flight of an eagle (örn), Edda 16.
ARR, n. [Sanskr. arus, Engl. and Scot. arr], a scar, v. örr.

ars, m. podex, (later by metath. rass, Bs. i. 504. l. 2, etc.), Sturl. ii. 17, 39 C; ekki er pat sem annarr smali, engi er skaptr fyrir 2. aptr hali, not like other cattle, baving no tail, in a libel of the year 1213, Sturl. ii. 17. COMPD: ars-gorn, f. gut of the anus, Nj. rass.

ARTA, u, f. 2 bird, = Swed. arta, anas querquedula Linn., Edda (Gl.) articulara, 20, to articulate (Lat. word), Stj.

asalabia, u, f. an animal, perh. the sable; mjúkt skinn af dýri því er a. heitir, Bær. 19.

ASI, a, m. burry (mod. word); cp. yss and ös.

ASKA, u, f. [a common Teut. word], asbes, lit. and metaph., Fms. i. 9, Stj. 208; mold ok aska, Nj. 161, 208; dust eitt ok a., 655 xi. 3: pl. öskum, Stj. 74 (transl. from Latin). compos: ösku-bakaör, part. baked in asbes, Stj. 393. Judg. vii. ösku-dagr, m. Asb-Wednesday, Fms. viii: also ösku-óðinsdagr, Stj. 40. ösku-dreiför. ösku-dyngja, u, f. a beap part. besprinkled with ashes, Sturl. ii. 186. of asbes, Fas. iii. 217. ösku-fall, n. a fall of ashes (from a volcano), Ann. 1 300. ösku-fölr, adj. asby-pale, pale as asbes, Mag. 4. haugr, m. a beap of asbes, Eb. 94. ösku-stó, f. asb-pit.

ask-limar, f. pl. branches of an ash, Hkv. 2. 48.

ask-maðr, m. [A. S. äscmen, vide Adam Brem. below], a viking, pirate, a cognom., Eg., Fms., Hkr.

AŠKR, s, m. [A. S. äsc, whence many Engl. local names; Germ. esche], an ash, fraxinus, Edda (Gl.); a. ygdrasils, Edda 10, 11, Pr. 431. 2. anything made of ash: a. a spear, prop. ashen spear shaft (cp. δύρυ μείλινον, ἐυμιελίηε), Þiðr. 304, Edda (Gl.) β. a small ship, a bark (built of ash, cp. δύρυ, abies); en þeir sigla burt á einum aski, Fas. ii. 206, i. 421: it appears only two or three times in Icel. prose writers; hence may be explained the name of ascmanni, viking, pirate, in Adam Brem. ch. 212 [A. S. äscmen], cp. askmaðr. γ. a small vessel of wood (freq. in Icel., and used instead of deep plates, often with a cover (asklok) in carved work); stórir askar fullir af skyri, Eg. 549, 550; cp. kyrnu-askr, skyr-askr. δ. a Norse measure for liquids, equal to four bowls, or sixteen justur, Gpl. 525, N. G. L. i. 328, H. E. i. 396, Fms. vii. 203. compps: askammiðr, m. sbip-wright (vide β.), Eg. 102. aska-spillir, m. a sbip-spoiler, i.e. a pirate, a cognom., Glúm., Landn.; v.l. akraspillir, less correctly. askraki, a, m. probably a Finnish word; bjór (beaver), savala (sable) ok askraka (?), some animal with precious fur, Eg. 57; an äπ. λεγ. askran, f. [askrast, to sbudder, Ivar Aasen], horror, v. afskr., B. K. 107.

ask-viör, ar, m. asb-tree, Str. 17. asna, u, f., Lat. asina, a sbe-ass, Stj. 183. compp: ösnuligr, adj., ö.

steinn, 655. Matth. xviii. 6, transl. of δνικός λίθος, the upper millstone.

ASNI, a, m., Lat. asinus, an ass, Mart. 131, Fas. iii. 416, Band. 12, = asellus, 1812. 16. compds: asna-höfuð, n. donkey-bead, Stj. asna-kjálki, a, m. jawbone of an ass, Stj., Greg. 48.

aspiciens-bók, f. a service-book, Vm. 6, 117, 139, Am. 35, Pm., D. I., etc. aspiciens-skrá, f. id., Pm. 104, 75, etc.

ASSA, u, f. (qs. arnsa), an eagle.

AT and ao, prep., often used ellipt. dropping the case and even merely as an adverb, [Lat. ad; Ulf. $at = \pi \rho os$ and $\pi a \rho a$, A.S. $\ddot{a}t$; Engl. at; Hel. $ad = a \rho ud$; O.H.G. az; lost in mod. Germ., and rare in Swed. and Dan.; in more freq. use in Engl. than any other kindred language, Icel. only excepted]:—the mod. pronunciation and spelling is ao (ap); this form is very old, and is found in Icel. vellum MSS. of the 12th century, e. g. ap, 623. 60; yet in earlier times it was sounded with a tenuis, as we may infer from rhymes, e. g. jöfurr hyggi at | hve ek yrkja fat, Egill: Sighvat also makes it rhyme with a t. The verse by Thorodd—par vastu at er fjáðr klæðið þvat (Skálda 162)—is hardly intelligible unless we accept the spelling with an aspirate (ao), and say that pvao is = pva $= pva\delta$ i, lavabat; it may be that by the time of Thorodd and Ari the pure old pronunciation was lost, or is the tenuis in compounds before a vowel, or before b, v, or the liquids l, r. thus-atyrda, atorka, athöfn, athugi, athvarf, athlægi; atvinna, atvik; atlaga, atlidandi (slope), atridi, atreid, atrodr: but addjupr, adfinsla (critic), adferd, adkoma, adsókn, adsúgr (crowding), adgæzla. In some words the pronunciation is irregular, e. g. atkvæði not aðkv-; atburðr, but abbunadr; adhjukran not athjukran; atgörvi not adgörfi. At, to, towards; into; against; along, by; in regard to; after.

Mostly with dat.; rarely with acc.; and sometimes ellipt .- by dropping the words 'home,' 'house,' or the like-with gen.

WITH DAT.

I. WITH MOTION; gener. the motion to the borders, A. Loc. limits of an object, and thus opp. to frá: 1. towards, against, with or without the notion of arrival, esp. connected with verbs denoting motion (verba movendi et eundi), e. g. fara, ganga, koma, lúta, snúa, rétta at ...; Otkell laut at Skamkatli, O. louted (i. c. bowed down) towards S., Nj. 77, Fms. xi. 102; sendimadrinn sneri (turned) hjöltum sverðsins at konungi, towards the king, i. 15; hann sneri egginni at Asgrimi, turned the edge towards A., Nj. 220; rétta e-t at e-m, to reach, band over, Ld. 132; ganga 2t, to step towards, Isl. ii. 259.

2. denoting proximity, close up to, up to; Brynjólfr gengr . . . allt at honum, B. goes quite up to bim, Nj. 58; Gunnarr kom þangat at þeim örunum, G. reached them even there with his arrows, 115; beir komust aldri at honum, they could never get near bim, to close quarters, id.; reid madr at beim (up to them), 274; beir höfðu rakit sporin allt at (right up to) gammanum, Fms. i. 9; komu beir at sjó fram, came down to the sea, Burd. 180. 3. without reference to the space traversed, to or at; koma at landi, to land, Ld. 38, Fins. viii. 358; rioa at dyrum, Boll. 344; hlaupa at e-m, to run up to, run at, Fms. vii. 218, viii. 358; af sjáfarganginum er hann gekk at landinu, of the surf dashing against the shore, xi. 6; visa olmum hundi at manni. to set a fierce bound at a man, Grag. ii. 118; leggja e-n at velli, to lay low, Eg. 426, Nj. 117; hniga at jörðu, at grasi, at moldu, to bite the dust, to die, Njaro. 378; ganga at dómi, a law term, to go into court, of a plaintiff, defendant, or bystander, Nj. 87 (freq.) 4. denoting a motion along, into, upon; ganga at strati, to walk along the street, Korm. 228, Fms. vii. 39; at isi, on the ice, Skálda 198, Fms. vii. 19, 246, viii. 168, Eb. 112 new Ed. (á is perh. wrong); máttu menn ganga þar yfir at skipum einum, on the slain on the battle-field, Lex. Poët.; at hordum, at nam, to trample merkiósum, at the river's mouth, Grag. ii. 355; at endilöngu baki, all 5. denoting hostility, to rush at, assault; along its back, Sks. 100. renna at, hlaupa at, ganga, fara, ríða, sækja, at e-m, (v. those words), whence the nouns atrenna, athlaup, atgangr, atfor, atreid, atsókn, etc. metaph., kom at beim svefnhöfgi, deep sleep fell on them, Nj. 104. Esp. of weather, in the impers, phrase, hrið, veðr, vind, storm görir at e-m, to be overtaken by a snow storm, gale, or the like; görði þú at þeim boku mikla, they were overtaken by a thick fog, Bárð. 171. 6. denoting around, of clothing or the like; bregoa skikkju at höfði sér, to wrap bis cloak over bis bead, Ld. 62; vefja motri at höfði sér, to wrap a snood round ber bead, 188; sauma at, to stick, cling close, as though sewn on; sauma at höndum sér, of tight gloves, Bs. i. 453; kyrtill svá þröngr sem saumadr væri at honum, as though it were stitched to him, Nj. 214; vafit at vándum dreglum, tight laced with sorry tags, id.; hosa strengd fast at beini, of tight hose, Eg. 602; hann sveipar at sér iðrunum ok skyrtunni, be gathers up the entrails close to him and the skirt too, Gisl. 71; laz at siou, a lace on the side, to keep the clothes tight, Eg. 602. β. of burying; bera grjót at einum, to beap stones upon the body, Eg. 719; var gör at peim dys or grjóti, Ld. 152; göra kistu at liki, to make a coffin for a body, Eb. 264, Landn. 56, Ld. 142. γ. of summoning troops or followers; stefna at sér mönnum, to summon men to bim, Nj. 104; stefna at sér liði, Eg. 270; kippa mönnum at sér, to gather men in baste, Ld. 64. denoting a business, engagement; rida at hrossum, at saudum, to go looking after borses, watching sheep, Glum. 362, Nj. 75; fara at fe, to go to seek for sheep, Ld. 240; fara at heyi, to go a-baymaking, Dropl. 10; at veidum, a-bunting; at fuglum, a-fowling; at dyrum, a-shooting; at fiski, a-fishing; at veiðiskap, Landn. 154, Orkn. 416 (in a verse), Nj. 25; fara at landskuldum, to go a-collecting rents, Eg. 516; at Finnkaupum, a-marketing with Finns, 41; at féfongum, a-plundering, Fms. vii. 78; ganga at beina, to wait on guests, Nj. 50; starfa at matseld, to serve at table, Eb. 260; hitta e-n at naudsynjum, on matters of business; at máli, to speak with one, etc., Fms. xi. 101; rekast at e-m, to pursue one, ix. 404; ganga at liði sér, to go suing for belp, Grág. ii. 384. B. of festivals; snúa, fá at blóti, veizlu, brullaupi, to prepare for a sacrificial banquet, wedding, or the like, hence at-fangadagr, Eb. 6, Ld. 70; koma at hendi, to bappen, befal; ganga at sinu, to come by one's own, to take it, Ld. 208; Egill drakk hvert full er at honum kom, drained every born that came to bim, Eg. 210; komast at keyptu, to purchase dearly, Háv. 46. denoting imaginary motion, esp. of places, cp. Lat. spectare, vergere ad . . ., to look or lie towards; horfdi botninn at höfdanum, the bight of the bay looked toward the headland, Fms. i. 240, Landn. 35; also, skeiðgata liggr at læknum, leads to the brook, Isl. ii. 339; á þann arminn er vissi at leilifu, for ever and ever; at skömmu, soon, sbortly, Isl. ii. 272, v.l.

byat' simply the A. S. byût, secuit? The Icelanders still, however, keep isjanum, on that wing which looked toward the sea, Fms. viii. 115: sar bau er horft höfðu at Knúti konungi, xi. 300. B. even connected with verbs denoting motion; Gilsáreyrr gengr austan at Fljótinu. G. extends. projects to F. from the east, Hrafn. 25; hjá sundi því, er at gengr þingstöð-II. WITHOUT MOTION; denoting presence at, inni, Fms. xi. 85. near, by, at the side of, in, upon; connected with verbs like sitja, standa, vera ...; at kirkju, at church, Fms. vii. 251, K. 5. K. 16, Ld. 328, Isl. ii. 270. Sks. 36: vera at skala, at húsi, to be in, at bome, Landn. 154: at landi, Fms. i. 82; at skipi, on shipboard, Grag. i. 200, 215; at öldri, at a banquet, inter pocula; at ati, at dinner, at a feast, inter edendum, ii. 169, 170; at samförum ok samvistum, at public meetings, id.; at domi, in a court; standa (to take one's stand) nordan, sunnan, austan, vestan at domi, freq. in the proceedings at trials in lawsuits, Ni.: at bingi, present at the parliament, Grag. i. 142; at lögbergi, on the bill of laws, 17, Nj.; 2. denoting presence, partaking in; at baki e-m, at the back of. sitia at mat, to sit at meat. Fms. i. 241: vera at veizlu, brullaupi, to be at a banquet, nuptials, Nj. 51, Ld. 70: a law term, vera at vigi, to be an accessory in manslaying, Nj. 89, 100; vera at e-u simply means to be about, be busy in, Fms. iv. 237; standa at máli, to stand by one in a case, Grug. ii. 165, Nj. 214; vera at fóstri, to be fostered, Fms. i. 2; sitja at hégóma, to listen to nonsense, Ld. 322; vera at smid, to be at one's work, pord. 62: now absol., vera at, to go on with, be busy at. law term vinna eið at e-u has a double meaning: a. vinna eið at bók, at baugi, to make oath upon the book by laying the band upon it. Landi. 258, Grág., Nj.; cp. Vkv. 31, Gkv. 3. 3, Hkv. 2. 20, etc.: 'við' is now used in this sense. B. to confirm a fact (or the like) by an oath, to swear to, Grág. i. 9, 327. Y. the law phrase, nefna vátta at e-u, of summoning witnesses to a deed, fact, or the like; nefna vátta at benjum, to produce evidence, witnesses as to the wounds, Nj., Grag.; at gord, Eg. 738; at svörum, Grag. i. 19: this summoning of witnesses served in old lawsuits the same purpose as modern pleadings and depositions; every step in a suit to be lawful must be followed by such a summoning or declaration 4. used ellipt., vera at, to be about, to be busy at; kvalararnir er at vóru at pína hann, wbo were tormenting bim; þar varstu at, you were there present, Skalda 162; at varum bar, Gisl. (in a verse): as a law term 'vera at' means to be guilty, Glum. 388; variattu at bar, Eg. (in a verse); hence the ambiguity of Glum's oath, vask at bar, I was there present: var har at kona nokkur (was there busy) at binda sar manna, Fms. v. QI; hann var at ok smiðaði skot, Rd. 313; voru Varbelgir at (about) at taka af, þau lög ..., Fms. ix. 512; ek var at ok vafk, I was about weaving, xi. 49; peir höfdu verit at þrjú sumur, they had been busy at it for three summers, x. 186 (now very freq.); koma at, come in, to arrive unexpectedly; Gunnarr kom at i bvi, G. came in at that moment; hvadan komtú nú at, wbence did you come? Nj. 68, Fms. iii. 200. denoting the kingdom or residence of a king or princely person; konungr at Danmork ok Noregi, king of ..., Fms. i. 119, xi. 281; konungr, jarl, at öllum Noregi, king, earl, over all N., 1b. 3, 13, Landn. 25; konungr at Dyflinni, king of Dublin, 25; but i or yfir Englandi, Eg. 263: cp. the phrase, sitja at landi, to reside, of a king when at bome, Hkr. i. 34; at Jómi, Fms. xi. 74: used of a bishop; biskup at Holum, bisbop of Holar, 1b. 18, 19; but biskup í Skálaholti, 19: at Rómi, at Rome, Fbr. 198. in denoting a man's abode (vide p. 5, col. 1, l. 27), the prep. 'at' is used where the local name implies the notion of by the side of, and is therefore esp. applied to words denoting a river, brook, rock, mountain, grove, or the like, and in some other instances, by, at, e. g. at Hofi (a temple), Landn. 198; at Borg (a castle), 57; at Helgafelli (a mountain), Eb. constantly so; at Mosfelli, Landn, 100; at Hálsi (a bill), Fms. xi. 22; at Bjargi, Grett. 90; Hálsum, Landn. 143; at Á (river), 296, 268; at Bægisá, 212; Giljá, 332; Myrká, 211; Vatnsá, id.; pverá, Glúm. 323; at Fossi (a 'force' or waterfall), Landn. 73; at Lækjamóti (waters-meeting), 332; at Hlíðarenda (end of the lithe or bill), at Berghórshváli, Nj.; at Lundi (a grove), at Melum (sandbill), Landn. 70: the prep. 'a' is now used in most of these cases, e. g. á Á, á Hofi, Helgasclli, Felli, Hálsi, etc. particularly, and without any regard to etymology, used of the abode of kings or princes, to reside at; at Uppsölum, at Haugi, Alreksstöðum. at Hlöðum, Landn., Fms. y. konungt lét kalla at stofudyrum, the king made a call at the ball door, Eg. 88; peir kölluðu at herberginu, they called at the inn, Fms. ix. 475.

7. used ellipt. with a gen., esp. if called at the inn, Fms. ix. 475. connected with such words as gista, to be a guest, lodge, dine, sup (of festivals or the like) at one's bome; at Mardar, Nj. 4; at hans, 74; pingfesti at bess boanda, Grag. i. 152; at sin, at one's own bome, Eg. 371, K. p. K. 62; hafa náttstað at Freyju, at the abode of goddess Freyja, Eg. 603; at Ránar, at Ran's, i. e. at Ran's bouse, of drowned men who belong to the queen of the sea, Ran, Eb. 274; at hins heilaga Olafs konungs, at St. Olave's church, Fms. vi. 63: cp. ad Veneris, els Kipavos. I. at, denoting a point or period of time; at upphafi, at first, in the beginning, Ld. 104; at lyktum, at sidustu, at lokum, at last; at lesti, at last, Lex. Poët., more freq. & lesti; at skilnaði, at parting, at last, Band. 3; at fornu, in times of yore, formerly, Eg. 267, D. I. i. 635; at sinni, as yet, at present; at nýju, anew, of present time; at denoting the seasons of the year, months, weeks, the hours of the day; at Jolum, at Yule, Nj. 46; at Palmadegi, on Palm Sunday, 273; at Paskum, at Easter; at Olafsvöku, on St. Olave's eve, 29th of July, Fms.; at vetri, at the beginning of the winter, on the day when winter sets in, Grag. i. 151; at sumarmalum, at vetrnattum; at Tvimanadi, when the Double month (August) begins, Ld. 256, Grag. i. 152; at kveldi, at eventide, Eg. 3; at því meli, at that time; at eindaga, at the term, 395; at eykô, at 4 o'clock p. m., 198; at öndverðri æfi Abrahams, Ver. 11; at sinni, now at once, Fms. vi. 71; at ödruhverju, every B. where the point of time is marked by some event; now and then. at bingi, at the meeting of parliament (18th to the 24th of June), Ld. 182; at féránsdómi, at the court of execution, Grág. i. 132, 133; at binglausnum, at the close of the parliament (beginning of July), 140; at festarmálum, eðr at eiginorði, at betrotbal or nuptials, 174; at skilnaði, when they parted, Nj. 106 (above); at öllum minnum, at the general drinking of the toasts, Eg. 253; at fjöru, at the ebb; at flæðum, at floodtide, Fms. viii. 306, Orkn. 428; at hrörum, at an inquest, Grag. i. 50 (cp. ii. 141, 389); at sökum, at prosecutions, 30; at sinni, now, as yet, v. III. ellipt., or adding 'komanda' or 'er kemr,' of the that word. future time: 1. ellipt., komanda or the like being understood, with reference to the seasons of the year; at sumri, at vetri, at hausti, at vári, next summer, winter . . ., Isl. ii. 242; at miðju sumri, at ári, at Midsummer, next year, Fas. i. 516; at midjum vetri, Fms. iv. 2. adding 'komanda' or 'er kemr;' at ári komanda, Bárð. 177; at vári er kemr, Dipl. iii. 6. IV. used with an absolute 1. with pres. part.; at morni komanda, dat. and with a pres. part.: on the coming morrow, Fms. i. 263; at ser lifanda, se vivo, in his life time, Grág. ii. 202; at þeim sofundum, illis dormientibus, Hkr. i. 234; at öllum ásjándum, in the sight of all, Fms. x. 329; at úvitanda konungi, illo nesciente, without bis knowledge, 227; at aheyranda höfðingjanum, in the chief's bearing, 235. 2. of past time with a past part. (Lat. abl. absol.); at hræjum fundnum, on the bodies being found, Grág. ii. 87; at hadum domum ok fostu þingi, during the session, the courts being set, i. 484; at lionum sex vikum, after six weeks past, Band. 13; at sva bunu, so goru, svá komnu, svá mæltu (Lat. quibus rebus gestis, dictis, quo facto, dicto, etc.), v. those words; at ureyndu, without trial, without putting one to the test, Ld. 76; at honum ondudum, illo mortuo. ellipt. without 'at;' en bessum hlutum fram komnum, when all this has V. in some phrases with a slight temp. notion; been done, Eb. 132. at görðum gildum, the fences being strong, Ghl. 387; at vörmu spori, at once, whilst the trail is warm; at uvorum, unawares, suddenly, Nj. 95, Ld. 132; at bessu, at this cost, on that condition, Eb. 38, Nj. 55; at illum leiki, to bave a narrow escape, now við illan leik, Fms. ix. 473; at því, that granted, Grag. ii. 33: at bvi, at bessu, thereafter, thereupon, Nj. 76. 2. denoting succession, without interruption, one after another; hverr at öðrum, annarr maðr at öðrum, aðrir at öðrum; eina konu at annarri, Eg. 91, Fms. ii. 236, vi. 25, Bs. i. 22, 625. 80, H. E. i. 522. I. denoting a transforma-

O. METAPH. and in various cases: tion or change into, to, with the notion of destruction; brenna at ösku, at koldum kolum, to burn to asbes, to be quite destroyed, Fms. i. 105, Edda 3. Sturl. ii. 51: with the notion of transformation or transfiguration, in such phrases as, verda at e-u, göra e-t at e-u, to turn it into: a spell; verða at ormi, to become a snake, Fms. xi. 158; at flugdrekum, Gullb. 7; urðu þau bönd at járni, Edda 40. β. by a natural process it can often be translated by an acc. or by as; gora e-n at urdarmanni, to make bim an outlaw, Eg. 728; græða e-n at örkumlamanni, to beal bim so as to main bim for life, of bad treatment by a leech, Eb. 244: in the law terms, sár görist at ben, a wound turning into a ben, proving to be mortal, Grag., Nj.; verda at ljugvætti, to prove to be a false evidence, Grag. i. 44; verda at sætt, to turn into reconciliation, Fms. i. 13; göra e-t at reidimalum, to take offence at, Fs. 20; at nýjum tíðindum, to tell as news, Nj. 14; verða fátt at orðum, to be sparing of words, 18; kveðr (svá) at orði, to speak, utter, 10; verda at prifnadi, to get on well, Fms. vii. 196: at lidi, at skada, to be a belp or burt to one; at bana, to cause one's death, Nj. 223, Eg. 21, Grág. ii. 29: at undrum, at hlátri, to become a wonder, a laughing-stock, 623. 35, Eg. 553. II. denoting capacity, where it may be translated merely by as or for; gefa at Jólagjöf, to give for a Christmas-box, Eg. 516; at gjöf, for a present; at erid, at láni, launum, as an inberitance, a loan; at kaupum ok sölum, for buying and selling, Isl. ii. 223, Grág. i. 423; at sölum, ii. 204; at herfangi, as spoil or plunder; at sakbótum, at niðgjöldum, as a compensation, weregeld, i. 339, ii. 171, Hkr. ii. 168; taka at gislingu, to take as an bostage, Edda 15; eiga e-n at vin, at ovin, to bave one as friend or foe, illt er at eiga bræl at eingavin, 'tis ill to bave a thrall for one's bosom friend (a proverb), Nj. 77; fæða, eiga, at sonum (syni), to beget a son, Edda 8, Bs. i. 60 (but eiga at dóttur cannot be said); hafa möttul at yfirhöfn, Fms. vii. 201; verda nökkut at manni (mönnum), to turn out to be a worthy man; verda ekki at manni, to turn out a worthless person, xi. 79, 268. in such phrases as, verda at ordum, to come to words, Nj. 26; var pat at erindum, Eg. 148; hafa at veizlum, to draw veizlur (dues) from, nam at porgeiri afradskoll, Hkr. (pref.); nema kunnáttu at e-m, used of

of the very moment when anything happens, the beginning of a term; Fms. iv. 275, Eg. 647; göra e-t at álitum, to take it into consideration, III. denoting belonging to, fitting, of parts of the whole or the like; vóru at honum (viz. the sword) hjölt gullbúin, the sword was ornamented with a bilt of gold, Ld. 330; umgord at (belonging to) sverdi, Fs. 97 (Hs.) in a verse; en ef mor er eigi at landinu, if there be no turf moor belonging to the land, Grag. ii. 338; sva at eigi brotnaði nokkuð at Orminum, so that no barm bappened to the ship Worm, Fms. x. 356; hvatki er meiðir at skipinu eðr at reiðinu eðr at viðum, damage done to ..., Grág. ii. 403; lesta (to injure) hús at lásum, við cor torfi, 110; ef land hefir batnad at husum, if the land has been bettered as to its buildings, 210; cp. the phrase, gora at e-u, to repair: hamladr at höndum eðr fótum, maimed as to bands or feet, Eg. 14; heill at höndum en hrumr at fótum, sound in band, palsied in foot, Fms. vii. 12; lykill at skrá, a key belonging, fitting, to the latch; hurð at húsi; a key 'gengr at' (fits) skrá; and many other phrases. 2. denoting the part by which a thing is held or to which it belongs, by; fa, taka at ..., to grasp by ...; þú tókt við sverði hans at hjöltunum, you took it by the bilt, Fms. i. 15; draga út björninn at hlustum, to pull out the bear by the ears, Fas. ii. 237; at lotum, by the feet, Fms. viii. 363; mæla (to measure) at hrygg ok at jadri, by the edge or middle of the stuff, Grág. i. 498; kasta e-m at höfði, bead foremost, Nj. 84; kjósa e-n at fótum, by the feet alone, Edda 46; hefja frændsemi at bræðrum, eða at systkynum, to reckon kinsbip by the brother's or the sister's side, Grag. i. 28; kjósa at afli, at álitum, by strength, sight, Gs. 8, belongs rather to the following. in respect of, as regards, in regard to, as to; audigr at fe, wealthy of goods, Nj. 16, 30, 51; beztir hestar at reid, the best raceborses, 186; spekingr at viti, a man of great intellect, Ld. 124; vænn (fagr) at áliti, fair of face, Nj. 30, Bs. i. 61; kvenna vænst at ásjónu ok vitsmunum, of surpassing beauty and intellect, Ld. 122; fullkominn at hyggju, 18; um fram abra menn at vinsældum ok hardfengi, of surpassing popularity and bardibood, Eb. 30. 2. a law term, of challenging jurors, judges, or the like, on account of, by reason of; rydja (to challenge) at mægðum, guðsifjum, frændsemi, hrörum . . .; at leiðarlengd, on account of distance, Grag. i. 30, 50, Nj. (freq.) 3. in arithm, denoting proportion; at helmingi, þriðjungi, fjórðungi, tíunda hluta, cp. Lat. ex asse, quadrante, for the half, third ... part; máttr skal at magni (a proverb), might and main go together, Hkr. ii. 236; bu munt vera at því mikill frædimadr á kvæði, in the same proportion, as great, Fms. vi. 391, iii. 41; at e-s hluta, at . . . leiti, for one's part, in turn, as far as one is concerned, Grág. i. 322, Eg. 309, Fms. iii. 26 (freq.): at öðrum kosti, in the other case, otherwise (freq.) More gener., at öllu, öngu, in all (no) respects; at sumu, einhverju, nokkru, partly; at flestu, mestu, chiefly. a paraphrase of a genitive; faðir, móðir at barni (=barns); aðili at sök (= sakar a.); morðingi at barni (= barns), faðerni at barni (barns); illvirki at fé manna (cp. Lat. felo de se), niðrfall at sökum (saka), landgangr at fiskum (fiska), Fms. iv. 274, Grüg. i. 277, 416, N. G. L. i. 340, K. B. K. 112, Nj. 21.

5. the phrase 'at ser,' of bimself or in bimself, either ellipt, or by adding the participle gorr, and with the adverbs vel, illa, or the like; denoting breeding, bearing, endowments, character ...; væn kona, kurteis ok vel at sér, an accomplished, well-bred, gifted lady, Nj. 1; vitr maor ok vel at sér, a wise man and thoroughly good in feeling and bearing, 5; bú ert maðr vaskr ok vel at þér, 49; gert at ser, accomplished, 51; bezt at ser gort, the finest, best bred man, 39, Ld. 124; en bó er hann svá vel at sér, so generous, Nj. 77; beir höfðingjar er svá vóru vel at sér, so noble-minded, 198, Fms. i. 160: the phrase 'at sér' is now only used of knowledge, thus madr vel ad sér means clever, a man of great knowledge; illa ad sét, a blockbead. denoting relations to colour, size, value, age, and the like; hvitr, svartr, grar, raudr . . . at lit, white, swarthy, gray, red . . . of colour, Bjarn. 55, 28, Isl. ii. 213, etc.; mikill, litill, at stærð, vexti, tall, small of size, etc.; ungr, gamall, barn, at aldri, young, old, a child of age; tvitugr, þritugr ... at aldri, twenty, tbirty ... years of age (freq.): of animals; kýr at fyrsta, öðrum ... kálfi, a cow baving calved once, twice ..., Jb. 346: value, amount, currency of money, kaupa e-t at mörk, at a mark, N.G.L. i. 352; ok er eyririnn at mörk, amounts to a mark, of the value of money, Grag. i. 392; verðr þá at hálfri mörk vaðmála eyrir, amounts to a balf a mark, 500. B. metaph. of value, connected with verbs denoting to esteem, bold; meta, hafa, halda at miklu, litlu, vettugi, engu, or the like, to bold in bigh or low esteem, to care or not to care for (freq.): geta e-s at godu, illu, ongu, to mention one favourably, unfavourably, indifferently . . . (freq.), prop. in connection with. In many cases it may be translated by in; ekki er mark at draumum, there is no meaning in dreams, no beed is to be paid to dreams, Sturl. ii. 217; bragd er at þá barnið finnr, it goes too far, when even a child takes offence (a proverb); hvat er at því, what does it mean? Nj. 11; hvert þat skip er vöxtr er at, any sbip of mark, i.e. however small, Fms. V. denoting the source of a thing: 1. source of inforxi. 20. mation, to learn, perceive, get information from; Ari nam ok marga frædi at buridi, learnt as ber pupil, at ber bands, as St. Paul at the feet of Gamaliel, (just as the Scotch say to speer or ask at a person); Ari

2. of receiving. a pupil, Fms. i. 8; nema fræði at e-m, xi. 306. acquiring, buying, from; biggia e-t at e-m, to receive a thing at bis bands, Nj. 51; lif, to be pardoned, Fms. x. 173; kaupa land at e-m, to buy it from, Landn. 72, lb. 11, (now af is more freq. in this sense); geta e-t at e-m, to obtain, procure at one's bands, impetrare; beirta manna er beir megu bat geta at, who are willing to do that, Grag, i. 1: heimta e-t at e-m (now af), to call in, demand (a debt, money), 279; fala e-t at e-m (now af), to chaffer for or cheapen anything, Nj. 73; sækja e-t at e-m, to ask, seek for; sækja heilræði ok traust at e-m, 08; leiga e-t at e-m (now af), to borrow, Grag. ii. 334; eiga e-t (fé, skuld) at e-m, to be owed money by any one, i. 300: metaph. to deserve of one, Nj. 113; eiga mikit at e-m, to bave much to do with, 138; hafa veg, viroing, styrk, at, to derive bonour, power from, Fms. vi. 71, Eg. 44, Bárð. 174; gagn, to be of use, Ld. 216; mein, tálma, mischief, disadvantage, 158, 216, cp. Eg. 546; otta, awe, Nj. 68. VI. denoting conformity, according to, Lat. secundum, ex, after; at fornum sid, VI. denoting Fms. i. 112; at sogn Ara prests, as Ari relates, on his authority, 55; at ráði allra vitrustu manna, at the advice of, Isl. ii. 259, Ld. 62; at lögum, at landslögum, by the law of the land, Grag., Nj.; at likindum, in all likelibood, Ld. 272; at sköpum, in due course (poët.); at hinum sama hætti, in the very same manner, Grag. i. 90; at vanum, as was to be expected, Nj. 255; at leyfi e-s, by one's leave, Eg. 35; ülofi, Grág. ii. 215; at ósk, vilja e-s, as one likes...; at mun, id. (poët.); at sólu, bappily (following the course of the sun), Bs. i. 70, 137; at bvi sem ..., as to infer from . . . , Nj. 124: 'fara, lata, ganga at' denotes to vield, agree to, to comply with, give in, Ld. 168, Eg. 18, Fms. x. 368. phrases nearly or quite adverbial; gróa, vera græddr, at heilu, to be quite bealed, Bard. 167, Eb. 148; bita at snöggu, to bite it bare. Fms. xi. 6: at burru, till it becomes dry, Eb. 276; at endilöngu, all along, Fas. ii; vinnast at litlu, to avail little, 655 x. 14; at fullu, fully, Nj. 257, Hkr. i. 171; at visu, of a surety, surely, Ld. 40; at frjálsu, freely, 308; at liku, at somu, equally, all the same, Hom. 80, Nj. 267; at rongu, wrongly, 686 B. 2; at hofi, temperately, Lex. Poët.; at mun, at radi, at marki, to a great extent; at hringum, utterly, all round, (rare), Fms. x. 389; at einu, yet, Orkn. 358; svá at cinu, því at einu, allt at einu, yet, bowever, never-VIII. connected with comparatives of adverbs and adjectives, and strengthening the sense, as in Engl. 'the,' so much the more, all the more; 'at' heldr tveimr, at ek munda gjarna veita yor öllum, where it may be translated by so much the more to two, as I would willingly grant it to all of you; hon gret at meir, she grat (wept) the more, Eg. 483; bykir oss at líkara, all the more likely, Fms. viii. 6; bess at hardari, all the barder, Sturl. iii. 202 C; svá at hinn sé bana at nær, Grag. ii. 117; at auduara, at holpnara, the more bappy, Al. 19, Grett. 116 B; bess at meiri, Fms. v. 64; auvirðismaðr at meiri, Sturl. ii. 130; maðr at vaskari, id.; at feigri, any the more fey, Km. 22; maor at verri, all the worse, Nj. 168; ok er 'at' firr ..., at ek vil miklu heldr, cp. Lat. tantum abest ... ut, Eg. 60. β. following after a negation; eigi at síðr, no less, Nj. 160, Ld. 146; eigi ... at meiri madr, any better, Eg. 425, 489; erat hera at borgnara, any the better off for that, Fms. vii. 116; eigi at minni, no less for that, Edda (pref.) 146; eigi at minna, Ld. 216, Fms. ix. 50; ekki at verri drengr, not a bit worse for that, Ld. 42; er mér ekki son minn at bættari, bótt 216; at eigi vissi at nær, any more, Fas. iii. 74. IX. following 1. verbs, esp. those denoting, many words: a. to ask, enquire, attend, seek, e.g. spyrja at, to speer (ask) for; leita at, to seek for; gæta, geyma at, to pay attention to; huga, hyggja at; hence atspurn, to en-B. verbs denoting laughter, play, quire, abgæzla, athugi, attention, etc. joy, game, cp. the Engl. to play at ..., to laugh at ...; hlæja, brosa at e-u, to laugh, smile at it; leika (ser) at e-u, to play at; bykja gaman at, to enjoy; hæða, göra gys at ..., to make sport at ... y. verbs denoting assistance, belp; standa, veita, vinna, hjálpa at; hence atstoð, atvinna, atverk :- mode, proceeding; fara at, to proceed, hence atfor and atferli: -compliance; luta, fara at e-u, v. above: -fault; e-t er at e-u, there is some fault in it, Fms. x. 418; skorta at e-u, to fall short of, xi. 98: -care, attendance; hjúkra at, hlýja at, v. these words: -gathering, collecting; draga, reida, flytja, fá at, congerere :- engagement, arrival, etc.; sækja at, to attack; ganga at, vera at, to be about; koma at, ellipt. to arrive: göra at, to repair: lesta at, to impair (v. above); finna at, to criticise (mod.); telja at, id.: bera at, to bappen; kveða at e-m, to address one, 625. 15. (kveda at (ellipt.) now means to pronounce, and of a child to utter (read) whole syllables); falla at, of the flood-tide (ellipt.): metaph. of pains or straits surrounding one; breyngja, herða at, to press bard: of frost and cold, with regard to the seasons; friosa at, kolna at, to get really cold (Sl. 44), as it were from the cold stiffening all things: also of the seasons themselves; hausta, vetra 20, when the season really sets in; esp. the cold seasons, 'sumra at' cannot be used, yet we may say 'vára að' when the spring sets in, and the air gets mild. 8. in numberless other cases which may partly be seen below. 2. connected ellipt. with adverbs denoting motion from a place; norðan, austan, sunnan, vestan at, those from the north, east ...; utan at, innan at, from 3. with adjectives (but rarely), e.g. kærr, elskr, the outside or inside. virkr (affectionate), vandr (zealous), at e-m; v. these words.

WITH ACC.

TEMP.: Lat. post, after, upon, esp. freq. in poetry, but rare in prose writers, who use eptir; nema reisi niðr at nið (= maðr eptir mann), in succession, of erecting a monument, Hm. 71; in prose, at þat, postbac, deinde, Fms. x. 323, cp. Rm., where it occurs several times, 2, 6, 9, 14, 18. 24, 28, 30, 35; sonr á at taka arf at föður sinn, bas to take the inheritance after bis father, Grág. i. 170 new Ed.; eiga féránsdóm at e-n, Grág. i. 89; at Gamla fallinn, after the death of G., Fms. x. 382; in Edda (Gl.) 113 ought to be restored, grét ok at Oð, gulli Freyja, she grat (wept) tears of gold for ber lost busband Od. It is doubtful if it is ever used in a purely loc. sense; at land, Grág. (Sb.) ii. 211, is probably corrupt; at hönd = á hönd, Grág. (Sb.) i. 135; at mót = at móti, v. this word.

In compounds (v. below) at- or ad- answers in turn to Lat. ador in- or con-; atdrattr e. g. denotes collecting; atkoma is adventus: it may also answer to Lat. ob-, in atburdr = accidence, but might also be compared with Lat. occurrere.

AT and ao, the mark of the infinitive [cp. Goth. du; A.S. and Engl. to: Germ. zul. Except in the case of a few verbs 'at' is always placed immediately before the infinitive, so as to be almost an inseparable part of the verb. I. it is used either. 1. as a simple mark of the infinitive, only denoting an action and independent of the subject, e. g. at ganga, at hlaupa, at vita, to go, to run, to know: or. tive sense when following such verbs as bjóða segja..., to invite, command ...; hann baud beim at ganga, at sitja, be bade, ordered them to go, sit, or the like; or as gefa and fa; gefa e-m at drekka, at eta, to give one to drink or to eat, etc. etc.

8. with the additional notion of intention, esp. when following verba cogitandi; hann ætlaði, hafði í hyggiu at fara, be bad it in bis mind to go (where 'to go' is the real object to ætlaði and hafði í hyggju). 3. answering to the Gr. Iva, denoting intention, design, in order to; hann gékk í borg at kaupa silfr, in order to buy, Nj. 280; hann sendi riddara sina með þeim at varðveita þær, 623. 45: in order to make the phrase more plain, 'svá' and 'til' are frequently added, esp. in mod. writers, 'svá at' and contr. 'svát' (the last however is rare), 'til at' and 'til bess at,' etc. II. in the earlier times the infin., as in Greek and Lat., had no such mark; and some verbs remain that cannot be followed by 'at:' these verbs are almost the same in Icel. as in Engl.: α. the auxiliary verbs vil, mun (μέλλω), skal; as in Engl. to is never used after the auxiliaries shall, will, must; ek vil ganga, I will go; ek mun fara, (as in North. E.) I mun go; ek skal göra þat. I shall do that, etc. β. the verbs kunna, mega, as in Engl. I can or may do, I dare say; svá hygginn at hann kunni fyrir sökum ráða, Grág. ii. 75; í öllu er prýða má góðan höfðingja, Nj. 90; vera má, it may be; vera kann bat, id.: kunnu, however, takes 'at' whenever it means to know, and esp. in common language in phrases such as, það kann að vera, but vera kann þat, γ. láta, biðja, as in Engl. to let, to bid; hann lét (bað) þá fara, tbem go. 8. þykkja, þykjast, to seem; hann þykir vera, be v. above. be let (bade) them go. is thought to be: reflex., hann pykist vera, sibi videtur: impers., mer pykir vera, mibi videtur, in all cases without 'at.' So also freq. the verbs hugsa, hyggja, ætla, halda, to think, when denoting merely the act of thinking; but if there be any notion of intention or purpose, they assume the 'at;' thus hann ætlaði, hugði, þá vera góða menn, be thought them to be, acc. c. inf.; but ætlaði at fara, meant to go, etc. . the verbs denoting to see, bear; sjá, líta, horfa á ... (videre); heyra, audire, as in Engl. I saw them come, I beard him tell, ek sá þá koma, ek heyrði hann tala. sometimes after the verbs eiga and ganga; hann gékk steikja, be went to roast, Vkv. 9; eiga, esp. when a mere periphrasis instead of skal, móður sína á maðr fyrst fram færa (better at færa), Grág. i. 232; á þann kvið einskis meta, 59; but at meta, id. l. 24; ráða, nema, göra ..., freq. in poetry, when they are used as simple auxiliary verbs, e. g. nam hann sér Högna hvetja at rúnum, Skv. 3. 43. η. hljóta and verba, when used in the sense of must (as in Engl. be must go), and when placed after the infin. of another verb; her muntu vera hljóta, Nj. 129; but hljóta at vera: fara hlýtr þú, Fms. i. 159; but þú hlýtr at fara: verða vita, ii. 146; but verða at vita: hann man verða sækja, þó verðr (=skal) maðr eptir mann lifa, Fms. viii. 19, Fas. ii. 0. in poetry, verbs with the verbal neg. 552, are exceptional cases. suffix '-at,' freq. for the case of euphony, take no mark of the infinitive, where it would be indispensable with the simple verb, vide Lex. Poet. Exceptional cases; hvárt sem hann vill 'at' verja þá sök, eða, wbatever be chooses, either, Grag. i. 64; fyrr viljum ver enga koronu at bera, en nokkut ófrelsi á oss at taka, we would rather bear no crown than ..., Fms. x. 12; the context is peculiar, and the 'at' purposely added. It may be left out ellipt.; e. g. þá er guð gefr oss finnast (=at finnast), Dipl. ii. 14; gef honum drekka (=at drekka), Pr. 470; but mostly in unclassical writers, in deeds, or the like, written hastily and in an abrupt style.

AT and ao, con. [Goth. patei = or; A. S. pāt; Engl. tbat; Germ. das; the Ormul. and Scot. at, see the quotations sub voce in Jamieson; in all South-Teutonic idioms with an initial dental: the Scandinavian idioms form an exception, having all dropped this consonant; Swed. at, Dan. at]. In Icel. the Bible translation (of the 16th century) was chiefly based upon that of Luther; the hymns and the great bulk of theol, translations of that time were also derived from Germany; therefore the germanised form bad frequently appears in the Bible, and was often employed by theol. authors in sermons since the time of the Reformation. Jon Vidalin, the greatest modern Icel. preacher, who died in 1720, in spite of his thoroughly classical style, abounds in the use of this form; but it never took root in the language, and has never passed into the spoken dialect. After a relative or demonstr. pronoun, it freq. in mod. writers assumes the form eo, hver eo, hverir eo, hvad ed, har ed. Before the prep. hú (tu), p changes into t, and is spelt in a single word attu, which is freq. in some MS.;—now, however, pronounced addú, addeir, addid...,=ad bi..., with the soft Engl. th sound. It gener. answers to Lat. ut, or to I. that, relative to svá, to denote proportion, the relat. pron. qui. degree, so ..., that, Lat. tam, tantus, tot ..., ut; svá mikill lagamaor, at..., so great a lawyer, that..., Nj. 1; hárið svá mikit, at þat..., 2; svá kom um síðir því máli, at Sigvaldi, it came so far, that..., Fms. xi. 95, Edda 33. Rarely and unclass., ellipt. without svá; Bæringr var til seinn eptir honum, at hann . . . (= svá at), Bær. 15; hlífði honum, at hann sakaði ekki, Fas. iii. 441. II. it is used, 1. with indic, in a narrative sense, answering partly to Gr. ori, Lat. quod, ut, in such phrases as, it came to pass, bappened that ...; hat var einhverju sinni, at Höskuldr hafði vinaboð, Nj. 2; þat var á palmdrottinsdag, at Ólafr konungr gékk út um stræti, Fms. ii. 244. 2. with subj. answering to Lat. acc. with infin., to mark the relation of an object to the chief verb, e.g. vilda ek at þú rédist, I wished that you would, Nj. 57. β. or in an oblique sentence, answering to ita ut ...; ef svá kann verða at þeir láti ..., if it may be so that they might..., Fins. xi. 94. y. with a subj. denoting design, answering to Gr. wa or Lat. ut with subj., in order that; at öll veraldar bygðin viti, ut sciat totus orbis, Stj.; þeir skáru fyrir þá melinn, at þeir dæi eigi af sulti, ut ne fame perirent, Nj. 265; fyrsti hlutr bókarinnar er Kristindómsbálkr, at menn skili, in order that men may understand, Ghl. p. viii. used in connection with conjunctions, 1. esp. þó, því, svá; þó at freq. contr. bótt; svát is rare and obsolete. a. þóat, þótt (North. E. 'thof'), followed by a subjunctive, though, although, Lat. etsi, quamquam (very freq.); þóat nokkurum mönnum sýnist þetta með freku sett...þá viljum vér, Fms. vi. 21: phrases as, gef þú mér þó at úverðugri, etsi indignae (dat.), Stj. MS. col. 315, are unclass., and influenced by the Latin: sometimes ellipt. without 'po,' eigi mundi hon pa meir hvata göngu sinni, at (=boat) hon hræddist bana sinn, Edda 7, Nj. 64: 'bo' and 'at' separated, svarar hann þó rétt, at hann svari svá, Grág. i. 23; þó er rétt at nýta, at hann sé fyrr skorinn, answering to Engl. yet—though, Lat. attamen –etsi, K. þ. K. β. því at, because, Lat. nam, quia, with indic.; því at allir vóru gerfiligir synir hans, Ld. 68; því at af íþróttum verðr maðr fróðr, Sks. 16: separated, því þegi ek, at ek undrumst, Fms. iii. 201; því er bessa getio, at bat botti, it is mentioned because ..., Ld. 68. at, so that, Lat. ut, ita ut; gratrinn kom upp, sva at eingi matti öðrum segja, Edda 37: separated, so ... tbat, svá úsvást at ..., so bad weather, 2. it is freq. used superfluously, esp. after relathat, Bs. i. 339, etc. tives; hver at = hverr, quis; því at = því, igitur; hverr at þekkr ok þægiligr mun verða, Fms. v. 159; hvern styrk at hann mundi fá, 44; ek undrumst hvé mikil ógnarraust at liggr í þér, iii. 201; því at ek mátti eigi par vera elligar, því at þar var kristni vel haldin, Fas. i. 340. 1. temp. wben, Lat. quum; jafnan er (est) mer ba verra er (quum) ek fer á braut þaðan, en þá at (quum) ek kem, Grett. 150 A; þar til at vér vitum, till we know, Fms. v. 52; þá at ek lýsta (= þá er), 2. since, because; ek færi yðr (hann), at þér cruð í wben, Nj. 233. einum hrepp allir, because of your being all of the same Rape, Grag. i. 260; eigi er kynlegt at (though) Skarphédinn sé hraustr, at þat er mælt at ..., because (since) it is a saying that ..., Nj. 64. writers it is also freq. superfluously joined to the conjunctions, ef ab = ef, si, (Lv. 45 is from a paper MS.), medan ad = medan, dum; nema ad, nisi; fyrst ad = fyrst, quoniam; eptir ad, sídan ad, postquam; hvárt ad = hvárt, Lat. an. In the law we find passages such as, ha er um er dæmt eina sök, at þá eigu þeir aptr at ganga í dóminn, Grág. i. 79; ef þing ber á hina helgu viku, at pat á eigi fyrir þeim málum at standa, 106; þat er ok, at þeir skulu reifa mál manna, 64; at þeir skulu með váttorð þá sök sækja, 65: in all these cases 'at' is either superfluous or, which is more likely, of an ellipt. nature, 'the law decrees' or 'it is decreed' being understood. The passages Sks. 551, 552, 568, 718 B, at lokit (= at ek hefi lokit), at hugleitt (=at ek hefi h.), at sent (= at ek hefi sent) are quite exceptional. AT and ao, an indecl. relat. pronoun [Ulf. patei = ο, δ άν, δστιε, δσπερ,

AT and aδ, an indecl. relat. pronoun [Ulf. patei = δs, δs άν, δστις, δσπερ, οδος, etc.; Engl. tbat, Ormul. at], with the initial letter dropped, as in the conj. at, (cp. also the Old Engl. at, which is both a conj. and a pronoun, e.g. Barbour vi. 24 in Jamieson: 'I drede that his gret wassalage, | And his travail may bring till end, | Tbat at men quhile full litil wend.' | 'His mestyr speryt quhat tithings at he saw.'—Wyntoun v. 3. 89.) In Icel. 'er' (the relat. pronoun) and 'at' are used indifferently, so that where one MS. reads 'er,' another reads 'at,' and vice versâ; this may easily be seen by looking at the MSS.; yet as a rule 'er' is much more freq. used. In mod. writers 'at' is freq. turned into 'eð,' esp. as a superfluous particle after the relative pron. hverr (hver eð, hvað eð, hverir eð, etc.), or the demonstr. sá (sá eð, þeir eð, hinir eð, etc.):—wbo, wbich, tbat, enn bezta grip at (wbich) hafði til Íslands komið, Ld. 202; en engi mun sá at (cui) minnisamara mun vera, 242; sem blótnaut at (quae) stærst verða, Fms. iii. 214; þau tiðendi, at mér þætti verri, Nj. 64, etc. etc.

AT, n. collision (poët.); odda at, crossing of spears, crash of spears, Höfuðl. 8.

B. a fight or bait of wild animals, esp. of horses, v. hesta-at and etia.

AT, the negative verbal suffix, v. -a.

ata, u, f. an obscure word, and probably a corrupt reading; nú skýtr maðr á hval í atu ok hnekkir Guðs gáfu, N. G. L. i. 50.

ata, að, to stain, defile, smear; líkþrá Naaman skal atast á þik ok þína ætt, Stj. 618. a Kings vi. 27 (now freq.)

atall, ötul, atalt, adj. [at, n.; Ormul. attel = turpis], fierce, Lat. atrox; ötul augu, fierce, piercing eyes, Hkv. I. 3; betta fólk er atalt ok illt, Hkr. iii. 313; ötul, amatlig, fierce and loatbsome, used of a witch, Hkv. I. 38: Atli ek heiti, a. skal ek þér vera, where the poet plays on the likeness between the pr. name Atli and the adj. atall, my name is 'Savage;' savage sball I prove to thee, Hkv. Hjörv. 15. At the present day, freq. in the changed form otull, in a good sense, brisk, strenuous.

atan or ötun, f. defiling.

atatata, an onomatopoetic interj., imitating the chattering of the teeth through cold, Orkn. 326 (in a verse).

at-beini, a, m. assistance, support, Fms. vi. 66; vera i a. med e-m, to assist one, Fas. i. 265.

st-bot, f. repair (now adgjörd), Vm. 4, Dipl. ii. 13.

at-burőr, 21, m. pl. ir, [bera 21, accidere.]

1. a cbance, bap, accident; verőr sá 2., it so bappened, Nj. 54, Vúpn. 49; 21 (með) atburð, accidentally, perchance, Mart. 126, El. 5. 9, Mar. 656 ii. 16; með hverjum atburðum, bow, by wbat cbance? Róm. 287, Eluc. 12; 3líkt kalla ek 2. en eigi jartein, such tbings I call an accident but not a miracle, Sturl. ii. 54; fyrir 2. sakir hreysti hans, because of bis valour, Skálda 189, Sks. 147. 2. esp. in pl., events, matters, circumstances; dráp Bárðar ok þá atburði er þar hörðu orðit, Barð's death and the events ibat bad bappened, Eg. 222; Ólafr sagði honum alla atburði um sitt mál, O. told bim minutely bow bis matters stood, Hkr. i. 193; þær sem skýra í hverjum atburðum menn fella á sik fullkomið bann, under wbat circumstances..., H. E. i. 462.

at-búnaðr, ar, m. attention, care, especially of funeral rites; veita a. daudum mönnum, to lay out dead bodies, Eg. 34, v. l. 2. now gener. accommodation or assistance in all that regards domestic life, esp. clothing; góðr, illr a.

at-djup and atdypi, n. deep water close to sbore, Hav. 48.

at-djúpt, n. adj. id., 623. 45; superl. addjúpast, Fms. xi. 70. at-dráttr, ar, m. pl. drættir, [draga at], provisions, supplies for bousebold use; hafði hann a. at þeirra búi, be supplied their bousebold, Háv. 39; atdrættir ok útvegar, means and provisions, Fms. xi. 423; a. af fiskum, Hrafn. 22.

β. metaph. support, H. E. i. 244.

COMPD:

atdrátta-maör, m., mikill 2., a good bousekeeper, Eb. 26. at-dugnaör, m. [at-duga, to assist], assistance, Fas. ii. 296.

at-engian, f. egging on, instigation, Assistance, ras. ii. 290. at-fall, ii. [falla at], 'on-fall,' = of the flood-tide, Ld. 56, Orkn. 428.

at-fall, n. [falla at], 'on-fall,' = of the flood-tide, Ld. 56, Orkn. 428. at-fang, n. [fá at, to provide], only in pl., provisions, victuals, Bs. i. 130. Esp. used with dagr, or kveld, of the eve of great festivals, and partic. that of Yule: atfanga-dagr, pronounced affanga-, m., a. Jóla, Yule Eve, Christmas Eve, Grett. 97, 140, Fms. ii. 37, Isl. ii. 232, Orkn. 186 old Ed., where the new Ed. p. 242 reads atfangs- (in sing.), which is very rare, porol. II. atfangadags-kveld, n. Christmas Eve, Bárð. 176. atfanga-maðr, m. = atdráttamaðr, Grett. 119 A.

at-fara-, v. atför.

at-ferő, f. (neut. 655 xxxii.)

a. aggression, incursion, in a hostile sense, Fms. ix. 11, v. l.

B. more freq. in a good sense, exertion, activity, Fs. 4; vikjast eptir afterdum enna fyrri frænda þinna, to imitate tbeir good deeds, id.; afferð ok cljun, energy, Ld. 318.

v. a law term, execution; með dómrofum ok afferðum, Gþl. 183.

b. bebaviour, proceeding, conduct; hverja a. vér skulum hafa, Nj. 194, Rb. 390, Sks. 239, 655 xxxii. 2;—now freq. in the last sense.

compos: atferðar-leysi, n. idleness, inactivity, belplessness, Fær. 232, 544. 23.

atferðar-maðr, m. a skilful man, Bs. i. 639.

atfero-ligr, adj. fit or manly, Fms. viii. 53, v.l.

at-forli, n. [ferill], action, proceeding, used esp. as a law term, proceeding, procedure; med enu sama a., Grág. ii. 405: plur. skal sá slík atferli hafa öll um lýsingar sem áðr er tínt, 27, H.E. ii. 75. B. metbod; þá eru mörg a. jafnrétt til þess, Rb. 38. y. hann spuröist fyrir um a. héraðsmanna, wbat tbey were doing, Grett. 123 A. 8. gramm., a. parta (modi partium orationis) eru tólf, Skálda 185.

at-flutning, f. (now -ingr, m.), purveyance, supply, in plur, Eg. 275.

Fms. ii. 68, viii. 179.

at-fulf, asting may.

at-fundall, fault-funding to at-fundall, fault-funding to at-fylgi, n. and atfylgia, u, f. belp, backing, support, Fms. ii. 105, 5ti, at-fylgi, n. and atfylgia, u, f. belp, backing, support, Fms. ii. 105, 5ti, funda 384, Hom. 139, Fms. x. 60, v.l.

At-fundally a fault funding to at-fundally at fault funding to at-fundally at fault funding to at-fundally at fault funding to at-fundally at fault fundally at fault fault fundally at dómr ok atför, Gþl. 361, 389 : mod. Dan. adfærd, cp. atferð, 7.

Digitized by

af-drip. al esla . S

2,

Ain

```
Icel. commonly of an onslaught or armed aggression, Fms. i. 54, Nj. 92, do bomage to; with acc., af hvi skolu vér a. penna engil i beonum 93, 99, 113, Sturl. iii. 237, Ann. 1252.
                                               3. metbod = abferd, Fms. ii.
         COMPDS: atfarar-domr, m. sentence of execution for payment, Gbl., N. G. L. i. 154.
                          atfarar-bing, n. court of execution, MS. 302, atfara-laust, n. adj. quiet, with no act of violence between 172 (Norse).
two bostile parties, Eb. 244, Sturl. ii. 40.
at-ganga, u, f.

1. attack in a fight, onslaught, Fms. i. 36, Nj. 36,
```

Lv. 13, Bret. 6. 2. peaceful belp, Fms. xi. 86, Nj. 99, Isl. ii. 210. COMPD: atgongu-mikill, adj. unruly, quarrelsome, aggressive, Fs. 41.
at-gangr, m. 1. fighting, combat, aggression, Isl. ii. 268, Korm.

242: injury, violence, = ágangt, Fms. vi. 239. 2. belp, co-operation, 3. now, redress, recovery of a claim. Grett. 157, 162, Vigl. 19. COMPD: atgangs-mikill, adj. = energetic, Grett. 129 A.

at-geirr, m. (false spelling amgeirr), a bill or balberd, undoubtedly a foreign weapon, rarely mentioned in the Sagas, but famous as the favourite weapon of Gunnar of Hlidarendi; mentioned besides in Sks. 392, Landn. 163, Eb. 120, Fms. iii. 100, v. 249, Fas. iii. 462, but esp. Nj. 44, 45, 84, 95, 97, 108, 114, 119: in the Nj. used generally of thrusting, but also of hewing; Högni hjó í sundr spiót skaptið með atgeirinum, en rekr atgeirinn i gegnum hann, H. bewed in sunder the spearshaft with the bill, and drives the bill through him, Nj. 119; in Landn. 163 mentioned as a javelin.

at-gengiligr, adj. acceptable, inviting, Bs. i. 372. at-gerő, atgervi, atgeyrő, v. atgörő, -görvi.

at-gezla, u, f. superintendance, care, caution, Sturl. iii. 58 (now freq.) atgörő, f.

1. plur. measures, steps taken; litlar atgörðir, small measures, Isl. ii. 355, Fs. 4; var eigi vænt til atgerða, few expedients, Grett. 124. 2. repair of a building of the fike (flow field), 2-1/21. ...

145. \[\beta \]. a surgical operation, medical belp, Bs. i. 108, 618, 644: Sturl. COMPDS: atgoroa-lauss, adj. belpless, lazy, i. 43 is a bad reading. inactive, Al. 25: neut., atgördarlaust er um e-t, no steps are taken, Fms. atgörða-maðr, m. a ready man, El. 15, Sturl. ii. 127.

atgörðar-mikill, adj. active, Nj. 56.

at-görvi, atgerfi, atgjörfi, f.; neut., Fms. x. 293 C. [görr at sér, accomplished]; endowments, accomplishments derived from good training added to natural gifts; in olden times esp. those of an athletic or physical kind; fridleik, voxt, afl, ok alla a., beauty, stature, strength, and all accomplishments whatever, Eg. 29, Fbr. 56, Fms. vi. 5, 268, i. 30, viii. 140, x. 293; at ibrottum, a. ok vinsæld, Hkr. i. 212: of spiritual qualities and character (rare in old writers), af Guðs góðgipt ok sjálfs síns a. göfgastr maðr á Íslandi, Bs. i. (Hv.) 70; at lærdómi, vitrleik ok a., 130. Páls S. COMPD: atgörvi-maör, and more freq. atgörvis-maör, m. a man of great (physical) accomplishments, Fms. i. 17, Eg. 685 (where it is used of a young promising poet), 22, Ld. 12; used of an artist, Isl. ii. 171: a. um marga hluti, man of great capacity, 191; used of a musician, Grett. 158.

at-hald, n. constraint, coercion, restraint, Fbr. 2, Fms. xi. 228. at-hjúkan (now aðhjúkrun), f. [hjúka at e-m], beed, attention, care in the most tender sense of that word, e.g. that of a mother to her sick child; attention to a sick, frozen, shipwrecked, or destitute person, Fms. viii. 444, Finnb. 234, v. l.

at-hlaup, n. onslaught, assault, Fms. viii. 35, Bjarn. 37; i einu a., in one rush in a battle, Ld. 64; veita manni a. edr sar, violence or wound, K. A. 48; tókst nú þegar a., a band to band fight, Gullh. 12.

at-hlatr, m. [hlægja at], a laugbing-stock, Fms. ii. 182.

at-hlægi, n. ridicule, mockery; með a. ok sköm, ridicule and sbame, Fms. x. 279; ef a. er vert, if it be ridicule, vi. 208; a. eðr úmannan, a laughing-stock and a wretch, Sturl. iii. 240.

at-hlægiligr, adj. ridiculous, Band. 13.

at-huga, ad, to beed, betbink oneself, pay attention to, consider; a. sik, to take beed, Sturl. iv. 75 in a mod. MS.; cp. Bs. i. 744 (now freq.)

at-hugall, adj. beedful, careful, Sturl. iii. 125, Sks. 296.

at-hugi, a, m. beed, care, attention, consideration, Hom. 52; af öllum a., carefully, Post. 656 B; hid elzta (barn) hefir ekki a. hit minsta, the eldest bairn bas no bead on bis shoulders, El. 19, Sks. 482; med a. ok áhyggju, with care and concern, Fms. x. 281. COMPDS: athuga-lauss, adj. beedless. athuga-leysi, n. beedlessness, Stj. 6, Fas. i. 245; hlýtr jafnan illt af a., 'Don't care' comes ever to a bad end (a proverb), Grett. athugaliga, adv. attentively, Sks. 360. athuga-lítill, 118 A. adj. little careful, beedless, Bs. i. 190. athuga-samliga, adv. and ligr, adj. attentively, attentive, Sks. 600, 360, 6, 472. athuga-samr, adj. beedful, attentive, Hom. 58, Fms. viii. 447. athuga-vero worthy of attention, Fms. x. 276. Athuga stand a article (mad) athuga-verör, adj.

at-hvarf, n. [hverfa at, to turn towards]: a. in the phrase, gora e-m a., to pay one compliments, pay attention to, Bs. i. 801; hann er vel við Þormóð ok görði meir at athvarfi við hann, be treated Tb. respectfully or cultivated bis friendsbip, Fbr. 119; Sighvatr görði at athvarfi um sendimenn konungs, ok spurði þá margra tíðenda, be communicated with them B. athvarf is now or paid them visits, attended to them, Hkr. ii. 214. freq. in the sense of shelter, refuge.

at-hygli, f. [athugall], beedfulness, attention; med a., Sks. 1, 445 B, 564, Fms. vi. 446, (now used as neut.)

at-hyllast, t, dep. (qs. athyglast), to lean towards, be on the side of, man.

várum, to cultivate bis friendsbip, Hom. A. M. 237.7; at a. ok sækja e-n at ámaðar orði, 655 xiii. B. 4, Bs. i. 202; ætlum vér þann yðvarn at a. er mestan görir várn sóma, take bis part, wbo ..., Fms. v. 273.

at-hæfi (not athæfi, vide Sks. B., which carefully distinguishes between æ and æ), n. conduct, behaviour; a. kristinna manna, their rites, service. Fms. ii. 37, cp. Ld. 174; í öllu sínu a., conduct, proceeding, Fms. xi. 78. viii. 253: manners, ceremonies, Sks. 301; konunga a., royal manners, Hom.: betta hefir verit a. (instinct) bessa skrimsls, Sks.: deeds, doings; skal nú þar standa fyrst um a. þeirra, Mag. 11. Now freq. in a theol. sense.

at-hæfiligr, adj. fit, fitting, due, Eg. 103, Finnb. 228.

at-höfn, f. [hafast at, to commit], conduct, behaviour, business; hvat er hann hafði frétt um a. Skota konungs, bis doings and whereabouts, Eg. 271; fengin var þeim önnur a., occupation, Fbr. 19; ganga til skripta ok segja sinar athafnir, to go to sbrift and confess bis behaviour, Fms. i. 301; i athöfnum margir, en sumir i kaupferdum, Orkn. 298; er þat ok likligt at hu fylgir har eptir hinni a., (ironically) that you will go your own foolish way, Fs. 4. COMPDS: athafnar-lauss, adj. inactive, Fms. iii. 128, 154. athafnar-leysi, n. inactivity. athainar-maör and athafna-, m. a busy enterprising man, Hkr. ii. 255, Fær. 209. In 2 bad sense, a laughing-stock; göra e-n at athafnarmanni, to make a butt of him, Sturl. i. 24, 181, this last sense seems to be peculiar to the first and second part (battr) of the Sturl., which were not written by Sturla himself, but by an unknown author.

at-kall, n. demand, call, request, solicitation, Bs. i. 735, Al. 64, Ver. 48. at-kast, n. a casting in one's teeth, a rebuke, reproach, Mag. 65. at-keri, anchor, v. akkeri.

at-kváma, and later form aðkoma or atkoma, u, f. arrival, Ld. 78. Fms. vi. 239; metaph. (eccl.) pain, visitation, Hom. 68, 121. Now used in many compds: aokomu-maor, m. a guest, etc.

at-kvæði, n. [kveða at orði]. I. a technical phrase, esp. in law; svá skal sækja at öllu um fjártökuna, sem þjófsök fyrir utan a., the proceeding is all the same with the exception of the technical terms, Grag. ii. 190; at þeim atkvæðum er Helgi hafði í stefnu við þik, the expressions used by Heigi in summoning thee, Boll. 354. B. a word, expression in general; pat er prifalt a., mannvit, sidgæði ok hæverska, Sks. 431. 303; en pó vér mælim alla þessa hluti með breiðu a., in broad, general terms, y. now used gramm. for a syllable, and in many compds such as, eins atkvæðis orð, a monosyllable; tveggja, þriggja... atkvæða..., etc., a dissyllable, etc.: 'kveða at' also means to collect the letters into syllables, used of children when they begin to spell. Old writers use atkvæði differently in a grammatical sense, viz. = pronunciation, sound, now framburðr; þeir stafir megu hafa tveggja samhljóðenda a., hverr einn, Skálda (Thorodd) 165; eins stafs a.; a. nafns hvers þeirra; þá er pat a. hans i hverju máli sem eptir lifir nafnsins (in the last passage = the name of the letter), 168. II. a decision, sentence, almost always in plur.; beið hann þinna atkvæða, Nj. 78; var því vikit til atkvæða (decision) Mardar, 207; bíða atkvæða Magnúss konungs um álög ok pyntingar, Fms. vi. 192: sing., var þat biskups a., bis decision, v. 106; hví gegnir þetta a. (sentence) jarl, rangliga dæmir þú, 656 B; þínu boði ok a., command and decisive vote, Stj. 203; af atkvæði guðanna, by their decree, Edda 9, Bret. 53. B. now a law term = vote, and in a great many compds: atkvæða-greiðsla, division; atkvæða-fjöldi, votes; a. munr, majority, etc. III. a decree of fate, a spell, charm, in 2 supernatural sense, = ákvæði; af forlögum ok a. ramra hluta, Fs. 23; konungr sagði úhægt at göra við atkvæðum, ... to resist charms (MS. akvedni, where it is uncertain whether the reading is aky- or atky-); 2. Finnunnar, the spell of the Finnish witch, 22; sva mikil a. (pl.) ok ilska fylgði þessum álögum, Fas. i. 404, iii. 239, Fms. x. 172. atkvæða-lauss, adj. [kveða at, to be important], unimportant, of no consequence, Fas. ii. 242. atkvæða-maðr, m. a man of weighty utterance, of importance, Fms. xi. 223. atkvæða-mikill, adj. of weight, note, authority, Nj. 51.

atla, ab, to 'ettle,' intend, purpose, Bret. 144; so according to the modem pronunciation of ætla, q. v.

at-laga, u, f. an attack in a sea fight, of the act of laying ships alongside; skipa til a., Fms. i. 169, iv. 103; hörð a., bard fight, xi. 133, Hkr. ii. 272, Nj. 125, Sturl. iii. 63, etc.: more rarely of an attack on land, Fms. vii. β. an advance, landing, without 244, Al. 122, Isl. ii. 83, Bret. 50. COMPDS: atlögu-flokkr, m. the name notion of fight, Fms. ix. 430. of a poem describing a battle by sea, Sturl. iii. 63. atlögu-skip, n. a ship engaged in battle, Fms. viii. 382.

at-lat, n. [lata at e-u, to comply with], compliance, Hom. 47; synda a., indulgence in sin, Greg. 31. Now, atleti, n. and atlot, n. pl. treatment gott atlæti, kindness; ill atlot, barsbness, esp. in respect to children. at-lega, u, f. shelter for sheep and cattle on the common pastures; hagbeit á vetrum ok a. fé sínu at selinu, Dipl. v. 4 (rare).

at-mæli, n. abuse, offensive language, Bs. ii. 181.

atoma, u, f. an atom, Rb. 114; a weight, subdivision of an ounce, 532.1. at-orka, u, f. energy, activity. compos: atorku-maor, m. an active atorku-semi, f. activity. atorku-samr, adj. active.

Digitized by GOOQ

at-ras, f. an on-rush, charge, attack, Fms. viii. 413, v. árás. at-reio, f. (milit.) a riding at, a charge of borse, Fms. vi. 417, in the description of the battle at Stamford Bridge: Hkr. iii, 162 has areid, but B. the act of riding at or over, Nj. 21; esp. some MSS. atreid, vii. 57. in the translation of French romances of tilting in tournaments, Str. (freq.) COMPD: atreidar-ass, m. a quintain pole, at which to ride a-tilt, El. 15. at-rekandi, m. pressing efforts, exernions; svá mikill a. var görr um leitina, the search was carried on so thoroughly, Band. 4 C; cp. reki. COMPD: atrennu-lykkia, u. f. a running at-renna, u, f. a slip. knot, a noose, Fms. vi. 368. at-rio, now atrioi. n. 1. = atreid, movement, in the phrase, hann hafdi allt eitt atridit, be did both things at once, in the twinkling of an 2. a gramm, term in the compd atrioseve, Grett. 95 new Ed. klauf, f. probably = ἀσύνδετον, Edda (Ht.) 124, cp. Ed. Havn, ii, 154. cp. Skálda 103; atrid would thus mean a word, sentence. It is now very freq. in the form atribi, n. in a metaph. sense, the chief point in a sentence, or a part, paragraph, and used in many compds. Atrior, m. is one of the poët, names of Odin, the wise (?). at-roor, rs, m. a rowing at, i. e. an attack made (by a ship) with oars, Fms. ii. 310, Hkr. ii. 272, etc. β. gener. rowing towards, Jb. 308. at-samr, adj. [at, n.], quarrelsome, an aπ. λεγ., Fms. iv. 205; cp. Hkr. at-sets. u. f. a royal residence; hafa a., to reside, used especially of kings, Fms. i. 23, x. 209, Hkr. i. 63, Eg. 170, Nj. 5, etc. at-setr, rs. n. id., vide konungs-atsetr. at-skiljanligr, adj. [Dan. adskellig], various, different, Karl. 206, (an unclass, word.) at-skilnaor, ar, m., in mod. Icel. = parting, separation. B. discord. Grett. 88; A, B, C, however, have áskilnaðr. at-sókn, f. [sækja at], onslaught, attack, Fms. i. 64, Nj. 100, etc. a throng of guests or visitors seeking bospitality; fong voru litil en a. mikill, Bs. i. 63 (now freq.) Y. in popular superstition, the foreboding of a guest's arrival; sleep, drowsiness, or the like, caused, as people believe, by the fylgja or 'fetch' of the guest, his sure forerunner; the Icelanders speak of a good, agreeable aðsókn, or a bad, disagreeable one; a man may 'szkja vel eðr illa að,' as he is an agreeable guest or not. Only a 'fey' man's fylgja follows after him. Vide Isl. Þjóðs. i. 354 sqq. atsóknar-maör, m. aggressor, Fs. 70. at-spurning, f. [spyrja at], 'speering' at, inquiry, in the phrase, leida atspurningum, which ought, however, to be in two words, Fb. i. 216. at-stada, u, f., now adstod, n, a standing by, backing, support, Bs. i, B. earnest request, Mar. (Fr.) at-stuoning, f. and -ingr, m. [styoja at], support, Fas. i. 24. at-súgr, m. prop. pressure [súgr] caused by crowding; now freq. in the phrase, gora a. ao e-m, to mob one. B. the phrase, bora frekan atsúg um e-t (where the metaphor is taken from boring), to deal barsbly with, pierce through to the marrow, Orkn. 144: cp. Fms. vii. 29.

at-svif, n. incident, bearing, Sks. 682.

β. medic. lipothymia, a fainting fit, swoon, Fél. ix. 185; cp. ad svifa yfir e-n, to be taken in a fit, Sturl. iii. 286. at-tú, by assimilation = at þú, that thou, freq. e.g. in the Orkn. new Ed. at-tonn, f. [at, n.], a tusk, Fas. i. 366. at-veizla, u, f. [veita at], assistance, Fms. x. 60, v.l. at-verknaör, m. work, especially in baymaking; porgunnu var ætlað nautsfoor til atverknadar, to toss and dry it, Eb. 26: now, vinna at heyi, to toss it for drying. at-vik, n. [vikja at], mostly in plur. details, particulars; in the phrases, eptir atvikum, according to the circumstances of each case, Gpl. 403; atvik sakar, the particulars of a case, Sks. 663; med atvikum, circumstantially, chapter and verse, Fas. iii. 330: in Stj. 179 it seems to mean ges-II. an onset, prob. only another way of spelling atvigi, N.G.L. ii. 65; at ek geta eigi hefnt bessa atviks er mér er gört, that I cannot get this affront avenged which has been done me, Grett. 151 A. at-vinna, u, f. means of subsistence, support, Grag. i. 294, Jb. 151, Fær. 37. Stj. 143, 291, 623. 41, 656 A, 655. 20, Clem. 56, Jb. 151, Fms. v. 239: labour, occupation, Anecd. 20, Sks. 603, (now very freq.) atvinnu-lauss, adj. without means of subsistence, Fms. ii. 97. at-vist, f. [vesa at], presence, esp. as a law term, opp. to an alibi, the act of being present at a crime: the law distinguishes between rad (plotting), tilfor (partaking), and a. (presence), Grug. ii. 37; vera i atsoku ak a., to be present and a partaker in the onslaught, Nj. 100. B. transl. of the Lat. assiduitas, 677.12. at-vigi, n. onset, onslaught, N. G. L. ii. 65, cp. i. 126, Fas. ii. 244. at-yroi, n. pl. abusive words, Fs. 5, Fms. iii. 154. AUD-, adverbial prefix to a great many adjectives, adverbs, and participles, seldom to subst. nouns, [not found in Ulf.; A. S. en 8-, as in en 8medu, bumilitas, and also as a separate adj. eade, facilis; Old Engl. 'eath,' 'uneath,' for 'easy,' 'uneasy;' Hel. 00 and 00i, facilis, uno0i, difficilis], easy, opp. to tor. To this 'aud' and not to 'old' may perhaps be re-

English. Thus 'audie' in Scotch means an easy careless fellow; 'aud] farand, or 'auld farand,' may both mean easy going: v. the words in Iamieson and the Craven Glossary. auða, u, f. desolation, þiðr. 2. aud-bedinn, adi. part. [A. S. ea bede], easily persuaded to do a thing.

```
                                                                          with gen. of the thing, Eg. 17, 467.
                                                                           aud-bættr, adj. part. easily compensated for, Glum, (in a verse).
                                                                           auo-eggjaor, adj. part. easily egged on to do, with gen., Fms. v. 62. aud-fenginn, adj. part. easy to get, Fs. 62, Grett. 113 A, Mag. I, where it is spelt audu-; cp. toru-= tor-. auð-fengr. adj. id., Hým. 18; a. var lið, 655 xxviii, Fms. v. 274. auo-fundinn, adj. part. easy to find, in promptu, Hkr. ii. 111; neut. used metaph. easy to perceive, clear, Eg. 54, Ld. 194, v.l.
                                                                          auo-fyndr, adj. an older form, id., used only as neut. easily perceived.
                                                                          clear; bat var a., at ..., it could easily be seen, that ..., Ld. 194.
                                                                          auoga, ad, [Ulf. aubagian = μακαρίζειν; A.S. en δgian = beatum facere]. to enrich, Bs. i. 320, Stj. 68; reflex., hafdi Noregr mikit audgast, N. bad grown very wealthy, Fms. vi. 448:-to make bappy, er alla elskar ok audgar. i. 281. Th. 77.
                                                                                                                               ent-gjafi.a.m -wallt gives aud-gengr, adj. easy to pass; stigr a., 677. 5. aud-ginntr, adj. part. easily cheated, credulous, Lex. Poet. aud-getligr, adj. easy to get, common, Fms. i. 261. auo-gett, n. adj. easy to get, = auofundit, Lex. Poet., Hb. 6 (1865).
                                                                           aud-gorr and later form aud-goror, adj. part. easily done, Fas. i. 74.
                                                                           auo-heyrt, n. adj. part. easily beard, clear, evident, Ld. 266.
                                                                           audigr and audugr, adj. [Ulf. aubags = uakapios, aubagei, f. = uakaρισμός; Hel. ôdag = beatus, dives; A.S. caδig, beatus, opulentus; O. H. G. ôtag], contracted before an initial vowel into audgan, audgir, audgum: uncontr. form audigan = audgan, Fms. i. 112, etc.; now used uncontracted throughout, audugir, audugar, etc.; rich, opulent; rikr ok a., powerful and opulent, Eg. 22, 83; at fe, wealthy, Fas. i. 40, Isl. ii. 323, Ni. 16, Post.
                                                                          656 C; skip mikit ok a., with a rich lading, Fms. xi. 238; a. at kvikfe, Ld. 96; superl. audgastr, Eg. 25, Isl. ii. 124; England er audgast at lausafé allra Nororlanda, Fms. xi. 203.
                                                                           AUDIT, n. part. of an obsolete verb analogous to auka ('ablaut' aujó-au), [cp. Swed. öde, fatum; audna, luck; audr, opes, etc.], used in many phrases, and often answering to the Gr. aloa, πεπρωμένον, with dat.
                                                                          pers. and gen. of the thing; e-m er, veror, audit e-s, it falls to one's lot; ulik-ligt er at oss verði þeirrar hamingju a., it is unlikely that this good fortune is destined for us, Eg. 107; koma mun til min feigðin..., ef mér verðr þess a., if that be ordained for me, Nj. 103; bó at mér verði lífs a., though life may be granted to me, Fms. i. 47; konungt lét græða menn sína sem lífs var a., those whose lot it was to live, who were not mortally wounded, Eg.
                                                                          34; hafði þeim orðit sigrs a., bad won the day, Eg. 86; var þeim eigi erfingja a., to them was no beir granted by fate, 625. 83: with 'at' and an infin., mun oss eigi a. verða at fá þvilíkan, Fms. x. 339: absol., hafi beir gagn er a. er, let them gain the day to whom the god of battles grants it, xi. 66; with the addition of 'til;' ek ætla okkr litt til ástafunda a, hafa ordit, we bave bad bad luck in love, 310: audinn, masc. appears twice or thrice in poetry, audins sjár, means possessed, Skv. 3. 37: in prose in Al. 21 (by Bishop Brand), láta audins bída, to submit to fate, to be unconcerned; even in compar., hvárt hyggit ér manni nokkuru at auðnara (any more chance), at hann fái knúta bessa levsta, of the Gordian knot, 19, at audnu, v. audna [cp. A.S. eaden, datus, concessus; Hel. ûdan, genitus, natus: cp. also jób, proles, a word perhaps of the same root.] aud-kendr, adi, part, easy to 'ken' or recognise, of distinguished appearance, Al. 21, Fms. i. 44.
                                                                           auð-kenni, n. (= einkenni), mark, distinction, Karl. 180.
                                                                           auð-kenniligr, adj. = auðkendr, Hrafn. 13.
                                                                           auð-kenning, f. a clear mark, sure sign, Sturl. i. 70. MS. A. M. 122 B; áminning suits better, so the Ed. and Brit. Mus. 11,127. aud-keyptr, adj. part. easily bought, cheap, Hkr. iii. 246.
                                                                           aud-kjörinn, adj. part. easily chosen, easy to decide between, Sd. 170.
                                                                           aud-kumall, adj. (now viokvæmr), very touchy, tender, sensitive; a. ok lasmeyrr, of a snake's belly, easy to wound, Stj. 98; öngvær (depressed) ok audkumul, (fem.) touchy, Bs. i. 323; a. i skapi, irritable, 353.
                                                                           auð-kvisi, v. aukvisi, auð-kvæðr, adj. easily talked over, easily moved, obsequious, pliable; eptirlátr ok a., N. G. L. ii. 400; ertú ok eigi a. (bard to move) til fylgðar, Grett. 122 new Ed. = aubbedinn. auð-kymli, f. [auðkumall], touchiness, sensitiveness; a. konunnar, a woman's touchiness or weakness, 623. 36.
                                                                           aud-kýfingr, m. [kúta, accumulare], poët. a beaper up of riches, d wealthy man, a Croesus; örr madr er a., Edda 107; in prose in Sturl. i.
                                                                          38, Al. 5; rikismenn ok a., Post. 656 C. 30.
                                                                           auð-lagðr, adj. part. wealtby, whence audlegð, Lex. Poët. aud-lattr, adj. part. docile, easily kept in check, Glum. 396 (in a verse).
                                                                           aud-latinn, adj. [lat, manners], of easy affable manners, Str. 36.
                                                                           auð-legð, f. easy circumstances, wealth, Bs. i. (Laur. S.) 836; now freq. auð-ligr, adj. bappy, lucky, Fms. vi. 420 (in a verse). ferred some of the compds of aud and awd in Scottish and provincial auð-maðr, m. a wealthy man, Fms. ii. 21, Isl. ii. 385, 125.
```

auð-mjúkliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. bumbly, Bs. i. 773, Grett. 207 new Ed.

ioran, devoted repentance, H. E. i. 510.

auo-munaor, adj. part. easily remembered, not to be forgotten. Fms. vi. 249, v. l.

aud-mykja, t and d, to bumble; a. sik, to bumble oneself, Bs. i. 854. aud-mykt, f. meekness, bumility, Fms. viii. 54, v. l.; now freq. in theol.

auon, f. [auor, adj.], a wilderness, desert; auon Sinai, Stj. 300. land which has no owner or is waste, uninhabited; bygoust bu margar audnir vida, many wide wastes were then peopled, Eg. 15; alla audn landsins, Fms. i. 5, viii. 33, Greg. 33: the auon was claimed as a royal domain; konungrá hér a. alla í landi, Fms. xi. 225; um þær auonir er menn vilja byggja, þá skal sá ráða er a. á, the owner of the waste, N. G. L. i. 125: different from almenningr, compascuum or common. specially a deserted farm or babitation; sá bær hét siðan á Hrappstöðum, bar er nú a., Ld. 24; liggja í a., to lie waste, 96, Grág. ii. 214, cp. 278. 3. destruction; audn borgarinnar (viz. Jerusalem), Greg. 40, Rb. 332, Ver. 43, Sd. 179 (where audnu, f.); riki mitt stendr mjök til audnar, is in a state of desolation, Fms. xi. 320, Bret. 68: insolvency, COMPDS: auonar-hus, n. deserted buts, on utter poverty, Grag. i. 62. mountains or in deserts, Grág. ii. 158. auonar-odal, n. impoverished estates, Sks. 333. auonar-sel, n. deserted shielings, Orkn. 458. auona, u, f. desolation, Sd. 179, bad reading auona, u, f. [audit], fortune, and then, like aloa, good luck, one's good star, bappiness, (cp. heill, hamingja, gæfa, all of them feminines, good luck personified as a female guardian), in the phrase, a. ræðr, rules; audna mun bvi ráda, Fate must settle that, Nj. 46, Lv. 65; rædr a. lífi (a proverb), Orkn. 28; arka at auðnu (or perh. better dat. from auðinn), v. arka, Nj. 185, v.l.; at audnu, adv. prosperously, Sl. 25; blanda úgiptu við a., Fms. ii. 61; med audnu peirri at porkatli var lengra lifs audit, by that good fortune which destined Thorkel for a longer life, Orkn. 18 (50). Cp. the Craven word aund in the expression I's aund to'ot, 'I am ordained to it, it is my fate,' COMPDS: auonu-lauss, adj. luckless, Fas. ii. 240. auonu-leysi, n. ill fate. auonu-leysingi, a, m. a luckless man. auonu-maor, m. a lucky man, luck's favourite, Gullb. 28, Ld. 40, Fas. auonu-samliga, adv. fortunately, Finnb. 344.

auona, ao, impers. to be ordained by fate; ef honum auonaoi eigi aptr at koma, if it was not ordained by fate that be should come back, Fms. ix. 350; sem audnar, as luck decides, Fb. i. 160, Fas. iii. 601, Lv. 30: with gen., ef Guð vill at þess auðni, that it shall succeed, Bs. i. 159, v. l., þat is less correct: now freq. in a dep. form, e-m audnast, one is successful, with following infin.

aud-næmiligr, adj. [nema], easy to learn, teachable, Sks. 16.

auo-næmr, adj. easily learned, soon got by beart, Sks. 247 B; auonæm er ill Danska, bad Danish is soon learnt (a proverb); audnæmast þó hið vonda er, Pass. 22. 10.

auð-prófaðr, adj. part. easily proved, Laur. S. MS. 180. 85.

AUDB, f. [Swed. ode, fatum], fate, destiny, only used in poetry in the phrase, fá audar, to die, Isl. ii. 389 (in a verse); haga til audar, to avail towards one's bappiness, Gisl. 59 (in a verse). Audr is also a fem. pr. name.

AUDR, adj. [Ulf. aubs = ξρημος; O. H. G. odi; Hel. odi = inanis: cp. A.S. ydan and edan, vastare; Germ. öde and öden: the root is rare in A. S. and lost in Engl.]: -empty, void, desert, desolate; húsin voru aud, uninhabited, Ld. 96; koma at audu landi, of the first colonists when coming to Iceland, Landn. 316, opp. to 'koma at bygðu landi,' or 'land numið; auð búð, Eg. 727; auð borð, void of defenders, of ships that have lost their men in fight, Fms. ii. 329; aud skip (= hrodin), all the crew being slain or put to flight, Hkr. iii. 126. β. metaph., auðr at yndi, cheerless, distressed, Stj. 421; sitja audum höndum, now used of being idle: in the Ad. 22, med a. hendr means empty-banded, without gifts; so also in Stj. 437. I Sam. vi. 3, answering to 'empty' in the Engl. text.

AUDR, s, and poët. ar, m. [Goth. auds = μακαρία is suggested; it only appears in Ulf. in compds or derivatives, audags adj. beatus, audagei f. beatitudo, audagian, beare; A.S. ead, n. means opes; Hel. od = bonum, possessio: it is probably akin to odal; cp. also feudal (A.S. feob = fee), alodial]:-riches, wealth, opulence; and fjur (only in acc.), abundance, is a freq. phrase; also, auð landa ok fjár, Edda 15; oss er þar mikit af sagt aud beim, Band. 8, Fms. ii. 80, 623. 21; draga saman aud, id. proverbs, margan hefir audr apat; audrinn er valtastr vina, wealth is the ficklest of friends, Hm. 77, etc.

auð-ráðinn, adj. easily to 'read' or explain, Fas. iii. 561. β. easy to manage, v. úaudrádinu, auð-ráðr, adj. easily guided, pliable, yielding, Bs. i. 265.

auorwoi, n. pl. means, property, wealth, Bs. i. 146, 129, 136 (where it = income), 158, 68 (where the gen. audráda = audræda), Stj. 345, Hom. 68, Fms. iv. 111; not very freq., auðæfi is a more current word.

auð-sagt, part. easily told.

auð-salr, m. treasury (poët.), Fsm. 7.

auð-sénn, part., now auðséðr (cp. however Pass. 6. 4, 7), easily seen, evident, Hrafn. 13, K. A. 214.

aud-mjúkr, adj. bumble, meek, compar, audmjúkari, Sturl. i. 45; a. Pnot easy to make shafts to all people's spear beads, i. e. to act so that all shall be pleased, cp. Hm. 127; aud-skæf (as given in the Skálda, where this line is cited) may be a better reading = not easily carved or made so as to suit everybody.

auö-skilligr, adj. easy to distinguish, understand, Skálda 167.

auo-skeor, adj. part. easily injured, Eg. 770; delicate, tender, Stj. 345. Deut. xxviii. 56, Bs. i. 353.

auð-snúit, n. part. easily turned, Hkr. ii. 271.

auo-sottligr, adj. easy to perform, an easy task, Fms. xi. 282.

auo-sottr, part. easily won, easy to win; mál a., Eg. 38, 200, in both cases of a happy suitor; a. land, land lightly won, Fms. iii. 49; audsotu til bæna, pliable, yielding, Al. 4: eigi a., not easily matched, Valla L. 205. auð-sveipr (and now also auðsveipinn, whence auðsveipni, f.), adj. pliable, yielding, now esp. used of good, obedient children, Bs.

aud-sýna, d, to shew, exhibit, Bs. i. 274; má þat vel audsýnast, to be seen, Stj. 13

auo-syniligr, adj. evident, and -liga, adv. clearly, Fms. i. 142, Stj. 14, 26. auð-sýning, f. show, exhibition, Skálda 199. transl. of Lat. demonstratio; H. E. i. 517. proof, demonstration. auð-sýnn, adj. easily seen, clear; hon var síðan kölluð Delos svá sem a., Stj. 87, 250: neut. = evident, Hom. 154, Eg. 736, Fms. i. 72.

auð-sæligr, adj. id., Fms. vii. 148.

auð-sær, adj., neut. auðsætt, fem. auðsæ, easily seen, clear, Bjarn. 63, Fms. x. 175, 655 xi. I: metaph. clear, evident, Magn. 436, 625. 174: neut. evident, Fms. i. 42, Hrafn. 13: compar. audsærri, more conspicuous, Fms. ii. 322: superl. audsæstr, Ld. 236; audsæust, Fms. iv. 321.

auð-trúa, adj. ind. credulous, Lex. Poët. (freq.)

auö-tryggi, f. ind., now auötryggni, f. credulity, Gisl. 62.

auö-tryggr, adj. credulous, Stj. 199. Grett. 130 A, Fms. viii. 447. auð-van, n. bad luck, Lex. Poët.

auo-vandr, adj. very painstaking in doing one's duties, Bs. i. 141, an άπ. λεγ.

aud-ván, f. expectancy of fortunes (poët.), Lex. Poët. auo-volda, d, to take lightly, make easy, Orkn. ch. 68.

aud-veldi, n. easiness, facility, Hom. 7. transl. of Lat. facultas; med a., as adv. easily, Fms. vii. 116, Karl. 131, 142: auovelda-verk, n. an easy task, Grett. 127 new Ed.

auð-veldliga and -velliga, adv. easily, lightly, Fms. i. 87, Stj. 99, Hkr. i. 200; taka a. á e-u, to make light of a thing, Fms. xi. 124: compar. -ligar, i. 262, Stj. 130.

auo-veldligr and -velligr, adj. easy, Stj. 8, 356. Josh. vii. 2.

auð-veldr, adj. easy, Eg. 39: superl. -veldastr, Ld. 14; metaph. compliant, Bs. i. 256, Sturl. i. etc.

aud-vinr, m. (poët.) a charitable friend [A.S. eadvine]; in the old poets freq. spelt otvin, v. Lex. Poët. B. as a pr. name Audunn; the etymology in Hkr. i. 12 is bad; and so is also the popular etymology of this word = none, fr. audr, vacuus.

auð-virðiligr, etc., v. auvirð-.

aud-vitad, n. part. easy to know, clear, evident, Ld. 78, Finnb. 232: now often adv. = clearly, to be sure.

auö-vist, n. adj. sure, certain, Karl. 181.

auð-þeystr, adj. part. easy to make flow, Stor. 2 (dub. passage).

aud-prifligr, adj. [probably = or-prifligr, fr. or- priv. and prifligr, robust, strong], feeble, weakly, Isl. ii. 456, Fb. i. 275 (of weak frame). auð-æfi qs. auðofi, n. pl. ['auðr,' opes, and 'of;' = ofa-fé, q. v.; Lat. opes], opulence, abundance, wealth, riches, in the Grag. freq. = means of subsistence, emoluments, i. 269, 277 (twice), ii. 213, cp. 1b. 16, where it means emoluments: in the proper sense wealth, Hkr. i. 13, where it means gold and treasures, Sks. 334, 442; veg ok a., power and wealth, Greg.

23; himnesk a., Joh. 21; jarðlig a., Greg. 32. Matth. vi. 19, 20; mörg a., Eluc. 53, Hom. 151, etc. aufl, interj. [a for. word; Germ. au web], woe! alas! used with dat., a.

mér, Mar. 167; acc., a. mik, 175; absol., 147; after the Reformation 'áví' and 'ó vei' occur, or 'vei' alone.

aufusa, u, f., in Norse MSS. spelt afusa, Dipl. i. 3; avusa, Str. 27, 54, Sks. 775 B; afuusa, N.G.L. i. 446. In Icel. always spelt with au, av, or ö, by changing the vowel, öfusa, aufusa, Ó. H. 155, where, however, some MSS. have aufussa, avfusa, Fms. viii. 39, 250; öfusa, Fs. 123; ofusa, 677. 3, Band. 6; öfussa, Bs. i. 481: the change of vowel is caused by the following f(v). The word is now quite obsolete, and its etymology is somewhat uncertain; it may be qs. á-fúss, or af-fúss, an 'af-' intens. and 'fúss,' willing, this last suggestion would best suit the Norse form. Its sense is thanks, gratitude, satisfaction, pleasure, and is almost exclusively used either as a supplement to 'bökk' or in such phrases as, kunna e-m au., or e-m er au. a e-u, to be pleased, gratified with; þakka með mikilli a., to tbank beartily, Str. 27; ef yðr er þar nokkur a. å, if it be any pleasure to you, Fms. ix. 495; kunna e-m au. e-s, or with 'at,' to be thankful, Fb. ii. 257, Eg. 111, O.H. 56, Fms. viii. l. c., Bs. i. 481, H.E. i. 432, Eg. 522, Sturl. iii. 125, Fær. 209, 677. 3; leggja at aud-skeptr, part. (in a proverb), Ad. 21, eigi eru a. almanna spjör, it is móti þökk ok au., O. H. 155; viljum vér au. gefa þeim góðum mönnum, we will thank them, Fms. viii. 250; var mönnum mikil ö. á því, 🏳 Harbarðsljóð 19; (Snorri attributes it to Odin, the poem to Thor.) much pleased by it, Fs. 123; hafa í móti þökk ok ö., Band. 19 new Ed. COMPOS: sufusu-gestr, m. a welcome guest, Valla L. 217, Sturl. i. 178. aufusu-svipr, m. friendly mien; aufusu-orð, n. tbanks, Gisl. 100. sýna á sér au., Fs. 14.

au-fúss, adj. in a verse by Arnór, perhaps akin to the above, meaning eager, Orkn. 126: vide, however, Lex. Poët. s. v. ofur.

AUGA, n., gen. pl. augna, [Lat. oculus, a dimin. of an obsolete ocus; Gr. δφθαλμός (Boeot, δκταλμός): Sanskr. aksba: the word is common to Sanskrit with the Slavonic, Greek, Roman, and Teutonic idioms: Goth. augo; Germ. auge; A. S. eage; Engl. eye; Scot. ee; Swed. oga; Dan. oje, etc. Grimm s. v. suggests a relationship to Lat. acies, acutus, etc. The letter n appears in the plur. of the mod. northern languages; the Swedes say 'ogon,' oculi, the Danes 'ojne;' with the article 'ogonen' and 'ojnene;' Old Engl. 'eyne;' Scot. 'een']:-an eye It is used in Icel. in a great many proverbs, e.g. betr sjá augu en auga, 'two eyes see better than one, i.e. it is good to yield to advice: referring to love, unir auga medan a ser, the eye is pleased whilst it can behold (viz. the object of its affection), Fas. i. 125, cp. Völs. rím. 4. 189; eigi leyna augu, ef ann kona manni, the eyes cannot bide it, if a woman love a man, i.e. they tell their own tale, Isl. ii. 251. This pretty proverb is an αν. λεγ. l.c. and is now out of use; it is no doubt taken from a poem in a drottkvætt metre, (old proverbs have alliteration, but neither rhymes nor assonance, rhyming proverbs are of a comparatively late date): medic., eigi er så heill er í augun verkir, Fbr. 75; sá drepr opt fæti (slips) er augnanna missir, Bs. i. 742; hætt er einu auganu nema vel fari, be wbo bas only one eye to lose will take care of it (comm.); husbondans auga sér bezt, the master's eye sees best; glögt er gests augat, a guest's eye is sharp; mörg eru dags augu, the day has many eyes, i. e. what is to be hidden must not be done in broad daylight, Hm. 81; náið er nef augum, the nose is near akin to the eyes (tua res agitur paries quum proximus ardet), Nj. 21; opt verðr slíkt á sæ, kvað selr, var skotinn í auga, this often bappens at sea, quoth the seal, when he was shot in the eye, of one who is in a scrape, Fms. viii. 402. In many phrases, at uuna (to love) e-m sem augum í höfði sér, as one's own eye-balls, Nj. 217; þótti mer slökt it sætasta ljós augna minna, by bis death the sweetest light of my eyes was quenched, 187: hvert grætr bú nú Skarphédinn? eigi er bat segir Skarphédinn, en hitt er satt at surnar i augum, the eyes smart from smoke, 200: renna, lita augum, to seek with the eyes, to look upon: it is used in various connections, renna, lita ástaraugum, vánaraugum, vinaraugum, truaraugum, öfundaraugum, girndarauga, with eyes of love, bope, friendship, faith, envy, desire: mæna a. denotes an upward or praying look; stara, fixed; horfa, attentive; lygna, blundskaka, stupid or slow; blina, glápa, góna, vacant or silly; skima, wandering; hvessa augu, a threatening look; leida e-n a., to measure one with the eyes; gjóta, or skjóta hornauga, or skjóta a. í skjálg, to tbrow a side glance of dislike or ill-will; gjóta augum is always in a bad sense; renna, líta mostly in a good sense: gefa e-u auga, oculum adjicere alicui; hafa auga a e-u, to keep an eye on it; segja e-m e-t i augu upp, to one's face, Orkn. 454; at augum, adverb. with open eyes, Hervar. S. (in a verse), etc. As regards various movements of the eyes; ljúka upp augum, to open the eyes; láta aptr augun, to shut the eyes; draga auga i pung, to draw the eye into a purse, i. e. sbut one eye; depla augum, to blink; at drepa titlinga (Germ. augeln, blinzen), to wink, to kill tits with the suppressed glances of the eye; glódarauga, a suffusion on the eye, hyposphagma; kýrauga, proptosis; vagl á auga, a beam in the eye; skjálgr, Lat. limus; ský, albugo; tekinn til augnanna, with sunken eyes, etc., Fel. ix. 192; a. bresta, in death: hafa styrur i augum, to bave prickles in the eyes, when the eyes ache for want of sleep: vatna musum, 'to water mice,' used esp. of children weeping silently and trying to hide their tears. As to the look or expression of the eyes there are sundry metaph, phrases, e.g. hafa fékróka í augum, to bave wrinkles at the corners of the eyes, of a shrewd money getting fellow, Fms. ii. 84, cp. Orkn. 330, 188, where krókauga is a cognom.; kvenna-króka, one insinuating with the fair sex; hasa ægishjalm í augum is a metaphor of one with a piercing, commanding eye, an old mythical term for the magical power of the eye, v. Grimm's D. Mythol, under Ægishjalmr: vera mjótt á milli augnanna, the distance between the eyes being sbort, is a popular saying, denoting a close, stingy man, hence mjóeygr means close: e-m vex e-t i augu (now augum), to sbrink back from, of a thing waxing and growing before one's eyes so that one dares not face it. As to the shape, colour, etc. of the eye, vide the adj. 'eygr' or 'eygor' in its many compds. Lastly we may mention the belief, that when the water in baptism touches the eyes, the child is thereby in future life prevented from seeing ghosts or goblins, vide the words tifreskr and skygn. No spell can touch the human eye; en er hann sá augu hans (that of Loki in the shape of a bird), þá grunaði hann (the giant) at madr mundi vera, Edda 60; í þessum birni þykist hón kenna augu Bjarnar konungs sonar, Fas. i. 51, vide Isl. Þjóðs. meton. and metaph, auga is used in a great many connections: astron.; pjaza augu, the eyes of the giant Thiazi, is a constellation, probably botan., auga = Lat. gemma, Hjalt. 38; kattarauga, cal's eye, is the flower forget-me-not. y. the spots that form the numbers on dice, 8. the bole in a millstone; kvarnarauga, Edda 79, 221, Magn. 530. Hkr. i. 121: the opening into which an axe handle is fastened, Sturl. ii. 91 : a pit full of water, Fs. 45 : nalarauga, a needle's eye : vindauga, wind's eye or window (which orig. had no glass in it), A.S. eag-dura (cye-door); also gluggi, q.v.: gleraugu, spectacles. pan of the hip joint, v. auguakarl, Fms. iii. 392: gagnaugu, temples. hassauga, the bottom of the ocean, in the popular phrase, fara út í hassauga, descendere ad tartara. n. poët. the sun is called heimsauga, dagsauga, COMPDS either with sing, auga or pl. augna; in the latter case mod. usage sometimes drops the connecting vowel a, e.g. augudapr, augn-depra, augn-fagr, etc. auga-brago (augna-), n. the twinkling of an eye, Hm. 77; a cinu a., in the twinkling of an eye, Ver. 32, Edda (pref.) 146, Sks. 559, Rb. 568: a glance, look, snart a., Fms. ii. 174; mikit a., v. 335; úsagrligt a., Fs. 43; hasa a. af e-u, to cast a look at, Fbr. 49, Fms. xi. 424: in the phrase, at hafa e-n (or verda) at augabragoi, metaph. to make sport of, to mock, deride, gaze at, Stj. auga-brun, f. the eye-brow. 627, 567, Hm. 5, 29. auga-staor. m. an eye-mark; hafa a. & c-u, to mark with the eye. auga-steinn (augna-), m. the eye-ball, Hkr. iii. 365, Fms. v. 152. augna-bending, f. a warning glance, Pr. 452. augna-blik, n. mod. = augnabrago, s. augna-bólga, u, f. ophthalmia. augna-brá, f. the eye-lid, D.N. i. 216. augna-fagr and aug-fagr, adj. fair-eyed, Fas. ii. 365, Fms. v. 200. augna-fró, f. a plant, eye-bright, euphrasia, also augna-gras, Hjalt. 231. augna-fræ, n. lychnis alpina. augna-gaman, n. a sport, delight for the eyes to gaze at, Ld. 202, Bær. 17, Fsm. 5 (love, sweetheart). augna-gróm, n. (medic.) a spot in the eye; metaph., ekki a., no mere speck, of whatever can easily be seen. augna-har, n. an eye-lasb. augna-hvíta, u, f. albugo. augna-hvarmr, m. the eye-lid. na-karl, n. the pan of the hip joint; slita or slitna or auguaköllunum, augna-kast, n. a wild glance, Barl. 167. Fas. iii. 392. kláði, a, m. psoropbtbalmi. augna-krókr, n. the corner of the eye. augna-lag, n. a look, Ld. 154. augna-lok, n. 'eye-covers,' eye-lids. augna-mein, n. a disease of the eye. augna-mjörkvi, a, m. dimness of the eye, Pr. 471. augna-rao, n. expression of the eye. skot, n. a look askance, Gpl. 286, Fs. 44 (of cats). augna-slim, augna-staor, m. the socket of the eye, Magn. 532. n. glaucoma. augna-sveinn, m. a lad leading a blind man, Str. 46. augna-topt, f. the socket of the eye. u, f. bippus. augna-verkr, m. pain in the eye, Hkr. ii. 257, Bs. i. 451, Pr. 471, Bjam. 58. augnavik, n. pl. = augnakrókr. augna-bungi, a, m. beaviness of the eye, Hkr. ii. 257.

aug-dapr, adj. weak-sighted, Fms. ii. 8: augdepra, u, f. amblyopia, aug-lit, n. a face, countenance; fyrir a. alls lýds, Stj. 326; fyrir Guds a., before the face of God, Orkn. 170; i a. postulans, 623, 25, Ver. 7. Gen. vii, I ('before me'); fyrir konungs a., Sks. 283. Now much used, esp. theol. aug-ljós, n. 'eye light,' in the phrase, koma i a., to appear, Fas. i. 80. aug-ljóss, adj. clear, manifest, Fms. i. 229, Hkr. ii. 225.

Fél. ix. 191.

aug-lýsa, t, to make known, manifest: subst. auglýsing, f.

aug-sjandi, part. seeing ocularily, Mart. 117.

aug-surr, adj. blear-eyed, Stj. 171 (of Leah): sureygr is more freq. aug-sýn, f. sight; koma i a. e-m, to appear before him, Eg. 458, 623. 12; i a. e-m, in the face of, Blas. 46.

aug-sýna, d, to sbew, Fms. v. 200.

aug-syniligr, adj. and -liga, adv. evident, visible, Ghl. 42.

AUK, adv. [cp. Goth. auk, freq. used by Ulf. as translation of Gr. γάρ; jab auk = καὶ γάρ; A.S. eâc; Engl. eke; Germ. aucb]. it originally was a noun = augmentum, but this form only remains in the adverbial phrase, at auk, to boot, besides, Bs. i. 317 (freq.): adverbially and without 'at,' besides; hundrad manna ok auk kappar hans, a bundred men and eke bis champions, Fas. i. 77; priggja marka fé, en konungr pat er auk er, the surplus, N.G.L. i. 350: cp. also such phrases as, auk bess at, besides that; auk heldr, v. heldr. also, Lat. etiam, occurs in very old prose, and in poetry; svá mun ek auk bletza þá konu es þú baðsk fyr, 655 ix. B. 2 (MS. of the 12th century), Hkr. ii. 370 (in a poem of Sighvat); this form, however, is very rare, as the word soon passed into ok, q.v. head a sentence, nearly as Lat. deinde, deinceps, the Hebrew 1, or the like; the Ormulum uses ac in the same way; in MSS. it is usually spelt ok; but it may be seen from poetic assonances that it was pronounced auk, e. g. auk und jöfri fræknum; hitt var auk at eykir, Vellekla, Hkr. i. 216: auk at járna leiki, Lex. Poët.; it is sometimes even spelt so, e.g. auk nær aptni skaltu Óðinn koma, Hm. 97, Hkr. i. 29, v.l.; it is also freq. in the Cod. Fris. of the Hkr. This use of 'auk' or 'ok' is esp. freq. in old narrative poems such as the Ynglingatal (where it occurs about thirty-five times), in the Haleygjatal (about six times), and the Vellekla (about ten times): vide ok. IV. simply for ok. and. the Dioscuri, Castor and Pollux; the story is told in the Edda 47, cp. a spelt on some Runic stones, but seldom, if ever, in written documents, AUKA, jók, jóku (mod. juku), aukit [Lat. augere; Gr. aufeiv; Ulf.] aukan; A.S. eacan or ecan; Engl. to ecbe or eke; O.H.G. aubon]; pres. ind. eyk; subj. eyki or yki, mod. jyki. A weak form (aukar, aukaði, aukat) also occurs, esp. in Norse, and (as a Norwegianism) in Icel. writers, esp. after the year 1260, e. g. aukadu, augebant, Barl. 138; aukadist, augebatur, aukadi, augebat, Barl. 180, Fms. i. 140, 184, x. 21 (MSS. aukuðu or aukaði, and some even jóku), Róm. 234; subj. aukaðist, augeretur, Fms. vii. 158 in three Icel. vellum MSS.; only one has ykist, the strong genuine form. Pres. aukar, auget, and aukast, augetur, instead of eykr, eykst, Stj. 32: part. aukat (= aukit), O. H. L. 46; aukuo, aucta, Fms. x. 236. Even Snorri in the Edda has aukadist, p. 3, both in the vellum MSS. Ob. and Kb.,—a form which is thoroughly unclassical; the poets use the strong form, and so Ari, who has jókk = jók ek, in the preface to 1b.;—so also the great bulk of the classical literature. Since the Reformation the strong form is the only one used either in speaking I. Lat. augere, to augment, increase, with acc., eykr or writing. hann þar ætt sína, Fms. iii. 82 ; jók Njáll ekki hjón sín, Nj. 59 ; hét hann peim at auka virðing þeirra, Eg. 33; þessi orð jóku mjök sök Adams, Šks. 542; jók nafn hans, Hom. 51, Nj. 33; var þá síðan aukuð (=aukin) veizlan, Fms. x. 236: absol., þat hálft er eykr, that balf which is over and above, Js. 75: in the phrase, aukanda ferr um e-t, a thing is increasing, Nj. 139. II. Lat. addere, to add to the whole of a thing; with the thing added in the dat., ok jókk (=jók ek) því es mér varð síðan kunnara, 1b. (pref.): impers., jók miklu við, increased greatly, Ld. 54; þá eykst enn ellefu nóttum við, eleven nights are still added, Rb. 28: followed by 'vio,' auka e-u vio e-t, to add to it, Nj. 41; 'til' is rare and unclassical, and seems almost a Danism, as 'foic til,' petta til aukist, Vm. 7: auka synd (dat.) á synd (acc.) ofan, to beap sin upon sin, Stj. 274: aukast ordum við, to come to words, speak, Eg. ch. 58, v.l. (rare); β. with acc. (a ef þú eykr orði, if thou say'st a word more, Lex. Poët. rare and unclassical Latinism), auka ný vandræði (=nýjum vandræðum) y. impers. in the phrase, aukar á, it iná hin fornu, Bs. i. 751. creases, Róm. 234. III. to surpass, exceed; pat er eykr sex aura, bå å konungr hålft þat er eykr, if it exceeds six ounces, ibe king takes balf the excess, N.G.L. i. 281, Js. § 71; en ármaðr taki þat er aukit er, what is over and above, N.G.L. i. 165. Esp. used adverbially in the part, pass, aukit, aukin, more than, above, of numbers; aukin þrjú hundrud manna, three bundred men well told, Eg. 530, Fms. ix. 524, v.l.; með aukit hundrað manna, x. 184, Ld. 196; aukin hálf vætt, Grett. 141 β. in the phrases, pat er (eigi) aukat (aukit), it is no exaggeration, Jd. verse 22, the Ed. in Fms. xi. 160 has 'arla' (a false reading); pat er aukat, O. H. L. l. c.; ordum aukid, exaggerated, Thom. 73. aukan, f. increase, K. A. 20.

auki, a, m. eke [A. S. eaca; Old Engl. and Scot. eke or eik], increase, addition; Abram tók þann auka nafns síns, Ver. 14; a. öfundar ok hatrs, Stj. 192: cp. also in the phrase, verda at moldar auka, to become dust, to die, in a verse in the Hervar. S. Fas. i. 580; cp. madr er moldu samr, man is but dust, Sl. 47; and another proverb, lauki er lítið gæft til auka, used by Sighvat (Lex. Poët.), the leek needs but little care to grow; sarsauki, pain, Mirm. 47; Danmerkr auki is a poët. name of Zealand used by Bragi, Edda I: the phrase, i miklum auka, in a buge, colossal shape, Glúm. 345 (in a verse); hence perhaps comes the popular phrase, að færast i aukana (or haukana), to exert to the utmost one's bodily strength, Glamr færðist í alla auka (of one wrestling), Grett. 114 A, (Ed. 1853 has færðist í 2. metaph. seed, germs, thou hast given me no seed, Stj. 111. Gen. xv. 2; esp. the sperm of whales, amber, Sks. 137. Y. interest of capital, N. G. L. ii. duce of the earth, Barl. 193, 200. 380; vide áauki, sársauki, sakauki, i. 187. COMPDS: auka-dagr, m. 'eke-day,' dies intercalaris, Rb. 488. auka-hlutr, m. in the phrase, at aukahlut, to boot, Hom. 129. auka-nafn, n. 'eke-name,' nickname, or additional name, Sks. 272. auka-smiði, n. a superfluous thing, a mere appendix, Fms. ii. 359. auka-tungl, n. intercalary moon, Rb. 116. auka-verk, n. by-work, Bs. i. 326. auka-vika, u, f. · eke-week, intercalary week, v. hlaupár.

auk-nafn, n. = aukanafn, 'eke-name.

auk-nefna, d, to nickname, Landn. 243.

auk-nefni, n. 'eke-name,' a nickname: a. a defamatory name, punishable with the lesser outlawry, Grág. ii. 146. β. in a less strong sense; hann var svartr á hár ok hörund, ok því þótti honum a. gefit er hann var Birtingr kalladr, be was swarth of bair and skin, and for that it seemed a nickname was given him when he was called 'Brighting,' Fms. vii. 157: Helgi átti kenningar nafn, ok var kallaðr hvíti; ok var þat eigi a., því at hann var vænn maðr ok vel hærðr, hvítr á hár, Helgi bad a surname (in a good sense), and was called 'White;' and that was no nickname, for be was a bandsome man and well-baired, white of bair, Fbr. 80: þú hyggr at ek muna vilja giptast einum bastarði,—eigi em ek bastaror nema at a., of William the Conqueror, Fb. iii. 464. In old times, esp. at the time of the colonisation of Iceland, such nicknames were in freq. use, as may be seen from the index in the Landnama; they gradually went out of use, but still occur now and then throughout the whole of the Saga period in Icel. down to the 14th century.

aukning, f., Old Engl. 'eeking,' increase, Stj. 100, 176, Sks. 137. au-kvisi, 2, m. [prop. auð-kvisi, from auð, easy, and kveistinn, toucby; cp. kveisa, f. ulcus, dolor]; in old writers it is spelt with au or av. and sometimes with a double k, ökkvisi, Bs. i. 497 vellum MS. A. M. 499; audkvisi, Ld. 236 C and the vellum MS. A. M. 122 A to Sturl. ii. 8; aukvisi, MS. 122 B; O. H. (Ed. 1853) reads aucvisi; it means a weakly, irritable, touchy person. Used esp. in the proverb, einn er au. ættar hverrar, cp. the Engl. there is a black sheep in every flock, Hkr. ii. 238: mun ek son minn låta heita Gizur; lítt hafa þeir aukvisar verit í Haukdæla ætt er svá hafa heitið hér til, Sturl. ii. 8, at the birth of earl Gizur. The name Gizur was a famous name in this family, Gizur hvíti, Gizur biskup, Gizur Hallsson, etc.]

AULANDI, an indecl. adj., qs. al-landi, an aπ. λεγ. in the proverb Nj. 10, illt er peim er au. er alinn. [The root is prob. al- (Lat. alius). land, cp. A.S. ellend or elland (Hel. elilendi), alienus, peregrinus; Old Engl. alyant; O. H. G. alilanta (whence N.H.G. elend, miser): there is in Icel, also a form erlendr, prob. a corruption for ellendr. This root is quite lost in the Scandin. idioms with the single exception of the proverb mentioned above, and the altered form er -.] The MSS. of the Nj. l. c. differ; some of them have á úlandi in two words, in terra mala; Johnsonius has not made out the meaning; the proper sense seems to be exul ubique infelix. In olden times peregrinus and miser were synonymous, the first in a proper, the last in a metaphorical sense: so the Lat. bostis (=bospes) passed into the sense of enemy. The spelling with ö (ölandi) ought perhaps to be preferred, although the change of vowel cannot be easily accounted for.

auli, a, m. a dunce, aulaligr adj., aula-skapr m., aulast dep., etc., do not occur, as it seems, in old writers; prop. a slug (?); cp. Ivar Aasen s. vv. aula, auling.

aum-hjartaor, adj. tender-bearted, charitable, Stj. 547, Hom. 109. aumindi, n. painful feeling from a wound or the like, Fél. ix. 192. aumingi, ja, m. a wretch, in Icel. in a compassionate sense; Guds a., 655 xxxii. 15, Bs. i. 74, Hom. 87.

aumka, ad, to bewail, to complain, esp. in the impers. phrase, a. sik, to feel compassion for, Bær. 11, Al. 10, Róm. 182, Bret. 98, Fagrsk. ch. 34; now freq. used in reflex., aumkast yfir e-t, to pity.

aumkan, f. lamentation, wailing, El. 10.

aumleikr, m. misery, Stj. 428, Bs. i. 321; now also used of the sore feeling of a wound or the like, v. aumr.

aumligr, adj. and -liga, adv. [A. S. earmlic], poorly, wretched, Grett. 161, Fms. i. 138, v. 218, Sturl. ii. 13, Bær. 4, Magn. 432, H. E. iii. 366. sum-neglur, more correctly anneglur, cp. the Engl. agnail, bangnail, or naugnail, Fél. ix. 192; the lunula unguium is in Icel. called anneglur, and so is the skin round the finger-nail, id.

AUMR, adj. [Ulf. has arms = miser; Dan. and Swed. om], seems with all its compounds to be a Scandin, word. It originally probably meant sore, aching, touchy, tender. In mod. Icel. it is sometimes used in this sense, in Dan. and Swed. only = sore, and metaph. tender. 2. metaph. poorly, miserable, unbappy; styrkstú, aumr, strengthen thyself, wretched man, Orkn. 153, Hom. 15, 16, Th. 6, 16: in a bad sense = armr, Fms. ix. 414.

aum-staddr, adj. part. in a poor, wretched state, Stj. 475. AUNGR, adj. pron., Lat. nullus, none, v. engi, enginn.

AUNGR, adj. narrow, Lat. angustus, v. öngr aung-vit, n., medic. lipothymia, a fainting-fit, Fél. ix. 193.

AURAR, m. pl. money, aura- in compds, v. eyrir.

aur-boro, n. the second plank from the keel of a boat, Vellekla and Edda (Gl.)

aur-falr, s, m. [aurr, lutum, falr], the spike at the butt-end of a spear, Gr. σαυρωτήρ; þeir settu niðr aurfalina er þeir stóðu ok studdust við spjót sín, Fms. i. 280; síðan mældi hann grundvöll húsgörðarinnar fyrir Þórhalli með aurfalnum á spjóti sínu, ii. 230; Abner sneri spjótinu í hendi sér ok lagði aurfalnum framan í kviðinn, Stj. 497, 2 Sam. ii. 23 (in Engl. Vers. 'the hinder end of the spear'), Art. 105. mud spile. an arrow, Fb. iii. 406.

aur-gáti, a, m. [qs. ör-gáti, ör- and geta], a tit-bit, good cheer, good treatment, a rare and now obsolete word; mun ekki af sparat, at veita oss allan þann a. er til er, Fms. xi. 341; um tilföng veizlunnar, sem bezt buandi allan a., Mar. 97; af þeim örgáta sem hon hafði framast föng til, 655 xxxi. 2.

aurigr, adj., only in the contr. forms aurgan (acc.), aurgu (dat.), clayey, muddy, Vsp. 31, Ls. 48; cp. úrigr, madidus.

AURR, s, m., prop. wet clay or loam, but also in Eggert Itin. p. 682 of a sort of clay, cp. Ivar Aasen s. v. aur. In A.S. ear is bumus; in the Alvismál one of the names of the earth is aurr (kalla aur uppregin). In the Völuspa the purling water of the well of Urda is called aurr; hence the paraphrase in the Edda, pær taka hvern dag vatn í brunninum, ok með aurinn (the clay, bumus) er liggr um brunninn, ok ausa upp yfir askinn. Elsewhere used simply of mud, wet soil, aurr etr iljar en ofan kuldi, Gs. 15; auri trödd und jóa fótum, Gh. 16; ok við aur ægir hjarna, bragnings burs of blandinn vard, bis brains were mixed with the mud,

It. 16; turr ok saurr, mud and dirt, Ann. 1362; hylja auri, bumo condere, in a verse in the Korm. S.

aurriði, orriði, mod. urriði, a. m. salmo trutta, salmon-trout, Fél.
i. 11; salmo squamis argenteis, maculis nigris brunneo cinctis, pinna petorali punctulis sex notata, Eggert Itin. p. 595: deriv. from örr, celer, and -riði, or from aurr (?); the Norse form aure indicates a diphthong, Ghl. 421, Edda (Gl.) compds: aurriða-bekkr, m. a 'beck' full of trout, Bolt. aurriða-fiski, f. trout-fishing, Bolt. aurriða-net, n. a trout-net, Gísl. 104. aurriða-vatn, n. a water stocked with trout, Bolt.

aur-skór, m. (prop. 'mud-sboe'), a borse sboe, an $\tilde{\alpha}\pi$. $\lambda \epsilon \gamma$. in the story Fms. iii. 210, each of the shoes weighing $1\frac{1}{2}$ lb. The story is a pendant to that told of king Augustus of Poland and the blacksmith.

aur-skrioa, u, f. a land slip, avalanche, Fbr. 84, Fs. 59. aurvandils-ta (aurvanti, Ub.), f. Aurvandil's toe, probably the star

Rigel in Orion, v. Edda 59. AUSA, jós, jósu (mod. jusu), ausit; pres. ind. eyss; subj. eysi or ysi, mod. jysi (bauriret), cp. Lat. baurio, baus-it; not found in Goth. or in I. to sprinkle, with dat. of the liquid, and the object in acc. or with a prep.; pær taka hvern dag vatn í brunninum, ok ausa (viz. pvi) upp yfir askinn, ... pour it over the ash-boughs, Edda 11; ef maor eyss eldi (fire, embers), Grag. ii. 128; a. sild or netjum, to empty the nets of the herrings, Ghl. 427: a. út, to pour out, fé, Grett. 126. ausa moldu, to sprinkle with mould, bury; hlóðu þeir at grjóti ok jósu at moldu, Eg. 300; er hann höfðu moldu ausit, Bjarn. 11; salr ausinn moldu, bis chamber sprinkled with mould (poët.), Hervar. S.; ausinn B. ausa vatni is a standing phrase for a sort of baptism haugi, Yt. 26. used in the last centuries, at least, of the heathen age. The child when born was sprinkled with water and named, yet without the intervention of a priest; this rite is mentioned as early as in the Hávamál, one of the very oldest mythological didactic poems on record, where it is attributed even to Odin; ef ek skal pegn ungan verpa vatni h, if I am to throw water on a young thane, 159; Josu vatni Jarl létu heita, Jod ól Edda jósu vatni, hörvi svartan, hétu þræl, Rm. 7, 31; sá var siðr göfigra manna, at vanda menn mjök til at ausa vatni ok gefa nafn;...Sigurðr jarl jós sveininn vatni ok kallaði Hákon, Hkr. i. 118; Eiríkr ok Gunnhildr áttu son er Haraldr konungr jós vatni ok gaf nafn sitt, 122; eptir um daginn jós Hákon konungr þann svein vatni ok gaf nafn sitt, 135, Fms. i. 66, xi. 2; fæddi þóra sveinbarn ok var Grimr nefndr, er vatni var ausinn, Eb. 26; enn áttu þau Skallagrímr son, sá var vatni ausinn ok nafn gefit ok kallaðr Egill, Eg. 146, 147, 166, Ld. 108, Gísl. 32 (of Snorre Gode); and so in many instances from Icel., Norway, and the Orkneys, all of them of the heathen age. The Christian term is skira, q.v. 3. metaph. of scolding or abuse: hrópi ok rógi ef þú eyss á holl regin. Ls. 4; ausa sauri á e-n, to bespatter with foul language, ausask sauri á (recipr.), Bjarn. 33; a. e-m e-u í augu upp, to throw in one's face, Eg. 576; hann jós upp (poured out) þar fyrir alþýðu öllum glæpum föður síns, Mart. 80; um verka þann er hverr jós á annan, Bjarn. 42. of a horse, to kick or lash out with his hinder feet, opp. to priona, to rear up and strike with the fore feet; hestrinn tok at frysa, blasa ok ausa, Greg. 49; at merrin eysi, Sturl. ii. 40 C. III. to pump, esp. a ship, with the ship in acc.; Hallfredr jos at sínum hlut, Fs. 113, Grett. 95 A, Fbr. 173, N. G. L. i. 102: a. bat sinn, to make water, Fms. vii. 331.

ause, u, f. a ladle, ekki er sopið kálið þó í ausuna sé komit (a proverb), many a slip 'twint the cup and the lip, Grett. 132. þórð. 51.

aus-ker, n. = austr-ker, Shetl. auskerrie, a scoop, v. Jamieson Suppl. sub voce, Fs. 147.

ausli, v. auvisli. austan, adv. [A.S. eastan; Hel. ostan], from the east, Eg. 183, Eb. 4: of the direction of the wind (cp. vestan, sunnan, nordan), used with a preceding prep. á, á vestan, austan ..., blowing from west, east ..., Bs. ii. 48. B. fyrir a, used as a prep. with acc. east of; fyrir a, mitt haf, Grag. ch. 85, p. 142 new Ed., Nj. 36, 81, Eg. 100, Landn. 228. γ . with gen. in phrases like austan lands, a. fjarðar, cp. norðan, sunnan, COMPDS: austan-fero, f. a journey from the vestan, Hkr. iii. 201. east, Fms. vii. 128. austan-fjarðar, gen. loci, used as adverb, in the east of the firth, Hkr. ii. 295, Fms. i. 278, iv. 37. austan-gola, u, f. a light breeze from the east, Sturl. iii. 59 (Ed. austræn). kváma, u, f. arrival from the east, Fms. vi. 23. austan-maör, m. a man from the east, Old Engl. easterling, Sturl. iii. 248. austansjór, m. the east sea, nickname of a man, Fms. ix. 316. veor, rs, m. an easterly gale, Rb. 438. austan-verör, adj. eastern (cp. nordan-, sunnan-, vestan-verdr), Landn. 25, Stj. 75, A. A. 286. austan-vindr, m. an east wind, Sks. 38, cp. nordan-, vestan-, sunnansustarliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. easterly, Fms. xi. 389.

austastr, superi. easternmost, v. eystri.

austfirðingr, m., csp. in pl. an eastfirtber, one from the east of Iceland, Sturl, ii. 158. compus: austfirðinga-búð, f., v. búð. austfirðinga-dómr, m. the court for the east quarter, v. dómr. austfirðinga-fjórðungr, m. the east quarter of Iceland, v. fjórðungr.

aust-firðir, m. pl. the east firths of Iceland, opp. to vestfirðir, Landn. aust-firzkr, adj. one from the east firths in Icel., Nj. 54, Lv. 57. aust-för, f. = austrför.

aust-ker, n. a scoop, bucket, v. auss-ker.

aust-kylfir, m. pl. easterlings, cp. Kylfingar, an old Russian population, Kolbiager, east of the Baltic; in a poem of Hornklofi, Fagrsk. 9. aust-lægr, adj. easterly, of the wind.

aust-maör, m., pl. austmenn, in Icel. and in the northern part of the British Islands a standing name of those who came from the Scandinavian continent, esp. Norse merchants, vide the old Irish chronicles, and the Sagas, passim. The English used 'easterling' in the same sense, and sterling is an abbreviation of the word from the coin which the 'easterlings' brought with them in trade. Eyvindr austmaör, Landn., Nj. 81, Eg. 744, 1sl. ii. 192, 128, Sturl. ii. 47, Lv. 23, Valla L. 216, Landn. 36, 290, 305, Eb. 104, 196, etc. In the Norse Gpl. 450 it is used of Swedes in Norway: austmanna-skelfir, m. 'skelper' (conqueror, terror) of the east men, a nickname, Landn. 305.

aust-marr, m. the east sea, the east Baltic (Estmere of king Alfred, Oros. Ed. Bosworth, p. 22), Yt. 18.

aust-mál, n. = austrmál, N. G. L. i. 335.

aust-mork, f. the east mark, i. e. the east, Yt. 4.

AUSTR, rs, m. [A. S. and Engl. east; Hel. ôstar; Germ. ost, osten], the east; sól í austri, Grág. ii. 224, Rb. 92, Landn. 276; ór austri, Sturl. ii. 25. 2. as adv. towards east, eastward, Nj. 151, Eg. 72, Grág. i. 96, 189. austr, rs and rar, m. [ausa], the act of drawing water in buckets, pumping; v. dæluaustr and byttuaustr, Grett. 0. 19; standa í austri, to toil bard at the pump, Fas. ii. 520, Sturl. iii. 68; til austrar, Grett. 94 B. β. the water pumped or to be pumped, bilge water, Gr. άντλος, Sturl. iii. 67, 68; skipið fullt af austri, full of bilge water, Fb. ii. 204 (Fbr.), Finnb. 234; standa í a., v. above. compp: austrs-ker, austker (N. G. L. i. 59). a scoop, pump-bucket (cp. ausker), Gþl. 424. austr-álfa, v. austrhálfa.

austr-att and -eett, f. eastern region, east; 1 austr., towards east, in eastern direction, Fms. ii. 49, x. 267, Sks. 38. 655 xiv. B. 1.

austr-biti, a, m. a cross-beam nearest the pumping-place in a ship, Fs. 153.

austr-ferð and austr-for, f. voyage to the east, esp. to Russia or the east Baltic, Fb. i. 130, Ls. 60, the last passage in a mythical sense. compps: austrfarar-knorr, m. a vessel bound for the Baltic, Fms. vii. 256. austrfarar-skip, n. id., Fms. viii. 61, Orkn. 274 old Ed., where the new Ed. 334 has útfararskip, a ship bound for the Mediterranean (better).

austr-hálfa, u, f. [Hel. ôstarbalba = oriens], often spelt -álfa by dropping the b; the east, in old writers freq. of the Austria of the peace of Verdun, A. D. 843, including the Baltic and the east of Europe; sometimes also of the true east; um Gardaríki (Russia Minor) ok víða um a. heims, Fms. i. 96; í Görðum austr ok austrhólfunni, x. 275; í a. heims eru þrjú Indialönd, A. A. 283; Licinius lagði undir sik víða a., Blas. 37; Adam ok Eva bygðu síðan í a. þar sem Hebron heitir, Ver. 5, Stj. 67, 43: now used in Icel. = Asia, Vestrhálfa = America, Suðrhálfa = Africa, Norðrhálfa = Europe, Eyjaálfa = Australia. Compds: austrhálfu-lýðr, m. people of the east, Stj. 392. Judges vi. 33. austrhálfu-pjóð, f. id., Stj. 389.

austr-kendr, adj. part. eastern, of wind, Bs. i. 388.

austrligr, adj. eastern, Stj. 336.

austr-lond, n. pl. the east, orient, the eastern part of Europe, in old writers often synonymous to Austr-hálfa, and opp. to Nordrönd, Scandinavia; Sudriönd, South Germany, etc.; Vestrlönd, the British Islands, Normandy, Bretagne, etc., Post. 656 C. 39, Fms. ii. 183, Post. 645. 102, Hkr. i. 134 in a poem of the 10th century used of Russia; cp. Brocm. 101.

austr-mál, n. (navig.), the pumping-watch, the crew being told off two and two, to hand the buckets up, one of them standing in the bilge water down below and the other on deck, vide the Fbr. 131, Grett. ch. 19; en hverr þeirra manna er síðar kemr en a. komi til hans, þá er hann sekr níu ertogum, N.G.L. i. 335 [ausmaal, bilge water, Ivar Aasen].

austr-oka, að, [austr], to lavish, squander, with dat. an άπ. λεγ. as it seems, Fas. iii. 198, 202, where a. fé sinu; cp. Gr. ἀντλέω.

austr-rīki, n. the eastern empire, esp. the east of Europe (Russia, Austria, sometimes also including Turkey of the present time); the term is often vague, and synonymous to Austrvegr, Austriand, or referring to the Germany of the year 843; (the mod, sense is = Austria); [varr viðiaðmi eignaðist allt Danaveldi, ok mikinn hluta Saxlands ok allt A., Hkr. Yngl. S. ch. 45, Fms. vi. 8; Constantinopolis er æðst borga í A., Ver. 49; þeodosius inn mikli var sex vetr konungr í A., 50; Licinius hét konungr í A., Blas. 37, in these last passages = the eastern empire (of Rome); þá er ek (viz. king David) liða ok vask konungr kallaðr í A. (in the east), Niðrst. 4, cp. Baut. nos. 780, 979.

austr-rum, n. the part of a vessel's bold near the stern where the pump is, Hkr. i. 82, Stj. 57, Fbr. 158, Edda 35; an aft and fore pumping-place (eptra ok fremra austrrum) is mentioned Fms. viii. 139.

austr-trog, n. a scoop, bucket, austr-vegr, s, m. the eastern way, east, esp. Russia, Wenden, the east Baltic; fara í Austrveg is a standing phrase for trading or piratical expeditions in the Baltic, opp. to víking or vestr-víking, which only refer to expeditions to the British Islands, Normandy, Brittany, etc.; austr-víking, Landn. 221, is a false reading; hann var farmaðr mikill (Hólmgarðs-fari) ok kaupmaðr; fór opt í Austrveg (Baltic), Landn. 169, Nj. 41, Eg. 228, Fms. freq., vide vol. xii, s. v. In the Edda fara í A. is a standing phrase for the expeditions of Thor against giants. Þórr var farinn í A. at berja tröll, 26, cp. Ls. 59, where a. means the eastern region of heaven. Sometimes it is used of the east in general, Ver. 9, Rb. 412, 623. 13, Baut. no. 813. compps: austrvegs-konungar, m. pl. the three kings or Magi ('wise men') from the east, Stj. 16; a king of Russia, Fms. x. 397. austrvegs-maðr, m. an inhabitant of Austrvegir, Hkr. i. 44.

austr-ætt, v. austrátt.

aust-rœna, u, f. eastern breeze.

aust-ronn, adj. [Hel. ostroni; A. S. easterne; cp. norrænn, suðrænn], eastern, of the wind; a. gola, eastern breeze, Sturl. iii. 59; vindr, Orkn. (in a verse); viðr, timber from Norway or Scandinavia, Grág. i. 149, the Eistland tymmer of the old Scotch inventories (Jamieson, Suppl. s. v.); Austrænir menn, Norsemen in Iceland, Fms. ix. 276; as a nickname, Eb. 12, and Landn. The name denotes the inhabitants of the Scandinavian continent as opp. to the British Islands and Iceland.

aust-skota, u, f. = austrsker, Grág. ii. 171; Isl. ii. 382 spelt ausskota. au-virð and auvirði, mod. auðvirði, n. [af, off, and verð, value; the change of letter caused by the following v; a purely Icel. form, the Norse being 'afv-;' the mod. Icel. form is aud-v., as if it were to be derived from aud- and verd]: 1. a worthless wretch, a laggard, bungler; sel þú upp, auvirðit, knálegar bytturnar, Bungler! band thou up stoutly the buckets, Fbr. 131; hygg ek at eingi madr eigi jafnmikil a. at frændum sem ek, Hrafn. 11; verða at a., Bret. 163, Sturl. i. 2. a law term, damage, anything impairing the value of a thing; hann abyrgist við þeim auvirðum er þat fær af því skaða, Grág. COMPDS: auviros-maor, m. a wretch, laggard, 655, vide i. 431. Sturl. ii. 139, Fær. 74, borf. Karl. 426. auvirðs-skapr, m. naugbtiness, Gullb. 12.

au-viroast, d, to become wortbless, Eg. 103, Glúm. 377 C.

in the act. to think unworthy, disparage, Barl. 21, 57, 123, 190, Mar. 83: seldom used except in Norse writers, and consequently spelt with an 'af-i' in reflex. sense, Stj. 483.

au-viröliga, Norse afvirö-, and mod. Icel. auöviröil-, adv. despicably, Sturl. iii. 220, Fs. 71.

au-wiröligr, etc., adj. wortbless, Fas. i. 87, Bret. 31, 72, Sturl. iii. 225, Barl. 75; at skurðarskirn sé afvirðilig (indigna) Kristnum mönnum, 159.

au-wisli, and contr. ausli, and usli, a.m. etym. uncertain, ausli.

au-visli, and contr. ausli and usli, a, m.; etym. uncertain, ausli, Gpl. 385 A; usli, N.G. L. i. 246, Fms. i. 202, viii. 341, xi. 35, Edda (Gl.) In the Grag. auvisli, spelt with au or av; in the Ed. of 1829 sometimes with " where the MSS. have au: I. a law term. damages, Lat. damnum; bæta auvisla is a standing law term for to pay compensation for damages done, the amount of which was to be fixed by a jury; bæta skal hann a. á fjórtán nóttum sem búar fimm virða, Grág. i. 383, 418, ii. 229, 121, 223 (Ed. 1853), 225 (twice): hence auvislabót. In Norse law, gjalda a., Gpl. 384; ábyrgi honum garðinn ok allan ausla þann er, 385 A; beiða usla bótar, N.G.L. i. 246. II. metaph. burt, injury in general; mondi þeim þá ekki vera gjört til auvisla, Ld. 76; ok er þat þó líkast, at þú setir eigi undan öllum avvisla (thou wilt not get off unscathed), ef þú tekr eigi við, Fms. iii. 2. devastation, Fms. xi. 81: esp. by fire and sword in the alliterative phrase, eldr (fire) ok usli; fara með eld ok usla, i. 202; heldr en þar léki yfir eldr ok usli, viii. 341; þá görði á mikit regn, ok slökði þann eld vandliga, svá at menn múttu þá þegar fara yfir usla þann inn mikla (embers and ruins), xi. 35. In the Edda (Gl.) usli is recorded as one of the sixty names of fire: cp. also the mod, verb ösla, to plunge through: auvisli is now an obsolete word, usli a common word, gjöra usla, to desolate, in the metaph. sense. COMPDS: auvisla-bot and usla-bot (N. G. L. i. 246), f. a law term, compensation fixed by a jury of five, cp. above; distinction is made between a, hin meiri and hin minni, first rate or second rate compensation, Grag. ii. 344: in pl. 225: auslagiald and usla-giald, n. compensation, Gbl. 387.

AX, n. [Goth. aks, cp. Goth. asans = barvest], an ear of corn, Stj. 201, Thom. 98.

axar-, v. öx, an axe.

ax-helma, u, f. a blade of corn, ear and stem, Stj. 422, Ruth ii. 2 (Engl. Vers. 'ears of corn').

ax-korn, n. an ear of corn, Edda (Ub.) ii. 283.

axla, 20, to shoulder, Fms. iii. 228.

axlar-, v. öxl, sboulder.

axl-byror, f. a shoulder-load, Orkn. 346, Grett. 177 new Ed.

axl-hár, adj. sboulder bigb, Js. 101. axull, m., v. öxull, axis, an axle-tree.

ay, interj. dolendi, ay mér veslugri, Mar. Fr.

Á

A, a, prep., often used elliptically, or even adverbially, [Goth. ana; Engl. on; Germ. an. In the Scandinavian idioms the liquid n is absorbed. In English the same has been supposed to happen in adverbial phrases, e.g. 'along, away, abroad, afoot, again, agate, ahead, aloft, alone, askew, aside, astray, awry,' etc. It is indeed true that the Ormulum in its northern dialect freq. uses o, even in common phrases, such as 'o boke, o land, o life, o slæpe, o strande, o write, o naht, o loft, etc., v. the glossary; and we may compare on foot and afoot, on sleep (Engl. Vers. of Bible) and asleep; A. S. a-butan and on-butan (about); agen and ongean (again, against); on bæc, aback; on life, alive; on middan, amid. But it is more than likely that in the expressions quoted above, as well as in numberless others, as well in old as in modern English, the English aas well as the o- of the Ormulum and the modern Scottish and north of England o- are in reality remains of this very a pronounced as or ow, which was brought by the Scandinavian settlers into the north of England. In the struggle for supremacy between the English dialects after the Conquest, the Scandinavian form a or a won the day in many cases to the exclusion of the Anglo-Saxon on. Some of these adverbs have representatives only in the Scandinavian tongues, not in Anglo-Saxon; see below, with dat. B. II, C. VII; with acc. C. I. and VI. The prep. of denotes the surface or outside; i and or the inside; at, til, and fra, nearness measured to or from an object: á thus answers to the Gr. ewi; the Lat. in includes a and i together.]

With dat, and acc.: in the first case with the notion of remaining on a place, answering to Lat. in with abl.; in the last with the notion of motion to the place, = Lat. in with acc.

WITH DAT. A. Loc. I. generally on, upon; a golfi, on the floor, Ni. 2; á hendi, on the band (of a ring), 48, 225; á palli, 50; á steini, 108; á vegg, 115; á sjá ok á landi, on sea and land. In some instances the distinction between a and i is loose and wavering, but in most cases common sense and usage decide; thus 'á bók' merely denotes the letters, the penmanship, 'i' the contents of a book; mod. usage, however, prefers 'i,' lesa i bók, but stafr á bók. Old writers on the other hand; á bókum Enskum, in English books, Landn. 24, but i Aldafars bók, 23 (in the book De Mensura Temporum, by Bede), cp. Grág. i. 76, where á is a false reading instead of at; á bréfi, the contents of a letter: of clothing or arms, mitr á höfði, sverð á hlið, mitre on head, sword on side, Fms. i. 266, viii. 404; hafa lykil & sér, on one's person, 655 xxvii. 22; möttull á tyglum, a mantle banging on (i. e. fastened by) laces, Fms. vii. 201: á bingi means to be present at a meeting; i pingi, to abide within a jurisdiction; á himni, á jörðu, on (Engl. in) beaven and earth, e.g. in the Lord's Prayer, but i helvíti, in bell; á Gimli, Edda (of a heavenly abode); á báti, á skipi denote crew and cargo, 'i' the timber or materials of which a ship is built, Eg. 385; vera í stafni á skipi, 177: á skógi, to be abroad in a wood (of a hunter, robber, deer); but to be situated (a house), at work (to fell timber), i skógi, 573, Fs. 5, Fms. iii. 122, viii. 31, xi. 1, Glúm. 330, Landn. 173; á mörkinni, Fms. i. 8, but i mörk, of a farm; á firðinum means lying in a firth, of ships or islands (on the surface of the water), beer eyjar liggia á Breiðafirði, Ld. 36; but í firði, living in a district named Firth; á landi, Nj. 98, Fms. xi. 386. II. á is commonly used in connection with the pr. names or countries terminating in 'land,' Engl. in, & Englandi, İrlandi, Skotlandi, Bretlandi, Saxlandi, Vindlandi, Vinlandi, Grænalandi, İslandi, Hálogalandi, Rogalandi, Jótlandi, Frakklandi, Hjaltlandi, Jamtalandi, Hvítramannalandi, Norðrlöndum, etc., vide Landn. and the index to Fms. xii. In old writers i is here very rare, in modern authors more frequent; taste and the context in many instances decide. An Icelander would now say, speaking of the queen or king, 'á Englandi,' ruling over, but to live 'i Englandi,' or 'a Englandi;' the rule in the last case not being quite fixed.

2. in connection with other names of countries: a Mæri, Vörs, Ögðum, Fjölum, all districts of Norway, v. Landn.; á Mýrum (in Icel.), á Finnmörk, Landn., á Fjóni (2 Danish island); but í Danmörk, Svíþjóð (á Svíþjóðu is poët., Gs. 3. before Icel. farms denoting open and elevated slopes and spaces (not too high, because then 'at' must be used), such as 'staor, völlr, ból, hjalli, bakki, heimr, eyri, etc.; á Veggjum, Landn. 69; á Hólmlátri, id.: those ending in '-staðr,' á Geirmundarstöðum, Þórisstöðum, Jarðlangsstöðum..., Landn.: '-völlr,' á Möðruvöllum: á Fitjum (the farm) i Storo (the island), i Fenhring (the island) & Aski (the farm), Landn., Eg.: '-nes' sometimes takes a, sometimes i (in mod. usage always 'i'), & Nesi, Eb. 14, or i Krossnesi, 30; in the last case the notion of island, νησοι, prevails: so also, 'fjörðr,' as, þeir börðust á Vigrafirði (of a fight on the ice), Landn. 101, but orusta í Hafrsfirði, 122: with '-bær,' a is used in the sense of a farm or estate, hon sa a e-m bæ mikit hús ok fagrt, Edda 22; 'í bæ' means within doors, of the buildings: with 'Bær' as pr. name Landn. uses 'i,' 71, 160, 257, 309, 332.
4. denoting on or just above; of the sun, when the time is fixed by regarding the sun in connection with points in the horizon, a standing phrase in Icel.; sol á gjáhamri, when the sun is on the crag of the Rift, Grág. i. 26, cp. Glúm. 387; so, brú á á, a bridge on a river, Fms. viii. 179, Hraín. 20; taka hús á e-m, to surprise one, to take the bouse over his bead, Fms. i. II. III. á is sometimes used in old writers where we should now expect an acc., esp. in the phrase, leggja sverði (or the like) á e-m, or á e-m miðjum, to stab, Eg. 216, Gisl. 106, Band. 14; þá stakk to Starkað rsprotanum á konungi, then Starkað stabbed the king with the wand, Fas. iii. 34; bita á kampi (vör), to bite the lips, as a token of pain or emotion, Nj. 209, 68; taka á e-u, to touch a thing, lay bold of it, v. taka; fá á e-u, id. (poët.); leggja hendr á (better at) siðum, in wrestling, Fms. x. 331; koma á úvart á e-m, to come on one unawares, ix. 407 (rare).

ix. 407 (rare).

B. TEMP. of a particular point or period of time, at, on, in: gener. denoting during, in the course of; & nott, degi, nættpeli . . ., Bs. i. 139; or spec. adding a pron. or an adject., & næsta sumri, the next summer; á því ári, þingi, misseri, hausti, vári, sumri ..., during, in that year ..., Bs. i. 679, etc.; & prem sumrum, in the course of three summers, Grág. i. 218; á þrem várum, Fms. ii. 114; á hálfs mánaðar fresti, within balf a month's delay, Nj. 99; & tvitugs, sextugs...aldri, & barns, gamals aldri, etc., at the age of..., v. aldr. & dögum e-s, in the days of, in his reign or time, Landn. 24, Hrain. 3, Fms. ix. 229. used of a fixed recurrent period or season; á várum, sumrum, haustum, vetrum, & kveldum, every spring, summer ..., in the evenings, Eg. 711, Fms. i. 23, 25, vi. 394, Landn. 292: with the numeral adverbs, cp. Lat. ter in anno, um sinn á mánuði, ári, once a month, once a year, where the Engl. a is not the article but the preposition, Grág. i. 89. of duration; & degi, during a whole day, Fms. v. 48; & sjau nóttum, Bárð. 166; á því meli, during that time, in the meantime, Grág. i. 1V. connected with the seasons (á vetri, sumri, vári, hausti), 'à' denotes the next preceding season, the last winter, summer, autumn, Eb. 40, 238, Ld. 206: in such instances 'á' denotes the past, 'at' the future, 'i' the present; thus i vetri in old writers means this winter; & vetri, last winter; at vetri, next winter, Eb. 68 (in a verse), etc.

C. In various other relations, more or less metaphorically, on, upon, in, to, with, towards, against: I. denoting object, in respect of. against, almost periphrastically; dvelja á náðum e-s, under one's protection, Fms. i. 74; hafa metnad a e-u, to be proud of, to take pride in a 2. denoting a personal relation, in; bæta e-t á e-m, to make amends, i. e. to one personally; misgora e-t & e-m, to inflict wrong on one; hafa elsku (hatr) & e-m, to bear love (batred) to one, Fms. ix. 242; hefna sin & e-m, to take revenge on one's person, on any one; rjusa sætt & e-m, to break truce on the person of any one, to offend against bis person, Nj. 103; hafa sár á sér, 101; sjá á e-m, to read on or in one's face; sér hann á hverjum manni hvárt til þín er vel eðr illa, 106; var pat bratt audséd a hennar högum, at ..., it could soon be seen in all ber doings, that ..., Ld. 22. 3. also generally to shew signs of a thing; sýna fáleika á sér, to sbew marks of displeasure, Nj. 14, Fs. 14; taka vel, illa, litt, & e-u, to take a thing well, ill, or indifferently, id.; finna & ser, to feel in oneself; fann litt á honum, hvárt ..., it could bardly be seen in bis face, whether . . ., Eb. 42; likindi eru á, it is likely, Ld. 172; göra kost á e-u, to give a choice, chance of it, 178; eiga vald á e-u, to have power II. denoting encumbrance, duty, liability; er over . . . , Nj. 10. firmtardómsmál á þeim, to be subject to ..., Nj. 231; the phrase, hafa e-t à hendi, or vera à hendi e-m, on one's bands, of work or duty to be done; eindagi á fé, term, pay day, Grág. i. 140; ómagi (skylda, afvinna) á fé, of a burden or encumbrance, D. I. and Grag. in several passages. with a personal pronoun, sér, mér, honum . . . , denoting personal appearance, temper, character, look, or the like; vera bungr, léttr . . . á sér, to be beavy or light, either bodily or mentally; bungr a ser, corpulent, Sturl. i. 112; kátr ok léttr á sér, of a gay and light temper, Fms. x. 152; hat bragd hasdi hann a ser, be looked as if, . . . the expression of his face was as though ..., Ld., cp. the mod. phrase, hafa á sér svip, bragð, æði, sið, of one's manner or personal appearance, to bear oneself as, or the like; skjótr (seinn) á fæti, speedy (slow) of foot, Nj. 258. IV. as a periphrasis of the possessive pronoun connected with the limbs or parts of the body. In common Icel. such phrases as my bands, eyes, bead . . . are hardly ever used, but höfuð, eyru, hár, nef, munnr, hendr, fætr... á mér; so 'i' is used of the internal parts, e.g. hjarta, bein . . . i mér; the eyes are regarded as inside the body, augun i honum: also without the possessive pronoun, or as a periphrasis for a genitive, brjóstið á e-m, one's breast, Nj. 95, Edda 15; surnar i augum, it smarts in my eyes, my eyes smart, Nj. 202; kviðinn á sér, its belly, 655 xxx. 5, Fms. vi. 350; hendr á henni, ber bands, Gísl. (in a verse); í vörunum á honum, on bis lips, Band. 14; ristin á honum, bis step, Fms. viii. 141; harðr í tungu, sbarp of tongue, Hallfred (Fs. 114); kalt (heitt) á fingrum, höndum, fotum ..., cold (warm) in the fingers, bands, feet ..., i.e. with cold fingers, etc.; cp. also the phrase, verda visa (ord) á munni, of extemporising verses or speeches, freq. in the Sagas; fastr ú fótum, fast by the leg, of a bondsman, Nj. 27: of the whole body, díla fundu þeir á honum, 209. The pers. pron. is used only in solemn style (poetry, hymns, the Bible), hví svo hryggist bú, as a translation of 'warumb betrübst du dich mein Herz?' the famous hymn by Hans Sachs; instead of the popular hiartad i mér, Sl. 43, 44: hjartað mitt is only used as a term of endearment, as by a husband to his wife, parents to their child, or the like, in a metaphorical sense; the heart proper is 'i mér,' not 'mitt.' 2. of other things, and as a periphrasis of a genitive, of a part belonging to the whole, e. g. dyrr á húsi = húsdyrr, at the bouse-doors; turn á kirkju = kirkju turn; stafn, skutr, segl, árar ... á skipi, the stem, stern, sail ... of a ship, Fms. ix. 135; blod á lauk, á tré . . ., leaves of a leek, of a tree . . ., Fas. i. 469; egg á sverði = sverðs egg; stafr á bók; kjölr á bók, and in end-V. denoting instrumentality, by, on, or a-, by less other instances. means of; afla sjár á hólmgöngum, to make money a-duelling, by means of duels, Eg. 498; a verkum sinum, to subsist on one's own work, Njard. 366: as a law term, sekjast á e-ju, to be convicted upon . . . , Grág. i. 123; sekst maðr þar á sínu eigini (a man is guilty in re sua), ef hann tekr af beim manni er heimild (possessio) hefir til, ii. 191; falla á verkum sínum, to be killed flagranti delicto, v. above; fella e-n á bragði, by a sleight in wrestling; komast undan á flótta, to escape by flight, Eg. 11; á hlaupi, by one's feet, by speed, Hkr. ii. 168; lifa a e-u, to feed on; bergja a e-u, to taste of a thing; svala ser & e-u, to quench the thirst on. subst. numerals; á þriðja tigi manna, up to thirty, i.e. from about twenty to thirty, Ld. 194; a odru hundradi skipa, from one to two bundred sail strong, Fms. x. 126; & níunda tigi, between eighty and ninety years of age, Eg. 764, v. above: used as prep., & hendi, on one's band, i. e. bound to do it, v. hönd. VII. in more or less adverbial phrases it may often be translated in Engl. by a participle and a-prefixed; á lopti, aloft; á floti, afloat; á lífi, alive; á verðgangi, a-begging; á brautu, away; á baki, a-back, bebind, past; á milli, a-tween; á laun, alone, secretly; & launungu, id.; & móti, against; & enda, at an end, gone; a huldu, bidden; fara a hæli, to go a-beel, i.e. backwards, Fms. vii. 70;—but in many cases these phrases are transl. by the Engl. partic. with a, which is then perh. a mere prefix, not a prep., a flugi, a-flying in the air, Nj. 79; vera á gangi, a-going; á ferli, to be about; á leiki, a-playing, Fms. i. 78; á sundi, a-swimming, ii. 27; á verði, a-watching, x. 201; á hrakningi, a-wandering; á reiki, a-wavering; á skjálfi, a-sbivering; á-hleri, a-listening; á tali, a-talking, Ísl. ii. 200; á hlaupi, a-running, Hkr. ii. 268; á verki, a-working; á veiðum, a-bunting; á fiski, a-fishing; & beit, grazing: and as a law term it even means in flagranti, N. G. L. i. 348.

VIII. used absolutely without a case in refer-N. G. L. i. 348. ence to the air or the weather, where 'a' is almost redundant; boka var á mikil, a thick fog came on, Nj. 267; niðamyrkr var á, pitch darkness came on, Eg. 210; allhvast á norðan, a very strong breeze from the north, Fms. ix. 20; bá var á norðrænt, a north wind came on, 42, Ld. 56; hvaðan sem á er, from whatever point the wind is; var á hríð vedrs, a snow storm came on, Nj. 282; görði á regn, rain came on, Fms. vi. 394, xi. 35, Ld. 156. WITH ACC.

A. Loc. I. denoting simple direction towards, esp. connected with verbs of motion, going, or the like; hann gékk á bergsnös, Eg. 389; á hamar, Fas. ii. 517. 2. in phrases denoting direction; liggja á útborða, lying on the outside of the ship, Eg. 354; á annat borð skipinu, Fms. vii. 260; á bæði borð, on both sides of the ship, Nj. 124, Ld. 56; á tvær hliðar, on both sides, Fms. v. 73, Ísl. ii. 159; á hlið, sidewards; út á hlið, Nj. 262, Edda 44; á aðra hönd henni, Nj. 50, Ld. 46; höggva á tvær hendr, to bew or strike right and left, Isl. ii. 368, Fas. i. 384, Fms. viii. 363, x. 383. 8. upp á, upon; hann tók augu pjaza ok kastaði upp á himin, Edda 47: with verbs denoting to look, see, horfa, sjá, líta, etc.; hann rak skygnur á land, be cast glances towards the land, Ld. 154. II. denoting direction with or without the idea of arriving: 1. with verbs denoting to aim at; of a blow or thrust, stefna ú fótinn, Nj. 84; spjótið stefuir ú hann miðjan, 205: of the wind, gékk vedrit á vestr, the wind veered to west, Fms. ix. 28; sigla á haf, to stand out to sea, Hkr. i. 146, Fms. i. 39: with 'út' added, Eg. 390, Fms. x. 349. 2. conveying the notion of arriving, or the intervening space being traversed; spjótið kom á miðjan skjöldinn, Eg. 379, Nj. 96, 97; langt upp á land, far up inland, Hkr. i. 146: to reach, taka ofan á belti, of the long locks of a woman, to reach down to the belt, Nj. 2; ofan á bringu, 48; á bá ofan, 91. out reference to the space traversed, connected with verbs denoting to go, turn, come, ride, sail, throw, or the like, motion of every kind; hann kastar honum á völlinn, be flings bim down, Nj. 91; hlaupa á skip sitt, to leap on board bis ship, 43; & hest, to mount quickly, Edda 75; á lend hestinum, Nj. 91; hann gengr á sáðland sitt, be walks on to bis fields, 82: on, upon, komast a fætr, to get upon one's legs, 92; ganga á land, to go a-sbore, Fms. i. 40; ganga á þing, vii. 242, Grág. (often); á skóg, á merkr ok skóga, into a wood, Fb. i. 134, 257, Fms. xi. 118, Eg. 577, Nj. 130; fara & Finnmörk, to go travelling in Finmark, Fms. i. 8; koma, fara á bæ, to arrive at the farm-bouse; koma á veginn, Eg. 578; stíga á bát, skip, to go on board, 158; hann gékk upp á borg, be went up to the burg (castle), 717; en er beir komu á loptriðið, 236; reka austr á haf, to drift eastwards on the sea, x. 145; ríða ofan á, to IV. in some cases the acc. is used ride down or over, Nj. 82. where the dat. would be used, esp. with verbs denoting to see or bear, in such phrases as, þeir sá boða mikinn inn á fjörðinn, they saw great breakers away up in the bight of the firth, the acc. being due perhaps to a motion or direction of the eye or ear towards the object, Nj. 124; sá þeir fólkit á land, they saw the people in the direction of land, Fas. ii. 517: in phrases denoting to be placed, to sit, to be seated, the seat or bench is freq. in the acc, where the dat, would now be used; konungr var bar & land upp, the king was then up the country, the spectator or narrator is conceived as looking from the shore or sea-side, Nj. 46; sitja á miðjan bekk, to be seated on the middle bench, 50; skyldi konungs sæti vera & þann bekk...annat öndvegi var á hinn úæðra pall; hann setti konungs hásæti á miðjan þverpall, Fms. vi. 439, 440, cp. Fagrsk. l. c., Sturl. iii. 182; eru viða fjallbygðir upp á morkina, in the mark or forest, Eg. 58; var þar mörk mikil á land upp, 229; mannsafnaðr er á land upp (viewed from the sea), Ld. 76; stóll var settr á mótið, Fas. i. 58; beiða V. denoting parts fars & skip, to beg a passage, Grág. i. 90. of the body; bita e-n a barka, to bite one in the throat, Isl. ii. 447; skera á háls, to cut the throat of any one, Nj. 156; brjóta e-n á háls, to break any one's neck; brjóta e-n á bak, to break any one's back, Fms. vii. 119; kalinn & kné, frozen to the knees with cold, Hm. 3. denoting round; láta reipi á háls hesti, round bis borse's neck, 623. 33; leggja sodul á hest, Nj. 83; and ellipt., leggja á, to saddle; breiða feld á hofud sér, to wrap a cloak over bis bead, 164; reyta á sik mosa, to gather moss to cover oneself with, 267; spenna hring a hond, a fingr, VII. denoting a burden; stela mat á tvá hesta, Eg. 300. hey á fimtán hesta, i. e. a two, a fifteen borse load, Nj. 74: metaph., kjosa feigo a menn, to choose death upon them, i. c. doom them to death, Edda 22.

B. TEMP. I. of a period of time, at, to; & morgun, tomorrow (i morgun now means the past morning, the morning of to-day), II. if connected with the word day, 'a' is now used Isl. ii. 333. before a fixed or marked day, a day of the week, a feast day, or the like; á Laugardag, á Sunnudag..., on Saturday, Sunday, the Old Engl. a-Sunday, a-Monday, etc.; & Jóladaginn, Páskadaginn, on Yule and Easter-day; but in old writers more often used ellipt. Sunnudaginn, Jóladaginn... by dropping the prep. ' á,' Fms. viii. 397, Grág. i. 18. III. connected with 'dagr' with the definite article suffixed, 'a' denotes a fixed, recurring period or season, in; & daginn, during the day-time, every day in turn, IV. connected with 'evening, morning, the Grett. of A. seasons,' with the article; & kveldit, every evening, Ld. 14; & sumarit, every summer, Vd. 128, where the new Ed. Fs. 51 reads sumrum; a haust, every autumn, Eg. 741 (perh. a misprint instead of á haustin or á haustum); à vetrinn, in the winter time, 710; à varit, every spring, Ghl. 347; the sing., however, is very rare in such cases, the old as well as mod. usage presers the plur.; á nætrnar, by night, Nj. 210; á várin, Eg. 710; á sumrin, haustin, á morgnana, in the morning (á morgin, sing., means tomorrow); á kveldin, in the evening, only 'dagr' is used in sing., v. above (á daginn, not á dagana); but elliptically and by dropping the article, Icelanders say, kveld og morgna, nótt og dag, vetr sumar vor og haust, in the same sense as those above mentioned. ing duration, the article is dropped in the negative phrase, aldri á sinn dag, never during one's life; aldri á mína daga, never in my life, Bjarn. 8, where a possess. pron. is put between noun and prep., but this phrase is very rare. Such phrases as, á þann dag, that day, and á þenna dag, VI. á dag without Stj. 12, 655 xxx. 2. 20, are unclassical. article can only be used in a distributive sense, e.g. tvisvar á dag, twice a-day; this use is at present freq. in Icel., yet instances from old writers are not on record. VII. denoting a movement onward in time, such as, liðið á nótt, dag, kveld, morgun, sumar, vetr, vár, haust (or nóttina, daginn . . .), jól, páska, föstu, or the like, far on in the night, day . . ., Edda 33; er á leið vetrinn, when the winter was well on, as the winter wore on, Nj. 126; cp. áliðinn: also in the phrase, hniginn á inn efra aldr, well stricken in years, Ld. 68.

C. Metaph, and in various relations: I. somewhat metaphorically, denoting an act only (not the place); fara á fund, á vit e-s, to call for one, Eg. 140; koma á ræðu við e-n, to come to a parley with, to speak, 173; ganga & tal, Nj. 103; skora & holm, to challenge to a duel on an island; koma & grid, to enter into a service, to be domiciled, Grág. i. 151; fara á veiðar, to go a-bunting, Fms. i. 8.

β. generally denoting on, upon, in, to; bjóða vöxtu á féit, to offer interest on the money, Grág. i. 198; ganga á berhögg, to come to blows, v. berhögg; fá á e-n, to make an impression upon one, Nj. 79; ganga á vápn e-s, to throw oneself on an enemy's weapon, meet him face to face, Rd. 310; ganga a lagio, to press on up the spear-shaft after it has passed through one so as to get near one's foe, i.e. to avail oneself of the last chance; bera fé à e-n, to bribe, Nj. 62; bera öl à e-n, to make drunk, Fas. i. 13; snuinn á e-t, inclined to, Fms. x. 142; sammælast á e-t, hrinda skipum á vatn, to float the ships down into the water, Fms. i. 58; to come to an agreement, settlement, or atonement, 78, Edda 15, Eb. 288, Ld. 50, Fms. i. 279; ganga á mála, to serve for pay as a soldier, Nj. 121; ganga a vald c-s, to put oneself in his power, 267; ganga á sætt, to break an agreement; vega á veittar trygðir, to break truce, Grag. ii. 169. II. denoting in regard to, in respect 1. of colour, complexion, the hue of the hair, or the like; hvitr, jarpr, dökkr... á hár, baving white, brown, or dark... bair, Isl. ii. 190, Nj. 39; svartr á brún ok brá, dark of brow and eyebrow; 2. denoting skill, dexterity; hagr á tré, a dökkr á hörund, id., etc. good carpenter; hagr á járn, málm, smíðar ..., an expert worker in iron, metals ..., Eg. 4; finir a boga, good at the bow: also used of mastership in science or arts, meistari a hörpuslatt, a master in striking the barp, Fas. iii. 220; fræðimaðr á kvæði, knowing many poems by beart, Fms. vi. 391; fræðimaðr á landnámssögur ok forna fræði, a learned scholar in histories and antiquities (of Are Frode), Isl. ii. 189; mikill & iþrótt, skilful in an art, Edda (pref.) 148; but dat. in the phrase, kunna (vel) á skíðum, to be a cunning skater, Fms. i. 9, vii. 120. ing dimensions; & hæd, lengd, breidd, dýpt ..., in the beighth, length, breadth, depth . . . , Eg. 277; á hvern veg, on each side, Edda 41 (square miles); á annan veg, on the one side, Grág. i. 89. B. the phrase, á sik, in regard to oneself, vel (illa) á sik kominn, of a fine (ugly) appearance, Ld. 100, Fas. iii. 74. III. denoting instrumentality; bjargast á sínar hendr, to live on the work of one's own bands, (á sínar spýtur is a mod. phrase in the same sense); (vega) á skúlir, pundara, to weigh in scales, Grag. ii. 370; at hann hefdi tva pundara, ok hefdi á hinn meira keypt en á hinn minna selt, of a man using two scales, a big one for buying and a little one for selling, Sturl. i. q1; á sinn kostnað, at one's own expense; nefna e-n á nafn, by name, Grág. i. 17, etc. The Icel. also say, spinna & rokk, snældu, to spin on or with a rock or distaff; mala á kvern, to grind in a 'querne,' where Edda 73 uses dat.; esp. of musical instruments, syngja, leika á hljóðfæri, hörpu, gigju . . .; in the old usage, leika hörpu . . ., Stj. 458. IV. denot-1. á þessa lund, in this wise, Grag. ing the manner or way of doing: ii. 22; á marga vega, á alla, ymsa vega, in many, all, respects, Fms. i. 114; á sitt hóf, in its turn, respectively, Ld. 136, where the context shews that the expression answers to the Lat. mutatis mutandis; & 2. esp. of language; þýðersku, after German fashion, Sks. 288. mæla, rita á e-a tungu, to speak, write in a tongue; á Irsku, in Irisb. Ld. 76; Norrænu, in Norse, Eb. 330, Vm. 35; a Danska tungu, in Danish, i.e. Scandinavian, Norse, or Icelandic, Grag. i. 18; & Vara tungu, i.e. in Icelandic, 181; rita & Norræna tungu, to write in Norse, Hkr. (pref.), Bs. i. 59:-at present, dat. is sometimes used. some phrases the acc. is used instead of the dat.; hann syndi á sik mikit gaman, Fms. x. 329; hann lét ekki á sik finna, be sbewed no sign of motion, Nj. 111; skaltú önga fáleika á þik gera (Cod. Kalf.), 14. used in a distributive sense; skal mörk kaupa gæzlu á kú, eði oxa fini vetra gamlan, a mark for every cow, Grág. i. 147; alin á hvert hross, 442; á mann, per man (now freq.): cp. also á dag above, lit. B. connected with nouns, 1. prepositional; á hendr (with dat.), against; á hæla, at beel, close bebind; á bak, at back, i.e. past, after; á vit (with gen.), towards. 2. adverbially; & braut, away, abroad; & vixl, in turns; á mis, amiss; á við ok dreif, a-wide and a-drift, i.e. 3. used almost redundantly before the following prep.; dispersedly. á eptir, after, bebind; á undan, in front of; á meðal, á milli, among; á mót, against; á við, about, alike; á frá (cp. Swed. ifrån), from (rare); á fyrir = fyrir, Haustl. 1; á hjá, beside (rare); á fram, a-bead, forwards; á samt, togetber; ávalt = of allt, always: following a prep., upp á, upon; nidr á, down upon; ofan á, eptir á, post eventum, (temp.) á eptir is loc., VII. connected with many transitive verbs, answering id., etc. to the Lat. ad- or in-, in composition, in many cases periphrastically for an objective case. The prep. generally follows after the verb, instead of being prefixed to it as in Lat., and answers to the Engl. on, to; heita kalla, hrópa ú, to call on; heyra, hlusta, hlýða á, to bearken to, listen to; hyggja, hugsa á, to tbink on; minna á, to remind; sjá, lita, horfa, stara, mæna, glápa, koma auga ... á, to look on; girnast á, to wish for; trúa a, to believe on; skora a, to call on any one to come out, challenge; kzra á, to accuse; heilsa á, to greet; herja, ganga, rída, hlaupa, ráda . . . á, to fall on, attack, cp. ágangr, áreið, áhlaup; ljúga á, to tell lies of, to slander; telja á, to carp at; ausa, tala, hella, kasta, verpa . . . á, to pour, throw on; rida, bera, dreifa á, to sprinkle on; vanta, skorta á, to fall sbort of; ala ú, to plead, beg; leggja ú, to throw a spell on, lay a saddle on; hætta å, to venture on; gizka å, to guess at; kveda å, to fix on, etc.: in a reciprocal sense, haldast á, of mutual strife; sendast á, to exchange presents: skrifast a, to correspond (mod.); kallast a, to shout mutually; standast a, to coincide, so as to be just opposite one another, etc.

&, interj. denoting wonder, doubt, or the like, eb.

A, f. [Lat. aqua; Goth. abva; Hel. aba; A. S. ea; O. H. G. aba, owa; cp. Germ. ach and aue; Fr. eau, eaux; Engl. Ax-, Ex-, etc., in names of places; Swed.-Dan. å; the Scandinavians absorb the bu, so that only a single vowel or diphthong remains of the whole word]:-a river. The to agree upon, Nj. 86; sættast, verða sáttr á e-t, in the same sense, hold form in nom dat acc. sing is so, v. the introduction to A, page 1, Bs. i. 333 sq., where sen, so (acc.), and sona; so also Greg. 677; the old fragm. of Grág. ii. 222, 223, new Ed. In the Kb. of the Edda the old form occurs twice, viz. page 75, ona (acc.), (but two lines below, ana), i onni (dat.) The old form also repeatedly occurs in the Kb. and Sb. of the Grag., e.g. ii. 266, 267: gen. sing. ar; nom. pl. ár, gen. á contracted, dat. ám, obsolete form om; Edda 43, Eg. 80, 99, 133, 185: proverbs, at ósi skal á stemma, answering to the Lat. principiis obsta, Edda 60; her kemr á til sæfar, bere the river runs into the sea, metaph. = this is the very end, seems to have been a favourite ending of old poems: it is recorded in the Húsdrápa and the Norðsetadrápa, v. Edda 96, Skálda 198; cp. the common saying, öll vötn renna til szvar, 'all waters run into the sea.' Rivers with glacier water are in Icel. called Hvítá, White river, or Jökulsá: Hitá, Hot river, from a hot spring, opp. to Kaldá, v. Landn.: others take a name from the fish in them, as Laxá, Lax or Salmon river (freq.); Orrida á, etc.: a tributary river is pverá, etc.: ár in the Njala often means the great rivers Ölfusá and þjórsá in the south of Iceland. Áin helga, a river in Sweden, Hkr. ii: & is also suffixed to the names of foreign rivers, Tempsa = Thames; Dóná, Danube (Germ. Don-au), (mod.), etc. Vide Edda (Gl.) 116, 117, containing the names of over a hundred North-English and Scottish rivers. COMPDS: &r-all, m. the bed of a river, Hkr. iii. 117. ár-bakki, a. m. the bank of a river, Ld. 132, Nj. 234. ar-brot, n. inundation of a river, Bs. ii. 37; at present used of a shallow ford in a river. djup, n. a pool in a river, Bs. i. 331. år-farvegr, m. a water-course, ár-fors, m. a waterfall or force, Barl. 190. Stj. 353. n. a chasm of a river, Fms. viii. 51, Fær. 62. &r-hlutr, m. one's portion of a river, as regards fishing rights, Fms. x. 489, Sturl. i. 202. ár. megin and ar-megn, n. the main stream of a river, Stj. 251. árminni, n. the mouth of a river, Fms. ix. 381. ár-mót and á-mót, n. a' waters-meet,' Lat. confluentia, H. E. i. 129. ár-óss, m. the 'oyce' or mouth of a river, Eg. 99, 129, 229; whence the corrupt local name of the Danish town Aarhuus, Fms. xi. 208. ár-reki, a, m. drift, the jetsam and flotsam (of fish, timber, etc.) in a river, Jm. 25. straumr, m. the current in a river, Fms. vii. 257, 260. f. the strand of a river, Stj. 268, 673. 53. ár-vað, n. a ford of a river, ár-vegr = árfarvegr, Fas. i. 533. ár-vöxtr, m. the swelling of a river, Fms. i. 286.

4-auki, a, m. increase, Bs. i. 182. B. interest of money, K. A. 208, N. G. L. ii. 381.

4-austr, rs, m. out-pouring, foul language, Sturl. i. 21.

4-barning, f. a thrashing, flogging, = barsmid, Sturl. iii. 237.

6-bati, a, m. profit, gain, Fms. xi. 441 (now freq.)

6-berging, f. a tasting, Barl. 72.

6-beri, 2, m. an accuser, prosecutor (bera á, accusare), Jb. 252 A; (2 Noise law teim.)

4-bersemi, f. a disposition to accuse, Hom. 86.

6-blásinn, part. inspired, transl. from Lat.; á. af Heilögum Anda, Fms.

x. 373, Hom. 12.

6-blásning, f. a breathing upon; með eldr á., 656 C. 33, Rb. 438; gramm. aspiration, Skálda 175, 179, 180; theol. inspiration, Fms. x. 371.

6-blástr, rs, m., dat. áblæstri, a breathing upon, Fms. x. 210; theol. inspiration, Fms. X. 210; theol. I spiration, iii. 164, v. 217, Eluc. 4; medic. pustula labiorum, Fél. ix. 184. 6-ból, n. a manor-bouse, = 202lból, B. K. 40.

6-bôt, f. used only in pl. ábætr, of improvements, esp. on a farm or estate; á. jarðar, D. N., D. I. i. 199. compp: ábôta-vant, n. adj.

shortcoming, imperfect, Hkr. ii. 89, Sturl. i. 162.

ABOTI, a, m. [Lat. abbas, from Hebr. abba], an abbot. abbati, which form is nearer to the Lat., is rare, but occurs, 655 iii, 656 A, i. 30, Hom. 237. 2. The Icel. form aboti answers to the Engl. abbot, Fms. i. 147, Bs. i. ii. freq., Sks., etc. compos: aboti-domr, m. and aboti-deemil, n. an abboy, 655 xxxii, Bs. i. 831. aboti-laust, n. adj. without an abbot, vacant, Ann. 1393. aboti-sonr, m. son of an abbot, Bs. i. 679. aboti-stétt, f. and -stéttr, m. the rank, dignity of an abbot, Ann. 1325. aboti-stofa, u, f. the abbot's parlow, Vm. aboti-septi, n. the seat of an abbot, 655 xxxii. aboti-vald, n. the power, dignity of an abbot, Ann. 1345.

6-breida, u, f. a covering, counterpane, Korm. 206, Stj. 304.

6-breizl, n. a bed-covering, quilt, Str. 5, 22, Vm. 93,—in the last passage of a winding-sheet or pall; & kapa, Vm. 67.

á-brúðigr, ábrýða, ábrýði, jealous, jealousy, v. afbr-.

6-brystur, f. pl., v. áfr-.

4-burör, ar, m. a charge (bera á, accusare); varði mik eigi þess áburðar, Fms. ii. 57, Rd. 236. β. medic. salve, ointment (bera á, to smear), Bs. ii. 180. γ. pomp or bravery in dress (berast á, to puff oneself up), in the course áburðar-klæði, n. fine clothes, showy dress, Bær. 5. δ. a borse load: áburðar-hestr, m. a pack-borse, =klylja hestr. áburðar-maðr, m. a dressy, showy person, a dandy, Fms. iv. 255, Orkn. 208. áburðar-mikill, adj. puffed up, showy, Ld. 248. áburðar-samligr and áburðar-samr, adj. id., Sks. 452, 437.

ś-buổ, f. [bua á], an abode or residence on an estate or farm, tenancy; compt: áfalls-dómr, m. a sentence of condemnation, a fara... á annars manns land til ábuðar (as a tenant), Grág. ii. 253; á. Eluc. 39, 655 xviii. 2 Corin. xi. 29, Stj. 265 (visitation).

jarðar (possession) heimilar tekju, Ghl. 329; en ef land spillist í á. hans, during bis tenancy, K. p. K. 170; þá öðlast hann leigu (rent) en hinn á. (tenancy), N. G. L. i. 94: whatever refers to the right and duties of a tenant, landskyld ok alla á. jarðar, Jb. 210, 346, 167. COMPDS: ábúðar-maðr, m. inbabitant, Stj. 368. ábúðar-skylda, u, f. duties of a tenant, Jb. 211.

á-búnaðr, ar, m. = ábúð, N. G. L. i. 240.

á-byrgð, f. responsibility, liability, weight; leggja sína á. á, Grág. i. 208; eiga í á., to bave at stake, Band. 18 new Ed., N. G. L. i. 223, Ld. 58; lands á., Grág. ii. 248; vera í á. um e-t, to answer for, Fms. xi. 82, Sks. 762: pl. ábyrgðir, pledges, Bær. 11, 686 B. 5. Compos: ábyrgðar-hluti, a, m. and -hlutr, ar, m. an object, step involving risk and responsibility, Nj. 199. ábyrgðar-lauss, adj. free from risk, Fms. x. 368; eigi með öllu á., i. e. a weighty, serious step, no trifling matter, Sturl. iii. 234. ábyrgðar-ráð, n. a step involving risk, Nj. 164, Post. 656 B. ábyrgðar-samligr, adj. momentous, important, Sks. 452.

å-byrgja, ð,

1. in the act. form (very rare), to answer for; å. e-m e-t, Gpl. 385; å. e-t å hendi e-m, to place a thing for security in a person's hands; hann å. þau å hendi Jóhanni postula, 655 ix.

2. as a dep.; åbyrgjast (very freq.), to answer for, take care of, Gpl. 190, Grág. i. 140; hverr skal sik sjálfr å., 256, ii. 119, Fms. vi. 361; å. e-t við e-u, Grág. i. 410; så maðr ábyrgist vápn er upp festir, ii. 95; hverr ábyrgist þat (warrants) móðir, at góðráðr verði, ek mun ábyrgjast (I will warrant) at eigi mun heimskr verða, Fms. iv. 83.

á-byrgja, u, f. = ábyrgð (very rare); halda e-u ábyrgju, to be responsible for, Grág. ii. 335, 399.

á-býli, n. = ábúð, freq. at present and in several compds, as, ábýlisjörð, a tenant farm; ábýlis-maðr, a tenant, etc.

á-bæli, n.=ábúð, H.E. i. 495.

ADAN, adv. [cp. Ulf. apn = ἐνιαυτός, Gal. iv. 10, and ataþni, id.], a little before, a little ubile ago, erewbile; Kolr fór frá scli á., Nj. 55; á. er vit skildum, Lv. 34; slíkt sem á. talða ek, as I said just above (of the Speaker reading the law in the lögrétta), Grág. i. 49, ii. 242; nú á., just now, 656 C. 30.

áðr, adv. [cp. Hel. adro = mane], ere, already, soon; er ek hefi á. (soon) ráðit brullaup mitt, Nj. 4; er Guð hafði á. bannat, Sks. 533; ok vóru þeir því á. (already) heim komnir, Eg. 222; at nú sé lægra í horninu en á., tban before, Edda 32; litlu á., a little wbile ago, Fms. viii. 130; þar sem ek em á. (already) í fullri reiði Guðs, Sks. 533. 2. á. cn, Lat. prius quam, ante quam: a. with subj.; á. en þeir gengi, Fms. xi. 13; á. en í biskups garð falli, N. G. L. i. 145. β. with indic.; var eigi langt á. en bygðin tók við, Eg. 229. γ. áðr simply = áðr en; þeir höfðu skamma hrið setið, á. þar kom Gunnhildr, tbey bad sat a sbort wbile ere G. came tbitber, Nj. 6; en á. hann reið heiman, 52; en þat var svipstund ein á. (till) stofan brann, Eg. 240; en áðr hann lét setja söguna saman, Sturl. iii. 306.

á-dreif, n. a splashing, the spray, Sks. 147. á-dreifing, f. a sprinkling upon, Stj. 78.

6-drykkir, m. pl. a 'sea' or wave dashing over a ship, Sks. 231.

á-drykkja, u, f. [drekka á], prop. a drinking to, pledging, esp. used in the phrase, at sitja fyrir ádrykkju e-s;---a custom of the olden time, The master of the house, for instance, chose one of his guests as his 'cup-fellow,' seated him over against himself in the hall, drank to him, and then sent the cup across the hall to him, so that they both drank of it by turns. This was deemed a mark of honour. Thus, Egill sat fyrir údrykkju Arinbjarnar, Egil sate over against Arinbjorn as bis cup-mate, Eg. 253; skal hann sitja fyrir á. minni í kveld, in the pretty story of king Harold and the blind skald Stuf, Fms. vi. 391; cp. annat öndvegi var á hinn æðra pall gegnt konungi, skyldi þar sitja hinn æðsti ráðgjafi (the king's bighest councillor) konungs fyrir hans á. ok þótti þat mest virðing at sitja fyrir konungs ú., 439; sat Gizurr fyrir á. konungs innarr enn lendir menn, Bs. i. 19. the description of the banquet in Flugumyri on the 19th Oct. in the year 1253,—drukku þeir af einu silfrkeri ok mintust við jafnan um daginn på er hvorr drakk til annars, Sturl. iii. 183. ádrykkju-ker, u, f. a 'loving-cup,' or 'grace-cup,' Vígl. 17.

6-eggjan, f. egging on, instigation, Hkr. i. 102, Fms. i. 130; af á. c-s, Landn. 214, Orkn. 416, Isl. ii. 340, Fms. x. 379. compd: áeggjanar-fifi, n. a fool or tool egged on by another; hafa e-n at á., Sturl. i. 81, to use one to snatch the chestnuts out of the fire; cp. the Engl. cat's-paw.

4-fall, n. 'on-fall,' esp.

1. a nautical term, of a 'sea' dasbing over a sbip, Bs. i. 422, Korm. 180, Nj. 267, Sks. 227, Fs. 113, 153; hence the phrase, liggja undir áföllum, of one in danger at sea.

2. a law term, the laying on of a fine or the like; â. sckðar, Grág. i. 138.

β. a condemnatory sentence in an Icel. court; ef þeir vilja â. dæma... vér dæmum â. honum, Grág. i. 67, 71, of the formula for summing up and delivering a sentence in court.

3. metaph. and theol. = áfelli, a visitation, calamity, 623. 19, Magn. 470, H.E. i. 236. compp. áfalls-dómr, m. a sentence of condemnation, doom, Clem. 50, Eluc. 39, 655 xviii. 2 Corin. xi. 29, Stj. 265 (visitation).

Digitized by Google

á-fang, n. (áfangi, m., Grág. i. 433), [fá á, to grasp], a grasping, $\overset{\circ}{T}$ man, Lv. 79, Stj. 65. seizing, laying bands upon, esp. of rough bandling; hann hló mjök mót áfangi manna, Fms. vi. 203; varð hann fyrir miklu spotti ok áfangi, 2. a law term, a mulct, fine, incurred by illegal seizure of another man's goods; ef maor hleypr á bak hrossi manns úlofat, þat vardar sex aura a., if a man jumps on the back of another man's borse without leave, that is visited with a fine of six ounces, Grag. i. 432, Gpl. 520; hvatki skip er tekr skal sitt á, gjalda hverr . . ., á, á maði á hrossi sínu hvárt er hann ekr eðr ríði, N. G. L. i. 45; at hann hafi riðit hrossi manns um þrjá bæi ... varðar skóggang ok áfanga (where it is used masc. acc. pl.) með, Grág., vide above.

á-fangi, a betting-place, v. ái-fangi.

á-fastr, adj. made fast, fastened to, joined to; ef hapt er a. hrossi, Grág. i. 436; eldhúsit var á. útibúrinu, Nj. 75; þær (the comets) eru á. himni, Rb. 478: metaph., andligum hlutum áfastar, connected with, H. E. i. 511.

6-fatt, n. adj. defective, faulty, Nj. 49, Barl. 74: with gen., mikils er á., H. E. i. 244.

á-felli, n. a bardsbip, sbock, calamity; þat á. (spell) hafði legit á því fólki, at hver kona fæddi dauðan frumburð sinn er hon ól, Mar. 656; asskaplig á., Stj. 90 (also of a spell); preynging ok á., 121; með hversu miklu ú. (injustice) Sigurðr konungr vildi heimta þetta mál af honum, Hkr. iii. 257; standa undir á., to be under great bardsbip, Fms. iv. 146, vi. 147; með miklu á. (of insanity), vii. 150; þeir vóru sex vetr í þessu á., viz. in bondage, x. 225; hvert a. jarl hafdi veitt honum, what penalties the earl bad laid upon bim, Orkn. 284, Fms. iv. 310. β. damnation, condemnation, = áfall; nú vil ek at þú snúir eigi svá skjótt málinu til áfellis honum, Band. 4. co Grág. Introd. clxviii, Ghl. 174. COMPD: afellis-domr, m. condemnation, &-fenginn, adj. part. [fa &, to lay bold on, to intoxicate], intoxicating, used of drinks, cp. the Engl. 'stinging ale;' mjöbr, Edda 76; drykkr, á-fengr, adj. now more freq., id., Hkr. i. 244, Bárð. 174.

Fms. viii. 447; vin, Stj. 409, Joh. 84.

af-ergja, u, f. (qs. af-ergja, af- intens.?), eagerness, and -ligr, adj. im-á-flog, n. pl. [fljúgast á], a brawl, fighting, Fms. vi. 361.

á-flutningr, m., Vm. 157, of right of laying up fish.

&-form, n. a design, purpose, H. E. ii. 167, in a deed of the 14th century, (Lat. word.)

á-forma, að, prop. to form, mould; steina sem úðr höfðu þeir áformat, Stj. 562, I Kings v. 17 ('hewn stones'). In mod. usage only metaph. to design, perform, Fas. iii. 449; verðu vér at ú. (design) ok ræða, Fms. vii. 89; á. um e-t, því mundi hann þetta hafa vakit, at hann mundi á. vilja um gleðina, ... carry it out, vi. 342, Pass. 7. 2.

AFR (perh. better afr), m. [the r belongs to the root, cp. áir, f. 1. a beverage, Eg. 204, translated by Magnaeus by sorbitio avenacea, a sort of common ale brewed of oats; this explanation is confirmed by the Harbardsljóð, verse 2, where Thor says, át ek í hvíld áðr ek heiman for sildr ok afra (acc. pl.), sabr em ek enn þess; the single vellum MS. (Cod. Reg.) here reads hafra. In the Eg. l.c., the Cod. Wolf. reads afra, the Cod. A. M. 132 afr, acc. sing.: cp. the passage Ls. 3, where jöll seems to be the Scot. yill (v. Burns' Country Lassie), and afo in Cod. Reg. a false spelling for áfr,—jöll ok áfr færi ek ása sonum, ok blend ek þeim svá meini mjöð: áfir, pronounced áir, now means buttermilk (used in Icel. instead of common beer): cp. also ábrystur, f. pl. curds of cow's milk in the first week after the cow has calved; the milk is cooked and eaten warm and deemed a great dainty; opt eru heitar ábrestur, Snót 299 (Ed. 1865); probably qs. áfr ystr.

á-fram, adv. a. loc. with the face downward, forward; fell hann a., on the face, Nj. 253, Vd. 52, Grett. 99 new Ed. β. temp. along, forward (rare); hann er nú með jarli sumarit á., be is now with the earl till late in the summer, Finnb. 274. Y. further on; komst aldri lengra å. fyrir honum um skáldskapinn, be never got any further on with his poem, Fms. iii. 102; heldu beir a. leidina, they held forward on their way, O. T. 31. In mod. usage freq. with verbs denoting to go, move; halda, ganga . . . áfram, to go on.

á-frá = offrá = frá, from, cp. Swed. ifrån. á-frýja, d, to reprove, blame; áfrý ck þó engan (better engum) ydar, Fas. i. 103.

á-frýja, u, f. reproach, scolding, Bs. i. 622.

1. = aufusa, gratification, q. v. 2. in á-fýsa and áfýsi, f. mod. usage = exbortation, and áfýsa, t, to exbort, á. e-n til e-s.

á-færa, ð, to reproach, Fms. v. 90.

á-færi, n. a law term; thus defined, af tveir menn fella einn við jörðu, þá skal annarr þeirra bæta rétt, því at þat verðr á. at lögum, where it seems to mean unfair dealing, shame, N.G. L. i. 309.

á-ganga, u, f. task-work, forced labour, the French corvée, = atverk, q. v.; hón (the church) á tveggja manna á. á hval í Kjölsvík, Vm. 155; veita e-m á., D. N. ii. 133.

á-gangr, m. aggression, invasion; fyrir á. Skota ok Dana, Eg. 267, Fms. i. 224, iii. 143, Eg. 337.

ágangs-samr, adj. aggressive, Fs. 9, Fms. vi. 102, Sks. 208.

á-gauð 4. [geyja á], barking, metaph. foul language, Gísl. 53; cp. bá geyr hón á þá, 139. á-gengiligr, adj. plausible; görði hann þetta á. fyrir Hæringi, Grett.

149 A, mod. aðgengiligt.

a-gengt, n. adj. trodden, beaten, of a place or path, Finnb. 336: metaph., e-m verðr á., to be trodden upon; hón byggir hér í miðri frændleifð sinni, ok verðr henni því hér ekki á., Stj. 613. 2 Kings iv. 13. The mod. use of the phrase e-m veror a. is to succeed or make progress &-gildi, n. value of a ewe (zr), Vm. 159, Pm. 40.

&-gildr, adj. of a ewe's value, Grag. i. 502; cp. kugildi and kugildr. á-girnast, d and t, dep. to lust after, in a bad sense, with an acc., Fms. i. 76, 223, Orkn. 38; with an inf., Orkn. 6 old Ed.

a-girnd, f. in old writers always for greed of power or passion a. ambition, Sks. 113 B, Fms. ix. 460; a. ok ofsi, greed and insolence, viii. 195, Stj. 143, 145, 146. B. passion; agirndar-logi, Rb. 424; a. blindleiki, blind passion (in love), H. E. i. 505, 655 xxx; thirst for revenge, Sks. 739. y. since the Reformation it has been exclusively used of avarice or greed of gain; in old writers the signification is more general; we, however, find a. fjar, Hom. 68; hann hatdi dregit undir sik Finnskattinn med a., Fms. vii. 129.

á-girndligr, adj. passionate, Sks. 720 B.

&.girni, f.; used as neut., Mar. 91, O. H. L. 22: a. = ágirnd, ambition; mikit á., great ambition, O. H. L. l. c., Sks. 343. β. cupidity; á. manna lofs, Hom. 83; á. áts ok drykkju, 53; fjár, 25, 623. 20; á. fjár ok metnaðar, Edda (pref.) 144, 145. á-gjarn, adj. ambitious; ér eruð ágjarnir heima í héraði ok ranglátir, ambitious and wrongful, Nj. 223, Orkn. 38, 66; a. ok fegjarn, ambitious and covetous, Fms. xi. 294, Hkr. ii. 146; & til rikis, iii. 174; & til fjår, covetous, Fms. xi. 440, Orkn. 66: dauntless, fierce, kappar ágjarnir ok óhræddir, fierce and fearless champions, Fms. x. 179; hogværir í íriði sem lamb, en í úfriði ú. (fierce) sem leon, viii. 253. The use since the Reformation is solely that of avaricious, greedy after money.

á-gjarnliga, adv. insolently, Sks. 450 B.

á-gjarnligr, adj. insolent; á. rán, Sks. 336, 509 B, 715.

á-góði, a, m. gain, profit, benefit, D. I. i. 476, Isl. ii. 432 (freq.) COMPD: ágóða-hlutr, ar, m. a profitable sbare, Grág. ii. 359.

á-grip, n. [gripa á, to touch], in the phrase, litill agripum, small of size, D. N. iv. 99. β. at present ágrip means a compendium, abridgement, epitome.

&-gesta, tt, to laud, praise bigbly, Ld. 220, Fms. vi. 71.

á-gæti, n. renown, glory, excellence; göra e-t til ágætis sér, as a glory to bimself, Fms. xi. 72, 109; reyna a. e-s, to put one on bis trial, 142; pu hyggr at engu öðru en ákafa einum ok á., only bent upon rusbing on and sbewing one's prowess, 389; vegr ok a., fame and glory, Fas. i. 149, Sks. 241. In pl. glorious deeds; mikil a. voru sögð frá Gunnari, Nj. 41: in the phrase, gora e-t at agaztum, to laud, praise bigbly, Fms. viii. 139, vii. 147: in the proverb, hefir hverr til síns ágætis nokkuð, every one's fame rests upon some deed of his own, no one gets his fame for naught, the context implies, and thou hast done what will make thee famous, Nj.

2. in compos ágætis- and ágæta- are prefixed to a great many words, esp. in mod. use, to express something capital, excellent: ágæta-skjótr, adj. very swift, Fms. vii. 169; ágæta-vel, adv. excellently well, Nj. 218: and even to substantives, e.g. agesta-gripr and ágætis-gripr, m. a capital thing, Fms. ix. 416, x. 254, Ld. 202; ágæta-naut, n. a fine ox, Eb. 318; ágætis-maör, m. a great man, Landn. 324, Fms. vii. 102, xi. 329.

á-gætingr, m. a goodly man, O. H. L. 55 (rare).

á-gætliga, adv. capitally, Fms. i. 136, vi. 307, Boll. 346, Sks. 623. &-getligr, adj. excellent, goodly, Fms. ii. 300, x. 223, 231, xi. 396, Sks. 622, Hom. 132, Ver. 42.

á-gætr, adj. [v. the words above, from á- intens. and geta-gatgatu, to get and to record; the old etymology in glossaries of the last century from the Greek άγαθόs cannot be admitted], famous, goodly, excellent; a. madr um allt land, Nj. 106; a. at afli, Edda 19; agztir gimsteinar, precious stones, Fms. i. 15; a. skjöldr, Eg. 705; compar., mun hann verða ágætari (more famous) en allir þínir frændr, Fms. i. 256; superl., ágætaztr, Nj. 282, Eg. 311; ágæztr, contr., Edda 5, Íb. 14, Fms. vii. 95, Greg. 53. In the Landn. 'maor ágætr' is freq. used in a peculiar sense, viz. a noble man, nearly synonymous to gædingr in the Orkneys, or hersir in Norway, e. g. 143, 149, 169, 190, 198, 201, 203, 279, 281, 308, 312; hersir á., 173, etc.; cp. also Kristni S. ch. 1.

á-görő, f. gain, profit, = ávöxtr; til sölu ok á., for sale and profit, Bs. i. 426.

á-hald, n., prop. laying band on: 1. used esp. in pl. áhöld= brawl, fight, Eb. 152, Fas. i. 92; verda á. með mönnum, they came to a tussle, Sturl. iii. 262, Bs. i. 635: the phrase, hafa eingi áhöld við e-m, to bave no power of resistance, to have so great odds against one that there is no COMPDS: figangs-maor, m. an aggressive chance, Eg. 261: hence comes probably the popular phrase, shold eru um e-t, when matters are pretty nearly equal. keep back; veita e-m &., Niorst. 3. B. veita, göra &. um e-t, to claim the right of bolding; hann görði &. um Halland, he claimed H., Fms. x. 70, v. l.; honum þótti leikdómrinn meira á. hafa á kirkjum en klerkdómrinn, . . bad a stronger claim or title, Bs. i. 750, 696, Fms. x. 393.

á-hankast, að, dep. [hönk, a bank or coil], in the phrase, e-m á., one gets the worst of it. But it is twisted to another sense in the dream of king Harold, Fms. vi. 312. Shortly before the battle at the river Niz, the king dreamt that king Sweyn pulled the hank of rope out of his hand,-réðu svá flestir at Sveinn mundi fá þat er þeir keptust um, þá mælti Hákon jarl: vera má at svá sé, en vænna þyki mér at Sveini konungi muni ahankast, most men read it so that S. would win the prize of contest, then said earl H.: well that may be so, but it seems more likely to me that king S. will be caught.

á-heit, n. mostly or always in pl. vows to a god, saint, or the like, af naudsyn en af aheiti, more of impulse than as a free vow, Magn. 534.

á-henda, d, to lay bands upon, seize; finna ok á., Grág. ii. 311: part. pass. ahendr, as adj. within reach; peir voru svá langt komnir at peir urdu eigi ahendir, ... out of reach, Sturl. ii. 185, Eg. 160; þau urðu a., they were seized, Ld. 152.

á-heyrandi, part. within bearing, present, Grug. ii. 143, Fms. i. 248. á-heyriliga, adv. worth bearing, Fms. i. 74.

á-heyriligr, adj. worth bearing, well sounding, Nj. 77, Fms. i. 141; a. ord, fine words, Orkn. 454.

á-heyris, adv. within bearing, Bs. i. 771.

á-heyrsi and á-heyrsla, adj. ind., verða e-s á., to get to bear, bear the rumour of, Sturl. i. 22, Orkn. 278, Fms. ii. 295.

á-hlaup, n. mostly in pl. onsets, onfalls, attacks; veita e-m á., Eg. 284; við áhlaupum (incursions) Dana, Fms. i. 28; at eigi veitti hann bau á. í bræði sinni, at geig sætti, Post. 686 B. B. a carnal assault, Stj. 71: metaph., med svá stórum áhlaupum, so impetuously, Fms. COMPD: áhlaupa-maor, m. a bot-beaded, impetuous person, Korm. 8, pord. 43: now used of a man that works by fits and starts, not steadily.

á-hleypinn, adj. rasb, Sks. 383, 437.

á-hlýðast, dd, dep. to listen or give ear to; á. við e-t, to agree with, Fs. 141; en er þeir fundu at hann vildi eigi á. við frændr sína, when they found that be turned a deaf ear to his kinsmen, Eb. 7 new Ed., v.l., perhaps the right reading, v. öðlast.

á-hlýðinn, adj. giving a willing ear, listening readily; ekki á., obstinate, self-willed, Fms. vi. 431; a. um fjartökur, greedy of gain, vii. 209, where, however, the Morkinsk. (p. 337) reads, a. um fortölur, easy to persuade, which suits the context better; a. til grimleiks, Fms, x. 380, Thom, 28.

á-hrin, n. [hrina á, of spells], used in the compo áhrina-oro, n. pl., esp. of spells that come true, in the phrase, verda at ahrinsordum, spells or prophecies that prove true, pord. 81, Fas. ii. 432.

á-hugi, a, m., prop. intention, mind; með þeim á. at . . ., transl. of Lat. intentio, Hom. 80, 655 xxiii; ok nú segir hann öllum hver fyrirætlun hans (konum?) er í áhuga, ... what he is minded to do, Ísl. ii. 355. ness, impulse of the mind (now freq. in that sense); ekki skortir ykkr á., y. mind, opinion; eigi er því at leyna, hverr minn á. er um Nj. 137. betta, ek hygg . . ., Fær. 199. 8. care, solicitude, = ahyggja, Fms. ii. COMPDS: Shuga-fullr, adj. full of care, Fs. 98. áhugaáhuga-maor, m. an eager, aspiring litill, adj. slow, Fms. iv. 77. áhuga-mikill, adj. eager, vigorous, Fms. viii. 266. man, Bs. i. 686. shuga-samt, n. adj. being concerned about, Bs. i. 824. veror, adj. causing concern, Sturl. i. 106 (serious, momentous).

6-hyggia, u, f. care, concern, Hrafn. 12; bera ú. fyrir, to be concerned about, Ghl. 44; fær þat honum mikillar á. ok reiði, concern and anger, Nj. 174, Bret. 24: pl. cares, Hákon hafði svá miklar áhyggjur um vetrinn, at hann lagðist í rekkju, Fms. i. 82. COMPDS: áhyggju-fullr, adj. full of care, anxious, Fms. ii. 225, x. 249, Blas. 35. áhyggju-lauss, adj. unconcerned, Rb. 312. áhyggju-mikill, adj. anxious, Bs. i. 328, Band. 8. ahyggju-samligr, adj. and -liga, adv. with concern, gravely, anxiously, Fms. i. 141, Sturl. ii. 78, 136. áhyggju-samr, adj. anxious, careful, 655 xiii, 656 B. 7, Sturl. iii. 234. áhyggjusvipr, m. a grave, anxious face, Fms. vi. 239, vii. 30. áhyggjuyfirbrago, n. id., Fms. vi. 32.

á-hyggiast, 20, á. um e-t, to be anxious about, Stj. 443, Róm. 307. &-hatta, u, f. risk, Vd. 144 old Ed.; cp. Fs. 57; (now freq.)

6-hofn, f. the freight or loading of a ship, Fas. ii. 511: used to express a kind of tonnage; tíu skippund í lest, tólf lestir í á., 732. 16: luggage, Jb. 377, 394, 408: cp. Pál Vídal. s. v.

4-hogg, f. slaughter of a ewe, Sturl. i. 69, 70 C, Ed. ærhögg.

AI, a, m. [cp. afi and Lat. avus], great-grandfather, answering to edda, great-grandmother (at present in Icel. langafi and langamma), Rm. 2; fodur edr afa, á. er hinn þriði, Edda 208. In Sæm. 118 ai seems to be an exclamatio dolentis, göróttr er drykkrinn, ai! unless ai be here = hi in the sense of father; cp. the reply of Sigmund, lattu grön sia, sonr. pl.) separately, Bs. i. 439.

2. sing. very rare, to TIn mod. poetry har in pl. is used in the sense of ancestors; hor har fæddust áa (gen. pl.) vorra, Bjarni 71, Eggert (Bb.) 1. 20.

ái-fangr, s, m.; áifangi (dat.), Grág. (Kb.) 160, and áifang (acc.), Isl. I. c., follow the old declension (so as to distinguish the dat. and acc. sing.); áifangi, a, m., Fb. ii. 340; mod. áfangi, Grett. 20 new Ed., Fb. i. 165, [xja, to bait, and vangr, campus; as to the f, cp. vetfangr = vetvangr, and hjörfangr = hjörvangr; Pál Vídal. derives it from fanga, to take]:-a resting-place; & aifongum, Grug. i. 441; taka hest sinn & áiföngum, ii. 44; taka áifang (acc. sing.), Isl. ii. 482; in the extracts from the last part of the Heidarv. S. MS. wrongly spelt atfang (at = úi); höfdu þeir dvöl nokkura á áifanga, Fb. ii. l. c., Jb. 272. In mod. use áfangi means a day's journey, the way made between two halting places, cp. σταθμός; hence the phrase, 'i tveim, premr . . . aföngum,' to make a journey in two, three . . . stages :- the COMPD afanga-staor, m., is used = aifangr in the old sense; but 'stadr' is redundant, as the syllable 'fangr' already denotes place.

ái-fóor, n. fodder for baiting, provender, Jb. 430, Stj. 214. Gen. xlii. 27. á-kafast, 20, dep. to be eager, vebement; á. á e-t, Fxr. 262 (cp. Fb. ii. 40), Fms. xi. 20: absol., Bret. 14, 60.

á-kafi, a. m. [ákafr], eagerness, vebemence; þá görðist svá mikill á. á. at .., it went to such an excess, that ..., Nj. 62, Fms. i. 35, xi. 389; med á. miklum, vebemently, Eg. 457; í ákaía, adverbially, eagerly, impetuously, Nj. 70, Fms. xi. 117.

2. the gen. ákaía is prefixed,

6. to a Nj. 70, Fms. xi. 117. great many adjectives, in the sense of a bigh degree, very, e.g. á. reiðr, furious, Fms. vii. 32, x. 173; á. fjölmennr, very numerous, Isl. ii. 171; á. fögr, beautiful (of Helena), Ver. 25.

\beta. to some substantives; á. drifa, a beavy snow drift, Sturl. iii. 20; á. maor, an eager, bot, pusbing man, Eg. 3, Fms. i. 19, vii. 257, Grett. 100 A: in this case the ákafa may nearly be regarded as an indecl. adjective.

á-kafieikr, m. eagerness, vebemence, Fins. x. 324.

6-kafliga, adv. vebemently, impetuously; of motion, such as riding, sailing; fara a., to rusb on, Fms. ix. 366; sem akasligast, in great speed, at a great rate, Eg. 160, 602; also, bidja a., to pray fervently. very, Fær. 238, Fms. x. 308, Ld. 222.

á-kafligr, adj. bot, vebement; á. bardagi, orosta, styrjöld, Fms. x. 308, 656 B. 10.

á-kaflyndi, n. a bot, impetuous temper, Hkr. ii. 237.

á-kaflyndr, adj. impetuous, Fms. viii. 447.

á-kafr, adj. [cp. A.S. caf, promptus, velox, and 'á-' intens., cp. af D. II.], vebement, fiery; a. bardagi, a bot fight, Fms. xi. 95: of whatever is at its bigbest point, benna dag var veizlan (the banquet) allra áköfust, 331; vellan sem áköfust, Nj. 247: ardent, svá var ákaft um vináttu þeirra, at ., 151: neut. as adv., kalla ákaft á Búrð, to pray to B. fervently, Búrð. 169; ríða sem ákafast, to ride at a furious rate, Eg. 602; búast sem á., 86; en beir er eptir Agli vóru sóttu ákaft, . . . pulled bard, 362.

á-kall, n. a calling upon, invocation; ú. á nafn Guds, 656 B. 10, Sks. 310, Bs. i. 180. B. clamour, shouting; af ordum peirra ok ákalli, Fms. xi. 117, Orkn. 344 old Ed., new Ed. 402 reads kall: esp. a war cry, Fms. 2. a claim, demand; veita a. til e-s, Eg. 470, Hkr. ii. 195, ix. 510. Fms. ix. 433, xi. 324, Orkn. 20 old Ed.; cp. new Ed. 54, Korm. 110. COMPD: ákalls-lauss, adj. a law term, free from encumbrance, Vm. 11. &-kals, n. an importunate, urgent request, Fms. ii. 268, vi. 239.

6-kast, n. a throwing upon, casting at, Sks. 410: metaph. an assault, á. djöfla, Hom. 14: plur. taunts, Sturl. i. 21. COMPD: ákasta-samr, adj. taunting, Glum. 364.

á-kastan, f. casting upon, Js. 42.

á-kefő, f. = ákafi; vægilega en eigi með á., Fms. vi. 29, vii. 18, x. 237, K. Á. 202, Sks. 154. COMPD: ákefðar-orð, n. rasb language, Mar.

1. in the phrase, hafa a. e-s or af e-u, to have a á-kenning, f. smack of a thing, to savour of, Bs. i. 134. 2. a slight reprimand, (kenna ú., to feel sore); göra e-m ú., to administer a slight reprimand, Sturl. i. 70, Bs. i. 341, in the last passage it is used as masc.

á-keypi, n. the right of pre-emption, a law term, Fr.

á-klaga, að, to accuse, (mod. word.)

á-klagan and áklögun, f. an accusation, charge, Bs. i. 856.

á-klæði, n. a carpet, covering, Pm. 109.

á-kneyki, n. burt, metaph. sbame, Konr. MS.

á-kúfóttr, adj. spherical, Sks. 630 B; cp. ávalr.

á-kúran, a doubtful reading, Eg. 47, v. l. for ábján, bondage: ákúrur, f. pl., means in mod. usage reprimands: in the phrase, veita e-m a., to scold, esp. of reprimands given to a youth or child.

á-kváma, mod. ákoma, u, f. 1. coming, arrival; úsriðar á., visitation of war, Stj. 561. 2. but esp. a burt received from a blow, a wound, = averki, Nj. 99, Fms. ii. 67, Gpl. 168: medic. of a disease of the skin, an eruption, Fél. ix. 186, esp. on the lips, v. áblástr.

6-kveða, kvað, to fix; part. ákveðinn, fixed, Orkn. 10; á. orð, marked, pointed words, Bjarn. 57, Fbr. 72, 73.

á-kveðja, kvaddi, = ákveða, Bs. i. 773; ákveddi is perhaps only a misspelling for ákvæði. á-kviðr, m. a verdict against, perhaps to be read bera á kviðu (acc.

Digitized by GOOGLE

1. an uttered opinion; mun ek nú segja yðr hvat mitt T á-kvæði, n. á. er, Nj. 189, Sturl. i. 65 C; Ed. atkvæði (better): a command, Stj. 212, 208; með ákvæðum, expressly, Sks. 235: cp. atkvæði. popular tales and superstition it is specially used of spells or charms: cp. Lat. fatum from fari; cp. also atkvæði: the mod. use prefers ákvæði in this sense, hence akveooa-skald, n. a spell-skald, a poet whose words have a magical power, also called kraptaskald; v. Isl. Þjóðs. i, where many such poets are mentioned; indeed any poet of mark was believed to possess the power to spell-bind with his verses; cp. the COMPDS: ákvæðis-teigr, m. a piece of field to tales about Orpheus. be mowed in a day, a mower's day's work (in mod. usage called dagslátta), Fms. iii. 207. ákvæðis-verk, n. piece-work; þat er títt á Íslandi at hasa á., þykjast þeir þá komnir til hvíldar eptir erviði sitt er verki er lokit, Fms. v. 203, Jb. 374.

á-kynnis, adv. on a visit, Sd. 158. á-kæra, ð, to accuse, (mod. word.)

6-keera, u, f. a charge, accusation, Bs. i. 852. COMPDS: &keeru-lauss, adj. undisputed, Fimb. 356; blameless, Stj. 523. &keeru-maör, m. an accuser, Stj. 42.

á-kærsla, u, f. = ákæra, Fr. ákærslu-lauss = ákærulauss. id.

AL, f., old form nom. dat. acc. sing. ol; öl heitir drykki, en ol er band, Skidda (Thorodd) 163: gen. sing. and nom. pl. álar; (the mod. form is 61, keeping the o throughout all the cases; gen. pl. ólar):—a strap, esp. of leather; ál löng, Fms. vi. 378, Edda 29, Sks. 179: a proverb, sjaldan er bagi að bandi eðr byrdi að ól. β. esp. the leather straps for fastening a cloak, etc. to the saddle, = slagálar, Orkn. 12, Bjarn. 68, Fbr. 57 new Ed. γ. a bridle, rein; beislit fanst þegar ok var komit á álna, Bs. i. 314, note 2. compos: álar-endi, a, m. the end of a leather strap, Edda 29. álar-reipi, n. a rope of leather, etc.

á-lag, n. and álaga, u, f. [leggja ú]; in some cases, esp. dat. pl., it is often difficult to decide to which of these two forms a case may belong; they are therefore best taken together. In the neut. pl. the notion of spell, in the fem. pl. that of tax, burden, bardship prevails. In sing. both of them are very much alike in sense. I. fem. pl. a tax, burden, burdensome impost; sagði at bændr vildi eigi hafa frekari álög (álögur?) af konungi en forn lög stæði til, Fms. xi. 224; undan þessum hans álögum . . . liggja undir slíkum álögum, tyranny, yoke, Bárð. ch. 2; gangit til ok hyggit at landsmenn, at ganga undir skattgjafar Olafs konungs ok allar álögur, burdens, taxes, Fms. iv. 282, in the famous speech of Einar pveræing, O. H. ch. 134; bað jarl vægja mönnum um álögur, Fms. iv. 216; jarl hélt með freku öllum álögum, Orkn. 40; hvárt mun konungr sá ekki kunna hóf um álögur ok harðleiki við menn, Fms. vi. 37; Þórsteinn kvað ekki um at leita, at Þórðr kæmist undan neinum álögum, burdens, oppressive conditions, Bjarn. 72. 2. a law term, an additional fine; med álögum ok leigum, duties and rents, Grág. i. 260; binda álögum, to charge, 384; hálfa fimtu mörk álaga, a fine of three marks, 3. metaph. in plur. and in the phrase, i álögum, in straits, at a pinch, if needful, Vm. 18; vitr madr ok ágætr í öllum álögum, a wise and good man in all difficulties, Fs. 120. 4. a metric, term, addition, supplement; þat er annat leyfi háttanna at hafa í dróttkvæðum hætti eitt orð eða tvau með álögum, cp. álagsháttr below, Edda 5. theol. a visitation, scourge, Stj. 106, 647. 2 Kings xxi. 13 (answering to plummet in the Engl. transl.); sing, in both in-II. neut. pl. álög, spells, imprecations. In the fairy tales stances. of Icel. 'vera i álögum' is a standing phrase for being spell-bound, esp. for being transformed into the shape of animals, or even of lifeless objects; leggja á., to bind by spells, cp. Isl. þjóðs. by Jón Árnason; var því líkast sem í fornum sögum er sagt, þá er konunga börn urðu fyrir stjúpmæðra álögum (v. l. sköpum), Fms. viii. 18 (Fb. ii. 539); hón lýstr til hans með úlís hanzka ok segir at hann skyldi verða at einum híðbirni, ok aldri skaltú ór þessum álögum fara, Fas. (Völs. S.) i. 50, 404: sing. (very rare), þat er álag mitt, at þat skip skal aldri heilt af hafi koma er hér liggr út, Landn. 250. At present always in pl., cp. forlög, örlög, ólög. COMPDS: álags-bætr, f. pl. a kind of fine, N. G. L. i. 311. hattr, m. a kind of metre, the first syllable of the following line completing the sentence, e.g. Iskalda skar ek öldu eik; Edda (Ht.) 129. álögu-laust, n. adj. free from imposts.

álar-, ála-, v. sub voce áll and ál.

á-lasa, að, to blame, with dat. of the person.

á-lasan and álösun, f., and álas, n. a reprimand, rebuke, Vígl. 25. ál-belti, n. a leathern belt, Stj. 606.

al-borinn, adj. part. [álbera], measured with a thong or cord, of a field, N. G. L. i. 43. In Icel. called vabbera and vabborinn.

ál-burðr, m. mensuration with a line, N. G. L. i. 43, = vaðburðr.

á-leiðis, adv. on the right path, opp. to afleiðis; (leið) snúa e-m á., metaph., 65,5 xiii. B; snú þeim á. er þú hefir áðr vilta, id. β. forwards, onwards; töru á. til skipa, Fms. i. 136; snúa ferð á., to go on (now, halda áfram), Korm. 232, K. þ. K. 94 B: metaph., koma e-u á., to bring a thing about, Hkr. i. 169, iii. 104; koma e-u til á., id., Fas. i. 45 (corrupt reading); snúa e-u á., to improve, Bs. i. 488; víkja á. með e-m, to side with, Sturl. iii. 91.

á-leikni, f. a pertness, Grett. 139 (Ed.)

á-leikr, m. [leika á], a trick, Grett. 139 C.

á-leiksi, adj. ind. who had got the worst of the game, Bret.

á-leitaðr, part. assailed, Stj. 255.

á-leiting, f. = áleitni, Fr.

á-leitinn, adj. pettish, Fms. ii. 120, Orkn. 308.

á-leitligr, adj. reprebensible, Greg. 26.

á-leitni, f. a petrish disposition, Fins. vii. 165, Sturl. ii. 228, Fs. 8; eigi fyrir á. sakar heldr góðvilja, Al. 129, 153; spott þórðar ok á., invectives, Bjarn. 3, Joh. 623, 19.

á-lengdar, adv. along; engum friði heit ek þér á., Fms. iii. 156; eigi vildi hann vist hans þar á., be sbould not be staying along there, i.e. there, Grett. 129 A, Sturl. iii. 42.

3. now used loc. far off, aloof, Lat. procul.

&-lengr, adv. [cp. Engl. along], continuously; pessi illvirki skyldi eigi & úheind vera, Bs. i. 533; & er, as soon as; & er goðar koma í setr sínar, pá . . ., Grág i. 8; & er hann er sextán vetra, 197; & svá sem beir eru búnir, in turn as soon as they are ready, 61.

álfa, v. hálfa, region.

álfkona, u, f. a female elf, Fas. i. 32, Bær. 2, Art. 146.

alf-kunnigr, adj. akin to the elves, Fm. 13.

ALFR, s, m. [A.S. alf, munt-alfen, sa-alfen, wudu-alfen, etc.; Engl. elf, elves, in Shakespeare oupbes are 'fairies;' Germ. alb and elfen, Erl- in Erlkönig (Göthe) is, according to Grimm, a corrupt form from the Danish Ellekonge qs. Elver-konge]; in the west of Icel. also pronounced I. mythically, an elf, fairy; the Edda distinguishes between Ljósálfar, the elves of light, and Dokkálfar, of darkness (the last not elsewhere mentioned either in mod. fairy tales or in old writers), 12; the Elves and Ases are fellow gods, and form a favourite alliteration in the old mythical poems, e. g. Vsp. 53, Hm. 144, 161, Gm. 4, Ls. 2, 13, pkv. 7, Skm. 7, 17, Sdm. 18. In the Alvismál Elves and Dwarfs are clearly distinguished as different. The abode of the elves in the Edda is Alfheimar. fairy land, and their king the god Frey (the god of light), Edda 12; see the poem Gm. 12, Altheim Frey gáfu í árdaga tívar at tannfé. In the fairy tales the Elves haunt the hills, hence their name Huldufolk. bidden people: respecting their origin, life, and customs, v. Isl. bjóðs. i. I sqq. In old writers the Elves are rarely mentioned; but that the same tales were told as at present is clear; - Hallr mælti, hví brosir bú nú? Þórhallr svarar, af því brosir ek, at margr hóll opnast ok hvert kvikindi býr sinn bagga bæði smá ok stór, ok gera fardaga (a foreboding of the introduction of Christianity), Fms. ii. 197, cp. landvættir; álfamenn, elves, Bs. i. 417, Fas. i. 313, 96; hóll einn er hér skamt í brott er álfar búa í, Km. 216: alfrek, in the phrase, ganga alfreka, eacare, means dirt, excrements, driving the elves away through contamination, Eb. 12, cp. Landn. 97, Fms. iv. 308, Bárð. ch. 4: álfröðull, elfin beam or light, a poët. name of the sun; alfavakir, elf-holes, the small rotten holes in the ice in spring-time in which the elves go a fishing; the white stripes in the sea in calm weather are the wakes of elfin fishing boats, etc.: medic. álfabruni is an eruption in the face, Fél. ix. 186: Ivar Assen mentions 'alvgust, alveblaastr, alveld,' the breath, fire of elves (cp. St. Vitus' dance or St. Anthony's fire); 'alvskot,' a sort of cancer in the bone:-greeti álfa, elfin tears, Hom. I, is dubious; it may mean some flower with dewdrops glittering in the morning sun, vide s. v. glystamr (glee-steaming). Jamieson speaks of an elf's cup, but elf tears are not noticed elsewhere; cp. Edda 39. In Sweden, where the worship of Frey prevailed, sacrifices, álfa-blót, were made to the elves, stóð húsfreyja í dyrum ok bað hann (the guest) eigi þar innkoma, segir at þau ætti álfa blót, Hkr. ii. 124 (referring to the year 1018), cp. Korm. ch. 22. as the elves had the power to bewitch men, a silly, vacant person is in Icel. called alfr; hence alfalogr, silly; alfaskapr and alfahattr, silly II. in historical sense, the Norse district situated between the two great rivers Raumelfr and Gautelfr (Albis Raumarum, et Gotharum) was in the mythical times called Alfheimar, and its inhabitants Alfar, Fas. i. 413, 384, 387, Fb. i. 23, vide also P. A. Munch, Beskrivelse over Norge, p. 7. For the compds v. above.

álfrek, n., álfröðull, m., v. above.

á-liðinn, adj. part. far-spent, of time; dagr, Grett. 99 A; sumar, Orkn. 448, Ld. 14.

å-lit, n. [lita á], prop. a view:

I. aspect, appearance, esp. that of a person's face, gait, etc.; vænn at áliti, fair, gentle of aspect, Nj. 30; fagr álitum, Edda 5, Eluc. 35, Bær. 7: of other animate or inanimate objects, dökkr álits, black of aspect, Fms. vi. 229; eigi réttr álits, crooked, not straight (of a broken leg), Bs. i. 743; smíði fagrt áliti, Hom. 128: the whole form, shape, hvert á. sem hann hefði, Fms. xi. 433; hann hafði ymsa manna á. eða kykvenda, Post. 656 C. 26.

II. of a mind, a view, thought, consideration, reflection; með áliti ráðsmanna, Fms. vii. 139; með skjótu áliti, at a glance, Sks. 3: esp. in pl., þú ferr með góðum vilja en eigi með nógum álitum, inconsiderately, Lv. 38; meir með ákefð en álitum, Stj. 454. Hom. 24; gjöra e-t at álitum, to take a matter into (favourable) consideration, Nj. 3, Lv. 16.

2. in mod. use, opinion; does not occur in old writers (H. E. i. 244 it means autbority), whee, there is always some additional notion of reflection, consideration.

Digitized by Google

Compds such as almennings-flit, n., public opinion, are of mod. date. B. it is now also used in the sense of reputation; vera i miklu (hith) slitt. compps: flits-leysi, n. absence of reflection, Fas. iii. 91. slits-litill, adj. inconsiderate, Fas. ii. 388. flits-mal, n. pl., gjöra et at slitsmalum = gjöra at slitum, v. above, Lv. 16.

6-litliga, adv. civilly (but not heartily); tók hann þeim á., be received them pretty well, Fms. x. 132; fór allt á. með þeim en eigi sem þá er bliðast var, ix. 454, Bjarn. 8.

2. in the present usage, considerably, to a bigb amount, etc.

6-litligr, adj., Lat. consideratus, Hom. 28. 2. considerable, respectable, (mod.)

é-litning, f. = álit, Thom. 259.

á-líka, adj. like, resembling, Sks. 164: á-líka, adv. alike, nearly as. á-ljótr, m. [ljótr, deformis], gen. s and ar, dat. áljóti; a law term, a serious bodily injury that leaves marks, wilfully inflicted; only once, Grág. ii. 146, used of a libellous speech; áljótsráð is the intention to inflict áljót, and is distinguished from fjörráð (against one's life), sárráð, and dreprád, Grág. ii. 127, 117, 146; áljótr eðr bani, i. 497; áljótsráð, as well as fjörráð, if carried out in action, was liable to the greater outlawry (ii. 127), but áljótr, in speech, only to the lesser, and this too even if the charge proved to be true; ef madr bregor manni brigslum, ok mælir áljót, þótt hann segi satt, ok varðar fjörbaugsgarð, ii. 146; an intended aljotsrað, if not carried into effect, was also only liable to the lesser outlawry, 127: every one was to be brought to trial for the actual, not the intended injury; as, vice versa, a man was tried for murder, if the wound proved mortal (ben), though he only intended to inflict a blow (drep) or wound (sár), 117; cp. also i. 493. compos: áljóts-eyrir, s, m. a fine for a., N.G.L. i. 171 (for cutting one's nose off). áljóts-ráð, n. pl., Grag., v. above.

ALKA, u, f. an auk, alca L., Edda (Gl.): alku-ungi, a, m. a young auk, Fs. 147: metaph. a long neck, in the phrase, teygja álkuna (cant).

ALL, m. I. an eel, Lat. anguilla, Km. 236, Edda (Gl.), 655 xxx. 2, Stj. 69. II. a deep narrow channel in sea or river; eru nú þeir einir álar til lands er ek get vaðit, Fms. iii. 60; þeir lögðu út á álinn (in a harbour) ok lágu þar um strengi, Sturl. i. 224; djúpir eru Islands álar, of the channel of the Atlantic between Norway and Iceland, a proverb touching the giantess who tried to wade from Norway to Iceland, 1sl. Þjóðs. III. in names of horses, or adjectives denoting the colour of a horse, 'al' means a coloured stripe along the back, e. g. in mó-ál-óttr, brown striped, bleik-ál-óttr, yellow striped; Kingála and Bleikálingr are names of horses, referring to their colour. a sort of seed, Edda (Gl.); cp. Ivar Aasen, aal, a sprout, and aala, aalrenne, to sprout, of potatoes. COMPDS: ála-fiski, f. fishing for eels, ála-garor, m. an eel-pond, stew for eels, D. N. D.N. ála-veiðr, f. eel fishing, Gbl. 421. ála-virki, n. a pond for eel fishing, Gbl. 421.

11ma, u, f., gener. a prong, fluke of an anchor, or the like, as cognom., Fms. v. 63:—properly perh. a branch of an elm.

álm-bogi, a, m. a sort of bow, cross-bow, Lex. Poët.

ALMR, m. [Lat. ulmus; Engl. elm; Germ. ulme], an elm, Edda (Gl.), Karl. 310: metaph. a bow, Lex. Poët.

álm-sveigr, m. an elm-twig, Fas. i. 271.

álm-tré, n. an elm-tree, Karl. 166.

álm-viðr, m. id.

álpast qs. aplast, dep. to totter, v. apli.

ALPT, more correctly aift, f. the common Icel. word for swan, Lat. eygnus; svan is only poët; all local names in which the swan appears, even those of the end of the 9th century, use 'alpt,' not 'svan,' Alpta-fjörðr, -nes. -mýri, v. the local index to the Landn.; Svanshóll comes from a proper name Svan. Probably akin to Lat. albus; the t is fem. inflexion; the p, instead of f, a mere change of letter; cp. the proverb, begar hrafinin verðr hvítr en álptin svört, of things that never will happen: pl. alptin sut sometimes, esp. in Norse, elptr or elftr; the change of the original a (alft) into á (alft) is of early date, Grág. ii. 338, 346, Eg. 132, Landn. 57; in all these passages pl. alptir; but elptr, Jb. 217, 309. Respecting the mythical origin of the swan, v. Edda 12; they are the sacred birds at the well of Usda. comps: alptar-hamr, m. the skin of a swan, Fas. ii. 373.

álpt-veior, f. catching wild swans, Landn. 270, Vm. 69; álptveiðar

skip, 68.

ál-reip, n. a strap of leather, Dipl. v. 18; vide ál.

á-lútr, adj. louting forwards, stooping, Thom. 201.

1-lygi, n. slander, Glum. 340, Fær. 203.

á-lykkja, u, f. the loop (lykkja) in the letter a, Skálda 171.

Signature decision, Gpl. 23. compos: ályktar-dómr, m. a final doom or judgment, Sks. 668. ályktar-orð, n. the last word, a peroration, Eg. 356, Hkr. ii. 215, Fms. vii. 116. ályktar-vitni, n. a conclusive testimony, defined in Gpl. 476.

á-lykta, 20, to conclude, (mod. word.)

6-lyktan, f. conclusion, final decision, Sturl. iii. 179.

á-lægja, adj. ind. at beat, of a mare, Grág. i. 427.

AMA, u, f. (and amu-sott, f.) erysipelas, Sturl. ii. 116; in common d talk corrupted into heimakona or heimakoma.

2. poët. a giantess, Edda (Gl.); hence the play of words in the saying, gengin er gygr or fæti en hardsperra aptr komin, gone is the giantess (crysipelas), but a worse (sceloturbe) bas come after.

3. a tub, awme, Germ. abm.

in Norse mod. dialects the larva is called aama (v. Ivar Aasen); and amu-maðkr, spelt anu-maðkr, a kind of maggot, lumbricus terrestris, is probably rightly referred to this. Fél. ix. states that it has this name from its being used to cure erysipelas.

á-málga, ao, to beg or claim gently, Gpl. 370.

am-atligr, adj. loathsome, piteous, Fms. v. 165, of piteously crying; Fas. ii. 149, of an ogress; Finnb. 218, Bær. 7.

am-attigr, adj. [cp. old Germ. amabtig = infirmus], contr. amatkir, amattkar, etc., used in poetry as an epithet of witches and giants, prob. in the same sense as amatligr, Vsp. 8, Hkv. Hjör. 17. Egilsson translates by praepotens, which seems scarcely right.

&-minna, t, to admonisb.

á-minning, f. warning, admonition, reproof; áðr menn urðu til á. við hann um þetta mál, ... reminded bim, called it into bis recollection, Fms. xi. 286, Sks. 335; fjandans á., instigation, Fms. viii. 54; heilsusamligar á., vi. 281; Guðs á., Ver. 6, Stj. 116; var þó mörg á. (many foreboding symptoms) áðr þessa lund fór ...; góðrar áminningar, beatae memoriae (rare), H. E. i. 514. compos: áminningar-maðr, m. monitor, Fms. v. 125. áminningar-orð, n. warnings, Fms. vi. 44. áminningar-vísa, u, f. a song commemorating deeds of prowess, etc., Hkr. ii. 345.

AMR, adj. occurs twice or thrice in poetry (by Amór and in a verse in Bs. i. 411), seems to mean black or loathsome: i amu blóði and am hræ, loathsome blood and carcases of the slain, Orkn. 70, Fms. vi. 55; akin with amátligr. Egilsson omits the word. Metaph. of a giant, the loathsome, Edda (Gl.)

á-munr, adj. [å- intens. and munr, mens], eager, only in poetry; á. augu, piercing, greedy eyes, Vkv. 16; and á. e-m, eager for revenge, in a bad sense, Hkv. 2. 9. COMPD: ámuns-aurar, m. pl. additional payment [munr, difference], D. N. (Fr.)

6-mella, t, to blame; &. e-m fyrir e-t, Eg. 164, Nj. 14, Hkr. ii. 285, Orkn. 430: part. ámælandi, as subst., a reprover, Post. 645. 61. 6-mæli, n. blame, †eproof, Nj. 33, 183, [sl. ii. 338, Fs. 40, El. 22. comps: ámælis-laust, n. adj. blameless, Ölk. 37, [sl. ii. 54. ámælis-orð, n. reproof, Valla L. 218. ámælis-samt, n. adj. sbameful, Sturl. ii. 31, Hrafn. 11. ámælis-skor, f. [cp. the Engl. score], a dub. word attached to an account of numbers in Edda 108; átta bera á., a sbort (not full) score (?). ámælis-verðr, adj. blamable, Glúm. 369, Fms. ii. 182.

AN, prep. [Goth. inub; Hel. and O.H.G. ano; Germ. obne; Gr. dvev], without: the oldest form in MSS. is on, Eluc. 25, Greg. Dial. (freq.), 655 xxvii. 2, Fms. xi. 111, 153; son, Hom. 19 sqq.; the common form is an; with gen. dat. and acc.; at present only with gen. with gen., þess máttu Gautar illa án vera, Hkr. ii. 70. Ó.H. 49 has ' þat;' án manna valda, Fms. iii. 98; á. allra afarkosta, x. 7; mættim vér vel bess an vera, Isl. ii. 339; in the proverb, an er ills gengis nema heiman hafi, Gisl. 63, but an er illt gengi (acc.), 149, Nj. 27, Isl. ii. 142, l. c.; án allra klæða, Al. 171; án allrar vægðar, Sks. 229; ón lasta synda, II. with dat., esp. in translations or eccles. writings, perh. in imitation of the Lat., and now quite out of use; esp. in the phrase, an e-s radi, without (against) one's will, Nj. 38, Bjarn. 71, Korm. 142, Fms. xi. 153, 111; on godum verkum, Greg. 13; an aflati, incessantly, Bs. i. 97; on domi, Eluc. 39; sannr ok on gildingi, 655 III. with acc., esp. freq. in the Grag., an er illt gengi, v. above; þá skal hann án vera liðit, Grág. i. 276; án ráð lögráðanda, 334; hann mun þik ekki þykjast mega án vera, Fms. vii. 26; án allan verma, Sks. 210; án alla flærð, 522 B; ón líkamligan breyskleik, ok ón dóm, Eluc. 38; án leyfi, without leave, Fms. vii. 141. without case, or adverbially, hvatki es betra es at hafa en ón at vera (to be without), 677.8; þau er mönnum þykir betr at hafa en án at vera, Gpl. 379; eiga vilja heldr en ón vera þat hit mjallhvíta man, Alvm. 7: acc. with inf., an vid löst at lifa, sine culpa vivere, Hm. 68; used substantively, in the proverb, alls ani (omnium expers) verðr sa er einskis bidr, Sl. 28: Egilsson also, on Hdl. 23, suggests a form an, n.; but the passage (the poem is only left in the Fb.) is no doubt a corrupt one. Probably 'ani ómi' is a corruption from Arngrimi (arngmi, the lower part of the g being blotted out: Amgrimi | oru bornir | (öflgir?) synir | ok Eyfuru, or the like).

AN and On, a mythical king of Sweden, hence ana-actt, f. painless sickness from age, decrepid old age; pat er sidan köllud á. ef maðr deyr verklauss af elli, Hkr. i. 35: the word is mentioned in Fél. ix. s. v., but it only occurs l. c. as an āπ. λεγ., and seems even there to be a paraphrase of the wording in the poem, knátti endr | at Uppsölum | ánasótt | On of standa, Ýt. 13; even in the time of Snorri the word was prob. not in use in Icel.

2. the hero of the An's Saga, a romance of the 14th or 15th century, Fas. ii. 323-362; hence áni, a, m., means a fool, lubber. ánalegr, adj. clownisb; and ánaskapr, m. clownisbness, etc.

á-nauð, f. bondage, oppression; á. ok þrælkun, Fns. x. 224, v. 75: in pl. ánauðir, imposts, x. 399, 416, 129 (grievances), Sks. 61 (where sing.)

COMPDS: anaudar-ok. n. voke of oppression. Stj. 168. f. a life of oppression, bondage, 655 viii. 4.

á-nauoga, ao, to oppress, Js. 13, Gbl. 44.

6-naudigr, adj. oppressed, enslaved, Hkr. i. 40, Grag. ii. 202, N. G. L. i. 341, Sks. 463.

á-nefna, d, to appoint, name, Jb. 161 B, Fms. i. 199, ix. 330. 6-notiant, 20, dep. to be entangled in a net; metaph., a. e-u, Bs. i. 141.

á-neyőa, dd, to force, subject, Sks. 621 B.

á-ning, f. [zja, ái-], resting, baiting, Grág. ii. 233. an-ott, n. adi, a pun (v. An 2), a lot of Ans. Fas. ii. 431.

&-nyt, f. ewe's milk, = ærnyt, Landn. 197.

á-nýja, o or ao, to renew, Sturl. iii. 39.

6-nmgis, u. f. pleasure, satisfaction, formed as the Germ, vergnügen: mod, word, not occurring in old writers.

&-neggia, d, impers., prop. to be enough, and so to content, satisfy; eptir byí sem oss ánægir, Dipl. v. q: part. ánægör is now in Icel. used as an

adj. pleased, content.

AR, n. [Goth. jer; A. S. gear; Engl. year; Germ. jabr; the Scandin. idioms all drop the j, as in ungr, young; cp. also the Gr. wpa; Lat. bora; Ulf. renders not only eros but also sometimes scarpos and xpovos by I. a year, = Lat. annus, divided into twelve lunar months, jêr]. each of 30 days, with four intercalary days, thus making 364 days; as the year was reckoned about the middle of the 10th century (the original calculation probably only reckoned 360 days, and made up the difference by irregular intercalary months). About the year 960 Thorstein Surt introduced the sumarauki (intercalary week), to be inserted every seventh year, thus bringing the year up to 365 days. After the introduction of Christianity (A.D. 1000) the sumarauki was made to harmonize with the Julian calendar; but from A.D. 1700 with the Gregorian calendar; v. the words sumarauki, hlaupár, mánuðr, vika, etc., 1b. ch. 4, Rb. 6, Fms. i. 67; telja árum, to count the time by years, Vsp. 6; í ári, used adverb., at present, as yet, O. H. 41, 42 (in a verse). II. = Lat. annona, plenty, abundance, fruitfulness; the phrase, frior ok ar, Fms. vii. 174, Hkr. Yngl. ch. 8-12; ár ok fésæla, Hkr. l. c.; þá var ár um öll lönd, id.; létu hlaða skip mörg af korni ok annarri gæzku, ok flytja svá ár í Danmörku, Fms. xi. 8, Sks. 323, Fas. i. 526, Hom. 68; gott ar, Eg. 39; blóta til árs, Fms. i. 34. III. the name of the Rune 4 (a), Skálda 176; in the A. S. and Goth. Runes the j has the name jer, ger, according to the Germ. and Engl. pronunciation of this word; vide p. 2, col. I. COMPDS: ára-tal, n. and ára-tala, u, f. number of years; fimtuge at áratali, Stj. 110, Rb. 484, Mar. 656 A. i. 29; hann (Ari Frodi) hafði áratal fyrst til bess er Kristni kom á Ísland, en síðan allt til sinna daga, Hkr. (pref.), seems to mean that Ari in respect of chronology divided his Islendingabók into two periods, that before and that after the introduction of Christianity; Stj. 112 (periode). árs-bót, f. = árbót, Bs. i. 343, q. v.

ÁR, adv. I. Lat. olim [Ulf. air = παλαί; Engl. yore], used nearly as a substantive followed by a gen., but only in poetry; in the phrase, at var alda, in times of yore, in principio, Vsp. 3, Hkv. 2. 1: also, ar var baz (= bat es), the beginning of some of the mythical and heroical poems, Skv. 3. 1, Gkv. 1. 1; cp. árdagar. [A. S. ær; O. H. G. êr; cp. Gr. hpi-, Engl. early, Icel. úrla], rare, (the prolonged form arla is freq.); it, however, still exists in the Icel. common phrase, med morgunsárinu (spelt and proncd, in a single word), primo diluculo; elsewhere poët, or in laws, ar of morgin, early of a morning, Hom. verse I, Grág. ii. 280; rísa ár, to rise early, Hm. 58, 59; ár né um nætr, Hkv. 2. 34, etc.; í ár, adverb. = early, Ísl. ii. (Hænsa Þór. S.) 161; snemma í ár, Ld. 46, MS., where the Ed. um morgininn í ár, Fas. i. 503: it also sometimes means for ever, svá at úr Hýmir ekki mælti, for an age be did not utter a word, remained silent as if stupefied, Hým. 25, Lex. Poët.; ara þúsu á skaltu ár sitja, Skm. 27; cp. the mod. phrase, at ok sio og allan tio, early and late and always. In compds = Lat matutinus.

AB, f. [A.S. ar; Engl. oar; Swed. are], an oar, old form of nom., dat., acc. sing. or; dat. oru or aru, Eb. 60 new Ed., but commonly ar; pl. árar, Eg. 221, 360, Fms. viii. 189, 417: metaph. in the phrases, koma eigi ár sinni fyrir borð, to be under restraint, esp. in a bad sense, of one who cannot run as fast as he likes, Eb. 170; vera á árum e-s = undir ára burði e-s, v. below; draga árar um e-t, to contend about a thing, the metaphor taken from a rowing match, Fær. 159; taka djúpt í árinni, to dip too deep, overdo a thing. COMPDS: ára-buror, m. the movement of the oars, in the phrase, vera undir áraburdi e-s, to be in one's boat, i. e. under one's protection, esp. as regards alimentation or support, Hrafn. 30; ára-gangr, rádast undir áraburd e-s, to become one's client, Ld. 140. m. splasbing of oars, Fas. ii. 114. ara-lag (arar-), n. the time of rowing, e. g. seint, fljótt á., a slow, quick, stroke; kunna á., to be able to bandle an oar, pórð. (Ed. 1860), ch. 4. árar-hlumr, m. the bandle of an oar, Glum. 395, Sturl. iii. 68. árar-hlutr, m. a piece of an oar, Glúm, l.c. árar-stubbi, 2, m. the stump of an oar, Isl. ii. 83. arar-tog, n. a stroke with the oar. arar-tre, n. the wood for making oars, Pm. 138.

anaudar-vist. ar-, v. the compds of a, a river.

ár-angr, rs, m. [ár = annona], gener. a year, season, = árferð; also the produce of the earth brought forth in a year (season), which is at present in the east of Icel. called ársali, v. árferð; skapaðist árangrinn entir spásögu Jóseps, 655 vii. 4; ok at liðnum þeim vetrum tók á. at spillast, Gþl. 77; mun batna á. sem várar, þorf. Karl. (A. A.) 111: the mod. use is only metaph., effect, result; so e. g. arangra-laust, n. adi. soithout effect, to no effect.

á-rás, f. assault, attack, Fms. i. 63, ix. 372.

ár-borinn, v. arfborinn: Egilsson renders ipnyéveta by árborin (in his transl. of the Odyssey).

ar-bot, f. improvement of the season (at = annona), Fms. i. 74. Bs. i. 137. Hkr. ii. 103: fem., surname, Landn.

ár-búinn, part. ready early, Sks. 221 B.

ár-býll, adi, dwelling in abundance, plentiful, Fms. v. 314.

ár-dagar, m. pl. [A. S. geardagas], í árdaga, in days of yore, Ls. 25(poēt.) ar-degis, adv. early in the day, Eg. 2, Grag. i. 143.

á-reið, f. a charge of cavalry, Hkr. iii. 162, Fms. vii. 56: an invasion of borsemen, x. 413: at present a law term, a visitation or inspection by sworn franklins as umpires, esp. in matters about boundaries.

6-reitingr, m. [reita, Germ. reizen], inducement, Finnb. 310.

&-roitinn, adj. grasping after, Ld. 318, v.l.: now in Icel. pettisb; and areitni, f. pettisbness.

&-renniligr, adj., in the phrase, eigi &., bard or unpleasant to face. á-reyor, f. [á acc. of ær, and reyor], salmo laevis femina, Fél. i. 13, Landn. 313.

árétti, n. [and árétta, tt], a thin wedge used to prevent a nail from getting loose, cp. Ivar Aasen.

ár-ferð, f., mod, árferði, n. season, annona, Fms. i. 51, 86, ix. 51; árferð mun af taka um alla Danmörk, i. e. there will be famine, xi. 7: góð á., Stj. 420; engi á., Grett, 137 A.

ar-fljótr, adj. 'oar-fleet,' of a rowing vessel, Fms. viii. 382, Hkr. iii. 04. ar-gali, a, m. 'the early crying,' i. e. perh. chanticleer, used in the proverb eldist árgalinn nú, of king Harold, Fms. vi. 251.

ár-galli, a, m. failure of crop, Sks. 321, 323. árgalla-lauss, adj. free from such failure, fertile, Sks. 322.

ar-gangr, m. a year's course, season, Fms. xi. 441, Thom. 85; margan tima í þessum á., 655 xxxii: in mod. usage, a year's volume, of a periodical.

ar-gjarn, adj. eager for a good barvest (poët.), Yt. 5. ár-goð, m. god of plenty, the god Frey, Edda 55.

ár-gæzka, u, f. a good season, Thom. 83.

ár-hjálmr, m. an belmet of brass, A. S. âr = eir, Hkm. 3.

á-riða, u, f. a smearing, rubbing, [ríða á], medic., Bs. i. 611.

árla, adv. [qs. árliga], early, Lat. mane, Fms. iii. 217, v. 285, Stj. 208, Hom. 86: with gen., arla dags, Fms. x. 218, Pass. 15. 17. of yore, Sks. 498, 518.

ar-langt, n. adj. and ar-lengis, adv. during the whole year, D. N. I. [ár, annus], yearly, Fms. ii. 454, x. 183, Vm. ár-liga, adv. II. = árla, early, Hkv. 1. 16. 2. [ár, annona], in the phrase, sá árliga verðar, to take a bearty meal, Hm. 32; cp. Sighvat, O. H. 216, where it seems to mean briskly.

1. annual, Thom. 24. ár-ligr, adj. 2. in the phrase, árligum hrósar bú verðinum, thou bast enjoyed a hearty meal, Hbl. 33; the word is now used in the sense of well fed, well looking, ár-maor, m. [árr, nuntius, or ár, annona], a steward, esp. of royal estates in Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, also of the earls' estates in the Orkneys. As Icel, had neither earls nor kings, it is very rare, perhaps an απ. λεγ. in Landn. 124 (of the stewards of Geirmund heljarskinn). In Norway the armenn of the king were often persons of low birth, and looked upon with hatred and disrespect by the free noblemen of the country, cp. e.g. O. H. 113, 120 (synonymous with konungs bræll), Eb. ch. 2; the armenn were a sort of royal policemen and tax gatherers, Fms. xi. 261, Orkn. 444, Eg. 79, 466, Gpl. 12 (where it is different from syslumadr); erkibiskups á., N. G. L. i. 175. COMPD: armanns-réttr, m. the right of an a., i.e. the fine to be paid for molesting an armaor, N.G.L. i. 70.

ár-mánaor, m. a year-month, i. c. a month, Stj. 320. ar-menning, f. [armaor], stewardship, the office or the province, Orkn. 444, Fms. iv. 268; sýslur ok á., Hkr. i. 303.

ar-morgin, adv. [A.S. ærmorgen], early to-morrow, Am. 85. árna, 2ð, I. [A.S. yman, pret. arn, proficisci; cp. Icel. art, evrendi, etc.], as a neut. verb, only in poetry and very rare, to go forward; úrgar brautir ú. þú aptr héðan, Fsm. 2, Gg. 7, Fms. iv. 282, vi. 259; hvem bann er hingað árnar, whoever comes bere, Sighvat, O. H. 82. [A.S. earnian, to earn; Germ. erndten], act. verb with acc. and 1. with acc. to earn, get, Lat. impetrare; hvat þú úrnaðir í Jötunheima, Skm. 40; hon ... spurði, hvat hann árnar, ... what be had gained, bow be bad sped (of a wooer), Lv. 33; a. vel, to make a good bargain, Fms. vi. 345: reflex., þykir vel árnast hafa, they bad made a good bargain, Bret. 40. 2. with gen. of the thing, to intercede for, pray; a. e-m gods, to pray for good to one, bless bim; a. e-m ils, to curse one, Fas. iii. 439; lifs, to intercede for one's life, Magn. 532;

Digitized by GOOGLE

griða, id., Sturl. ii. 224; var þat flestra manna tillaga, at á. Gizuri kvánfangsins, ... to favour bim, to give bim the bride, Fms. iv. 33; &. e-s vio God, to intercede for one with God (of Christ and the saints), Bs. i. 352, ii. 32.

árnaðr, m., theol. intercession, Th. 7. compos: árnaðar-maðr, m. an intercessor, esp. of Christ and the saints, Magn. 504. n. intercession, K.b.K. 76, Grág. ii. 166, Bs. i. 181.

árnan and -un, f. intercession, = árnaðr, Fms. vi. 352, Bs. i. 180. Fbr. 126, 655 xii, Ver. 22, 625. 81.

árnandi, part. an intercessor, Fms. x. 318, Hom. 149.

ár-næmi, n. a Norse law term, perh. qs. örnæmi [nema], indemnity; á.

um skuldafar, N. G. L. i. 177, cp. 182.

árofi (arovi), a, m. a Norse law term; of doubtful origin, perh. akin to orof and orzefi, an aged witness, a freeborn man, born and bred in the district, who must have been at least twenty years of age at the death of his father. He was produced as a witness (as an old document in modern times) in lawsuits about local questions as to possession of landed property, (cp. in mod. Icel. usage the witness of 'gamlir menn'); thus defined,—ba skal hann fram færa óðalsvitni sín, arova þrjá, þá er tvítugir vóru þá er faðir þeirra varð dauðr, N. G. L. i. 87, (ok óðalbornir í því fylki, add. Gpl. 298); skal hann setja þar dóm sinn ok kveðja hann jarðar jafnt sem hinn þar væri, ok leiða (produce) arova sína þar ok öll vitni, sem hinn par vzeri, N. G. L. i. 94.

ARB, m. [Ulf. airus; Hel. eru; A.S. ær; cp. Icel. eyrindi, A.S. ærend, Engl. errand], a messenger; old gen. árar (as ásar from áss); dat. æri (Fms. xi. 144); acc. pl. áru, Hkv. 1. 21, Og. 25, Greg. 35, later ára; nom. pl. zrir, Pd. 35 (12th century), later arar, v. Lex. Poët.: very rare and obsolete in prose, except in a bad sense, but freq. in old poetry: also used in the sense of a servant, Lat. minister, famulus; konungs arr, Guos 2. theol., in pl.: árr, Lex. Poët.; Ásu árr, Ýt. 25. a. the angels: Guð görir anda áru sína, Greg. 35; engla sveitir, þat eru ærir ok höfuð-B. evil spirits; now almost exclusively used in this sense; fjandinn ok hans árar, Fms. vii. 37; satan með sínum árum, ii. 137; cp. y. used of the djöfli, víti, ár (dat.) og álf, öldin trúði sú, Snót 140. number eleven, zrir eru ellefu, Edda 108.

árr, adj., Lat. matutinus; at árum degi, Hom. 121. Cp. ár (adv.) II.

ar-risull, adj. one who rises early, Fms. vi. 241.

ár-salr and ársali, a, m. [a foreign word, introduced from Britain], precious bangings of a bed, Eb. 262, Edda 18 (ársali); ársal allan, Gkv. 2. 26; allan ársala, Js. 78; an obsolete word. II. in the east of lcel. ársali [ár, annona, and selja] means annual produce, the stores or crop of a year.

ár-samr, adj. fertile, Ver. 17.

ár-sáinn, part. early sewed, Hm. 87.

ár-sima, n. metal wire, Eg. (in a verse). Cp. A.S. âr. ár-skyld, f. yearly rent, D. N. iii. 195 (Fr.)

ár-sæli (and ársæld), f. a blessing on the year, plenty; svá var mikil á. Hálfdanar, so great was the plenty during his reign, Fagrsk. 2.

ar-sell, adj. bappy or blest in the year, fortunate as to season, an epithet of a king; good or bad seasons were put on the king's account, cp. Fms. i. 51, xi. 294; góðr höfðingi ok á., i. 198; á. ok vinsæll, Fagrsk. 2, Bret. 100; allra konunga ársælst, Fms. x. 175. ár-tal, n. tale or reckoning by years, Vpm. 23, 25. ár-tali, a, m. the year-teller, i. e. the moon (poët.), the heathen year being lunar, Alvm. 15.

ár-tekja, u, f. yearly rent, D. N. iv. 231 (Fr.)

ár-tio, n. the anniversary of a man's death, Bs. i. 139, Fms. v. 121, ix. 534, Bret. 70, Blas. 51. COMPDS: ártíðar-dagr, m. id., Vm. 116. ártíðar-hald, n. an anniversary mass, B. K. 8, 25. ártíðar-skrá, f. on obituary, Vm. 4, Am. 45; some of the Icel. obituaries are published in H.E. at the end of the 1st vol. and in Langeb. Scriptt. Rer. Dan.

ár-vakr, adj. (and árvekni, f. mod.), early awake, early rising, Lv. 43. Sks. 19: the name of one of the horses of the Sun, Edda, Gm. 37. ir-venligr, 2dj. promising a good season, Sks. 335.

ir-venn, adj. id., Fms. i. 92, ii. 76.

4-reoba, dd, to dare, have the courage to do, to attack, cp. raba a., Sturl.

6-redi, n. courage, daring, pluck, Eg. 1, Korm. 242, Al. 9, Nj. 258, Isl. ii. 325: attack, veita e-m ú., to attack, Hom. 113. COMPDS: &redisfullr, adj. daring, Fas. i. 119. ármðis-lítill, adj. of small courage, Hkr. ii. 79. ármőis-maőr, m. a bold man, Grett. 141 A, Fbr. 149. ármöis-mikill, adj. daring, Sturl. iii. 21, Rd. 285. ármőis-raun. áræðis-snarr, adj. of great f. proof of courage, pluck, Fms. vi. 166.

4-reolligr, adj. and -liga, adv. [rada, to guess], likely, probable, Glum. 385, Gisl. 60, Clem. 28. β. daring, dangerous, Fan iii. 165. árzdiligt = ekki árenniligt, not easy to face, Fms. viii. 64.

á-ræðinn, adj. daring, Sks. 299.

isa, 20, 2 mod. sea term, to move the yard of a sail.

a-saka, ad, to accuse, censure; with acc., Fms. ii. 174, Bs. i. 786, Stj. 129, H.E. i. 500.

á-sakan and ásökun, f. a charge, censure, Fms. ii. 225, H.E. i. 404. COMPOS: ásakanar-efni, n. a matter for censure, Th. 77. ásakanarorð, n. a word of reprimand, Stj. 500.

á-sakari, a, m. an accuser, Th. 76.

6-samt, adv. along with: 1. loc., in the phrase, vera a., to be together (now saman), esp. of married people, Sturl. 199, Fms. i. 198, cp. β. koma á., to agree, (in mod. usage, koma vel, illa, saman, to be on good, bad terms); pat kom litt a., they disagreed, Fms. iv. 369; þau kómu vel á., they lived happily together, of married people, Nj. 25, (in mod. usage, þeim kom vel saman); kómu allar ræður á. með beim, Eg. 750; svá sem beim kemr á. (impers.), as is agreed on by them, 1b. 116.

á-sannast, dep. to prove true, (mod. word.)

á-sauor, ar, m. a ewe, Dipl. v. 10, Hrafn. 6, 8, Vm. o.

&-sáld, n. a sprinkling, metaph. of a snow storm, Sturl. iii, 20.

á-sáttr, adj. part. agreed upon, Edda 10, Grág. i. 1. ás-brú, f. the bridge of the Ases, the rainbow, Edda, ás-drengr, m. a pillar (drengr, a sbort pillar), N. G. L. ii. 283.

ás-endi, a, m. the end of a beam, Ld. 280.

á-sota, u, f. a sitting upon, settlement, csp. = ábúð, tenure of a farm, Bs. i. 730. ásetu-garðr, m. (Icel. ábýlisjörð), a tenant's farm, D. N. iv. 581 (Fr.) &-setning, f. a putting on, laying on; & stolunnar, the investment of ..., Fms. iii. 168: in mod. usage, masc. asotningr, purpose, design; and also ásetja, tt, to design.

as-garor, m. the residence of the gods (Ases), Edda; also the name of a farm in the west of Icel.: the mod. Norse 'aasgaardsreid' is a corruption from the Swed. aska, thunder.

ás-grindr, f. pl. the rails surrounding the ásgarðr, Edda 46. á-sigling, f. a sailing upon, Ghl. 518, N.G.L. i. 65, ii. 283.

á-sjá (old form ásjó, Niðrst. 5, Hom. 35), f., gen. ásjá, the mod. gen. ásjár seems only to occur in late or even paper MSS. ing after, belp, protection; ætla til ásjá, to bope for it, Lv. 75, Ld. 42, Fms. i. 289; bioja e-n ásjá, to ask one for belp, protection, Nj. 26 (Ed. ásjár prob. wrongly); sækja e-n til ásjá, to seek one's belp, Bs. i. 82 (ásjár β. superintendence, inspection; med spekiráðum ok the paper MSS.) á., Fms. x. 178; með á. Magnúss konungs, Js. 23, Hom. 35. one's look, appearance, shape, Fms. i. 97; i manns ásjó, in the shape of man, Niðrst. 5 (=ásýnd). compd: ásjá-mál, n. pl. a matter worthy man, Niorst. 5 (= ásýnd). of consideration, Isl. ii. 159, Band. 15.

á-sjáligr, adj. bandsome, pretty, Ísl. ii. 208, Art. 98.

á-sjón, f. superintendence, inspection, Js. 46; gen. ásjónar, used as adv. = eye's view (= sjonhending), in a straight direction, Vm. 135.

6-sjóna (ásjána older form, Ld. 122, Niðrst. 6), u, f. one's look, aspect, countenance; líkami Njáls ok á., Nj. 208; kvenna vænst bæði at ásjánu (appearance) ok vitsmunum, Ld. 122; greppligr i a., ugly looking, Fms. i. 155; yfirbragð ok á., 216, Greg. 45.

β. form, sbape; í þræls ásjónu (in form like a slave) festr á kross, Niðrst. 6; andi Drottins í dúfu á., in form like a dove, 686 B. 13; engill i eldligri a., Hom. 81, Eluc. γ.=Lat. persona; eigi skaltu lita a. i dómi, Hom. 19 (non accipies personam in judicio).

á-skelling, f. [skella á, to chide], chiding, Niorst. 6.

6-skilnaor, m. [skilja á, to disagree], discord, Fas. iii. 335, B. K. 121, B. separation [skilja, to part], Stj. 130. Stj. 13, 8.

á-skoran, f. (áskora, u, f., Fagrsk. 171, bad reading?), an earnest request, challenge, Nj. 258, Fs. 22, Boll. 342. 6-skot (áskaut, Sks. 416; áskeyti, Thom. 83), n. a shot at, only used in pl.; at menn fåi eigi mein af åskotum þeirra, by their beavy fire (of arrows), Fms. viii. 201; svá mikil á., at menn megi eigi í vígskörðum vera, so bard shooting that ..., Sks. l. c.

ás-kunnigr, adj. akin to the gods, Fm. 13.

á-skurðr, ar, m. carving, in wood or stone, Bs. i. 680. of meat, (mod.)

á-skynja, adj. ind., in the phrase, verða e-s á., used in old writers in the sense to learn, of arts or knowledge, a. ibrotta, Fær. 46, Fms. ii. 270, Sks. 25, 53, 573; with dat., Fb. i. 462: now only used of news, to bear, be aware; not of learning, sensil proprio.

á-skynjandi, part. id., Barl. 24.

ás-lákr, m., poët. a cock, Edda (Gl.): a pr. name, Fms., Landn.

6-slattr, m. an attack; a. djöfuls, Hom. 68; mod. a feeler, a vague proposition.

ás-liðar, m. pl. [liði, a champion], the champion of the Ases, Skm. 34. ás-megin (ásmegn, Edda 15, 29), n. gener. the divine strength of the Ases, but esp. used of Thor in the phrases, at færast i á., vaxa á., neyta a., when he displayed his strength as a god by grasping the hammer Mjölnir, by putting on the gloves, or the girdle (megingjarðar, q. v.), Edda 15, 60, 61, Hým. 31.

ás-megir, m. pl. = ásliðar, Vtkv. 7.

ás-móor, m. the divine strength of Thor, shewn in his wrath by thunder and lightning; því næst sá hann eldingar ok þrumur stórar; sá hann þá þór í ásmóði, Edda 58: the proper name pormóðr is equivalent d to ásmóðr, cp. Landn. 307 (the verse).

Will Piller

dotte ass

rup bezar

á-sókn, f. an impetuous unreasonable desire after a thing, (common T13.

á-spyrna, u, f. a pressing against with the feet, Grett. (in a verse). &s-riki, n. the power of the Ases, Kristni S. Bs. 10.

ABB, m. [Ulf. ans = δοκόε; cp. Lat. asser, a pole], gen. ass, dat. asi, 1. a pole, a main rafter, yard; later ás, pl. ásar, acc. ása: of a house; selit var gört um einn ás, ok stóðu út af ásendarnir, Ld. 280, Nj. 115, 202; drengja við ása langa (acc. pl.), Fms. vii. 54, Sks. 425, Pm. 11, Dipl. iii. 8, Hom. 95; sofa undir sotkum asi, Hkr. i. 43; cp. Caes. Bell. Gall. i. ch. 36, Fs. 62: in buildings ass gener. means the main beam, running along the house, opp. to bitar, pvertré, a cross-beam, v. mæniráss, brunáss, etc.: the beams of a bridge, Fms. ix. 512; in a ship, beitiáss, a yard of a sail: also simply called ass, Yt. 23, Fs. 113; vindass, a windlass 2. metaph. a rocky ridge, Lat. jugum, (i.e. windle-ass, winding-pole). Eg. 576, Fms. viii. 176. As and Asar are freq. local names in Iceland and COMPD: ass-stubbi, a, m. the stump of a beam, Sd. 125.

And mit Norway. ASS, m. [that the word existed in Goth. may be inferred from the words of Jornandes-Gothi proceres suos quasi qui fortuna vincebant non pares homines sed semideos, id est Anses, vocavere. The word appears in the Engl. names Osborn, Oswald, etc. In old German pr. names with n, e.g. Ansgår, A.S. Oscar: Grimm suggests a kinship between ass, pole, and ass, deus; but this is uncertain. In Icel. at least no such notion exists, and the inflexions of the two words differ. The old gen. ásar is always used in the poems of the 10th century, Korm. 22 (in 2 verse), etc.; dat. æsi, in the oath of Glum (388), later ás; nom. pl. æsir; acc. pl. ásu (in old poetry), æsi (in prose). The old declension is analogous to arr; perhaps the Goth. form was sounded ansus; it certainly was sounded different from ans, donos :- the Ases, gods, either the old heathen gods in general, or esp. the older branch, opp. to the new one, the di ascripti, the Vanir, q. v., Edda 13 sqq. \beta. \beta the sing. is used B. the sing. is used particularly of the different gods, e.g. of Odin; ölverk Asar, the brewing of the As (viz. Odin), i. e. poetry, Korm. 208 (in a verse); of Loki, Bragi, etc.; but war' efoxiv it is used of Thor, e.g. in the heathen oaths, segi ek þat Æsi (where it does not mean Odin), Glúm. 388; Freyr ok Njörðr ok hinn almátki Áss, Landn. (Hb.) 258: in Swed. aska means lightning, thunder, qs. as-ekja, the driving of the As, viz. Thor: ass as a prefix to pr. names also seems to refer to Thor, not Odin, e.g. Ásbjörn = Þorbjörn, Ásmóðr = Þormóðr (Landn. 307 in a verse). In Scandinavian pr. names ass before the liquid r assumes a t, and becomes ást (Ástríðr, not Ásríðr; Ástráðr = Ásráðr); and sometimes even before an 1, Ástlákr = Áslákr, Fb. i. 190; Ástleifr = Ásleifr, Fms. xi. (Knytl. S.) ása-heiti, COMPDS: &sa-gisling, f. bostage of the Ases, Edda 15. &sa-heiti, n. a name of the Ases, Edda (Gl.) &sa-porr, m. Thor the As par n. a name of the Ases, Edda (Gl.) asa-mtt, f. the race of Ases, Edda 7. excellence,' Edda 14, Hbl. 52. áss, m. [a French word], the ace at dice, in the game kvátra, q. v., Sturl.

ii. 95, Orkn. 200: mod. also the ace in cards. AST, f., old form sist, [Ulf. ansts = χάριε; A.S. est or æst; O.H.G. anst; old Fr. enst; cp. unna (ann), to love]:-love, affection; mikla ast hefir þú sýnt við mik, Eg. 603; fella ást til e-s, to feel love to, Sturl. i. 194, Fms. x. 420; likamleg ast, 656 A. ii. 15, Ver. 47; with the article, ástin, or ástin mín, my dear, darling, pet, love, a term of endearment used by husband to wife or parents to child; her er nú astin mín, Sighvatr bondi, Sturl. ii. 78. B. in pl. love between man and woman, the affection between man and wife; vel er um ástir okkar, sagði hón, Nj. 26; takast bar ástir miklar, Ld. 94 (of a newly-wedded pair), 298: love of a woman, þá mælti Frigg, ok spurði hverr sá væri með Ásum er eignast vildi ástir hennar ok hylli, Edda 37: metaph. the white spots on the nails are called ástir, since one will have as many lovers as there are spots, Isl. þjóðs., Fél. ix; vide elska, which is a more common word. COMPDS: Astafundr, m. = ástarfundr, Lex. Poët. ásta-lauss, adj. loveless, Helr. 5. ástar-andi, a, m. spirit of love, H. E. i. 470. ástar-angr, m. grief from love, Str. 55. ástar-atlot, n. pl. = ástarhót. ástar-augu, n. pl. loving eyes, v. auga; renna, lita ástaraugum til e-s, to look with loving eyes, Fms. xi. 227, Ísl. ii. 199. ástar-ákefő, f. passion, Str. band, n. band of love, 656 C. 37 ástar-brimi, a, m. fervent love. Flov. ástar-bruni, a, m. ardent love, Stj. astar-eldr, m. fire of love, Bs. i. 763, Greg. 19. ástar-fundr, m. affectionate meeting, Fms. xi. ástar-győja, u, f. the goddess of love (Venus), Edda (pref.) 310. 149, Al. 6. astar-harmr, m. grief from love, Stj. 4. hirting, f. chastisement of love, 671 C. ástar-hiti, a, m. passion, astar-hot, n. pl. the shewing kindness and love, Pass. 12. Greg. 19. astar-hugi, a, and -hugr, ar, m. love, affection, Bs. i. 446, 23 (sing.) Fms. i. 34, Stj. 126. ástar-hygli, f. [hugall], devotion, Bs. i. 48. ástar-kveðja, u, f. bearty astar-ilmr, m. sweetness of love, Str. greeting, Sturl. ii. 185. ástar-kveikja, u, f. a kindler of love, Al. ástar-logi, a, m. flame of love, Hom. 67. ástar-mark, n. ástar-orð, n. pl. words of love; mæla ástar token of love, Greg. 46. ordum til e-s, to speak in words breathing love, 655 xxxi. pallr, m. step of love, 656 A. i. 10. ástar-reiði, f. anger from love, astar-samband, n. band of love, Stj. ástar-sigr, m. victory of love, Str. astar-sætleikr, m. sweetness of love, Hom. . a-sýnis, adv. apparently, Sturl. i. 1, Fms. x. 284.

aster-varkunn, f. compassion, sympathy, Greg. 72. vekka, u, f. the dew of love (poet.), Hom. 68. datar-verk, n. charity. Sks. 672, Magn. 468. ástar-vél, f. Ars Amatoria, of Ovid so called, astar-vili, ja, m. desire, passion, Str. 27. ástar-vængr, m. wing of love, Hom. 48. ástar-þjónusta, u, f. service of love, Hom. 2. Fms. ii. 42. astar-bokki, a, m. affection for, inclination, of a loving pair, Fms. ii. 99, Fær. 63. ástar-æði, n. fwry of love, Bær. 7. á-staða, u, f. [standa á], an insisting upon, Ann. 1392, Thom. 37. á-stand, n. state, (mod. word.) ast-blindr, adj. blind from love. Lex. Poët. ást-bundinn, part. in bonds of love, Str. 36, 55. á-stemma (sostemma), u, f. damming a river, D. I. i. 280. ast-folginn, part. beloved, dear to one's beart, warmly beloved; a. e-m, Fms. vi. 45, xi. 3. ást-fóstr, rs, m. love to a foster-child, (also used metaph.) in phrases such as, leggja a. vid e-n, to foster with love, as a pet child, Fms. iii. 90; fæða e-n ástfóstri, to breed one up with fatherly care, x. 218. ást-gjöf, f., theol. grace, gift; á. Heilags Anda, Skálda 210, Skv. 1. 7. Andr. 63; in pl., Magn. 514. &st-gool, a, m. a darling, good genius; hann botti öllum mönnum &., be (viz. bishop Paul) was endeared to all bearts, Bs. i. 137: the old Ed. reads ástgóði, endearment, which seems less correct, v. goði: goði in the sense of good genius is still in use in the ditty to the Icel. game goða-tafl' (heima ræð eg goða minn). ást-hollr, adj. affectionate, Sks. 687 B. ást-hugaðr, adj. part. dearly loving, Njarð. 380. 6-stig, n. a treading upon, Sks. 400, 540: a step, 629. ást-igr, adj., contr. forms ástgir, ástgar, etc., dear, lovely, Vsp. 17. ást-kynni, n. a bearty welcome, Am. 14. ast-keerr, adj. dearly beloved. ást-lauss, adj. loveless, beartless, = ástalauss, Hom. 43. ást-leysi, n. want of love, unkindness, Hrafn. 5. ast-menn, m. pl. dearly beloved friends, Sturl. i. 183, Hkr. iii. 250, Stj. 237, Blas. 44. ast-meer, f. a darling girl, sweetbeart, Flov. 28. ást-ráð, n. kind (wise) advice, Fms. ii. 12 (ironically), Skálda 164, Hom. 108, Hým. 30. á-stríða, u, f. passion, (mod. word.) ást-ríki, n. paternal love; in the phrase, ekki hafði hann á. mikit af föður sínum, i.e. be was no pet child, Fms. iii. 205, Ld. 132; á. Drottins, 655 v. 2. ast-riker, adj. full of love; a. Fadir, of God, Mar. 3, 24. ást-samliga, adv. (and -ligr, adj.), affectionately, Hkr. iii. 250, Fms. ix. 434, Fas. i. 91, 655 xxvii. 25, Sks. 12, Sturl. i. 183, Hom. 1, Stj. ást-samr, adj. id., Hom. 58, Sks. 12. ást-semő, f. love, affection, Hkr. iii. 261, Fms. x. 409: ástsemőarráð, n. = ástráð, Sks. 16, Anecd. 30: ástsemðar-verk, n. a work of love, Sks. 673: ástsemőar-vinátta, u, f. loving friendsbip, Sks. 741. ást-snauðr, adj. without love, Lex. Poët. ást-sæld, f. the being loved by all, popularity, 1b. 16. ast-seell, adj. beloved by all, popular, 1b. 16, Fms. xi. 317. á-stunda, að, to study, take pains with, H.E. i. 504, 514. á-stundan, f. pains, care, devotion, Fms. i. 219; hafa &. (inclination) til Guds, Bær. 12; til illra hluta, Stj. 55, Sks. 349, 655 xxxii, Thom. 335. ást-úð, f. [properly ásthúð, Clem. 40, contr. from ást-hugð, from hugr or hygð, cp. öluð, þveruð, harðuð, kind, stubborn, bard disposition; v. A.S. bydig], love, affection, Rb. 390. compos: ástúðar-frændsemi, f. affectionate kinsbip, Sturl. ii. 81. ástúðar-vinr. m. a dear riend, Fms. vi. 198, v.l. aldavint, a dear old friend. ást-úðigr, adj. loving, Eg. 702, Fms. i. 55: as neut., ástúðigt er með e-m, they are on friendly terms, Ld. 236. ást-úðligr, adj. lovely, Fms. vi. 19, Bs. i. 74, Sturl. i. 2: as neut., á. er med e-m, to be on terms of love, Lax. 162. ást-vina, u, f. a dear (female) friend, Thom. 14. ást-vinátta, u, f. intimate friendsbip, Eg. 728. ást-vinr, ar, m. a dear friend; þórólfr gekk til fréttar við þór ástvin sinn, Eb. 8, Fms. i. 58, Thom. 10. ást-bokki, a, m. = ástarbokki, Fms. vi. 341. á-stæði, n. [standa á], no doubt a bad reading, Eg. 304: cp. ástæða, u, f. (a mod. word), argument, reason. As-ynja, u, f. a goddess, the fem. of Ass; Æsir ok Asynjur, Vtkv. I. á-sýn, f. countenance, presence; kasta e-m burt frá sinni á., Stj. 651: appearance, sbape, Hom. 155; dat. pl. used as adv., hversu var hann asynum, bow did be look? Hom. 91; agætr at ætt ok a., fair of race and noble, Hkr. i. 214: gen. sing. used as adv., minna ásýnar, apparently less, Grág. ii. 29. 2. metaph. a view, opinion; með rangri á., Sks. 344.

6-sýnd, f. = ásýn, and dat. pl. and gen. sing. used in the same way, v.

above, Fms. i. 101, v. 345, x. 228, Fs. 4, Ld. 82: metaph. the face, of á-sýna, ð, to sbew, Fms. v. 345.

the earth, Stj. 29, 276.

a-synt, n. adj. [sjá á], to be seen, visible; ef eigi verðr á., if no marks ? (of the blow) can be seen, Grag. ii. 15; bat er a., evident, Sks. 185. á-sækni, n. (ásækinn, adj. vexatious), vexation, Finnb. 240.

á-sælast, d, dep. (ásælni, f.), á. e-n, to covet another man.

á-ssotni, f. [sitja], tarrying long, Isl. ii. 440 (of a tiresome guest). AT, n. [éta, át, edere, A.S. et], the act of eating, in the phrase, at öldri ok at áti, inter bibendum et edendum, Grág. ii. 170, N. G. L. i. 29; át ok drykkja, Fas. ii. 552, Orkn. 200; át ok atvinna, Stj. 143: of beasts, kýr hafnaði átinu, the cow (being sick) would not eat, Bs. i. 194.

1. food to eat, but only of beasts, a prey, carcase; hud ok áta, of a slaughtered beast, N. G. L. i. 246; svá er þar ekki brot zrinnar átu (for seals), Sks. 176; þar stóð úlfr í átu, Jd. 31.
eating; góðr átu, 'good eating,' Sks. 136, 137.
3. medic. and átu-mein, n. id., Fél. ix. 190; the old word is eta, q. v. 3. medic. a cancer, COMPD: átu-býfi, n. a law term, eatable things stolen, Grag. ii. 192.

á-tak, n. (átaka, u, f., Hom. 17), [taka á], touching: gen. átaks, soft, hard, etc. to the feeling; svá á. sem skinn, Flov. 31, Magn. 522: medic. touching, v. læknishendr, Stj. 248: pl. grips, átök ok sviptingar, in wrestling, Fas. iii. 503, Fms. xi. 442.

á-tala, u, f. [telja á, incusare,], a rebuke, reprimand, N. G. L. i. 309; esp. in pl., Fms. v. 103, ix. 384, Hkr. ii. 6, Fær. 218: átölu-laust, n. adj. undisputed, Jb. 251.

átan, n. [cp. úátan], an eatable, N. G. L. i. 19.

á-tekja, u, f. (átekt, f., Fbr. 151, Thom. 273), prop. touching; in pl. metaph. disposition for or against a thing, liking or disliking, Bjarn. 54 (cp. taka vel, illa á e-u).

á-tekning, f. touching, Stj. 35.

át-frekr, adj. greedy, voracious, Hkv. 2. 41.

at-girni, f. greediness of food, Hom. 72, and atgjarn, adj. greedy. átján, older form áttján, as shewn by assonances such as, áttján Haraldr sáttir, Fms. vi. 159, in a verse of the middle of the 11th century [Swed. adertan; Dan. atten; Engl. eighteen; Germ. achtzehn]:eighteen, Edda 108, Hkr. ii. 289, N. G. L. i. 114.

atjandi, older form attjandi, eighteenth, Hom. 164, N.G.L. i. 348. átján-sossa, u, f. [cp. tvítug-, þrítugsessa], a sbip baving eighteen rowing benches, Fms. ix. 257, xi. 56.

á-troð, n. (átroði, a, m., Hom. 95), a treading upon, Magn. 468:

metaph. intrusion, Hom. 95.

á-trúnaor, ar, m. [trúa á], belief, creed, religion; forn á., the old (beathen) faith, Nj. 156, Fms. v. 69, K. A. 62, Joh. 623. 18, Eb. 12: átrúnaðar-maðr, m. a believer, [trúmaðr], Andr. 66.

ATT, f. a family, race, v. zett and compds.

ATT and sett, f., pl. attir and ættir [Germ. acht = Lat. ager, praedium, a rare and obsolete word in Germ.], plaga caeli, quarter; just as quarter refers to the number four, so att seems to refer to eight: att properly means that part of the horizon which subtends an arc traversed by the sun in the course of three hours; thus defined,—meðan sól veltist um átta ættir, Sks. 54; ok þat eru þá þrjár stundir dags er sól veltist um eina ætt, id.; the names of the eight attir are, útnorðr a., north-west; norðr a., north; landnorðr á., north-east; austr á., east; landsuðr á., south-east; suðr á., south; útsuðr á., south-west; vestr á., west; four of which (the compounds) are subdivisions; átt is therefore freq. used of the four only, Loki görði bar hús ok fjórar dyrr, at hann mátti sjá ór húsinu í allar áttir, ... to all (i. e. four) sides, Edda 39: or it is used generally, from all sides, ba drift snær or öllum áttum, Edda 40; drífa þeir til or öllum áttum (= hvaðanæva), Hkr. i. 33; norðrætt, Edda 4, 23; hence a mod. verb átta, að; a. sik, to find the true quarter, to set oneself right, cp. Fr. s'orienter. compps: atta-skipan, f. a division of the att, Sks. 37. atta-skipti, átta-viltr, adj. bewildered.

ATTA, card. number [Sansk. asbţan; Goth. abtau; Gr. δκτώ; Lat. octo; A. S. eabta; Germ. acbt], eight, Landn. 73, Edda 108.

áttandi and áttundi, old form átti, ord. number eighth, Lat. octavus; við (hinn) átta mann, Landn. 304; hálfr átti tögr, Clem. 47; átti dagr Jóla, Fms. iii. 137, Rb. 8, K. A. 152, 218. The form áttandi occurs early, esp. in Norse writers, N.G.L. i. 10, 348, 350, Sks. 692 B: in Icel. writers with changed vowel áttundi, which is now the current form, Mar. 656 A. i, Hkr. ii. 286, where the old vellum MS. O. H. 173 has átta.

áttar- (the compd form of ætt, a family), v. ætt.

átta-tigir (mod. áttatíu as an indecl. single word), eighty, Landn. 123, Edda 108; vide tigr.

átta-tugasti, the eightieth, Sturl. ii. 156 C, = áttugandi, q. v.

átt-bogi and ættbogi, a, m. lineage, Landn. 357, Eluc. 26, Stj. 425, Fms. i. 287, Post. 686 B. 14.

átt-feomingr, m. measuring eight fathoms, Vm. 80, Am. 60.

átt-hagi, a, m. one's native place, bome, country, where one is bred and born; í átthaga sínum, Ld. 40, Fs. 61: freq. in pl.

átt-hyrndr, adj. octagonal, Alg. 368 átt-jörð and ættjörð, f. = átthagi, Ísl. ii. 186, A. A. 252: in mod. usage = Lat. patria, and always in the form ætt-.

átt-konr, m., poët. kindred, Yt. 21.

átt-leggr and ættleggr, m. lineage, Stj. 44.

átt-lera, adj. degenerate, v. ættlera.

att-meelt, n. adj. name of a metre, a verse containing eight lines, each being a separate sentence, Edda (Ht.) 125.

átt-niðr, m. kindred, Hým. 9.

átt-runnr, m., poët. kindred, Hým. 20.

átt-ræðr, adj. [for the numbers twenty to seventy the Icel. say tvítugr, ... sjautugr; but for eighty to one bundred and twenty, attrædr, nirædr, tirædr, tolfrædr]. 1. temp. numbering eighty years of age, (halfáttræðr, that of seventy-six to eighty); a. karl, an octogenarian, Ld. 150. Eighty years of age is the terminus ultimus in the eyes of the law; an octogenarian is no lawful witness; he cannot dispose of land or priesthood (godord) without the consent of his heir; if he marries without the consent of his lawful heir, children begotten of that marriage are not to inherit his property, etc.; ef maor kvangast er a. er eor ellri, etc., Grag. i. 178; á.maðr né ellri skal hvárki selja land né gorðorð undan erfingja sínum, nema hann megi eigi eiga fyrir skuld, 224; ef maðr nefnir vátta...mann tólf vetra gamlan eðr ellra...áttröðan eðr yngra, ii. 20. measuring eighty fathoms (ells ...) in height, breadth, depth . . .: also of a ship with eighty oars [cp. Germ. ruder], Eg. 599, Vm. 108; vide attærr.

átt-stafr, m., poët. kindred, Hkv. 1. 54.

áttugandi = áttatugasti, Stj. (MS. 227), col. 510.

áttungr. m. I. [atta], the eighth part of a whole, either as to measure or number; cp. fjórðungr, þriðjungr, etc., Rb. 488; á. manna, N. G. L. i. 5: as a Norse law term, a division of the country with regard to the levy in ships, Ghl. 91, N.G.L. i. 135. II. [att or ætt, familia], poët. kindred, kinsman; Freys a., the poem Hlt., Edda 13, Yt. 13, 14, Al. 98 (esp. in pl.), v. Lex. Poët.: áttungs-kirkja, u, f. a church belonging to an áttungr (in Norway), N. G. L. i. 8.

ått-vísi and ættvísi, f. genealogical knowledge or science, Skálda 161, 169, Bárð. 164, Bs. i. 91, Fms. vii. 102; the áttvísi formed a part of the old education, and is the groundwork of the old Icel. historiography, esp. of the Landnama.

ått-æringr, m. an eight-oared boat (now proncd. åttahringr), Vm. 109. átt-ærr, adj. [ár, remus], baving eight oars, Eg. 142, 600 A.

át-vagl, m. a glutton, Germ. freszbauch.

&-valr, adj. round, sloping, semi-rotundus; cp. sívalr, rotundus [from volr or from oval (?)]; it seems not to occur in old writers.

av-alt and availt, adv. always, Lat. semper, originally of-allt (from allr) = in all; but as early as the 12th century it was sounded as ofvalt or avalt, which may be seen from this word being used in alliteration to v in poems of that time, pars á valt er vísir bjó, Kt. 16; vestu á valt at trausti, Harmsól verse 59; styrktu of valt til verka, Leidarv. 34 (the MS. reads ávalt): even Hallgrim in the 17th century says, vist á valt beim vana halt | vinna, lesa ok iðja. In MSS. it is not unfreq. spelt ofvalt, as a single word, e. g. Bs. i. 150-200; yet in very early times the word seems to have assumed the present form ávalt, proned, á-valt, as if from \acute{a} and valr: ofalt, of allt, Orkn. 90, Fms. v. 205, Fbr. 77, 87, Fær. 22: of valt, Eluc. 3, Bs. i. 349, Fms. v. 160: ávalt or ávallt, freq. in the old miracle book,-Bs. i. 335, 343, 344, 345, 351, Hom. MS. Holm. p. 3, Hom. (MS. 619), 129, Grag. (Kb.) 116, Landn. 86, Fms. xi. 112, etc. etc.,—through all the Sagas and down to the present day: cp. the mod. alltaf (per metath.), adv. always. á-vani, a, m. babits, (mod. word.)

á-vant, n. adj. in the phrase, e-s er á., wanted, needed, missed, Ld. 26, Hkr. ii. 34, Korm. 92.

á-varðr, adj. [from á- intens. and verja, part. variðr, contr. varðr, protectus], an interesting old word; with dat., a. e-m, protected by one, but only used of a man in relation to the gods, in the phrase, godum ávarðr, a client or darling of the gods, used as early as by Egil, Ad. 20, and also three or four times in prose; at hann mundi Frey (dat.) svá á. fyrir blotin, at hann mundi eigi vilja at freri a milli peirra, Gisl. 32; skilja beir at beir eru mjök ávarðir goðunum, Róm. 202; so also of God, ef hann væri svá á. Guði, sem hann ætlaði, Bs. i. 464.

á-varp, n. (cp. verpa tölu á, to count): 1. a computation, calculation, in round numbers; bat var á. manna, at fyrir Noronesi mundi eigi færa falla en þrjú hundruð manna, Fms. viii. 143, x. 64, 139; kallaðr ekki vænn maðr at avarpi flestra manna, in the suggestion, account of most people, Bs. i. 2. in mod. usage, an address, accosting, Lat. allocutio; and avarpa, ao, to address, Lat. alloqui; cp. the old phrase, verpa oroi a e-n, alloqui.

á-vaxta, 20, to make to wax greater, make productive : of money, á. fé, to put out to interest, Nj. 111: pass. -ask, to increase, Fms. i. 137, Stj. 12.

6-vaxtan, f. a making productive, Stj. 212.

ávaxt-lauss, adj. unproductive, barren, Al. 50.

&-vaxtsamligr, adj. (and -liga, adv.), productive, Hom. 10.

avaxt-samr, adj. productive, Stj. 77, 94: metaph., H. F. i. 513.

á-ván, f. (now ávæningr, m.), a faint expectation or bint; segja e-m á. e-s, to give some bint about it, Grág. ii. 244.

á-veiðr, f. river fishery, D. I. i. 280.

I. as a law term, a blow (drep); thus defined,—bat er drep annat er á, heitir ef maðr lýstr mann svá at blátt eðr rautt verðr eptir, eðr þrútnar hörund eðr stökkr undan hold, eðr hrýtr ór munni eðr or nosum eðr undan nöglum, Grág, ii. 15; the lesser sort of drep (blow), 14; but in general use averk includes every bodily lesion, a collective expression for wounds and blows (sar and drep); lysa sor eor drep ok kveða á hver á. eru, i. 35; bauð húskarlinn honum í móti öxi ok á., Bs. i. 341, vide áverki below. II. in pl. work in a bousebold; göra brúar ok vinna þau á., Grág. ii. 277: of unlawful work, e.g. cutting trees in another man's forest; veror hann þá útlagr þrem mörkum ok sex aura á., ef hann veit eigi, at þeir eigu báðir, 292.

6-verki, a, m.

I. a law term, lesion in general, produced by a weapon or any deadly instrument, more general than the neut.; lysi ek mér á hönd allan þann áverka; ... sár, ef at sárum görist; víg, ef at vígi görist, Grág. ii. 32, Nj. 86, Fær. 223, Sturl. i. 148. II. (Norse) the plant of a bousebold, produce of a farm; landskyld heimilar lóð (Lat. fundus) ok allan áverka þann er í kaup þeirra kom, ... as agreed upon between landlord and tenant, Gpl. 329; skipta görðum eptir jarðarhöfn (Lat. fundus) ok öllum áverka (including buildings, fences, crop, etc.), 380; skal hann löggarð göra...ok vinna þann áverka á landi hins þar er hvárki sé akr né cng, 277. β. unlawful; útlegð ok sex aura áverki, Grág. ii. 296; hvervetna þar sem maðr hittir á. í mörk sinni, þá skal COMPDS: áverka-bót, f. comhann burt taka at ósekju, Ghl. 368. pensation for an áverki (II. B.), Gpl. 363. áverka-drep, n. a stroke, áverka-maör, m. a perblow producing áverki (I.), Grág. ii. 16. petrator of an áverki (l.), Grág. ii. 13. áverka-mál, n. an action concerning áverki (I.), Grág. ii. 96, Nj. 100.

á-viðris, mod. áveðra (áveðrasamr, adj.), adv. on the weather side, á-vinna, vann, to win, make profit, v. vinna á.

Fms. viii. 340, 346, 378.

á-vinningr, m. profit, gain, Fms. xi. 437, Ghl. 212. á-vinnt, n. adj. 2 naval term, prob. from the phrase, vinda á e-n, to turn upon one in a rowing race, or of giving way in a sea-fight; ef Orminum skal því lengra fram leggja sem hann er lengri en önnur skip, bá mun á. um soxin, . . . then they in the bow will have a hard pull, will be bard put to it, Fms. ii. 308, Thom. 17, 58; pá görðist þeim á. er næstir lágu, tbeir ranks begun to give way, Sturl. iii. 66 (of a sea-fight); ætla ek þat mund er ek renn frá Haraldi unga, at yðr afburðarmönnum mun á. þykkja eptir at standa, Orkn. 474.

á-virðing, f. blame, fault.

á-vist, f. abode, = ábúð, Bs. i. 725.

á-vita, adj. ind. in the phrase, verða e-s á., to become aware of, learn, Andr. 625. 80, Fms. x. 171; á. mannvits eðr íþrótta, Sks. 26.

á-vitull, m. a law term, the indicia of a thing; skuli beir rannsaka allt; ok svá göra þeir, ok finna þar öngan ávitöl (acc.), Fær. 186; grunar hann nú, at kerling muni hafa fengit nokkurn (MS. wrongly nokkura, acc. fem.) ávital, hverr maðr hann er, Thom. 158.

á-víga, adj. ind. in the phrase, verða á., of a chief on whose side most people are killed in a battle, in respect to the pairing off of the slain in the lawsuit that followed; pat voru log pa, par at (in the case that) menn féllu jafnmargir, at þat skyldi kalla jamvegit (they should be paired off, no compensation, or 'wergeld,' should be paid, and no suit begun), bott manna munr þætti vera; en þeir er á. urðu skyldi kjósa mann til eptir hvern mæli skyldi, Glum. 383; vide Sir Edm. Head, p. 93.

á-vísa, 20, to point at, indicate, Lex. Poët.

6-visan, f. an intimation, indication, Stj. 78 (of instinct), Fas. iii. 541; epitaphium þat er á., 732. 15.

á-vít, [víti], n. pl., ávítan, f., Thom. 246, Th. 19 (mod. ávítur, f. pl.), a reprimand, rebuke, castigation; ávita, gen.pl., Fær. 23; bera ávit (acc.pl.), Sks. 541, Hkr. ii. 200, Hom. 43. compos: ávita-laust, n. adj. blameless, Sks. 802, Hom. 160. ávíta-samligr and ávít-samligr, adj. blamable, ávít-samr, adj. chiding, severe, zealous, Bs. i. 392, Greg. 64. á-víta, að, to chide, rebuke; á. e-n, Fs. 58; á. e-n um e-t, Fms. x. 372, Landn. 51; á. e-t (acc. of the thing), Bs. i. 766: pass., Hom. 84.

á-væni, n. (ávæningr, m.) = áván, Gbl. 51.

6-vöxtr, ar, m., dat. ávexti, acc. pl. ávöxtu (mod. ávexti), prop. 'on-wax,' 'on-growth,' i. e. fruit, produce, growth, Stj. 35, Fms. ix. 265: metaph., á. kviðar þíns, 655 xiii.

β. metaph. interest, rent [cp. Gr. τόκοι], Grág. i. 195; verja fé til ávaxtar, Fms. v. 194, 159, iii. 18: gain, COMPDS: ávaxtar-lauss, adj. unproductive, Grág. i. 173, avaxtar-tiund, f. a Norse law term, a sort of income Fms. x. 221. tax, opp. to höfuðtíund; nú er hverr maðr skyldr at göra tíund sá er fjár má afla, bæði h. (tithe on capital) ok á. (tithe on interest), N. G. L. i. 346.

á-þekkr, adj. similar, Fms. ii. 264, xi. 6, Vsp. 39.

á-þétti, n. or áþéttr, ar, m. a law term in the compo áþéttis-orð or abéttar-ord, n. defamatory language, invective, liable to the lesser outlawry, Grág. (Sb.) ii. 143, Valla L. 204.

á-bjá, ð, to oppress, Eg. 8, Fms. i. 21.

á-bján, f. oppression, tyranny, oppressive rule, Eg. 14, 47, Fms. v. 26: servitude, beavy burdens (= álögur), vii. 75, x.416 (where ápjánar, pl.), Sks. COMPD: ábjánar-ok, n. the yoke of tyranny, Al. 7. 79, v.l. (coercion).

á-brætni, f. mutual strife, Stj. MS. 227, col. 491.

á-byngd, f. exaction, oppression, Js. 13. á-byngja, d, á. e-m, to oppress one.

á-þyngsli, n. a burden, (mod. word.)

B

B (bé) is the second letter. In the Phenician (Hebrew) alphabet the three middle mutes, b, g, d, etc., follow in unbroken order after a. In the Greek the same order is kept; in Latin, and hence in all European alphabets, a confusion arose, first, by giving to the (the old Greek gamma) the value of k (c), and thereby throwing g out of its original place: secondly, by placing e and F (identical in form with F, the old Greek digamma) immediately after the d; thus, instead of the old Greek (and Hebrew) a, b, g, d, e, f, we got a, b, c, d, e, f, g, etc. In the old Slavonian alphabet v (vidil) was inserted between the b and g (Grimm Introd. to lit. B). In the old Runic alphabet the order became still more disjointed; the common rude Scandinavian Runes have no special g or d, and their b is put between t and l, nearly at the end of the alphabet (... t, b, l, m, y). In all the others b kept its place at the head of the consonants, immediately after a, which stands first in almost all alphabets.

A. Among the vowels a begins more words than any other vowel: it contains the three great prepositions, af, at, and a, which, with their compounds, along with those of al- and all-, make up more than half the extent of the letter; it abounds in compound words, but is comparatively poor in primitive root words. Again, b is in extent only surpassed by the consonants b and s; in regard to the number of root words it is equal to them all, if not the foremost. It is scanty in compounds, has no prepositions, but contains the roots of several large families of words, as, for instance, the three great verbs, bera, bregoa, and búa; besides many of secondary extent, as binda, bíða, biðja, etc.; and a great number of nouns. The extent of b is greatly reduced by the fact, that the Scandinavian idioms have no prefix be-, which in the German swells the vocabulary by thousands (in Grimm it takes up about 300 pages); the modern Swedes and Danes have during the last few centuries introduced a great many of these from modern German; the Icel. have up to the present time kept their tongue puze from this innovation, except in two or three words, such as betala or bitala (to pay), befala or bifala (to commend), behalda or bihalda (to keep), which may, since the Reformation, be found in theol. writers; the absence of the prefix be- is indeed one of the chief characteristics of the Icel. as opposed to the German; the English, influenced by the northern idiom, has to a great extent cut off this be-, which abounds in A.S. (v. Bosworth, A.S. Dictionary, where about 600 such words are recorded); even in the Ormulum only about thirty such words are found; in South-English they are more frequent, but are gradually disappearing. Again, b represents p in Scandinavian roots; for probably all words and syllables beginning with p are of foreign extraction; and the same is probably the case in German and English, and all the branches of the Teutonic (vide Grimm D. G. iii. 414); whereas, in Greek and Latin, p is the chief letter, containing about a seventh of the vocabulary, while b contains from one seventieth to one ninetieth only. It might even be suggested that the words beginning with b in Greek and Latin are (as those with p in the Teutonic) either aliens, onomatopoëtics, provincialisms, or even cant words.

B. Pronunciation.—The b is in Icel. sounded exactly as in English: I. as initial it is an agreeable sound in all the branches of the Teutonic, especially in the combinations br and bl, as in 'bread, brother, bride, bloom, blithe, blood, bless, etc. etc. The Greek and Roman, on the other hand, disliked the initial b sound; but the difference seems to be addressed to the eye rather than the ear, as the win modern Greek is sounded exactly as Icel. b, whilst β is sounded as Icel. v; thus the Greek Bioon in Icel. rendered phonetically by visundr, but ἐπίσκοποs (biskup, bisbop) is in all Teutonic dialects rendered by b, not p, probably because the Greek w had exactly this sound. although agreeable as the initial to a syllable, yet as a middle or final letter b in Icel. sounds uncouth and common, and is sparingly used: after a vowel, or between two vowels, b is never sounded in Icel, as in modern German geben, baben, laub, leben, leib, lieb; in all those cases the Icel. spells with an f, sounded as a v. Ulfilas frequently uses b, e.g. graban, haban, saban, iba, gabei, etc.; yet in many cases he vacillates, e. g. giban, graban, gêban, grôbun, tvalib, but gaf and grôf, etc. So gahalaiban on the Gothic-Runic stone in Tune, but hlaifs, Ulf., Luke vi. 48. The Greek and Latin abound in the use of the b (bb) in the middle of syllables and inflexions (-bus, -bilis, -bo): in Icel. only a double b may be tolerated, but only in onomatopoëtic or uncouth words, as babbi (pa of a baby), bobbi (a scrape), stubbi (Germ. stumpf), lubbi (Germ. lump), nabbi (a knob), krabbi (a crab), gabb, babbl, babbla, etc.; cp. similar words in English.

2. joined to a consonant;

a. in old Swedish b a. in old Swedish b is inserted between m and r or m and l (as in mod. Greek $\mu\rho$ and $\mu\lambda$ are sounded μβρ and μβλ), e.g. Swed. domber, komber, warmber, bambri, gamblar = Icel. dómr, kömr (venit), varmr, hamri, gamlar: Swed. kumbl and kubl (Icel. kuml, monumentum) are used indifferently. Even in dold Icel. poems we find sumbl = suml, symposium, simbli = simli, Edda i.

256 (Ed. Havn.): mp is only found in adopted words, as in kempa (cp. Germ. kampf), lampi (Lat. lampas), and is almost assimilated into pp (kappi): mb is tolerated in a few words, such as umb, lamb, dramb, dumbr, kambr, vömb, timbr, gymbr, strambr, klömbr; cp. the Engl. lamb, comb, timber, womb, where the b is not pronounced (except in the word timber); in limb, numb the b is not organic (cp. Icel. limr, numinn); it occurs also in a few diminutive pet names of children, Simbi = Sigmundr, Imba = Ingibjörg. In the 16th and 17th centuries the Germans used much to write mb or mp before d or t, as sambt or sampt (una cum), kombt or kompt (venit); but this spelling again became β. the modern High German spells and pronounces rb and lb, werben, korb, kalb, balb, etc., where the middle High German has rw and lw, korw, kalw; the modern Scandinavian idioms here spell and pronounce rf, lf, or rv, lv, e.g. Dan. kalv, Swed. kalf, vitulus; the Icel. spells with f, arfi, kalfr, but pronounces f like v. Yet in Icel. rb, lb are found in a few old MSS., especially the chief MS. (A. M. folio 107) of the Landnáma, and now and then in the Sturlunga and Edda: nay, even to our own time a few people from western Icel. speak so, and some authors of mark use it in their writings, such as the lexicographer Björn Halldórsson, e. g. álbr, kálbr, hálbr, sjálbr, silbr, úlbr, kólbr, orb, arbi, karbi, borb, = álfr, etc.; only the word úlbúð, qs. úlfúð, is used all over y. fl and fn are in mod. Icel. usage pronounced bl and bn, skafl, tafl. nafli, = skabl, tabl, nabli; nafn, höfn, safn, nefna, = nabn, höbn, sabn, nebna; without regard whether the radical consonant be f or m, as in nafn and safn, qs. namn and samn. This pronunciation is in Icel. purely modern, no traces thereof are found in old vellum MSS.; the modern Swedes, Danes, and Norse pronounce either mn (the Swedes spell mn where Icel. use fn or bn) or vl (Dan.), ffl (Swed.) 8. 10 is in Icel, commonly pronounced as bo, e. g. hafði, hefð, sofðu = habði, hebð, sobðu; yet a few people in the west still preserve the old and genuine pronunciation vd (havdu, sovdu, not habdu, sobdu), even in the phrase, ef pu (si tu), proned. ebou. The prefixed particles of- and of- are often in common speech sounded as ob-, ab-, if prefixed to a word beginning with b or even m, l, e. g. ofbod, afburdr, afbindi, aflagi, afmán, as obbod, abbindi, Hm. 138; abbúð, Korm. 116; abburðr, Fms. x. 321; ablag, abmán: gef mér, lofa mér, proncd. gébmér or gémmér, lobmér or lommér (da mibi, permitte mibi); af mér (a me), proncd. abmér or ammér; but only in common language, and never spelt so; cp. Sunnan Póstur, A.D. 1836, p. 180, note . ϵ . b = m in marbendill = marmennill.

C. According to Grimm's Law of Interchange ('Lautverschiebung'), if we place the mute consonants in a triangle thus:

the Scandinavian and Saxon-Teutonic form of a Greek-Latin root word is to be sought for under the next letter following the course of the sun; thus the Greek-Latin $f(\phi)$ answers to Icel. and Teutonic b: the Greek-Latin b (B), on the other hand, to Teutonic p. Few letters present so many connections, as our b (initial) does to the Greek-Latin f, either in whole families or single words; some of the instances are dubious, many clear: φάλαγε, cp. Icel. balkr; φάρ, Lat. far, cp. barr; φαρόω, φάροε, Lat. főrare, cp. bora; φάρυγξ, cp. barki; φόβοε, φοβέω, cp. bifa: φέρω, φορίω, Lat. fero, cp. bera, borinn; φόρτοι, cp. byrdr; φείγω, έφυγον, Lat. fugio, cp. beygja, boginn, bugr; φηγόε, Lat. fagus, cp. bók, beyki; φλέγω, φλόξ, Lat. fulgere, fulgur, cp. blik, blika; φλίω, Lat. flare, cp. blása, bólginn, Lat. follis, cp. belgr; φλογμόε, Lat. flūs, cp. blóm; φονή, φόνοε, φεν-, cp. bani, ben; φορμόs, cp. barmr; φράγμα, φράσσω, cp. borg, byrgja; φράζω, φραδή, cp. birta; φρατήρ, Lat. frater, cp. brodir; φρίαρ, cp. brunnr; φρίσσω, cp. brattr (brant), brandr; όφρυς, cp. brá; φρύγανον, φρύγω, cp. brúk; φύω, Lat. fio, fũi, cp. búa, bjó, Engl. to be, and the particle be- (v. Grimm s. v. be- and bauen); φύλλον, Lat. fölium, cp. blad; φώγω, Lat. focus, cp. baka: moreover the Lat. facio, -ficio, cp. byggja; fastigium, cp. bust; favilla, cp. bál; fērio, cp. berja; fērox, fērus, cp. ber-, björn; fervere, cp. brenna; fidus, foedus, cp. binda; findo, fidi, cp. bita, beit; flăgellum, cp. blaka; flectere, cp. bregða; fluctus, cp. bylgja; födio, cp. bauta, Engl. to beat; fundus, cp. botn; fors, forte, cp. 'burðr' in 'at burðr;' frango, frēgi, fragor, cp. breki, brak, brjóta; fraus (fraudis), cp. brjóta, braut; frages, fructus, cp. björk; fulcio, cp. búlki; fremo, cp. brim; frenum, cp. beisl, Engl. bridle; frons (frondis), cp. brum; -even frons (frontis) might be compared to Icel. brandr and brattr, cp. such phrases as frontati lapides; —fātum, fāma, cp. boð, boða, etc. The Greek φίλου, φιλεῦν might -fātum, fāma, cp. boð, boða, etc. The Greek φίλοι, φιλεῖν might also be identical to our bl- in blíðr. The change is irregular in words such as Lat. pangere, Icel. banga; petere = bidja; parcere = bjarga; porcus = borgr; πηγή, cp. bekkr; probably owing to some link being B. in words imported either from Greek or Roman idioms the f sometimes remains unchanged; as the Byz. Greek φεγγάριον is fengari, Edda (Gl.); sometimes the common rule is reversed, and the Latin or Greek p becomes b, as episcopus = biskup; leopardus = hlébardr, Old Engl. libbard; ampulla = bolli; cp. also Germ. platz = Icel. blettr; again, plank is in the west of Icel. sounded blanki: on the other hand, Latin words such as bracea, burgus are probably of Teutonic or Celtic origin. the old High German carried this interchange of consonants still farther; but in modern High German this interchange remains only in the series of dental mutes: in the b and g series of mutes only a few words remain, as Germ. pracht (qs. bracht), cp. Engl. bright; Germ. pfand, cp. Engl. bond; otherwise the modern Germans (High and Low) have, just as the English have, their braut, bruder, brod, and butter, not as in old times,

D. In the Runic inscriptions the b is either formed as B, so in the old Gothic stone in Tune, or more commonly and more rudely as B in the Scandinavian monuments; both forms clearly originate from the Greek-Roman. The Runic name was in A.S. beorc, i. e. a birch, Lat. betula; 'beorc by blêda leâs . . .,' the A.S. Runic Poem. The Scandinavian name is, curiously enough—instead of björk, f. a birch, as we should expect—bjarkan, n.; the name is in the old Norse Runic Poem denoted by the phrase, bjarkan er lauf grænst lima, the b. has the greenest leaves, cp. also Skálda 177: both form and gender are strange and uncouth, and point to some foreign source; we do not know the Gothic name for it, neither is the Gothic word for the birch (betula) on record, but analogously to airba, bairda, Icel. jörð, hjörð, björk would in Gothic be sounded bairca, f.; the Scandinavian form of the name points evidently to the Gothic, as a corruption from that language,—a fresh evidence to the hypothesis of the late historian P. A. Munch, and in concord with the notion of Jornandes, about the abode of the Goths in Scandinavia at early times. Thorodd (Skálda 166) intended to use b as a sign for the single letter, B for a double b, and thus wrote uBi = ubbi; but this spelling was never agreed to.

babbl, n., bábilja, u, f. a babble; babbla, að, to babble.

BAD, n. [in Goth. probably bab, but the word is not preserved; A.S. bad, pl. bado; Engl. batb; Germ. bad; cp. also Lat. balneum, qs. badneum (?); Grimm even suggests a kinship to the Gr. βάπτω]:-bath, bathing. In Icel. the word is not very freq., and sounds even now somewhat foreign; laug, lauga, q. v., being the familiar Icel. words; thus in the N. T. Titus iii. 5. is rendered by endrgetningar laug; local names referring to public bathing at hot springs always bear the name of laug, never bað, e.g. Laugar, Laugarnes, Laugardalr, Laugarvatn, etc. The time of bathing, as borne out by many passages in the Sturl. and Bs., was after supper, just before going to bed; a special room, baostofa (bathroom), is freq. mentioned as belonging to Icel. farms of that time. Bathing in the morning seems not to have been usual; even the passages Sturl. ii. 121, 125 may refer to late hours. This custom seems peculiar and repugnant to the simple sanitary rules commonly observed by people of antiquity. It is, however, to be borne in mind that the chief substantial meal of the ancient Scandinavians was in the forenoon, dagverör; náttverör (supper) was light, and is rarely mentioned. Besides the word bad for the late bath in the Sturl. and Bs., badstofa is the bathroom; síð um kveldit, í þann tíma er þeir Þórðr ok Einarr ætluðu at ganga til baðs, Sturl. iii. 42; um kveldit er hann var genginn til svefns, ok beir til baðs er þat líkaði, ii. 117, 246, iii. 111; þat var síð um kveldit ok vóru menn mettir (after supper) en Ormr bóndi var til baðs farinn, ok var út at ganga til badstofunnar, Bs. i. 536; eptir máltíðina (supper) um kveldit reikaði biskupinn um baðferðir (during batbing time) um gólf, ok sidan for hann i sæng sina, 849; hence the phrase, skaltú hasa mjúkt bad fyrir mjúka rekkju, a good batbing before going to bed, of one to be burnt alive, Eg. 239. In Norway bathing in the forenoon is mentioned; laugardags morguninn vildu liðsmenn ráða í bæinn, en konungr vildi enn at þeir biði þar til er flestir væri í baðstofum, Fms. viii. 176; snemma annan dag vikunnar..., and a little below, eptir þat tóku þeir bað, vii. 34, iii. 171; þá gengr þéttleifr til baðstofu, kembir sér ok þvær, eptir þat skæðir hann sík, ok vápnar, þiðr. 129, v.l.; Icel. hann kom þar fyrir dag (before daybreak), var þórðr þá í baðstofu, Sturl. COMPDS: bad-ferd, f. time ii. 121, 125; vide Eb. 134, Stj. 272. for bathing, Bs. i. 849. bad-hús, n. a bathing-bouse, G. H. M. ii. 128 (false reading), vide Fs. 149, 183. bað-kápa, u, f. a batbing-cloak, bao-kona, u, f. a female bathing attendant, N. G. L. Sturl. ii. 117. iii. 15. bað-stofa, u, f. (v. above), a bath-room, Eb. l. c., Bs. i. l. c., bior. l. c., Fms. viii. l. c., Sturl. ii. 121, 167, iii. 25, 102, 176, 198. baostofu-gluggr, m. a window in a b., Eb. l. c., Sturl. l. c. In Icel. the bathing-room (badstofa) used to be in the rear of the houses, cp. Sturl. ii. 198. The modern sense of baostofa is sitting-room, probably from its being in modern dwellings placed where the old bathing-room The etymology of Jon Olafsson (Icel. Dict. MS.), baostofa used to be. = bakstofa, is bad. In old writers badstofa never occurs in this modern sense, but it is used so in the Dropl. Saga Major:—a closet, room, in writers of the 16th century, Bs. ii. 244, 256, 504, Safn. 77, 92, 95, 96. badast, ad, dep. (rare), to bathe, Fms. iii. 171; in common Icel. act., bada höndum, to gesticulate, fight with the arms, as in bathing. BADMR, m. [Goth. bagms; A. S. beam, cp. Engl. bornheam; Germ.

baum], a tree, only used in poetry, v. Lex. Poet., never in prose or Digitized by GO be used of the branches of a tree (in flower); har b., the bigh tree, Vsp. 18; á berki skal þær rista ok á baðmi viðar, Sdm. II (referring to the lim-runar). Even used metaph. = gremium, sinus; er þá Véa ok Vilja l létztu bér Viðris kvæn | báða í baðm um tekið, wben thou tookest both of them into thy arms, embraced them both, Ls. 26; vaxi ber a baomi (bosom) barr, Hkv. Hjörv. 16. Cp. hróðrbaðmr (barmr is a bad reading), Vtkv. 8, a fatal twig.

BAGALL, m. [Lat. baculus], an episcopal staff, crozier, Fms. i. 233, iii. 168, Bs. i. 42, Vm. 68.

bagga, 20, to binder, with dat.

BAGGI, a, m. [Engl. bag, baggage; Germ. pack, gepäck], a bag, pack, bundle, Edda 29, Eg. 218, Fms. ii. 197, Fas. ii. 516.

bagi, a. m. inconvenience; baga-legr, adj. inconvenient. baglaor, part. [cp. bagr, begla], broken, maimed, Fas. iii. 195.

bagr, adj. [cp. bágr], awkward, clumsy, clownish, opp. to hagr, q. v., Fas. iii. 195: baga, u, f., in mod. usage means a plain common ditty; böguligr and amböguligr, adj., means awkward.

BAK, n. [A.S. bac], Lat. tergum, back, Eg. 218, Edda 29, 30, Hkr. i. 337: in metaph. phrases, bera sök á baki, to be guilty, Ghl. 539; leggia bleydiord à bak e-m, to load, charge one with being a coward, Fas. ii. 530; hafa mörg at a baki, to carry a weight of years, Isl. ii. 456: of horseback, léttr á baki, Sturl. ii. 195; fara á bak, to mount; stíga af baki, to dismount, Eg. 397, Grág. ii. 95: in other relations, as adv., at hurbarbaki, behind the door; at husa-baki, at the back of the bouses; ad fjalla-baki, behind the mountains: handar-bak, the back of the band. á baki used as a prep. or as an adv.; á bak (acc.) if denoting motion, á baki (dat.) if without motion: a. loc. behind, at the back of; & baki húsunum, Háv. 49, Nj. 28; at baki þeim, at their back, Eg. 91, Nj. 261, 262, 84, Eg. 583; Hrútr kveðst þat ætla, at hans skyldi lítt á bak at leita, be should not be found in the rear, Ld. 278; berr & baki, unbacked, belpless, in the proverb, Nj. 265, Grett. 154: metaph., ganga & bak e-u, ordum, heitum ..., to elude, evade one's pledged word, Fms. ii. 209, Isl. ii. 382; göra e-t á baki e-m, in one's absence, bebind one's back, N. G. L. i. 20; á bak aptr (=aptr á bak), backward; falla á b. a., Eb. 240, Nj. 9, Eg. 397, Hav. 48 new Ed.; til baks, better til baka, to back, Sturl. ii. 203; brjota & bak, prop. to break one's back, Fms. viii. 119; to break, subdue, and also to make void, annul; brjóta á bak Rómverja, to 'break the back' of the R., defeat them, 625. 65; Heidrekr vildi öll ráð fódur síns á bak brjóta, Fas. i. 528.

6. temp. with dat. past, after; á bak Jólum, after Yule, Fms. viii. 60; á b. Jónsvöku, ix. 7: metaph., Héðinn kvaðst eigi hirða hvat er á bak kæmi, H. said be did not care for what came after, Fas. i. 402; muntú eigi vera mót Njáli, hvat sem á b. kemr, Nj. 193.

baka, ad, [Gr. φώγειν, cp. also the Lat. focus; A.S. bacan; Engl. to bake; Germ. backen.] I. prop. to bake; b. braud, N.G.L. i. 349; b. ok sjóða, to bake and cook, Gpl. 376. In Icel. steikja is to roast; baka, to bake; but in mod. usage steikja may also be used of baking on embers, opp. to baka, baking in a pan or oven; elda ofn til brauds ok b., Hom. 113; b. í ofni, Fas. i. 244; people say in Icel. steikja köku (on embers), but baka braud. 2. metaph. and esp. in the reflex. bakast, to bake, i.e. to warm and rub the body and limbs, at a large open fire in the evening after day-work; v. bakeldr and bakstreldr; v. also the classical passages, Grett. ch. 16, 80, Fnis. xi. 63, 64 (Jónisv. ch. 21), Orkn. ch. 34, 89, 105, Hkr. iii. 458. In Icel. the same fire was made for cooking and warming the body, Isl. ii. 394, Eb. ch. 54, 55; hence the phrase, hvárt skal nú búa til seyðis (is a fire to be made for cooking) ... svá skal þat vera, ok skaltú eigi þurfa heitara at baka, it shall be bot enough for thee to bake, Nj. 199 (the rendering of Johnsonius is not quite exact); skaltú eigi beiðast at baka heitara en ek mun kynda, Eg. 239: used of bathing, bakaðist hann lengi í lauginni, Grett. ch. 80, MS. Cod. Upsal. This 'baking' the body in the late evening before going to bed was a great pastime for the old Scandinavians, and seems to have been used instead of bathing; yet in later times (12th and 13th centuries) in Icel. at least bathing (v. above) came into use instead of it. In the whole of Sturl, or Bs. no passage occurs analogous to Grett. I. c. or B. bóndi bakar á báðar kinnr, blusbed, Bs. ii. 42; þanneg sem Jómsv. S. til bakat er, as things stand, Orkn. 428; bakadi Helgi fótinn, H. baked the (broken) leg, Bs. i. 425; vide eldr. y. (mod.) to cause, inflict; b. e-m öfund, hatr, óvild (always in a bad sense): af-baka means to distort, II. to put the back to, e. g. a boat, in floating it, (mod.) bakari, a, m. a baker, Stj. 200. bakara-meistari, a, m. a masterbaker, Stj. 201.

bak-borði, a, m. (bakborð, n., Jb. 407 A), [Dutch baakbord], the larboard side of a ship, opp. to stjórnborði, Fb. i. 22, Jb. l.c., Fms.

bak-brjóta, braut, to violate, transgress, B. K. 108.

bak-byrðingar, m. pl. the crew on the larboard side, opp. to stjórnbyrðingar, Fms. viii. 224.

bak-byror, f. a burden to carry on the back, Isl. ii. 364.

bak-oldr and bakatroldr, m. an evening fire to bake the body and limbs grasa hvitast). Perhaps the eye-bright or suphrasy.

common language, and alien to all Scandin. idioms: it seems prop. to at (v. baka); sitja við bakelda, Fs. 4, Orkn. 112, 74, Korm. 236, Grett. 91: metaph., bændr skulu eiga ván bakelda, they shall get it bot enough, Fms. viii. 201; göra e-m illan bakeld, 383, ix. 410. bakelda-hrif, n. pl. rubbing the back at a b., Grett. l. c. A. As the evening bakeldar are not mentioned in the Sturl., it may be that bathing had put them out of use because of the scarcity of fuel.

bak-fall, n. falling backwards, Fas. iii. 569: esp. in pl. in the phrase, roa bakfollum, to take a long pull with the oars, i. 215: milit. attack from bebind = bakslag, Fms. viii. 115, ix. 405. bak-fero, f. mounting on borseback, Grett. QI A.

bak-ferla, ad, [ferill], prop. to step backwards; pat (viz. the word aw) sýnir öfgað, bakferlað (read backwards) nafnit Eva, 655 xxvii. 18, to break, annul; b. ofbeldi e-s, Stj. 233; at b. bat allt er Domitianus hafdi bodit, 623. 13; rjufa ok b., to break and make void, Sturl. i. 171 C.

bak-hlutr, m. the hind part, Stj. 253, Fs. 48.

bak-hold, n. pl. the flesh on the back of cattle, Grett. Q1.

bak-hverfask, d, reflex. to turn one's back upon, abandon, Eg. 20, v. l. bak-jarl, m., milit. a foe attacking in the rear, Sturl. iii. 66, Karl. 164. bakki, a, m. [Engl. and Germ. bank], a bank of a river, water, chasm, etc.; árbakki, sjávarbakki, marbakki, flæðarbakki, Gísl. 54; síkisbakki, gjárbakki; út eptir áinni ef Hákon stæði á bakkanum, Fms. vi. 282, ix. 405. Ni. 158, 224: Tempsar b., banks of the Thames, Fms. v. (in a verse). an eminence, ridge, bank; gengu þeir á land ok kómu undir bakka einn. Dropl. 5; hann settist undir b. i hrisrunni, Bjarn. 15; cp. skotbakki, butts on which the target is placed; setja spán í bakka, to put up a target, Fms. β. beavy clouds in the horizon. 8. [= bak], the back of a knife, sword, or the like, opp. to edge; blað skilr bakka ok egg, Jónas, COMPDS: bakka-fullr, adj. full to the bank, Grett. 110 new Ed. brim-full; bera i b. lækinn, a proverb, cp. Lat. ligna in silvam færre, and Engl. to carry coals to Newcastle. bakka-kólfr, m., prob. a bird-bolt, thick arrow without a point, to be shot from a cross-bow, Fms. iii. 18. bakka-stokkar, m. pl. the stocks on which a ship is built, Gbl. 80, Hkr. i. 293.

bak-klesői, n. tapestry, Hkr. iii. 437.

bak-lengja, u, f. the dark stripe along the back of cattle, Grett. 91, Eg. 149, v. l.

bak-máligr (and bakmáll), adj. backbiting, Hom. 34, 656 B. I. bak-mælgi, f. and bakmæli, n. backbiting, Hom. 86; liable to the lesser outlawry, Grág. ii. 145.

bak-rauf, f. anus, a cognom., Fms. vii. 21.

bak-sarr, adj. a horse with a sore back, Lv. 58.

bak-sig, n., medic. exania, Fél. ix.

bak-skiki, a, m. a back flap, a cognom., Bjarn. 12.

bak-skyrta, u, f. the back flap of a skirt, Fms. vii. 21.

bak-slag, n. a back-stroke, attack in rear, Fms. viii. 399.

bak-sletta, u, f. and bakslettr, m., Al. 27, 44; acc. pl. bakslettu, 90: milit. an attack in rear, Fms. viii. 319, ix. 357: drawback, at rétta bann bakslett, Al. I. c.

bak-spyrna, d, to spurn or kick against; N. T. of 1540 (Acts ix. 5) πρόε κέντρα λακτίζειν is rendered by b. móti broddunum.

bak-stakkr, m. the back part of a cloak, Fas. ii. 343.

bakstr, rs, m. baking, Fms. ix. 530: baked bread, pund b., B. K. 89, esp. waser, Bs. ii. 15: a poultice, fomentation, i. 786: warming, beating, COMPDS: bakstr-brauð, n. baked bread, B. K. 89. bakstrbuokr, m. a box in which wafers were kept, Pm. 5. bakstr-eldr. v. bakeldr. bakstr-hús, n. a bake-bouse, Fms. ix. 531. jarn, n. an iron plate for baking sacramental wafers, Vm. 15, 37. bakstr-kons, u, f. a female baker, N. G. L. iii. 15. b@kstr-munnlaug, f. a vessel in which wafers were kept, Dipl. iii. 4. sveinn, m. a baker boy, N. G. L. iii. 15.

bak-verkr, m., medic. a pain in the back, lumbago, Nj. 130, Fél. ix. bak-verpast, & and t, dep., b. vid e-m, to turn the back to, set at defiance, Stj. 362, 431, 449, Eg. 20. bak-þúfa, u, f. a borse block.

BAL, n. vagina, in poems of the 15th century.

bals, d and ab, to drudge, live bard, (cant word.)

baldakin, and bad forms baldraskinn (the skin of Balder!) and baldskin [from Baldak, i. e. Bagdad], a baldaquin, canopy, Bs. i. 713, 803, Sturl. iii. 306, Fms. x. 87, Dipl. v. 18, Vm. 52, 97, 117, Am. 44, Hb. 544, 22. compps: baldrskinns-hökull, m., literally a surplice of b., Am. 87. baldrskinns-kápa, u, f. a cape of b., Ám. 15. baldinn, adj. [A. S. beald], untractable, unruly, Grett. 90 A, Fms. xi.

445; cp. bellinn, ballr, ofbeldi.

BALDB, rs, m. [A. S. baldor, princeps, seems to be a different root from the Goth. balps, A.S. bald, which answers to the Icel. ball- or bald- without r], prop. = Lat. princeps, the best, foremost; in compds as mann-balds, her-baldr, fólk-baldr. B. meton, the god Balder, because of his noble Baldrs-brá, f. Balder's eye-brow, botan. cotula disposition, Edda. foetida, Ivar Aasen ballebraa and baldurbraa, pyretbrum inodorum, Edda 15; the B. is there called the fairest and whitest of all flowers (allra baldrast and ballrast, ao, dep. [cp. Germ. poltern; Ivar Aasen baldra,] Ihre ballra = strepere], to make a clatter; beir sneru hestunum ok böldruðust sem þeir væri úráðnir hvárt þeir skyldi ríða, Sturl. iii. 279: adding saman, þeir böllruðust saman, Ingv. 34. baldrekr, m. (for. word), a belt, baldrick, Lex. Poët.

Digitized by GOOQIG

BALI, 2, m. a soft grassy bank, esp. if sloping down to the shore, BALLB, adj. [Goth. balbs, audax, may be supposed from Jornandes, ob audaciam virtutis baltha, id est audax, nomen inter suos acceperat, 109; Ulf. renders wappyola by balbis, f., and balbjan is audere; in Icel. the Ip (ltb) becomes Il; A.S. beald, audax; Engl. bold]:-bard, stubborn: only used in poetry, and not in quite a good sense, as an epithet of a giant, Hým. 17; böll ráð, telling, fatal schemes, Hom. 27; ballir draumar, bad, deadly dreams, Vtkv. 1; ballr dólgr, Haustl.; böll þrá, heavy grief, Ls. 30, etc., vide Lex. Poët. [So old German names, Bald, Leo-pold, etc.]

BALSAM, m. (now always n.), a balsam, Bs. i. 143, (for. word.)
bana, 2δ, [bani; Gr. root φένω], to kill, with dat., ef griðungr banar manni, Grág. ii. 122, Rb. 370, Fms. iii. 124; b. sér sjálfr, to commit suicide, Ver. 40; metaph., Hom. 17.

BAND, n. pl. bönd, [binda; Ulf. bandi, f. δεσμό»; O.H.G. pfand, whence the mod. Dan. pant; N. H. G. band; Engl. band and bond; Dan. I. prop. in sing. any kind of band; mjótt band, a baand.] tbin cord, Edda 20, Grág. ii. 119. \(\beta\). \(\beta\) a yarn of wool, v. bandvetlingar. \(\beta\). metaph. \(a\) bond, obligation: lausn ok b. allra vandamála, Fms. v. 248, Bs. i. 689. \(\beta\). II. in pl. also, \(\beta\). \(\be II. in pl. also, Lat. vincula; i böndum, in vinculis, Bs. i. 190, Fms. ii. 87, 625. 95: theol., synda bönd, 656 A; líkams bönd, Blas. 40. 2. a bond, confederacy: ganga i bond ok eid, to enter into a bond and oath, Band. 22; cp. hjónaband, marriage; handaband, a sbaking of bands, etc. poet. the gods, cp. hapt; of providence ruling and uniting the world, Hkm. 10; banda vé, the temples, Hkr. i. 204; at mun banda, at the will of the gods, 210; vera manu bond i landi, the gods (i. e. lares tutelares) are present in the land, Bs. i. 10; gram reki bond af londum, Eg. (in a verse); blota bond, to worship the gods; vinr banda, the friend of the gods; bönd ollu því, the gods ruled it, Haustl.; vide Lex. Poët., all the instances being taken from heathen poems. Egilsson suggests a reference to the imprisoning of the three gods, Odin, Hænir, and Loki, mentioned Edda 72; but bond is that which binds, not is bound; (band means vinculum not vinctus.) 4. metric, a kind of intricate intercalary burden (klofastef). This seems to be the meaning in the word Bandadrapa, where the burden consists of five intercalary lines occurring in sets of three verses | Dregr land at mun banda || Eirikr und sik geira | veðrmildr ok semr hildi || gunnblíðr ok réð síðan | jarl goðvörðu hjarli; but as this metrical term is nowhere else recorded, the name of the poem may have come from the word 'banda' (gen. pl. deorum), Hkr. i. 210 sqq. compos: banda-dagr, m. vincula Petri, the 1st of banda-menn, m. pl. confederates, Band. 5, August, Fms. vi. 222. banda-riki, n. (mod.) the United and many other modern compds. banda-bing, n. the late German Bund, etc.

banda, 20, [cp. Ulf. bandvian = σημαίνειν, and bandva, vexillum; Germ. banner; is probably alien to binda], to make a sign with the hand, esp. in the phrase, b. móti, to drive back sheep or flocks, Hav. 41, Fas. ii. 124, v.l. The chief MSS., however, spell bannadi; the word is at present freq., but only in the above phrase, or gener. to remonstrate slightly against as by waving the hand; v. benda.

bandingi, ja, m. a prisoner, Stj. 200, Fms. vi. 16, 623. 25.

band-vetlingr, m. a knitted woollen glove, Fms. iii. 176; and bandvottr, id., a horse's name, Gisl. 19.

BANG, n. bammering, Sturl. iii. 256; mod. also banga, ao, [Scot. and North. E. to bang], to bammer.

bang-hage, adj. knowing a little bow to use the bammer, Sturl. ii. 195. BANI, a, m. [Ulf. banja = πληγή; A.S. bana; Engl. bane; O.H.G. I. bane, death, natural or violent (properly bano; v. ben below]. violent); Egill tók sótt þá er hann leiddi til bana, Eg. 767; lostinn öru til bana, Fms. i. 118; kominn at bana, sinking fast, of a sick person, vii. II. a bane, and so = bana-madr, a slayer; fjögurra manna b., Nj. 8, Grág. ii. 88, Ld. 326; pl., N. G. L. i. 163: the phrase, veroa e-m at bana, to slay one, may refer to I. or II: poët. fire is called bani vidar, the bane of wood, and bani Halfs, the bane of king Half, Yt. 6; the winter is bani orma, the bane of worms, etc., Lex. Poet. bana-bloo, n. blood shed in death, Stj. 432. bana-dagr, m. the day of death, Fas. i. 52. bana-drykkr, m. a baneful potion, poison, Fms. i. 18. bana-dægr, n. = banadagr (freq.), Fas. i. 160. banahogg, n. a death-blow, mortal wound, Nj. 8, Eg. 193. banakringla, u, f. vertebra colli, atlas (in animals). bana-lag, n. stabbing to death, Sturl. iii. 62. bana-maor, m. a slayer, Fins. i. bana-oro, n. death, in the phrase, bera b. af e-m, to put one to death, slay in fight, Edda 42; betra þykir mér frændi at þiggja b. af þér en veita per pat, Ld. 222, Bs. i. 106; kenna e-m b., to charge one with slaying one, N. G. L. i. 306. bana-rao, n. pl. the planning a person's death, a law term, Grag. ii. 116; eigi red ek honum b., Nj. 21; sla bana-sár, n. a mortal wound, Nj. 9, ortal shot, Jb. 324. bana-sótt, f. banaráðum við e-n, Ld. 218. Eg. 258. bana-skot, n. a mortal shot, Jb. 324. death-sickness, the last sickness, Jb. 192, Isl. ii. 38, Gullb. 11, Bs. i. 426. bana-spjót, n. pl. in the poët. phrase, berast banaspjótum eptir, to be deadly enemies, Glúm. 354, Hkr. iii. 76. bana-sæng, f. the death-bed. bana-sök, f. a deed worthy of death, Fms. i. 199. bana-tilræði, n. a bana-bufa, u, f., in the phrase, drepa fotum mortal attack, Fas. i. 406. i banabúfu, to stumble against a fatal mound, Anal. 179, Hdl. 28.

banlaga-ráð, n. = banaráð, Str. 14.

BANN, n. [cp. Ulf. bandva; Hel. bann, mandatum; Engl. ban; Germ. bann; A. S. geban; mid. Lat. bannum], prob. of foreign origin: eccles. excommunication, interdict; minna b. (excommunicatio minor), bat sem forbod er kallat á Norrænu, K. Á. 226 (App.); meira b. (excommunicatio major), Ann. A.D. 1255; England i banni, id. A.D. 1208; Bs., H. E. 2. in secular sense, probibition of trade or intercourse: leggja b. fyrir mjöl eðr vöru, N.G.L. i. 204, 103; cp. farbann, forbidding ships to set sail. 3. gener. a protest, probibition, in phrases, bod ok b., Gpl. 76; lof né b., Eg. 349; leggja b. fyrir, to probibit, Isl. ii. 265.
4. = bannan, a curse, swearing. The notion of jurisdiction common in Germany (v. Grimm) is unknown in the Scandin, idioms; yet the Laufás' Edda, Ed. A. M. i. 586, v.l. 14, has bann as one of the names of the earth, cp. the O. H. G. banz, regio. The passage Gisl. 16, náttlangt né lengra banni, is an απ. λεγ. and probably corrupt, = á lengr or the like; lengra banni might, however, be equivalent to lengra meli, bann here denoting spatium temporis, a while. COMPDS: bannsatkvæði, n. a sentence of excommunication, H. E. i. 465. afell and -afelli, n. the condemnation of excommunication, H. E. ii. 70. banns-domr, m. a ban-doom, sentence of excommunication, H. E. ii. banns-mal, n. a case liable to excommunication, H. E. i. 254. banns-pina, u, f. the punishment of excommunication, H. E. i. 477. banns-spjót, n. a spear of excommunication, H. E. ii. 77. verk, n. an act liable to excommunication, H. E. i. 300.

banna, 28, [A.S. bannan = jubere; Germ. bannen; mid. Lat. bannire], to forbid, binder, probibit (freq.); b. e-m e-t, or with infin., Fris. i. 254, Nj. 157, Ld. 256, Orkn. 4; b. fiskiför, Grag. ii. 350, N.G.L. i. 117. to curse, [Scot. ban], with dat., Stj. 37: with acc., Hom. 31, Stj. 199, Post. 656 A, ii. 12: reflex., bannast um, to swear, Sturl. ii. 126, Fms. 3. = banda, to stop, drive back; hann sá tröll við ána. bat b. honum, ok vildi taka hann, Fas. ii. 124.

bannan, f. swearing, Bs. ii. 134. bannanar-oro, n. id., Stj. 153.

bann-bóla, u, f. a bull of excommunication, Anecd. 8. bann-færa, o, to place under ban, K. A. 134, Sturl. ii. 3.

bann-setja, tt, id., K. A. 64, Sturl. ii. 3, H. E. i. 471; part. pass. under ban, accursed, Fas. iii. 423, Stj. 417.

bann-setning, f. an excommunication, Sturl. ii. 3. bannsetningarsvero, n. the sword of excommunication, H. E.

bann-syngja, song, to pronounce the ban of excommunication, Fms. ix. 486.

ban-orð, n. = banaorð, Fnis. x. 400, Bret. 76.

ban-væni, f., medic. prognosis mortis, Fél. ix.

ban-vænligr, adj. mortal, deadly, Bret. 56, Edda 154.

ban-vænn, adj. deadly, Eg. 34. 2. medic. deadly sick, just before death; ok er dro at því at hann (the sick) var b., when all hope of life was gone, Eg. 126, Fms. i. 86; snerist um allt sarit sva at Grettir gördist b., Grett. 153.

BARAR, mod. börur, f. pl. [A.S. bär; Hel. bara; Engl. bier and barrow; Lat. feretrum], a band-bier; borinn i börum um fjallit, Fms. vii. 9, Bs. i. 352: sometimes to be carried on horseback (by two horses), baru beir Gudmund i börum suðr til Hvítar, . . . bararnar hrutu ofan, Bs. i. 508 (Sturl. ii. 49 C spells barir): esp. the funeral bier, bearse, to be carried on horseback, lagoi þegar kistuna í búnar barar, 655 xxii, Fms. x. 149; mæddust hestarnir undir börunum, Finnb. 322, cp. likbörur; now also liggja á nátrjám (nátré) in like sense. The sing. in D. N. i. no. 70 is perh. a bad reading.

bar-axlaor, adj. part. bigb-shouldered, with sharp prominent shoulder bones, Fms. vii. 321.

bar-átta, u, f. [North. E. barett obsolete], gener. a fight, contest: β. a fight, battle, Fas. i. 26. γ. now freq., esp. = compps: baráttu-maðr, m. a warrior, þiðr. 67. a row, Gpl. 176. strife, contest. baráttu-samr, adj. troublesome, Barl. 137:

barberr, m. (for. word), a barber, N. G. L. iii. no. 15.

BARD, n. [identical in etymology but not in sense to Lat. barba, Engl. beard, Germ. bart; the Scandin. dialects all call the beard skegg; Swed. skugg; Dan. skjæg; barð in the sense of barba is quite alien from Ina the Scandin. idioms; the passages, Edda 109 (skegg heitir bard) and höggva börðum í gras, Íd. 12, a poem of the end of the 13th century, are isolated instances; bart in Dan. is a mod. word]:-Lat. ora, a. a brim of a helmet or hat (hjálmbarð, hattbarð), Fas. iii. B. the verge, edge of a hill (holtbard, túnbard, brekkubard, holbard, etc.), freq. in local names of farms in Icel. Y. the wing or side fin of some fishes, e.g. whales, cp. barohvalr; of flat fishes, raja pastinaca (skötubarð). of war, [cp. A. S. barda, a beaked ship]; so barded, of a horse in armour; hence Bardi or Jámbardi is the name of a sort of ram in olden times, e. g. the famous Járnbarði (Iron Ram) of earl Eric, described, Fms. ii. 310; cp. also Fb. i. 280: the stem, Gr. στείρη, Jb. 398; róa fyrir bard e-m, to thwart one, Ghl. 519, Eg. 386, Fms. vii. 195; skulu vér binda akkeri fyrir bard hverju skipi, xi. 66, ii. 273, Lex. Poët. compds are used in Icel. referring to parts of the head, e.g. hökubarð, kinnbarð, kjálkabarð, ora genae, maxillae, but without any notion of beard, cp. Isid. granos et cinnabar Gothorum, 19. 23; the cinnabar and the present Icel. kinnabard seem to be etymologically identical.

Digitized by E2OOQ

baroa, u, f. a kind of axe (barbata), Edda (Gl.)

bar-dagi, 2, m., prop. a 'battle day,' cp. eindagi, máldagi, skildagi:

1. 2 law term, a beating, flogging, thrashing; ef maðr lýstr mann þrjú högg eðr þrim fleiri, þat heitir b. fullr, N. G. L. i. 73, Grág. ii. 155, Post. 656 B. Blas. 42.

2. a figbt, battle (very freq.)= orrosta, Eg. 745, Nj. 45, etc.: metaph. a calamity, scourge (theol.), Sks. 112, 328, Fms. v. 214, Bs. i. 70. COMPDS: bardaga-frest, n. delay of battle, Al. 24. bardaga-ffst, f. eagerness to give battle, Al. 24. bardaga-gjarn, 2dj. eager for battle, Stj. 230. bardagaguö, n. a god of battle, Mars, Al. 33. bardaga-gyöja, goddess of battle, Bellona, Al. 41. bardaga-laust, n. adj. battle, Al. 14. bardaga-list, f. the art of war, Stj. 45, Al. 4. bardaga-gyðja, u, f. a bardaga-laust, n. adj. without bardaga-maör, m. a daga-lykt, f. the close of a battle, Al. 5. warrior, Fms. vi. 56, Stj. 456. bardaga-stef, n. and bardagastofna, u, f. a term, fixed meeting for a fight, Al. 54, Fms. ix. 488.

baro-hvalr, m. a sort of wbale, Sks. 124, Edda (Gl.)

baroi, a, m. a ship, a sort of ram, v. above, Fms. ii. 310, Edda (Gl.) y. a sbield, Edda (Gl.) a sort of fish (Germ. bartfisch), Edda (Gl.) barð-mikill, adj. with a great barð (8.), epithet of a ship, Hkr. iii. 268.

bar-efli, n. a club, (common word.)

bar-eyskr, adj. from Barra, one of the Hebrides, Grett.

BARKI, a, m. [Gr. pápvyf; alien from the South-Teut. idioms?], the windpipe, weazand, Eg. 508, Fas. i. 131, Fms. i. 217, vii. 191, Nj. 156: metaph. the stem of a boat; cp. háls, svíri. compos: barka-kýli, n. Adam's apple, Bs.i. 382. barka-lok, n.epiglottis. barka-op, n. glottis. BARKI, a, m., mid. Lat. barca, a sort of small ship (for. word), Fms. barka-bazi, a, m., a cognom., Sturl.

bark-lauss, adj. without bark (börkr), Lex. Poët.

BARLAK, n. (for. word), barley, Edda (Gl.); the Icel. common word is bygg, Dan. byg, Swed. bjugg.

bar-lomr, m. wailing, complaining, v. lomr.

barm-fagr, adj. with fine sides, epithet of a ship, Lex. Poët.

barmi, a, m., poet. a brother, prop. frater geminus, not qs. αδελφός, vide the following word, Lex. Poet.

BARMR, m. [Gr. φορμόε; cp. Ulf. barms = πόλποε and στηθοε; O. H. G. param; Hel. barm; A. S. barm; all in the sense of gremium: this sense, however, is entirely unknown to old Icel. writers, who only apply the word in like sense as bard, namely, Engl. brim; Lat. ora]:-a a. the brim of a vessel (fötubarmr, pottbarmr, etc.), Bs. ii. 173; hence barma-fullr, adj. or fullr á barma, full to the brim; the rim of a bell. Pm. 106. β. also the edge of a brook or well (lækjarbarmr, brunnbarmr): a chasm (gjárbarmr). Y. the border of the shore; eybarmr, ora insulae, Hervar. S. (in a verse); vikrbarmr; also used in many local names of farms in Icel. 8. the wing of anything; lyptingarbarmr, the gunwale of the stern; kastalabarmr (wing of a castle), Orkn. (in a verse); barmr hvarma, the edge of the eye-lids, Lex. Poët. e. the flaps of a thing; reif hann allan í sundr ok kastaði börmunum á eldinn, Fms. iv. 339 (rare if not an aπ. λεγ.) $. the notion of gremium, bosom, only appears after the Reformation, and even then rare; cp. the bosom of a coat, e. g. geyma e-t á barmi sér; hægri, vinstri b., etc.; stinga hendinni í sinn eigin barm, Exod. iv. 6. barma, ao, b. sér, to lament, is also a mod. word, Germ. barmen qs. bearmen; vide, however, baomr.

barm-tog, n. a rope for contracting the nets during fishing, Ivar Aasen barma, Ghl. 427.

BARN, n. pl. börn, [Ulf. barn; O. H. G. parn; A. S. bearn; Scot. and North. E. bairn; cp. bera and Lat. parere]: -a bairn, child, baby. This word, which in olden time was common to all the Teut. idioms, was lost in Germany as early as the 13th century (Grimm, s.v.); in the South of England it went out of use at an early time, and was replaced by 'child;' even the Ormulum uses barn only four times, else always 'child.' In North. E. bairn is still a household word, and freq. in popular Scottish writers, Burns, Walter Scott, etc. In the whole of Scandinavia it is in full and exclusive use; the Germ. 'kind' is in Icel. entirely unknown in this sense, v. the funny story Isl. pjób. ii. 535; ('kind' in common Icel. means a sheep.) In Danish barn is the only word which, like the Icel., changes the radical vowel in pl. into ö (börn). Proverbs referring to barn; barnið vex en brókin ekki; þetta verðr aldri barn í brók; bráð er barnslundin (barnæskan); nema börn hvað á bæ er títt; allir hafa börnin verið; því læra börnin málið að það er fyrir þeim haft; tvisvar verðr gamall madrinn barn; bragd er at þá barnið finnr; snemma taka börn hpregnancy, Stj. 514.

8. the beak or armed prow of ships, esp. ships til meina; Guð gefr björg með barni, cp. Eggert (Bb.) 1. 14; sex börn, beaked ship]; so barded, of a horse in armour; dætr þrjár ok þrjá sonu, Nj. 30, Ísl. ii. 198, Vsp. 36; eiga þrjá sonu barna, Fms. xi. 43; og svíkjast um að eiga börn, Eggert (Bb.) 1. 14; vera med barni, to be with child, Fms. ii. 212, i. 57, 68, Isl. ii. 197; fara med barni, to go with child, Nj. 130; frá blautu barni, from a child, Fms. iii. 155; unni honum hvert barn, every child, i.e. every living creature, loved bim, i. 17; hvert mannsbarn, every man: metaph. (rare), offspring, Nidrst. 10: barn, barnid gott, born, barnid mitt (rénvor, rénva) is with many a favourite term of endearment in talking with another, Látum líða og bíða, börn, Pál Víd. in a popular ditty: eptirlætisbarn, a pet, spoilt child; olbogabarn, a bard-treated child; oskabarn, a child of adoption; sveinbarn, a boy; meybarn, a girl; ungbarn, a baby. COMPDS: barnsborn, n. pl. grand-children, Grag. i. 185. barna-eign, f. procreation of children, v. barneign. barna-færi, n. the phrase, ekki b., so task for children, poro. 97 (1860). barna-gaman, n. child's play, El. 1. barna-karl, m. child's friend, nickname of an old pirate; ham var víkingr mikill, hann lét eigi henda börn á spjótsoddum sem þá var vikingum titt, því var hann b. kallaðr, be was a great pirate, but be did not spit babies as pirates then used to do, wherefore he was called b., Landn. 308; in mod. usage, one who bas many children, mesti b. barns-kensla, u, f. fathering a child upon one (kenna e-m barn), N.G.L. i. 410: mod. training children in a school. barna-leikr, m. a child's play, Grett. 107 A, vide barnleikr. barna-messa, u, f., now barnadagr, m. Holy Innocents' Day, Dec. 28, N.G.L. i. 377. mold, f. argilla apyra, also called Pétrs mold, argilla St. Petri, Eggert Itin. p. 125. barna-mosi, a, m., botan. sphagnum cymbi folium, Hjalt. barna-skap, n. in the phrase, hafa ekki b., to be no baby, Fs. 138. barna-spil, n. a childish play, Fas. i. 88 paper MS.; spil is a Germ. for. barna-vipr, n. childish trifles, gewgaws, Ld. 122. pattr, m. the section of law concerning infants, baptism, etc., in the Icel. Jus. Eccl., K. p.K. 8. barns-aldr, m. childhood, Eg. 118, Fms. ii. 267. barns-bein, n. in the phrase, frá blautu b., v. above, Al. 71. farir, f. pl. in the phrase, deyja af barnsförum, to die in childhed. barns-full, adj. pregnant, Pr. 185,—a rude phrase; Icel. now say, kálffull kýr, but not barnsfull kona. barns-fylgja, u, f., medic. secundinae. a baby's caul, Björn. barns-gratr, m. the cry of a baby, Fms. x. 218. barns-hafandi, part. pregnant, Jb. 114. barns-hufa, u, f. a baby's barns-lik, n. a baby's corpse, Hkr. iii. 184. cap, D.N. barns-mál, barns-skirsl, f. infant baptism, N.G.L. i. 131 n. babble, El. 15. (Norse). barns-sótt, f. = jóðsótt, the pains of childbirth, Bs. i. 327. barns-útkast, n. and barns-útburör, m. exposure of infants, N. G. L. barns-verk, n. child's work, Fms. ix. 35. i. 303.

barna, 20, to get with child, Nj. 98: metaph, in the phrase, 20 barna söguna, to interrupt a tale while being told.

barn-aldr, m. childhood, Hkr. ii. 35.

barn-alinn, part. native, Bs. i. 808.

barn-beri, a, m. pregnant, with child, N.G.L. i. 317.

barn-burör, ar, m. childbearing, childbirth, Grag. i. 375.

barn-bær, f. capable of bearing children, opp. úbyrja, Grág. i. 323, Stj. 89: pregnant, Grág. i. 294. barn-dómr, m. childhood, Stj. 195, 25, 655 xxx. 21.

barn-eign, f. getting children, Stj. 196: metaph. children, furou illa b.

gat Loki, Edda 20; vera or b., to be past childbearing. barn-eskja, u, f. [Goth. barniski], childbood, Hom. 122.

barn-faðir, m. a child's alleged father, H. E. ii. III.

móðir was in popish times the name for a priest's concubine.

barn-fostr, n. 'bairn-fostering,' a kind of adoption in olden times; at bjóða e-m b., to offer b. to another man, is a standing custom in the Sagas; men of wealth, but of low birth, in order to get security for their property, offered barnfóstr to noblemen, as in Ld. ch. 16 and ch. 28, Hænsa þór. S. (Ísl. ii. 125), Harð. S. ch. 9 (Ísl. ii. 23); or it was done as a matter of policy, it being regarded as a homage to be the fosterfather of another man's son; því at sá er mælt at sá sé útignari sem öðrum fóstrar barn, Fms. i. 16; ok er sá kallaðr æ minni maðr, er öðrum fóstrar barn, Ld. 108; thus Jon Loptsson offered b. to the young Snorri, in order to soothe the wounded pride of his father Sturla, Sturl. i. 106; Ari Frodi was fostered by Hall i Haukadal, Ib.; Nial offered to adopt as a son the young Hoskuld, in order to atone for the slaying of his father, Nj. ch. 95; cp. also the interesting story of the kings Harold and Athelstan and the young Hacon, Fms. i. l. c.: as a matter of friendship, Ld. 144, Bs. i. 73, 74, Sturl. i. 223, Ld. 25, and COMPD: barnfóstr-laun, n. pl. a reward, many other instances. fee for b., N.G.L. i. 91.

barn-fostra, u, f. a foster-mother of a child, Mar.; now a nurse.

barn-fóstri, a, m. a foster-fatber, Eg. 401, Ísl. ii. 144.

barn-fulga, u, f. (now in lcel. medgjöf), pay for the maintenance of a child, N. G. L. i. 30.

barn-fæddr, adj. part. native, Bs. i. 80; borinn ok b., born and bred. barn-fæði, n. nativity; eiga b., to be a native, Fr.

barn-getnaor, m. the procreation of children, Grag. i. 349, Greg. 29:

barn-goor, adj. fond of children.

barn-galur, f. pl. lulling sounds, nursery rhymes, Fas. ii. 234. barningr, m. [berja], thrashing, v. lamabarning: now, 'thrashing the water,' i. e. bard pulling against wind and tide.

barn-lauss, adj. childless, Eg. 318, Grág. i. 185, Landn. i. 304, Hkr. i. 99. barn-leikar, m. pl. child's play; leika barnleikum, of play-fellows, Bs. i. 417, 473, Fms. vi. 403, Sturl. i. 62.

barn-leysl, n. the being childless, Stj. 428, Mar. 656.

barn-ligr, adj. childish, Sks. 153.

barn-maor, m. the bearer of a baby to be christened; par & at ala likmenn ok barnmenn, Vm. 77.

barn-skikkja, u, f. a child's cloak, Sturl. iii. 278.

barn-skirn, f. the christening of infants, K. b. K. 14. barnskirnaroro, n. pl. formula in b., 655 xi.

barn-sæng, f. childhed, H. E. i. 492.

barn-teitr, adj. glad as a child, Hým. 2.

barn-ungr, adj. very young, youtbful, Fms. ii. 98, Mirm. 31.

barn-úmagi, a, m. an orpban child, Grág. i. 305.

barn-úmegő, f. minority, Grág. i. 305.

barn-sobi, n. childishness, Fél. 12. 56, transl. of Iliad ix. 491.

barn-maka, u, f. cbildbood, Eg. 116, Grág. ii. 392, Fms. i. 4, x. 273; bráð er b., the youth is impatient, a proverb, cp. Am. 75.

BARR, n. [Norse and Swed. barr means the needles of the fir or pine, opp. to 'lauf' or leaves of the ash, elm; cp. barlind, taxus baccata, and barskógt, 'needle-wood,' i. e. fir-wood, Ivar Aasen]. I. the needles or spines of a fir-tree; the word is wrongly applied by Snorri, Edda 11, who speaks of the 'barr' of an ash;—Icel. has no trees. In Hm. 50 (Norse poem?) it is correctly used of a pine, hrörnar böll er stendr borpi II. = barley, á, hlýrat henni börkr né b., Hkv. Hjörv. 16, Edda 11. [Scot. and North. E. bear, A. S. bere, is four-rowed barley, a coarse kind; bigg in North. E. and Scot. is six-rowed barley, also a coarse kind: cp. the Bigg-market,' a street in Newcastle-upon-Tyne: barlog, sweet wort, made of barley, Ivar Aasen]; bygg heitir med monnum, en barr med godum, men call it 'bygg,' but gods' bear,' which shews that barr sounded foreign, and that bygg was the common word, Alvm. 33; Edda (Gl.) 231 has b. under sádsheiti, v. Lex. Poët. Common phrases in Icel., as bera ekki sitt barr, of one who will never again bear leaves or flourish, metaph. from a withered tree: so Persarum vigui rege beatior is rendered, lifs mins blomgaðra bar, en buðlungs Persa var, Snót 129. barlegr, adj. vigorous, well-looking.

barr, adj. ready (paratus), Jd. 13: strong, vigorous, Lex. Poët.

barr-haddaor, adj. barley-baired, poët. epithet of the earth, Lex. Poët.

barri, a, m. a grove, Skm. 39.

ber-skeptr, adj. bigb-sbafted, of an axe; breidox b., Bs. i. 658.

bar-akógr, m. needle-wood.

bar-smíð, f. thrashing, flogging, Bs. i. 792, Grág. i. 456: pl. fight, row, 1b. 12, Grág. ii. 114.

BARUN, m. [for. word, mid. Lat. baro; A.S. beornas], a baron; heita þeir hersar eðr lendir menn í Danskri tungu, greifar í Saxlandi, en baronar i Englandi, Edda 93, Thom., Art.; the title was introduced into Norway by king Magnus, A.D. 1277, vide Ann. s.a., Gpl. 512. barúnanafn, n. the title of b., Ann. l. c.

barúnia, u, f. a barony, Thom. 36.

bar-vior, m. the wood of the fir, D. N. (Fr.) iii. 473.

bar-viōri, n. a beating storm, Sturl. iii. 127. basinn, m. [for. word], basin xylinum, a tree, Edda (Gl.) ii. 256.

BASMIR, f. pl. an an. Aey. in a verse in Hervar. S. (Ed. 1847), p. 56; bauð ek þér bróðir basmir óskerðar, fé ok fjöld meiðma; a dub. word, cp. Germ. besem, Engl. besom; mod. Germ. besen, North Germ. besemer, Dan. bismer (Icel. reizla), which are all connected. Ivar Aasen records a Norse word basm or basma; the Norse basm means twenty threads of the warp (basm here means loom?):—the Ed. in Fas. i. 207 gives a wrong spelling, óskir tvær (qs. óskertar), and skips the word basmir.

bassi, a, m. a bear, Lex. Poët.

BAST, n.; besti (Vkv. 12) seems to be a dat, masc. from böstr; in Germ. the word is freq. used masc.; the passage l. c. is perh. to be restored thus-beir er af létu besti (tiliae) byr sima (annulos), who did pull the rings from the cord? (cp. v. 8); [Engl., A.S., and Germ. bast]:-bast, the inner bark of the lime-tree; bast at binda, Rm. 9; bast né band, Ghl. 386, N. G. L. i. 59; sá þeir á bast bauga dregna, Vkv. 7.

basta, ad, to bind into a parcel, D. N. ii. 560 (Fr.), Fms. v. 301.

bastard, m. bastard, appears for the first time as the cognom. of William the Conqueror. The etymon is dubious; Grimm suggests a Scandinavian origin; but this is very doubtful; the word never occurs in Scandinavian writers before the time of William, sounds very like a foreign word, is rarely used, and hardly understood by common people in Icel.; neither does it occur in A.S. nor O.H.G.; so that Adam of Bremen says, iste Willelmus quem Franci bastardum vocant; whence the word seems to come from some southern source; cp. the Játv. S. (Ed. 1852), and Fl. iii. 463 sqq.; the MS. Holm. spells bastaror, the Fb. bast-2. name of a sword, Fms, vii. 297, referring to A.D. einbeygor kostr, dira necessitas, 58; kvaost ba heldr vilja liggja hjá hardr.

91163. 3. a kind of cloth, in deeds of the 14th and 15th centuries, Vm. 46, 136, D. N. ii. 165.

bastari, a, m. a bastbinder, D. N. ii. 246.

bast-bleikr, adj. pale as bast, Fms. vii. 269, v.l.

bastl, n. turmoil; bastla, 20, to turmoil.

bast-lina, u, f. a cord of bast, Eg. 579.

bast-taug, f. a tie or cord of bast, Eg. 579, v.l.

bast-vesall, adj. = bastbleikr, Karl. 167.

bast-öx, f., prob. a false reading, Fas. ii. 177, v. l. bátöx.

BATI, a, m. improvement, advantage, Fs. 155, Grett. 113 A, Fas. ii. 247, Grág. (Kb.) i. 160. bata-van, f. bope of convalescence, recovery of bealth, cp. Grág. l. c.; cp. also ábati, gain.

batna, 20, [v. bati; Ulf. gabatnan], to improve, get better, Nj. 52, Grág. 2. impers. medic. term; e-m batnar, one recovers, Fms. iv. 369, v. 22; the disease is added in gen., e-m b. sins meins, sjúkleika, sóttar, Bs. i. 343, Hkr. ii. 312, Eb. 280: at present also with nom.: proverb, batnanda manni er bezt að lifa.

batnaor, ar, m. improvement, 623. 15, Hom. 50, 134, Hkr. ii. 178: convalescence, Grag. ii. 45.

batnan, f. id., Lex. Poët.

baug-bót, f. a law term, compensation (v. baugr II.), Grág. ii. 173. baug-bætandi, pl. -endr, part. a law term, those who have to pay the baugr (II.); opp. to baughiggendr, the receivers, Grag. ii. 172.

baug-eior, m. the oath upon the sacred temple ring in heathen times; b. Odinn hygg ek at unnit hafi, hvat skal hans trygdum trúa, Hm. 110; cp. the phrase, vinna eid at baugi, v. baugr below; the baugeior of heathen times answers to the Christian bókeiðr and vinna eið at bók, to swear, laying the band upon the Gospel.

baug-gildi, n. a law term, the 'weregild' to be paid to the 'agnates' of the slain; opp. to nefgildi, the same amount to be paid to the 'cognates;' defined, Grag. (Bt.) ii. 176, N. G. L. i. 186: metaph. agnatic relationship, vera or b. eor nefgildi, lifa i b. etc., to be an agnate or a cognate, id. bauggildis-menn, m. pl. agnates, who are bound to pay and receive the bauggildi, Grág. ii. 180.

baug-gildingr, m. = bauggildismaðr, cp. nefgildingr, Grág. ii. 178. baug-gildr, adj. payable, fit to pay as bauggildi, N. G. L. i. 176.

BAUGR, m. [the root bjug-baug-bog; A.S. beâg; O.H.G. pouc = armilla; lost in N.H.G. and in Engl.]

I. a ring, armlet, esp. I. a ring, armlet, esp. in olden times to be worn on the wrist plain, without stones: sacred temple ring (stallahringr) on the altar in heathen temples; all oaths were to be made by laying the hand upon the temple ring; at sacrificial banquets it was to be dipped in the blood, and was to be worn by the priest at all meetings. The ring was either of gold or silver, open (motlaus), its weight varying between two, three, and twenty ounces (the last is the reading of Eb. new Ed. p. 6, v.l., the classical passages in the Sagas are—Eb. I.c. (and cp. 44), Glum. 388, Landn. (Hb.) 258, poro. S. 94 (Ed. 1860); cp. also the note at the end of the new Ed. of Eb., referring to an interesting essay of the Norse Prof. Holmboe upon the matter, Christiania, A.D. 1864. β. baugr is at present in Icel. used of a spiral ring without a stone (e.g. a wedding ring); the third finger is called baugfingr, transl. from Lat. digitus annuli, for the wearing of wedding rings is not in use in Icel. (unless as a Dan. imitation). Icel. also say einbaugr, tvibaugr, a single or double spiral ring. metaph, in olden times, before minted gold or silver came into use, the metals were rolled up in spiral-formed rings, and pieces cut off and weighed were used as a medium of payment; hence, in old times, baugr simply means money, used in the poets in numberless compounds; hringum hreytti, hjó sundr baug, Rm. 35; cp. baugbroti, baugskyndir, baugskati, baughati, one who breaks, throws, bates gold, epithets of princes, etc., v. Lex. Poët. A.S. poetry abounds in epithets such as, beaggeafa, dator auri; the Heliand speaks of 'vunden gold.' In the law the payment of weregild is particularly called baugr, v. the compounds: baugatal is the Icel. section of law treating of the weregild, Grug. ii. 171-188; höfuðbaugr, lögbaugr (a legal baug, lawful payment). In the Norse law vide esp. N.G.L. i. 74 sqq., 184 sqq. 2. the painted circle on the round sbield (clypeus); á fornum skjöldum var títt at skrifa rönd þá er b. var kallaðr, ok er við þann baug skildir kendir, Edda 87, Eg. 699; often embellished with scenes from the mythical age. Some poems are preserved or on record, describing such shields, two Berudrapur by Egil (bera, a sbield), Haustlöng by Thjodolf, Ragnarsdrápa by Bragi Gamli (of the 9th and 10th centuries). Some of these poems were among the chief sources used by Snorri in composing the Edda. The shield is metaph. called baugr, Edda (Gl.) 3. a fish-book; man eigi þú draga Leviathan á öngli eðr bora kiðr hans með baugi (very rare, if not an απ. λεγ.), Post. 686 C. 2. 4. the phrase, eiga (kost) á baugi, to bave (a single) chance left; þótti þat vera et mesta hætturáð at berjast, en sá mun á baugi, ef eigi er sæzt, there will be no other chance unless we come to terms, Sturl. iii. 244; bú munt eiga slíkan á baugi brátt, thou wilt soon have the very same chance (viz. death), the turn will come to thee, Nj. 58; nú mun ek eiga bann & baugi, at ..., there will be no other chance for me, than ..., Orkn. 46; cp.

henni, ef sá væri á baugi, if there were no other chance, Fas, ii, 150. The in the above passages, viz. once in the old Hm., once in the Fagrsk., explanation of this metaphor is doubtful, cp. Vkv. verses 5 and 7 (?), or is the metaphor taken from the weregild? 5. baugr also occurs in mod, usage in many compds, astron, and mathem,; spor-baugr, the COMPDS: bauga-brot, n. pl. cut ecliptic; hadegisbaugr, a meridian. off pieces of baugr, bad money, Band. 12. bauga-maor, m.= bauggildismaðr, N.G.L. i. 81, 82, 186. bauga-tal, n. the section of law about weregild, Grag. ii. 171-188: B. fixing of the weregild, Grág. i. 158. bauge-helgi, f. personal sacredness, (one's death to be atoned for by a weregild); bræll á b. á sér ef hann fylgir drottni sínum til þings . . ., N. G. L. i. 70.

baug-reio, f. a law term, an official inspection (in Norway) to measure the breadth of the bighway, defined, Ghl. 412-414.

baug-rygr, jar, f. pl. ir, a law term, an only daughter entitled to receive and pay weregild, in default of heirs male. The Norse law defines thus, ef hon er einberni, ok til arfs komin, bar til er hón sezt á brúðstól, ... up to ber wedding day, N. G. L. i. 184, 92: the Icel. law does not limit the right to her marrying; sú er kona ein er bæði skal baugi bæta ok baug taka, ef hon er einberni, en sú kona heitir b., en hon er dóttir hins dauda, Grág. ii. 183.

baug-pak, n. [pekja baug], a law term, 'baug-covering,' i.e. the supplemental payment to be added in due proportion to the amount of weregild (baugr), defined, Grag. ii. 171, 172; hence 'at baugbaki' metaph. means in addition, to boot; bá kom at honum síðan at b. brotfallit, be was taken with fits of epilepsy to boot, Bs. i. 336.

baug-biggiandi, pl. -endr. part. a receiver of weregild.

BAUKA, að, [Swed. böka], prop. to dig, to rummage; hann b. til fiskanna, viz. in order to steal them, Grett. 137; aldri skal ek í belginn bauka, says the giant in the tale, Isl. Þjóðs. ii. 458.

BAULA, u, f. a cow, Bs. i. 635. COMPDS: baulu-fall, n. the carcase of a slaughtered cow, Bs. i. 593. baulu-fótr, m. cow's foot, cognom., Sturl. iii. 71; mod. baula, 20, to low.

BAUN, f. [A.S. beân, cp. Lat. faba], a bean, Ghl. 544, Rb. 394. bauna-lögr, m. bean-broth, Karl. 452.

bausn, f. the fore fins of a shark, Björn.

BAUTA, the remnant of an obsolete strong verb analogous to hlaupahljóp, [A.S. beatan; Engl. beat; Germ. botzen, pulsare], to bunt, beat; bautu, 1st pers. pl. pres. indic., Fms. v. 83 (O. H. 1853 spells bavtu); svá bavtu ver björnuna, so do we beat (chase) the bears, Gs. 13: part. pass. bautinn, beaten, slain, Lex. Poët. s. v. sverdbautinn; Farbauti, beater of ships, is the name of the giant father of Loki; hylbauti, beater of the waves, a ship, Edda (Gl.); cp. Swed. bauter, strings for catching birds, Ihre.

bauta-steinn, Snorri (Hkr.) constantly uses the pl. form, but bautaoarsteinn, Fagrsk. 19, and bautarsteinn, Hm. 72; m. the stone monuments of the olden age, esp. in Sweden and Denmark; the Hávafnál I. c. (sjaldan bautarsteinar standa brautu nær, nema reisi niðr at nið) tells us that these stones used to be placed along the high roads, like the sepulchral monuments of old Rome; cp. the standing phrase on the Swedish-Runic stones-her skal standa steinn 'nær brautu :' or, má eigi 'brautarkuml' (a road monument) betra verba; the high roads of old Sweden seem to have been lined with these monumental stones; even at the present time, after the destruction of many centuries, the Swedish-Runic stones (of the 11th and 12th centuries) are counted by thousands. A great collection was made and drawings executed during the 17th century (Burzus, etc.), but only published A.D. 1750, under the name of Bautil. The etymology of this word is much contested; some render it by 'stones of the slain' (bauta, to slay), but this is contradicted by the passage in Hm. l.c. and by the inscriptions themselves. The bauta stones were simply monuments erected by the piety of kindred and friends without any respect to sex or manner of death, either in war, on sea, or through sickness; some were even erected to the memory of living persons. They were usually tombstones; but many of them are memorial stones for men that died in foreign lands, Greece, Russia, the British Islands, etc. Neither is Snorri right in saying (Hkr. pref.) that the bautasteinar belonged to the old burning age (brunaöld), and were replaced by the cairns (haugar) in the subsequent cairn age (haugaöld)—þá skyldi brenna alla dauða menn ok reisa eptir bautasteina, en síðan er Freyr hafði heygðr verit at Uppsölum þá görðu margir höfðingjar eigi síðr hauga en bautasteina. Svíar tóku lík hans ok var hann brendr við á þá er Skúta heitir, þar vóru settir bautasteinar hans, Hkr. Yngl. ch. 17—the passage in Havamal and the monuments refute this statement. The great bulk of the Scandinavian bauta stones seem to be of the 11th and even 12th century. In Icel, no stones of that time are on record: var hann þá hér heygðr skamt frá bænum, ok settir upp bautasteinar, þeir er enn standa hér, Hkr. i. 269; hávir bautasteinar standa hjá haugi Egils ullserks, 153,—where Fagrsk. reads, í þau skip var lagör í valrinn, ok orpnir þar haugar utan at; þar stendr ok bautaðar-steinn (=bautarsteinn in Hm.?) hár sem Egill féll, p. 19;—en eptir alla bå menn er nokkut mannsmót var at, skyldi reisa bautasteina, ok hélzt så siðr lengi síðan, Hkr. Yngl. ch. 8. It is worth remarking that the four times in the Hkr., whence it has passed over to modern writers. The word is most probably only a corruption from brautarsteinar, lapides viae, (by dropping the r); cp. the analogous Swedish word, brautarkuml, monumentum viae, which occurs in the inscriptions themselves

BADIR, adj. pron. dual, gen. beggja, neut. bzdis rarely! (Norse)! báði, gen, báðra, sometimes occur in MSS, of the 14th century, but both of them are Norse forms, [Goth, bai, baiobs; A. S. ba; Engl. both; Germ. beide; cp. also Gr. αμφω, Lat. ambo]:-both, Nj. 82, Sturl. iii. 314, Eg. 257, Grág. i. 368, N.G.L. i. 33, Isl. ii. 348, Fms. x. 118, etc. etc.

BAGI, a, m. (not bagi), an adversary, Stor. 23, Lex. Poët.

bágindi, n. pl. distress, difficulties.

bágliga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), adversely, Vígl. 30.

bag-lundr, adj. ill-disposed, bad-tempered, Lex. Poët. bagr, adi. uneasy; honum veror bag höndin, Fas, iii. 370: eiga bagt is now in Icel. to be poor, bard up: bag-staddr, adj. distressed. bagr, m. [cp. Hel. bagan = contendere, and Icel. bægja below], contest, strife, in such phrases as, fara i bág, to come athwart; fór i bág með peim, they came across, Bjarn. 28; i bága (pl.), Bs. i. 622; brjóta bág við e-m, to make a struggle against, Al. 49; Páll postuli braut þar helzt bág við ávalt er öðrum þótti torveldast, Post. 656 C. 24, Fms. viii. 42; koma i baga vio. to come into strife or collision with.

bág-ráðr, adi, difficult to deal with, Fms. ii. 11. bag-rækr, 2dj. difficult to drive, of geese, Grett. 00.

BAKN, n. for. word [A.S. been; O.H.G. pauban], a beacon, v. sigrbákn: bákn now means a big, monstrous thing.

bákna, að, [A.S. bêcnan], to beckon; beir báknuðu vápnunum til þeirra Hákonar, Fms. vii. 276, xi. 366.

BAL, n. [old Scot. bale, i. e. a beacon-fagot, Lay of Last Minstrel 3. I. a flame, Nj. 199, Ld. 100, Stj. 45 (freq.) Lat. rogus, a pyre, funeral pile; hlada b., rogum struere, Eb. 314, 264; Fms. v. 328, esp. for burning dead bodies; a funeral pile in the old heathendom, til brands eor bals, an old law term, ad urnam, N.G. L. i. 50: the phrase, vega e-n á bál, or, bera á bál, to carry to the pyre, Vkv. 14, cp. Vbm. 54, Fas. i. (Hervar. S.) 487; graphical description of those funerals, vide Edda 37, 38 (Baldrsbrenna), Fas. i. (Völs. S.) 204; cp. 333, Hkr. Yngl. S. ch. 27; cp. also the funeral of the mythical king Sigurd Ring, recorded by Arngrim Lærde in his Supplementum ad Compendium Hist. Norv. MS. (composed A.D. 1597), probably taken from a lost leaf of Skjöldunga Saga (Sögubrot), and mentioned by Munch, Norske Folks Hist. i. 274: mod. of a foaming wind, wrath, etc.bálviðri, n. and bálhvass, bálreiðr, adj., etc.

bál-för, f. a funeral, Edda 37.

bál-gerő, f. id., Edda (Ub.) 288 (Ed. 1852).

bálki, a, m., v. the following word.

BÁLKR, old form bolkr, Grág., dat. bælki, N. G. L. i. 309, acc. pl. bólku or bálku, Lex. Poët. [A. S. bálc], a balk, partition [cp. naval bulk-heads]; b. um þverau hellinn, of a cross wall, Fms. iii. 217, Fas. ii. 333, Grett. 140; sá studdi höndunum á bálkinn, of a balk of wood across the door, Orkn. 112. β. a low wall in a stall or house, N.G. L. i. 2. metaph. a law term, a section in a code of law; bjófa bálkr, Kristindóms b., etc., criminal, ecclesiastical law . . ., Grág., Jb. a body, a bost, in compds as frændbálkr, ættbálkr, herbálkr; syndist honum uarenniligr b. beirra, of a host in line of battle, Bs. i. 667; COMPDS: bálkar-brot, n. the breaking a fence, crib, Gbl. 350, 391. bálkar-lag, n. a sort of metre (from a pr. name Balkr), Edda (Ht.) 142

BARA, u, f. [berja?], a wave, billow, v. alda; as a rule bara denotes the smaller waves caused by the wind (on the surface of larger billows), alda the rollers or swell, Bs. ii. 82, Fas. i. 186, Fms. x. 324 (of a breaker = boði), Gkv. 1. 7: the proverb, sigla milli skers ok báru, cp. inter Scyllam et Charybdin, Fms. ii. 268, Fb. iii. 402; sjaldan er ein báran stök, there is seldom a single billow: of misfortune, cp. Aesch. Prom. 1015 κακῶν τρικυμία, cp. also Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 660. B. metaph. of undulations or rough stripes on the surface of a thing, e.g. the crust of a cheese, Fs. 146; a scull, cp. Eg. 760: baruskel, f. cardia testa cordata pectinata, a shell, Eggert Itin. p. 1010. compos: báru-fall, n. a swell at sea, Al. 50. báru-skel, f., v. above. báru-skot, n. waves from a fresh breeze, wrinkling the surface of the sea, Hkr. i. 50. baru-stormr, m. an unruly sea, Stj. 89. báru-stórr, adj. the souves running bigb, Bs. ii. 82, Fas. i. 72; vide mot-bara, objection.

bár-óttr, adj. waved, of a skull, Eg. 769.

bása, að, = bæsa, to drive cattle into a stall, Gisl. 104.

bas-hella, u, f. a stone wall between two stalls in a combouse, Grett. 112.

BASS, m. [Ulf. bansts = ἀποθήκη; A. S. bós; Engl. provincial boose; Germ. banse], a boose or stall in a cowbouse; kýr á bási, Binda kú á bás, etc., Bjarn. 32, Bs. i. 171; a cow and a bas go together, e.g. in the word 'bautasteinn' never occurs out of Icel. literature, and there only nursery rhyme lulling children to sleep; sofi, sofi ... selr i sja ... kyr i bási, köttr í bári ..., cp. the Engl. in the cow's boose, Bosworth s. v.; bás, T bás is an interi, exclam, for driving cows into stall: also used in Icel, of basins formed in rocks, e. g. at the foot of a waterfall; in local names, Básar, Básendar, etc.: the phrase, hafa sér markadan bás, to bave one's course of life marked out, Isl. bjóðs. i. 538; einginn veit sér ætlaðan bás i örlaganna solli, no one knows what boose is kept for him in the turmoil of the fates, Grönd. 194; vide bjarnbass.

BASUNA, u, f. (for. word), bassoon, Fas. ii. 511.

bat-festr, f. a rope by which a boat is made fast, Jb. 398, 655 xvii. bat-lauss, adj. and batleysi, n. being without a boat, Eb. 142, Jb.

bát-maör, m. a boatman, Hkr. iii. 128, Fms. vi. 320.

BATR, m. [a Scandin, and Low Germ, word used in A.S., Engl., Dutch, but alien to O. H. G. and middle H. G.; even Luther (v. Grimm s.v.) never uses the word; it was later introduced into mod. High Germ., but has a foreign sound there, (Engl. & answers to High Germ. z); the word is in Germ. borrowed from Dutch or English]:-a boat, either a small open fishing vessel or a ship-boat. In Icel. only small boats are called so, those of two or four oars; an eight-oared boat is a 'ship,' Eg. 121, 373, Eb. 142, Nj. 122, Jb. 398, Bs. i. 422, 423: in phrases, ausa bát sinn, Fms. vii. 331; sjá fyrir báti sínum, to go one's own course, to mind one's own business, Sturl. iii. 247: alliteration, eiga bygð í báti, metaph., Bs. i. 422. compps: báts-borð, báts-farmr, m. a boat's freight, n. the side of a boat, Sturl. i. 119. Ann. 1342.

bát-stafn, m. a boar's prow, Fms. viii. 223. beo, n. a bed in a garden, (mod. and rare, cp. reitr.) beo-dukr, m. a bed-covering, Dipl. iii. 4.

beoja, u, f., poët. a wife, bed-fellow, Lex. Poët. beo-mal, n. pl. a curtain lecture, Hm. 85.

BEDR, jar, m. pl. ir, [Ulf. badi; Hel. bed; A. S. bedd; Engl. bed; Germ. bett], a bed; in Icel. sæng is the common word, bedr poet. and rare; in the N. T. κράββατον is always rendered by sæng (tak sæng pina og gakk, Mark ii. 9); beðr is used in alliterative phrases, e. g. beðr eðr blæja, Jb. 28; í beðjum eðr bólstrum, N.G.L. i. 351; deila beð ok bliou, φιλότητι και εὐνή, Od. v. 126; and mostly in the sense of bolster; saxit nam i beðinum staðar, Ld. 140, Gísl. 114: the sea-shore is poët. called szevar-beðir (sofa ek né mátta'k szevarbeðjum á, Edda 16 (in a verse); hvíl-beðr, à resting bed, Akv. 30; rísa upp við beð, to lift the body against the pillow, Bkv. 2. 23: the conjugal hed, bjoba a bed, Ls. 52; sitja a bed, Gh. 19; ganga a bed e-m, to marry, 14: pl., sofa a bedjum, Hm. 96, 100: metaph. a swelling sea, laudr var lagt í bedi (acc. pl.), Fms. vi. 180 (in a verse); cp. skýbólstrar, 'bolster-clouds,' beavy piles of cloud. COMPDS: beojar-dýna, u, f. a feather-bed, Vm. 177. beojar-ver, n. a bolster case, Dipl. 4.

beő-vina, u, f. = beðja, Lex. Poët.

begla, u, f. [bagr], a bungle; sem b. hjá fögru smíði, hence the name

Rímbegla, Rb. (pref.)

BEIDA, dd, [cp. A.S. beade; Old Engl. bead-roll, bidding-prayer, bedes-man; bidja, bad, bedid, Lat. orare, and bida, beid, bedit, Lat. expectare.]

L to ask, beg, with the notion of right; almost as a law term, to request [but bioja, orare]; b. e-n e-s, or b. e-m (for one) e-s; beiða griða Baldri, Edda 36, Gs. verse 2; beiða sér bjargkviðar búa sína fimm, Grág. i. 113, 275; b. sonar bóta, Nj. 21; b. e-s af e-m, Fms. i. 47: with acc., in the law term, b. lögbeiðing, to make a lawful request, Grag. (freq.); ef hann vill eigi eid vinna þá er hann er beiddr (requested) bá verðr hann sekr um þat tólf mörkum, þá er hann beiddr (requested) er hann er bedinn (asked), K. p. K. 146: adding út, b. e-s út, to request the payment of a right, etc., Gpl. 375; b. til e-s, to B. reflex., beidast, to request on one's own behalf; b. laga, request, 656 B. Ld. 76; fars, Grág. i. 90; griða, Fms. viii. 423, x. 172, Nj. 10, 76, Eg. 239, Fms. i. 11: in active sense, Land. 293; beidast út réttar sins, to claim as one's right, Gpl. 187: with infin., Grág. i. 489: with 'at' and a subj., Fms. i. 12, Grág. i. 7.

II. [Dan. bede], as a hunting term, to bunt, chase; b. björnu, to bunt bears: part. beiddr and beior, bunted about. Gisl. 112: hann kvað sveininn hafa verið illa beiddan, Fs. 69, Mirm. 39: the phrase by Kormak, sá er bindr beiðan (i. e. beiddan) hun, seems to mean one who pinions the young bunted bear, viz. as if it were sheep or cattle, Edda 96 (in a verse), symbolical of the earl Sigurd, a mighty Nimrod, who surpassed the wild deer in strength and swiftness; beiðr (= beiddr) fór ek heiman at biðja þín Guðrún, Am. 90, seems to mean bunted by love, amore captus: the verse of Kormak,—bands man ck beida rindi, fascinating, charming woman (?), by whom the poet is made prisoner in love; cp. the poët. compds beiði-hlökk, beiði-sif, beioi-rindr, all epithets of women, Lex. Poët., v. beita.

beiöing and beiöning (Mar. Fr.), f. request, demand, El. 11: waiting, Fms. viii. 151 (dub. reading).

beioni, f. a request, demand, Fms. i. 208; pl., 655 iii. 4; holds b., carnal less, Hom. 17, 25 (Lat. petulantia). beiðala, u, f. a request, demand, Sturl. iii. 231, Sks. 772. beiðslumadr, m. a person asking, Sks. 776, Anecd. 88.

BEIGR or beygr, m. fear: hafa b. af e-m (freq.):-beiguor, m. an atblete, one who inspires fear (?), Edda.

BEIMAR, m. pl. [etym. uncertain], poët. men, beroes, the followers of king Beimi, according to Edda 109; it is more likely that it is a relation to Engl. beam, beaming, and means illustrious, Lex. Poët.

BEIN, n. a word common to the Teut. idioms and peculiar to them; [the Goth. word is not on record, as Luke xxiv. 39 and John xix. 36 are lost in Ulf.; A. S. ban; Engl. bone; Germ. bein; Swed.-Dan. ben (been). Sansk., Gr., Lat., and the Slav. languages agree in a totally different root; Sansk. astbi; Gr. οστέον; Lat. os; the Slav. branch all with an initial c, cp. the Lat. costa. Vide Grimm (s. v.), who suggests a relation to Gr. βαίνω; but the native Icel. words beinn, rectus, and beina, promovere, are more likely roots; the original sense might thus be crus, Gr. σκέλος, but Lat. os the secondary one]:—a bone. the leg from the knee to the foot; freq. in Swed. and Dan., but very rare and nearly obsolete in Icel., where leggr is the common word; hosa strengd at beini, Eg. 602, Fms. x. 331; kálfar á beinum fram, II. gener. = Lat. os, a bone, but originally N. G. L. i. 339. the bones with marrow (Germ. knochen), as may be inferred from the passages, bá er mergund ef b. er í sundr til mergjar, þat er mergr er í, Grág. ii. 11, i. 442, Fms. vii. 118, Vápn. 21, Fas. i. 66, Vígl. 20; stór bein i andliti, with a strongly-marked, bigb-boned face, Band. 7, whence stórbeinóttr, q.v.; viðbeina, a collar-bone; höfuðbein, pl. bead-bones, the scull around the temples and the forehead; er gamlir grisir skyldu halda mér at höfuðbeinum, Grett. (in a verse); strjúka höfuðbeinin; málbein, os loquendi, a small bone in the head; hence the phrase, láta málbeinið ganga, of one talking incessantly and foolishly: metaph. in phrases, láta ganga með beini, to deal blows to the very marrow, deal severely, Ld. 230; hafa bein í hendi (the Danes say, have been i næsen), to bave a boned band, i.e. strength and power, Hrafn. 10, Al. 2. pl. relics, remains (asbes); the phrase, bera bein, to repose, rest, be buried; far þú út til Íslands, þar mun þér auðit verða beinin at bera, Grett. 148, Nj. 201; ok iðrast nú að aptr hvarf að bera b. blá við hrjóstr, Bjarni, 57:—of the relics of saints, Bs. 468, 469; hence beina-færala, u, f. removal of bones (translatio); in the Catholic age, when churches were removed, the churchyard was dug up and the bones removed also, vide Eb. (in fine), Bjarn. 19, K. p. K. 40, Eg. (in fine). beina-vatn, n. water in which relics have been washed, Bs. ii. 173. Fél. ix. records many medic. terms; beina-grind, f. a skeleton; bein-ata, u, f. necrosis, caries ossium; bein-brot, n. fractura ossium, Lv. 68, Grág. ii. 17; bein-kröm, f. racbitis; bein-kveisa, u. f. osteocopus; beinsullr, m. sarcostosis; bein-verkir, m. pl. lassitudo febrilis dolorosa universalis, Gísl. 48, cp. Fél. ix. As a poët. circumlocution, the stone is foldar bein, bone of the earth; szvarbein, bone of the sea, Hlt., Edda (Ht.) 19, 23; cp. the Gr. myth of Deucalion.

beina, d. I. to stretch out, to put into motion; b. flug, of birds, to stretch the wings for flight, Edda 13, Orkn. 28; b. skrið, of a serpent, Stj. 98; b. raust, to lift up the voice, speak loud, Gisl. 57. metaph. to promote, forward; b. for (ferd) e-s, to belp one forwards, Fms. vi. 63, Grág. i. 343, Bret. 38; b. til med e-m, to lend one belp; ek vil b. til med ber bænum minum, I will assist thee in my prayers, Bs. i. 472; b. e-u til e-s, to contribute to a thing; pessu vil ek b. til brennu pinnar, Fb. i. 355; b. at med e-m, to belp, assist one; hlauptú hér út, ok mun ek b. at með þér, Nj. 201; b. at e-u, to lend a band to, Bjarn. 64; b. fyrir e-m, to entertain, of alms or hospitable treatment (whence beini); b. fyrir fátækum, Post. 656 B.

bein-brjóta, braut, to break one's bones, Bárd. 167.

bein-brot, n. the fracture of bone, v. above.

bein-fastr, adj., b. sár, a wound to the bone, Sturl. ii. 222, 655 xi. bein-fiskr, m., v. beitfiskr.

bein-gjald, n. a law term, compensation for a lesion of bone, N.G.L.

bein-groinn, part. bealed (of a bone fracture), Fas. ii. 295.

bein-hákall, m. squalus maximus.

bein-hinna, u, f. periosteum.

bein-högg, n. a blow injuring the bone, opp. to svöðu sár, Sturl. i. 13. beini, m. belp, but exclusively used of bospitable entertainment, kind treatment, bospitality; vinna, veita, e-m beina, Eb. 268; bykir yor eigi sá b. beztr, at yor sé borð sett ok gefinn náttverðr ok síðan fari þér at sofa, Eg. 548; ofgörr er beininn, too much trouble taken, too much attendance, Lv. 38 (Ed. badly 'beinan'); höfðu þar blíðan beina, Fms. ii. 248, iv. 336; mikit er nu um beina binn, what hospitable treatment! Isl. ii. 155, Bjarn. 53-55, Fas. i. 79: ganga um beina, to wait upon the guests, in old times (as at present in Icel.) an honourable task; in great banquets the lady or daughter of the house, assisted by servants, did this office; porhildr (the daughter) gekk um beina, ok baru pær Berghora (the mother) mat á borð, Nj. 50, cp. Lv. l. c., Fms. xi. 52; Hít (the hospitable giantess) gekk um b., Bárð. 174; þiðrandi (the son of the house) gékk um beina, Fms. ii. 194; -but it is added, 'because be was bumble and meek,' for it was not regarded as fit work for a man; cp. þá er konur gengu um b. um dagverð, Sturl, i. 132. compos: beina-b., 625. 96; sagði at honum þætti þat mest b. at eldr væri kveyktr fyrir honum, Fas. i. 230; þar var jafnan nýtt mjöl haft til beinabótar, Sturl. i. 23. beina-maðr, m. a promoter, H. E. ii. 93. beina-spell, n. spoiling of the comfort of the guests, Bs. i. 313, Sturl. i. 22. beinsburfl, adj. ind. in need of bospitable treatment, Fas. iii. 373.

bein-knúta, u, f. a joint bone, Bs. ii. 82. bein-kross, n. a cross of bone, Magn. 512. bein-lauss, adj. without bone, Fas. i. 251.

bein-leiðis, adv. directly, Fas. iii. 444.

bein-leidis, adv. acrecuy, ras. in. 444. bein-leiki, a, m. bospitable treatment, Lv. 5, Eg. 577, Fas. i. 77. BEINN, adj., compar. beinni, superl. beinstr or beinastr. δρθος, Lat. rectus, opp. to wry or curved, in a straight line; b. rás, a straight course, Sks. 217; beinstr vegr, the straightest, shortest way, Fms. ix. 361, Bs. ii. 132 (very freq.): neut. beint, beinast, used as adv. straight; sem beinst à pa, Eg. 386; sva beint, straight on, 742: just, pat kom mér beint (just) i hug, Fms. vi. 213, 369, 371; b. sextigi skipa, precisely sixty sbips, xi. 114; nú beint, just now, iv. 327; var hann þá beint i andlati, just breathed his last, vi. 230. 2. metaph. bospitable; Dagstyggr tók við honum forkunnar vel, ok var við hann hinn beinasti, Sturl, ii. 125; varla náðu þeir at stíga af baki, svá var bóndi beinn við þá, Ísl. ii. 155; Björn var allbeinn við hann um kveldit, Fms. ii. 84; var kerling hin beinasta i öllu, Fas. iii. 394: also as epithet of the inn or house, þar er svá beint (such hospitality), at varla þykkja þeir hafa komit i beinna stad, ... in a more bospitable bouse, i. 77; svafu af þá II. [bein, crus], nótt, ok vóru þeir í allbeinum stað, Eb. 268. in compds, berbeinn, bare-legged, Hbl. 6: as a cognom. of king Magnus from the dress of the Highlanders assumed by him, Fms. vii; harobeinn, bard-legged, cognom., Ld.; mjóbcinn, tape-legged, a nickname, Landn.; Kolbeinn, pr. name, black-legged; hvitbeinn, white-legged, pr. name, Landn., etc. etc.

BEINN, m. ebony, Edda (Gl.), v. basinn.

bein-serkr, m., medic. 'bone-jack,' an abnormal growth, by which the under part of the thorax (the lower ribs) is attached to the spine; as a cognom., Fas. iii. 326; cp. Björn s. v.

bein-skeyti, n. a straight-shooting, good shot, Fms. vii. 120, v. 337, viii. 140, v. l.

bein-skeyttr, adj. straight-shooting, a good shot, Fms. ii. 320.

bein-storr, adj. big-boned, Sturl. i. 8. bein-stökkull, m. a sprinkle (stökkull) of bone, Am. 105.

bein-vaxinn, part. straight-grown, tall and slim.

bein-veggr, m. a wedge of bone, A. A. 270.

bein-verkr, v. bein.

bein-viði, n. and beinviðr, m. ebony, Sks. 90, Bær. 16; Lat. ilex. bein-víðir, m. salix arbuscula, Hjalt.

bein-voxtr, m. bone-growth, bonyness; litill (mikill) beinvoxtum, of small (big) frame, Bs. i. 328.

beiska and beiskja, u, f. bitterness, barsbness, sourness, Sks. 532 B.

beiskaldi, a, m., Lat. acerbus, a nickname, Sturl.

beiskleiki, a, and beiskleikr, s, m. bitterness, barsbness, sourness; Marat, hat er b., Stj. 290, Rb. 336 of sulphur: metaph. acrimony, b. i brjósti, Post. 656 C; hjartans b.; bitr b., Stj. 51, 421, Sks. 730 B, Magn. 502, Bs. i. 743.

beiskliga, adv., esp. in the phrase, grata b., to weep bitterly, Fms. x. 367, Th. 6, the Icel. transl. of Luke xxii. 62; grenja (to bowl) b., Fms. x. 256: bitterly, grimly, bera sik b. hér í móti, Stj. 143.

beiskligr, adj. bitter.

BEISKR, adj. [Dan. beedsk; Swed. besk; it is always spelt with s (not z) in the MSS., and cannot therefore well be traced to bita, qs. beitskr]:—bitter, sour, acrid; salt vatn ok b., Stj. 93; beiskar súrur, bitter berbs, 279. Exod. xii. 8; b. drykkr; amara, þat er b. at vóru máli, 421, 625. 70, Sks. 539: metaph. bitter, Th. 6: exasperated, grim, angry, smalamaðr sagði Hallgerði vígit; hon varð beisk við, Nj. 60, Al. 122.

BEISL, n. a bridle, freq. in old vellum MSS. spelt beils, Fs. 128, 62, Fms. x. 86, xi. 256 C; with z, beizl or mod. beizli, Sks. 84, 87 new Ed., N. G. L. ii. 115, Grett. 122, Fms. viii. 52, v. l., Fas. ii. 508; beisl (with s), Karl. 4, Grág. i. 439 (Kb. and Sb.), Stj. 206, Nj. 33, Fms. x. 86, Flov. 26, etc. The word is not to be derived from bita; this may with certainty be inferred from comparison with the other Teut. idioms, and even in the Roman tongues we find r after the first letter: A.S. bridle and bridels; O. H. G. brittill; Dutch bridel; Engl. bridle; these forms seem to point to the Lat. frenum; the Scandin, idioms seem to have elided the r; Swed. betsel; Dan. bidsel; Icel. beils and beisl or beizl; many words referring to horse taming and racing are not genuine Scandinavian, but of foreign extraction; so is södull, saddle, derived from A.S. sadol, Lat. sedile. COMPDS: beisl-al, f. bridle-rein, Flov. beisl-hringr, m. bridle-ring, Fs. 62. beisl-tamr, adj. used to the bridle, Grag. i. beisl-taumar, m. pl. bridle-reins, Fms. xi. 256, Sturl. iii. 314; 439. cp. bitull.

beisla, ad, to bridle, Stj. 206.

BEIT, n.

bot, s. accommodation, comfort for guests; par var morgu við slegit til fin England the rector of a parish is said to have 'the bite' of the COMPDS: beitar-land, n. a pasture land. maor, m. owner of a pasture, Grag. ii. 286, Jb. 245. beitar-tollr. m. a toll or fee for pasturage. II. poët. a ship, Lex. Poët.

BEIT, f. a plate of metal mounted on the brim, e.g. of a drinking horn, the carved metal plate on an old-fashioned saddle, Fms. iii. 190: skálir með gyltum beitum, B. K. 84, Bs. ii. 244; cp. Caes. Bell. Gall. 6. 28 (Germani urorum cornua) a labris argento circumcludunt.

beita, u, f. bait, Bs. ii. 179, Hym. 17, Edda 38; now esp. for fish, and used in many compds, e. g. boitu-fjara, u, f. the shore where shell-fish for bait are gathered; beitu-lauss, adj.; beitu-leysi, n., etc.

BEITA, tt, [v. bita, beit, mordere], prop. mordere facere. graze, feed sheep and cattle; the animals in dat., b. svinum, Grag. ii. 231; nautum, Eg. 721: the pasture in acc., b. haga, Grág. ii. 224. 225; engi, 228; afrétt, 302, 329; land, 329, Eg. 721: absol., Grág. ii. 249: with 'i' and dat., b. i skógi, 299: 'i' with acc., b. svínum i land annars manns, 231: b. upp land (acc.), to spoil the pasture by grazing, lay it bare; beittust bá upp allar engjar, Eg. 712: with dat., b. upp (to consume) engjum ok heyjum, Fms. vi. 104. II. to bandle, manage a (cutting) instrument; with dat., b. skutli, a barpoon, Fbr. 144; sverði, a sword, Fms. viii. 96, xi. 270; vápnum, 289. nautical term, to cruise, prop. to let the ship 'bite' the wind; undu beir segl sin ok beittu út at Njörvasundum allfagran byr, Orkn. 356; beita beir i brott frå landinu, Ld. 76; fengu beir beitt fyrir Skotland, they sailed round, weathered S., Eg. 405; beittu bá sem þverast austr fyrir landit, 161; b. undir vedrit, to tack, Fb. i. 511; b. i haf út, Orkn. 402: metaph., varð jafnan þeirra hlutr betri, er til hans hnigu, en hinna, er frá beittu, who steered away from him, Fms. viii. 47. a hunting term, to bunt (cp. beiða), the deer in acc., the dogs or hawks in dat.; b. e-n hundum, to set bounds on bim; konungr sagdi at hann skyldi afklæða, ok b. hundum til bana, Fms. ii. 173, x. 326; beita haukum, to chase with bawks, Fas. i. 175: to chase, svá beitum vér björnuna, Hkr. ii. 369 MS. B, vide bauta; hann . . . hasti beitt fimm trönur, be bad caught five cranes, Fagrsk. 77, where Hkr. I. c. has 'veitt;' svá beitu vér bjarnuna á mörkinni norðr, sagði hann, O. H. L. 70, cp. above; verðr Salomon konungr varr at dýr hans eru beitt, þiðr. 231; beir beita bar mart dyr, hjörtu ok björnu ok hindr, 232: metaph. and reflex., b. e-m, sögðu þeir mundu eigi þeim birni beitast, at deila um mál hans við ofreflismenn slíka, they said they would not hunt that bear, Ölk. 34: metaph., b. e-n brögðum, vélum, vélræðum . . . , to bunt one down with tricks or schemes; þykist þér nú allmjök hafa komizt fyrir mik í viti, ok beittan brögðum í þessu, Ísl. ii. 164; vélum, 623; úlögum, Sks. 22; illu, Fas. i. 208: recipr., við höfum opt brögðum beizt, ... schemed against each other, Fms. xi. 263; stundum beittust þau vélræðum, i. 57. β. to bait; the bait in dat., the angle in acc. to yoke to, of horse or cattle for a vehicle, the cattle almost always in acc.; þá vóru yxn fyrir sleða beittir, Eb. 172; bjó sér vagn ok beitti hest, Fms. x. 373, Gkv. 2. 18; ok beittu fyrir tvá sterka yxn, Eb. 176, Grett. 112, Stj. 206: with dat., b. hestum, vagni, to drive; but acc., beittu, Siguror, hinn blakka mar, S. saddle thy black steed, Ghv. 18: metaph., b. e-n fyrir e-t, to put one at the head of it, Sks. 710: reflex., beitast fyrir e-t, to lead a cause, to manage it, Ld. 196, Fms. viii. 22, Hkr. ii. 168. to bammer iron or metal into plates, v. beit, f.

beit-fiskr, m. fish to be caught with bait, in the phrase, bita mætti b. ef at borði væri dreginn, Fbr. 180, Gísl. 135 reads beinfiskr, no doubt wrongly: the proverb denotes a fine game, one played with slight trouble. beiti, n. pasturage, Fbr. 65 (1852).

beiti, n., botan. erica vulgaris, beather, ling, commonly beiti-lyng, Hm. 140.

beiti-ass, m., naut. term, a sail-yard, Fms. ii. 230, iii. 26, Hkr. i. 59. beitill, m. (v. goibeitill), botan. equisetum arvense, mare's tail, Hjalt. beiting, f. grazing, Grág. ii. 224, Gullp. 19, Landn. 289, Ld. 148. beitinga-mal, n. a lawsuit about right of grazing or pasturage, Landn. 287, (Ed. betting, badly.)

beiti-teigr, m. a tract of pasturage, Grag. ii. 227, 246.

beit-lostinn, part. mounted with a metal rim, B. K. 84, D. N. i. 537 (of a book).

beit-stokkr, m., cognom., Fms. viii. 327.

beittr, adj. sharp, cutting (= bitr), of cutting instruments, Eg. 746 (freq.) bekkjast, o and t, dep. to envy one, in the phrase, b. til vio e-n, to seek a quarrel with, Grett. 127; the metaphor from guests (beggars) elbowing one another off the benches, cp. Hm. 31.

bekkju-nautr, m. a bench-fellow, Fms. ii. 48.

bekk-klæði, n. the covering of a bench, Fms. vii. 307, Js. 78.

BEKKR, jar, m. pl. ir, gen. pl. ja, dat. jum, [A.S. benc; Engl. bench, bank; Germ. bank; Dan. bænk; Icel. per assimil. kk; the Span. banco is of Teut. origin]:—a bench, esp. of the long benches in an old hall used instead of chairs; the north side of a hall (that looking towards the sun) was called zori bekkr, the upper bench (Gl. 337, Ld. 294); the southern side úzdri bekkr, the lower (inferior) bench, Nj. 32, I. pasturage, Grág. ii. 224, 263, 286; á beit, grazing: LEg. 547, Fms. iv. 439, xi. 70, Glúm. 336, Ld. J. c.; thus sitja á em differed in Icel. and Norway, and in each country at various times; as regards the Icel. custom vide Nj. ch. 34, Sturl. i. 20, 21, the banquet at Reykhólar, A.D. 1120, ii. 182, the nuptials at Flugumýri, Lv. ch. 13. Ld. ch. 68, Gunnl. S. ch. 11, Isl. ii. 250, cp. Nj. 220: á báða bekki, on both sides of the ball, Isl. ii. 348, cp. Gísl. 41 (in a verse), etc.: as to foreign (Norse) customs, vide esp. Fagrsk. ch. 216, cp. Fms. vi. 390, xi. (Jómsv. S.) 70, Glúm. ch. 6, Orkn. ch. 70, Sturl. ii. 126; see more minutely under the words skáli, öndvegi, pallr, etc.; breiða, strá bekki, is to strew or cover the benches in preparing for a feast or wedding; bekki breiði (imper. pl., MS. breiða), dress the benches! Alvm. 1; bekki at strá, Em. verse 1; standit upp jötnar ok stráit bekki, pkv. 22; brynjum um bekki stráð, the benches (wainscots?) covered with coats of mail, Gm. 44: in these phrases bekkir seems to be a collective name for the hall, the walls of which were covered with tapestry, the floor with straw, as in the Old Engl. halls. The passage Vtkv. 10-hveim eru bekkir baugum sánir-is dubious (stráðir?); búa bekki, to dress the benches; er Baldrs feðr bekki búna veit ek at sumblum, Km. 25; breitt var á bekki, brúðr sat á stól, Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 466; vide brúðarbekkr. compps: bakkjar-bot, f. the pride of a bench, a bride, cognom., Landn. jar-gjöf, f. 'bench-gift,' an old custom to offer a gift to the bride whilst she sate on the bride's bench at the wedding festival, Ld. 188, cp. Fms. ii. 133, and in many passages in Fritzner from D. N. it seems to be synonymous with linfé (lin, a veil), as the bride's face on the wedding day was veiled; ganga und lini is a poët, phrase used of the bride on the bridal bench, yet Fms. x. 313, linfé eða b. 2. as a law term, cp. Engl. bench; the benches in the lögrétta in Icel. were, however, usually called pallr, v. the Grag. 3. the coloured stripes in a piece of stuff.

BEKKB, s, and jar, m. [North. E. beck; Germ. bacb; Dan. bæk; Swed. back], a rivulet, brook. In Icel, the word is only poët, and very rare; the common word even in local names of the 10th century is lækr (Lækjarbugr, -óss, etc.); Sökkva-bekkr, Edda, is a mythical and pre-Icel. name; in prose bekkr may occur as a Norse idiom, Fms. vi. 164, 335, viii. 8, 217, Jb. 268, or in Norse laws as in Gbl. 418. At present it is hardly understood in Icel. and looked upon as a Danism. The phrase par er (breiðr) bekkr á milli, there is a beck between, of two persons separated so as to be out of each other's reach-may be a single exception; perhaps the metaphor is taken from some popular belief like that recorded in the Lay of the Last Minstrel, note to 3.13, and in Burns' Tam o' Shanter—'a running stream they dare na cross;' some hint of a like belief in Icel. might be in Isl. pjóðs. i. 356. It is now and then used in poetry, as, yfir um Kedrons breiðan bekk, Pass. 1. 15. bekkjar-kvern, f. a water-mill, B. K. 45 (Norse). bekkjar-rás, f. the bed of a beck, Stj. MS. col. 138.

bekk-skrautuor, m. (cp. bekkjarbót), the pride of the bench, epithet to Bragi, Ls. 15.

bekk-sögn, f., poët. the people seated in a hall, Gisl. (in a verse).

bekk-pili, n. the wainscoted walls of a ball, Em. 1.

BEKRI, 2, m. a ram, Lex. Poet.; in prose in the form, brjótz bekkrann, to break the ram's neck, Grett. 149: now also bekra, ad, to bleat, Dan. bræge (rare).

belg-bera, u, f. a ' wallet-bearer,' a beggar, wretch, in swearing; vándar belgberur, wretches ! Nj. 142, v.l., or a monster, v. the following word. belg-borinn, part. a monster child, without any trace of face, N.G.L.

belgja, 8, [Hel. belgan, irâ inflari], to inflate, puff out, Fms. iii. 201, Anal. 200; b. augun, to goggle, Bárð. 171: to drink as a cow.

BELGB, jar, m. pl. ir, [Lat. follis; Ulf. balgs = doκbs; A.S. bälg; Dutch balg; Engl. belly]:—the skin, taken off whole (of a quadruped; hamr is the skin of a bird, hams that of a snake), nauts-belgr, katt-belgr, otrs-belgr, melrakka-belgr, hafr-belgr, Grág. i. 500, 501, Fas. ii. 516 (of a bear), Edda 73 (otter): they were used as bags, in which to carry flour (mjölbelgr), butter (smjörbelgr), liquids (vinbelgr), curds (skyrbelgr), herbs (jafnabelgr), or the like, (bulgos Galli sacculos scorteos appellant, Festus); i laupum eða belgjum, Ghl. 492, cp. Grett. 107, and the funny taunt in Fms. xi. 157—verið get ek hafa nökkura þá er þaðan munu hafa borið raufóttara belginn (i. e. more of scars and wounds) en svá sem þú hefir borit, því at mér þykir sjá bezt til fallinn at geyma i hveitimjöi, the rebuke of a lady to her sweetheart on his having fled out of battle with whole skin fit to keep flour in it, cp. also Nj. 2. bellows (smiðju-belgr), Edda 70, þiðr. 91. 3. the curved II. metaph., letibelgr, part of a letter of the alphabet, Skálda 177. a lazy fellow, Fél. 12. 53: belgr also denotes a withered, dry old man (with a skin like parchment), with the notion of wisdom, cp. the proverb, opt ór skörpum belg skilin orð koma, and, a little above, opt er gott þat er gamlir kveða, Hm. 135; böl vantú bróðir er þú þann belg leystir, opt or beim (burrum?) belg böll ráð koma, ... deep schemes often come out of an old skin, Hom. 27: the proverb, hafa skal ráð þó ór refsbelg komi, take good advice, even if coming from an old fox-skin! Gullp. ch. 18. People say in Icel. lesa, tala, læra i belg, to read, talk, learn in a bag, to read or talk on foolisbly, or to learn by rote; cp. the tale about the stone in a berry.

æðra or úæðra bekk is a standing phrase: the placing of the benches or orðabelgr, Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 479; cp. Asbjörnsen, Norse Tales, New Coll. Chr. 1856. 2. botan. gluma, Hjalt.

beli, a, m. belly, a cognom., Fas. i. 347: botan. legumen.

beli, n. dat. bellowing; med beli ok öskri, Fas. iii. 413. belja, ad, to bellow, Vápn. 21, Hkr. i. 319, Eb. 320.

beljan, f. bellowing, lowing, Grett. 112, Ber. 19.

BELLA, ball, a defect. strong verb [cp. Lat. pello, Gr. πάλλω,], to bit, burt, tell upon; with dat., ekki má ófeigum bella, i. e. one not fated to die is proof against all sbots, Isl. ii. 305; tólf berserkjum, þeim er peir ætluðu, at ekki mundi b., Fas. iii. 140, 149; ok ætluðu sér ekki b. mundu, Ver. 10; ball þér nú, Bófi (did it strike thee?) ... Ball víst, sagði hann, ok ball hvergi meir en þú hugðir, Eb. 240; þykir nú sem þeim muni ekki b., Sturl. iii. 237.

bella, d, [A.S. bealdjan; Hel. beldjan], to deal with one in a certain way, esp. of unfair dealing; with dat., hvar viti menn slíku bellt við konungmann, who did ever see a king thus dealt with, Eg. 415; hvat skal ek göra við biskup, er slíku hefir bellt, ... who has dared to deal thus, Orkn. 252; hver...mun hafa þessu bellt, at brjóta guð várn Bal, Stj. 391. Judges vi. 99; but more freq. in poetry, bella svikum, to deal in treason, Hallfred; lygi, pkv. 10; bragði, Am. 55; b. glaumi, gleði, to be in bigb spirits, Gkv. 2. 29; cp. mod. bralla, 20, brellur, f. pl. tricks.

belli-brago, n. knavish dealing, a trick, Grett. 91, porst. hv. 46.

bellinn (mod. brellinn), adj. trickish, Grett. 22 new Ed.

bell-visi, f. trickishness, Finnb. 294.

BELTI, n. [Lat. balteus; Engl. belt], a belt, esp. a belt of metal (silver) or embroidered, esp. belonging to a woman, Ld. 284, Sturl. iii. 189, Nj. 2, 24: belonging to a man, with a knife fastened to it, Fs. 101, Fms. iv. 27; kníf ok belti ok vóru þat góðir gripir, Gísl. 54, Fms. ix. 25, Fb. ii. 8, Nj. 91. compps: belta-drattr, m. a game, two boxers tied together with one girdle, also in use in Sweden: hence a close struggle, Fms. viii. 181. beltis-puss, m. a belt-pocket, Gullb. 47, Sturl. beltis-staor, m. the belt-waist, Gisl. 71, Fms. iv. 56. l. c., Art. 70. In poetry the sea is called the belt of islands or of the earth. Mare Balticum, is derived from the Lithuanian baltas = albus. astron, a zone, himinbelti, hitabelti, kuldabelti.

BEN, jar, f. pl. jar (neut., N.G. L. i. 387; stór ben, acc. pl. n., Gísl. (in a verse), v. bani above. I. a wound; as a law term, esp. a mortal wound (cp. bani); thus defined, skal sor lýsa, en ben ef at bana verðr, Grág. ii. 18, 29, 70; benjar á hinum dauða manni, 28; svá skal nefna vátta at sárum sem at benjum, 30; and in the compds, benjalýsing, f. a sort of coroner's inquest upon a slain man, Grág. ii. 29; benja-vattr, m. a sort of coroner's jury, defined in Grag. ii. 28-beir eigu at bera, hve margar benjar eru, they have to give a verdict how many mortal wounds there are; en búakviði (the jury) hverir sannir eru at; benja-vætti, n. the verdict of a benjaváttr, Grág. id. commonly 'ben' means a small bleeding wound; peirri bloogri ben, er Otkell veitti mér áverka, Nj. 87, Sd. 139, Fs. 144, in the last passage, however, of a mortal wound. It is now medic. the wound produced by letting blood. In old poetry it is used in a great many compds.

bend, f. = ben, N. G. L. i. 159, 166.

benda, u, f. a bundle, Gpl. 492: now metaph. entanglement. bond, tie, v. höfuðbenda: naut. term, a stay.

bonda, d, later t, [Goth. bandvian], to beckon, give a sign with the bands or eyes: with dat., hann bendi beim at fylgja ser, Hom. 113, K. b. K. 37, Orkn. 426: metaph. to forebode, betoken, Hom. 137, Skálda 170, Stj. 101: with acc. of the thing, Akv. 8.

benda, d, mod. t, [band], Lat. curvare, to bend; b. sverð um kné sér, Fms. x. 213; benda boga, to bend a bow, Grag. ii. 21, Fas. ii. 88, 330; b. upp, Nj. 107; benda hlífar, Rm. 39; prob. = Lat. flectere, nectere, to join, as in mod usage, b. tunnu, to boop a tub: recipr., bendast á um e-t, to strive, contest about, Fms. viii. 391, v.l.: metaph. to give away, Al. 44. bendi, n. a cord, Fms. iii. 209.

bendill, m., dimin. a small cord, string, Edda 231. 2. a sort of seed, Edda (Gl.)

bending, f., Lat. nutus, a sign, token, Rb. 348, Fms. i. 10; bod ok b., Stj. 36: foreboding, betokening, Fms. vii. 195, Ld. 260.

benja, ao, to wound mortally, Fm. 25.

ben-lauss, adj. free from wounds, N. G. L. i. 357.

ben-rögn, n. an απ. λεγ., Nj. 107 (cp. the verse, p. 118), bloody rain, a prodigy, foreboding, slaughter, plague, or like events, cp. Eb. ch. 51, Dl. verse I.

benzl, n. a bow in a bent state; taka boga af benzlum, to unbend a bow, Str. 44.

BER, n., gen. pl. berja, dat. jum, [Goth. basi; A.S. beria; Germ. beere; cp. also the A.S. basu]: -a berry, almost always in pl., Grag. ii. 347; lesa ber, to gather berries, Jb. 310, Bs. i. 135:—distinguished, vinber, the vine-berry, grape; esp. of Icel, sorts, blaber, the bleaberry, bilberry, wbortleberry; adalblaber, Vaccinium myrtillus; krækiber, empetrum; einirber, juniperus; hrutaber, rubus saxatilis; jardarber, strawberry; sortuber or mulningr, arbutus, Hjalt. COMPDS: berja-hrat, n. the berja-mór, m. baccetum; fara a b., to go a-blackberja-vin, n. berry-wine (cp. Engl. gooseberry-, elderberry- D. svivirding, x. 333: absol., botti honum mikit vig Kjartans, en bo bar berrying. wine), Bs. i. 135.

BERA, u, f. I. [björn], a sbe-bear, Lat. ursa; the primitive root 'ber' remains only in this word (cp. berserkr and berfiall), björn (q. v.) being the masc. in use, Landn. 176, Fas. i. 367, Vkv. 9: in many Icel. local names, Beru-fjörðr, -vík, from Polar bears; fem. names, Bera, II. a shield, poët., the proverb, baugr er Hallbera, etc., Landn. á beru sæmstr, to a shield fits best a baugr (q. v.), Lex. Poët., Edda (Gl.); hence names of poems Beru-drápa, Eg.

bera, 20, [berr, nudus], to make bare, Lat. nudare; hon beradi likam sinn, Bret. 22: impers., berar halsinn (acc.), the neck became bare, Bs. i. 624. BERA, bar, baru, borit, pres. berr,-poët. forms with the suffixed negative; 3rd pers. sing. pres. indic. berrat, Hm. 10; 3rd pers. sing. pret. barat, Vellekla; 1st pers. sing. barkak, Eb. 62 (in a verse); barkat ek, Hs. 8; and pers. sing. bartattu; 3rd pers. pl. barut, etc., v. Lex. Poët. [Gr. φέρειν; Lat. ferre; Ulf. bairan; A.S. beran; Germ. gebaren; Engl. bear; Swed. bara; Dan. bære].

A. Lat. ferre, portare: I. prop. with a sense of motion. to bear, carry, by means of the body, of animals, of vehicles, etc., with acc., Egil tók mjöðdrekku eina mikla, ok bar undir hendi sér, Eg. 237; bar hann heim hris, Rm. 9; konungr lét bera inn kistur tvær, báru tveir menn hverja, Eg. 310; bera farm af skipi, to unload a ship, Ld. 32; bera (farm) á skip, to load a sbip, Nj. 182; tóku alla ösku ok báru á á (annem) út, 623. 36; ok bar þat (carried it) í kerald, 43, K. b. K. 92; b. mat a bord, i stofu, to put the meat on table, in the oven; b. mat af bordi, to take it off table, Eb. 36, 266, Nj. 75, Fms. ix. 219, etc. Lat. gestare, ferre, denoting to wear clothes, to carry weapons; skikkja dýr er konungr hafði borit, Eg. 318; b. kórónu, to wear the crown, Fms. x. 16; atgeir, Nj. 119; vápn, 209: metaph., b. ægishjálm, to inspire fear and awe; b. merki, to carry the flag in a battle, Nj. 274, Orkn. 28, 30, 38, Fms. v. 64, vi. 413; bera fram merki, to advance, move in a battle. 3. b. e-t á hesti (áburðr), to carry on borseback; Audunn bar mat á hesti, Grett. 107; ok bar hris á hesti, 76 new Ed.; beir báru á sjau hestum, 98 new Ed. II. without a sense of motion: to give birth to; [the root of bam, bairn; byrja, incipere; burdt, partus; and burr, filius: cp. Lat. parere; also Gr. φέρειν, Lat. ferre, of childbearing.] In Icel. prose, old as well as mod., 'ala' and 'fæða' are used of women; but 'bera,' of cows and sheep; hence saudburdr, casting of lambs, kýrburðr; a cow is snembær, síðbær, Jólabær, calves early, late, at Yule time, etc.; var ekki van at hon (the cow) mundi b, fyr en um várit, Bs. i. 193, 194; kýr hafði borit kálf, Bjarn. 32; bar hvárrtveggi sauðrinn sinn burð, Stj. 178: the participle borinn is used of men in a great many compds in a general sense, aptrborinn, árborinn, endrborinn, frjálsborinn, goðborinn, höldborinn, hersborinn, konungborinn, óðalborinn, samborinn, sundrborinn, velborinn, úborinn, þrælborinn, etc.; also out of compds, mun ek eigi upp gefa bann sóma, sem ek em til borinn, ... entitled to by inberitance, Ld. 102; hann hafdi blindr verit borinn, born blind, Nj. 152, Hdl. 34, 42, Vsp. 2: esp. borinn e-m, born of one, Rm. 39, Hdl. 12, 23, 27, Hom. 2, Gs. 9, Vhm. 25, Stor. 16, Vkv. 15; borinn frá e-m, Hdl. 24: the other tenses are in theol. prose used of Christ, hans blezaða son er virðist at láta berast hingað í heim af sinni blezaðri móður, Fms. i. 281; otherwise only in poetry, eina dóttur (acc.) berr álfröðull (viz. the sun, regarded as the mother), Vpm. 47; hann Gjálp um bar, hann Greip um bar . . . , Hdl. 36: borit (sup.), Hkv. 1. 1. β. of trees, flowers; b. ávöxt, blóm ..., to bear fruit, flower . . . (freq.); bar aldinviorinn tvennan bloma, Fms. ix. 265; cp. 2. denoting to load, with acc. the phrase, bera sitt barr, v. barr. of the person and dat, of the thing: a. in prop. sense; hann hafði borit sik mjök vápnum, be bad loaded bimself with arms, i. e. wore heavy B. but mostly in a metaph, sense; b, e-n armour, Sturl. iii. 250. ofrafii, ofrmagni, ofrlidi, ofriki, magni, to bear one down, to overcome, oppress one, by odds or superior force, Grág. i. 101, ii. 195, Nj. 80, Hkr. ii. 371, Gpl. 474, Stj. 512, Fms. iii. 175 (in the last passage a dat. pers. badly); b. e-n ráðum, to overrule one, Nj. 198, Ld. 296; b. e-n málum, to bear bim down (wrongfully) in a lawsuit, Nj. 151; b. e-n bjóri, to make drunk, Vkv. 26: medic., borinn verkjum, sótt, Bjarn. 68, Og. 5; bölvi, Gg. 2: borne down, feeling beavy pains; bess er borin ván, no bope, all bope is gone, Ld. 250; botinn sok, charged with a cause, Fms. v. 324, H. E. i. 561; brádum borinn, to be taken by surprise, Fms. iv. 111; b. fé, gull & c-n, to bring one a fee, gold, i.e. to bribe one, Nj. 62; borinn baugum, bribed, Alvm. 5; always in a bad sense, cp. the law phrase, b. fé i dóm, to bribe a court, Grág., Nj. 240. 3. to bear, support, sustain, Lat. sustinere, tolerare, ferre: a. properly, of a ship, horse, vehicle, to bear, be capable of bearing; beir hlodu bæði skipin sem borð baru, all that they could carry, Eb. 302;—a ship 'berr' (carries) such and such a weight; but 'tekr' (takes) denotes a measure of fluids. metaph. to sustain, support; dreif þannig svá mikill mannfjöldi at landit fékk eigi borit, Hkr. i. 56; but metaph. to bear up against, endure, support grief, sorrow, etc., syndist öllum at Guð hefði nær ætlað hvat hann mundi b. mega, Bs. i. 139; biðr hann friðar ok þykist ekki mega b.

hann drengilega, be bore it manfully, Ld. 226; er bat uvizka, at b. eigi slikt, not to bear or put up with, Glum. 327; b. harm, to grieve, Frns. xi. 425: in the phrases, b. sik, b. af sér, berask, berask vel (illa, lítt), to bear oneself, to bear up against misfortune; Gubrunu potti mikit frafall porkels, en bó bar hon sköruliga af sér, she bore her bravely up, Ld. 326-328; lezt hafa spurt at ekkjan bæri vel af ser harmana. Eb. 88; berask af; hversu bersk Audr af um bróðurdauðann? (bose does sbe bear it?); hón bersk af litt (sbe is much borne down) ok þykir mikit. Gisl. 24; mun oss vandara gört en öðrum at vér berim oss vel (Lat. fortiter ferre), Nj. 197; engi maðr hefði þar jamvel borit sik, none bad borne bimself so boldly, Sturl. iii. 132; b. sik vel upp, to bear well up against, bear a stout beart, Hrafn. 17; b. sik beiskliga (sorely), Stj. 143; b. sik litt, to be downcast, Fms. ii. 61; b. sik at göra e-t, to do one's best, try a thing. III. in law terms or modes of procedure: bera járn, the ordeal of bearing bot iron in the hand, cp. járnburðr, skírsla. This custom was introduced into Scandinavia together with Christianity from Germany and England, and superseded the old heathen ordeals 'hólmganga,' and 'ganga undir jarðarmen,' v. this word. In Norway, during the civil wars, it was esp, used in proof of paternity of the various pretenders to the crown, Fms. vii. 164, 200, ix. Hak. S. ch. 14, 41-45, viii. (Sverr. S.) ch. 150, zi. (Jómsv. S.) ch. 11, Grett. ch. 41, cp. N.G.L. i. 145, 389. Trial by ordeal was abolished in Norway A.D. 1247. In Icel. it is very rarely mentioned, vide however Lv. ch. 23 (paternity), twice or thrice in the Sturl. i. 56, 65, 147, and Grag. i. 341, 361; it seems to have been very seldom used there, (the passage in Grett. S. I. c. refers to Norway.) 2. bera út (hence útburor, q.v.), to expose children; on this heathen custom, vide Grimm R. A. In heathen Icel., as in other parts of heathen Scandinavia, it was a lawful act, but seldom exercised; the chief passages on record are, Gunnl. S. ch. 3 (ok þat var þá siðvandi nokkurr, er land var allt alheiðit, at þeir menn er félitlir vóru, en stóð ómegð mjök til handa létu út bera börn sín, ok þótti þó illa gört ávalt), Fs. Vd. ch. 37, Harð. S. ch. 8, Rd. ch. 7, Landn. v. ch. 6, Finnb. ch. 2, porst. Uxaf. ch. 4, Hervar. S. ch. 4, Fas. i. 547 (a romance); cp. Jómsv. S. ch. 1. On the introduction of Christianity into Icel. A. D. 1000, it was resolved that, in regard to eating of horse-flesh and exposure of children, the old laws should remain in force, Ib. ch. 9; as Grimm remarks, the exposure must take place immediately after birth, before the child had tasted food of any kind whatever, and before it was besprinkled with water (ausa vatni) or shewn to the father, who had to fix its name; exposure, after any of these acts, was murder, cp. the story of Liafburga told by Grimm R. A.); v. also a Latin essay at the end of the Gunnl. S. (Ed. 1775). The Christian Jus Eccl. put an end to this heathen barbarism by stating at its very beginning, ala skal barn hvert er borit veror, i.e. all children, if not of monstrous shape, sball be brought up, N. G. L. i. 339, 363. B. b. út (now more usual, heija út, Am. 100), to carry out for burial; vera erfor ok út borinn, Odd. 20; var hann heygðr, ok út borinn at fornum sið, Fb. i. 123; b. á bál, to place (the body and treasures) upon the pile, the mode of burying in the old heathen time, Fas. i. 487 (in a verse); var hon borin á bálit ok slegit í eldi, Edda 38.

B. Various and metaph. cases. I. denoting motion: bera' is in the Grag. the standing law term for delivery of a verdict by a jury (búar), either 'bera' absol. or adding kvið (verdict); bera å e-n, or b. kvið á e-n, to give a verdict against, declare guilty; bera af e-m, or b. af e-m kvidinn, to give a verdict for; or generally, bera, or b. um e-t, to give a verdict in a case; bera, or b. vitni, vætti, also simply means to testify, to witness, Nj. 111, cp. kviðburðr (delivering of verdict), vitnisburdr (bearing witness), Grag. ii. 28; eigi eigu buar (jurors) enn at b. um pat hvat lög eru á landi hér, the jurors have not to give verdict in (to decide) what is law in the country, cp. the Engl. maxim, that jurors have only to decide the question of evidence, not of law, Grág. (Kb.) ch. 85; eigi eru búar skildir at b. um hvatvetna; um engi mál eigu beir at skilja, pau er erlendis (abroad) hafa görzt, id.; the form in delivering the verdict-höfum vér (the jurors), orðit á eitt sáttir, berum á kviðburðinn, berum hann sannan at sökinni, Nj. 238, Grág. i. 49, 22, 138, etc.; i annat sinn báru þeir á Flosa kviðinn, id.; b. annattveggja af eðr á; b. undan, to discharge, Nj. 135; b. kvið í hag (for), Grág. i. 55; b. lýsingar vætti, Nj. 87; b. vitni ok vætti, 28, 43, 44; b. ljúgvitni, to bear false witness, Grag. i. 28; b. ord, to bear witness to a speech, 43; bera frændsemi sundr, to prove that they are not relations, N.G. L. i. 147: reflex., berask or vætti, to prove that oneself is wrongly summoned to bear witness or to give a verdict, 44: berask in a pass. sense, to be proved by evidence, ef vanefni b. bess manns er á hönd var lýst, Grág. i. 257; nema jafnmæli berisk, 229; þótt þér berisk þat faðerni er þú segir, Fms. vii. 164; hann kvaost ætla, at honum mundi berask, that be would be able to get evidence for, Fs. 46.

β. gener. and not as a law term;
b. 6, b. 6 hendr, to charge; b. e-n undan, to discharge, Fs. 95; eigi erum β. gener. and not as a law term; vér þessa valdir er þú berr á oss, Nj. 238, Ld. 206, Fms. iv. 380, xi. 251, Th. 78; b. e-m & brynn, to throw in one's face, to accuse, Greg. 51; b.

b. e-m gott vitni, to give one a good . . . , II; b. e-m vel (illa) söguna, G. parries the thrust off, Fms. x. 421; cp. A. II, 3, B. to bear favourable (unfavourable) witness of one, 271. 2. to bear by word of mouth, report, tell, Lat. referre; either absol. or adding kveðju, orð, orðsending, eyrindi, boð, sögu, njósn, frétt . . ., or by adding a prep. b. fram, frá, upp. fyrir; b. kveði, u to bring a greeting, compliment, Eg. 127; b. crindi (sín) fyrir e-n, to plead one's case before one, or to tell one's errand, 472, 473; b. njósn, to apprise, Nj. 131; b. fram, to deliver (a speech), talaði jungherra Magnús hit fyrsta erindi (M. made bis first speech in public), ok fanst mönnum mikit um hversu übernsliga fram var borit, Fms. x. 53; (in mod. usage, b. fram denotes gramm. b. pronounce, hence 'framburðr,' pronunciation'); mun ek þat nú fram b., I sball now tell, produce it, Ld. 256, Eg. 37; b. frá, to attest, relate with emphasis; má bat frá b., Dropl. 21; b. upp. to produce, mention, tell. bôtt slík lygi số upp borin fyrir hann, though such a lie be told bim, Eg 50; bær (viz. charges) urðu engar upp bornar (produced) við Rút, Nj. 11; berr Sigtryggr begar upp erindi sin (cp. Germ. offenbaren), 271, Ld. 256; b. upp gatu, to give (propound) a riddle, Stj. 411, Fas. i. 464; b. fyrir, to plead as an excuse; b. saman rad sin, or the like, to consult, Nj. 91; eyddist þat ráð, er þeir báru saman, which they had designed. Post. 656 A. ii; b. til skripta, to confess (eccl.), of auricular confession, Hom. 124, 655 xx. II. in a metaphorical or circumlocutory sense, and without any sense of motion, to keep, bold, bear, of a title; b. nafn, to bear a name, esp. as honour or distinction; tignar nafn, haulds nafn, jarls nafn, lends manns nafn, konungs nafn, bónda nafn, Ems. i. 17. vi. 278, xi. 44, Gbl. 106: in a more metaph. sense, denoting endowments, luck, disposition, or the like, b. (ekki) gæfu, hamingiu, auðnu til e-s, to enjoy (enjoy not) good or bad luck, etc.; at poroifr mundi eigi allsendis gæfu til b. um vináttu við Harald, Eg. 75, 112, 473, Fms. iv. 164, i. 218; úhamingju, 219; b. vit, skyn, kunnáttu á (yfir) e-t, to bring wit, knowledge, etc., to bear upon a thing, xi. 438, Band. 7; hence vel (illa) viti borinn, well (ill) endowed with wit, Eg. 51; vel hyggjandi borinn, well endowed with reason, Grag. ii; b. hug, traust, arzbi, bor, til e-s, to bave courage, confidence ... to do a thing, Gullp. 47, Fms. ix. 220, Band. 7; b. ahyggju, onn fyrir, to care, be concerned about, Fms. x. 318; b. ast, elsku til e-s, to bear affection, love to one; b. hatr, to bate: b. svört augu, to bave dark eyes, poët., Korm. (in a verse); b. snart hjarta, Hom. 5: vant er bat af sia hvar hvergi berr hjarta sitt, where he keeps his beart, Orkn. 474; b. gott hjarta, to bear a proud beart, Lex. Poët., etc. etc.; b. skyndi at um e-t, to make speed with a thing, Lat. festinare, Fms. viii. 57. 2. with some sense of motion, to bear off or away. carry off, gain, in such phrases as, b. sigr af e-m, af e-u, to carry off the victory from or in ...; hann hasoi borit sigr af tveim orrustum, er fragstar hafa verit, be bad borne off the victory in two battles, Fms. xi. 186; bera banaoro af e-m, to slay one in a fight, to be the victor; borr berr banaoro af Midgardsormi, Edda 42, Fms. x. 400: it seems properly to mean, to bear off the fame of baving killed a man; verbat svá rík sköp, at Regin skyli mitt banord bera, Fm. 39; b. hærra, lægra hlut, 'to bear off the higher or the lower lot,' i. e. to get the best or the worst of it, or the metaphor is taken from a sortilege, Fms. ii. 268, i. 59, vi. 412; b. efra, hærra skjöld, to carry the highest shield, to get the victory, z. 394, Lex. Poët.; b. hatt (lagt) höfudit, to bear the bead bigh (low), i.e. to be in bigb or low spirits, Nj. 91; but also, b. halann bratt (lagt), to cock up or let fall the tail (metaph, from cattle), to be in an exultant or low mood: sundry phrases, as, b. bein, to rest the bones, be buried; far bu til Islands, bar mun ber audid verda beinin at b., Grett. 91 A; en bó hygg ek at bú munir hér b. beinin í Norðrálfunni, Orkn. 142; b. fyrir bord, to throw overboard, metaph. to oppress; verdr borhalli nú fyrir bord borinn, Tb. was defied, set at naught, Fær. 234; b. brjost fyrir e-m, to be the breast-shield, protection of one, Fms. vii. 263: also, b. hond fyrir höfuð sér, metaph. to put one's band before one's bead, i. e. to defend oneself; b. zgishjálm yfir e-m, to keep one in awe and submission, Fm. 16. III. connected with prepp., b. af, and (rarely) yfir (cp. vide A I 2 afburðr, yfirburðr), to excel, surpass; eigi sá hvárttveggja féit er af öðrum berr, who gets the best of it, Nj. 15; en bo bar Bolli af, B. surpassed all the rest, Ld. 330; hat mannval bar eigi minnr af öðrum mönnum um fribleik, aft ok fræknleik, en Ormrinn Langi af öbrum skipum, Fms. ii. 252; at hinn útlendi skal yfir b. (outdo) þann sem Enskir kalla meistara, xi. 431: b. til, to apply, try if it fits; en er beir baru til (viz. shoes to the hoof of a horse), há var sem hæfði hestinum, ix. 55; bera til hvern lykil at öðrum at portinu, Thom. 141; b. e-t við, to try it on (hence vidburdr, experiment, effort): b. um, to wind round, as a cable round a pole or the like, Nj. 115; pá bar hann þá festi um sik, made it fast round bis body, Fms. ix. 219; 'b. e-t undir e-n' is to consult one, ellipt., b. undir dom e-s; 'b. e-t fyrir' is to feign, use as excuse: b. a, i, to smear, anoint; b. vatn í augu sér, Rb. 354; b. tjöru í höfuð sér, Nj. 181, Hom. 70, 73, cp. áburðr; b. gull, silfr, á, to ornament with gold or silver, Ld. 114, Finnb. 258: is now also used = to dung, b. & völl; b. vápn á e-n, to attack one with sharp weapons, Eg. 583, Fms. xi. 334: b. eld at, to set fire to, Nj. 122; b. fjötur (bönd) at e-m, to put fetters (bonds) on one, Fms. E. 172, Hm. 150: metaph. reflex., bönd berask at e-m, a law term, the 174; bó betta vandræði (acc.) hafi nú borit oss (dat.) at hendi, Eg. 7; evidence bears against one; b. af sér, to parry off; Gyrðr berr af sér lagit, b. til handa, id., Sks. 327; bar honum svá til, so it befell him, Fms. xi.

berask mikit & (cp. aburor), to bear oneself proudly, or b. litio & to bear oneself bumbly; hann var hinn katasti ok barst a mikit, Fms. ii. 68, viii. 210. Eb. 258; b. litio á, Clem. 35; láta af berask, to die; Ottarr vill skipa til um fjárfar sitt áðr hann láti af b., Fms. ii. 12: berask fyrir, to abide in a place as an asylum, seek sbelter; hér munu vit láta fyrir b., Fas. iii. 471; berask e-t fyrir, to design a thing, be busy about, barsk hann þat fyrir at sjá aldregi konur, Greg. 53; at njósna um hvat hann bærist fyrir, to inquire into what be was about, Fms. iv. 184, Vigl. 10. recipr, in the phrase, berask banaspiot eptir, to seek for one another's life. Glum. 354: b. vápn á, of a mutual attack with sharp weapons. Fms. viii. y. pass., sar berask a e-n, of one in the heat of battle beginning to get wounds and give way, Ni.: - berask vio. to be prevented, not to do: ok nú lét Almattugr Guð við berast kirkjubrunnann, stopped, prevented the burning of the church, Fms. v. 144; en mer bætti gott ef við bærist, svá at hón kæmi eigi til bín, vi. 210, vii. 210; ok var bá búit at hann mundi begar láta hamarinn skjanna honum, en hann lét þat við berask, be betbought bimself and did not, Edda 35; bví at mönnum þótti sem pannig mundi helzt úhæfa við berask, that mischief would thus be best prevented, Sturl. ii. 6, iii. 80.

C. IMPERS.:—with a sort of passive sense, both in a loc, and temp. sense, and gener denotes an involuntary, passive motion, bappening suddenly or by chance: I. with acc, it bears or carries one to a blace, i.e. one bappens to come: the proverb, alla (acc.) berr at sama brunni, all come to the same well (end), Lat. omnes una manet nox: bar hann ba ofan gegnt Özuri, be bappened to come in his course just opposite to O., Lat. delatus est, Dropl. 25 : esp. of ships or sailors; nú berr svá til (bappens) herra, at vér komum eigi fram ferðinni, berr oss (acc.) til Íslands eor annara landa, it bore us to I., i. e. if we drive or drift thither, Fms. iv. 176; bá (acc. pl.) bar suðr í haf, they drifted southwards, Nj. 124. as a cricketing term, in the phrase, berr (bar) út knöttinn, the ball rolls out, Gisl. 26, cp. p. 110 where it is transit.; berr Gisli ok út knöttinn, vide Vigl. ch. 11, Grett. ch. 17, Vd. ch. 37, Hallfr. S. ch. 2. vide Vígl. ch. 11, Grett. ch. 17, Vd. ch. 37, Hallfr. S. ch. 2. Y. Skarpheðin (acc.) bar nú at þeim, Sk. eame suddenly upon them, Nj. 144; bar at Hróaldi begar allan skjöldinn, the shield was dashed against H.'s body, 198; ok skyldu sæta honum, ef hann (acc.) bæri þar at, if be sbould perchance come, shew bimself there, Orkn. 406; e-n berr yfir, it bears one, i. e. one is borne onwards, as a bird flying, a man riding; pottist vita, at hann (acc.) mundi fljótara yfir bera ef hann riði en gengi, that be would get on more fleelly riding than walking, Hrafn. 7; hann (acc.) bar skjótt yfir, be passed quickly, of a flying meteor, Nj. 194; e-n berr undan, 2. also with acc. followed by prepp. vio, saman, jafnframt, his, of bodies coinciding or covering one another: loc., er jasnframt ber jadrana tungls ok sólar, if the orb of the moon and sun cover each other, Rb. 34; þat kann vera stundum, at tunglit (acc.) berr jafnt á millum vár ok sólar (i. e. in a moon eclipse), 108; ber nokkut jaðar (acc.) þess hjá sólar jaðri, 34; Gunnarr sér at rauðan kyrtil (acc.) bar við glugginn, G. sees that a red kirtle passed before the window, Nj. 114; bar fyrir utan hat skip vápnaburð (acc.) heiðingja (gen. pl.), the missiles of the beathers passed over the ship without hurting them, flew too high, Fms. vii. 232; hvergi bar skugga (acc.) á, nowbere a sbadow, all bright, Nj. 118; hangat sem helzt mátti nokkut yfir þá skugga bera af skóginum, where they were sbadowed (hidden) by the trees, Fms. x. 239; e-t berr fram (hatt), a body is prominent, Lat. eminet; Olafr konungr stod i lyptingunni, bar hann (acc.) hátt mjök, king O. stood out conspicuously, ii. 308; b. yfir, þótti mjök bera hljóð (acc.) þar yfir er Ólafr sat, the sound was beard over there where O. sat, Sturl. i. 21; b. & milli, something comes between; leiti (acc.) bar á milli, a bill bid the prospect, Nj. 263: metaph., e-m berr e-t à milli, they come to dissent, 13, v.l.; b. fyrir augu (hence fyrirburor, vision), of a vision or the like; mart (acc.) berr nú fyrir augu mér, ek sé ..., many things come now before my eyes, 104; hann mundi allt bat er fyrir hann hafdi borit, i. e. all the dream, 195; eina nott berr fyrir hann í svefni mikla sýn, Fms. i. 137, Rd. 290; veiði (acc.) berr í hendr e-m (a metaphor from hunting), sport falls to one's lot; her bæri veiði í hendr nú, bere would be a game, Nj. 252; e-t berr undan (a metaphor from fishing, hunting term), when one misses one's opportunity; vel væri þá . . . at þá veiði (acc.) bæri eigi undan, that this game should not go amiss, 69; en ef betta (acc.) berr undan, if this breaks down, 63; hon bad hann ba drepa einhvern manna hans, heldr en allt (acc.) bæri undan, rather than that all should go amiss, Eg. 258: absol., þyki mér illa, ef undan berr, if I miss it, Nj. 155; viljum vér ekki at undan beri at ..., we will by no means miss it ..., Fms. viii. 300, v.l. The passage Bs. i. 416 (en fjárhlutr sá er átt hafði Ari, bar undan Guomundi) is hardly correct, fjarhlut bann would run better, cp. bera II. adding prepp.; b. viò, at, til, at undir, as a law term, below. hendi, at moti, til handa ..., to befall, bappen, Lat. accidere, occurrere, with dat, of the person, (v. atburðr, viðburðr, tilburðr); engi hlut skyldi bann at b., no such thing should happen as . . ., Fms. xi. 76; svá bar at einn vetr, it befell, x. 201; þat hefir nú víst at hendi borit, er . . ., Nj.

dangerous should befall bim on the way, Stj. 212; bæri þat þá svú við, at hann ryfi, it then perchance might bappen, that . . . , 102; hat bar vid at Högni kom, 160, 172, 82; raun (acc.) berr a, it is proved by the fact, event, Fms. ix. 474, x. 185. 2. temp., e-t berr a, it bappens to fall on ...; ef bing (acc.) ber a hina helgu viku, if the parliament falls on the boly week (Whitsun), Grag. i. 106: ef Crucis messu (acc.) berr à Drottins dag, Rb. 44; berr hana (viz. Petrs messu, June 29) aldrei svá optarr á öldinni, 78; þat er nú berr oss næst, what has occurred of late, Sturl. iii. 182: b. í móti, to bappen exactly at a time; petta (acc.) bar í móti at penna sama dag andaðist Brandr biskup, Bs. i. 468; b. saman, id.; bar pat saman, at þá var Gunnarr at segja brennusöguna, just when G. was about telling the story, Nj. 269. 3. metaph, of agreement or separation; en þat (acc.) þykir mjök saman b. ok þessi frásögn, Fms. x. 276: with dat., bar öllum sögum vel saman, all the records agreed well together, Ni. 100, v. l.; berr nú enn í sundr með þeim, Bjarna ok Borkatli at sinni, B. and Th. missed each other, Vapn. 25. 4. denoting cause; e-t (acc.) berr til ..., causes a thing; ætludu þat þá allir, at hat mundi til bera, that that was the reason, Nj. 75; at pat beri til skilnaðar okkars, that this will make us to part (divorce), 261; konungr spurði, hvat til bæri úgleði hans, what was the cause of his grief? Fms. vi. 355; pat berr til tunglhlaups, B. meiri van at bratt beri bat (acc.) til bota, at herviliga stevpi hans riki, i. e. there will soon come belp (revenge), Fms. x. 264; siorir eru beir hlutir er menn (acc.) berr i ætt a landi her, there are four cases under which people may be adopted, Grag. i. 361. y. e-t berr undir e-n. falls to a person's lot; hon a arf at taka begar er undir hana berr, in ber turn, 179; mikla erfo (acc.) bar undir hana, Mar. (Fr.); berr yfir, of surpassing, Bs. ii. 121, 158; b. frá, id. (fráburðr); herðimikill svá at bat (acc.) bar frá því sem aðrir menn, Eg. 305; er sagt, at bat bæri frå hve vel beir mæltu, it was extraordinary bow well they did speak, Jb. 11; bar þat mest frá hversu illa hann var limaðr, but above all, bow . . . , O. H. 74. 5. with adverbial nouns in a dat. form; e-t berr bradum, bappens of a sudden; berr betta (acc.) nú allbradum, Fms. xi. 139; cp. vera bráðum borinn, to be taken by surprise (above); berr storum, stærrum, it matters a great deal; ætla ek stærrum b. hin lagabrotin (acc.), they are much more important, matter more, vii. 305; var þat góðr kostr, svá at stórum bar, xi. 50; hefir oss orðit svá mikil vanhyggja, at stóru berr, an enormous blunder, Gísl. 51; svá langa leið, at stóru bar, Fas. i. 116; þat berr stórum, hversu mér bóknast vel þeirra athæfi, it amounts to a great deal, my liking their service, i. e. I do greatly like, Fms. ii. 37; eigi berr þat allsmám hversu vel mér líkar, in no small degree do I like, x. 296.

β. with dat., it is fitting, becoming; sva mikit sem landeiganda (dat.) berr til at hafa eptir lögum, what be is legally entitled to, Dipl. iii. 10; berr til handa, it falls to one's lot, v. above, Grag. i. 93. III. answering to Lat, oportet, absolutely or with an adverb, vel, illa, with infinit.; e-m berr, it beseems, becomes one; berr bat ekki né stendr þvílíkum höfuðfeðr, at falsa, Stj. 132; berr yðr (dat.) vel, herra, at sjá sannindi á þessu máli, Fms. ix. 326; sagði, at þat bar eigi Kristnum mönnum, at særa Guð, x. 22; þá siðu at mér beri vel, Sks. 353 B: used absol., berr vel, illa, it is beseeming, proper, fit, unbeseeming, unfit, improper; athæfi bat er vel beri fyrir konungs augliti, 282; þat þykir ok eigi illa bera, at maor hafi svart skinn til hosna, i. e. it suits pretty well, 301: in case of a pers. pron. in acc. or dat. being added, the sentence becomes personal in order to avoid doubling the impers. sentence, e. g. e-m berr skylda (not skyldu) til, one is bound by duty; veit ek eigi hver skylda (nom.) yor (acc.) ber til bess at låta jarl einn råda, Fms. i. 52: also leaving the dat. out, skylda berr til at vera forsjámaðr með honum, vii. 280; eigi berr hér til úviska min, it is not that I am not knowing, Nj. 135. when the reflex, inflexion is added to the verb, the noun loses its impers. character and is turned from acc. into nom., e.g. par (pat?) mun hugrinn minn mest hafa fyrir borizt, this is what I suspected, fancied, Lv. 34; cp. hugarburor, fancy, and e-t berr fyrir e-n (above, C. I. 2); hefir betta (nom.) vel í móti borizt, a bappy coincidence, Nj. 104; ef svá harðliga kann til at berask, if the misfortunes do happen, Gpl. 55; barsk sú uhamingja (nom.) til á Íslandi, that mischief bappened (no doubt the passage is thus to be emended), Bs. i. 78, but bar þá úhamingju . . .; bat (nom.) barsk at, bappened, Fms. x. 253; fundir várir (nom.) hafa at borizt nokkurum sinnum, vii. 256; þat barsk at á einhverju sumri, Eg. 154; bærist at um síðir at allr þingheimrinn berðist, 765, cp. berast við, berask fyrir above (B. V.): berast, absol., means to be sbaken, knocked about; var bess van, at fylkingar mundu berast i hergöngunni, that they would be brought into some confusion, Fms. v. 74; Hrólfr gékk at ramliga, ok barst Atli (was shaken, gave away) fyrir orku sakir, bar til er hann féll, Fas. iii. 253; barst Jökull allr fyrir orku sakir (of two wrestling), Isl. ii. 467, Fms. iii. 189: vide B. IV.

D. In mod. usage the strong bera-bar is also used in impersonal phrases, denoting to let a thing be seen, shew, but almost always with a negative preceding, e.g. ekki bar (ber) á því, it could (can) not be seen; að á engu bæri, láta ekki á bera (to keep tigbt), etc. All these phrases are no doubt alterations from the weak verb bera, 20, nudare, seach other, Fms. vii, 204; b. gull, to beat gold, x. 206; sem barit gull, 425; at honum bæri engan váðaligan hlut til á veginum, that nothing and never occur in old writers; we have not met with any instance previous to the Reformation; the use is certainly of late date, and affords a rare instance of weak verbs turning into strong; the reverse is more freq. the case.

ber-bakt, n. adj., ríða b., to ride bare-back, i.e. without saddle, Glúm. 362.

ber-beinn, adj. bare-legged, Fms. vii. 63, Harbl. 5.

ber-brynjaör, part. without coat of mail, Sd. 146, Bs. i. 541.

ber-dreymr, now berdreyminn, adj. [draumr], baving 'bare' (i. c. clear, true) dreams as to the future, v. Isl. pjods. ii. 91, Isl. ii. 91, Fb. iii. 447, Gisl. 41.

berendi, n. = berfé, N. G. L. i. 70, 225.

ber-f6, n. a female animal, opp. to grabíé, Grág. i. 426, Jb. 431. ber-fjall, n.

1. [ber = björn and fjall, fell = pellis], a bear-skin, Vkv. 10 (2). 2. [berr, nudus, and fiall, fell = mons], a bare fell or rocky bill, (now freq.)

ber-fættr, adj. bare-footed, bare-legged, Bs. i. 83, Hkr. ii. 259, Fms. COMPD: berfættu-bræðr, m. pl. a minorite, barevii. 63, x. 331.

footed friar, Ann. 1265.

BERG, n. [Ulf. bairga = ή δρεινή; A.S. biorb; Germ. berg; Dan. bjærg; Swed. berg; cp. bjarg and borg, in Swed. and Dan. berg means a mountain gener., = Icel. fjall; in Icel. berg is a special name]:-a rock, elevated rocky ground, as in lögberg; vabberg, a rock on the shore where the angler stands; moberg, a clay soil, saxum terrestri-arenaceum fuscum, Eggert Itin.; pursaberg is a sort of whetstone, cp. Edda 58; and heinberg, hone-stone, id.; silfrberg, silver-ore, Stj.; á bergi, on a rock or B. a rock, boulder: vard b. eitt undir höfdi honum. rocky platform. y. a precipice = björg; framan i bergi, Fms. vii. 81, Eg. Flov. 31. 581, Hkr. i. 151; meitilberg.

berg-bui, a, m. a berg-dweller, i. e. a giant, Landn. 271. Bard. 164. berg-danir, m. pl. the Danes, (inhabitants) of rocks, giants, Hym. 17.

berg-hamarr, m. a rocky projection, Hom. 117.

berg-hlio, f. the side or slope of a b., Fms. viii. 57, = Icel. fjallshlio.

berg-högg, n. a quarry, bjal. 8; cp. berhögg.

bergi-biti, a, m. a bit to taste, Sturl. ii. 132. bergiligr, adj. inviting to taste, Sks. 528.

berging (bergning, Eluc. 20), f. tasting, taste, Stj. 202, Hom. 53, Magn. 486, Eluc. 54.

bergisamligr, adj. = bergiligr, Sks. 528.

BERGJA, d, [A.S. beorgan; Lat. gustare], to taste; with dat., burgunna vildi öngum mat b., Tb. would taste no food, Eb. 262; b. ölvi, Ls. 9; peir bergðu engu nema sujó, Fms. viii. 52, 303, Stj. 268, Andr. 70; b. Guðs holdi ok blóði, in the holy supper, 655 xviii; b. dauða, to taste death, Post. 656 C, Fb. i. 323; få margir sjukir menn heilsu, er b., that drink, Fms. i. 232, iii. 12, Hom. 82; b. & e-u, Stj. 39, Fas. i. 246; b. af, Sks. 106, Blas. 43; cp. bjarga, bjargast við e-t, e.g. Eb. 244, Eg. 204, Clem. 26, Fs. 174.

berg-mál, n. an ecbo, also called dvergmál. berg-mála, að, to ecbo.

berg-rifa, u, f. a fissure in a rock, Symb. 56.

berg-risi, a, m. [cp. berga-troll in the Norse tales], a bill-giant, Hkr. i. 220; hrímbursar ok bergrisar, Edda 10, 15; hon (Gerðr) var b. ættar, 22; mikit fólk hrímbursa ok bergrisar, 38, Gs. 9, 23.

berg-skor, f. pl. ar, [cp. Scot. scaur], a chasm in a rocky bill, Hkv. 2.

20, Fms. vii. 202, Stj. 450. 1 Sam. xiii. 6.

berg-snös, f. [from snös = a projection, Gullp. 50, ch. 4, not nös, nasus], a rocky projection, Eg. 389, Gullb. 8, l. c., Fas. i. 156 spelt bergnös, Sæm. 131.

berg-tollr, m. a rock-toll, paid for catching fowl thereon, Sturl. iii.

225.

berg-vörör, m. a watch, look-out for rocks and cliffs; halda b., Jb. 407. ber-hendr, adj. bare-banded.

ber-höfði, berhöfða or berhöfðaðr, adj. bare-beaded, Stat. 200. ber-hogg, n. [berr, nudus, or rather = berghogg, metaph. for a quarry]. in the phrase, ganga á (í) b. við e-n, metaph. to make open fight, deal rudely with, Fms. xi. 248, Ld. 142; Jóann gekk á b. at banna, St. John interdicted openly, 625.93, in all those passages 'á:' in mod. usage 'i,' so Greg. 80, Sturl. ii. 61, porst. Siðu-H. 7. berill, m. a barrel for fluids (for. word), Stj. 367

BERJA, bardi, pres. berr; sup. bart, barzt, O. H. L. 24, Bret. 48, 64, Fms. viii. 214, 215, xi. 16, and later barit, barizt; part. fem. bario, Am. 84; barðr, fem. börð, Sturl. iii. 154; mod. barinn; either form may now be used: [Lat. ferio. The word is not found in Ulf., and seems to be unknown in Germ. and Engl.; it is lost in mod. Dan.] act. to strike, beat, smite, with acc., Fms. vii. 227, Eg. 582: as a punishment, b. hud af e-m, to scourge one, N. G. L. i. 85: to thrash to death, 341; b. grjóti, to stone, of witches, Am. 84, Ld. 152, Eb. 98, Gisl. 34: to castigate, b. til batnadar, Hkr. ii. 178; cp. the sayings, einginn verðr óbarinn biskup, and, vera barðr til bækr, Bs. i. 410; b. steinum i andlit e-m, to throw stones in one's face, 623. 31; b. e-u saman vápnum, sverðum, skjöldum, knefum, to dash weapons... against like beaten gold, Isl. ii. 206; b. korn, to thresh corn, Magn. 520: Harald Harfagri, Eg. ch. 9, Grett. ch. 2, Vd. l. c. (Hornklofi, v. above); metaph. to chide, scold, b. e-n illyroum, avitum, Nj. 64, Hom. 35 :- with 'à,' at,' to knock, rap, strike, b. & hurd, & dyrr (or at dyrum), to rap, knock at a door, Th. 6; b. sér & brjóst, to smite on one's breast, in repentance, Fms. v. 122; b. at hurðu, Sturl. iii. 153; b. til e-s, á e-m, to give one a thrashing, Dropl. 23; er þú á konum barðir, Hbl. 38; hjartað barði undir síðunni, to beat, of the heart, Str. 6 (but hjartsláttr, throbbing of the beart), in mod, use reflex., hjartad berst, hjartad bardist i briosti heitt, Pass. 2.12: in the phrase, b. i brestina, to cry off a bargain, the metaphor is taken from bammering the fissure of a ring or the like, in order to hide the fault, Nj. 32. II. reflex., berjask, [cp. Fr. se battre; Germ. sich schlagen], to fight, Lat. pugnare, Boll. 360, Rd. 296, Fms. x. 86, 1sl. ii. 267, Fas. i. 255, 1b. 11: of a duel, ok þat með, at vit berimk hér á þinginu, Eg. 351; b. við e-n, to fight with, Fms. xi. 86; b. á e-t, Lat. oppugnare, á borgina, i. 103, vii. 93, Stj. (freq.), seems to be a Latinism; b. til e-s, to fight for a thing; at b. til Englands, to invade England, Isl. ii. 241, v.l.; b. orrostu, Lat. pugnam pugnare, Fms. vii. 79: of the fighting of eagles, Isl. ii. 195. III. impers., with dat., it dashes against; skýja grjóti barði í augu þeim, the bailstones dashed in their eyes, Jd. 31; honum barði við ráfit kirkjunnar, he dashed against the roof, Bs. i. 804; beim bardi saman, they dashed against each ber-kykvendi, n. a sbe-beast, Fms. xi. 94.

Digitized by GOOS

BERKJA, t, to bark, bluster; with dat., b. yfir e-u, Al. 24; er oss hefir lengi í sumar berkt, Hkr. iii. 386; hefir þú stórt berkt við oss, Fms. xi. 87, [cp. barki, digrbarkliga.]

ber-kyrtlaör, adj. without cloak, wearing the kyrtill only, Fms. ii. 29. ber-leggiaor and berleggr, adj. bare-legged, Fms. vii. 63, x. 415. ber-ligr, adj. and berliga, adv. I. [berr, nudus], open, manifest, Hom. 134; adv. openly, Fms. iv. 234, ix. 447, Isl. ii. 317; compar., Clem. 46. II. [berr, bacca], fruitful, Stj. 15.
berlings-ses, m. [from Swed. bërling, a pole, bar], a pole; b. þrettán Clem. 46.

álna langr, Fms. iii. 227, ἄπ. λεγ., l. c., [cp. berling, in Engl. carpentry, the cross rafter of a roof.]

other, id.

ber-malugr and bermall, adj. bare-spoken, outspoken, Fms. x. 420. ber-mælgi, f. bare-speech, freedom of speech, Fms. vi. 178.

ber-mæli, n. pl. = bermælgi, Fms. ix. 333, Hkr. iii. 77.

ber-mæltr, part. = bermálugr, Fms. xi. 53, Hkr. iii. 97. bernaka, u. f. [barn], childbood, childishness; proverb, bráðgeð er bernskan, Fms. vi. 220; vera i b., Nj. 30, Fms. vii. 199, Sks. 596. COMPDS: bernsku-brago, n. a boyish trick, Grett. 92, Sturl. iii. 124. bernsku-maör, m. a youth, childish person, Hkr. ii. 156.

bernskligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), childish, Fms. v. 245, Sks. 553, 153, Magn. 434.

bernakr, adj. [Ulf. barnisks], childish, Fms. i. 22, vii. 237, ix. 249, ber-orőr, adj. = bermáll.

BERR, adj. [A.S. bar; Engl. bare; Germ. bar; Slav. bos; Litt. bosus; the Goth word is not on record, but was prob. sounded basus; the radical form is b-s, not b-r, and it is consequently different from Lat. -perio (in aperio), or bera, ferre, v. Grimm s. v.] :- Lat. nudus, bare, naked; albrynjaðr svá at ekki var bert nema augun, Fms. vii. 45; beran vápnastað, Nj. 9; undir berum himni, under the bare sky, in open air, sub dio, Karl. 544; á beru svæði, in open field; ber sverð, naked swords, Fms. i. 266; ríða berum hestum = berbakt, Dl. 11. 2. metaph. naked, unprotected, Grag. ii. 8; berr er hverr a baki nema sér bróður eigi (a proverb), Nj. 265.

β. uncovered, open, clear, manifest; segja med berum ordum, in clear words, Stj. 447; verda berr at e-u, to be convicted of a thing, 656 A, 25; berar jartegnir, Fms. ii. 221; göran sik beran at e-u, to shew openly, mostly in a bad sense, xi. 55; voru berastir i pvi prændir, the Th. were most undisguised in it, Hkr. ii. 57; göra bert, to make known, lay bare, Fms. i. 32, vii. 195.

ber-serkr, s, m., pl. ir: [the etymology of this word has been much contested; some—upon the authority of Snorri, hans menn foru 'brynjulausir,' Hkr. i. II-derive it from 'berr' (bare) and 'serkr' [cp. sark, Scot. for sbirt]; but this etymology is inadmissible, because 'serkr' is a subst. not an adj.: others derive it from 'berr' (Germ, bar = ursus), which is greatly to be preferred, for in olden ages athletes and champions used to wear hides of bears, wolves, and reindeer (as skins of lions in the south), hence the names Bjálfi, Bjarnhéðinn, Úlfhéðinn, (héðinn, pellis,)—' pellibus aut parvis rhenonum tegimentis utuntur,' Caes. Bell. Gall. vi. 22: even the old poets understood the name so, as may be seen in the poem of Hornklofi (beginning of 10th century), a dialogue between a Valkyrja and a raven, where the Valkyrja says, at berserkja reiðu vil ek þik spyrja, to which the raven replies, Úlfhéðnar heita, they are called Wolfcoats, cp. the Vd. ch. 9; þeir berserkir er Úlfhéðnar vóru kallaðir, þeir höfðu vargstakka (coats of wild beasts) fyrir brynjur, Fs. 17:-a 'bear-sark,' 'bear-coat,' i. e. a wild warrior or champion of the heathen age; twelve berserkers are mentioned as the chief followers of several kings of antiquity, e.g. of the Dan. king Rolf Krake, Edda 82; a Swed. king, Gautr. S. Fas. iii. 36; king Adils, Hrolf. Kr. S. ch. 16 sqq.;

the twelve sons of Arngrim, Hervar. S. ch. 3-5, Hdl. 22, 23; the two berserkers sent as a present by king Eric at Upsala to earl Hakon of Norway, and by him presented to an Icel. nobleman, Eb. ch. 25. In battle the berserkers were subject to fits of frenzy, called berserksgangr (furor bersercicus, cp. the phrase, ganga berserksgang), when they howled like wild beasts, foamed at the mouth and gnawed the iron rim of their shields; during these fits they were, according to popular belief, proof against steel and fire, and made great havoc in the ranks of the enemy; but when the fever abated they were weak and tame. A graphical description of the 'furor bersercicus' is found in the Sagas, Yngl. S. ch. 6, Hervar. S. l. c., Eg. ch. 27, 67, Grett. ch. 42, Eb. ch. 25, Nj. ch. 104, Kristni S. ch. 2, 8 (Vd. ch. 46); cp. also a passage in, the poem of Hornklofi-grenjuðu berserkir, | guðr var þeim á sinnum, | emjaðu Ulfhéonar ok isarn gnúðu-which lines recall to the mind Roman descriptions of the Cimbric war-cry. In the Icel. Jus Eccles. the berserksgangr, as connected with the heathen age, is liable to the lesser outlawry, K. b. K. 78; it is mentioned as a sort of possession in Vd. ch. 37, and as healed by a vow to God. In the Dropl. S. Major (in MS.) it is medically described as a disease (v. the whole extract in the essay 'De furore Bersercico,' Kristni S. old Ed. in calce); but this Saga is modern, probably of the first part of the 17th century. The description of these champions has a rather mythical character. A somewhat different sort of berserker is also recorded in Norway as existing in gangs of professional bullies, roaming about from house to house, challenging husbandmen to 'holmgang' (duel), extorting ransom (leysa sik af hólmi), and, in case of victory, carrying off wives, sisters, or daughters; but in most cases the damsel is happily rescued by some travelling Icelander, who fights and kills the berserker. The most curious passages are Glúm. ch. 4, 6, Gisl. ch. 1 (cp. Sir Edm. Head's and Mr. Dasent's remarks in the prefaces), Grett. ch. 21, 42, Eg. ch. 67, Flóam. S. ch. 15, 17; according to Grett. ch. 21, these banditti were made outlaws by earl Eric. A.D. 1012. It is worth noticing that no berserker is described as a native of Icel.; the historians are anxious to state that those who appeared in Icel. (Nj., Eb., Kr. S. l. c.) were born Norse (or Swedes), and they were looked upon with fear and execration. That men of the heathen age were taken with fits of the 'furor athleticus' is recorded in the case of Thorir in the Vd., the old Kveldulf in Eg., and proved by the fact that the law set a penalty upon it. Berserkr now and then occurs as a nickname, Glum. 378. The author of the Yngl. S. attributes the berserksgangr to Odin and his followers, but this is a sheer misinterpretation, or perhaps the whole passage is a rude paraphrase of Hm. 149 sqq. In the old Hbl. 37 berserkr and giant are used synonymously. The berserkers are the representatives of mere brute force, and it therefore sounds almost blasphemous, when the Norse Barl. S. speaks of Guds berserkt (a 'bear-coat' or champion of God), (Jesus Kristr gleymdi eigi hólmgöngu síns berserks), 54, 197. With the introduction of Christianity this championship disappeared altogether.

bersi, a, m. a bear, Grett. 101 A, Fas. ii. 517, Sd. 165, Finnb. 246: the phrase, at taka sér bersa-leyfi, to take bear's leave, i.e. to ask nobody (cp. to take French leave'): freq. as a nom. pr., and hence in Icel. local ber-skjaldaor, adj. bare of shield, i.e. without a shield, Nj. 97. ber-svæði, n. an open field.

ber-syndugr, adj. (theol.), a sinner, publicans and 'sinners,' Greg. 33, Post. 656, H. E. i. 585.

ber-sögli, f. [bersögull, adj.], a free, frank speech; hence bersöglis-vísur, f. pl., name of a poem by Sighvat, Fms. vi. 38 sq.

ber-yroi, n. pl. plain-speaking, Fms. vii. 161.

BETR, adv., compar. to vel; and BEZT, elder form bazt, superl., better, best: 1. compar., er betr er, luckily, bappily, Fms. ix. 409, Ld. 22; b. þætti mér, I would rather, Nj. 17; vanu betr, Lat. spe melius, Fms. ii. 101; b. úgört, better not to do, Ld. 59; hafa b., to get the better of it, Fb. i. 174: adding gen., pess b., er . . ., so much the better ..., Sks. 426: denoting quantity, more, leggit fram b. hit mikla skipit, advance it fartber, better on, Fms. ii. 307; engi maor tók b. en í öxl honum, v. 67; b. en tuttugu menn, ix. 339; þrjú hundruð ok þrír tigir ok sex b., to boot, Rb. 88; ekki máttu sumir menn b. en fá staðist, i. e. they could do no more, were just able to keep up against bim, Fms. xi. 136; ef hann orkar b., if be can do more, Grag. (Kb.) ch. 128; nú má hann b., but if be is able to do more..., id. 2. superl., bazt búið, best equipped, Fas. ii. 523; with a gen., bezt allra manna, Eg. 34; manna bezt, Nj. 147; kvenna bezt hærð, Landn. 151; bazt at báðir væri, cp. Germ. am besten, am liebsten, soonest, Eg. 256.

betra, ad, to better, improve, Ld. 106; betrask, to become better, Fms. iii. 160: impers., ef eigi betradist um, Rd. 277; beir sögðu, at konungi betradist mjök, that the king was much better, Fms. ix. 215.

betran, f. a bettering, improving, esp. in theol., Fms. vi. 217, Stj. 158: alliter., bót ok betran.

betr-feorungr, m. a man better than his father, Fms. vi. 286. BETRI, betra, compar., and BEZTR, bastr, batstr, the superl. becomes e; thus old poets of the beginning of the 11th century, as Sighvat, rhyme betri-setrs; the old form batri however occurs, 655 xx. 4: in the superl, the a was kept till the end of the 12th century. rhymes, last-bazti; old vellum MSS, now and then still spell with a (bazt, baztr...), Glum. 371, Heid. S. Isl. ii. 324, Grag. ii. 165, 252, Fms. xi. 214, 220, Hm. 13, 26, 47, Hkv. Hjörv. 39, Lb. 12, Pd. 11, Ýt. 27, 625. 42, Fms. x. (Ágrip) 418; baþztra (baztra), gen. pl., 398, 401 (but betþt, 385); bazta (acc.), Eluc. 36: sing. fem. and neut. pl. bozt, with a changed vowel, bözt heill, n. pl., Skv. 2.19; böztu (böhtu), pl., Fms. x. 401, 403, 415: it is spelt with z, tz (in Agrip even bt), or zt, in mod. spelling often s, as in mod. Engl., and pronounced at present as an s, [Goth. batizo, superl. batisto; A.S. batra and betsta, besta; Engl. better and best; Germ. besser and beste]: -better, best; meira ok betra, Nj. 45, 193; betri, Dipl. v. 18; beztr kostr, Nj. 1, Eg. 25; beztr bondi, Ld. 22. \(\beta\). kind, friendly towards one; with dat., er honum hafdi baztr verit, 625. 42; er mér hefir beztr verit, Fms. vii. 274: er pér fyrir því bezt..., it is best for thee, thou doest best to accept it, Nj. 225; því at þinn hlutr má eigi verða betri en góðr, 256; betra byr ok blíðara, 625. 4: with gen., meðan bezt er sumars, during the best part of the summer, Sks. 29, etc. etc., v. goor. beygja, d, [baugr], to bend, bow, Fms. ii. 108, iii. 210, x. 174:

beygja, 0, [paugr], to bend, bow, rms. 11. 108, 111. 210, x. 174: metaph., b. e-m krok, to make it crooked for one, the metaphor taken from a game or from wrestling, Ld. 40.

beygla, u, f. to dint, of plate, metal, etc., Sturl. ii. 221. BEYKI, n. beech-wood; beykir, m. a cooper, v. buokr.

beyla, u, f. a bump, Lat. gibbus, swelling, Björn, cp. Snót 98.

beyrsta and beysta, t, [old Dan. börste; Swed. bösta], to bruise, beat; b. korn, to thresh, Fms. xi. 272; the alliterated phrases, berja ok b., to flog, Hom. 119; b. ok bita, Grág. ii. 118; b. bakföllum, to pull bard, beat the waves with the oars, Am. 35.

beysti, n. [Swed. böste], a bam, gammon of bacon, pior. 222. beytill, m., v. góibeytill, equisetum biemale, a cognom., Landn. beztr, baztr, bezt, bazt, v. betri and betr.

BIBLIA, and old form BIBLA, u, f. the Bible, Arm (Hb.) 10. BID, n. pl. [A.S. bid], a biding, waiting, delay: skömm bið, Al. 118: patience, mikit megu biðin (a proverb), 119, 623, 60; vera góðr í biðum, to be patient and forbearing, Bs. i. 141; liggja á bið (biðum?), to bide the events, Fms. x. 407: in mod. usage fem. sing., lífið manns hart fram hleypr, hefir það enga bið, Hallgr.

biða, að, to bide a bit, Stj. 298, Bs. ii. 123: with gen. (=biða), ok biðuðu þeirra, Fagrsk. 138, Nj. (Lat.) 110 note k, 135 note o.

biðan, f. = bið, H. E. ii. 80.

bið-angr and biðvangr, m. a biding, delay, Fms. ix. 259, v.l. biðill, m., dat. biðil, pl. biðlar, a wooer, suitor, Fms. ii. 8.

BIĐJA, bað, báðu, beðit; pres. bið; imperat. bið and biddu; poët. forms with suff. neg. 1st pers. pres. biðkat ck, Gísl. (in a verse): [Ulf.

bidian = alτειν, ερωτάν; A. S. biddian; Old Engl. bid, bede (in bedes-man), and ' to bid one's beads;' Germ. bitten, beten; cp. Lat. petere] :- to beg; with gen. of the thing, dat. of the person; or in old writers with infin. without the particle 'at;' or 'at' with a subj.: a. with infin., Jarl bað þá drepa hann,... bað hann gefa Hallfreði grið, Fms. iii. 25; hann bað alla bíða, Nj. 196; bað þá heila hittast, Eg. 22, Fms. vii. 351; Skapti bað Gizur (acc.) sitja, Nj. 226; Flosi bað alla menn koma, Nj. 196, Hdl. 2; inn bið þú hann ganga, Skm. 16, Ls. 16; b. e-n vera heilan, valere jubere, Gm. 3, Hkv. 1, 2: still so in the Or. 65 (bior ek Olaf bjarga mer) of the end of the 14th century; mod. usage prefers to add the 'at,' yet Hallgrimr uses both, e.g. hann bað Pétr með hryggri lund, hjá sér vaka um eina stund, Pass. 4. 6; but, Guð bið eg nú að gefa mér β. with 'at' and a subj., b. viljum vér þik, at þú sér, Nj. náð, id. 226, Jb. 17: without 'at,' Pass. 6. 13, 3. 12. y. with gen., b. matar, Grág. i. 261; er þér þess ekki biðjanda, Eg. 423; b. liðs, liðveizlu, föruneytis, brautargengis, Nj. 226, 223, 1sl. ii. 322; bænar, Fms. iv. 12; b. e-m lifs, grida, gods, böls, to beg for the life ... of one, Hav. 39, Fms. iii. 25, Edda 38, Hm. 127; b. fyrir e-m, to beg, pray for one, Nj. 55; b. e-n til e-s, to request one to do a thing, Grag. i. 450, Fms. v. 34: spec. to court (a lady), propose, with gen. as object of the thing and person here coincide, b. konu, b. sér konu, Eg. 5, Nj. 2, Rm. 37. God), absol., hann bað á þessa lund, Blas. 41; b. til Guðs, Sks. 308, Fins. iii. 48; b. bæn sinni (dat.), to pray one's prayer, 655 xvi, Hom. 114; b. bæn sina, id., Blas. 50.

B. reflex., biðjask fyrir, to say one's prayers, Nj. 196; er svá baðst fyrir at krossi, Landn. 45, 623. 34, Orkn. 51; biðjast undan, to excuse oneself, beg pardon, Fms. vii. 351: the reflex may resume the infin. sign 'at,' and even an active may do so, if used as a substitute for a reflex., e.g. biði þórólfi at fara norði á Halogaland, Tb. asked for furlough to go to H., Eg. 35.

bio-lund (and biolyndi, Hom. 26. transl. of Lat. longanimitas), f. forbearance, patience, Hom. 97, Stj. 52, Pass. 8. 13, 15, 15. 13. compos: biolundar-goor, adj. forbearing, Fb. ii. 261. biolundar-mál, n. a thing that can hide, as to which there is no burry, Grett. 150.

bio-stund, f. (biostoll, Bs. i. 292 is prob. a false reading), biding a bit, Bs. i. 292, 704, Fms. viii. 151, Thom. 104.

to 'góðr,' which serves as the posit.:—in the compar. the primitive a becomes e; thus old poets of the beginning of the 11th century, as Sighvat, rhyme betri—setrs; the old form batri however occurs, 655 xx. 4: in the superl, the a was kept till the end of the 12th century. Sighvat rhymes, last—bazti; old vellum MSS, now and then still spell with a (bazt, bazti...), Glúm. 371, Heið. S. Isl. ii. 324, Grág, ii. 165, 252, Fms.

bift, m., in the compd úbift, m. dislike, in the phrase, e-m er ú. að e-u, one feels a dislike to. compd: bift-staup, n. a cup, Eb. (in a verse).

bifra, u, f. [A. S. beber, befer], a beaver (?), a cognom., Fms.

bif-röst, f., the poët. mythical name of the rainbow, Edda 8, (via tremula); but Gm. 44 and Fm. 15 read bilröst.

bifu-kolla (byðuk-, Safn i. 95), u, f. leontodon taraxacum, Hjalt. 254. BIK, n. [Lat. pix; Gr. miosa; A. S. pic; Engl. pitcb; Germ. pecb; a for. word], pitcb, Stj. 46; svartr sem. b., Nj. 195, Orkn. 350, Rb. 352. COMPD: bik-svartr, adj. black as pitcb.

bika, ad, to pitch, Stj. 58, Ver. 8.

BIKARR, m. [Hel. bicere; Engl. beaker; Scot. bicker; Germ. becher; Dan. bæger, cp. Gr. βίκος; Ital. bicchiere], a beaker, large drinking cup, Dipl. v. 18: botan. perianthium, Hjalt.

BIKKJĀ, u, f. a bitcb; þann graut gaf hann blauðum hundum ok mælti, þat er makligt at bikkjur eti þór, Fms. ii. 163: as an abusive term, Fs. 54, Fas. i. 39; so in mod. Icel. a bad horse is called. COMPDS: bikkju-hvelpr, m. a bitcb's wbelp, Fms. ix. 513. bikkju-sonr, m. son of a b., Fas. iii. 607. bikkju-stakkr, m. tbe skin of a b., Fas. iii. 417: all of these used as terms of abuse.

bikkja, d, t, [bikka, to roll, Ivar Aasen], to plunge into water; hann bikdi í sjóinn, be plunged overboard, Fms. x. 329; bikti sér út af borðinu, ii. 183; cp. Lapp. puokljet = to plunge.

BII., n., temp. a moment, twinkling of an eye; i pvi bili, Nj. 115; pat bil, that very moment. Stj. 149, 157, Fms. i. 45.

β. loc., Lat. intervallum, an open space left; b. er parna, Fas. ii. 67; orðin standa eiga þeit (namely in writing), en þó bil á milli, an Icel. rhyme.

γ. the poetical compds such as biltrauðr, bilstyggr, bilgrönduðr..., (all of them epithets of a hero, fearless, dauntless,) point to an obsolete sense of the word, failure, fear, giving way, or the like; cp. bilbugr, bilgjarm, and the verb bila; cp. also tímabil, a period; millibil, distance; dagmálabil, hádegisbil, nónbil, etc., nine o'clock, full day-time, noon-time, etc.

II. fem. pr. name of a goddess, Lex. Poët.

bila, að, pres. bil (instead of bilar), Fas. ii. 76 (in a verse), to fail; þótr vill fyrir engan mun bila at koma til einvígis, Th. will not fail to meet, Edda 57; þorsteinn kvað þat eigi mundu at bila, Th. said that it sbould not fail, be should not fail in doing so, Lv. 33: with dat., festum bilar áræðit, a proverb, Fms. ii. 31 (Ld. 170), Rd. 260.

2. impers., e-n bilar (acc.), Finnb. 338 (in mod. usage impers. throughout), to break, crack, þá er skipit hljóp af stokkunum, þá bilaði í skarir nokkurar, Fms. viii. 196; reiði b., Grág. ii. 295; b. at e-u, id., Gþl. 369; bil sterka arma, my strong arms fail, Fas. ii. l. c.

bil-bugr (bilsbugr, Fas. iii. 150), m. failing of beart; in the phrase, lâta engan bilbug â sór sjá (finna), to stand firm, sbew no sign of fear, Fms. viii. 412, Grett. 124, Fas. iii. 150, Karl. 233; fá b. á e-m, to throw one back, Karl. 80.

bil-eygr, adj. a nickname of Odin, of unsteady eyes, Edda (Gl.)

bil-gjarn, adj., occurs only in the compd ubilgjarn, overbearing.

bil-röst, f. via tremula, the rainbow, v. bifröst.

bil-skirnir, m. the beavenly abode of Thor, from the flashing of light, Edda.

bilt, prob. an old n. part. from bila; only used in the phrase, e-m verðr bilt, to be amazed, astonisbed; en på er sagt, at þór (dat.) varð bilt einu sinni at slá hann, the first time that Thor's heart failed bim, Edda 29; varð þeim bilt, Korm. 40, Nj. 169.

bimbult (now proned. bumbult), n. adj., only in the phrase, e-m verðr b., to feel uneasy, Gísl. 33, of a witch (freq., but regarded as a slang word), mer er hálf bumbult...

BINDA, batt, 2nd pers. bazt, pl. bundu, bundit; pres. bind; 3rd pers. reflex. bizt; imperat. bind, bind þú; and pers. bittú, bitt þú, Fm. 40: [Goth., A. S., Hel. bindan; Engl. bind; Germ. binden; Swed. binda, 2nd pers. bandt; in Icel. by assimilation batt; bant, however, Hb. 20, 32 I. prop. to bind in fetters, (cp. bond, vincula; (1865)]:—to bind: bandingi, prisoner), Hom. 119, Fms. xi. 146, Gpl. 179: fasten, tie up, b. hest, Nj. 83; naut, Ld. 98, Bs. i. 171; b. hund, Grág. ii. 119 : b. vid e-t, to fasten to ; b. stein vid hals e-m, 655 xxviii ; b. blæju vid stong, Fms. ix. 358; b. skó, pvengi, to tie the shoes, Nj. 143, porst. St. 53, Orkn. 430: to bind in parcels, to pack up, b. varning, Fms. iii. QI, ix. 241 (2 pun); b. hey, to truss bay for carting, Nj. 74; klyf, Grett. 123; b. at, til, to bind round a sack, parcel, Fms. i. 10; to bind a book, (band, bindi, volume, are mod. phrases), Dipl. i. 5, 9, ii. 13. medic, to bind wounds, to bind up, b. sar, Eg. 33, Bs. i. 639, Fms. i. 46 (cp. Germ. verbinden); b. um, of fomentation, Str. 4. 72: metaph. phrase, eiga um sárt at b., to bave a sore wound to bind up, one feeling sore; hefir margr hlotid um sart at b. fyrir mer, i. e. I bave inflicted deep wounds on many, Nj. 54: the proverb, bezt er um heilt at b., or eiga um heilt at b., to bind a sound limb, i. e. to be safe and sound; bykir mér bezt um heilt at b., I think to keep my limbs unburt, to run no risk, Fms. vii. 263. 2. with a notion of impediment; b. skjöld sinn, to entangle the shield: metaph., bundin (closed, shut) skjaldborg, Sks. II. metaph. to bind, make obligatory; leysa ok b., of the pope, Fms. x. II: to make, contract a league, friendship, affinity, wedding, fellowship, oath, or the like; b. rad, to resolve, Ld. 4, Eg. 30; samfélag, lag, vináttu, eiő, tengdir, hjúskap, Fms. i. 53, iv. 15, 20, 108, 210, ix. 52, Stj. 633, K. A. 110: absol. with a following infin., binda (fix) beir porir at hittast i ákveðnum stað, Ísl. ii. 147. III. reflex. to bind, engage oneself, enter a league; leikmenn höfðu saman bundizt at setjast á kirkjueignir, Bs. i. 733; bindask (b. sik) í e-u, to engage in a thing; bott hann væri bundinn í slíkum hlutum, 655; at b. sik í veraldligu starfi, id.; hann bazt í því, at sýslumenn yðrir skyldu eigi koma á morkina, Eg. 71; em ek þó eigi þessa búinn, nema fleiri bindist, unless more people bind themselves, enter the league, Fær. 25, Valla L. 216; bindast i banns atkvæði, H.E. i. 465; binda sik undir e-t, with a following infin. to bind oneself to do, Vm. 25; b. sik við e-t, id., N.G.L. i. 89; bindask e-m & hendi, to bind oneself to serve another, esp. of the service of great personages; b. á hendi konungum, Fms. xi. 203, x. 215, Bs. i. 681, Orkn. 422; bindast fyrir e-u, to place oneself at the head of an undertaking, to bead, Hkr. iii. 40; Ongull vildi b. fyrir um atför við 2. with gen., bindask e-s, to refrain from a Gretti, Grett. 147 A. thing; eigi bazt hann ferligra orda, i.e. be did not refrain from bad language, 655. 12; b. tára (only negative), to refrain from bursting into tears, Fins. ii. 32; hlátrs, Sks. 118; b. við e-t, id., El. 21; b. af e-u, Stj. 56. bindandi and bindendi, f. (now neut., Thom. 68), abstinence, Stj. 147, 625. 186, Fms. i. 226, Hom. 17. COMPDS: bindendis-tími, a, m. a time of abstinence. bindandis-lif, n. a life of b., Stj. 147, 655 xiii. bindandis-maor, m. an ascetic, Bs. ii. 146; mod. a teetotaler. bindi, n. a sheaf, = bundin, N. G. L. i. 330; mod. a volume, (cp. Germ.

BINGB, m. a bed, bolster, Korm. (in a verse), prop. a beap of corn or the like, (Scot. bing,) Nj. 153; vide Lex. Poët.

birgoir, f. pl. stores, provisions, Sturl. ii. 225, Fær. 53, Fas. ii. 423. birgiligr, adj. well provided, Bs. i. 355.

BIRGJA, o, to furnish, provide; skal ek vist b. hann at nökkuru, Nj. 73; segir Sigurðr, at hann mun b. þá með nökkuru móti, Fær. 237; hann birgði þá ok um búfé, Ld. 144; nú vil ek b. bú þitt at málnytu í sumar, Hrafn. 9. [In the Edd. sometimes wrongly spelt with y, as it is quite different from byrgja, to enclose.]

birgr, adj. [O. H. G. birig, fertilis; unbirig, sterilis: sometimes in Edd. wrongly spelt byrgr: this form however occurs Bs. i. 868, MS. the end of the 15th century]: -provided, well furnished; b. at kosti, Grett. 127 A,

Sd. 170; viltú selja mer augun? pá er ek verr b. eptir, Fas. iii. 384. BIRKI, n. collect. = björk, birch, in compos: birki-raptr, m. a rafter of birch-wood, Isl. ii. 153. birki-vior, m. bircb-wood, Grág. ii. 355. birkja, t, to bark, strip; b. við, Jb. 235, Stj. 177; cp. Gkv. 2. 12, birkinn viðr (= birki viðr?), Fms. viii. 33; b. hest, to flay a borse.

BIRNA, u, f. a sbe-bear, Stj. 530, Fs. 26, Magn. 476: astron., Rb. 468; b. er vér köllum vagn, 1812. 16. birnu-getir, m. the name of one of the constellations, 1812. 18.

BIRTA, t, [Ulf. bairbtian], to illuminate, brighten, Stj. 15; b. sýn, 655 xxx; b. blinda, id. 2. impers., bokunni birtir af, the fog lifted, Hrafn. 6: to brighten with gilding or colouring, a ship, há var birt allt hlyrit, cp. hlýrbjartr and hlýrbirt skip, Fms. iv. 277. 3. metaph. to enlighten; birta hjörtu vár, Hom. 67, Rb. 390: to make illustrious, Skálda β. to reveal, manifest, Fms. iv. 132, viii. 101: with dat., birti hann det sinni, x. 418. y. reflex. to appear; birtist bá skaði þeirra, Fms. vii. 189, v. 344, Stj. 198, Ann. 1243; b. e-m, Fms. i. 142. birti, f. and mod. birta, u, f. [Goth. bairbti], brightness, light, the old form birti is used Luke ii. 9, in the N. T. of 1540, and the Bible of 1584, and still kept in the 11th Ed. of Vidal. (1829); otherwise birta, Pass. 8. 19, 41. 10; birta also occurs Stj. 81, Fb. i. 122; but otherwise birti in old writers; birti ok fegro, Fms. v. 344, x. 347; birti ægis, the gold, Edda 69; tunglsins birti, Stj. 26, Fms. i. 77.

birting, f. brightness, Sks. 26, 656 A: metaph. manifestation, revelation, Th. 76, Stj. 378, Barl. 199: vision, 655 xxxii. 2. day-break. COMPD: birtingar-tio, f. time of revelation, Hom. 63.

birtingr, m. a fish, trutta albicolor, Edda (Gl.): a nickname, Fms. vii.

157: pl. illustrious men, Eg. (in a verse).

BISKUP, m., in very old MSS. spelt with y and o (byskop), but commonly in the MSS. contracted 'bp,' so that the spelling is doubtful; but biscop (with i) occurs Bs. i. 356, byscop in the old fragm. i. 391-394; biskup is the common form in the Edd. and at present, vide Bs. i. ii. Sturl. S., Ib. [Gr. ἐπίσκοποε; A.S. biscop; Engl. bisbop; Germ. bischof]:—a bishop. Icel. had two sees, one at Skalholt, erected A.D. 1056; the other at Hólar, in the North, erected A.D. 1106. They were united at the end of the last century, and the see removed to century are contained in the Bs., published 1858, and of the later bishops in the Biskupa Annálar (from A.D. 1606), published in Safn til Sögu Islands. vol. i. and Bs. ii, and cp. farther the Biskupaæfi, by the Icel. historian Jón Halldórsson (died A.D. 1736), and the Hist. Eccl. (H. E.), by Finn Jonsson (Finnus Johannæus, son of the above-mentioned Jón Halldórsson). During two hundred years of the commonwealth till the middle of the 13th century, the bishops of Skalholt and Hólar were elected by the people or by the magnates, usually (at least the bishops of Skalholt) in parliament and in the lögrétta (the legislative council), vide the Hungrv. ch. 2 (valinn til b. af allri alþýðu á Íslandi), ch. 5, 7, 13, 16, Sturl. 2, ch. 26, Kristni S. ch. 12, 1b. ch. 10, porl. S. ch. 9, Pals. S. ch. 2, Guom. S. ch. 40, Jons S. ch. 7 (þá kaus Gizurr biskup Jón prest Ögmundarson með samþykki allra lærðra manna ok úlærðra í Norðlendinga sjórðungi). Magnús Gizurarson (died A.D. 1237) was the last popularly elected bishop of Skalholt; bishop Gudmund (died A.D. 1237) the last of Hólar; after that time bishops were imposed by the king of Norway or the archbishop. COMPDS: biskupa-buningr, m. episcopal apparel, Sturl. i. 221. biskupa-fundr, m. a synod of bisbops, Fms. x. 7. biskupa-pattr, m. the section in the Icel. Jus Eccl. referring to the bisbops, K. p. K. 60. 713, H. E. i. 456. biskupa-bing, n. a council of bisbops, Bs. i. biskups-brunnr, m. a well consecrated by bisbop Gudmund, else called Gvendarbrunnar, Bs. biskups-búr, n. a bishop's-bower,' chamber for a bishop, Sturl. ii. 66. biskups-dómr. m. a diocese, Fms. vii. 173, xi. 229, 1b. 16, Pr. 107: episcopate, Fms. i. 118. biskups-dóttir, f. a bisbop's daughter, Sturl. i. 207. biskups-dæmi, n. an episcopal see, Sturl. i. 204, iii. 124: the episcopal office, 23, Bs. i. 66, etc. biskups-efni, n. bishop-elect, Bs. i, cp. ii. 339. biskups-frændi, m. a relative of a bishop, Sturl. ii. 222. biskups-garor, m. a bishop's manor, Fms. ix. 47. biskups-gisting, f. the duty of entertaining the bisbop on bis visitation, Vm. 23. biskups-kjör, n. pl. the election of biskups-kosning, f. id., Sturl. i. 33, Fms. viii. a bisbop, Bs. i. 476. biskups-lauss, adj. without a bishop, Fb. iii. 445, Ann. 118. v.l. 1210. biskups-maor, m. one in the service of a bishop, Fms. ix. biskups-mark, n. the sign of a bishop; þá gerði Sabinus b. 317. yfir dúkinum ok drakk svá öröggt (a false reading = kross-mark?), Greg. biskups-mágr, m. a brother-in-law of a bishop, Fms. ix. 312, 50. biskups-messa, u, f. a mass celebrated by a bisbop, Bs. i. 131. biskups-mitr, n. a bisbop's mitre, Sturl. ii. 32. biskups-nafn, n. the title of a bisbop, Fms. x. 11. biskups-riki, n. a bisbopric, diocese, Ann. (Hb.) 19, Fms. xi. 229, Sturl. ii. 15. biskups-sekt, f. a fine to be paid by a bisbop, N.G.L.i. 350. biskups-skattr, m. a duty to be paid to the bisbop in Norway, D. N. (Fr.) biskups-skip, a bisbop's ship: biskups-skattr, m. a duty to be the bishops had a special licence for trading; about this matter, vide the Arna b. S. Laur. S. in Bs. and some of the deeds in D. I.; the two sees in Icel. had each of them a ship engaged in trade, Fms. ix. 309, v. l.; vide a treatise by Maurer written in Icel., Ný Fél. xxii. 105 sqq. biskupsskruði, a, m. an episcopal ornament, Fms. ix. 38. biskups-sonr, m. the son of a bishop, Sturl. i. 123, Fms. x. 17. biskups-stafr, m. a bisbop's staff, Bs. i. 143. biskups-stofa, u, f. a bisbop's study, Dipl. biskups-stoll, m. an episcopal seat, bisbopric, Jb. 16, K. A. 109. biskups-sýsla, u, f. a diocese, episcopate, Fms. biskups-tign, f. episcopal dignity, Bs. i. 62, 655 iii, Sks. 96, Fms. x. 409. vii. 172. biskups-tiund, f. the tithe to be paid to the bishop in 802, Sturl. i. 45. Iceland, v. the statute of A.D. 1096, D.I. i, Ib., K. p. K. 150 (ch. 39), K. Å. 96. biskupstiundar-mál, n. a lawsuit relating to the bishop, H. E. ii. 185. biskups-vatn, n. water consecrated by bisbop Gudmund, biskups-veldi, n. episcopal power, Pr. 106. Bs. i. 535. vígsla, u, f. the consecration of a bishop, Fms. viii. 297, Bs. i. 61.

biskups, að, to confirm, Hom. 99; biskup er skyldr at b. börn, K. p. K. 62; Guðmundr biskup biskupaði hann tvævetran, Sturl. iii. 122; tók Glúmr skírn ok var biskupaðr í banasótt af Kol biskupi, Glúm. 397: now in Icel, called að ferma or staðfesta or even kristna börn.

biskupan, f. confirmation; ferming er sumir kalla b., K. A. 20, ch. 3. biskupligr, adj. episcopal; b. embætti, Stj. 556, Sks. 781, 655 xxxii. (not fit for a bishop.)

BISMARI, a, m. [for. word; Germ. besem, besen; Dan. bismer; v. Grimm s. v.], a steelyard, Ghl. 526, Dipl. iii. 4. COMPD: bismarapund, n. a sort of pound, N.G. L. iii. 166.

bissa, u, f., Lat. byssus, a stuff, Bær. 21.

bistr, adj. [Swed. bister], angry, knitting one's brows, Sturl. iv. 82, v. l., cp. Bs. i. 750, Pass. 21. 1.

BIT, n. bite, Lat. morsus; at tonnunum er bitsins van, Skalda 163: of cutting instruments, sax vænligt til bits, Fs. 6: of insects, mýbit, bite of gnats, Rd. 295; bit flugdýra, 655 xxx; dýrbit, a fox killing lambs, Bs. β. pasture = beit, N. G. L. i. 246. ii. 137.

bita, 20, to divide (2 ship) with cross-beams (biti); skip prennum bitum β. to cut food, meat into bits. út bitað, Sturl. iii. 61.

bit-bein, n., cp. Engl. bone of contention; hafa riki bessi lengi at öfund ordit ok bitbeinum, Fær. 230.

1. a bit, mouthful (cp. munnbiti); konungr át nökkura biti, a, m. Reykjavik. Biographies of ten of the bishops of the 11th to the 14th bita af hrosslifr, Fms. i. 37, Jatv. 26, Rd. 283: in the phrase, bioja

Digitized by GOGLE

2. an eye-tootb = jaxl, q.v., $\frac{\partial}{\partial x}$ bitum, to go begging, Grag. i. 278. [Swed. betar]; eru vér ok svá gamlir, ok svá bitar upp komnir, i.e. we are no longer babies, bave got our eye-teeth, Fms. viii. 325. beam, girder in a house, Ld. 316, Gpl. 346: in a ship, Lat. transtrum. Fms. ix. 44, Sturl. iii. 61.

bitill and bitull, m., dat. bitli, the bit of a bridle, Stj. 84, 397, Hkr. i. 27, Hkv. 2. 34, Akv. 30, Fms. iv. 75, Hkr. ii. 31.

bitlingr, m. a bit, morsel; the proverb, vida koma Hallgerdi bitlingar, cp. Nj. ch. 48; stela bitlingum, to steal trifles, Sturl. i. 61, v.l.; bera bitlinga frá borði, as a beggar, Fas. ii. (in a verse).

bitr, rs, adj. biting, sbarp, Korm. 80, Eg. 465, Fms. ii. 255.

bitra, u, f. bitterness, a cognom., Landn.

bitrligr, adj. sbarp, Korm. 80, Fbr. 58: metaph., Isl. ii. (in a verse).

bit-sott, f. contagious disease, poët., Yt. 17.

bit-yroi and bitryroi, n. pl. taunts, N. G. L. i. 223.

bí, bí, and bíum, bíum, interj. lullaby!

BÍĐA, beið, biðu, beðit; pres. bíð; imperat. bíð, 2nd pers. bíðbú, bíddu, [Ulf. beidan; A.S. bidan; Engl. bide; O.H.G. bitan]:-to bide. to bide, wait for: with gen., b. e-s, to wait for one, Eg. 274; skal slikra manna at visu vel b., such men are worth waiting for, i.e. they are not to be had at once, Fms. ii. 34; the phrase, bida sinnar stundar, to bide one's time: with hedan, badan, to wait, stand waiting, bid bu hedan, unz ek kem, 656 C. 35; þaðan beið þengill, Hkv. 1. 22: also, b. e-s ór stað, Lex. Poët. The old writers constantly use a notion 'a loco,' badan, hédan, or stad, where the mod. usage is hér, par, 'in loco: absol., Fms. x. 37, Nj. 3. II. to abide, suffer, undergo, Lat. pati: with acc., b. harm, Nj. 250; skada, Grág. i. 459, 656 C; ámæli, to be blamed, Nj. 133; bana, dauda, hel, to abide death . . . , to die, Hm. 19, Fms. vi. 114; ósigr, to abide defeat, be defeated; svá skal böl bæta at bida annat meira (a proverb), Fb. ii. 336, Al. 57: sometimes in a good sense, bida elli, to last to a great age, 656 A; b. enga ró, to feel no peace, be uneasy, Eg. 403; b. ekki (seint) bætr e-s, of an irreparable loss, Isl. ii. 172. III. impers., e-t (acc.) biðr, there abides, i. e. exists, is to be bad, with a preceding negative; hvárki bíðr þar báru né vindsblæ, there is felt neither wave nor blast, Stj. 78; beid engan hann er ráda kynni, there was none that could make it out, 22; varla beid braud eðr fæðu, was not to be bad, 212; slægastr af öllum þeim kvikendum er til bíðr á jarðríki, 34. Gen. iii. 1. IV. part. pl. bíðendr, v. andróði. bioandi, f. a biding, waiting, delay, Fms. ii. 216.

bi-fala, 20, [Germ. befeblen], to recommend, command, Bs. i. 145 note

7. from paper MS., v. Introd. p. 48.

bildr, m., and bilda, u, f. an axe, Edda (Gl.); an instrument for bleeding: bild-spor, n. a scar as from a b., Bs. i. 367. 2. a sheep with spotted cheeks: bild-ottr, adj. (sheep) spotted on the cheeks, Rd. 240.

bild-or, f. a blunt arrow, a bolt,, Fms. ii. 320, x. 362.

bi-lifi, n. [A.S. biliofa], luxury, Al. 17, 34, 45.

bi-standa, stob, [Goth. bistandan; Germ. beisteben], (for. word), to assist, Stj. MS. 227, col. 102.

bisundr, m. (for. word), a besant (Byzantius), 2 coin, El. 2.

BÍTA, beit, bitu, bitið; pres. bít; imperat. bít, 2nd pers. bíttú; poët. forms with the negative, beitat, Eg. (in a verse); subj. bítia, Hkv. 2. 31, [Ulf. beitan; Engl. bite; Germ. beizen] :- to bite, Lat. mordere : properly, 1. with the teeth, Eg. 508, N.G.L. i. 351; b. menn (of a dog), Grág. ii. 119; b. skarð ór, Eg. 605: of a horse, N.G.L. i. 392: foxes killing sheep, Bs. ii. 138, N.G.L. ii. 34 (wolf):—to sting, of wasps, gnats, Landn. 146. 2. of grazing animals; b. gras, lauf, skóg, Grág. ii. 229, (hence beit, pasture); hvar hestar þínir bitu gras, Fs. 57: absol. to graze, Karl. 71. 3. of sharp instruments, weapons (vápnbitinn); engir vóru ósárir nema þeir er eigi bitu járn, except those whom iron could not bite, Eg. 33; sverdit beit ekki, did not cut, Nj. 45, Edda 7; ljárnir bíta, 48; fótrinn brotnaði en eigi beit, the sword did not cut but broke the leg, Bjarn. 66. β. e-m bitr, one's weapon (scythe) cuts well, bites; allt bitu honum annan veg vápnin, Eg. 4. of a ship, to cruise; her er skip ... er ver köllum bita (bite the wind) allra skipa bezt, the best sailes Fs. 27: impers., beit beim eigi fyrir Reykjanes, they could not clear cape R., Landn. 30. in fishing, to bite, take the bait; bitr vel a um daginn, the fishes did bite, Ld. 40; bita mætti beitfiskr, q. v. 6. bita á vörrinni, to bite the lip as a token of pain or emotion, Nj. 68; hann hasõi bitid á kampinum, bad bitten the beard, 209. II. metaph .: a. of frost, cold, β. to bite, sting, burt; hvat mun oss heldr b. sickness, and the like. ord hans, why should his speech sting us any more? Grett. 95 A; eigi veit ek prestr, nema ordin bin hafi bitid, thy words have bit, Fms. vii. y. as a law term; sekt, sok bitr, the guilt strikes the convict, when brought home to him, hence sakbitinn, guilty; bá menn er hvártveggja hafa bitið, lög, réttindi ok svá dómar, convicted in the face of law and justice, Sks. 655 B; um þau mál sem sekt bítr, i.e. unlawful cases, liable to punishment, K. A. 148; um hat er sekt bitr, Grett. 133 A (new Ed. 1853), Sks. 655. 8. b. a e-n, to cut deep, affect, make an impression upon; the phrase, láta ekki á sig b., to stand proof against ekki á bik b., do not mind it, id.; rennr þat öðrum opt mjök í brjóst. er á suma bítr ekki (of the conscience), 655 xi. c. e-t bitr fyrir, something 'bites off,' i.e. is decisive, makes a thing impossible or out of question; pat annat (the other reason) er bo bitr skjotara, which is still more decided against it, Fms. ii. 266; þeir kváðust þenna kost eigi vilja, ok kvuðu þat tvennt til vera er fyrir beit, two decided obstacles, reasons against it, Sturl. iii. 47; þú ert miklu æri maðr at aldri, en svá at vér hafim hér lögtekna í Jómsborg, ok bítr þat fyrir, that puts it out of question, makes it impossible, Fms. x. 93; porgilsi pykir nu petta ráð mega fyrir bita, Th. thought this would be quite sufficient,—fyrir hlita would here be better,-Ld. 264; beir höfðu jafnan minna hlut ór málum, þó betta biti nú fyrir, they always got the worst of it, though this was a thorough beating, Fas. i. 144; (þat er) lögmanni ok lögréttumönnum bykir fyrir b., seems a decisive proof, cuts the case off at once, N. G. L. ii. 21; b. e-m at fullu, to prove fatal to, tell fully upon; hafa mik nú at fullu bitið hans rúð, Fs. 8; Njáls bíta ráðin, a proverb quoted by Arngrim in Brevis Comment., written A.D. 1593, denoting the sagacity of Njal's schemes; beit petta ráð, it was effective, Fs. 153; e-m bitr við at horfa, Band. 7 C, is no doubt a false reading, = býðr, which is the reading l.c. of the vellum MS. 2845, vide bjóða. III. recipr. of horse fight, Rd. 298.

bi-tala, be-tala, 20, to pay, (mod.); cp. Germ. bezablen.

bja, interj. fie! bia, to defile.

bjagaor, part. wry, deformed, cp. bagr. bjag-leitr, adj. ugly, deformed, Fas. ii. 149.

bjalla, u, f. a bell, certainly an Engl. word imported into Icel. along with Christianity; bjöllu gætir, the keeper of the bell, is a nickname given by the heathen Icel, to a missionary, A.D. 998, Kristni S. (in a verse): hann vígði klukkur ok bjöllur, Bs. i. 65, Fms. i. 233: bjalla is now esp. used of small bells, e. g. on the horns of sheep, but klukka of a church bell; cp. dynbjalla, Grett.

bjannak, n. an απ. λεγ.; þat var háttr hans ef hann (viz. Odin) sendi menn sína til orrostu eðr aðrar sendifarar, at hann lagði áðr hendr í höfuð þeim ok gaf þeim bjannak, trúðu þeir at þá mundi vel farast. Ýngl. S. ch. II; it is commonly interpreted as benedictio, but it is no doubt the Scot. bannock, from Gael. banugh, an oat-cake; cp. Lat. panis. The whole passage in the Hkr. points to Christian rites and ideas brought into the pagan North, but which are here attributed to Odin, (cp. the breaking of bread and the Eucharist.) BJARG, n. [Ulf. bairgabei = ή δρεινή; A. S. beorg; Germ. berg; lost 1. neut. pl. björg, precipices (in a collect. in Engl.], rocks, precipices: sense), esp. on the sea-side, cp. flugabjörg, sjófarbjörg, hamrabjörg; precipices covered with gulls and sea fowls are called bjarg, e.g. Látrabjarg, pórisbjörg, mostly in pl., Bs. ii. 111, Fms. 275, Orkn. 312. 2. sing. rock; bjargit hafði nýliga sprungit frá einum hellismunna, Fms. i. 230; vatn or bjargi, water out of a rock, 655 xii, Nj. 264, Fas. ii. 29. sing, it chiefly means an immense stone (cp. heljarbjarg), a boulder; hann hehr fært þat bjarg í hellisdyrnar, at ekki má í hellinn komast, Fms. iii. 223; einn stein svá mikinn sem bjarg væri, Gísl. 31; hve stór björg (pl.) at sá hestr dró, Edda 26; at svá ungr maðr skyldi hefja svá stórt bjarg, Grett. 93.

BJARGA, barg, burgu, borgit; pres. bergr, pl. björgum; imperat. bjarg; pret. subj. byrga: in mod. use after the Reformation this verb is constantly used weak, bjarga, að, pres. bjargar, pret. bjargat; the only remnant of the old is the sup. borgit, etc. In Norway this weak form occurs very early, e.g. bjargar, servat, Hom. 17; in Icel. the weak seldom occurs before the 15th century; bjargaoist, Fs. 143, and bjargat (sup.) = borgit, Lv. 11, are probably due to these passages being left in paper MSS.; the weak bjargadi, however, occurs in a vellum MS. of the 15th century, porf. Karl. 388; 1st pers. pres. bjarga, Fms. xi. 150 (MS. 13th century) seems to be a Norse idiom, [Goth. bairgan; Hel. bergan; A.S. beargan; cp. birgr]:-to save, belp; with dat., bergr hverjum sem eigi er feigr (a proverb), Sturl. iii. 220; sá er öldum bergr, wbo saves mankind, viz. against the giants, i. e. Thor, Hým. 22; nema porgeirr byrgi honum. Rd. 295: absol., Guð barg (by God's grace) er konungrinn varð eigi sárr, Fms. v. 268: in theol. sense, vildu þeir eigi snúast til mín at ek byrga beim, 656 C. 23, Hom. l.c.: impers., e-m er borgit, is saved, comes safe and sound out of danger, Fær. 178, Hkv. Hjörv. 29. a law term; b. sök, máli, to find a point of defence; hann bergr beim kosti sökinni, at ..., Grág. i. 40; bergsk hann við bjargkviðinn, be is free by virtue of the verdict, 36; borgit mun nú verda at lögum, i.e. there will be some means of putting it right, Lv. 11, Nj. 36. special phrases; b. skipshöfn, to pick up the shipwrecked, porf. Karl. 1. c., Fms. xi. 412: skipi, to baul a ship out of the reach of tides and waves, Grág. ii. 385; hval, to drag a dead whale ashore, Ghl. 461: to help labouring women (v. hjargrúnar), Sdm. 9; b. nám (v. nábjargir), to render the last service to a dead body, 33; b. kum, to attend cours casting calf, Bjarn. 32; b. bufé, to milk ewes, N.G.L. i. 10; b. brókum, cacare, Fms. xi. 150. II. recipr. of mutual help; bjargast at allir saman, to be saved all in common, Hkr. ii. III. reflex., bjargask vel, to behave well, keep the beart up, 347. all; þetta lét Kjartan á sik b., K. felt pain from it, Ld. 204; låttu þetta 🏻 esp. in cold or hunger; Oddr bargst vel á fjallinu (in snow storm), Sturl. iii.

215, Orkn. 324, of one shipwrecked; b. úti, of cattle, to graze, N. G. L. T i. 25; b. sjalft, to gain one's bread, Grag. i. 294; b. a sinar hendr (spytur), to support oneself with one's own bands, Fms. ii. 159: of food or drink, cp. bergja; Snorri goði fann, at nafni hans bargst lítt við ostinn, that be got on slowly eating the cheese, Eb. 244; hann spurdi, hví hann byrgist svá lítt (v. l. matadist svá seint), ... wby be ate so slowly, id.; verði þér nú at bjargast við slíkt sem til er, you must put up with what you can get, Germ. für lieb nehmen, Eg. 204; hon had fyrir pær matar ok burgust þær við þat, Clem. 26; hon bjargaðist (= bargst) litt við þá fæðu er til var, she could hardly eat the food they bad (v. l. hjúkaðist), Fs. 174. Part. borginn, used as adj. and even in compar.; impers., erat héra (héri = hegri = duck) at borgnara bótt hæna beri skjöld, the drake is none the better off though a hen shield him, metaph. of a craven, Fs. 174, Fms. vii. 116: [Early Engl. to borrow = to save, 'who borrowed Susanna out of wo,' Sir Guy of Warwick.]

bjarg-aurar, m. pl. = bjargálnir, Mag. 160.

bjarg-álnir, f. pl. means enough for support. bjargálna-maor, m. a well-to-do man.

bjarg-festr, f. a rope or cord used to save men, Vm. 44.

bjarg-hagr, adj. a dexterous carpenter or smith for household work, Glum. 355; cp. Sturl. ii. 195.

bjarg-hogg, n. = berghogg, bewing rocks to make a road, Bárð. 166. bjarg-kvior, m. 2 law term, a verdict of acquittal given by five neighbours for the defendant, proving an alibi or the like, and produced during the trial; the b. seems to be, in its strict sense, synonymous with heimiliskviðr or heimiskviðr, q.v., cp. Grág. i. 60, 61, where it is defined; fimm búar skulu skilja um bjargkviðu alla, heimilis-búar þess manns er sottr er, nema ..., vide also 48, 49, 53, 55, 56, etc.

bjarg-leysi, n. starvation, destitution, Grag. i. 238, Gpl. 272, Band. 43. bjarg-ráo, n. pl. 2 law term, belp or shelter given to an outlaw, in the phrase, úalandi, úráðandi öllum bjargráðum, Grág. ii. 162, etc., Nj. 40.

bjarg-rifa, u, f. a rift in a rock, Eg. 390, Stj. 450.

bjarg-runar, f. pl. runes for belping women in labour, Sdm. 9. bjarg-rygr, jar, f. pl. ir, a Norse law term, a female witness in a case of paternity, defined, N. G. L. i. 358.

bjarg-ræði, n. and bjargræðisvegir, m. pl. means for support. bjarg-akora, u, f. a scaur or scar on a bill, Anal. 177, Ann. 1403, Hkr.

bjargs-maör, m. a bard-working man, Bs. i. 309.

bjarg-snös, f. = bergsnös, a crag, Fas. i. 324, Eg. 389, v. l.

bjarg-vel, adv. well enough, Fms. viii. 68, 126, v.l.

bjarg-vættr, f. (in mod. usage m.), [bjarg, mons, or bjarga, servare], a belping friendly sprite, a good genius, answering to the Christian good angel; according to the heathen belief, the country, esp. hills and mountains, were inhabited by such beings; in the northern creed the bjargvætter are generally a kind of giant of the gentler kind: in mod. usage, a supporter, belper in need; muntu verda mér hinn mesti (masc.) b., Fas. ii. 438, vellum MS. of 15th century; en mesta (fem.) b., Bárð. 168, new Ed. 12.

bjarg-prota, adj. destitute of means to live.

BJARKAN, n. the Runic letter B, Skalda, v. Introduction.

BJARKEY-, in the word bjarkeyjar-réttr, m. town-law, used as opposed to landslög or landsréttr, county-law, Sks. 22; sökin veit til landslaga en eigi til bjarkeyjarréttar, Fms. vii. 130; vide N. G. L. i. 303-336. It is an illustration of this curious word, that the Danes at present call a justice 'birkedommer,' and the district 'birk;' cp. local names, as in Sweden,-in Bircha civitate regia, Johann. Magnus 542 (Ed. 1554); civitas Birchensis, 556; in Bircha civitate tum maxima, 541; in Norway, Biarkey is one of the northern islands, whence the famous Norse family Biarkeyingar took their name; v. Munch, the pref. to Norge's Beskrivelse. Etym. uncertain; bedged in with birch (?).

BJARMI, a, m. the beaming or radiance of light, not the light itself; solar-bjarmi, dags-bjarmi; very freq. in mod. usage; no instances from old writers are on record; akin to brimi, bjartr, etc. Bjarmar (and Bjarmaland n., bjarmskr adj.), name of a people or tribe of the Russian empire, the Perms of the present day; vide K. Alfred's Orosius i. 1, 14 sq., O. H. ch. 122, Fas. ii. 511 sqq.

bjarnar-, v. björn.

bjarn-bass, m. a pit for catching bears, Gpl. 457; used proverb., Hkr. i. 235.

bjarn-dýri, and mod. bjarndýr, n. a bear, Fms. vi. 298, Nj. 35, Fs. 27, 148, 182.

bjarn-eggjan, f. the egging a hear on to fight, a Norse law term, of a brutal provocation, N.G.L. i. 74.

bjarn-feldr, m. a bear's fell, bear-skin cloak, Vm. 91, Pm. 120, Jm. 28. bjarn-fell, n. id., Vm. 22, Am. 81.

bjarn-gjöld, n. pl. 'bear-gild,' reward for killing a bear, Fs. 150.

bjarn-húnn, m. a young bear, pórð. 17 (Ed. 1860).

bjarn-igull, m. echinus terrestris urseus, Rb. 348, Hb. 29 (Ed. 1865). bjarn-6lps, u, f. an outer jacket of bear-skin, Korm. 114. bjarn-akinn, n. a bear-skin, B. K. 83, Ld. 114, Korm. 112.

bjarn-staka, u, f. a bear-skin, Edda (pref.) 151.

bjarn-sviða, u, f. a large knife for killing bears, Eb. 208, Fas. iii, 546.

bjarn-veiðar, f. pl. bear-bunting, N. G. L. i. 46.

bjarn-ylr, s, m. bear's warmth, the vital warmth of an ice-bear; it was believed in Icel. (vide Isl. bjóðs. i. 610) that a child born on the hide of an ice-bear would be proof against frost and cold; people hardy against cold are therefore said 'to bave bear's warmth' (bjarnyl), vide Háv. 39.

bjart-eygr and -eygor, adj. bright-eyed, Fms. iv. 38, Bs. i. 66, Hkr. iii. 184, O. H. 245.

bjart-haddaör, adj. a fair-baired lady, Lex. Poet.

bjart-leikr, m. brightness, Hom. 60, Rb. 336, Fms. i. 228, Magn. 468. bjart-leitr, adj. of bright countenance, bright-looking, Fms. v. 319.

bjart-liga, adv. (and -ligr, adj.), clearly, Stj. 26. bjart-litaor, adj. = bjartleitr, Hkv. Hjörv. 27.

BJARTR, adj. [Ulf. bairts = δηλοε; A. S. beorbt; Engl. bright; Hel. berbt; in Icel. per metath. bjartr; cp. birti, etc.], bright; Lat. clarus is rendered by bjartr, Clar. 128; bjart ljós, Fms. i. 96; bjart tunglskin, Nj. 118; sólskin, Fms. ii. 300; veðr, i. 128: of hue, complexion, b. líkami, Hkr. iii. 179, Nj. 208; hönd, Bb. 3. 20. 2. metaph. illustrious; med b. sigri, Fms. x. 253; in a moral sense, Stj. 141.

bjart-viori, n. bright weather, Bard. 175.

BJALFI, bjalbi, a, m. a fur, skin, Fms. v. 207, 236; esp. in the compds hrein-bjálfi, geit-bjálbi, flug-bjálbi, Haustl. 12. Etym. uncertain, perh. a Slav. word. 2. used as a pr. name, Landn.

BJALKI, a, m. [Hel. balco; Swed. and Dan. bjelke; Germ. balke; prob. akin to bálkr], a balk, beam, Ghl. i. 346.

BJODA, baud, budu, bodit; pres. býð; pret. subj. byða; pret. sing. with the suffixed negative, baudat, Edda 90 (in a verse); the obsolete middle form budumk, mibi obtulit, nobis obtulerunt, occurs in Egil Höfuol. 2; [Ulf. biudan; A. S. biodan; Engl. bid; Germ. bieten; Swed. biuda; Dan. byde]: - Lat. offerre, proferre, with dat. of the person, acc. of the thing: I. to bid, offer; beir höfdu bodit honum laun, they had offered him rewards, Fms. i. 12; porsteinn baud at gefa Gunnlaugi hestinn, Isl. ii. 213; b. grid, to offer pardon, Fms. i. 181; peir buðu at gefa upp borgina, ix. 41; bauð hann þeim, at göra alla bændr óðalborna, i. 20; býðr, at hann muni görast hans maðr, xi. 232; en ek býð þér þó, at synir mínir ríði með þér, Nj. 93; Írar buðu sik undir hans vald, Fms. x. 131. 2. reflex. to offer oneself, volunteer one's service; budusk honum þar menn til fylgðar, Fms. ix. 4; mun ek nú til þess bjóðask í sumar á þingi, Ld. 104, Sks. 510; þeim er þá býðsk, Grág. i. 284; þóroddr bauðsk til þeirrar farar, Hkr. ii. 247; ef þú búðsk í því, 8. metaph., b. ófrið, ójöfnuð, rangindi, liðsmun, of Fms. xi. 121. ill usage, Ld. 148, Rb. 418; b. e-m rangt, to treat one unjustly, Hom. 155: with an adverb, b. e-m sæmiliga, to treat one in seemly sort, Ld. 66; b. á bod e-s, to outbid one, N. G. L. iii. no. 49. invite, cp. boo, a banquet; prob. ellipt., hospitality or the like being understood; Özurr bauð þeim inn í búðina at drekka, Nj. 4; heim vil ek b. þér í sumar, 93; honum var boðit til boðs, 50; hann bauð þá þegar þar at vera Gizuri Hallssyni, Bs. i. 128; gékk Bárðr móti honum ok fagnaði honum, ok bauð honum þar at vera, Eg. 23; b. mönnum til boðs, to bid guests to a banquet, wedding, or the like, Ld. 104. to bid, order, Lat. imperare, cp. bod, bidding; sem lög budu, as the law prescribed, Fms. i. 81; svá bauð oss Guð, Post. 645. 88; b. af landi, to order one out of the land, make him an outlaw, Fms. vii. 20; b. af embætti, to depose, Sturl. ii. 119; b. út, a Norse milit. term, to call out, levy, cp. útboð, a levy; b. út leiðangri, b. út liði, skipum, to levy troops, sbips, Fms. i. 12, 61, vi. 219, 251, 400, x. 118, Eg. 31, cp. N. G. L. i. ii; b. e-m erendi, to commit a thing to one's charge, Fms. vii. 103; b. varnab & e-u. or b. til varnanar, to forbid, xi. 94, Edda 59: with prepp., b. e-m um (cp. umbod, charge), to delegate to one, commit to one's charge; beim manni er biskup hefir um boðit, at nefna vátta, K. p. K. 64; þess manns er biskup bauð um at taka við fé því, K. Á. 96, Sks. 460 B; hann keypti til handa porkatli på hluti er hann hafði um boðit, the things that he bad given charge about, Grett. 102 A; Hermundr baud nú um Vermundi, at vera fyrir sina hönd, Rd. 251. 2. eccl. to proclaim, announce, esp. as rendering of mid. Lat. praedicare; b. sio, trú, Kristni, to proclaim, preach a new religion, Nj. 156, 158, Fms. i. 32; b. messudag, sunnudag, to proclaim a boly day, N.G.L. i. 348.

IV. of a mental state, to bode, forebode; e-m byot hugt (cp. hugboo, foreboding), one's beart bodes, Fms. v. 38, 24, Eg. 21; mer bydr þat eitt í skap (my beart bodes). at þú verðir meira stýrandi en nú ertu, Bs. i. 468; mér býðr þat fyrir, which makes me forbode, Fms. ii. 193; e-m byor hugr vio (whence viobjóðr, dislike), to abbor, dislike; er honum hafði lengi hugr við boðit, Bs. i. 128. 2. impers., mér býðr ávallt hita (acc.) er ek kem í þeirra flokk, a boding comes over me, i.e. I feel uneasy, whenever ..., Fms. iii. 180; mér bauð útta (acc.), I felt a thrilling, Bs. i. 410; b. úpekt, to loathe, Grett. 111 A; b. bekt, to feel pleasure; baud beim mikla bekt er beir sá likit, Bs. i. 208: the phrase, e-m býor við at horfa, of a frame of mind, to be so and so minded; miklir eru ber frændr borði, ef yðr býðr svá við at horfa, Band. 7 (MS. 2845). β. the phrase, pat byor, it beseems, becomes; eptir hat fer veizla fram, eptir hví sem býðr, as is due, ? Fms. x. 15, Fb. l. c. has byrjadi; sem býðr um svá ágætan höfðingja, Fms. x. 149. V. with prepp.; b. fram, Lat. proferre, to produce; b. fram vitni, to produce a witness, Eg. 472; med fram bodnum fégjöfum, Sturl. iii. 232; b. upp, b. af hendi, to give up, leave off; bá býðr hann upp hornit, gives up the born, will not drink more, Edda 32; b. undan, a law term, to lay claim to; er þá kostr at b. undan þeim manni varðveizluna fjárins, Grág. i. 196; eigi skal undan manni b., áðr undir mann kemr feit, id.; cp. the following chapter, which treats 'um undan-boo fjár;' nú eru þeir menn svá þrír, at eigi býðr undan fjárvarðveizluna, viz, who are privileged guardians of the property of a minor, viz. father, brother, mother, and who cannot be outbidden, 192; b. viô, a trade term, to make a bid; b. við tvenn verð, to bid double, Ld. 146; ek býð bér jafnmörg stóðhross við, id.; at þú byðir Rúti bróður þínum sæmiliga, 66; kaupa svá jörð sem aðrir menn b. við, N.G.L. i. 95; b. fyrir is VI. part. pass. boðinn used as an adj., esp. in the alliterative phrase, vera bodinn ok buinn til e-s, to be ready and willing to do a thing, to be at one's service; skulu vér bræðr vera búnir ok bodnir til bess sem ber vilit okkr til nýta, Eg. 50; til bess skal ek bodinn ok búinn at ganga at þeim málum fyrir þina hönd, Ld. 202.

Digitized by

BJÓÐR, m.; as the word is used masc. in A.S. as well as in Úlf., we have in Haustl. 5 to alter breiðu bjóði into breiðum bjóði; [Ulf. biuds = τράπεξα; A.S. beód; Hel. biod; O.H.G. biud.] I. Lat. mensa, a table, Rm. 4, 28, 29, Haustl. l.c. II. soil, ground, cp. the Fr. plateau; á Engla bjóð, on Englisb ground, Höfuðl. 2; áðr Börs synir bjóðum um ypðu, Vsp. 4.

bjóðr, m. [bjóða], poët. one who invites, Lex. Poët; cp. also compds such as við-bjóðr, disgust, from bjóða við.

bjór-blandinn, part. mixed with beer, El. 21.

BJÓRR, m. [O. H. G. pior or bior; Low Germ. and mod. Germ, bier; Fris. biar; A. S. bior; Engl. beer], no doubt a word of German extraction, öl (öldr), ale, being the familiar word used in prose:—bjór hardly ever occurs, vide however Hkr. iii. 447, Bk. 48, 89, 96 (Norse); and is a foreign word, as is indicated even by the expression in the Alvismál—öl heitir með mönnum, en með Ásum bjór, ale it is called by men, by gods beer: bjór however is very current in poetry, but the more popular poems, such as the Hávamál, only speak of öl or öldr, Hm. 11, 13, 65, 80, 132, 138.

BJÖRR, m. [Lat. fiber; A. S. beofar], a beaver, esp. the beaver's skin, Eg. 71, in the phrase, b. ok savali.

2. a triangular cut off piece of skin, [cp. provincial Swed. bjaur]; pat eru bjórar þeir er menn sníða ór skóm sínum fyrir tám eðr hæl, Edda 42; still used in Icel. in that sense.

35. metaph. a small piece of land (an ἄπ. λεγ. as it seems);

bjór lá ónuminn fyrir austan Fljót, Landn. 284.

BJÖRR, m., must be different from the preceding word, synonymous with brjóstþili, a wall in a bouse, a party wall, but also in the 13th and 14th centuries freq. a costly tapestry used in halls at festivals and in churches; hrindum hallar bjóri, let us break down the wall of the ball, Hálfs S. Fas. ii. (in a verse); eingi var bjórrinn milli húsanna, there was no partition between the bouses, Sturl. iii. 177; gengu þeir í stofuna, var hón vel tjölduð ok upp settir bjórar, 229; annarr hlutrinn stökk útar í bjórinn, svá at þar varð fastr, Háv. 40.

B. of a movable screen beimen eboir and nave, of cloth or costly stuff, different from tjöld (bangings) and reflar; hann lét Atla prest penta allt ræfr innan, ok svá allan bjórinn, Bs. i. 13a; kirkja á tjöld umhverfis sik með tvennum bjórum, Vm. 153; kirkja tjölduð sæmiligum tjöldum ok þrír bjórar, 171, D. I. i. 402; bjórr framan um kór, tjöld um alla kirkju, Pm. 103; b. slitinn blámerktr yfir altari, 108, Bs. ii. 476, 322; vide bjórþili.

bjór-sala, u, f. beer-keeping, N. G. L. iii. (Fr.)
bjór-salr, m. a beer-keeping, N. G. L. iii. (Fr.)
bjór-skinn, n. a beaver-skin, Eg. 55, 57, Fms. x. 379. bjór-tappr, m. a tapster, beer-bouse keeper, N. G. L. iii. 13.
bjór-tjöld, n. tapestry, = bjórr, Vm. 135: b. um sönghús, id.
bjór-tunna, u, f. a beer-tun, barrel of beer, Bs. i. 389.

bjór-verpill, m. a beer-cask, Jb. 378.

bjór-þili, n. a party wall, = bjórr; b. var í milli ok vóru gluggar á, Vápn. Ný Fél. xxi. 124, Bs. ii. 322, v.l.

bjúga, n. (pl. bjúgu), a sausage, v. mörbjúga, Bs. i. 357, 810.

bjug-leikr, m. crookedness, MS. 1812. 18.

bjug-leitr, adj. of crooked countenance (nose), Rb. 344.

bjug-nefjaor, adj. with a booked nose, Fms. i. 155.

BJÜGR, adj. bowed, booked, crooked, bent; fætr lágu bjúgir við lendar, Hom. 114; með bjúgum þornum, Sks. 419; hann var b. á baki, be sat bent or bowed (from age) on borseback, Fs. 183; b. í vexti, Eg. 710; með bjúgum hring, Sks. 198, Rb. 344, Band. 9: metaph., hvárt er yðr þykir bjúgt eðr beint (MS. brátt), wbetber it seems to you crooked or straight, i.e. wbetber you like it or not, Fms. viii, 436; cp. boginn, baugr, etc.

bjúgr, s, m., medic., Lat. tumor; in many compds: skyr-bjúgr, scorbuticus, Engl. scorbutic; vind-bjúgr, tumor aereus; vatns-bjúgr, tumor oedematosus, Fél. ix. 197.

BJÖRG, f., gen. bjargar [v. bjarga], belp, deliverance, out of need or danger, e. g. feeding the hungry, saving one's life; unlawful 'björg' is that of giving help to an outlaw, who is ' úráðandi öllum bjargráðum," one on whom no help must be bestowed, neither food, shelter, nor ferry; Grag. in several passages, and there commonly used in plur. (bjargir) when in this particular sense; it was liable to a heavy punishment, and the case was to be summoned before the Fifth Court, Grag. þ. þ. ch. 25, Ld. 42. β. lögmæt björg, a lawful point of defence in pleading in the Court (v. bjarga sök), Grág. i. 73. 2. means of subsistence, stores, provisions, food; fjögurra (átta) missera b., Grág. i. 197, 8. a freq. pr. name of a woman, Ingibjörg, porbjörg, Gudbjörg, etc.; in Swed.-Dan. '-borg,' as in Ingeborg, etc. COMPOS: bjargarbjargar-leysi, n. = bjarg-leysi, Band. 15. lauss, adj. starving. bjargar-vist, f. serving for food and clothing, Hrafn. 6; cp. bjargræði (above).

BJÖRK, f., gen. bjarkar, [A. S. beore; Swed. björk; Dan. and Scot. birk; Engl. bircb; Germ. birke; Lat. betula; v. birki], a bircb, Edda (Gl.), Bs. ii. 5, Jb. 236. In compds bjarkar.

BJÖRN, m., gen. bjarnar; dat. birni, pl. n. birnir; acc. björnu, mod. birni, [an enlarged form, cp. Goth. biari, by which word Ulf. renders the Gr. θηρίον, Titus i. 12; A.S. bera; Engl. bear; Germ. bar; but Swed. and Dan. bjorn :- a bear; hvita-bjorn, the white bear or ice-bear; and skóg-björn, híð-björn, við-björn, the black bear or wood-bear, Germ, waldbar; the ice-bear was unknown in Europe till the discovery of Iceland at the end of the 9th, and Greenland at the end of the 10th century. The very first ice-bear was brought to Europe by Ingimund the Old as a gift to the king of Norway about A.D. 900, Landn., Fs. (Vd.) 27; Isleif, the first bishop of Iceland, also brought one as a present to the German emperor about A.D. 1050, Bs. i. 61, Hv. ch. 2; cp. the little story of Audun in Fms. vi. 297-307, Sks. 186, Sturl. iii. 82, Grág. ii. 181, Am. 17, where a hvítabjörn is mentioned, Fs. (Flóam. S.) 148; as to the black bear, vide esp. Grett. ch. 23, Finnb. ch. 11, Glum. ch. 3, Fas. i. 50; cp. an interesting paper, 'Waldbar und Wasserbar,' by Konrad Maurer, upon this subject. Björn and Bjarni are freq. pr. Bjarngrimr, Bjarnhéðinn, etc.; vide Landn. (Gl.) compos: bjarnar-broddr, m., botan. nartbeticum, Hjalt. 166. bjarnar-hamr, m. tbe tr, Fas. i. 53. bjarnar-híð, n. a black bear's lair, bjarnar-hold, n. the flesh of a bear, Fas. i. 54. bide, shape of a bear, Fas. i. 53. N. G. L. i. 35. bjarnar-hrammr, m. a bear's paw, Rb. 382, Ver. 26. biarnarslatr, n. meat of a slaughtered bear, Fas. i. 54: botan., Ivar Aasen records bjonnabær, rubus caesius; bjonnakamb, osmunda spicans; bjonnmosa, polytrichum commune. For popular tales of the bear vide Isl. pioos. i. 608-611.

BLAD, n. [A. S. bläd; Germ. blatt; Hel. blad. Ulf. renders the Gr. φύλλον by laufs, Engl. leaf, Icel. lauf. The Engl. say a blade of grass or corn, a leaf of a tree; and so, in Icel., herbs or plants have blad, trees lauf]:-a leaf; blöd bess grass er . . . heitir, Pr. 472; blöd á lauk, Hervar. S. (in a verse): metaph. a veil, svá er mér sem hangi b. fyrir auga, Fms. iii. 126. 2. of leaf-like objects, a leaf in a book, Germ. blatt, (never lauf, cp. bladsida, u, f. a page), Rb. 210, Isl. ii. 460: of a painted diptych or the like, par eru bloo tvau pentuo, Pm. 103. skirt of a kirtle (skaut), Stj. 481, Eb. 226, Orkn. 474: Icel. now say kjól-laf, the skirt of a coat. Y. a blade, in various connections: the flat part of a thing, the blade of an oar, arar-blad, N. G. L. i. 59: of a rudder, Fms. ix. 503; knifs-blad, the blade of a knife, Bs. i. 385: a sword's blade is in mod. usage called 'blað,' but in old writers brandr; spón-blað, the mouth-piece of a spoon; herbar-blad, the shoulder-blade, etc. Botan., blačka, u, f., e.g. horblačka, menyanthes: hófblačka, caltha palustris; but rjúpnalauf, dryas, Hjalt.: blaokr, m. in eyrna-blaokr, ear-lap.

blaðra, að, prob. an onomatopoëtic word, like Lat. blaterare, Scot. bletber, Germ. plaudern, in the phrase, b. tungunni, to talk tbick, Hom. 115; tungan var úti ok blaðraði, Fbr. 77 new Ed.; hann blaðraði tungunni ok vildi við leita at mæla, Fms. v. 152: metaph. to utter inarticulate sounds, bleat, as a sheep. blaðr, n. nonsense.

blaöra, u, f. a bladder, Pr. 472: a blain, watery swelling, Stj. 273, Bs. i. 182. bloöru-sótt, f. a stone in the bladder, Pr. 475.

BLAK, n. a slap; fyrir pústr (a buffet) fjórar merkr, fyrir blak (a slap) tvær merkr (as a fine), Gpl. 177, 187.

blaka, að, to slap, Ann. 1394.

2. neut. to wave, flutter, of the wings of birds, b. vængjum, to flutter with the wings, Stj. 74: of the leaves on a tree moved by a soft breeze, lauf viðarins blakaðu hægliga, Barl. 161; austan blakar laufið á þann linda, Fornkv. 129; blakir me þari um hnakka, Fms. vi. 376 (in a verse). In mod. usage, blakta, að or t, is freq. used of leaves, of the flaring of a light, ljós blaktir á skari, the flame flutters on the wick; hence metaph., öndin blaktir á skari, Snót 128; blaktir önd á brjósti, 121: the phrase, blaktir ekki hár á höfði, not a bair moves on one's bead.

blaka, u, f. a veil of silk, Fas. iii. 337; a pan, Mar. 153: now also = blabka, v. above s. v. blab.

blakk-fjallr, adj. black-skinned, epithet of a wood-bear, Akv. 11.

blakkr, m. (for, word), a sort of measure, N. G. L. i. 324.

blakkr, m., poët. a borse, cp. Blanka, the mythical horse of Thideric (Dietrich) of Bern, Lex. Poet.

BLAKKR, adj. [A.S. blac; Engl. black; O. H. G. plak; in Icel. swartr. as in A.S. and other kindred tongues swart, etc., represents the Lat niger; while blakkr corresponds to the Lat. ater, dead or dusky black], in poetry used as an epithet of wolves, etc., Lex. Poet., in prose it is very rare, Fas. iii. 592; hence blekkja, to defraud: the mod. Icel. blek, n. inh, Swed. blak, Dan. blak, come from blakkr, corresponding to Lat. atramentum, Str. 63 (blez), Pr. 474. II. = bleikr, pale; blakkr hestr, Ghv. 18 (perh, corrupt for bleikr, pale, cp. folvan jo, Hkv. 2. 47), the colour of death: to dream of riding on a pale horse forebodes death, Bjarni 136; on a red horse a bloody death, Fs. (Vd.) 67.

blakra, ab, [blakra, Ivar Aasen, to shake, of leaves], to blink; b. augum, Hom. 89; now blakta, að, e.g. b. augum, to move the eyes, and also used of the beating of the heart; hon fann að hjartað blaktaði, in the story of the Beauty and the Beast (Skrymslið Góða), Kvöldy, ii. 176: blakra vængjum = blakta vængjum, to flutter with the wings, Barl. 88; of sails, Ulf. 3. 14.

bland, n. in the adverbial phrase, i bland, among, Dan, i blandt, Bs. i.

802, Stj. 231, Matth. xiii. 25, (rare in mod. usage.)

BLANDA, in early Icel. poetry and prose a strong verb; pres. 1st pers. blend, Ls. 3; 3rd pers. blendr, Grág. ii. 389; reflex. blendsk, Symb. 30; pret. Ist pers. blétt, Am. 79, Greg. 50; reflex. blézk, Orkn. 104 (in a verse from about A.D. 1046); pl. bléndu, bléndum, Ls. 9, Greg. 60, Edda 47; reflex. bléndusk, Hkm. 8; subj. reflex. bléndisk, Mart. 129; blandinn (freq.), Sdm., Yt., etc., vide Lex. Poët., Skálda 164; but in the 13th century and later the weak form (blanda, ab) prevailed in all tenses except the part. pass., where the old blandinn = blandaor may still be used, though the weak is more common; imperat. blanda, Pr. 471, 472, N. G. L. i. 12; pres. blandar, 13; part. blandaðr, Sks. 349, Pr. 470, 472 (MS. about A.D. 1250), [Ulf. blandan, a redupl. verb; A.S. bland; Engl. blend; O. H. G. blantan; lost in N.H.G.; Swed. blanda]:—to blend, mix, the beverage in acc., the mixed ingredient in dat.; b. mjöð (drykk), eitri, meini, Greg. l.c.; drottning ok Bárðr blönduðu þá drykkinn ólyfjani, Eg. 210: adding 'við,' lítið (acc. instead of dat.) verðr ok við blandit, Skálda 164; maturt blandin við upsa-gall, Pr. l.c.; þar fellr Jórdan í gegnum, ok blendsk eigi (does not blend) við vötnin, Symb, l. c.; tak skógar súru ok blanda (imperat.) við fornt vín, Pr. l. c.; b. með, id., Rb. 164; b. saman, to mix together, Pr. l. c. II. metaph. to mix together, of fellowship or association, but partic used of carnal intercourse, cp. the Gr. profiper, Lat. misceri; b. mötuneyti (dat.) vid e-n, to eat together with one, N.G. L. l. c.; blandask i samfélagi, to associate with, Mart. l. c.; vér megum eigi hjálp né heilsu af Guði fá, nema vér blandimk við hans orð, 625. 181; þeir blönduðusk þá meir við mannfólk enn nú, they had more intercourse with, Fas. i. 301: to bave carnal intercourse, var skal eingi blandask við bufé, N. G. L. i. 18; þat féll í hórdómum, ok blönduðusk við þær konur er af heiðnum þjóðum vóru, Sks. 588. III. part. blandinn is used as an adj. with the notion mixed, mingled, bad, of temper, character, manner; Helgi var blandinn mjök (bad a mixed, mingled ereed), hann truði á Krist, en hét á þór til harðræða ok sjófara, Landn. 206; þú ert maðr vaskr ok vel at þér (thou art bold and brave), en hon er blandin mjök, but she is a woman of mixed report, blands, u, f. any minture of two fluids, Fs. 145 (of watery blood); but esp. a beverage of bot whey mixed up with water, Vm. 60, Fms. ix. 360. Blanda also is the local name of a stream of glacier water in the north of Icel., v. Landn.

β. metaph. the name of a book, miscellanea; skal sjá skrá... heita B., því at saman er blandað skyldu tali ok tkyldu, Rb. 4, v. l., in MS. Am. 625, 4to. blöndu-horn, n. a cup of blanda, a cognom., Landn. 278.

blandan, f. mixing, N.G. L. i. 153.

blasa, t; sup. blasað, [Engl. blaze], of places, in the phrase, b. við, to lie full and open before the eye (mod.)

blaud-hugadr, adj. soft of beart, cowardly, Fbr. 108.

bland-kladdr, part. soft-clad, b. mann, a rendering of Matth. xi. 8, a man clothed in soft raiment, 625. 95.

blaub-liga, adv. and -ligr, adj. cowardly, Hkr. iii. 162.

BLAUDR, adj. [A. S. bleáde; Scot. blate = basbful, sby; Hel. blotbi; Germ. blode; cp. Goth. blaubjan = deupouv, and Hel. blodan = infirmare], it properly means soft, weak, Lat. mollis, Gr. μάλακος, and is opposed to hvatt, brisk, vigorous; hence the proverb, får er hvatr er hrörask tekr, ef i barnæsku er blauðr, Fm. 6, cp. Fms. viii. 49. B. metaph, blaudr means feminine, hvatr masculine, but only used of animals, dogs, cats, fishes; hvatr-lax = hæingr = salmo mas; bleyða, u, f., is a dam, and metaph. a coward; blaudr is a term of abuse, a bitch, coward; hafi hendr á (hundinum, add. p. 149) ok drepi þótt b. sé, take the dog and kill it, though it be a biteb, Gisl. 63; blaudir hundar, Fms. ii. 163, xi. 10. metaph., Hallgerör mælti við Gunnar, jafnkomit er á með ykkr, er hvárttveggi er blauðr (a taunt addressed to the beardless Njal), Nj. 59; blaamyra; vide Ivar Aasen s. v. blaamyr, the sea.

bíð nú ef bú ert eigi b., Nj. 205, cp. Skr. 114, 406, in the last passage used = blautr : blaudir eru vér nú ordnir. Niðrst. 6.

blaut-barn, n. a baby, in the phrase, frá blautbarns beini = blautu barns beini, Barl. 41.

blaut-flakr, m. a fresh fish, cod, Bs. i. 853.

blaut-holdr, adj. baving soft, smooth flesh; mær b., Karl. 470.

blaut-hugaor, adj. faint, soft-minded, Glum, 300.

blaut-leikr, m. effeminacy, Stj. 345 blaut-lendr, adj. soft, moist-soiled, Fms. v. 230.

blaut-liga, adv. and -ligr, adj. faintly, effeminate, Stj. 362; b. kossar, 417; b. kvæði, soft, amorous ditties, Bs. i. 237.

BLAUTR, adi. [A. S. bleat = miser; Germ. blozs = nudus; Scot. blait = nudus (Jamieson): Dan. blod: Swed. blodig = soft: the Dan. and Swed. blott, blotted, = stripped, are borrowed from Germ.; Ivar Aasen distinguishes between blau = sby, and blaut = wet, damp; blaudr and blautr are no doubt only variations of the same word]. I. soft, Lat, mollis, in a good sense; this sense of the word remains only in a few compds, v. above, and in a few phrases, e.g. frá blautu barns beini, from babybood, Fms. iii. 155, Magn. 522, Al. 71; b. fiskr, fresb (soft) fisb, Bs. i. 853, opp. to haror (dried) fiskr; in Swed., however, it means soaked fish: in poetry, b. sæing, a soft bed, Gisl. (in a verse): of stuffs, but only in less classical writers or translated romances; b. purpuri, Bret. 32: lerept. Sks. 400 A; dunn, Mart. 126; blautir vindar, soft breezes, Sks. 214 B: a single exception is, Edda 19, fjöturinn var sléttr ok b. sem silkiræma, soft and smooth as silk lace. 2. = blaudr, faint, imbecile; blautir menn, Al. 34, Fas. i. 161: a paraphrasis of blaudr in II. but commonly metaph, = soaked, wet, miry, [cp. Swed, blöt, and the phrase, lägga sit hufuud i blöt, to beat one's brains: cp. also bleyta, mud; bloti, thaw; blotna, to melt]; par voru vellir blautir, því at regn höfðu verit, Eg. 528; keldur blautar, 266; beir fengu ekki blautt um Valbjarnar-völlu, Bs. i. 500, etc.; cp. Scot. and blá, f., pl. blár, an ἄπ. λεγ. in a verse Isl. ii. 233, where it seems to mean the billows, blue waves. Ivar Aasen records 'blaa' a Norse term for the blue borizon; cp. the Icel. phrase, út í bláinn (as from blár, m.), into the blue, of what is thrown away, words spoken without need or end. In the east of Icel. blá means a meadow covered with snow half melted away, Erik Jonsson, Dict. s. v.

North. E. soft road, soft weather, = wet, Scott's Black Dwarf. ch.

blá-ber, n. pl., botan., Lat. vaccinium, as a cognom., Ann. 1393: adal-blaber, vaccinium myrtillus, the bleaberry, Hjalt. blá-brúnaðr, adj. dark blue coloured, of stuff, Bs. i. 506.

blá-djúp, n. the blue sea, i. e. deep, open sea, Bs. ii. 179, 181.

blá-eygr and -eygor, adj. blue-eyed, Nj. 29, Fms. vii. 101, Hkr. iii.

blá-fastr, adj. very strong, Karl. 551.

blá-fáinn, adj. with a blue polish [fá, to paint], Sks., Rm. 26.

blá-feldr, m. a cloak of blue fur, N.G. L. i. 75.

blá-fjallaör, adj. blue-black, epithet of the raven, Landn. (in a verse).

blá-góma, u, f. labrus luscus.

blá-gras, n. a sort of geranium, the g. pratense.

bla-gryti, n. blue bard stones rolled in the surf, Eggert Itin. § 477.

blá-hattr, m. scabiosa, Ivar Aasen; a cognom., Sturl. ii. 207.

blá-hvítr, adj. wbite-blue, Gh. 4.

bla-kaldr, adj. blue-cold, of purling water or iron, cp. the phrase, berja fram blakalt, bammering the iron cold, of obstinate, dogged reasoning.

blá-kápa, u, f. a blue cape or cloak. blákápu-maor, m. a blue cloaked man, Gísl. 37.

blá-kinn, f. with a blue (black) chin, Landn. 201.

bla-klukka, u, f., botan. campanula rotundi-folia, Hjalt.

blá-klæddr, part. blue-clad, Fms. iii. 116.

blá-leitr, adj. blue-faced, Karl. 5.

blá-lenzkr, adj. Ethiopian, from Bláland, n. Ethiopia, Nigritia, and North-west Africa in general; Blalendingar, m. pl. Etbiopians; cp. 625. 625, Al. 51, Rb. 568, Stj. 253, 254.

blá-maor, m. a black man, negro, i. e. an Ethiopian, Al. 51, Orku. 364 (referring to A.D. 1152), distinguished from the Saracens and Arabians; three 'blamenn' were sent as a present to the German emperor Frederic the Second, Fms. x. 3: in romances blamenn are mentioned as a kind of 'berserkers,' q. v., Finnb. ch. 16, Kjalnes. S. ch. 15; cp. Scott's Ivanhoe, note B.

blaman, f. the livid colour of a bruise, Stj. 46. Gen. iv. 23.

bla-mengdr and -mengjaor, part. blue-mingled, Dipl. i. 168.

blé-merktr, part. marked, variegated with blue, Vm. 149, 153. blé-mær, f. [mærr = moor, cp. landamæri, borders, Caes. Bell. Gall. vi. ch. 23], the blue moor, an aπ. λεγ. in the Norse poet Eyvind Skáldaspillir as an epithet of the sea about A. D. 960, Hkr. i. 154; cp. Landn. 54, which reads boromærar, and attributes the verse to another poet. The word is still in use in Norway in the popular phrase, ut aa blans, 20, to become black, livid, Nj. 203 (iron in fire); Hkr. i. 103 (of a plague-stricken corpse), Fms. ii. 42.

BIÁR, adj., fem. blá, neut. blátt, [Scot. bla, which has the Icel. sense of dark blue, livid: cp. A. S. bleov; Engl. blue; Germ. blau; Swed.-Dan. blå: cp. also A. S. bleo = colour], prop. Lat. lividus; of the colour of lead, Snót 231; blár sem Hel, cp. Engl. black as death, Eb. 314, cp. Edda 13; of the livid colour caused by a blow, in the alliterative phrase, blár ok blóðugr, Korm. 108; sárir eða lostnir svá blátt eðr rautt sá eptir, Grág. ii. 13: blár is the colour of mourning, tjalda blám reflum, Fms. xi. 17; falda blá, to wrap the bead in black, Ísl. ii. 351 (in a verse); cp. kolblár, Blámaðr, etc.; blár logi, a pale lowe, of a witch's flame, Guilþ. 5: of cloths; möttull, Nj. 24; kápa, 255; kyrtill, 184; mörk, stripes, Ld. 244.

β. metaph. foolish insipid; cp. bláheimskr; hann er ekki blár innan, a popular phrase, he is no goose.

blá-rendr, adj. [rönd], blue-striped; brækr, Nj. 184.

BLASA, blés, blésu, blásit; pres. blæss, [Ulf. blêsan, a redupl. verb; Germ. blasen; Swed. blasa; cp. Engl. blow (blast); A.S. blavan; Lat. I. to blow, Lat. flare, of the wind; the naut. alliterative flare.] phrase, blasandi byrr, a fresh breeze, Fms. vii. 287; vindrinn blæs og þú heyrir hans þyt, John iii. 8. 2. act, to blow a trumpet, sound an alarm, with dat. of the people and the instrument, the act of blowing in acc.; b. lúðri, Fms. vii. 287; var blásinn herblástr, sounded an alarm, ix. 358; b. liði (troops) til ofangaungu, Orkn. 350, Bret. 46; b. til stefnu, to a meeting, Fms. vii. 286; konungr let b. öllum mönnum ór bænum, ix. 304; b. til þings, viii. 210; til héraðstefnu, ix. 255, v.l.: absol., pá bað hann b., sound the attack, viii. 403. B. to blow the bellows; blastu (imperat.) meir, Landn. 270 (in a verse), Edda Y. to melt, cast, the metal in acc.; hann bles fyrstr manna rauða á Íslandi, ok var hann af því kallaðr Rauðabjörn, Landn. 71, cp. Sks. 163; b. gullmálm, Bret. 4; sumir blésu ok steyptu af málmi Guðs líkneski, Barl. 139; sem af glóanda járni því er ákafliga er blásit í eldi, Fms. viii. 8; yxn tveir or eiri blasnir (cast), Bret. 22. δ. to swell. II. to breathe, blow up; létt sem belgr blásinn, Fms. x. 308. Lat. spirare; svá sem andi blæsk af munni, Eluc. 4: to blow with the mouth, hann blés í kross yfir drykk sínum, Fs. 103; bléss hann á þá og sagði, með-takið þeir Heilagan Anda, John xx. 22; b. við, to draw a deep breath; hon bles við ok svarar, Clem. 50; jarl bles þá við mæðiliga, Fs. 10, Magn. 444: to sigh, of a sick man, Gisl. 47; b. hatt við, Bjarn. 24: without 'viò,' Sturl. i. 20; b. eitri, eldi (of serpents or dragons), to 2. theol. to inspire; Gud snort, Edda 42; of a horse, Greg. 49. 2. theol. to inspire; Guð blés sínum anda (dat.) í brjóst honum, Fms. i. 142, 199; Guð blés henni því í brjóst, Stj. 160 (cp. innblástr). 3. b. móti e-m, to conspire against one, Fms. vii. 164: in the phrase, 'to blow not a hair off one's head,' Jarl mælti, at eingi skyldi b. hár af höfði Sveini, no one sbould dare to make a bair move on bis bead, Orkn. 252. III. impers.: medic. to 'boulne,' swell, from sickness, wounds..., the wound or swollen limb in acc.; hann svall svá ákafliga, at allan blés kviðinn, Bs. i. 319; sár Grims varð illa, ok blés upp fótinn, Dropl. 36, Grett. 153; hann blés allan, Bs. i. 116. 2. of land, to be laid bare, stripped of the turf by wind; hafði blásit hauginn ok lá silfrið bert, Fms. iv. 57. supine, and partic, the personal construction reappears; á Ormarsstöðum par sem er blasio allt, where all is stripped, harren, Landn. 280; meltorfa blasin mjök, stripped, barren, Hrafn. 27: medic., hin hægri geirvartan var blasin upp, 655 xxxii. 10; hans hörund var allt blasit, Fas. i. 286, Rb. 374; syndist fótrinn blásinn ok kolblár, Grett. 152.

blá-saumaor, part. blue-embroidered, Pm. 12.

blá-silft, n. bad silver, opp. to skirt silft; þrim tigum sinna skal b. vega móti gulli, tíu sinnum skirt silft móti gulli, 732. 16: the proportion of bad to pure silver is thus as three to one.

blá-síða, u, f., cp. grásíða, a cognom., Isl. ii. 52. blá-stafaðr, adj. blue-striped; segl. b., Fms. x. 345. blá-stjarna, u, f. the blue star, i. e. Hesperus, Snót 131.

blástr, rs, m., dat. blæstri, blæsti, Hom. 47; pl. blástrar: 2. breath; b. af lopti, Eluc. 19; málit görisk af blast, Sks. 213. blæstrinum, Skálda 170: the blast of a trumpet, Fms. ix. 30: bissing of serpents, breathing of whales (hvala blastr), Gullh. 8: blowing a bellows, Edda 70. 3. medic. swelling, mortification, Nj. 209, Dropl. 36, Bs. i. 182. COMPDS: blastr-belgr, m. a bellows, Karl. 18. hol, n. the blow-bole of a whale. blástr-horn (blástrarhorn), n. a trumpet, born, 655. 8, Rb. 372. blastr-jarn, n. blast iron, cast, not wrought, Grag. i. 501, Jb. 345. blástr-samr, adj. windy, Sks. 41. blastr-svalr, adj. cold blowing, Sks. 41, v. l.

blá-tonn, f. a cognom. baving a blue, black tusk, Fas. ii. 390.

bledja, 20, [blad], prop. to prune, lop trees and plants, Bs. ii. 165, N.G.L. i. 241: esp. in the metaph. phrase, b. 21, to destroy, kill off one by one; mun hann svá zetla at b. hirdina, Fms. ii. 55, vii. 36, Fs. 96. blegd, m. [bleyg and blöyg, Ivar Aasen; Germ. pflock; Engl. plug], a plug, Krók. 56, where in pl.

bleik-alottr, adj., bleikalingr, m., and bleikala, f. a dun borse with a dark stripe down the back, Nj. 81, Sturl. ii. 145, Grett. 91.

bleik-harr, adj. auburn, Hkr. iii. 174, Fms. vii. 101.

bleik-hvítr, adj. of yellowish white colour, Hkr. iii. 250. bleikja and bleika, u, f. chalk paint; draga með bleiku, Hkr. ii. 341, Fms. iv. 96. 2. salmo levis, Fél. i. 11.

bleikja, t, ð, [Swed. bleka; Germ. bleichen], to bleach; b. lérept, to bleach linen, Fas. ii. 71: in the phrase, b. hadda (cp. haddblik), of ladies, to wash and comb the bair, Edda 75.

BLEIKR, adj. [A.S. blåc or blæc; Engl. bleached and bleak; Swed. blek; Germ. bleich and blass]:—pale, wan, of the colour of gold, Fms. v. 345; of bad silver, Grág. i. 500; of fruits, Stj. 161; of ripe barley fields, b. akrar, Nj. 112, and N. T. John iv. 35, a rendering of λευκόs in the Gr.; of animals, a faun-coloured horse is in Icel. called Bleikr, m., a mare Bleik, f., Flov. 33, Vígl.; an ox, Vápn. 21; of hair, auburn, Fær. 156; bleikt hár, the fair locks of a baby, Rm. 31, where 'bleak and bright' are alliterative; Homer's ξαυθόs is in Icel. rendered by bleikhárr.

2. = Lat. pallidus, the colour of ashes, pale from fright, loss of blood, or emotion, Fms. i. 216; fiskbleikr, pale as a fish, vii. 269; b. sem bast, pale as bast, etc.: of the moonshine, Sks. 627: the colour of death, því ligg ek b. í brúki, of a corpse mouldering at the bottom of the sea, Fms. vi. 376.

blek, n. ink, v. under 'blakkr.' blek-horn, n. an ink-born, Th. 76. blekkiliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. [blakkr], delusively, Mar., Al. 36. blekking, f. delusion, fraud, H. E. i. 506, Fms. x. 207, Hkr. iii, blekkja, t, 28, [blakkr], to impose upon, Stj. 335, Fms. i. 215, Hkr. ii. 317, Magn. 466.

112.

blendingr, m. a blending, mixture.

2. metaph. a being balf man and balf giant, not a downright giant (troll); b. en ekki full-komit troll, Fas. iii. 179; b. purs einn, Grett. 135.

BLESI, a, m. and blosofter, adj. the blaze or white star on a borse's forebead, and as a pr. name of the horse himself, Landn. 70, Fms. vi. 414.

BLESTR and blesmæltr, adj. lisping, Skálda 170, Sturl. i. 60, Barl. 15.

BLETTR, s, m., pl. ir, [Engl. blot; Dan. plet], loc. a spot, blot, Fms. iii. 123 in a paper MS., the vellum MS. Fb. i. 228 reads 'flekkr:' blot, mjök grandvarr af blettum, without stain, blotless, 655 xxxii. 19: now much used in a loc. sense, a spot.

bleyoa, u, f. [blaudr], a craven, Hkr. i. 338.

bleyoask, dep. to lose beart as a craven, Fms. vi. 312: impers. with dat., viii. 137.

bleyði, f. cowardice, Fms. ii. 306: softness, in a good sense (rare), Sks. 496 B. comps: bleyði-maðr, m. a coward, Nj. 54, Fms. vi. 260. bleyði-mannligr, adj. cowardly, Fms. ii. 69. bleyði-mark, n. a mark of cowardice, Tistr. bleyði-orð, n. a cbarge of cowardice, Fas. ii. 530; leggja b. á bak e-m, Grett. 102.

bleyta, u, f. [blautr], mud, Clem. 35: mire, Hrafn. 27 (freq.)

bleyta, tt, to soak, moisten; b. húð, a bide, Fas. i. 289; leir, clay, Bret. 106.

2. to soften, Greg. 38, 655 v. B (rare in that sense). bleyti. n. soaking.

BLEZA, bletza, mod. blessa, að, [A.S. bletzian; Engl. bless; akin to blot, blota, denoting worship]:-to bless; an English word, which came to Icel, and Norway along with the Gospel; in Norway it never took root, and soon died out, and is at present unknown in Scandinavia; whilst in Icel. it grew from a term of worship into a household word of endearment and affection; the guest or traveller is met with a 'Guo blessi pig,' God bless thee, in reply to his greeting, 'her se Guð,' when entering a house; it is also the reply to one returning thanks. The Norseman, Swede, and Dane say, 'Gud signe dig' (cp. Germ. segnen), whilst 'signa' (signare) in Icel. usage only means to make the sign of the cross. Bleza is used as a standing epithet of the sun, blessub solin, the blessed sun: so also the alliterative phrase, blessað barnið, the blessed bairn; blessaðr. blessuo, in addressing, cp. Engl. bless you! In old writers it answers to a. with acc., Stj. 28, 655 ix, 'benedictus' þýðir b., Lat. benedicere: xxi, Fms. i. 230, K. Å. 120.

B. with dat, rare and now unusual; Guö b. fiskum ok fuglum, Stj. 18, Eluc. 40, Blas. 40; blessuð ertú á meðal kvenna, N. T. Luke i. 28. 2. reflex. to give good luck, succeed.

blezan, f. a blessing, benediction, Bs. i. 562; bliss, Hom. 13, Greg. 79. COMPD: blezanar-andi, 2, m. spirit of b., Stj. 242.

blezing, f. id., 655 viii. 2. BLIAT, 2 kind of stuff, (for. word), El. 21, Str. 12, 79.

BLIK, n. [cp. Germ. blick and blitz; Engl. blink (in ice-blink, the gleam of distant ice-fields), and blaze], gleam, sbeen, Scot. glint, Lat. nitor; barach þýðir b. eðr brjánda, Stj. 389. The original notion of fulgor is alien to Icel.; even augnablik, q. v., is of Dan. and Germ. extraction; a dead-calm sea is in Danish bavblik and bliktsille, but in Icel. blæja-logn. The gleam of metal (shields) is called blik, Edda 86 (poët.): of the sky, Breiðablik is the heavenly abode of the god Baldr, Gm. 12.

2. bleaching, Dan. bleg; blæjur á bliki, Fas. ii. (in a verse); lérept á bliki, N. G. L. i. 381.

7. II. (for. word), the vizor on a belmet, in writers of the 14th and 15th centuries, Fas. iii. 229, Ann. 1393.

blika, u, f. light clouds foreboding storms, such as the Engl. call mare's tails,' (regn-blika, vind-blika), hence the saying, e-m lizt ekki a blikuna, when matters look threatening; freq. in mod. usage, though no instance is on record in old writers. 2. medic. pallor. Dan. blegesot.

blika, að, and blíkja, bleik, bliku, an old obsolete poët, form, of which only remain the forms, 3rd pers. pl. pret. bliku, fulgebant, Vkv. 6, Fas. i. 186 (in a verse): infin., blikia, Hkr. i. o6 (in a verse): 3rd pers. pl. pres. blikja, fulgent, Grag. ii. 170, in an old law form; part. blikjanda, Edda 231, [Lat. fulgere; Germ. blicken, cp. blitzen; Engl. to blink]:-to gleam, twinkle, Lat. micare; the stars 'blika,' the sun 'skin;' used of arms, skildir bliku beirra við hinn skarða mána, Vkv. l. c.; bliku reið er Regin átti, Fas. l.c.; á baki létu blíkja (of the shields), Hkr. l.c.; skildir blíka við 1 Rauðaskriðum, Nj. 143, cp. Grág. ii. 170; blikuðu þar skildir við, Eg. 724; blika við sólu, Fbr. 156; blíkjanda (part.) böl, gleaming bale, of the hall of Hela, Edda l. c.

blik-hvitr, adj. white-gleaming, of a shield, Lex. Poët.

bliki, a, m. a drake; andar-bliki, zbar-bliki, etc.

blikna, 20, [bleikr], to become pale, Fms. ii. 240, iv. 166, Flov. 41. blikra, að, [Ivar Aasen blikra, to flutter], to blink; impers. with dat., kvaðst hann eigi hirða þó bónda blikraði nokkut til hvat fyrir væri (= blöskraði, felt a sbudder), Grett. 100 A (rare).

blinds, 20, [Ulf. blindjan], to blind, deprive of sight, Fms. v. 268, vii. 207, Stj. 619: metaph. to deceive, Fms. ii. 46, v. 217, Gbl. 215.

blindi, f. indecl., mod. blindni, blindness, Stj. 620, Greg. 35: metaph., Blas. 47: snjó-blinda, u, f. snow-blindness; nátt-blinda, nyctalopia; dag-blinda, bemeralopia, Fél.

blindingr, m. a blind or bidden peg, of pegs used to pin planks together edgeways, serving the same purpose as tongue and groove. Edda 232.

blindleikr, m. blindness, Fms. ii. 241, Stj. 122: metaph., H. E. i. 462. BLINDR, adj. [Ulf. blinds; A.S. and Engl. blind; O.H.G. plint; Germ. blind; common to all Teut. idioms, whilst Gr. riplos and Lat. caecus are of different roots]:-blind; blindr borinn, born blind, Nj. 152, Fms. vi. 389: proverb, misjafnir eru blinds manns bitar: metaph., with gen., mjök er mannfólkit blint ens sanna um forlögin, blind as to ebe fate, Al. 23: neut. 25 adv., dark, ekki er þat blint hvers þú eggjar, Fms. iv. 133; Einarr lét ser þat blint vera, i. e. said that be knew nothing about it, viii. 10; Grettir segir at beim var blint til bess at ætla, a blind matter for them to guess at, Grett. 148 A: a thick storm is called 'blindbylr;' (but the Icel. call thick darkness 'nioa-myrkr,' Dan, bælgmörke); the Germans call blind what is bidden and cannot be seen; this is rare in Icel., yet blind-sker, a bidden skerry (rock) in the sea; cp. also blindingr.

blida, u, f. [Ulf. bleihei], literally blitheness, but in usage gentleness, grace, of a woman; alla blibu let hon uppi vio mik, Ni. 18; hofst ba enn at nýju b. (friendly intercourse) með þeim mágum, Fms. ix. 450: in mod. usage, balminess of the air: fair words, blandishment, Sks. 540. COMPD: bliou-brago, n. a token of grace, caressing, Stj. 90, Fms. vii. 108: in a less good sense, of outward shew, Fas. iii. 151, 209.

blíðask, að, dep. = blíðkask, Thom. 183.

blioka, 20, to render 'blitbe,' caress, coax, Ld. 286: reflex., Stj. 142. bliokan, f. caressing, Stj. 186.

blioleikr and -leiki, m. mildness, balminess, of the air, Fms. x. 336. Rb. 336: blandishment, Pass. 31. 10.

blibleitr, 2dj. of mild countenance, Fms. xi. 215, v.l.

blioliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. blitbely, graciously; taka, fagna e-m b., Nj. 4, Sks. 370, Fms. vii. 107, ix. 411. blid-lundadr and -lyndr, adj. of gentle disposition, Magn. 474.

blio-lyndi, n. gentle disposition.

blio-leti, n. caressing, Bs. i. 140, Greg. 51.

blio-mali, n. fair words, blandishments, Fms. x. 307, i. 109, Pass. 6.6. blíð-mæltr, adj. bland, Sturl. ii. 189, Fms. xi. 215, vii. 239.

BLIDR, adj. [Ulf. bleibs, olarippor, misericors; and bleibi, olarippos; gableibjan, olereipeir; A.S. blide; Engl. blitbe; Hel. blitbi = clarus, laetus]:—in usage, mild, gentle, soft; blior is a word of endearment, but as it denotes the outward expression of mildness in the eyes, look, voice, it also has a bad sense, bland, fawning, enticing: alliterative proverb, blið er bætandi hönd; b. ok þekkr, Bs. i. 131; b. orð, Fms. x. 292; b. ok kátr, Eg. 45; blíð ok eptirmál, mild and charming, of a wife, Nj. 13: of the air, blitt veor, mild, balmy, Fms. ii. 76, vi. 378: metaph., blitt ok stritt, whether it pleases or not, in fine weather or foul, Sturl. i. 193; fyrir blidu né strídu, neither by fair nor foul means, 625. 95: agreeable, eigi blid baksletta, Al. 90; e-m er blidara, 'tis more pleasant for one, one is better pleased, Fms. x. 353.

blið-skapr, ar, m. mildness, kindness, friendly terms, Fms. i. 102; með bliðskap, m. friendly terms, Eg. 740, Stj. 192.

blio-veor and blioviori, n. mild weather, 655 xii. 2, Thom. 167. bliö-yrði, n. blandishment, Sks. 530, Fms. x. 292.

BLIFA, [Germ. bleiben; akin to leisa, q.v.], to remain; this word was taken from Luther's Bible into Icel., and is used by theol. writers; pret. sing. is never used, but pret. pl. blifu, Pass. 50. 4.

BLIGJA, &, [Swed. bliga = to gaze, stare], to gaze; b. augum, Mirm. 70. & bligr, m. staring, gazing, a cognom., Eb. blina, d, to stare, gaze, [cp. A. S. blin.]

blistra, u, f. the mouth-piece of bellows, Vm. 177.

BLISTRA, ad, to whistle, Fb. i. 553, Fas. iii. 337, Bret. 26: the phrase, b. i spor e-m, prob. a hunting term, to run whistling after one, Korm. 62. Fms. viii. 60. 2. of snakes, to biss, Fr.

blistran, f. (blistr, n.), whistling, Mar. 61, Konr. 58 (Fr.): the mod. phrase, standa & blistri, to be swoln like bellows, is curious, and indicates a relation between blasa and blistra.

bljúgr, adj. [Swed. blyg], bashful, shy, modest, Pass. 16. 14 (penitent). blossi, a, m. a flame, Dan. bluss, (mod.), Pass. 3. 2.

BLOTI, a, m. [blautr], a thaw, melting of snow (freq.)

blotna, ad, to become moist or soft: metaph, to lose courage; blotnar hann eigi við þat, Ísl. ii. 330, Fms. viii. 137.

BLOD, n. [Ulf. blob, common to all Teut. idioms]:-the blood, Lat. sanguis; 'dreyri' is cruor; 'hlaut,' q. v., is blood shed in sacrifice, cp. Eb. ch. 4, Nj. 107, Eb. 242, Fms. i. 46; nema, láta (mod. taka) b., to take, let blood (bloblat), vii. 269, Grag. ii. 133; ganga blobi, to bave a bemorrhage, Bs. i. 337: the phrase, blanda blodi saman, to mix blood together, Ls. q, refers to the old heathen rite of entering foster-brothership, defined in Gisl. 11, Fbr. 7, Fb. ii. 93, Fas. iii. 376: metaph. offspring, Stj. 47; hjart-bloo, beart's blood; dauda-bloo, life-blood, gore: metaph. compound words are rare. In poets 'blood of Quasir' means poetry; the blood of the giant Ymir, the sea, vide Edda 47, 5. Fél. ix. 198, 199, records many medic. compounds, blodfall and blodlat, menorrhagia; blódhella, congestio ad viscera; blódkýli, ulcus; blódmiga, baematuria; blóðnasir, f. pl. epistaxis; blóðrás, bemorrbagia; blóðsótt, dysenteria; blóðhrækjur, baemoptysis; blóðspýja, baematemesis, etc. Other compos: blóða-brúðgumi, a, m., Stj. 42. Exod. iv. 25, the 'bloody busband' bloos-akr, m. the field of blood, Matth. xxvii. 8. of the Engl. text. blóðs-peningar, m. blóðs-litr, m. blood-colour, 656. 6, Eb. 26. bloos-uthelling, f. a shedpl. the price of blood, Matth. xxvii. 6. ding of blood, Fas. i. 73.

bloo-band, n., mostly in pl. a bandage to stop bleeding, Bs. i. 625, 376. bloo-bogi, a, m. a gusb of blood, Ni. 210, Fms. vi. 419, Sd. 178.

bloo-drefjar, f. pl. spatterings of blood, Grett. 111 A.

bloo-drekkr, m. one who drinks blood, Fas. iii. 573: epithet of a fox.

bloo-dropi, a, m. a drop of blood, Bs. i. 45, Fms. i. 270.

bloo-drykkja, u, f. drink of blood, Thom. 150.

bloo-fall, n. and bloofalls-sott, f. bloody flux, dysentery, Bs. i. 317, ii. 108, 618.

blóð-flekkr, m. a fleck or stain of blood, Eb. 242.

blóð-fors, m. a gusb of blood, Nj. 244. blóð-fullr, adj. full of blood, Fbr. 12.

blooga, ab, to make bleed, Nj. 82: reflex. to become bloody, Str. 78.

blooi, a, m., poet. a brother, consanguineus, Edda (Gl.), Haustl. 14. blooigr, adj., contr. bloogir, -gum, etc.; in mod. usage uncontracted through all cases, and so it is freq. in old writers, e. g. blooigan (acc.), Bjarn. 50 vellum MS.; blóðugri (dat. f.), Grág. ii. 192: bloody, Nj. 19, Ísl. ii. 271, etc.

bloo-kýll, m. a blood-bag; metaph. a blood-sucker, a leech, Fms. ii. 317.

blóð-lauss, adj. (blóðleysi, n.), bloodless, Str. 5.

bloo-lat, n. loss of blood, Hkr. ii. 24: medic. blood-letting, bleeding, Fms. vii. 269, Str. 28, N. G. L. iii. 15.

bloo-latinn, part. baving blood let, bled, Bs. i. 848, Str. 27.

blóð-lifr, ar, f. pl. clotted blood, Nj. 171.

blóð-ligr, adj. bloody, Stj. 161.

blóð-litr = blóðslitr, Landn. 335 blóð-lækr, jar, m. a river of blood, Fms. vi. 407.

bloo-maokr, m. a maggot bred in putrefying blood, Stj. 91.

blóð-mikill, adj. pletboric.

bloo-neetr, f. pl. bloody nights; it may originally have been a law term, the night next after a murder or homicide; in the proverb, blodnætr eru hverjum bráðastar, i. e. the thirst for revenge rises highest during the bloody nights, Glum. 344, Fs. 39, Bs. i. 142. bloo-rauor, 2dj. blood-red, Fms. i. 217, Art. 120.

blóð-rás, f. a 'blood-rusb,' bemorrbagia, Ld. 140, Fms. x. 395, Pr. 473: mod. also circulation of blood.

bloo-refill, m. the point of a sword, Nj. 246, Eg. 216, 306, Hkr. i. 70; a curious word; does refill here mean a snake? cp. refil-stigar, semita serpentis; cp. also Korm. ch. q.

bloo-reior, adj. very wrath, Fms. iv. 182.

bloo-risa, adj. ind. [Germ. blutrise = saucius, cruentus], bruised and bloody, Eb. 46; in the alliterative phrase, blar ok b., blue and bloody from blows, Grett. 147, Stj. 91: as to the root, cp. har-ramr, the outside, but hold-rosa, u, f. a tanner's term, the inside of a skin; yet bloorisa in the MSS, is not spelt with a y.

blóð-segi and blóðsigi, a, m. a clot of blood, Bs. i. 334, Fas. iii. 296.

blóð-skuld, f. blood-guilt, Pass. 2. 10, 25. 7.

bloo-Bott, f. monthly courses, Stj. 318, 256: dysenteria, Fol. ix. 199. bloo-spyja, u, f. a spitting of blood, Fs. 153, Ann. 1393.

Digitized by GOOGIC

blóð-stjarna, u. f. the bloody star, prob. Mars, Rb. 110. blóð-stokkinn, part. (mod. blóð-storkinn, stark with blood), gory all over, Bs. i, 626, Niorst. 3. bloo-straumr, m. a stream of blood, Fas. i. 400.

blóð-sveiti, a, m. a bloody sweat, Pass. 2. 12 (Luke xxii. 44).

blóð-tjörn, f. a pool of blood, Eb. 200.

blóð-vaka, u, f. | vekja blóð, cp. vökvi, m. fluid], a law term, the letting blood flow; svá hart at b. yrði, Bs. i. 871.

blóð-varmr, adi, blood-warm, warm as blood, Karl. 240.

bloo-son, f. a sheep (swe) fit for slaughter, Fms. xi. 36.

bloo-men, i. a speep (swe) ju jui sunguer, and bloometr, Bs. i. 142. bloo-orn, m. 'blood eagle,' in the phrase 'rista b.,' to cut a blood eagle, a cruel method of putting to death in the heathen times, practised, as it seems, only on the slayer of one's father if taken alive in a battle: the ribs were cut in the shape of an eagle and the lungs pulled through the opening, 2 sort of vivisection described in Orkn. ch. 8. Fas. i. 203, 354 (Ragn. S.): so king Ella was put to death by the sons of Ragnar Lodbrok, Fms. iii. 225: it is called a sacrifice to Odin of the victim, cp. the phrase, ok gaf hann Odni til sigrs sér, Orkn, l. c.; the old rite 'marka geirsoddi,' q. v., is analogous, not identical; cp. also upon the subject Grimm D. R. A., and Hm. 139.

bloo-ox and -ex, f. bloody axe, a cognom. of king Eric, Fms.

BLOM, n. [Ulf. bloma, Matth. vi. 28; Engl. bloom; Germ. blume; A.S. blosma, Engl. blossom, answers to blómstr, qs. Lat. flos. The Icel. has not the primitive verb. Hel. bloan; Germ. bluben]:-a bloom, blossom, flower; hvít blóm á grasi, El. 24; lauf ok blóm ok aldin, 19; gras ok blóm, flowers, Edda 145 (pref.), Fms. v. 345; þótti honum á einum kvistinum fegrst b., Bárð. 164; ekki bótti henni blómit (the bloom or blossom on the tree) svá mikit á vera sem hón vildi, Isl. ii. 14; kóróna af dýrligum blómum, Bret. compus: blóma-mikill, adj. rich-blossoming, Bárð. l. c. blom-berandi, part. bloom-bearing, Stj. blom-beranligr, adj. id., Fms. iii, 174.

blomgan, f. blooming, flourishing, Stj. 29. blomganligr, adj. blooming, Bs. ii. 183.

blomgast, ad, dep. to flourish, Magn. 502, Sks. 610: part. blomgaor, adj. which has blossom upon it, Fms. xi. q.

blómi, a, m. [Ulf. bloma, m., Matth. vi. 28; v. blóm]. 1. pl. blooms, blossoms, flowers; þar hrörna aldri fagrir blómar, Clem. 40; hafa rauða blóma (acc. pl.), 655 xiv; allskonar fagra blóma, Fms. x. 241; heilir blómar, flores integri, Magn. 468; this use is now rare. 2. sing. blooming; pat tré stendr ávalt síðan með blóma, in full bloom, 656 3. esp. metaph. full bloom, prosperity; stod hagr hans med hinum mesta blóma, Ísl. ii. 14, Band. 2, Fms. v. 346; í blóma aldrs síns (zsku blómi), in the bloom of life, viii. 29, vii. 108 (with blooming face); à peirra veldi var b. mjök langa hríð, Ver. 45, Sks. 758.

4. the yolk 4. the yolk in an egg; the phrase 'lifa sem blomi i eggi,' to live like the yolk in an egg, i. e. to live in perfect comfort.

blomstr, rs, m. bloom, blossom; allan akrsins blomstr, Stj. 20; sætan b., Sks. 630 B, 499; 'flos' is rendered by b., Stj. (pref.): in writers since the Reformation always neut.; allt eins og blómstrið eina, and glóandi blómstrið fritt, Hallgrimr, Snót 45; blóm and blómstr are synonymous, but blómi in common usage is metaph. = prosperity.

BLORAR, a, m. [cp. Dan. blar, the refuse of flax, and the phrase, at kaste een blar i öjnene, to throw dust in one's eyes], in Icel. only used in the metaph, phrase, at göra e-t í blóra við e-n, to commit an offence behind another person so that suspicion falls upon him: and blora-maor. m., en ef svá verðr sem mér er grunr á at, dóttir bín sé með barni, þá eru þar fáir blóramenn, ok vil ek ganga við faðerni, Fas. iii. 344.

BLOT, n. [Ulf. renders λατρεία and σέβασμα by blutinassus, cp. also A.S. compd words such as blotmonad]:—gener. worship, and worship including sacrifice, spec. a sacrificial feast or banquet, used freq. in pl. when in general sense; the feasts were, esp. the three great annual feasts, when the winter set in (Oct.), at Yule time and mid-winter (Dec. or Jan.), and when the summer began (April), O. H. ch. 94-96, Hkr. i. 139 sqq., Hák. S. G. ch. xvi sqq., and the verse of Kormak, Hafit maðr ask né eski, id., Hkr. (O. T.) i. 272, Fms. x. (O. T.) ch. 50, Fas. (Hervar. S.) i. 531, 512. Hervar. S. the last chapter, Eb. ch. 10, Eg. 257, Fb. i. 22; at Uppsölum vóru blót svá mikil í þann tíma, at hvergi hafa verit meiri á Norðrlöndum, Fas. i. 255; þann vetr fékk Ingólfr at blóti miklu ok leitaði sér heilla um forlög sín, Landn. 33, cp. Hým. 1, Vsp. 62; þar vóru áðr blót ok hörgar, Bs. i. 20 (Kr. S.), Fms. i. 131, Eb. 4; there are mentioned álfa-blót, dísa-blót, etc. 2. blót, or more correctly blæti, n. an idol, amulet, engi maðr skal hafa í húsum sínum, stalla, vit eðr blót (blæti) . . . nú ef blót (blæti) er funnit í húsi láslausu, mat-blót (dough idol) eðr leir-blót (clay idol) gört í mannslíki af leiri eðr deigi, þá . . ., N. G. L. i. 383, 389; cp. Fs. (Hallfr. S.) 97. II. metaph. in Christian times the name of the heathen worship became odious, and blot came to mean swearing, cursing, freq. in Sturl. and Bs., and in mod. usage, Sturl. ii. 106, 152, iii. 101, Fs. (Vd.) 36, Gisl. The terms for swearing in the heathen times were 'troll, gramir,' etc., q. v. BLOTA, in old use a strong (and originally a redupl.) verb, blota-hlét—blétu—blótinn; pres. blœt, and with the suffixed negative blœtka (I worship not), Stor. 22 (the Ed. wrongly blotka, without change of wrongly bloct(a)r, but a few lines below blotar (weak), probably altered from blætr; pret. sing. blét, Hkr. (Yngl.) 56, 269; pl. blétu, 56; subj. blétim, 623.61; imperat. blótt, Am. 75; part. blótinn, and sup. blótið are freq., Hkr. i. 34, 35, 239, Landn. 47, Fas. i. 255: more freq. weak, blóta, að; pres. blótar, blótast, Fas. i. 87, Fbr. 78; pret. blótaði, Landn. 224, 291, 322, Bs. i. 6 (Kr. S.), Nj. 272, Gisi. 140, Fær. 272, Fas. i. 463, 531, Bret., Fms. ii. 263, Hkr. i. 34, 35, Isl. ii. 109, Fs. 50: only the weak sup, and part, are rare in old writers; blotub, Hom. 153 (Norse); blótað (sup.), Bs. i. 5 (paper transcript): [Ulf. blotan (redupl. verb) = λατρεύειν, σέβεσθαι, cp. gubbloteins = παράπλησιε, gubblostreis = θεοσεβήε; A.S. blôtan = immolare; O.H.G. blozan; the root is probably akin to bletsian, Engl. to bless]: - gener. to worship, to worship with sacrifice; with acc. of the being worshipped, but dat. of the object sacrificed; thus b. hof, lund, fors, god, alfa, vættir, to worship temple, grove, force, gods, elves, beings; but b. mönnum, þrælum, kvikendum, to sacrifice with men. thralls, beasts, i.e. to sacrifice, slay them: also used absol.: with acc. or absol. to worship; skal porolfr b. ok leita heilla beim bræðrum, Eg. 257, 623. 61, Landn. 40, Hkr. i. 34 sqq., Fs. 41; heionar vættir, Nj. 272, Fær. 139, cp. Bret. 84, 94, Landn. 36, Ib. ch. 7, Bs. i. 25; b. til friðar, sigrs, langlifis, ars, byrjar, to make a sacrifice for peace, victory, long life, good season, fair wind, Hkr. i. 239, 34, 56, ii. 97, Fs. 173: of the worship of natural objects, at Giljá stóð steinn (a stone), er (acc.) þeir frændr höfðu blótað, Bs. i. 5, Harð, S. Isl. ii. 109; hann blótaði lundinn, be worshipped the grove (cp. Tacitus, sacrum nemus), Landn. 224; hann blótaði forsinn, 201: worship of men (rare), Gruns sonar bess er blotinn var daubt fyrir bokkasæld ok kallaðr Kamban, 47, Fb. ii. 7; þau vóru bæði blótuð, Edda 83: b. hof, in the phrase, heidnir menn hof b., Grag., Isl. ii. 381; blot er oss ok kviðjat, at vér skulum eigi b. heiðit goð, né hauga né hörga, N. G. L. i. 18: worship of animals, Ögvaldr konungr blét kú eina, Hkr. i. 269, Fas. β. with dat. (extremely rare); blótar hann einum gölt (sic 1), prob. corrupt = einn (acc.) gölt, Fas, i. 187 a paper transcript. with dat. to sacrifice; sacrifices of men are recorded, Hkr. i. 34, 35, 56. 239, Gisl. 140, Eb. l. c., Fas. i. 452 (Hervar. S.): slaves and criminals were esp. sacrificed, thus representing the executions of modern times; heiðingjar blóta enum verstum mönnum, ok hrinda þeim fyrir björg ok hamra...; enir heiðnu menn höfðu þá stefnu, ok tóku þat ráð at b. tveim mönnum ór hverjum fjórðungi, Bs. i. (Kr. S.) 23: captives, O. H. ch. 131; kom bat ásamt með beim at hafa Hallfreð til blóta, Fs. 102; b. þrælum, Fms. x. 323; b. mönnum ok fé, Fs. (Vd.) 50, Am. 75, Fms. i. 174: a sort of self-immolation is recorded Fb. ii. 72. III. to curse, swear, vide blót II; with dat. or absol., hann blótar hestunum, Fbr. 78; eigi kviði ek því þótt biskup blóti mér eðr banni, Bs. i. 708; blótuð verð þú, Hom. 153: reflex. blótask, to go about swearing, Fms. viii. 294: vide Maurer, Bekehr. ii. 195 sqq.

10111

blotan, f. sacrificing, 623.57. II. cursing, swearing, Fms. viii, 203. blot-audigr, adj. rich in sacrifices; b. hof, Mart. 116.

blot-bao, n. a sacrificial bath, Post. 138.

blot-biskup, m. a beathen priest, Bret. 34 (Laocoon), Fms. x. 323.

blót-bolli, a, m. a sacrificial bowl, Fms. ii. 309.

blót-dómr, m. idolatry, Stj. 106.

blót-drykkja, u, f. a sacrificial feast, Fms. x. 393, cp. Eg. 257. blot-fé, n. a sacred or accursed thing, Stj. 363 (Josh. vii. 11), Edda 83.

blot-godi, a, m. a beathen priest, Post. 656 B. 10, Hkr. i. 8.

blot-grof, f. a sacrificial den in which to kill the victim, Fs. 49, 50.

blot-guo, m. a beathen god, Fms. ii. 76.

blot-gyoja, u, f. a beathen priestess, Hkr. i. 8.

blot-haugr, m. a sacrificial mound or cairn, cp. N.G. L. i. 18; defined Fms. v. 164; about cairns of that kind among the Perms (Bjarmar), vide Fms. iv. 299, cp. also Hkr. i. 16.

blot-hus, n. a beathen bouse of worship, sometimes less than the 'hof,' used like Christian chapels for private worship, Fms. ii. 263, Isl. ii. 109: a temple in general, Stj. 391.

blot-jarl, m. a surname of the heathen earl Hacon, Fms. ii. 122.

blot-kalfr, m. the golden calf, Stj. 312.

blot-kolda, u, f. a fen near the heathen temples, in which animals (or men) were killed by drowning, Isl. (Kjaln. S.) ii. 404.

blot-klebi, n. garments used at sacrifices, Fs. 42.

blót-kona, u, f. = blótgyðja, Stj. 428.

blot-lundr, m. a sacred grove, Fms. xi. 382, Stj. 391, cp. Landn. 222. blot-maor, m. a beathen worshipper, Bret. 57, Eg. 179, Fms. i. 294, 263, Andr. 65. 44 i blot-matr, m. the meat of the victims, Hkr. i. 139.

blot-naut, n. an ox worshipped and enchanted, Hkr. i. 269, Fms. iii. 132, Fas. i. 255; hence in mod. use a mad bull is called blotneyti. 2. a bull to be sacrificed, a heathen sacrifice connected with the old holmgang, q. v., Eg. 506, cp. Korm. 212, 214, Gisl. 80.

blot-neyti, id., Fas. i. 425. blot-prestr, m. a beathen priest, Sks, 575.

Digitized by GOOGIC

blot-risi, a, th. an enchanted champion (?), απ. λεγ., Korm. 242. blot-skapr, m. idolatry, beathen worship, sacrifice, Fms. i. 31, xi. 134, Stj. 650, N. G. L. i. 351: things belonging to worship, Stj. 391, Fagrsk. 28, Fms. v. 239.

blót-akógr, m. = blótlundr, Stj. 650, Róm. 199.

blot-spann, m. divining rods or chips used at sacrifices, cp. Tacitus Germ. ch. x, and Amm. Marc. xxxi. 2. in the phrase, tella blót-spán, ramos sortidicos jactare; bá feldi hann b. ok vitraðist svá, at hann skyldi hafa dagráð at berjast, Fagrsk. 40, in the passage of Vellekla (the source of the narrative) the poet uses the word teinn lautar, qs. hlautarteinn, the rod of the sacrificial blood, cp. the phrase, kjósa hlaut-við, Vsp. 62; and hrista teina, Hým. 1; þá feldi Önundr blótspán til, at hann skyldi verða víss..., Landn. 193; síðan var feldr blótspánn, ok gékk svá fréttin, at ..., Fas. i. 526, 452 (Hervar. S.) blot-steor, m. a place of beather sacrifice, Hom. 175, Hkr. i. 6, Fms.

xi. 40, Fagrsk. 29.
blot-stallr, m. a beathen altar, Stj. 391.

blot-tre, n. a sacred tree, Mart. 115.

blot-trygill, m. [trog], a sacrificial trough, Fs. 108.

blot-veisla, u, f. a sacrificial banquet, Hkr. i. 139, Fms. i. 35, iv. 237.

blót-viör, m. = blótlundr, Greg. 80.

blót-villa, u, f. a beathen beresy, Fms. x. 243.

blót-völlr, m. a bewitched field; eigi munu vér nú optar ganga appá b. binn, Fms. viii. 157.

blunda, 20, to doze; éta blundandi, Edda 72; cp. mod. ganga blindandi, to go blinking, balf asleep; b. augum, to shut the eyes, Bs. ii. 481.

BLUNDR, m. sleep, dozing: slumber, a nickname, Landn. 80.

blund-skaka, ad, to blink with the eyes, Stj. 81.

blund-stafir, m. pl. rods eausing sleep, in the phrase, bregon blundstöfum, to awake, Sdm. 3; cp. stinga svefnborn, Isl. bjóðs.

COMPD: blygoarblygo, f. [bljugr], sbame, Grett. 159 A, Vigl. 20. lause, adj. (-leysi, n.), blameless, Grett. 161 A.

blygon, d, to put to shame, Fas. iii. 655, Fms. iii. 89. B. reflex. to be asbamed, Sks. 494; = bleydast, to lose beart, Fas. iii. 411; b. sin, to be asbamed, to repent, (mod.)

blygoan, f. sbame, disgrace, nakedness, Pass. 24. 3. COMPD: blygounar-lauss, adj. (-leysi, n.), impudent, blygjast, d, = blygdast, Sks. 494, v.l.

BLYS, n. [Dan. blus], a torch, Dipl. iii. 4, Bs. i. 804.

BLÝ, n. [Germ. blei; O. H. G. pli; Lat. plumbum], lead; sökkva sem b., Blas. 49, Dipl. v. 18. COMPDS: bly-band, n. a leaden band, Fms. x. 172. blý-kleppr, m. a plummet, Rb. 472. blý-ligr, adj. leaden, 732. 11. blý-skeyti, n. a leaden missile, Stj. 74, Pr. blý-steyptr, part. cast in lead, Sks. 392. blý-stika, u, f. a leaden candlestick, Vm. 38. bly-stokkr, m. a leaden box, Sd. 191. blf-bungr, adj. beavy as lead.

bly-pekja, pakbi, to thatch, i. e. roof, with lead, Bs. i. 235.

bleeds, dd, to bleed, to flow, of blood, Pr. 473; blæddu nasar hans (blod-nasir), Bs. i. 521: impers., e-m blædir, one loses blood, Grag. ii. II, Sturl. iii. 113, Sd. 139, Eb. 242: absol., laust hana í andlitið svá at blæddi, Nj. 18: metaph. phrase, e-m blæðir e-t í augu, it bleeds into one's eyes, i. e. one is amazed at a thing.

blanja, u, f. [cp. Germ. blege = limbus, prob. derived from A. S. bleob = colour; prob. an Engl. word, cp. Enskar blæjur, Eb. 256]:-a fine, coloured cloth; hon hafði knýtt um sik blæju, ok vóru í mörk blá, Ld. 244: a burial sheet, Am. 101, Gkv. 1.13, Grag. i. 207: the cover of a bed, Gg. 7, 25, Rm. 20, Bb. 1. 12, Eb. l. c.: cover of an altar table, Vm. 65, Dipl. iii. 4: poët., hildar b., a shield, the b. of the mast = the sail, etc.: mod. a veil. COMPDS: bleeju-endi, a, m. the end of a b., Ld. l.c. blæju-horn, n. the corner of a b., Ld. 246. blæju-hvalr, m. [Germ. bleie], a kind of wbale, alburnus, Edda (Gl.)

BLAER, m. [cp. Engl. to blare], a gentle breeze, puff of air, esp. with a notion of warmth; b. hitans, Edda 4; kenna blæ (to feel a draft) á andliti ser, Clem. 35; vinds blær, Stj. 78; þá kom kaldr blær (a cold stream of air) & Skutu or jardhusinu, Rb. 319: poët. the blue sky, the pure air, undir blæ himins blidan, Pass. 25. 10; blærinn hýrnar við dægrið hvert, Bb. 2. in mod. usage metaph. the air, character of a speech, writ-II. a ram, ing, or the like; sögu-blær, frásagnar-blær, rit-blær.

Edda (Gl.), hence blæsma.

blosama, adj. ind. [blær, a ram], a ewe or goat at beat, Grag. i. 427, Fbr. 212, Stj. 178; cp. yxna of a cow, breyma of a cat, roeda of a sow. blokku-mao, m. [blakkr], a blackamoor, sometimes a negro, (mod.)

BLOKU-MENN, m. pl. Walachians, and Blokumanna-land, Walachia, Fms. v. 283; hann sviku Blakumenn i útfaru, Broc. Runstone, p. 179

BLOSKRA, 20, to blench: 1. absol., hann brá sér eigi við né blöskraði, Fms. vii. 157; hygg at vandlega hvárt ek b. nökkut, xi. 150, and so also Jómsv. 47, and Fb. i. 198. 2. e-m blöskrar-ok bað þá at hyggja hvárt honum blöskraði nökkuð, Sturl. iii. 43-ought perhaps to be 'hann;' the mod. use is constant, 'e-m b.,' one blenches, is shocked at a thing.

BOBBI, a, m. a snail-shell, Eggert Itin., hence metaph. puzzle, in the phrase, komast i bobba, to get into a puzzle.

BOD, n. [Ulf. buzns; Germ. bote, gebot; cp. bjóða].

1. a bid, offer; konungr bauð (offered) at fá Gunnari kvánfang ok ríki mikit... Gunnarr þakkaði konungi boð sitt, Nj. 46; bjóða boð fyrir e-n, to make bids or offers for one, Lv. 25, Vigl. 28; hvat er i bodi, what is the bidding? metaph. from an auction, O. H. L. 71. 2. a feast, wedding. banquet, to which the guests are 'bidden;' veizlan for vel fram. en er bodi var lokit, when the feast was past, Nj. 25; foru beir allir til bodsins, the wedding feast, Fms. xi. 106; skyldi bod vera at Mardar, Nj. 4; hafa e-n i bodi sinu, to entertain at one's feast, Fms. i. 40; haust-bod, Gisl. 8. [A. S. bebod], a bidding, commandment, Fms. ii. 30, 168, oδ ok bann, v. bann. β. the right of redemption, a Norse xi. 246; boð ok bann, v. bann. law term; skal sá óðalsmaðr er boði er næstr brigð upp hefja, Gþl. 294; ok svá eigu þær boð á jörðum jafnt sem karlar, N.G.L. i. 92, 94, 237. i. 60. 4. a message; gora e-m bob, to call for one, N.G.L. β. metaph. and a law term, a summons, being an arrow, axe, or the like sent to call people to battle or council, as symbolical of the speed to be used, or of the punishment to be inflicted, if the summons be not obeyed; cp. herör; so the Swed. budsticka or budkafle, (till tings, till tings, budkaflen går kring borg och dal! Tegner), and the fiery cross in the Lady of the Lake. In Icel., at least in the west part, a small wooden axe is still sent from farm to farm to summon people to the mantals-thing in the spring; vide Ghl. 433 sqq., Jb. 180, and the compds booburor, boofall. bodskurdr, bodleid, etc. COMPDS: boos-maor, m. a guest at a feast, wedding, Nj. 11, Fms. ii. 193. boos-vattr, m. a witness to a boo, boos-vitni, n. id., N. G. L. ii. 99, v.l. 4. β, N. G. L. i. 237.

boča, 28, 1. to announce, proclaim, esp. as rendering of the eccl. Lat. praedicare, to preach the Gospel, as a missionary; b. Kristni, to preach Christianity, Nj. 157; trú, 158, Fms. x. 298, H. E. i. 510; sjáið, eg boða β. hón boðaði þangbrandi heiðni, Nj. yðr mikinn fögnuð, Luke ii. 10. 2. to bid, order, with dat.; let hann b. a sinn fund öllum öldungum, Stj. 649; hann boðaði saman mörgu stórmenni, Bs. i. 470; konungr bodadi honum a sinn fund, the king bade bim come, Fær. 131; b. e-n af löndum, to outlaw one, bid bim off the land, Fms. vii. 17, 8. to bode, signify; hvat betta mundi boda, Eb. 270; e-m b. e-t, be bas a foreboding of it; mundi bar til draga sem honum hafði fyrir bodat, Eg. 75: impers., e-m bodar ótta, one feels uneasy, Sturl. 1. 109, where Bs. i. 410 spells bjóða ótta (better).

boos, u, f. = boo, a command, N. G. L. i. 237.

boon, f. announcement; b. dagr Mariu, the feast of the Annunciation, the 2nd of July, Mat.: preaching, proclaiming, 623.11.

boo-buror, m. a carrying of the bod, 4. β, Gpl. 432, 436, Jb. 180.

boo-fall, n. dropping the boo, 4. β, Gpl. 435, Jb. 182 boo-fasta, u, f. a fast ordered by the canonical law, H. E. i. 393.

boo-fero, f. the course of a boo, 4. B, H. E. i. 393. boo-greizla, u, f. = booburdr, Jb. 184, Ghl. 437 B; vide booreizla. 1. [vide boo 4, cp. A. S. boda], a messenger, used in poetry; b. hildar, the messenger of war, Lex. Poet.: in prose, Thom. 5, and in compds such as sendi-bodi, a messenger, fyrir-bodi, a foreboder. esp. as a nautical term, a breaker 'boding' hidden rocks; beir undrudust mjök þenna atburð, er b. féll í logni, þar er engi maðr vissi, at b. hefði fallit fyrr, ok djup var undir, Magn. 488, Fms. ix. 415, x. 324, xi. 10, Eg. 161, Bs. i. 420, Grág. ii. 385: the phrase, vera sem b. á skeri, like a breaker on a skerry (rock), of a hot-tempered man, never at rest. booa-fall, n. the dash of breakers, Fas. iii. 506. boon-sloo, f. the surf of breakers, Orkn. 322.

boo-leggja, lagdi, to offer for sale, Gpl. 302, v. l.

boo-leio, f. a law term, the due course of a boo [4. \beta] from bouse to bouse, defined in Gpl. 432, N. G. L. i. 348, Jb. 181: in the phrase, fara (rétta) b., to go from bouse to bouse in due course, skipping none: perhaps the true reading Nj. 185 is, fara booleio til buoar; some MSS. have bonleio. boo-ligr, adj. fit to be offered, Hav. 55.

BODN, f. [cp. A.S. byden = dolium, Icel. byona; Norse biona, Ivar Aasen], one of the three vessels in which the poët, mead was kept, Edda 47, etc., hence poetry is called the wave of the boon, Lex. Poët.

boo-oro, n. order, bidding; Guos b., Hom. 34, Ver. 25, Bs. i. 67, Magn. 448: as a law term, an ordinance, K. A. 192; = penance in eccl. sense, K. p. K. 26: in mod. usage, esp. the Ten Commandments (Tiu-lagabodord, or with the article, Bodordin), Sks. 671, cp. Pr. 437, where they are termed 'Laga-ord.' COMPDS: bodorda-breytmi, f. alteration of a are termed 'Laga-ord.' b., Bs. i. 545. boooroa-brot, n. breach of a b., Fms. vii. 108. orða-maðr, m. a public officer, N. G. L. i. 409.

boð-reisla, u, f. = boðgreizla.

boo-rifr, adj. fair bidding, Fms. iii. 122 (poët.)

boo-seti (beo-seti, N.G.L. i. 315), a, m. a dub. Norse term, the benches in a law-court (?), the bar (?); hverr peirra manna er gengr fyrir bodseta (ace. pl.) fram, nema hann eigi at sækja eðr verja, sá er sekr níu ertogum við konung ok bæjarmenn, N. G. L. i. 323, 315; bedseti, qs. bekkseti (?).

boö-skapr, m. a bidding, ordinance, Stj. 82, H. E. i. 471, 677. 6, Fms. II. in mod. usage, announcement.

boð-akurðr, m. [skera boð, to carve a boð, 4. \(\beta\)], a message, summons asides, Eg. 171; með endilöngum borðum, Fms. il. 273, Eg. 122; leggja to a meeting, N.G.L. i. 153.

boo-sletta (boo-slotti, a, m., Gbl. 200), also boo-flenna, u, f. an intruder at a feast, an uninvited guest, Jb. 110.

boo-slóo, f. = bodleio, Ib. 181.

bod-stoll, m., in the phrase, hafa e-t a bodstolum, to but a thing out for sale.

BOGI. a. m. [A.S. boga; Engl. bow; Germ. bogen], a bow, Nj. several times; skjóta af boga, 29, 96; benda b., Fas. ii. 88, Landn. 288, Fms. ii. 321, iii. 228; álm-bogi, hand-bogi, lás-bogi, ý-bogi, q. v. metaph, an arch, vault, Sks. 116: the rainbow, Stj. 62: metaph., bera mál ór boga, to disentangle a case, Sks. 654; himin-bogi, the sky; blóð-bogi, a gusb of blood; regn-bogi, a rainbow; öln-bogi, an elbow. COMPDS: bogs-dreginn, adi, bow-shaped, curved. bogs-hals, m. the tip of a bow, where the string is fastened, Al. 142, Fas. ii. 88. list, f. archery, now used metaph. boga-mynd, f. the form of a bow, boga-skot, n. bow-shot, shooting with a bow, Fms. ii. Fas. i. 271. boga-strengr, m. a bow-string, Nj. 115, 136. boga-vápn, n. a bow, Fms. viii. 184, v.l.

boginn, adj. bent, bowed, curved, Al. 8; prop. a part. from a lost strong verb bjúgan; cp. Goth. bjúgan = κάμπτειν.

bog-maör, m. a bowman, archer, Fas. i. 382, Ingv. 34, Lv. 63, Fær. 56, Fms. vi. 413. bogmanns-merki, n. the zodiacal sign, Arcitenens, Rb. 102. bog-mannliga, adv. bowmanlike, Fms. ii. 450.

bogna, 20, to become curved, bent, Hkr. ii. 365, Flov. 34: to give way, Fms. viii. 403, Al. 57.

bogra, 20, to creep along bowed or stooping; bá boru bograr (creeps) hann inn, Fas. i. 393; bogra fyrir e-m, to bow before one, porst. St. 53. bog-sterkr, -styrkr, adj. stark or strong at the bow, Hkr. iii. 264.

bog-sveigir, m. bow-swayer, a nickname, Fas. ii.

BOKKI, a, m., means probably a be-goat, [cp. Germ. bock; Dan. bukk; Engl. buck], a familiar mode of address; Höttr heiti ek, bokki sæll, and, skaltu nú bana mér, bokki, my good fellow, 'old buck,' Fas. i. 66; muntú festa, bokki, tindinn i kambi minum (the old woman addressing the bishop), Fb. iii. 446: stærri bokkar, bigger men, 352, vide stór-bokki.

bokkr, m. a buck, Lex. Poët. bola, ad, prop. to fell trees, to cut through the body (bolr), Fas. i.

106. II. [boli, a bull], to bully; b. e-n út, to push one out, as a bull with the horns: reflex. bolast, a wrestling term, of two wrestlers pushing or butting at one another with their heads.

boldang, n. a sort of thick linen, (for. word.)

bol-fimligr, adj. slender, agile of body, Fas. iii, 372.

bol-hlif, f. a covering for the body, opp. to the helmet, Bs. i. 667. BOLI, a, m. a bull, Boll. 336, Edda 99, Isl. ii. 26; in Icel. esp. of a bull-calf, bola-kálfr, etc.

bol-járn = bolöx (?), Ingv. 13.

bol-klesői, n. pl. garmenis (coat, waistcoat) for the body, Grett. 147 A. BOLLI, a, m. [A. S. bolla], a bowl, Stj. 310, Rm. 4; blótbolli, a measure = ½ ask, Gpl. 525: a pr. name, Ld.

BOLR and bulr, m. the bole or trunk of a tree, Sks. 555 B. metaph. the trunk of a body, N. G. L. i. 80, Nj. 275, Fms. x. 213, Eb. 244, Anec. 4: the phrase, ganga milli bols ok höfuðs á e-m, to go through between one's trunk and bead, i.e. to knock one quite dead, deal severely 3. an old-fashioned waistcoat. with, Ld. 244, Eb. 240.

bolungr, v. bulungr.

bol-voxtr, m. the growth, form of the body; vel at bolvexti, a wellgrown, stout man, Bs. i. 66, Fas. iii. 605.

bol-ox, f. [Swed. bolyxa], a pole-axe; in present usage opp. to skaroxi, a carpenter's axe, Stj. 401. Judg. ix. 48, Fms. ix. 357, Fbr. 179, Thom. 343, Ingv. 24, Vápn.

boppa, 20, to wave up and down, onomatopoëtic and common.

BOPS, n. an onomatopoëtic word, [Germ. bumbs], bump or plump; mikit fall, svá at b. kvað í skrokkinum, þórð. 16. B. the faint bark of a dog: also bopsa, ab.

bors, u, f. a bore-bole, Grett. 125, 133, Fas. i. 393, Vm. 65. boru-fóli, a, m. a Norse law term, a stolen article put into an innocent man's house; even if officers ransacked a house without having their persons searched, and find something, þá er b. ok liggr ekki búanda við, then it is b. and the farmer is free, N. G. L. i. 255.

BORA, 20, [Lat. forare; A. S. borian; Engl. bore; O. H. G. poran], to bore, to bore boles in, Fms. ix. 447, Ld. 116, Edda 48, 49, Eb. 182, D. I. i. 243: metaph., b. atsúg at e-u, to do a thing thoroughly, v. atsúgr: reflex., borast fram, to press one's way through a crowd, Fms. v. 180, Fb. ii. 112.

BORĐ, n. [Ulf. baurd, in fotubaurd = ὑποπόδιον; Hel. bord = margo; A. S. bord; Engl. board]. 1. a board, plank, Lat. tabula; tók hann bá borð ok lausa viðu, ok rak um þvera stofuna, Grett. 140, N. G. L. i. B. of a ship, the side (cp. starboard, larboard); höggr hann þá tveim höndum borð (sides) skútunnar, ok gengu í sundr borðin (the planks) um tvau rum, Nj. 19; þeir Erlingr hjuggu raufar í drómundinum, sumar i kafi niðri, en sumar uppi á borðunum, Fms. vii. 232, Nj. 42; hence the nautical phrases, á borð, on each side; á tyau borð, á bæði borð, on both bord vid bord = sibyrda, to lay a ship alongside of another, so as to board. Fas. ii. 534; bera skip bordi, to make the bulwarks rise, Fms. ii. 218: fyrir bord, overboard, Eg. 124, Fms. xi. 140; á bordi, on land, Jb. 327; bord á stjórn = stjórn-borði, the starboard side, Gbl. 518. The planks in a ship's side have different names, e. g. aur-borð, skaut-borð, sól-borð.

2. metaph. phrases, at vera mikill (lítill, nokkur) borði, to be of a bigb (or lowly) bearing, metaphor from a ship floating high out of, or deep in, the sea, Eg. 8, Sturl. iii. 196: verda (allr) fyrir bord borinn, to be (quite) thrown overboard, i.e. ill-used, Eb. 126, Fær. 234; verða allr fyrir borði, id., Ölk. 35; hans hlutr mundi eigi fyrir borð vera borinn, id., Rd. 230: e-n brestr á borði, to fail, be beaten (metaphor from rowing). Fms. 239, 511 taka skamt frá borði, to fall sbort, Lv. 45; ganga at borði við e-n, to come to terms, yield, submit, Bs. i. 889; gékk Egill tregt at borði um þetta mál, E. was bard, unyielding, 696; hverigum skyldi úhætt, nema beir gengi at bordi vid hann, unless they came to terms with him, 727, 778; á annað borð, on the other band; harðr maðr á annat borð. a bard one to pull against, Fms. xi. 39: but also on the other band, otherwise, else; hann vildi með engu móti kalla á Þormóð sér til bjargar, bó at hann félli ofan á annað borð, though be was sure to tumble down otherwise (i. e. unless he called), Fbr. 88; hence freq. in mod. usage, e. g. ef eg á annað borð göri það, i. e. if I do it at all: navig., ganga til borðs, á bord, to go to one's business, Fagrsk. 167, Bárd. 166. bord = labrum], the margin between the rim of a vessel and the liquid; er nú gott berandi borð á horninu, Edda 32; hence, fjöru-borð, the shore between bigb and low water, vide 33, 34; cp. the saying, fullt skal fromum bera, po skal bord a vera, i. e. it is clownish to bring a cup full to the brim, and, fullt skal föntum bera og ekkert borð á vera. board, table, Lat. mensa; risa frá bordi, to rise from the board, from table, Rm. 17, or simply and ellipt. risa, 30; bord is freq. used in pl., as in the old halls small tables were set at meal time, and removed after the meal: hence phrases, bord (pl.) of an (upp) tekin, the tables being removed, cp. Virgil's mensisque remotis, Nj. 176, Fms. i. 41, iv. 265, v. 126, Bs. i. 854, Eg. 408; til bess er bord foru brott, 551; setjast undir bord (pl.), to sit down; sitja undir bordum, to be at table, Nj. 68, Eb. 306; ganga undir drykkju borð, Fms. iii. 93; koma undir borð (acc. pl.), 96; ganga til borða, iv. 114, 129; koma til borðs (sing.), 202, cp. O. H. 86, Fms. iv. 246; sitja yfir bordum, iii. 155, iv. 113; sitja yfir matbordi, v. 126, viii. 212; sitja vfir bord (acc. pl.), id., Bs. i. 843: the rhyming phrase, vera bar at orði, sem hann er ekki at borði, vide Safn i. 91. It was the custom for kings or princes to give audience or receive poets whilst sitting at table, Fms. vi. 105, Eg. ch. 63. B. maintenance at table (cp. Engl. board and lodging); vera à bordi med e-m, B. K. 124, D. N. (Fr.): of a chess-board, Bs. i. 635. COMPDS: boroa-munr, m. difference in the beight of ships (in battle), Fms. viii. 292, cp. 288. boros-viti, n. pl. a 'board-fee,' sconce, cp. viti, Fms. iii. 155. borðs-tilgangr, m. going to table, Fms. iii. 155. boroa, 20, to sit at table, eat, dine, Fas. iii. 219.

boro-bunaor, m. table-service, Eg. 94, Fms. i. 292, iv. 262, Orkn. 226.

boro-diskr, m. a plate, Fas. iii. 222, vide diskr; (now freq.)

boro-dúkr, m. a table-clotb, Nj. 176, Hkr. ii. 189, cp. Fms. vi. 322, Rm. 28. boro-fastr, adj. maintained at one's table, Sks. 259.

borð-fjöl, f. a plank, Sturl. ii. 100.

borð-færi, n., in the phrase, taka sér borðfæri, = ganga til borðs, vide above, Grág. ii. 119.

bord-gestr, m. a guest at table. bord-hald, n. one's 'board,' fare, Edda 23, Hkr. ii. 36, Thom. 68. boro-har, adj. a ship rising high, Fms. ii. 314, Orkn. 362.

boro-hús, n. a room where the plate is kept, Dipl. iii. 4, v. 18, Sturl. iii. 191 C.

boro-hmo, f. the height of a ship out of the water, Fas. iii. 260. BORDI, a, m. [cp. Engl. border; O.H.G. porto; Germ. borti; prob. akin to boro]:-a border, Lat. limbus; byroa á boroa (acc.), to embroider, Gkv. 2. 16; bregoa boroa, to leave off embroidering, 17; tekja borda, to embroider, Helr. I, Og. 18; b. ok hannyrðir, Fas. i. 430, 523; kona sat við borða, a lady sat embroidering, Fms. ii. 148; slá borða, to embroider, Fas. i. 113; cp. borða skögul, gná, etc., a poët. circumlocution of a lady, Lex. Poët.: tapestry, b. fimtigi alna, Dipl. iii. 4, Pm. 10. Bs. i. 77: of the tapestry of a church, esp. the choir, Nj. 6. a sbield, Lex. Poët, boro-ker, n. a cup at table, loving-cup, Hkr. iii. 181; b. er vá átta merkr, Bs. i. 76.

boro-kista, u, f. a box for keeping the table-service in, D. N. (Fr.)

boro-knifr, m. a table-knife, Ann. 1339.

boro-leioangr, m. a levy commuted for victuals (Norse), D. N. (Fr.) boro-lægr, adj., b. viðr, timber fit for cutting into planks, Vm. 176.

boro-maor, m. a table-companion, Sks. 262. boro-mikill, m. = borohár, Fms. ii. 50, Hkr. i. 238.

boro-prestr, m. a 'board-priest,' who says grace at a bishop's table, Bs. ii. 129.

borð-prýði, n. the ornaments of a table, Fas. iii. 374.

bord-salmr, m. a 'board-psalm,' grace, Bb. 1. 15 (Mark xiv. 26). bord-saldir, m. pl. rules for behaviour at table.

bord-skutill, m. a small movable table, Bs. i. 537, Mar.

borð-stokkr, m. the bulwarks of a ship, Grett. 125.

boro-stoll, m. a chair used at table, D. N. boro-sveinn, m. a butler, waiter, Mag. 66; cp. skutilsveinn.

boro-tafi, n. a chess-board, Sturl. ii. 184, v.l.

borð-vegr, m. = borðstokkr, Bs. ii. 50, 179, Mar. borð-vers, m. = borðsálmr, N. G. L. i. 406.

boro-vior, m. boards, planks, Fms. viii. 374, D. N.

boro-bak, n. a 'thatch' or covering of planks, Hkr. ii. 11.

boro-bekja, pakti, to cover with planks, Fms. v. 331.

boro-bili, n. the sides of a ship, Gkv. I. 7.

BORG, ar, f., pl. ir, [Ulf. baurgs = πόλιε, and once Nehem. vii. 2 = arx, castellum; A.S. burg, burb, byrig, = urbs and arx; Engl. borough and burgh; O. H. G. puruc, purc; late Lat. burgus; Ital. borgo; Fr. bourg; cp. Gr. πύργοε; the radical sense appears in byrgia, to enclose; cp. also berg, a bill, and bjarga, to save, defend. Borg thus partly answers to town (properly an enclosure); and also includes the notion of Lat. arx, Gr. depóroles, a castle. Old towns were usually built around a hill, which was specially a burg; the name is very freq. in old Teut. names I. a small dome-shaped bill, hence the Icel. names of farms built near to such hills, v. Landn. (Gl.) Hel. once uses the word in this sense, 81; v. the Glossary of Schmeller; brann bá Borgarhraun, bar var bærinn sem nú er borgin (viz. the volcanic hill Eld-borg), Landn. 78; gongum upp á borgina (the bill) ok tölum þar, Ísl. ii. 216; er borgin er við kend, Landn. 127; Borgar-holt, -hraun, -dalr, -höfn, -fjörðr, -lækr, -sandr; Arnarbælis-borg, Eld-borg (above) in the west of Icel. It may be questioned, whether those names are derived simply from the hill on which they stand (berg, bjarg), or whether such hills took their name from old fortifications built upon them: the latter is more likely, but no information is on record, and at present 'borg' only conveys the notion of a 'hill;' cp. hólar, borgir og hæðir, all synonymous, Núm. 2. 00. a wall, fortification, castle; en fyrir innan á jörðunni görðu þeir borg (wall) umhversis fyrir ófriði jötna...ok kölluðu þá borg Miðgarð, Edda 6: cp. also the tale of the giant, 25, 26; borg Asa, Vsp. 28; peir höfðu gört steinvegg fyrir framan hellismunnann, ok höfðu sér þat allt fyrir borg (sbelter, fortification), Fms. vii. 81; hann let göra b. á sunnanverðu Morhæfi (Murrey), Orkn. 10, 310, 312, 396, Fms. i. 124, xi. 393, Eg. 160; the famous Moussaburg in Shetland, cp. Orkn. 398. a city, esp. a great one, as London, Hkr. ii. 10; Lisbon, iii. 234; York, 156; Dublin, Nj. 274; Constantinople, Fms. vii. 94; Nineveh, Sks. 502; Zion, Hom. 107, etc. This sense of the word, however, is borrowed from the South-Teut, or Engl. In Scandin, unfortified towns have -box or -by as a suffix; and the termin. -by marks towns founded by the Danes in North. E. COMPDS: borgar-armr, m. the arm, wing of a fort, Fms. v. 280. borgar-greifi, a, m. a borough-reeve, bur-grave borgar-görö, f. the building of a fort, Edda 26, Fms. (Engl.), Stj. borgar-hlio, n. the gate of a fort, Edda 26, Stj. 350, Hkr. viii. 180. i. 217, Ver. 25. borgar-hreysi, n. the ruins of a fort, Karl. 101. borgar-klettr, m. a rock on which a fort is built, Fms. viii. 284. borgar-kona, u, f. a townswoman, Stj. 426. borgar-lio, n. a garborgar-lim, n. lime for building a fort, Bret. 106. rison, Ver. 96. borgar-lyor, m. townsfolk, Fms. viii. 416, v. l. borgar-maor, m. a townsman, citizen, Eg. 244, Fms. i. 103, Sks. 649, mostly in pl., Lat. concivis is rendered by b., Hom. 17. borgar-mugr, m. the mob of borgar-murr, m. a city-wall, Stj. 352. a city, Fas. i. 4. sior, m. city-manners, urbanity, Clem. 27. borgar-smio, f. the building of a town (fort), Stj., cp. Edda 28. . borgar-staor, m. the site of a town, Edda 152. borgar-veggr, m. the wall of a fort (town), Orkn. 376, Fms. i. 104, Hkr. i. 217, Ver. 24. Borgar-bing, n. the fourth political subdivision (bing) of Norway, founded by St. Olave, cp. O. H. L. 23, and Munch's Geography of Norway. borga-skipan, f. a (geographical) list of cities, Symb. 32.

borga, 20, [Engl. to borrow and bargain; Germ. borgen; related to byrgia and biarga; O. H. G. porgen only means parcere, spondere, not mutuare. In Icel. the word is of foreign origin; the indigenous expressions ate, lána, ljá, to lend; gjalda, to pay; selja, veðja, to bail, etc.; the word only occurs in later and theol. writers]:—to bail; vil ek b. fyrir Árna biskup með mínum peningum, Bs. i. 770 (thrice): now obsolete in this sense.

2. to pay, as in Matth. xviii. 25; but in old writers this sense hardly occurs.

borgan, borgun, f. bail, security, Bs. i. 749, 770, Dipl. v. 14, Stj. comp: borganar-maör, m. a bailsman, Bs. i. 770, Jb. 112, Band. 33 borgari, a, m. [for. word; Germ. bürger; Dan. borger], a citizen, N.G.L. iii. 144; rare and hardly before A.D. 1280. compp: borgara-réttr, m. civic rights, id.

borg-firakr, adj. one from the district Borgarfjöror, Landn.

borg-hlio, f. = borgarhlio, Edda 30, Bret. 94.

borgin-móði, a, m., poët. name of the raven, bold of mood, Lex. Poët.

borgin-oror, adj. cautious in words, reticent, reserved (=orovart), Fms. vi. 208: at present b. and borgin-mannligr, adj., mean vainglorious, braggart.

borr, m. (com. bor-járn, n.), a borer; stórviðar-borr, skipa-borr, Od. ix. 384: metaph. the pipe of a marrow-bone, Eg. (in a verse).

a less correct form of börr, q. v.

BOSSI, a, m. [Swed. buss; cp. Germ. burscb], a boy, fellow; occurs once in the Jomsv. S., Fms. xi. (in a verse), from A.D. 994. It is still in use in Icel. in the compd word hvata-buss, a boyish fellow who is always in a bustle; hence also hvatabuss-logr, adj. burried.

BOTN, m. [Lat. fundus; A.S. botm; Engl. bottom; Hel. bodm; Germ. boden; Swed. botten; Dan. bund]:—the bottom; of a vessel, tunnubotn, kistu-botn, etc., Nj. 133, Sturl. ii. 107, Hkr. ii. 245: the bottom of other things, e. g. of a haycock, Eb. 324; marar-botn, the bottom of the sea. β. the bead of a bay, firth, lake, dale, or the like; fjarðar-botn, vatns-botn, vágs-botn, dals-botn: Botn is a local name in Icel., Fms. xi. 125: in pl. even = bays, nú er at segja hvat móts gengr við Grænaland ór botnum þeim er fyrir eru nefndir, MS. A. M. 294; Haís-botnar, Trollabotnar, the Polar Sea between Greenland and Norway; the ancients fancied that these bays were the abode of the giants.

botn-hola, u, f. a pit; in the phrase, at vera kominn i botnholu, to bave got into a bole, i. e. into a scrape, metaphor from fox-hunting, Sturl. ii. 62, Fms. viii. 186.

bóand-, v. búand-,

BOFI, a, m. [Germ. bube, büberl, spitzbube, v. Grimm], a knave, rogue, in Icel. only in a bad sense; cp. the rhyming phrase, bjófar og bófar, tbieves and knaves; no reference from old writers is on record (though it is common enough at the present day), except that in Eb. it is used as a nickname, Freysteinn Bófi; in Swed. it occurs as a pr. name, Baut. 1478, 1483.

bóg-limir, m. pl., poët. = arms, Lex. Poët.

bóg-lína, u, f. bow-line, Edda (Gl.)

BOGB, m., old acc. pl. bógu, Nj. 95, Fms. v. 163, etc.: mod. bóga; old dat. bægi, Hlt., Vkv. 31, Stj. 249, [A. S. bóg; Dan. boug; Engl. bow of a ship; and in Old Engl. bowres are the muscles of the shoulder]:—the shoulder of an animal, (armr of a man); á hinunn hægra bæginum, Stj. 249; ek hjó varginn i sundr fyrir aptan bóguna, Nj. l. c., Fms. l. c.; lær uxans tvau ok báða bógana, the shoulder-piece of the ox (the Ob. bóguna), Edda 45; cp. bægsli or bæxli, the shoulder of a whale or dragon, v. Lex. Poët.:—the bow of a ship, v. bóglina above.

2. mod. metaph. of the side of a person or thing; á hinn, þann bóginn, on this, on that side; á báða bóga, on both sides, etc.

BOK, ar, f. [Lat. fagus; Gr. φηγόs; A.S. bôc; Engl. beecb; Germ. buche (fem.); Swed. bok; Dan. böge, etc.]:—a beech, Edda (Gl.), Lex. Poët. Owing to the absence of trees in Icel., the word rarely occurs; moreover the collect. beyki, n., is more freq.

BOK, gen. bókar, but also in old writers bækr, pl. bækr, [Ulf, renders by bôca the Gr. βίβλοε, γράμματα, ἐπιστολή, etc.; A.S. bôc; Engl. book; Germ. buch (neut.); Swed. bok; Dan. bog: the identity between bók fagus and bók liber seems certain; the gender is in all Scandinavian idioms the same; modern German has made a distinction in using buche fem., buch neut.; both are akin to the Gr.-Lat. fagus, φηγόε; cp. also the analogy with Gr. BiBAos and Lat. liber (book and bark): bok-stafr also properly means a beech-twig, and then a letter. In old times, before the invention of parchment, the bark of trees was used for writing on]: —a book. I. the earliest notion, however, of a 'book' in Scandin. is that of a precious stuff, a textile fabric with figures, or perhaps characters, woven in it; it occurs three or four times in old poems in this sense; bók ok blæja, bjartar váðir, Skv. 3. 47; bækr (bekr) þínar enar bláhvítu ofnar völundum (of bed-sheets?), Hom. 7, Gh. 4: bok-rúnar, Sdm. 19, may refer to this; or is it = runes engraven on beech-wood? a book in the proper sense. Icel. say, rita and setja saman bok (sögu), to write and compose a book (story); old writers prefer saying, rita 'á bok (dat. or acc.) instead of 'i,' perhaps bearing in mind that the earliest writings were on scrolls, or even on stones or wooden slabs-barbara fraxineis pingatur runa tabellis; they also prefer to use the plur. instead of sing. without regard to volumes (as in Engl. writings); bad finst ritad á bókum, Fms. i. 157; á bókum Ara prests hins Fróda, iii. 106; historia ecclesiarum á tveim (sjau) bókum, Dipl. v. 18; á bókum er sagt, Landn. (pref.); á bókum Enskum, id.; á bók þessi (acc.) lét ek rita fornar frásagnir, Hkr. (pref.); but svá segir í bók þeirri sem Edda heitir, Skálda 222; þá hluti sem frammi standa í bók þessi, 159; svá sem hann (viz. Ari) hefir sjálfr ritað í sínum bókum, Ó. H. 188; þeir er Styrmir reiknar í sinni bók, Fb. ii. 68; hér fyrr í bókinni. i.e. a story, bistory (Saga), since in Icel. histories were the favourite books; cp. Íslendinga-bók, Konunga-bók, bók Styrmis; Landnáma-bók; bækr þær er Snorri setti saman, Sturl. ii. 123. It is used of the Gospel in the law phrases, sem búar virða við bók, vinna eið at bók (bókar-eiðr), of a verdict given or an oath taken by laying the hand upon the Gospel, Grág. (b. b.) several times; as the Engl. phrase to swear on the book is common: of a code (of law) = Jons-bok, after A. D. 1272 or 1281, book, i.e. to bold the office of lögmaðr (law-man, judge); þórðr Narsa son hafði bók, Ann. (Hol.) A.D. 1304; á bókarinnar vegna, on the part of the book, i.e. the law, D.N. ii. 492. Mod. phrases: skrifa, rita, semja bók, to write it; less i bok, to read it; but syngja & bok, to sing from a book; fletta bók, to turn over the leaves; líta, blada, í bók, to peruse, look into a book (hann litr aldrei i bók, be never looks into a book); lesa bók ofan i kjölinn, to read a book carefully, v. lesa bók spjaldanna í milli, to read it from end to end:-sálma-bók, flokka-bók, a bymn-book; kvæða-bók, ljóða-bók, a book of poems; sögu-bók, of bistories; lög-bók, of laws; Guds orda-bok, God's word-book, a religious book: - also of MSS., Flateyjar-bók (Cod. Flateyensis), Orms-bók, Uppsala-bók, Konungs-bók, Staðarfells-bók, Skálholts-bók, etc.:—phrases relating to books: það er allt a eina bokina lært, all learnt from the same book, i. e. all of one piece (esp. denoting one-sidedness); blindr er bóklauss maðr, blind is a bookless man; læra utan-bókar, to learn without book, by beart; bókvit, 'bookwit,' knowledge got from books; mannvit, mother-wit, common sense; allra manna vit er minna en þeirra er af bókum taka mannvit sitt, Sks. 22:also, setja e-n til bækr, to set one to book, i.e. put one to school in order to make him priest; berja e-n til bækr, to tbrash one to the book, i. e. into learning, Bs. i; a book has spjöld, boards; kjöl, keel, back; snið, cut; COMPDS: bóka-gull, n. gold for gilding books, Vm. 117. bóka-görő, f. the transcription (or writing) of books, Bs. i. 168. bókakista, u, f. a book-box, Bs. i. 423, D. I. i. 402, Vm. 71. bókaloctari, a, m. a reading-desk, lectern, Vm. QI. bóka-list, f. book-lore, learning, scholarship, Bs. i. 127. bókar-blað, n. a leaf of a book, Mar. bókar-bót, f. an appendix to a book, 1812. 72. bókar-eiðr, m. an oath upon the Gospel, Dipl. ii. 2. bókar-eiðstafr, m. the wording D. N. bókar-lag, n. a lawful prize fixed in the code, Dipl. bókar-skeyting, f. a written deed, Gpl. 225. bókar-skrá, of a b., D. N. v. 5. f. an old scroll, Am. 100. bókar-stóll, m. a reading-desk, Vm. 22, 9. bókar-tak, n. the touching the Gospel in taking an oath, D. N. bókarvitni, n. witness upon the Gospel, Ghl. 400, Jb. 276, D.N. bóka-akápr, m. book-shelves, (mod.) bóka-steinn, m. paint to illuminate MSS., Bs. i. 341. bóka-stokkr, m. a book-case, Pm. 112.

Digitized by GOGIC

bóka, að, to affirm by oath on the book (Gospel), Ghl. 151; bókaðr eiðt, vitni, = bókareiðr, D. N. i. 81, ii. 230 : mod. to record, register. bók-fell, n. [A. S. bócfell], book-skin, parchment, vellum, Skálda 165, Vm. 12, Dipl. v. 18: an A.S. word, as writing materials were imported from abroad.

bók-fróör, adj. book-wise, learned, Barl. 129.

bók-fræði, f. book-knowledge, Stj. 46, Bs. i. 138, Barl. 12.

bók-hlaða, u, f. a library, (mod.)

bók-lauss, adj. (bók-leysi, n.), book-less, void of learning, Bs. ii. 125, Mar. 145; = utanbókar, Clem. 60.

bok-lest, f. [lesa], a legend of the saints, N. G. L. i. 347.

bók-ligr, adj. bookish, literary, Bs. i. 680.

bók-list, f. book-lore, learning, Stj. 84, Sks. 16.

bók-ljóst, n. adj. so bright that one cannot see to read, Ann. 1341.

bók-lærðr, part. book-learned, Hom. 160: the clergy, Grág. ii. 165. bok-mal, n. the book language, learned language, i.e. Latin, Hom. 138; en at bókmáli (in Latin) verða öll hundruð tíræð, Sks. 57, Rb. 54, 516; Heilagt b., the Holy Scriptures, Str.; blot hau sem fyrirbodin eru at bókmáli, i. e. in the canon of the church, N.G.L. i. 351.

bók-mánuðr, m. a calendar month, Clem. 22.

bók-nám, n. (bók-næmi, Bs. i. 793), book-training, learning; setja e-n til b., Bs. i. 793; vera at b., to be a-reading, opp. to at riti, a-writing, 91, 265.

bók-rúnar, v. bók.

bók-saga, u, f. a written narrative; hlýða bók sögum, Bs. i. 108.

bók-setja, setti, to commit to writing, Sks. 6.

bók-skygn, adj. sbarp-sighted at reading a book, Sturl. ii. 185.

bók-speki, f. book-wisdom, Greg. 17.

bók-stafr, m. [Hel. bôcstabo; A. S. bócstæv; Germ. buchstabe], a letter of the alphabet, Skálda 168, Hom. 1.

bók-sögn, f. = bóksaga, Stj. 6.

bok-tal, n. a 'book-tale,' written computation, Rb. 4.

bók-vit, n. 'book-wit,' learning, erudition, Bs. i. 793. Acts xxvi. 24. bók-víss, adj. 'book-wise,' a scholar, Landn. 13, Bs. i. 65, (a cognom.)

BOL, n. [A. S. botl and bolt, byld, = aedes, mansio; cp. bytlian = aedifieare; Engl. to build. In Scandin, contracted in the same way as nal for nadal: böl and böll are very freq. in Dan. local names, and even mark the line of Scandin. settlements]:—'built,' i. e. reclaimed and cultivated land, a farm, abode, esp. in Norway, where bol answers to Icel. jord, Dan. gård; the value of the Norse farms is denoted by merkr-ból, eyrisból, or the like; taka bóli, to take a farm, Ghl. 328, 354. In Icel. this sense is almost obsolete, and only remains in such words as, ból-staðr, bólfesta; in local names as, Hörðu-ból, Sæ-ból, Lauga-ból, Ból-staðr, Breiðaból-staðr; in such phrases as, á bygðu bóli (opp. to wilderness), hvergi á bygdu bóli, i. e. nowbere, nowbere among men; and in a few law passages, Grag. ii. 279, Fms. x. 153. Otherwise, in Icel. ból and bæli denote the lm. an army of bændr, Fms. i. 162.

Bs. i. 720, 723, vide Ann. those years; hafa bok even means to bold the Tlair or lying place of beasts or cattle; bol and kvia-bol, the place subers sheep and cows are penned; bæla fé, to pen sheep during the night. a den, Eg. 41, Fas. iii. 345, cp. Edda 74 (the lair of a serpent); túku sumir heyhjálma nokkura ok görðu sér af ból, a hed of hay, Fms. vii. 296; liggja í bólinu, to lie a-bed, of a lazy fellow; cp. bæli.

BOLA, u, f. a blain, blister (cp. Engl. boil), Stj. 272, Mar. 655 xxxii. small pox, Ann. 1349: also bólna-sótt, f., Ann. 1310, 1347.

bóla, að, impers., b. á e-u, to be just visible.

BOLA, u, f. the boss on a shield, a for. word, perhaps the Lat. bulla. Valla L. 213.

ból-festa, u, f. abode, Ghl. 354: in the phrase, taka sér b., to abide. bólginn, part. of a lost strong verb, swoln, Fas. iii. 307; b. sem naut. Bs. i. 644: metaph. swollen with anger, reidi b., b. ilsku, Mar.; so, b. af reiði, Fas. iii. 630; cp. bylgja, belgr.

bólgna, að, [Engl. 'boulne,' Levins Manipul.], to 'boulne,' grow swollen, Mar.: metaph., 655 xi. 2.

ból-göltr, m. a pig kept in the homestead, Nj. 109, v.l.

ból-staðr, m. a bomestead; chon á þar bólstaði mikla, Edda, where Ed. A.D. 1848 has bústaði, which is a more household Icel. word; hálfan b., balf the farm, Grág. i. 396, ii. 222 A. COMPD: bólstaðar-gorð, f. the building a homestead, Eg. 130.

BOLSTR, rs, [A. S. bolster; Germ. polster], a bolster, N. G. L. i. 351, 362, Am. 6, Gkv. 1. 15: rare and poet., metaph. in pl. piles of clouds, Bjarni 59; also ský-bólstrar.

BON, f. [A. S. bene; Engl. boon, in Chaucer bone], a petition, Fas. i. 408, Ann. 1418; cp. bæn. COMPDS: bónar-maör, m. a beggar man, H.E. ii. 585. bona-vetr, m. begging winter, Ann. l. c.

BONDI, a, m.: older form buandi, or even boandi, pl. buendr or bóendr; gen. búanda, bóanda; dat. búöndum, bóöndum, Edda 28, Grág. i. 370, 371, O. H. 203, 209-211, 215, Nj. 14, 220; búanda (gen. pl.), 211, 212, 215-217, 220; buondum, 219; boandi, Grag. i. 114, 157, 187, 377, Nj. 52; but the common Icel. form is bondi, pl. bændr; gen. dat. pl. in old writers either bonda, bondum, or as at present keeping the æ throughout all plur. cases (bænda, (gen.) bændum): properly a part. act. from bua (turned into a noun subst., cp. frændi, fjándi), A.S. buan; Germ. bauer, and therefore originally a tiller of the ground, busbandman, but it always involved the sense of ownership, and included all owners of land (or bu, q. v.), from the petty freeholder to the franklin, and esp. the class represented by the yeoman of England generally or the statesman of Westmoreland and Cumberland: hence it came to mean the master of the bouse, A.S. bond and busbond, Engl. busband. man. The law distinguishes between a grid-madr a labourer, budsetumaor a cottager, and a buandi or bondi a man who has land and stock. In the Icel. Commonwealth only the b. (but neither cottager or labourer) could act as judge or neighbour who gave witness in acquittal of a cultrit (cp. bingheyjandi); the griomaor could only partly be admitted to the tylptarkviðr, not to the búakviðr, Grág. i. 35, 114; ek ryð þessa tvá menn ór kviðburðinum fyrir þá sök, at þeir eru búðsetu-menn en eigi bændr, Nj. 236; cp. l.c. below, where the distinction between both is defined. The Norse law, on the other hand, distinguishes between hersir or lendir menn (barons) and buandi, cp. the interesting passage Fms. vi. 279 (verðr mér þá lends manns nafn ekki at virðingu; nú vil ek heldr heita bondi sem ek á ætt til); the Norse hauldr- or óðals-bondi nearly answers to the Engl. 'yeoman.' In the more despotic Norway and Denmark, as in continental Europe, 'bóndi' became a word of contempt, denoting the common, low people, opp. to the king and his 'men' (hird), the royal officers, etc.; just as the Engl. boor degenerated from A.S. gebur, Germ. bauer, Dutch boer; and in mod. Dan. bonder means plebs, a boor; such is the use of bondi in the Fms., esp. Sverr. S. and Hak. S. In the Icel. Commonwealth the word has a good sense, and is often used of the foremost men-Sighvatr bondi, Sturl. ii. 78; Rafn bondi (i.e. Sveinbjarnarsson), Bs. i. Rafn. S. several times; Rútr talaði þá til Marðar, hugsa þú svá um bóndi (Mord Gigja), Nj. 3; optar hefir þú glaðari verit, bóndi, en nú, 174 (of Flosi); Njáll bóndi, id.; Þorsteinn bóndi, Illugi bóndi, Gunnl. S. Ísl. ii; Björn bóndi, Safn i. 657; Björn bóndi Einarsson (Jórsalafari), Ann. 1393; Ari bóndi, Daði bóndi, Bs. ii. 474. 505; it is only opp. to the clerks (clergy) or knights, etc. This notion of the word (a franklin) still prevails in the mind of Icelanders. a busband, A. S. bûsbond; eigi var skegglauss borvaldr boandi binn, Nj. 52, Grág. i. 371, 377, Fms. i. 149; hjá hvílu búanda þíns, Nj. 14. [The learned Icel. clergyman Eyjulf on Vellir (died A.D. 1747) has written a short essay upon the word bondi, Icel. MSS. Bodl. no. 71.] -(in mod. use always bænda- if pl., bónda- if sing.)—bónda-bani, a, m. a slayer of a bondi, Fms. vi. 104. bónda-ból, n. (bónda-bær, m.), a farm, Grett. 96 A. bonda-dottir, f. a bondi's daughter, Eg. 24, Snót 18. bónda-eiðr, m. a bóndi's oath, Ghl. 67. bónda-far, n. a bóndi's ferry-boat, Hkr. ii. 292. bónda-fé, n. a provincial fund, bónda-fólk, n. a class of bændr, Fms. vii. 293. Gbl. 11. bóndafylking (búanda-), f. a bost of bændr, Fms. viii. 126. bónda-herr, bónda-hlutr, m. = bóndatíund, bonda-hus, n. a bondi's bouse, K. p. K. 26. Fr. u, f. a bóndi's bed, El. 9. bonda-kirkja (búanda-), u, f. the church belonging to the bondi in Thingvalla, where the parliament was held; and buanda-kirkjugaror, m. the churchyard to that church, vide Nj. and Grag. This church was erected about the middle of the 11th century, vide Kristni S., Fms. vi. 266. bónda-kona, u, f. a good wife of a bóndi, Gpl. 511. bonda-laus, adj. busband-less, widowed, Stj. 420. loga, u, f. the burial place of bandr, N.G.L. i. 368.

> Digitized by GOOGLE 7

n. = bondaherr, Fms. ii. 48. bonda-ligr, adj. farmer-like. bónda-lið. bóndamugr, m. a crowd, bost of bændr, Fms. xi. 248. bónda-nafn, n. the name, title of bondi, Fms. vi. 279, Gbl. 106. bónda-réttr (búanda-), m. the right of a bondi, Fms. ix. 135. bónda-safnaðr (-samnaðr) = bondamugr, Hkr. ii. 307, Fms. vii. 320. bonda-skapr, m. the state of the bændr, opp. to the clergy, Bs. i. 590. bonda-son, m. the son of a bóndi, Eg. 232. bonda-tala, u, f., vera i b., to be told or counted among bændr, Fas. ii. 326. bonds-tiund, f. titbe to be paid by bændr, bónda-ungi, 2, m. a young bóndi, Hkr. iii. 275. bóndaval, n. the elite of bandr; var ba gott b., there were choice bandr to be found, Sturl. i. 130, Landn. 236. bonda-mtt, f. a bondi's extraction, Fms. vi. 278.

bon-leid, f. a begging path; in the phrase, fara b., to go begging from bouse to bouse, Nj. 185: in mod. use, fara bonarveg (ad e-m) is to entertain, v. however bodleid.

bón-orð, f. wooing, courtsbip; hefja b. við, to woo; síðan hóf þórólfr bónorð sitt við Sigurð ok bað Sigríðar dóttur hans, Eg. 38, 97; vekja b., COMPDS: bonoros-for, f. a wooing journey; fara b., Ld. 99, Nj. 17. to go a-wooing, Nj. 16. bonoros-mal, n. the business of wooing, Ld. 92. As to wooing and courtship in old times, cp. Ld. ch. 7, 23, 68, Nj. ch. 2, 9, 13, 27, 33, 98, Gunnl. S. ch. 5, 9, Hænsa þ. S. ch. 10, Glum. ch. 11, Lv. ch. 5, Harð. S. ch. 3, Eb. ch. 28, 41, Vd. ch. 3, 12, Korm S. ch. 7, Gísl. 9, Hallfr. S. ch. 4, Bs. i. 53-56 (the story of bishop Isleif), porl. S. ch. 5, Sturl. i. 197, 198, 200, 206-208 (the two sisters there), etc. The meeting of the parliament, where people from all parts of the island were gathered together, was a golden opportunity for 'bonoro' (v. the passages above). 2. = begging, Gisl. 85.

BOT, ar, f., pl. bætr, [Ulf. bota; A. S. bôt; Engl. boot, booty, to boot; O. H. G. puoz; Germ. busse; akin to bati, better, etc.]: -bettering, 1. a cure, remedy, mental as well as bodily, from sickness, loss, sorrow, etc.; fá bót e-s, meina, Fms. vii. 251, ix. 427, Fas. i. 175; allra meina bót; vinna e-m b., to comfort one, Landn. 212; bera til bóta, to amend, Fms. xi. 236; berja ... e-n til óbóta is to beat ... one so that he never recovers from it. 2. as a law term, almost always in pl., atonement, compensation, and esp. = mann-bætr, weregild, cp. vigsbætr, sak-bætr, etc., Fms. vii. 36, Hrafn. 4, 9, Eb. 106, Isl. ii. 272, and in endless cases in Grag. (VI.) and Nj.: bætr and mann-gjöld are often used indiscriminately, e.g. tvennum bótum, or tvennum manngjöldum, a double weregild; cp. also the phrase, halda uppi botum, to discharge, pay the b.; the sing, is rare in this sense, Nj. 58, Grág, ii. 182. such phrases as, e-t berr til bóta (impers.), it is a comfort, satisfaction, Nj. 58, Fms. x. 264; (mikilla) bóta vant, very sbortcoming, Ld. 328. 4. a patch, of an old torn garment; enginn setr bót af nýju klæði á gamalt fat, Matth. ix. 17; svört bót var milli herða honum, Sturl. ii. 230. compos: bóta-lauss, adj. a law term, 'bootless,' getting no redress; hafa sar botalaust, Rd. 269: irreparable, Fms. i. 264, Hom. 121. bóta-maör, m. a law term, a man who has to receive 'bætr' for hurt or damage suffered, Ann. 1372, Ghl. 160; hence obotamaor, exlex, an outlaw, who has forfeited his right to 'bætr.' bota-veror, adj. worth redress, Fbr. 33.

BOTI, a, m. [Fr. botte; a for. word], a boot, Nj. 190, Fms. vii. 186, N. G. L. iii. 13.

bót-leysi, n.; lemja e-n til b. = til óbóta above, Grett. 154.

bot-sams, 8, to make better, repair, Grag. i. 123, ii. 335.

bot-parfi (-parfa), adj. ind. needing 'bætr' or satisfaction, Fms. vii. 154, Sturl. iii. 123.

braga, ao, of the northern lights, to flicker, Bjarni 69

BRAGD, n. [cp. bregða].

I. the tundamental motion:

1. temp. a while, moment, cp. auga-bragð; in

Ca 18. Am. 2; af (á) I. the fundamental notion is that of a sudden motion: adverb. phrases, af bragdi, at once, Hrasn. 17, Gs. 18, Am. 2; af (a) skömmu bragði, sbortly, Fms. vi. 272, viii. 236, 348; í fyrsta bragði, the first time (rare), Ghl. 532, Js. 129; skams bragos, gen. used as adv. quickly, in a short time, Bs. i. 336, 337, Fms. viii. 348, v.l.; cp. 'at a brayd,' in a brayd,' Engl. Ballads.

2. loc. a quick movement; vidbrayd,' ' in a brayd,' Engl. Ballads. brago (cp. bregoa vio), knifs-brago (cp. bregoa sverði), a slash with a 3. metaph. in many phrases, verða fyrri (skjótari) at bragði, til bragðs, so make the first move; þeir hafa orðit fyrri at b. at stefna en vér, Nj. 241, Bs. ii. 106; svá at þú verðir skjótari at b. at veiða þenna niðing, Fms. i. 206, ix. 288; vera í bragði með e-m, to lend one a belping band, mostly in something uncanny, Gisl. 5, Bs. i. 722; snarast i bragð með e-m, id., Ld. 254; taka e-t bragðs, til bragðs or bragð, to take some step to get clear out of difficulties, Nj. 263, 199, Fms. ix. 407, Grett. 75 new Ed.; pat var b. (2009, 12110) Atla, at hann hljóp . . ., Háv. 53; Lacred custom, vide Yngl. S. Hkr. i. 49. Hervar. S. Fas. i. 417 and 518.

bonda-hvila, "uvitrligt b., a foolish step, Nj. 78; karlmannligt b., a manly issue, 194; gott b., Fs. 39; úheyriligt b., an unbeard-of thing, Finnb. 212. II. [bregða A. III], a 'braid,' knot, stúteb, chiefly in pl.; hekla saumuð öll brögðum, a cloak braided or stitched all over, Fms. ii. 70; fáguð brögðum, all broidered, v. 345, Bret. 34; rístu-bragð, a scratched cha-2. in wrestling, brago or brogo is the technical phrase for wrestlers' tricks or sleights; mjaomar-brago, leggjar-brago, hæl-brago, klof-brago..., the 'brago' of the hip, leg, heel..., Edda 33; [fangbrago, wrestling], hence many wrestling terms, fella e-n á sjálfs sins bragoi, to throw one on his own brago. 8. gen. a trick, scheme, device, [A.S. bræg 8, bræd; Engl. braid = cunning, Shakesp.], chiefly in pl., med ymsum brögðum, margskyns brögð, Fas. i. 274, Fms. x. 237; brögð í tafli, a trick in the game, a proverb, when things go not by fair means, Bs. ii. 318; ferr at fornum brögdum, in the old way, Grett. 79 new Ed.: but also sing., sér konungr nú bragð hans allt, Fms. xi. 106; hafði hann svá sett bragðit, x. 305, Eg. 196 (a trick); ek mun finna bragð þar til, at Kristni mun við gangast á Íslandi, Hkr. i. 290; bragð hitta þeir nú í, β. with a notion of deceit, a trick, crafty scheme; með Lv. 82. brögdum, with tricks, Hkr. ii; búa yfir brögdum, to brood over wiles, Fas. i. 290; hafa brögð undir brúnum, to bave craft under one's eyebrows, look crafty, Band. 2; undir skauti, under one's cloak, id., Bs. i. 730; beita e-n brögðum, metaphor from hunting, to deal craftily with one, Rm. 42, Isl. ii. 164; hafa brögð við e-n, Njarð. 382, 378; vera forn í brögðum, old in craft, of witchcraft, Isl. ii. 399: hence such phrases as, bragoa-karl, a crafty fellow, Grett. 161; bragoa-refr, a cunning fox; brögðóttr, crafty, etc. In Swed. 'bragder' means an exploit, action, whilst the Icel. implies some notion of subtlety or craft; yet cp. phrases as, stór brögð, great exploits, Fb. ii. 299; hreysti-brögð, hetju-brögð, great deeds, (above I. 3.) III. [bregoz C; cp. A.S. brad, Engl. breatb], countenance, look, expression; hon hefir hviti ok b. vart Myramanna, Isl. ii. 201, v.l.; þannig er bragð á þér, at þú munir fás svífast, tbou lookest as if . . ., cp. brögð undir brúnum above, Fms. ii. 51; heilagleiks b., to look like a saint, Bs. i. 152; pat b. hafdi hann á sér sem, Ld. 24; ekki hefir þú b. á þér sem hérlenzkir menn, Fms. x. 227; þannig ertu í bragði sem ..., thou lookest as if ..., Isl. ii. 149; með illu bragði, illlooking, Sturl. i. 170; með hýru, glöðu b., Bs. ii. 505; með beztu bragði, stern, Pass. 21.1; med hryggu bragði, with gloomy look; med betra bragði, in a better mood, Nj. 11; bleyði-mannligr í b., cowardly, Fms. ii. 69: metaph., Sturla görði þat bragð á, at hann hefði fundit..., S. put that face on a thing, Sturl. ii. 176. IV. [bergja, gustare], taste; vatnsbrago, beisku-brago, bitter taste, of water; 6-brago, a bad flavour, 2. [= bragr], mode, fashion; in vinnu-brogo, working; handbrago, bandicraft; lat-brago, manners; truar-brügo, pl. religion, mode of faith; afla-brügo, mode of gaining one's livelibood, etc.: very freq. in mod. usage, but in old writers no instance bearing clearly upon the subject is on record; cp. however the phrase, brago er at e-u, a thing is palpable, tangible: litid bragd mun par at (it must be very slight) ef þú finnr ekki, Ld. 136; zrit b. mun at því, Nj. 58; görðist þar at svá mikit b., it went so far that . . ., Fms. i. 187, Grett. 158 new Ed.

bragos, 20, I. = braga, of light, Sks. 202 B. to breathe], to give signs of life, of a new-born babe, of one swooning or dying; þá fæddi hón barnit, ok fanst eigi líf með, ok hér eptir bragðaði fyrir brjóstinu, i. e. the infant began to draw breath, Bs. i. 618, ii. 33; III. to taste = bergja, freq. þat bragðar sem kvikt er, þiðr. 114. in mod. usage.

brago-air, m. a brad-awl, used in Icel. for producing fire. bragoalseldr, m. fire produced by a b., Bs. i. 616; hann tok b. millum tveggja trjó, ii. 176.

brago-illr, adj. ill-looking, Fms. x. 174.

brago-lauss, adj. (-leysi, f., medic. pallor), pale, insipid.

brago-ligr, adj. expedient, Karl. 451: mod. well-looking.

brago-mikill, adj. expressive looking, Sturl. iii. 129.

brago-samr, adj. crafty, El.

brago-visi, f. eraft, subtlety, Edda 110.

brago-vialigr (and -viss), adj. cunning, Fms. ii. 140.

BRAGGA, 20, [Engl. brag], to throw off sloth, Bb. 1. 24.

Bragi, a, m. the god of poetry Bragi, also a pr. name: in pl. bragnar, poët. beroes, men, Edda, Lex. Poët.; cp. A. S. brego = princeps.

I. best, fore-BRAGR, ar, m. [akin to brago, braga, bragi, etc.] most; b. kvenna, best of women, Skv. 2. 15; Asa b., best of Ases, Skm. 34; b. karla eðr kvenna, Edda 17: only used in poetry or poët. language, cp. the A.S. brego (princeps) Egypta, Noromanna, Israelita, Gumena, Engla, etc.:-hence the compd bragar-full or braga-full, n. a toasting cup, to be drunk esp. at funeral feasts; it seems properly to mean the king's toast (cp. Bragi = princeps), i. e. the toast in the memory of the deceased king or earl, which was to be drunk first; the heir to the throne rose to drink this toast, and while doing so put his feet on the footstool of his seat and made a solemn vow (stiga & stokk ok strengja heit); he then for the first time took his father's seat, and the other guests in their turn made similar vows. For a graphic description of this heathen > bost trox 157 and Tholoughoi bofi?

Digitized by GOOGIC

Hkv. Hjörv. 32, Ragn. S. Fas. i. 345. It is likely that the b. was mostly used T at funeral banquets, though the passages in the Ragn, and Hervar. S. (cp. also Hænsab. S. ch. 12) seem to imply its use at other festivals, as weddings; cp. also the description of the funeral banquet, Hkr. i. 231, where 'minni hans' (the toast of the dead king) answers to bragarfull; cp. also the funeral banquet recorded in Jómsvík. S., where the Danish king Sweyn made the vow 'at bragarfulli' to conquer England within three winters. This is said to have been the prelude to the great Danish invasion A.D. 994, Fagrsk. 44, and Hkr. to l.c. The best MSS. prefer the reading bragar- (from bragr, princeps), not braga-. II. nearly like Lat. mos, a fashion, habit of life, in compds as, bæjar-bragr, heimilis-bragr, híbýla-bragt, bouse life; sveitar-bragt, country life; bónda-bragt, yeoman life; hérads-bragr, lands-bragr, etc. Icel. say good or bad bæjarbragr, Bb. 1. 15. III. poetry; gefr hann (viz. Odin) brag skaldum, Hdl. 5, Edda 17: in mod usage chiefly melody or metre. COMPDS: bragar-bot, f. a sort of metre, Edda 130: mod. palinode. bragarfræði, f. prosody, Icel. Choral Book (1860), pref. 7. bragar-laun, n. pl. a gift for a poem dedicated to a king or great person, Eg. 318, Isl. ii. 223, 230 (Gunnl. S.), etc. bragar-mal, n. pl. poetical diction, Edda 124; of using obsolete poët. forms, Skálda 189. BRAK, n. [Ulf. brakja = πάλη; A. S. and Hel. ge-bræc; cp. Lat.

fragor], a creaking noise, Hkr. iii. 139, Bárd. 160, Fms. ii. 100.

braka, að, [cp. Ulf. brikan = κλαν; A. S. brecan; Engl. to break; Lat. frangere]:-to creak, of timber, Hom. 155, Fs. 132, Gisl. 31, Fas. ii. 76. brakan, f. a creaking, Fms. iv. 57.

BRAKUN, m. [Engl. word], a broker, Fms. v. 183; O. H. L. 56 reads brakkarnir.

BRALLA, að, to trick, job; hvat er það sem börn ei b., Jón. Þorl. BRAML, n. (bramla, 20), a crash, Safn i. 93, Isl. Arb. v. ch. 128. BRANA, u, f. a freq. name of a cow, [brana = juvenca, cited by Du Cange from old Spanish Latin deeds; it probably came into Spain with the Goths.] brönu-grös, n. pl., botan. Satyrium Albidum; in Icel. lore this flower plays the same part as the German alraun or English mandrake; the b. are also called 'Friggjar-gras' (Frigg = Freyja, the goddess of love), and 'elsku-gras,' flower of love, as it is thought to create love between man and woman, Isl. pjóðs. i. 648. Gen. xxx. 14. brands, u, f. a little trout: the Manks call the salmon braddan.

brand-erfo, f. a Norse law term, originating from the heathen age when dead bodies were still burnt, vide arfsal, a sort of clientela, giving life-long support to a man; 'til brands eor bals,' i.e. ad urnam, and inheriting him when dead; defined N. G. L. i. 50.

brand-gás, f. anas tadorna, Edda (Gl.)

brand-krossóttr, adj. brindled-brown with a white cross on the fore-bead (of an ox), Brand. 59; cp. brondottr, a brindled ox.

BBANDR, m.

I. [cp. brenna, to burn; A. S. brand (rate)] a brand, firebrand; even used synonymous with 'bearth,' as in the Old Engl. saying, 'este (dear) buith (are) oun brondes,' E. Engl. Specimens; b. af brandi brenn, Hm. 56; at bröndum, at the fire-side, 2, Nj. 195, 201; hvarfa ek blindr of branda, id., Eg. 759; cp. eldi-brandr. 2. [cp. Dan. brand, Germ. brand], a flame; til brands, ad urnam, N.G.L. i. 50 (rare); surtar-brandr, jet; v. brand-erfð. II. [A.S. brond, Beow. verse 1454; Scot. brand = ensis; cp. to brandisb], the blade of a sword; brast pat (viz. the sword) undir hjaltinu, ok for b. grenjandi nior í ána, Fas. ii. 484, Korm. 82, Eb. 238, Fms. i. 17, Bs. ii. 12; viga-brandr, a warbrand, a meteor. III. a freq. pr. name of a man, Brand.

B. On ships, the raised prow and poop, ship's beak, (sviri and brandr seem to be used synonymously, Konr. S. l. c.); fellr brattr breki bröndum hærri, the waves rise high above the 'brandar,' Skv. 2. 17; brandar af knerri (a b. on a merchant-ship), Grett. 90 new Ed., Fms. ix. 304; hann tók um skipstafninn; en menn hans tóku af hendr hans, því at bráð var eigi af brandinum (sing. of the 'bigb prow' of a ship), viii. 217; leiddist mér fyrir Þórsbjörgum, er brandarnir á skipum Bagla stóðu i augu mér, 372, 247; gyltir brandar ok höfuð, Konr., where some MSS. höfuð ok svírar. 2. ships' beaks used as ornaments over the chief door of dwellings, always in pl.; af knerri beim eru brandar veðrspáir fyrir dyrum, before (above?) the door, Landn. 231, cp. Grett. 116, where it can be seen that the b. were two, one at each side of the door; hann sá fatahrúgu á bröndum, beaps of clothes on the b., 179; b. ákasliga hásir fyrir höllinni svá at þeir gnæfðu yfir bust hennar (b. exceeding bigb over the door so that they rose above the gable), gyltir voru knappar a ofanverdum bröndunum, Konr. S.: these doors are hence called brandsdyrr, Sturl. ii. 106, iii. 200, 218.

brand-reið, f. [A. S. brandreda], a grate, Stj. 310, 315, Exod. xxx. 3, xxxvii. 26, Mar. 50; steikja & b., to roast on a grate, Mar. (Fr.) brand-skjöldóttr, adj. of cattle, brindled, red and white spotted.

brand-stokkr, m. a dub. aπ. λεγ. a bigh trunk of a tree in the middle of the hall of the mythical king Völsung, Fas. i. 119; Vr. 142 reads botstokk. branga, u, f. an aπ. λεγ. and dub., Hom. 21: cp. old Germ. brang = brasa, 28, to braze (Shakesp.), to barden in the fire : cp. brosur, f. pl. in the metaph. phrase, eiga í brösum, to be always in the fire, always quarrelling. Lengi, n. a law term, belp, furtherance, lsl. ii. 322, Ld. 26 (advance-

BRASS (cp. brasaor, Fms. viii; brasi, ix. 8), m. [cp. Getm. brat = epulae; Swed. brasa; Dan. brase = to roast; Engl. to braze], a cook, an &π. λεγ., Am. 59.

brasta, ao, [Germ. brasten], to bluster, Band. 8.

bratt-gengni, f. skill in climbing, Fms. ii. 275. bratt-gengr, adj. skilful in climbing, Fms. ii. 169: steep, Greg. 62.

bratt-leitr, adj. with projecting forebead, Fb. i. 540.

BRATTR, adj. [A. S. brant, bront; Swed. brant; North. E. brant and brent], steep, of hills, etc.; brött brekka, a 'brent' bill, Hrafn. 20; barur, bigb waves, Sks. 40: metaph., bera bratt halann, metaphor from cattle, to carry the tail high (in mod. usage vera brattr), opp. to lægja halann. to droop the tail, Isl. ii. 330, cp. Hkv. Hjörv. 20; reynt hefi ek fyr brattara, cp. Lat. graviora passus, I bave been in a worse plight, Am. 56; einatt hesi ek brattara átt, Grett. 133; mér hesir opt bodizt brattara, id., etc.,-a metaphor from mountaineers.

bratt-steinn, m. a stone column, Hým. 29.

BRAUD, n. [A.S. bread; Engl. bread; Germ. brod; Dan. brod]. This word, which at present has become a household word in all branches of the Teutonic, was in early times unknown in its present sense: Ulf. constantly renders άρτος as well as ψωμίον by blaibs; Engl. loaf; A.S. bláf; the old A.S. poetry also has bláf, and the old heathen Scandin. poems only bleifr, Hm. 40, 51, Rm. 4, 28. In Engl. also, the words lord, lady,—A. S. blafford, blafdige, which properly mean loaf-warder, loaf-maid,—bear out the remark, that in the heathen age when those words were formed, bread, in the sense of panis, was not in use in England; in old A.S. the word is only used in the compd beobread of the honeycomb (Gr. npior), cp. Engl. bee-bread; O. H. G. bibrod; Germ. bienenbrod; and this seems to be the original sense of the word. The passage in which doubtless the Goths used 'braud,' Luke xxiv. 42 -the only passage of the N. T. where unplow occurs—is lost in Ulf. Down to the 0th century this word had not its present sense in any Teut. dialect, but was, as it seems, in all of them used of the honeycomb only. The Icel. calls thyme 'bráð-björg' or 'broð-björg' (sweet food t); cp. the Lat. 'redolentque thymo fragrantia mella;' the root of 'braud' is perhaps akin to the Lat. 'fragrare.' The transition from the sense of honeycomb to that of bread is obscure: in present usage the 'bread' denotes the substance, 'loaf' the shape; b. ok smjör, Eg. 204; b. ok kál, Mar.; heilagt b., Hom. 137; the Icel. N. T. (freq.) 2. food, hence metaph. living, esp. a parsonage, (mod.) The cures in Icel. are divided into þinga-brauð and beneficia. braud-bakstr, m. bread-baking, Greg. 55 brauð-diskr, m. a bread-plate, Post. 686 B. brauð-görð, f. bread-making, Stj. 441. brauð-hleifr, m. a loaf of bread, Greg. 57, Orkn. 116. braud-jarn, n. a 'bread-iron,' Scot. and North. E. girdle, D. N. brauð-kass, n. a bread-basket, Fms. ii. 164. brauð-moli, 2, m. a crumb of bread, Stj. 155. brauð-ofn, m. a bread-oven, H. E. i. 394, N. G. L. ii. 354. brauð-skífa, u, f. a slice of bread, Andr. 68.

brauo-skorpa, u. f. a bread-crust. brauð-sneið, f. = brauðskífa.

brauo-sufi, n. spice eaten with bread, Anal. 180.

brauk, n., braukan, f. cracking, Konr. 30, Mag. 5; cp. brak. BRAUT, f., dat. brautu, pl. ir, [a purely Scandin. word, formed from brjóta, braut, as Engl. road from Ital. rotta, via rupta]:-a road cut through rocks, forests, or the like, and distinguished from vegr, stigr, gata (path, track); Önundr konungr lét brjóta vegu um markir ok myrar ok fjallvegu, fyrir því var hann Braut-Önundr kallaðt, Hkr. i. 46; ryðja b., to eut a road, Isl. ii. 400; braut... eigi breiðari en götu breidd, Eg. 582. II. as adv. away, either with or without the prep. '&' or 'i,' & braut or & brautu, which is the oldest form; II. as adv. away, either with or without but the common form in the old writers is brot, or with a double consonant, brott; later by metath, burt, burtu [Dan.-Swed. bort], which are the mod. forms, but not found in very early MSS.: it occurs in a verse in the Skálda—reið Brynhildar bróðir í bort' sá er hug né skorti:'-braut, brautu; braut hvarf or sal sæta, Korm. (in a verse), Hm. 88; braut, fer ek einn á brautu, Grett. (in a verse); in the Grág. freq., esp. in the old fragment Ed. A.D. 1852, pp. 19-26, where Kb. 16-16 reads brott; the Miracle-book, Bs. i. 333 sqq., constantly gives braut; so in also O. H. vellum of the middle of the 13th century: brott, Eg. 603, Nj. 132, Grág. i. 275: burt, burtu, in MSS. of the 15th century; the MSS. freq. use an abbreviated spelling bt (denoting ro and or), so that it is difficult to see whether it is to be read brot or burt or bort. It is used with or without notion of motion; the acc. forms braut, brott, burt, originally denote going away; the dat. brautu, burtu, being away; but in common use both are used indiscriminately; þat var brott frá öðrum húsum, far off from other bouses, Eg. 203; vera rekinn brott (braut), to be driven away, Nj. 132; fara braut, to go away, Fms. x. 216; af landi brott, Grág. i. 275, 331, 145, 258, 264, cp. also Nj. 10, 14, 26, 52, 196, Fms. ix. 421, Eg. 319, 370, and endless instances. COMPDS: brauterbrautar-mót, n. pl. a meeting of roads, Grág. ii. 114; cp. brautar-tak, biod-braut, a bigh road; vetrar-braut, via lactea, etc. n. a law term, bail, security, N. G. L. i. 44.

Digitized by GOGIC

braut- in compds, v. brott.

brautingi, 2, m. a beggar, tramp, Hbl. 6, Fms. ii. 73: the proverb, bráð eru brautingja erindi, the tramp cannot afford delay, Fas. ii. 262, cp. Hm. 2; the poor had in old times to go from house to house; cp. gongu-madr, foru-madr; therefore misery and tramping are synonymous, e. g. válaðr, miseria; cp. A.S. vædl = ambitus: -not till the establishment of Christianity were poor-rates and other legal provisions made for the poor.

BRA, f. [Ulf. braw; A. S. bræv; Engl. brow; Germ. brau], an eye-lid; brár (gen. sing.), Edda 15; brár (nom. pl.), 6; brám (dat. pl.), Vþm. 41; brá (gen. pl.), Ad. 5; cp. Baldrs-brá, Gull-brá, Isl. þjóðs.: in poetry the eyes are called brá-tungl, -máni, -sól, -geisli, moon-, sun-beam of the brow; tears are brá-regn, -drift, rain of the brow; the head brá-völlr, field of the brow, etc., Lex. Poët.

BRAD, f. [A.S. brad; Germ. brat], meat, raw flesh, esp. venison; blodug brád (a law term), raw meat, Grág. ii. 192, N. G. L. i. 82; brytja í bráð, to chop into steaks, Fb. i. 321 : pl. metaph. prey of beasts, varmar bráðir, Hkv. 2.41, Fas. i. 209; villi-bráð, venison; val-bráð, black spots on the face. II. sól-bráð, sun-burning.

BBAD, n. tar, pitch, Fms. viii. 217, Anecd. 60, Vm. 21, Sks. 28, Krók.

57; funa undir bráðinu, Fær. 195.

BRAD, f. (brob, Bs. i. 341), denoting baste (cp. bráðr), but only used in adverb. phrases, i brad, at the moment, Sturl. i. 58, Ld. 302, Bs. 1. c.; bráð ok lengðar (mod. í bráð og lengd), now and ever, Fms. i. II. in many compds, meaning rash, sudden, bot. COMPDS: bráða-bugr, m. in the phrases, göra, vinda bráða-bug at e-u, to basten to do a thing, without a moment's delay, Grett. 98. bráða-fangs, bráða-sótt, f. gen. used as adv. at once, in great baste, Fms. iv. 230. sudden illness, a plague, Fms. vii. 155, Játv. 26: chiefly of cattle, murbráða-þeyr, m. a rapid tbaw, Eg. 766. rain, Ghl. 498.

bráð-björg (commonly proncd. blóð-berg, n.), f. tbyme, Hjalt., Björn. bráð-dauði, a, m. a sudden death, Hom. 12.

bráo-dauor, adj. dead in a moment, in the phrase, verda b., to die suddenly, Ver. 47, Fms. i. 18, Isl. ii. 45, 59, Stj. 196.

bráð-endis, adv. of a sudden, Ld. 192, Fms. viii. 199.

bráð-fari, adj., verða b., to travel in baste, Krók. 59.

bráð-feginn, adj. exceeding glad, Fms. xi. 256.

bráð-feigligr (-feigr), adj. rusbing to death, Fs. 74 bráð-fengis = bráðafangs, Fms. xi. 35, Orkn. 28 old Ed.

bráð-fengr, adj. bot, basty, Fms. vi. 109.

bráð-geðr, adj. bot-tempered, Fms. vi. 220, 195.

bráð-görr, adj. early ripe, of a young man, Fms. vii. 111, xi. 328.

bráð-görviligr, adj. of early promise, Glum. 338.

bráð-hættligr, adj. most dangerous, Lv. 59.

bráð-kjörit, n. part. bastily chosen, Sturl. iii. 151.

bráð-kvaddr, part. suddenly 'called;' verða b., to die suddenly.

bráð-lauss, adj. not pitched, Hkr. ii. 281.

bráð-látinn, part. = bráðdauðr, Fms. xi. 444.

bráð-látr, adj. eager, impatient, Bs. i. 172.

bráð-liga (bráðla, brálla), adv. soon, bastily, at once, Sks. 596, N. G. L. i. 12, Fms. x. 419, i. 29: quickly, ii. 180, Hkr. i. 111: rasbly, Bs. i. 722, Sks. 775.

bráð-litið, n. part. [lita], göra b. á e-t, to look (too) bastily at a thing, Fms. v. 284, Fbr. 141.

bráð-lyndr, adj. bot-tempered, Anecd. 48.

bráð-læti, n. impatience, Bb. 3. 29.

bráð-mælt, n. part. bastily spoken, Eg. 251.

bráðna, að, to melt, of snow, etc., Fms. iii. 193, Rb. 356.

bráð-orðr, adj. basty of speech, Lv. 85, Bjarn. 14.

BRADB, adj., neut. brátt, [Swed. bråd; Dan. brad; cp. bráð], sudden, basty: the allit. law phrase, b. bani, a sudden, violent death, Nj. 99, Fms. v. 289, Sks. 585 (of suicide); b. atburdr, a sudden accident, Fms. x. 328: metaph. bot-tempered, eager, rash, bráð er barn-æskan (a proverb), Am. 75; b. barns-hugir, id., Bev. Fr.; b. i skaplyndi, Nj. 16, Hm. 21; bú hefir verið hölzi b. (too eager, too rasb), í þessu máli, Vápn. 13; b. ok ákafr, rasb and beadlong, Fms. ix. 245; b. hestr, a fiery borse, Bs. i. 743.

II. brátt, bráðum, and bráðan used adverb., soon, sbortly; þá var brátt drukkinn einmenningr, Eg. 551; brátt fanst þat ú, it could soon be seen that ..., 147; vanu bradara (Lat. spe citius), (mod., vonum b.), very soon, in a very short time, Fms. xi. 115; sem bradast, as soon as possible, the sooner the better, Eg. 534: the phrase, e-t berr brudum (or bridan) at, a thing happens of a sudden, with the notion of surprise, 361; en öllum féllusk hendr (i. e. were startled), at bráðan bar at, as it came so suddenly, Hkr. ii. 152, cp. Orkn. 50.

bráð-ráðinn, part. suddenly or rasbly decided, Fms. ii. 25, Fær. 236; b. tíðindi, sudden news, Fms. v. 289; bráðrakinn, Lex. Poët., seems only to be a bad reading = bráðráþinn, the lower part of the h having been obliterated.

bráð-reiðr, adj. very wrathful, Barl. 25.

bráð-ræði, n. rashness, Fs. 53; glappaverk ok b., 184, Fms. ii. 25. bráð-sinnaðr, adj. bot-tempered, Nj. (Lat. Vers.) 219, v.l. (mod. word.) bráð-sjúkr, adj. taken suddenly ill, Fms. vi. 104.

bráð-skapaðr, adj. part. of basty disposition, Sturl. iii. 123, Nj. 219. v. l., Fas. iii. 520: mod. skap-bráðr, bot-tempered.

bráð-skeyti, n. rasbness, Sks. 250, Karl. 495.

bráð-skeytligr, adj. rasb, Str. 9.

bráð-skeyttr, adj. rasb, Fms. vi. 100, Ísl. ii. 316, Karl. 341, 343. bráð-sýnn, adj. soon seen, Fr.

bráðung, f. burry, O. H. L. 19: gen. bráðungar, as adv. of a sudden, Fms. xi. 70; af bráðungu, at a moment's notice, 27.

bráð-broaka (-aðr), adj. early ripe, early grown (broski, growtb), Finnb. 222, v. l., Fs. 126.

BRAK, f., Engl. brake (v. Johnson), a tanner's implement, in the form of a horse-shoe, for rubbing leather, Eggert Itin. 339: a nickname, Eg. bráka, að, in the phrase, brákaðr reyr, a bruised reed, Isaiah xlii. 3.

BREDI, a, m. [Norse bræ], a glacier, common in Norway, where the glaciers are called 'brzer' or 'fonn;' in Icel. an aw. hey., Fas. (Völs. S.)

BREF, n. [for. word, from Lat. breve, like Engl. and Germ. brief; Dan. brev], in Icel. proncd, with a long e, bref: - a letter, written deed, rescript, etc. Letter-writing is never mentioned in the true Icel. Sagas before the end of the old Saga time, about A. D. 1015. Bréf occurs for the first time as a sort of dispatch in the negotiation between Norway and Sweden A.D. 1018; lét þau fara aptr með bréfum þeim er Ingigerðr konungs dóttir ok þau Hjalti sendu jarli ok Ingibjörgu, O. H. ch. 71; bréf ok innsigli Engla konungs (viz. king Canute, A. D. 1024), ch. 120: a royal letter is also mentioned Bjarn. 13 (of St. Olave, A. D. 1014-1030). The earliest Icel, deeds on record are of the end of the IIth century; in the D.I., Sturl., and Bs. (12th and 13th centuries) letters of every kind, public and private, are freq. mentioned, vide D. I. by Jon Sigurdsson, Bs. i. 478-481. etc., Fms. vii-x, Sturl. freq. [In the Saga time, 'ord ok jartegnir,' words and tokens, is a standing phrase; the 'token' commonly was a ring; the instances are many, e.g. Ld. ch. 41, 42, Bjarn. 7, Gunnl. S.; cp. the interesting passage in the mythical Akv. verse 8, where the sister ties one hair of a wolf in the ring-har fann ek heiðingja riðit í hring tauðan -as a warning token; cp. also the story of the coin used as a token in Gisl. ch. 8. In the old Sagas even runes are hardly mentioned as a medium of writing; but v. rune.] COMPDS: bréfa-bók, f. a register-book, N.G.L. ii. 409. brefa-brot, n. breach of ordinances, H. E. i. 422. brefa-goro, f. letter-writing, Bs. i. 475, Fms. ix. 260. Bs. i. 706. bréfa-maor, m. a letter-carrier, public courier, Fms. ix. 20. sveinn, m. a letter-boy, Fms. ix. 467.

brefa, 20, to give a brief account of, Fms. ii. 257, Al. 66.

brefer, n. breviary, Dipl. v. 18, Vm. 8.

bréf-lauss, adj. briefless, without a written document, Th. 78.

bréf-sending, bréfa-sending, f. a sending of letters, Fms. viii. III.

bréf-setning, f. the composition of a letter, Fms. viii. 298.

BREGDA, pret. sing. brá, 2nd pers. brátt, later brást; pl. brugðu, sup. brugdit; pres. bregd; pret. subj. brygdi; reflex. (sk, z, st), pret. brask, bráz, or brást, pl. brugðusk, etc.: poët. with the neg. suff. brá-at, brásk-at, Orkn. 78, Fms. vi. 51.

I. [A. S. bregdan, brædan; Old Engl. A. Act. with dat. and Scot. to brade or braid; cp. bragd throughout]:-to move swiftly: 1. of a weapon, to draw, brandish; b. sverði, to draw the sword, Gisl. 55, Nj. 28, Ld. 222, Korm. 82 sqq., Fms. i. 44, ii. 306, vi. 313, Eg. 306, 505; sverð brugðit, a drawn sword, 746; cp. the alliterative phrase in Old Engl. Ballads, 'the bright browne (= brugðinn) sword:' absol., brego (imperat.), Korm. l. c.: b. knifi, to slash with a knife, Am. 59; b. flötu sverði, to turn it round in the band, Fms. vii. 157; saxi, Bs. i. 629: even of a thrust, b. spjóti, Glúm. 344. 2. of the limbs or parts of the body, to move quickly; b. hendi, fingri, K. p. K. 10, Fms. vi. 122; b. augum sundr, to open the eyes, iii. 57, cp. 'he bradde open his eyen two, Engl. Ballads; b. fótum, Nj. 253; b. fæti, in wrestling; b. grönum, to draw up the lips, 199, Fms. v. 220. 3. of other objects; b. skipi, to turn the ship (rare), Fms. viii. 145, Eb. 324; b. e-m á eintal, einmæli, to take one apart, Fms. vi. 11, Ölk. 35; b. sér sjúkum, to feign sickness, Fagtsk. ch. 51; bregoa ser in mod. usage means to make a short visit, go or come for a moment; eg brá mér snöggvast til..., etc. 4. adding prepp.; b. upp; b. upp hendi, hondum, to bold up the band, Fms. i. 167; b. upp glófa, 206, Eb. 326: b. e-m á lopt, to lift aloft, Eg. 122, Nj. 108; b. e-u undan, to put a thing out of the way, to hide it, Fas. i. 6; undir, Sturl. ii. 221, Ld. 222, Eb. 230: b. e-u við (b. við skildi), to ward off with ..., Vápn. 5; but chiefly metaph. to put forth as an example, to laud, wonder at, etc.; þínum drengskap skal ek við b., Nj. 18; þessum mun ek við b. Áslaugar órunum, Fas. i. 257; nú mun ek því við b. (I will speak loud), at ek hefi eigi fyr náð við þik at tala, Lv. 53: b. e-u á, to give out, pretend; hann brá á því at hann mundi ríða vestr til Midfjarðar, Sturl. iii. β. to deviate from, disregard; vér höfum 197, Fms. viii. 59, x. 322. brugðit af ráðum þínum, Fær. 50, Nj. 13, 109, Isl. ii. 198, Grág. i. 359; b. af marki, to alter the mark, 397. 5. to turn, alter, change; b. lit, e-t, to alter one's mien, shew signs of pain, emotion, or the like, Nj. 116; b. e-m i (or b. & sik) e-s liki, to turn one (by spell) into another shape, Bret. 13; at þú brátt þér í merar líki, Olk. 37; hann brá á sik ýmissa dýra líki, Edda (pref.) 149. II. to break up or off, leave off, give up; b. búi, to give up one's bousebold, Grág. i. 153, Eg. 116, 704; b. tjöldum, to break up, strike the tents, Fms. iv. 302; b. samvist, to part, leave off living together, ii. 295; b. rádahag, to break off an engagement, esp. wedding, 11; b. bodi, to countermand a feast, 194; b. kaupi, to break off a bargain, Nj. 51, Rd. 251; b. sýslu, to leave off working, Fms. vi. 349; b. svefni, blundi, to awake, Sdm. 2; smátt bregðr slíkt svefni mínum, Lv. 53; b. tali, to break off talking, Vápn. 22; b. orustu, to break off the battle, Bret.: esp. freq. in poetry, b. hungri, fostu, sulti, to break or quell the bunger (of the wolf); b. gledi; b. lifi, fjörvi, to put to death, etc., Lex. 2. to break faith, promise, or the like; b. máli, Grág. i. 148; trúnaði, Nj. 141; brugðið var öllu sáttmáli, Hkr. ii. 121; b. heiti, Alvm. 3: absol., ef boandi bregor vid gridmann (breaks a bargain), Grag. i. 8. reflex., bregoask e-m (or absol.), to deceive, fail, in faith or 153. friendship; Gunnarr kvaðsk aldri skyldu b. Njáli né sonum hans, Nj. 57; bregðsk þú oss nú eigi, do not deceive us, Fms. vi. 17; vant er þó at vita hverir mér eru trúir ef feornir b., ii. II; en beim brásk framhlaupit, i. c. they failed in the onslaught, vii. 298; pat mun eigi bregdask, that cannot fail, Fas. ii. 526, Rb. 50; fáir munu þeir, at einörð sinni haldi, er slíkir brugðusk við oss, Fms. v. 36, Grett. 26 new Ed. III. [A.S. brædan, to braid, broider], to 'braid,' knot, bind, the band, string being in dat.; hann bregor i fiskinn öbrum enda, be braided the one end in the fish, Finnb. 220; hón brá hárinu undir belti sór, she braided ber bair under ber belt; (hann) brá (untied) brókabelti sínu, Fas. i. 47; er þeir höfðu brugðið kaðli um, wound a cable round it, Fms. x. 53; hefir strengrinn brugdizk littat af fótum honum, the rope had loosened off his feet, xi. 152: but also simply and with acc., b. brago, to braid a braid, knit a knot, Eg. (in a verse); b. rád, to weave a plot, (cp. Gr. pánteiv, Lat. suere), Edda (in a verse); in the proper sense flétta and ríða, q. v., are more usual. 2. in wrestling; b. e-m, the antagonist in dat., the trick in acc., b. e-m brago (hæl-krók, sveiflu, etc.) 8. recipr., of mutual strife; bregdask brögdum, to play one another tricks; b. brigzlum, to scold one another, Grag. ii. 146; b. frumhlaupum, of mutual aggression, 13, 48; bregðask um e-t, to contest a thing, 66, cp. i. 34. part., brugdinn vid e-t, acquainted with a thing; munud hit bratt brugdnir vio meira, i. e. you will soon bave greater matters to deal with, Fs. 84; hann er við hvárttveggja b., be is well versed in both, Gísl. 51. metaph. to upbraid, blame, with dat. of the person and thing; far bregor hinu betra, ef hann veit hit verra (a proverb), Nj. 227; poror bligr brá honum því (Thord threw it in his face), á þórsnesþingi, at ..., Landn. 101; Kálfr brá mér því í dag, Fms. vi. 105; b. e-m brizglum, Nj. 227.

B. NEUT. OR ABSOL. without a case, of swift, sudden motion. b. á e-t, as, b. á leik, gaman, etc., to start or begin sporting, playing; Kimbi brá á gaman, K. took it playfully, i. e. laughed at it, Landn. 101; b. á gamanmál, Fms. xi. 151; þeir brugðu á glímu ok á glens, they started wrestling and playing, Ld. 220; bregðr hann (viz. the horse) á leik, the borse broke into play, ran away, Fms. xi. 280; Glumr svaradi vel en brá þó á sitt ráð, Glum gave a gentle answer, but went on in bis own way, Nj. 26, Fas. i. 250: the phrase, hönd bregðr á venju, the band is ready for its old work, Edda (Ht.) verse 26, cp. Nj. ch. 78 (in a 2. b. viò, to start off, set about a thing without delay, at a moment's notice, may in Engl. often be rendered by at once or the like; brá hann við skjótt ok fór, be started off at once and went, Fms. i. 158; þeir brugðu við skjótt, ok varð þeim mjök við felmt, i. e. they took to their beels in a great fright, Nj. 105; peir brugðu við skjótt, ok fara paðan, 107; bregðr hon við ok hleypr, Grett. 25 new Ed., Bjarn. 60; hrossit bregðr nu við hart, id.; en er Ólafr spurði, at Þorsteinn hafði skjótt við brugðit, ok hafði mikit fjölmenni, Ld. 228. β. b. til e-s, þá brá Ingimundr til utanferdar, Ingimund started to go abroad, Sturl. i. 117; b. til Grænlands ferðar, Fb. i. 430. II. reflex, to make a sudden motion with the body; Rútr brásk skjótt við undan högginu, Nj. 28, 129; b. við fast, to turn sbarply, 58, 97; bregðsk (=bregðr) jarl nú við skjótt ok ferr, the earl started at once, Fms. xi. II; hann brask aldregi vid (he remained motionless) er þeir píndu hann, heldr en þeir lysti á stokk eðr stein, vii. 227. 2. metaph. and of a circumlocutory character; eigi þætti mér ráðið, hvárt ek munda svá skjótt á boð brugðisk hafa, ef . . . , I am not sure whether I should have been so hasty in hidding you, if . . ., Isl. ii. 156; bregdask á beina við e-n, to sbew bospitality towards, Fms. viii. 59, cp. bregoa sér above. β. b. yfir, to exceed; heyra peir svá mikinn gný at yfir brásk, they beard an awful crash, Mag. 6; þá brásk bat þó yfir jafnan (it surpassed) er konungr talaði, Fms. x. 322, yet these last two instances may be better read 'barst,' vide bera C. IV; bregðask ukunnr, reior . . . vio e-t, to be startled at the novelty of a thing, v. 258; b. reidr vid, to get excited, angry at a thing, etc.

C. IMPERS.

I. the phrase, e-m bregor vio e-t, of strong emotions, fear, anger, or the like; brá þeim mjök við, er þau sá hann inn ganga, it startled them much, when they saw him some in, Nj. 68; Gisl. 33, Glum. 395; b. brún, the edge of a slope, 8 turl. ii. 75; hvel, Ska. 64, litum, to change colour, to turn pale, etc., Fms. il. 7, Vigl. 24; b. sér við 🌱 Flosa brá svá við, at hann var í andliti stundum sem blóð, 177; en þó brá fóstru Melkorku mest við þessi tíðindi, i. e. this news most affected Mel-korka's nurse, Ld. 82; aldri hefi ek mannsblóð séð, ok veit ek eigi hve mér bregor viò, I wot not bow it will touch me, Nj. 59; brá honum svá við, at hann gerði fölvan í andliti...ok þann veg brá honum opt síðan (be was oft since then taken in such fits), þá er vígahugr var á honum, Glúm. 342; en við höggit brá Glæsi svá at..., Eb. 324; þorkell spurði ef honum hefði brugðit nokkut við þessa sýslu.—Ekki sjám vér þér brugðit hafa við þetta, en þó syndist mér þér áðr brugðit, Fms. xi. β. bregða í brún, to be amazed, shocked, Fms. i. 214; þá brá Guðrúnu mjök í brún um atburð þenna allan saman, Ld. 326, Nj. 14; þat hlægir mik at þeim mun í brún b., 239; nú bregðr mönnum í brún mjök (people were very much startled), því at margir höfðu áðr enga II. with prepp. vid, til, i, af; of appearfrétt af haft, Band. 7. ances, kynligu, undarliga bregor vio, it bas a weird look, looks uncanny, of visions, dreams, or the like; en bo bregor nú kynligu við, undan þykir mér nú gaflaðit hvárt-tveggja undan húsinu, Ísl. ií. 352, Nj. 62, 197, Gisl. 83; nú bregor undrum við, id., Fms. i. 292. e-m bregor til e-s, one person turns out like another, cp. the Danish 'at slægte en paa;' hat er mælt at fjórðungi bregði til fóstrs, the fostering makes the fourth part of the man, Nj. 64; en því bregðr mér til foreldris míns, in that I am like my father, Hkr. iii. 223; er þat líkast, at þér bregði meir i præla ættina en pveræinga, it is too liken, that thou wilt show thyself rather to be kith and kin to the thrall's house to that of Thueræingar, Fb. i. 434; b. til bernsku, to be children al. 3. \(\theta\). B. bregðr af vexti hans frá öðrum selum, his shape diff the that of any other seals, Sks. 41 new Ed. (afbrigði). hart . . . at nyt (dat.) bregoi, (to drive the ewes) so fast that they fail (to give milk), Grag. ii. 231; bessu tali bregor aldri (=betta tal bregzk aldri), this calculation can never fail, Rb. 536; vebrattu (dat.) bra eigi, there was no change in the weather, Grett. 91; skini sólar brá, the sum grew dim, Geisli 19; fjörvi feigra brá, the life of the 'feys' came to an end (poët.), Fms. vi. 316 (in a verse); brá fostu, hungri, úlfs, ara, the bunger of wolf and eagle was abated, is a freq. phrase with the V. of a sudden appearance; kláða (dat.) brá á hvarmana, the eye-lids itched, Fms. v. 96: of light passing swiftly by, pa bra ljóma af Logafjöllum, Hkv. 1. 15; ljósi bregðr fyrir, a light passes before the eye; mey brá mér fyrir hvarma steina, a maid passed before my eyes, Snot 117; par við ugg (dat.) at þrjótum brá, i. c. the rogues were taken by fear, 170. breið, f. = breiða.

breioa, dd, [Ulf. braidjan; Germ. breiten], to 'broaden,' unfold; b. feld & höfuð sér, to spread a cloak on the bead, Nj. 164; b. út, to lay out for drying, Sd. 179, Ld. 290, Fbr. 17, chiefly of hay; b. völl and b. hey & völl, Jb. 193; b. e-t yfir e-n, to cover one in a thing, chiefly of the bed-clothes, Nj. 20, Fms. viii. 237; b. út hendr, to stretch out the bands, vii. 250, Th. 9; b. fabm, id., Rm. 16, Pass. 34. 2; b. borð (mod., b. á borð), to lay the cloth on the table, Bs. ii. 42.

breiða, u, f. a drift, flock, of snow, hay, or the like; also fjár-breiða, a lock of white sheep; abreida, a cover, etc.

breið-bælingr, m. a nickname, a man from Breiðabólstað, Sturl. breidd, f. [Goth. braidei], breadth, Alg. 372, Grag. i. 498, Symb. 22, Fms. x. 272: metaph., Skálda 175. breið-dælskr, adj. from Broaddals in Iceland, Landn., Nj.

Breið-firðingr, m. a man from Broadfirth in Iceland, Nj., Landn., etc. breið-firakr, adj. belonging to, a native of Broadfirth, Landn., etc. breiðka, að, to grow broad, Krók. 52.

breið-leiki (-leikr), a, m. breadth, Stj. 56.

breid-leitr, adj. broad of face, aspect, Hkr. ii. 405, Grett. 90 A. BREIDR, adj. neut. breitt, [Ulf. braids; Scot. brade; A.S. brad; Engl. broad; Germ. breit], broad, Ld. 276, Nj. 35, 91, Grág. i. 500, Fms. iv. 42, vi. 297; fjörðr b. ok langr, Eb. 8; breiða stofa, b. búr, the broad chamber, Dipl. iii. 4, v. 2.

B. á breiðan, adv. in breadth, Fms. viii. 416, x. 13: neut. as adv., standa breitt, to spread over a wide space. Edda 10.

breið-vaxinn, part. broad-framed, stout, Grett. 89.

breio-ox, f. [old Dan. breth ôxa; Germ. breitant; A.S. brad ax], a broad ane, N. G. L. i. 101, Fms. ix. 33, Isl. ii. 210, v. l., Bret. 84, Bjarn. 36, Orkn. 360; 'brand-öx,' Ed. l. c., is a false reading.

BREK, n. a law term, a fraudulent purchase of land, liable to the lesser outlawry, Grag. ii. 241, 242: hence the proverb, sa hasi b. er beidist, let bim bave b. that bids for it, i. e. volenti non fit injuria, Gretz. 2. pl. freaks, chiefly of children; ab 135 new Ed., Fas. iii. 202. barna þinna brekum skalt | brosa ei né skemtan halt, Húst. 49.

breka, að, to keep asking, of importunate requests, Fms. vi. 246: the proverb, latum barn hafa þat er brekar, þiðr. 51, 110: neut., b. til e-a, Al. 114.

BREKAN, n. [Gael. braecan = tartan], a stitched bed cover. brek-boo, n. a fraudulent bidding (of land), Grag. il. 242.

freq. in local names in Icel.: as a law term, the bill where public meetings were beld and laws promulgated, etc., hence the phrase, leida i brekku, so proclaim a bondsman free; ef þræli er gefit frelsi, ok er hann eigi leiddr í lög eðr b., Grág. i. 358. compos: brekku-brún, v. above. brekku-megin, n. strength to climb the crest of a bill.

brek-laust, n. adj. fraudless, Grag. i. 137, 200.

brok-ráo, n. pl. a law term, an attempt at fraudulent acquisition (v. brek), Glúm. 347, Boll. 352.

brek-seko, f. a law term, a fraudulent, mock outlawry in order to disable one from pleading his case, defined Grag. i. 121.

brok-vini, f. an importunate request, Ld. 134.

brella, u, f. a trick; veidi-brella, a ruse. brellinn, adj. = bellinn.

brengla, ab, to distort, = beygla, Fas. iii.

BRENNA, an old obsol. form brinna; pret. brann, 2nd pers. brant, mod. branst; pl. brunnu; sup. brunnit; pres. brenn, 3rd pers. brennr; old bredr, Grag. ii. 205, Fms. vii. 20 (in a verse); brenn (dropping the r), Hm. 56; with the neg. suffix, brennr-at (non urit), 153, [Ulf. brinnan; A. S. byrnan; Early Engl. to 'brenn;' Germ. brennen; the strong form is almost obsolete in Germ.]:-to burn: 1. of a light; beir bottust sjá fjögr ljós b., Nj. 118, Fas. i. 340; hrælog brunnu (blazed) af vápnum beirra, Bs. i. 509: of a candle, to burn out, eigi lengr en kerti bat brennr, 2. to be consumed by fire; Fas. i. 341, 342; cp. Fms. viii. 276. kyrtillinn var brunninn, Fms. xi. 420; nú breðr víðara en hann vildi, the fire spreads wider than be would, Grag. l.c. B. of a volcano; er hér brann hraunit, er nú stöndu vér á, Bs. i. 22; brann þá Borgarhraun, Landn. 78, Ann. several times. y. b. upp, to be burnt up, Grag. i. 459, K. D. K. 42; b. inni, to perish by fire, Gpl. 252, Nj. 198, 200. 8. to fester, Fms. xi. 288. e. to be scolded, Eb. 198; skulu grónir grautar fester, Fms. xi. 288. dílarnir þeir er þú brant, 200. 3. metaph. in the phrase, e-t or e-s hlutr brennr við, one's lot or portion of meat gets burnt in the cooking, one gets the worst of it; broth 'brennr við,' is burnt; ortu bændr þegar á um bardagann (they made an onslaught), en bó brann brátt þeirra hlutr vid, but it grew soon too bot for them, Fms. iv. 250; Sigurdr kvad sitt skyldu við brenna, quoth Sigurd, be would get the worst of it, i.e. it would never do, Fær. 236: the phrase, e-t brennt fyrir, or e-t rautt brennt fyrir, of bright hopes, rautt mun fyrir b. ok til virðingar snúa, Fs. 68; mun enn nokkut fyrir b. er ber komit heim, Fas. iii. 81.

brenna, d, with acc. to burn; b. bal, to burn or light a balefire, 2. to destroy by fire, devastate, Fms. xi. Hervar. S. (in a verse). 391, Ann. 1329, 1289; b. upp, to burn up, Eg. 49; b. e-n inni, to burn one alive, Nj. 115, Grág. ii. 128, Landn. 215, v.l. 8. medic. to cauterise (of hot iron), Grag. ii. 133; b. e-m dila, to burn spots on one's back, body (medic.), Bs. i. 644.

β. metaph. to brand one's back; eigi purfu Danir at hælast við oss Norðmenn, margan díla höfum vér brent þeim frændum, Hkr. iii. 148; b. e-m illan díla, id., Fbr. 190 (in a verse). b. kol, to burn, i.e. make charcoal (cp. charcoal-burner), Grág. i. 200. 8. part., brennt silfr, gull = skirt silfr, gull, pure silver, gold, K. p. K. 172, 152; eyrir brendr (= eyrir brends silfrs), mörk brend, Fms.

ix. 421, Hkr. iii. 12; b. gull, Fms. xi. 77.

brenna, u, f. fire, burning, Grág. ii. 129, Nj. 158, 199; Njáls brenna, Blundketils brenna, etc., Ann. 962, 1010: the burning of a dead body, Edda 38 (=bálför).

β. astron., according to Finn Magnusson (Lex. Mythol.) Sirius is called Loka brenna, the conflagration of Loki, referring to the end of the world. compos: brennu-maor, m. an incendiary, Nj. 203. brennu-mál, n. action for fire, Nj. 210. brennu-sags, u, f. a tale of a fire, Nj. 269. brennu-staor, m. the place where a fire has been, Grág. ii. 128. brennu-sumar, n. a summer of fires. Sturl. i. 165. brennu-vargr, m. 2 law term, an incendiary (outlawed), defined N. G. L. i. 46, Sturl. iii. 261, brennandi, m. fire, Fms. i. 63 (in a verse).

brennir, m. id., Edda (Gl.)

brenni-steinn (brennu-steinn, brenna-steinn), m. brimstone, sulphur, Sks. 391; Icel. sulphur mentioned in the 12th and 13th centuries, Arna b. S., D. I., H. E., etc.; b. logi, a sulphur lowe or flame, Rb. 336; b. vatn, a sulpbur well, Stj. 91; b. þefr, a smell of brimstone, id.

BRESTA, pret. brast, pl. brustu; part. brostinn; pres. brest, [A.S. berstan, per metath.; Engl. to burst; Germ. bersten; Swed. brista; Dan. briste]:-to burst, be rent; jördin brast (the earth burst) undir hesti hans, Nj. 158; steinninn brast, the rock was rent, Bs. i. 5. break with a crash; brast þá boginn í tvá hluti, Hkr. i. 342, Gísl. 81; brestr röng, the rib of a barrel creaks, Jb. 398: the boops of a vessel bresta (burst), Fs. 132; skulfu lönd, en brustu bönd (of a tub), 2. to crash, of the sound alone; hófarnir brustu í veggjunum, the boofs dashed against the wall, Grett. 25 new Ed.; hvat brast þar svá hátt, Hkr. i. 342; þá brast strengr á skipi, then twanged the bowstring on the ship, Fms. i. 182; brestandi bogi, the twanging bow, Hm. β. to burst forth, of a stream, avalanche, or the like; brestr flóð, of an avalanche, Gísl. 33; skriða brast, id., Fms. v. 250; blóð brestr út, y. a milit. term, the blood bursts out, from a blow, N.G.L. i. 342. flotti brestr, the ranks break in flight, when the host is seized by panic; þá brast flótti í liði Flosa, Nj. 246; er meginflóttinn brast, Fms. viii. 229; brigðarmaðr, Grág. ii. 204.

brast þá flótti á Vindum, xi. 233; bardagi brestr, the battle burste out, begins, (rare and as it seems aπ. λεγ.), Fas. i. 34. 5. b. or b. a, to burst or break out, a storm, gale, cp. Bs. i. 78 (vide however s. v. bera C. IV): b. or b. út, to ebb, but only of the first turning of the tide, Bb. 2. 15; augu b., the eyes break in death, v. auga; hence helbrostio auga. II. impers., e-n (acc.) brestr e-t (acc.), one lacks, falls sbort of; brast Sigridi (acc.) fimm tigi hundrada, Dipl. v. 3; ef oss brestr á borði, if we fall short, get the worst of it, Fms. ix. 507; eigi brestr mik áræði, Fs. 62; á mið þau er aldri mun fisk (Ed. wrongly fiskr) b., Bárð. 169; ef eitt orð (acc.) brysti, Fms. iv. 71; hann vissi þessa sína ætlan brostna (frustrated), Bs. i. 289; þat mun aldri b., that will never fail. Grett. 24 new Ed.; hamingjuna brestr, Fms. vi. 155 (Ed. hamingjan).

brestr, m. pl. ir, (old acc. pl. brestu, Jd. 25), an outburst, crash, Eb. 230, of a blow against a metal ring; steinarnir kómu saman, ok varð þar við b. hár, Glúm. 375 (cp. herads-brestr, vá-brestr), Fms. xi. 6, 7, Fbr. 148, Hkr. i. 342; her-brestr, the crash produced by a sort of powder (cp. Albertus Magnus), Bs. i. 798, 799; í þeim eldi léku laus björg stór sem kol á afli, svá at í þeirra samkomu urðu brestir svá stórir, at heyrði norðr um land (of a volcano), 803; mátti heyra stóra bresti, i.e. the clash of II. a chink, fissure, esp. in jewellery; b. á gulli, spears, Flov. 33. Vkv. 25, cp. 24; vóru gimsteinar svá heilir at eigi var b. á þeim, Joh. 623. 20; kom mér þá í hug, at b. hafði verit á hringnum, ... fleiri brestina, Ld. 126; cp. the phrase, berja i brestina, v. berja, to cry off a bargain, Nj. 32. 2. metaph. a crack, chink; bresti er í beim ráðahag hafa verit, Ld. 128. B. want, loss; hvert abati eor b. i varo, Fms. xi. 441; þar eptir fylgir b. bús, Bb. i. 12; hýbýla-brestr, domestic misfortune, Gisl. 79. III. a rattle (hrossa-brestr).

bretta, tt, [brattr], to turn upwards; b. halann, Hkv. Hjörv. 20; cp. bera halann bratt: in mod. use of the clothes, sleeves, etc., to fold up; b. nefid, brymar: hence brettur, f. pl. comical contortions of the face.

breyma, used as adj. ind., b. köttr, a sbe-cat at beat. breysk-leikr (-leiki), m. weakness of body, Stj. 21: in moral sense, Magn. 504, K. A. 200.

BREYSKR, adj. (akin to brjósk), properly brittle; b. leirpottr, a brittle eartben pot, Sks. 543; kerin b., Stell. 1. 72: chiefly metaph, in moral sense, weak, infirm; andinn er fús, en holdið er b., Matth. xxvi. 41, Stj. 55, 248, Sks. 688. 13: in mod. writing often spelt with i.

BREYTA, tt, [braut, via], to alter, change: bregoa implies the notion of breach, breyta simply denotes change: with dat.; b. farveg (of a river), to form a new channel, Grag. i. 350, Nj. 4, Ld. 158, Fms. ii. 158, Fb. i. 292; flestar þjóðir þurfa at b. (transform) nafni hans til sinnar tungu, Edda 14; þá vóru snjóvar miklir ok breyttir (changed, become impassable) vegir allir, Eg. 543, Rb. 262 (where the acc. is wrong). reflex., hafa þau ekki breyzk síðan, they have not changed since, Fms. y. to vary; b. háttum, to vary the metre, Edda 121; b. hári sinu, to dress the bair, Greg. 45; b. malum, to speak rhetorically, dress one's words, Fms. vi. 392; réttr ok b., plain and artificial, Edda 120; úbreyttr, II. metaph., absol. without case, to conduct oneself, act, do, behave; ef við breytum svá, if we do so, Nj. 202, Ísl. ii. 181, Fms. i. 150; b. eptir e-m, to imitate, Symb. 15; b. til e-s, to attempt, Grag. ii. 2. in mod. use chiefly in moral sense, to behave, conduct oneself; b. vel, illa, kristilega, cp. breytni, N. T., Vidal., Pass.

breyti-liga, 2dv. strangely, Fs. 42, Korm. 54, Lv. 77, Fms. vi. 374.

breyti-ligr, adj. strange, Sturl. iii. 302. breyting, f. change, N. G. L. i. 382.

breytinn, adj. variable, Post. 645. 90. breytni, f. change; göra b. & um e-t, to make an alteration in a thing, Fas. iii. 155, Mag. 5, Fs. 98; b. i klædnadi, fashion, N. G. L. iii. 262: new fashion, Grag. i. 338; ný-breytni, Snót 68; hann kvaðst eigi nenna enn um sinn at hafa bessa b., be said that be was not yet minded to, viz. to be baptized, Fs. 77, Nj. 13 (shape, nature). 2. in mod. usage chiefly moral conduct, acting; eptir-breytni, imitation.

Brozkr, adj. Welsh, Fms., etc.; mod. British.
BBIGD, f. [bregoa A. II], a law term, 'jus retrahendi,' a right to reclaim, chiefly of landed property; eiga b. til lands; fyrnist bá eigi brigðin, then the right of reclamation will not be lost, Grag. ii. 202 sqq.; cp. Landbrigo and Landbrigoa-báttr, one of the sections of the law; cp. also óðals-brigð (Norse), vide Gþl. 295 sqq.: also brigð á dómi, change of a doom or sentence, Sks. 588 B: kaupa e-t i brigo vio annan, to purchase a thing already bought by another man, Rd. 252; engi brigo (neut. acc. pl. enga?) mun ek hér á göra, where brigð nearly means protest, Fms. 2. gener. breaking, breach; vináttu-brigo, breach of friendsbip, fickleness, Hm. 83. сомрр: brigðar-maðr, m. a law term, one whose lands are escheated, but may be redeemed, Grug. ii. 253, Gbl. 200.

brigoa, o, (mod. ao), [bregoa], a law term, to escheat; with acc., b. land, lönd, Grág. ii. 202 sqq.; b. e-m frelsi, to abrogate, i. 203; b. fé (of the forfeiture of a deposit), 183. In the Norse sense, vide Gpl. 295 sqq., Jb. 188 sqq., Dipl. v. 16.

2. with dat. (irreg.), b. jörðu, Gpl. 300: to make void, b. domi, 23; b. sattmali, Stj. 382: part. brigoandi =

Digitized by GOOGIC

bein eda b., Grág. ii. 12, 120.

brigoi, n.=brigo, Anecd. 14, Mk. 144: cp. compds lit-brigoi, gloaming : vedr-brigdi, change of weather ; af-brigdi, etc. brigoi-lier (brigolier), adi, and -lies, adv. variable, Sti. 117, Sks. 203, 627 B, 677. 8, 2. brigo-kaup, n. a void bargain, because of another man having a prior right of purchase, N. G. L. iii. 177. brigo-lyndi, f. fickleness, Hkr. iii. 273. brigo-lyndr, adi, fickle, Sturl, iii, 123. brigo-meeli, n. breach of promise, Korm. 56, Fms. vii. 305. brigor, adj. faitbless, fickle, Hm. 90, 125; brigt (unsafe) byki mér at trúa brándi, Fær. 226. brigo-reoi, n. fickleness, a wbimsy, Edda 110 (new Ed. i. 544, note 26). brigo-ull, adj. variable, fickle, unsafe, Fas. iii. 456. brigo-verpi, n. a cast in another man's fishery, Gbl. 426. brigala, ao, (derived from brigo and bregoa), to upbraid, with dat. of the person and thing; b. oss bví, at vér ..., Fms. ii. 227; honum sé bví brigglat, that it be thrown in his teeth, Fer. 100, Al. 2: with acc, of the thing (rare), Stj. 42, Anecd. 30: in mod. use, b. e-m um e-t, Mar. 153 (Fr.): absol., b. e-m ok hæða, Mar. l. c. II. medic, of broken bones (brixla saman) when they are only rudely healed. briggli and briggl, n., chiefly in pl. blame, shame, Stj. 176. Gen. xxx. 23; b. ok álygi, Hom. 76, Fms. i. 270, ii. 60; cilift b., everlasting sbame, x. 222; færa e-m e-t i brigzli, to throw a thing in one's teeth, Lv. 59; hafa at brigzlum, Nj. 223; brigzla-lauss, blameless, Fms. viii. 136. medic, callificatio ossium, the callus left after bone-fractures. brigal-yrði, n. pl. words of blame, Nj. 223, v.l. BRIM, n. [A.S. brim = aestus], surf, Fzr. 174, Eg. 99; bodar ok b., Grág. ii. 385; sker ok b., Eg. 161, Landn. 84, 276, Hkr. i. 228. poët. the sea. brim-gangr, m. the dashing of surf, Ann. 1312. brim-hljóð, n. the roar of surf. brimill, m. pl. lar, [bremol, Ivar Aasen], phoca fetida mas, also called brim-selr = útselr, a big sort of seal, Höfuðl, 5: Brimils-gjá, a local name. brim-lauss, adj. (-leysa, u, f.), surfless, calm, N.G.L. i. 139. brim-orri, a, m. anas nigra, a duck, Edda (Gl.) brim-rót, n. furious surf. brim-saltr, adj. salt as the sea. brim-sorfinn, part. (rocks) surf-worn, Eg. 142. brim-steinn, m. brimstone (?), a nickname, Fms. ix. brim-stormr, m. a gale raising surf, Stj. 26, 89. brim-tog, n. a rope used to tug a boat through the surf, Ghl. BRINGA, u, f., Lat. sternum, the chest (brjost, pectus), Nj. 24, Eb. 182, Eg. 719: the phrase, e-m skýtr skelk í bringu, one gets frightened, Eg. 49, Fb. i. 418. B. the breast-piece, brisket, Stj. 310. Exod. xxx. 27, = bringu-kollr. y. metaph. a soft grassy slope, hence Gull-bringur, the golden slopes, whence Gullbringu sysla in Icel. compos: bringubein, n. the breast-bone, Finnb. 256. bringu-breiðr, adj. broadchested, Ld. 296, Sturl. ii. 133. bringu-kollr, v. above. bringusar, n. a wound in the chest, Sturl. ii. 138, Ld. 140. bringu-teinar. m. pl. = bringspalir, Fas. iii. 392. bring-spelir, m. pl. (mod. bringspalir, Isl. ii. 55, 447, or bringsmalir, f. pl.), the 'breast-rails, breast-bars,' the brisket or part where the lower ribs are joined with the cartilago ensiformis (the bertespone of Chaucer), Isl. l. c., Fms. ii. 151, Gullb. 21; bringspölum (dat.), Grág. ii. 16; bringspölu (acc.), Gísl. 106; bringspala (gen.), Sturl. i. 140; bringspeli (acc.), Grett. 123 new Ed.: often in such phrases as, finna til (to feel pain) fyrir bringspölunum; [cp. Fr. espalier.] brinni, a, m. a flame, Haustl. 13. BRIS, n., medic. schirrus, gristle, Fél. ix. 208: the phrase, bita á brisinu, metaphor from a gristly piece of meat. BRÍK, f., gen. ar, pl. bríkr, [Engl. brick; Fr. brique; Swed. bricka; Dan. brikke = cbess-man in a game], properly a square tablet, e. g. altarisbrik, an altar-piece, Vm. 10, Bs. ii. 487: in the Sagas often of a low screen between the pillars (stafir), separating the bedrooms (hvílurúm) from the chief room, Gpl. 345, Fms. v. 339, Sturl. ii. 228, iii. 219, Korm. 182:—in mod. usage brik means a small tablet with carved work, one at the foot and one at the head of a bed, (höfða-brík, fóta-brík.)

Norway (Ivar Aasen) used of a small table placed at the door; in this buningr, m. and brikar-klæði, brikar-tjald, n. covering for a tablet, brimi, a, m. fire, poët., Edda (Gl.): brimir, m., poët. a sword, Lex.

brjá, ð, (cp. braga), to flicker, Stj. 389, Diðr. 114; brjándi birti, Bs. ii.

brjál, n. showy trifles, in a poem of A.D. 1410; cp. orða-brjál, showy brjála, 20, to flutter; to confound, disorder: reflex., Orkn. 204 old Ed.

brikar-nef, n. a nickname, Bs. i.

compos: brikar-sense it seems to be used Bs. i. (Laur. S.) 854.

(in a verse). brjándi, part. flickering, Stj. 389.

(mod. word). brjálaðr, part. one deranged of mind.

D. l. i. 268, Vm. 10, 24.

Poët.: a mythic. abode, Vsp. 43.

BRJOST, n. (brysti, provinc. Icel.), [Ulf. brusts, f. pl. = στήθος and σπλάγχνα; A.S. breost; Engl. breast; Hel. briost, n. pl.; Swed. brost; Dan. bryst, n.; Germ. brust, f.]:-the breast; b. ok kvior, Eg. 579, Nj. 95; önd í brjósti, K.b.K. 26: Lat. uber, a woman's breast, in pl., fæða barn á briósti, feed a bairn at the breast, Bs. i. 666, Str. 18, Stj. 429: mod. chiefly in pl. = Lat. mammae; hafa barn á brjóstum; brjósta-miólk, milk from the breast; briosta-mein, medic. ulcus or abscessus mammarum, Fel. ix. 202; brjósta-verkr, mastodynia (of women), id. ancients the breast was thought to be the abode of the mind, as well as of feeling, hence it is poët. called hug-borg, mun-strönd, reið rýnis, minnis knorr, etc., the eastle, strand, wain, ship of mind, of thought, of memory, etc., vide Lex. Poët., Edda 105, Höfuol, I. Stor. 18: thus briest freq. metaph. means feeling, temper, disposition; hafa ekki b. til es, to bave no beart for it; kenna i briosti um e-n, to 'feel in the breast' for one, feel compassion for; mun hann vera bralyndr sem fadir hans, en hasa brióst verra, a barder beart, Sturl. iii. 144, Bs. ii. 70, 41; láta eigi allt fyrir brjósti brenna, of a hardy, daring man; e-m rennr í brjóst, of a light slumber, esp. of one sick.

$\begin{align*} \beta \text{ the front,} \text{ of a wave, Bs. i. 484; b.} \end{align*}$ fylkingar, of a line, Eg. 268, Fms. v. 77. y. metaph. the breast-work or protector of one; b. ok hlifskjöldr, Hom. 95; bera (vera) b. fyrir e-m. to be one's defender, to shield one, Fms. vii. 263, x. 235; the phrase, vinna eid fyrir brjósti e-s, on one's bebalf, Ghl. 484. briost-afl, n. strength of chest, Sks. 372. brjóst-barn, n. a child at the breast, Stj. 227, Fs. 154. brjóst-björg, f. a breast-plate, Sks. 406. brióst-brago, n. compassion, Barl. 4. brjóst-búnaðr, m. a breast ornament, brooch, Js. 78. brjóst-drekkr, m. = brjóstbarn, Grág. i. 240. brjost-fast, n. adj. fixed in the beart, Fms. xi. 433. brjóst-festa, t, to fix in mind, Barl. 142. brjóst-friðr, m. peace of mind, 655 xxvii. 16. brjóst-gjörð, f. a saddle-girth. Sij. 397. Judg. viii. 26, Lv. 82. brjóst-góðr, adj. (brjóst-gæði, n. pl.), tender-bearted. brjóst-heill, adj. baving a sound chest, Fbr. 94, Mar. 655 xxxii. brjóst-kringla, u, f. a 'breast-disk,' brooch, Vkv. 24, 34. brjóst-leysi, n. beart-sinking, prostration, Bs. i. 387. brjóst-megin, n. strength of mind or beart, Bs. i. 238, Mag. 88. brjóst-mikill, adj. broad-chested, Sks. 227 (of waves). brjóst-milkingr, m. a suckling, Matth. xxi. 16. brióst-reior, adj. enraged, bior. 116. brjóst-reip, n. a breast-rope, girdle, a nickname, Orkn. brjóst-stofa, u, f. a front room, D. N. (Fr.) brjost-sullr, m. a tubercle in the lungs, Greg. 74 brjóst-sviði, a, m. beartburn, Fas. iii. 392, Fél. ix. brjóst-veiki, n. (brjóst-veikr, adj.), chest-disease, Fél. ix. brjóst-veill, adj. baving a delicate chest. brjóst-vit, n. motber-wit, Bs. i. 164, Pass. 44, 17. brjóst-vitra, u, f. id., Bs. ii. 11. brjóst-pili, n. = bjórpili, a front wall, Sturl. ii. 66, Hom. 94. brjóst-þungt, n. adj., Bs. i. 644, (-þyngsli and -þreyngsli, n.), asibma. BRJOTA, pret. braut; 2nd pers. brautt is obsolete; commonly brauzt or brauztu, O. H. 24 (in a verse), Fms. vi. 139 (in a verse of A.D. 1050); pl. brutu; sup. brotio; pres. bryt: [this word does not occur in Ulf. and is unknown in Germ.; the A.S. has breatan, breotan, but rarely and in the sense to destroy, demolish: but the Scandin. dialects all have it; Swed. bryta; Dan. bryde; whereas the Goth. braican, Germ. it brechen, Engl. break are unknown to the Scandin. idioms. Du Cange records a Latin-Spanish britare = destruere; it is therefore likely that it came into Spain with the Goths, although Ulfilas does not use it]:to break; with acc., Nj. 64, Bs. i. 346; peir brutu báða fótleggi í honum, Hom. 115; sumir brutu (burt) hendr sinar, sumir fætr, Bs. i. 10; ef madr brýtr tennr or höfði manns, Grág. ii. 11; hvárz þat er höggit, eðr brotið, cut or broken, id.; þeir kómu við sker ok brutu stýri, Fms. ix. 307; pormóðr kvað betra at róa minna ok brjóta ekki, Grett. ch. 50: phrases as, b. á bak, to break the back, Fms. vii. 119; á háls, the neck, Vígl. 21; b. í hjóli (hvcli), to break on the wheel, of capital punishment, Fms. xi. 372, Hom. 147; í þeim hring stendr þórs steinn, er beir menn voru brotnir um (on which the men were broken) er til blóta vóru hafðir, Eb. 26. 2. denoting to destroy, demolish; b. skurðgoð, Fms. x. 277, Bs. i. 10; þeir höfðu brotið hof en kristnað land, Fms. i. 32; Valgarör braut krossa fyrir Merði ok öll heilög tákn, Nj. 167.

β. b. skip, to sbipureck (skip-brot); brutu þar skipit tákn, Nj. 167.

β. b. skip, to sbipwreck (skip-brot); brutu þar skipit allt í spán, Nj. 282, Ld. 8, Landn. 149: absol., hón kom á Vikarsskeið. ok braut þar, 110: nú er á (a river) brýtr af annars manns landi, 3. adding prepp.; nior, sundr, af, upp. Gbl. 419; cp. land-brot. to break down, asunder, off, or the like; su er nior braut alla Jerusalem, 673. 51; b. niðr blótskap, Fms. iii. 165, viii. (pref.); brutu þá Baglar af bruna, B. broke the bridge off, x. 331; b. sundr, ix. 482; b. upp, 10 break up; beir brutu upp bilit, Eg. 235; beir brutu upp bur hans (of fence, K. b. K. 84. β. b. upp, to break up a package, unpack; brýtr haun nú upp gersemar sinar, Fær. 6:-as a naut, term, b. upp means to bring out victuals for the mess, Dan. bakke of; jarl ok hans menn b. upp visur ok setjast til matar, Fms. xi. 147: milit., b. upp våpn means to take arms, prepare for battle (in a sea fight); brjóta upp vápn sín ok berjask, Fær. 85; menn brutu upp um annan öll vapn, Fms. vi. 313 (in a Y. b. or b. saman, to fold (clothes or the like); b. sundr, to unfold, Nj. 171: in mod. usage also b. bréf, to fold a letter (hence brot, to denote the size of a book); b. upp bref, to break a letter open, Barl. 181; b. blad, to fold down a leaf in a book, etc.; b. út, to break (a channel) through, Landn. 65 (of a river); há var út brotinn óssinn, Bs. i. 315. 4. various metaph. phrases; b. bág við, to fight, v. bagr, Fas. i. 43; b. odd af offæti sinu, to break the point off one's pride, to bumble oneself, Nj. 94 (where to disgrace oneself); b. straum fyrir e-u, to break the stream for one, metaphor from a post or rock in a stream, to bear the brunt of battle, Orkn. 344; b. bekrann, vide bekri, Grett. 5. metaph. to break, violate, lög, rétt, etc.; mun ek þó eigi fyrir þínar sakir brjóta lögin né konungs tignina, cða svá landsrettinn, Fms. iv. 263; en ber, konungr, brutuð lög á Agli, you broke the law in Egil's case, Eg. 416, Fms. x. 401; at þú brjótir lög þín, xi. 93; engi skyldi annars ráð brjóta, Bret.; b. á bak, to infringe, Fas. i. 528 (cp. log-brot, laga-brot); b. af vid e-n, to wrong one, iii, 551: in theol. sense, H. E. i. 460 (vide af-brot, mis-brot, crime, sin): absol. to transgress, brjóta þau ok bæði, ok göra hórdóm, K. Á. 134. B. denoting force, to force, compel; b. menn til Kristni, Ld. 178, Fms. i. 142; til truar, Fs. 08; til hlydni, to force to submission; allt landsfolk var undir brotid riki peirra, all people were brought under their rule, Fms. iv. 64; hón er í hernaði ok brýtr undir sik víkinga, Odd. 22; b. konu til svefnis, a law term, violare, Grag. i. 338. II. reflex., with prepp. i, or, um, út, við, or adv. braut; brjótask, to break in, out, etc.; hann brauzk í haug Hrólfs Kraka, Landn. 169; brjótumk vér þá burt ór húsinu, to break out of the bouse. Fas. i. 88; briotask a. to break in upon, press; Onundr brauzk á hurdina, Onund tried to break in the door, Fs. 101, Fms. vii. 187; b. fram. to break forth. Bb.; b. milli, to break out between, Bs. i. 634; b. út, to break out, esp. in the metaph, sense of plague, disease, fire, or the like; er út brýzk vökvi ok úhreinindi, Greg. 22 (útbrot, a breaking out, eruption); b. um, to make a bard struggle (e.g. of one fettered or pinioned); því harðara er hann brauzk um, Edda 20; björn einn brauzk um i vök, Fs. 146; af ofrgangi elds bess er um brvtsk (rages) i grundvöllum landsins, Sks. 151; b. við e-t, to struggle (wrestle) bard against; þeir brutusk við skóga eðr stóra steina, of enraged berserkers, Fas. i. 515: metaph. to fight bard against, hann brauzk við heiðinn lýð, Fms. xi. 396; b. við ofressi, to fight against odds, Ísl. ii. 394: absol. to strive bard, Stj. 411; Hákoni jarli var ckki mikit um at b. við borgargörðina, Haco did not care to exert bimself much about making the burg, Fms. ix. 46: with dat., b. vio e-u, to fight against (in a bad sense); b. við gæfu sinni, to break with one's good luck, iv. 233; b. við forlögunum, to struggle against fate, Fs. 20; b. í e-u, to be busy, exert oneself in a thing; eigi harftú í þessu at brjótask lengr, i. e. give it up, Fms. iii. 102; því at þessi maðr Ólafr brýzk í miklu ofrefli, this man Olave struggles against great odds, iv. 77. 2. recipr., beir rerust svå nær, at brutusk árarnar fyrir, that they broke one another's oars, Fms. viii. 216. III. impers. in a pass. sense; skipit (acc.) braut i spán, the ship was broken to pieces, Ld. 142; skip pangbrands braut austr við Búlandshöfða, Nj. 162; tók út skip þangbrands ok braut mjök, Bs. i. 15: of a house, or the like, destroyed by wind or wave, ba braut kirkju (acc.), the church was blown down, 30: the phrase, straum (acc.) brýtr á skeri, the stream is broken against a skerry (rock); strauminn braut á öxlinni, the stream broke against his shoulders, Grett. 140 (the new Ed.), the old Ed. straumrinn-not so well; lá (acc.) brýtr, the surf breaks, abates, Edda (Ht. verse 78). IV. part. brotinn, broken; sverð slæ ok brotin, Hkr. i. 343: as adj. in such compds as fót-brotinn, vzng-brotinn, háls-brotinn, hrygg-brotinn, etc., with broken leg, wing, etc. brjótr, m. one that breaks, a destroyer, mostly in compds or poët., Hym. 17, Lex. Poët. BROD, n. [Engl. broth; Germ. brod], broth: still used in the east of Icel.: occurs in the compd word brod-gygr, a broth-cook, in a verse in the Laufás Edda, and wrongly explained in Lex. Poët, to be = brauð-gýgr.

BRJOSK, n. [Swed. and Dan. brusk], gristle, cartilage, Fas. i. 251;

Digitized by GOGIC

brodd-geiri, a, m. a spear-formed piece (geiri, goar) of land, Dipl. iv. 15, Grett. 89, new Ed. brot- wrongly.

brodd-hogg, n. a blow from a pike, Fms. ix. 528.

BRODDB, m. [A.S. brord; O.H.G. brort: Goth. brozds is suggested], a spike, Eg. 285. β. a kind of sbaft, freq. in Lex. Poet., Fms. vii. 211, Fas. ii. 118; handbogi (cross-bow) med tvennum tylptum brodda, N. G. L. ii. 427; örfa skeptra (sbafts) eðr brodda, i. 202. a sting, of an insect, Grönd. 46: metaph., daudi, hvar er binn b., I Cor. 8. of the spikes in a sharped horse-shoe or other shoe, mannbroddar, ice-sboes, porst. Hv. 46, Eb. 238, 240, Acts ix. 5; in a mountaineer's staff (Alpen-stock), Bárd. 170. 2. metaph. [cp. O. H. G. prurdi = ordo], milit. the front (point) of a column or body of men, opp.

burglars), 593; b. upp. kirkju, Fms. ix. 12; b. upp hlið, to break up a to hali, the rear; b. fylkingar and fylkingar broddr, Al. 56. 32; cpferdar-broddr, farar-broddr, Ld. 96, of a train of cattle and sheep. the phrase, vera i broddi lifsins, to be in the prime of life, Al. 29. milk of cows and ewes immediately after calving and lambing. botan, a spike on a plant. brodd-skot, n. a shot with a shaft (b.), Fms. viii. 359, ix. 528.

brodd-spjót, n. a pike in the form of a bayonet, Fas. ii. 29.

brodd-stong, f. a (mountaineer's) pole with an iron spike, Valla L. 212.

brodd-ör, f. a sbaft, = broddr, Fas. ii. 344. BROK, n. bad, black grass; hence Brok-ey, an island, Landn.; cp. broki, a. m. a nickname, Fms. ix.

brokkari, a, m. [brocarius = a cart, Du Cange], prop. a cart-borse, hence a trotter, Karl. 48; from brokk, n. a trot; brokka, ab, to trot; freq, but of foreign origin.

BROKKR, m., prop. a badger (?), [Germ., Scot., and Old Engl. B. the name of a dwarf, Edda. 2. a trotter, of a horse.

BROSA, brosti; pres. brosi; sup. irreg. brosat,-to smile; bá brosti Rútr, Nj. 35, Fms. ii. 197; b. at e-u, to smile at a thing; at hví brosi ek, at . . . , id., pord. 26, Orkn. 374, Fms. v. 178; b. vid, to smile in reply; Guðrún leit við honum ok brosti við, Ld. 246, Fms. vi. 359; b. litinn bann, Lat. subridere, iv. 101.

brosa, u, f. so in old writers, in mod. usage always bros, n., -a smile: in the phrase, mæla, svara, með (við) brosu, to reply with a smile; við brosu, Sturl. ii. 195; med brosu, Orkn. 464.

bros-leitr, adj. of smiling face, bjal. 18.

bros-ligr, adj. comical, Sturl. i. 24, Fms. iii. 113.

BROSMA, u, f. gadus monopterygius, a fish, Norse brosme, Edda (Gl.)

BROT, n. [brjóta, cp. O. H. G. broti = fragilitas], gener. a broken 1. esp. in pl., gimsteina brot, 623. 20, 544. 39; piece, fragment : brota-silfr, old silver broken to be recast; nú eru tekin Grúsiou brot, Gísl. 18; gullhringrinn stökk í tvá hluti, ok þá er ek hugða at brotunum..., Ld. 126; trogs brotin, 655 xxi; brutu bar i Vikinni ok ætluðu at göra sér skip ór brotunum (a wrecked ship), Grett. 88: in the compds um-brot, fjör-brot, a bard struggle, convulsions, agony; land-brot, deso-2. metaph, only in pl. violation: lagalation of land by sea or rivers. brot, breach of law; mis-brot, af-brot, transgression, freq. in theol. writers: arithm. fractions; tuga-brot, decimals, etc. 3. sing. breaking, bein-brot, q. v.; sigla til brots, to run asbore under full sail, Eg. 405 (skips-brot); cp. haugs-brot, hrygg-brot. β. a fragment; sögu-brot, the fragment of a tale, story; bokar-brot, the fragment of a MS. and the like. a shallow place in a river, a firth, where the stream breaks and widens, 8. medic. in the phrase, falla brot, to bave an epileptic Grág. ii. 346. fit; for the etymology see brotfall below: it is not qs. braut (away) because it is constantly spelt with an o, even in MSS, that give 'braut' constantly, e. g. the Miracle-book, Bs. i. 332-356; hann fell i brot, ok vissi þá ekki til sín löngum, 335, 336: a skin eruption (út-brot). of sledge of felled trees = broti; lét hann þú færa undir hann brot (a lever?) ok við þetta kómu þeir honum upp ór dysinni, Eb. 315, Mar. 89 (Fr.)

brot-fall, n. [Ormul. broph-fall], an epileptic fit; the spelling in the Ormulum shews the true ctymology, viz. bróð-fall or bráð-fall, a sudden fall; brot- is an etymologizing blunder, 544. 39; fell sveinninn nior ok hafði brotfall, 655 xxx; hann görði sér órar, ok lét sem hann félli í brotfall, Landn. (Hb.) 214, Bs. i. 335, 317, 120, where spelt brottfall, COMPD: brotfalls-sott, f. id., Fms. v. 213, Bs. i. 317.

brot-feldr, adj. epileptic, Karl. 547. brot-hljóð, n. a crashing sound.

brot-hættr, adj. brittle; b. gler, brittle glass.

broti, a, m. trees felled in a wood and left lying, Fms. vii. 320; brongvar merkr ok brota stóra, viii. 31, 60, ix. 357.

brot-ligr, adj. guilty, Fms. xi. 444, Jb. 55, 112, 339.

brotna, ad, [brotinn], to be broken, Lat. frangi, Nj. 19, K. p. K. 54, Fms. iv. 263; b. i span, to be broken to pieces, Eg. 405. This word is used instead of pass. to brjóta.

brotning, f. breaking, Hom. 137; rendering of Gr. κλάσιε, Acts ii. 42. BROTT- [vide braut II]:-away, in many compds.

brott-buningr, m. preparation for departure, Isl. ii. 50, Fms. ix. 128. brott-fero, f. an away-going, departure, Fms. i. 69, Grag. i. 274, Sks. 337, Fs. 7, Eg. 750. brottforoar-ol, n. a parting banquet, Hkr. i. 216.

brott-flutning (mod. -ingr, m.), f. carrying off, Grett. 88, Fms. viii. 251.

brott-fúsliga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), eager to depart, Hkr. ii. 100.

brott-fúss, adj. eager to depart, Fms. xi. 128.

brott-fysi, f. eagerness to come away, Fb. i. 188.

brott-færsla, u, f. transportation, Grag. ii. 358, 379, Jb. 219.

brott-för, f.=brottiero, Eg. 587, Fms. ix. 129, Grág. i. 151. compbs: brottfarar-leyfi, n. leave to go away, vacation, Orkn. 60, Hkr. ii. 158. brottfarar-öl, n. = brottferðaröl, Fms. i. 58.

brott-ganga, u, f. departure, Fms. v. 183.

brautgangr). brottgangs-sok, f. a divorce-case.

brott-hald, n. a going away, Fms. vii. 197.

brott-hlaup, n. a running away, Fms. iv. 265, Eg. 422.

Digitized by GOGIC

brott-hvarf, n. disappearance, Fms. ix. 341.

brott-hofn, f. law term, a taking off, Grag. i. 217, 332, 420.

brott-kváma, u, f. a going away, Fms. ii. 298. brott-laga, u, f., naut. a retiring, after battle, opp. to atlaga, Fms. brott-reið, f. a riding away, Sturl. iii. 25. brott-rekstr, rs, m. a driving away, expulsion, Stj. 43. brott-sending, f. a sending away, Stj. 41. brott-sigling, f. a sailing away, Fms. ii. 95. brott-songr, m. divine service performed out of the curate's own parisb, Bs., Sturl., D. I. brott-taka, u, f. (-tekning, f.), a taking away, Ann. 1218. brott-tækiligr, adj. removable, Stj. 4. brott-varp, n. a throwing away, Sks. 388. brott-vist, f. (-vera, u, f.), a being away, absence, Fms. vii. 48. bróderni, n. brotherbood, Lat. fraternitas, Bs. ii. 72, Mar. 24 (Fr.) BRÓÐIR, gen. dat. acc. bróður; pl. nom. acc. bræðr, gen. bræðra, dat. bræðrum: in mod. common usage irregular forms occur, as gen. sing. bróðurs; nom. sing., and gen. dat. acc. are also sometimes confounded, esp, in keeping the nom, form brodir through all cases, or even the reverse (but rarely) in taking bróður as a nom.; another irregularity is acc. pl. with the article, bræður-nar instead of bræður-na, which latter form only survives in writing, the former in speaking. There is besides an obsolete poetical monosyllabic form broeor, in nom. dat. acc. sing. and nom. acc. pl.; gen. sing. bræðrs; cp. such rhymes as bræðr-æðri, in a verse of Einar Skúlason (died about 1170); bræðr (dat.) Sinfjötla, Hkv. 2. 8, as nom. sing., Fagrsk. 54, v.l. (in a verse), etc., cp. Lex. Poët. This form is very rare in prose, vide however Nj., Lat. Vers. Johnsonius, 204, 333, v.l., and a few times in Stj., e.g. sins bræðr, sinn bræðr, 160; it seems to be a Norse form, but occurs now and then in Icel, poetry even of the 15th century, e. g. bræðr nom. sing. rhymes with ræðr, Skáld H. 3.11, G. H. M. ii. 482, but is quite strange to the spoken language: [Gr. φράτηρ; Lat. frater; Goth. brôpar; A.S. brôδar; Engl. brother; Germ. bruder; Swed.-Dan. broder, pl. brödre]:—a brother: proverbs referring to this word-saman er bræðra eign bezt at sjá, Gísl. 17; einginn er annars bróðir í leik; móður-bræðrum verða menn líkastir, Bs. i. 134: a distinction is made between b. samfedri or sammædri, a brother baving the same father or mother, Grag. i. 170 sqq.: in mod. usage more usual al-brodir, brother on both sides; half-brodir, a half-brother; b. skilgetinn, frater germanus; módur-bróðir, a mother's brother; föður-bróðir, a father's brother, uncle; afa-bróðir, a grand-uncle on the father's side; ömmubróðir, a grand-uncle on the mother's side; tengda-bróðir, a brotherin-law: in familiar talk an uncle is called 'brother,' and an aunt 'sister.' The ties of brotherhood were most sacred with the old Scandinavians; a brotherless man was a sort of orphan, cp. the proverb, berr er hverr & baki nema sér bróður eigi; to revenge a brother's slaughter was a sacred duty; nú tóku þeir þetta fastmælum, at hvárr þeirra skal hefna annars eðr eptir mæla, svá sem þeir sé sambornir bræðr, Bjarn. 58: the word bróðurbani signifies a deadly foe, with whom there can be no truce, Hm. 88, Sdm. 35, Skm. 16, Hdl. 28; instances from the Sagas, Dropl. S. (in fine), Heidarv. S. ch. 22 sqq., Grett. S. ch. 50, 92 sqq., Eg. ch. 23, Ld. ch. 53 sqq., etc. The same feeling extended to foster-brotherhood, after the rite of blending blood has been performed; see the graphical descriptions in Fbr. S. (the latter part of the Saga), Gisl. ch. 14 sqq., etc. The universal peace of Fródi in the mythical age is thus described, that 'no one will draw the sword even if he finds his brother's slayer bound,' Gs. verse 6; of the slaughter preceding and foreboding the Ragnarök (the end of the world) it is said, that brothers will fight and put one another to death, Vsp. 46. II. metaph.: 1. in a heathen sense; fóstbróðir, foster-brotber, q. v.; eið-bróðir, svara-bróðir, 'oatb-brotber;' leikbrodir, play-brother, play-fellow: concerning foster-brothership, v. esp. Gisl. 11, Fbr., Fas. iii. 375 sqq., Hervar. S., Nj. 39, Ls. 9, the phrase, blanda blóði saman. 2. in a Christian sense, brother, brethren, β. a brother, friar; Svörtu-bræðr, Blackfriars; N. T., H. E., Bs. Berfættu-bræðr, q. v.; Kórs-bræðr, Fratres Canonici, Bs., etc. I. sing., broour-arfr, m. a brother's inheritance, Orkn. 96, Fms. ix. bróður-bani, a, m. a brother's bane, fratricide, Ld. 236, Fms. iii. 21. vide above. bróður-baugr, m. weregild due to the brother, N.G.L. i. 74. bróður-blóð, n. a brother's blood, Stj. 42. Gen. iv. 10. bróðurbeetr, f. pl. weregild for a brother, Lv. 89. bróður-dauði, a, m. bróður-deild, f. = bróðurhluti, Fr. a brother's death, Gisl. 24. bródur-dóttir, f. a brother's daughter, niece, Grag. i. 170, Nj. 177; bróðurdóttur son, a brother's son, N. G. L. i. 76. bróður-dráp, n. the slaying of a brother, Stj. 43, Fms. v. 290. bróður-gildr, adi. equal bróður-gjöld, n. pl. = bróðurin right (inheritance) to a brother, Fr. bætt, Eg. 312. bróður-hefnd, f. revenge for the slaying of a brother, Sturl. ii. 68. broour-hluti, a, m. the share (as to weregild or inheritance) of a brother, Grag. ii. 175. bróður-kona, u, f. a brother's wife, K. A. 142. bróður-kván, f. id., N. G. L. i. 170. bróðurbróður-son, m. a brotber's 168, n. a brother's share of inheritance. son, nepbew, Ni. 122, Grag. i. 171, Gbl. 239, 240; brodursona-baugr.

Grág. ii. 179. II. pl., bræðra-bani, v. bróðurbani, Fbr. 165. bræðra-búr, n. a friar's bower in a monastery, Dipl. v. 18. born, n. pl. cousins (agnate), Gpl. 245. bræðra-dætr, f. pl. nieces (of brothers), Gpl. 246. bræðra-eign, f. property of brothers, Gisl. 17. bræðra-garðr, m. a 'brothers-yard,' monastery, D. N. bræðra-lag, n. fellowship of bretbren, in heathen sense = fostbrædralag, Hkr. iii. 300; of friars, H. E., D. I.; brotherbood, Pass. 9. 6. bræðra-mark, n. astron., the Gemini, Pr. 477. bræðra-skáli, a, m. an apartment for friars, Vm. 109. bræðra-skipti, n. division of inberitance among brothers, Hkr. iii. 52, Fas. i. 512. bræðra-synir, m. pl. cousins (of brothers), Gbl. 53.

bróður-ligr, adj. brotberly, Fms. ii. 21, Hom. 26. BROK, pl. brækr, [Lat. braca, only in pl.]; this word is of Celtic origin, and identical with the Gaelic braecan = tartan: I. tartan or party-coloured cloth, from Gaelic breac = versicolor. Roman writers oppose the Celtic 'braca' to the Roman 'toga;' Gallia Bracata, Tartan Gaul, and Gallia Togata; 'versicolore sagulo, bracas, tegmen barbarum indutus,' Tac. Hist. 2, 20, where it exactly answers to the Scot. tartan, the national dress of Celts; a similar sense remains in the Icel, names lang-brók, a surname to a lady because of her tall stature, Nj., Landn.: há-brók, the poët, name of the hawk, from his chequered plumage (?). Gm. 44; loo-brok, the name of the famous mythical Danish king. sbaggy coat, though the reason for the name is otherwise given in Ragn. S. ch. 1; the name of the Danish flag of war Dannebrog, qs. Dana-brók, pannus Danicus. II. breeches, Scot. breeks, the sing, denoting one leg; fotinn ok brókina, Eb. 242; ok lét hann leika laust knéit í brókinni, Fms. vii. 170: pl. skyrtu gyrða í brækr, Hav. 39, Ld. 136, Stj. 63. Gen. ix. 22, Fbr. 160, Fms. xi. 150, Vapn. 4; leista-brækr, breeches with the socks fixed to them, Eb. l. c.; blarendar (blue-striped) brækr, Nj. 184; the lesser outlawry might be inflicted by law on a woman wearing breeches, v. the curious passage in Ld. l. c. ch. 35; the passage, berbeinn bu stendr ok hefir brautingja görvi, batki bu hafir brækt binar, bare-legged thou standest, in beggarly attire, without even thy breeches on, Hbl. 6-the poet probably knew the Highland dress; cp. also the story of king Magnus of Norway (died A. D. 1103); hann hafði mjök þá siðu um klæða búnað, sem títt var í Vestrlöndum (viz. Scotland), ok margir hans menn, at beir gengu berleggjaðir, hörðu stutta kyrtla ok svá yfirhafnir, ok kölluðu margir menn hann Berbein eðr Bertætt, Fms. vii. 63: proverbs, barnið vex, en brókin ekki, the bairn grows, but the breeks not, advice to mothers making the first pair of breeks for a boy, not to make them too tight; petta veror aldri bam í brók, this will never be a bairn in breeks, i.e. this will never do. COMPDS: bróka-belti, n. a breeches belt, to keep them up, Sks. 405. Fas. i. 47, Sturl. iii. 190. bróka-vaðmál, n. clotb or stuff for b., Rd. brókar-sótt, f. nymphomania, Fél. ix. 203.

brók-lauss, adj. breekless, Fms. viii. 448.

brok-lindi, a, m. a girdle (lindi) to keep up the b., Fbr. 160, Ld. 78. bruðningr, m. [bryðja], bard bad food, Snót 216.

brugoning, f. (m., Stj. l. c., v. l.), [bregoa], breach, violation, Stj. 548, 656 A, Skálda 183.

brugg, n. brewing, N.G.L. iii. 107. 2. metaph. machination.

scheming, Mar. 52, Thom. 37.

BRUGGA, ad, [Germ. brauen; A.S. brewan; Engl. brew; Dan. brygge; Swed. brygga]:-to brew, but rare in this sense, the current word being heita or gora öl, to beat or make ale; cp. öl-hita, öl-gord. cooking, making ale. 2. metaph. with dat. to trouble, confound: b. sáttmáli, Stj. 652: more often with acc., 610: to concoct, scheme (in a bad sense, freq.)

brugginn, part. brewed, an aπ. λεγ., Vtkv. 7 (b. mjöðr): the sole relic of a strong verb answering to the A.S. breovan, brav, and the old Gem. strong verb.

bruggu-kanna, u, f. a brewing can, Fr. bruggu-ketill, m. a brewing kettle, Fr.

brullaup, v. brúðkaup.

I. neut. a bud, Lat. gemma; bá hit fyrsta tók brum at þrútna um várit á öllum aldinviði til laufs, Sks. 105; af bruminu, Bs. ii. 165; birki-brum, a bircb-bud, Eyvind (in 2 verse). Lex. Poët. II. metaph, and masc. spring, only in the phrase, öndverdan brum (acc.), in the early spring time, Sighvat (in a verse); í öndverðan brum þinna daga, Bs. ii. 7. B. a moment, in the phrase, í þenna (sama) brum; í þenna brum kom Hringr Dagsson, in the description of the battle at Stiklastad, O. H. 218, cp. Fms. v. 81 (where v.l. tima); 'i bessu bruni,' Fms. ix. 24, is certainly a misspelling for 'i benna brum:' cp. also the compd word nyja-brum, novely. newfangledness.

brumaör, part. budded, Lex. Poët.

bruna, ad, to advance with the speed of fire; b. fram, of a standard in the heat of battle, Mag. 2: of ships advancing under full sail, Fms. viii. 131, 188: freq. in mod. usage, Helius rann upp af því fagra vatni, og brunaði fram á það eirsterka himinhvolf, Od. iii. 1, Bb. 3. 18.

brundr, m. [Germ. brunft], semen animalium, Sti. 45.

of December), Bs. i. 873, Vm. 80.

BRUNI, a, m. [cp. Ulf. brunsts; Engl. to burn, burning], burning, beat: solar-bruni, Hkr. i. 5; bá er húsit tók at falla ofan af bruna (from the fire), Orkn. 458; reykr eðr b., Nj. 201, Sks. 197. \(\beta\), a barren beath or burnt lava-field as a local name in the west of Icel. 2. metaph. a burning passion, mostly in bad sense; b. öfundar, of envy, Fms. ii. 140; losta b., of lust, K. A. 104; but also truar b., fire of faith (but rarely), Fms. v. 239: medic. caustic, 655 xi. 2. compos: bruna-belti, bruns-domr, m. a sentence to be burnt, Stj. 46. n. the torrid zone. bruna-flekkr, m. a burnt fleck (spot), Fms. xi. 38. bruna-hraun, n. a burnt lava-field, Bárð. 179. bruna-vegr = brunabelti, Sks. 197. bruna-pefr, m. a smell of burning, 656B. Bruna-öld, f. the Burningage, i.e. the beathen time when the dead were burnt, preceding the Hauga-öld (Cairn-age) according to Snorri, Hkr. pref.; at vér munim hafna átrúnaði várum þeim er feðr várir hafa haft fyrir oss, ok allt foreldri, fyrst um Bruna-öld, ok síðan um Hauga-öld, i. 141: the 'Burning-age' is in Scandin. pre-historical; relics are only found in the mythological time (v. above s. v. bál) and in law phrases and old sayings, such as branderfð, q. v., til brands ok báls, v. brandr: 'brendr' is synonymous to 'dead' in the old Hm.; at kveldi skal dag leyfa, konu er brend er, praise no wife till sbe is 'burnt' (i. e. buried), 70; and blindr er betri en brendr sé, nýtr mangi nas, better to be blind than burnt, i.e. better blind than dead and buried, 80; but it does not follow that burning was used at the time when the poem was composed; the saying had become proverbial.

brunn-lækr, m. a brooklet coming from a spring, = bæjarlækr, Grág. ii. 289, Jb. 247, Isl. ii. 91, Fms. ii. 201.

brunn-migi, 2, m. 'mingens in puteum,' a kind of bobgoblin who polluted the wells, Halfs S. ch. 5. Fas. ii. 29, mentioned only here, and unknown to the present Icel. legends:—name of the fox, Edda (Gl.); cp. the proverb, skömm hundum, skitu refar i brunn karls, shame on the bounds, the foxes defiled the carl's burn, Fms. vii. 21.

BRUNNR (old form bruor), m. [Ulf. brunna; A.S. bærne; Scot. and North. E. burn; O. H. G. brunno; Germ. brunn, all of them weak forms, differing from the Scandin.-Icel, brunnr; Dan, brönd; Swed, brunn]: -a spring, well; the well was common to all, high and low, hence the proverbs, (allir) eiga sama til brunns að bera, i. e. (all) bave the same needs, wants, wisbes, or the like; allt ber ad sama brunni, all turn to the same well, all bear the same way, Grett. 137; seint ad byrgja brunninn er barnio er i dottio, it is too late to sbut the well when the bairn has fallen in; cp. the Engl. proverb, 'It is useless to lock the stable door when the steed is stolen.' In mythol., the brunnr of Mimer (Edda 10, 11) is the well of wisdom, for a draught of which Odin pawned his eye; probably symbolical of the sun sinking into the sea; the pit Hvergelmir (Edda 3) answers to the Gr. Tartarus; Stj. 612, Fms. ii. 83: the word may also be used of running water, though this is not usual in Icel., where distinction is made between brunnr and lækr, Grag. ii. 280, vide brunn-2. metaph. a spring, fountain; b. hita (the sun), A. A. 5; esp. theol. of God, Christ, b. gzzku, miskunnar . . ., Greg. 33; með brunni Guðlegrar spekðar, 673 A. 49; b. mælsku, Eluc. 56.

brunn-vaka, u, f. a third horn in the forehead of an ox with which he opened the ice during winter to get at the water; hit fjórða horn stóð ór enni, ok niðr fyrir augu honum, þat var b. hans, Ld. 120.

brunn-vatn, n. spring-water, Bs. ii. 177.

brunn-vigala, u, f. consecration of wells, Bs. i. 450, cp. Isl. bjóð. brutla (brutl, n., brutlan, f.), ad, [brytja]:-to waste, spend, esp.

in trifles; prop. to chop.

BRÚ, gen. brúar; nom. pl. brúar, Grág. i. 149, ii. 277, Eg. 529; brúr, Bs. i. 65 (Hungrvaka), is a bad spelling, cp. Landn. 332 (Mantissa); mod. pl. brýr, which last form never occurs in old writers; dat. sing. brú, gen. pl. brúa, dat. brúm: [A.S. brycg and bricg; Scot. brigg; Germ. brücke; Dan. bro; cp. bryggja]:—a bridge, Sturl. i. 244, 255, 256, iii. 24. In early times bridges, as well as ferries, roads, and hospitals, were works of charity, erected for the soul's health; hence the names szlu-hús (bospital), szlu-brú (soul-bridge). In the Swedish-Runic stones such bridges are often mentioned, built by pious kinsmen for the souls of the dead, Baut. 41, 97, 119, 124, 146, 559, 796, 829, 1112, etc. The Icel. Libri Datici of the 12th century speak of sheltering the poor and the traveller, making roads, ferries, churches, and bridges, as a charge upon donations (sálu-gjafir); þat sé þars eigi til tíundar at telja, er áðr er til Guðs þakka gefit, hvart sem þat er til kirkua lagit eðr brúa, cor til sælu-skipa, K. p. K. 142, cp. D. I. i. 279, 402. COMPDS : bruar-fundr, m. the battle at the Bridge, Sturl. ii. 256 (A.D. 1242). brúar-görő, f. bridge-making, Grág. ii. 266. brúar-sporðr, m. [sporor, the tail of a fish], tête-de-pont, Germ. brückenkopf, whereas the Icel. takes the metaphor from fishes touching the banks with their tails, Nj. 246, Bs. i. 17. brúa, að, to bridge over, Fms. i. 123: metaph., Sks. 788.

brúða, u, f. a doll, puppet, Fms. xi. 300; stól-brúða (literally chair-bride). the pillar in carved work on the side of an old-fashioned chair; in Fbr. 98

tio. f. the time when the ewes are blæsma (in Icel. usually the month cinn mikinn, en á brúðum stólsins var skorinn borr, ok var bat mikit líkneski, cp. the classical passage Eb. ch. 4; var hár hennar bundit við stólbrúðurnar, Bárð. 175 (in the vellum MS. distinctly bruð nar): a distinction in form and inflexion is always made between brúðr, a bride, and brúða, puppet; hence the saying, 'to sit like a brúða,' i.e. motionless, not stirring a limb; bláum skrýddr skrúða, skikkanlegri en brúða, more quiet than a b., Sig. Pét. 229; the sense of κύρη and νύμφη in Greek is analogous > brúð-bekkr, m. the bride's bench; in old wedding feasts the bride and bridesmaids were seated on the bride's bench, the bride in the middle; the ladies were seated on the pallr or pverpallr (the dais or ladies' bench), turning their faces to look down the hall; the bruobekkr was the seat of honour, and the central part of the dais; cp. the phrase, bruor sat 'a miðjum palli,' i. c. 'á brúðbekk,' Ld. 296, Sd. 151, Lv. 37, Ísl. ii. 250, Nj. 50; vide bekkr, pp. 56, 57.

> brúð-fé, n. a bride's fee; cp. the 'duty to the priest and clerk' in the Engl. service; the bride's fee is mentioned in the beautiful heathen poem prymskviða (our chief authority in these matters), 29, 32; where it is a fee or gift of the bride to the giant maid. It seems to be a fee paid by the guests for attendance and waiting. Unfortunately there is a lacuna in verse 29, the last part of which refers to the bekkjargjöf (vide 57); the poem is only left in a single MS. and the text cannot be restored. It is curious that pkv. 32 calls this fee 'sbillings,' cp. Germ. braut schilling (Grimm); it shews that the bride's fee was paid in small pieces of money > brúð-ferð and brúð-för, f. a bride's journey, Landn. 304, cp. Fs. 124, Rd. 255, Fms. iv. 180, Eg. 701, Grag. i. 441 A; as a rule the bridegroom was to carry his bride home, or she was carried home to him, and the wedding feast was held at the house and at the cost of the bridegroom or his parents. The bride came attended and followed by her bridesmaids, friends, and kinsmen, sometimes a host of men; hence originate the words brúðferð, brúðför, and perhaps even brúðhlaup, etc. 'Dress the hall! now the bride is to turn homeward with me, says the bridegroom-dwarf in the beginning of the poem Alvismal; so the bride Freyja travels to the wedding at the giant's, pkv., cp. Rm. 37; -- báðu hennar, ok heim óku, giptu Karli, gékk hón und líni, Ld. ch. 7, Nj. ch. 34, Hard. S. ch. 4, Sturl. iii. 181 sqq. In some cases, to shew deference to the father of the bride, the feast might be held at his house, Nj. ch. 2 (skyldi bod vera at Mardar), ch. 10, 14, Lv. ch. 12; cp. the curious case, Sturl. i. 226. In Icel., where there were no inns, the law ordered that a bride and bridegroom, when on the bride's journey, had the same right as members of parliament on their journey to the parliament; every farmer was bound to shelter at least six of the party, supposing that the bride or bridegroom was among the number, K. p. K. 94. One who turned them out was liable to the lesser outlawry, Grág. i. 441.

> brúð-gumi, a, m. [Ulf. uses bruhfahs, not bruhguma; A.S. brydguma; Hel. brudigomo; O. H. G. prutigomo; Germ. brautigam; Dan. brudgom; Swed. brudgumme; from brudr, a bride, and gumi, a man = Lat. bomo; the Engl. inserts a spurious r, bridegroom]:—a 'bride's man,' bridegroom; svá sem gumi er kallaðr í brúðför, Edda 107, Grág. i. 175, Nj. 25, Sturl. iii. 182, Isl. ii. 250. compp: brúðguma-reið, f. a 'bridegroom's ride;' at weddings the bridegroom, as the host, had to meet his guests (boosmenn) a quarter of a mile from his house; here he entertained them in tents, where they remained and enjoyed themselves till evening; when darkness began to set in, the party rode home in a procession drawn up two and two; this was called bruoguma-reid. The last bridegroom's ride on record in Icel, was that of Eggert Olafsson, just a hundred years ago, at his wedding at Reykholt in the autumn of 1767 A.D. A minute description of this last Icel. b. exists in a MS. (in the possession of Maurer, in Munich). An interesting treatise upon the wedding feasts in Icel. in the Middle Ages, down to the 18th century, is among the Icel. MSS. in the Bodleian Library, no. 130.

brúð-hjón, n. pl. the wedding pair.

brúð-hvíla, u, f. a bridal bed (lectus nuptialis), Bret.

brúð-kaup and brul-laup, n. a wedding feast, bridal; these two words are identical in sense, but different in etymology; brúðkaup, prop. bride's bargain, refers to the old notion, that marriage was a bargain or purchase, not that the bride was bought herself, but the word refers to the exchange of mundr (by the bridegroom) and heimanfylgja (by the bride's father), vide these words; hence the allit. phrase, mey mundi keypt, and mundr and mey ('mund' and maid); again, brullaup, [qs. brud-hlaup, bride's leap, cp. Germ. brautlauf, M. H. G. brutlouf, Swed. bröllopp, Dan. bryllup; Grimm mentions an A.S. brydlop (not found in Grein's Glossary or Bosworth's A. S. Dictionary); the full form brúðhlaup scarcely occurs in very old MSS., it is found in the Játv. S. MS. A.D. 1360, but only assimilated, Grág. i. 303, 311, l. 1] refers either to the bride's journey = brúðför, or to some bridal procession on the wedding day, probably the first; but in fact both words are only used of the wedding feast, the Engl. 'bridal,' A. S. bryd-eala. At the wedding feast the contract, though agreed upon at the espousals (festar), was to be the head of Thor was carved on the chair; Grima kona Gamla atti stol | read; to make a lawful britokaup' there must be at least six guests-ba at brullaupi et fæsta, ok gangi brúðguminn í ljósi í sama sæing konu, Grág. i. 175; ráða b., to fix the wedding day, Nj. 4; vera at brullaupi, Ld. 70; drekka b., to drink, i.e. bold, a wedding, 16, Fms. iv. 196; koma til b., Sturl. iii. 182; göra b., Fms. i. 150; göra b. til, to wed, Eg. 160, Landn. 243; veita b., Eb. 140: as to the time of wedding, compos: brúðkaups-ferð, f. = brúðferð, Sturl. vide Grág. i. 311. brúðkaups-görð, f. bolding a wedding, Fs. 21, K. p. K. iii. 177. brúðkat 114, N.G.L. i. 16. brudkaups-klæði, n. a wedding-garment, brúðkaups-kostr, m. the cost of a wedding, Matth. xxii. II. brúðkaups-stofna, u, f. a wedding meeting, wed-D. N. iv. 174. ding feast, Nj. 40, Fms. ii. 49, vi. 395. brúðkar wedding feast, Fms. vii. 278, ix. 345, Hkr. iii. 404. brúðkaups-veizla, u, f. a brúðkaupsvitni, n. a marriage-witness, Ghl. 224.

brúð-kona, u, f. a bridesmaid; hafi hann (viz. the bridegroom) brúðmenn, en hon (the bride) brúð-konur, N. G. L. i. 27; þá skal hann (the bridegroom) sitja millum brúðmanna, en hon (the bride) millum brúð-kvenna, ii. 305.

brúð-maðr, m. a bridegroom's man, N. G. L. i. 27: collect. the bridesmen and bridesmaids when on a bride's journey, Grag. i. 436, Eg. 201, Rd. 270.

brúð-messa, u, f. the marriage-service, H. E. i. 527.

BRUDR, f., dat. acc. brúði; pl. brúðir: [Ulf. renders the Gr. νύμφη by bruhs, Matth. x. 35 (where the Gr. word means nurus); John iii. 29 (where it means bride) is lost in Ulf., but no doubt 'brubs' was also used there; A.S. bryde; Engl. bride; O.H.G. prut; Germ. braut; Dan.-Swed. brud]: -a bride; Germans use 'braut' in the sense of betrothed, but Icel. call a girl festar-mey (betrothed) from the espousal till she sets out for the wedding journey, when she becomes 'bride;' in mod. usage the word only applies to the wedding day; konur skipuðu pall, ok var brúðrin döpr, Nj. II; sat Hallgerðr á palli, ok var brúðrin allkát, 18; var brúðrin í för með þeim, 50; brúðr sat á miðjum palli, en til annarrar handar Þorgerðr dóttir hennar, 51; brúðr sat á miðjan pall ok borlaug & adra ok Geirlaug & adra (the ladies' seat of honour was nearest to the bride on her right and left hand), Lv. 37; konur sátu á palli, ok sat Helga hin Fagra næst brúðinni, Ísl. ii. 251. B. in a wider sense, the bridesmaids (=brúdkonur) sitting on the 'bride's bench! are called brides; sat þá þorgerðr (Ed. and MSS. wrongly þórhalla) meðal brúða, then Thorgerda was seated among the 'brides,' i. c. on the bride's bench, being herself bride, Nj. 51; cp. also bkv. 25, hvar sáttu 'brúðir' (acc. pl.) bíta hvassara? Answ., sáka ek brúðir bíta en breidara: in poetry, girls, maids in general, Lex. Poët.: metaph. and theol., b. Guos, b. Kristi = the church, H.E., Vidal., etc. brúðar-bekkr, 🖚 = brúðbekkr. brubar-efni, n. a bride to be, bride-elect, Bárð. 175. brúðar-gangr, m. the bridal procession; both the procession to and from the church (first the maids and women, then the ladies, and the bride, as the chief person, last); and again, the procession of the bride and ladies from the bride's room (brúðarhús) into the hall, where the men were assembled with the bridegroom. After grace had been said, both in the stofa, to the men, and in the bride's-bower, to the ladies, two dishes were served; a toast, called Heilags Anda skál or Heilags Anda minni (Holy Gbost's toast), perhaps a continuation of the heathen Bragarfull, was then given; at this signal the marshal (sidamadr) went up to the bride's room and summoned the brides (ladies) to come down to the stofa and join the men; this was the second procession. The bride then sat on the bride's chair, and every one took his lady, and the feast went on in common. This custom is obsolete, but the word remains; a slow, stately walk, with an air of importance in measured steps, is called in Icel. a 'bride's walk,' like that of brides on a wedding day; [cp. Germ. brautgang.] brúðar-hús, n. a bride's chamber, the room where the bride and ladies were seated at a wedding during the morning and the beginning of the wedding feast, 625. 167. brúðar-lín, n. the bride's veil; the bride was veiled during the wedding, and according to pkv. 19 she took the veil when she set out for the 'brudfor.' This was the only time in life when a woman was veiled, hence ganga und lini, to walk under veil, to be veiled, is synonymous with to wed, marry; giptu Karli, gékk hón und líni, Rm. 37; setjask und ripti, id., 20; bundu þeir Þór þá brúðar líni, þkv. 191, 15; laut und línu, lysti at kyssa, be (viz. the bridegroom) louted under the veil, him list to kiss, 27; Gudrún (the bride) sat innar á þverpalli, ok þar konur hjá henni, ok hafði lín á höfði, i. e. she sat wearing a veil, Ld. 296. brúðar-stóll, m. the bride's chair, N. G. L. i. 184.

BRUK, n. dried beaps of sea-weed, Bs. i. 527, Sturl. ii. 69, Njard. 380, Fms. vi. 376 (in a verse): metaph. big words, Grett. 101 C.

BRÚKA, ad, [cp. Lat. frāgi, frux, fructus, frui; A.S. brucan; Germ. brauchen; Dan. bruge; Swed. bruke, porrowed from Germ. through Dan.; it seems not to have with acc., borrowed from Germ. through Dan.; it never occurs in the Icel. N. T., and even not in Pass.; in Vidalin (died A.D. 1720) it is used now and then; and at present, although used in common talk, it is avoided in er brullaup gert at lögum, ef lögráðandi fastnar konu, enda sé sex menn que, Lat. uti (hafa, beita neyta, or other words indirectly bearing that sense are used); derived forms—as brukandi, brukanligr, adióbrúkanligr, adj. unfit, useless-are used, but sound ill. f. use, is preferred for bruk, n., Dan. brug = use, etc.

BRUN, f., old pl. brýnn, mod. brýr; the old form remains in the phrase, bera e-m e-t á brýn (qs. brýnn):—eye-brow (brá = eye-lid), Fins. xi. 274; kom (the blow) á brúnina, ok hljóp hón ofan fyrir augat, ... bindr upp brunina, porst. St. 49; or brununum ofan nefid, Isl. ii. 368; skegg ok brýnn, Stj. 318; brú eðr brúna, Edda 109. reference to frames of mind; to lift the eye-brows denoting a pleasurable state; to drop them, a moody frame; in phrases, bregoa i brun (brýnn?), to be amazed, v. bregða; lypta brúnum, to lift the eye-brows, to be glad, cheerful, Fs. 18; hof ba upp brun (impers.), their faces cleared, Bs. i. 637, Eg. 55; siga lætr bu brynn fyrir brur, cp. the Fingl. to knit the brows, Hkv. Hjörv. 19; er hann sá at þórr lét siga brýnnar ofan fyrir augun, Edda 28; hleypa brúnum, id., Eg. 305, hence lett-brýnn, glad; þung-brýnn, moody; brún-ölvi, id.; hafa brögð und: brunum, to look uncanny, Band.; vera (so and so) undir brun at lita, to look so and so, esp. in an uncanny sense, Nj. 55, Orkn. 284; bera e-m e-t á brýnn (vide bera B. I. β), Greg. 51, Rd. 241. II. metaph. the brow of a fell, moor, etc. (fjalls-brun, heiðar-brun, veggjar-brun); is-brun, the edge of ice; a framanverori bruninni, esstu bruninni, on the mountain edge, Sturl. i. 84: the first beam of day in the sky (dags-brun). litil brun af degi; lands-brun, the 'lands-brow,' i. e. the first sight of a COMPDS: bruna-bein, n. pl. the bones mountain above the water. of the brow, Sturl. i. 180, Heidarv. S. (in a verse). brúna-mikill, adj. beavy-browed, Eg. 304. brúna-stór, adj. baving long overbanging brows, Eg. 304, v.l. brúna-skurðr, m. cutting the bair straight across the brows (as in the later Roman time), Ld. 272.

BRUN, f. a kind of stuff or tapestry (for. word), Vm. 24, 31, 146, 177, Pm. 25, Bs. i. 762.

brúnaðr, adj. (dark) coloured, Fms. viii. 217, Sks. 286.

brun-ass, m. the wall-plate, i.e. the beam (ass) along the edge (brun) of the walls on which the cross-beams rest, Nj. 114, 202, Bs. i. 804. brun-gras, n. 'brown-grass,' probably Iceland moss, Finnb. 214; or = brönugrös, q. v. (?)

brun-hvitr, adj. wbite-browed, epithet of a fair lady, Hým. 8.

brún-klukka, u, f. 'brown-bell,' name of an insect found in stagnant pools, Eggert Itin. § 600.

brún-móalóttr, adj. (a horse) of mouse-grey colour with a black stripe down the back, Hrafn. 5.

BRUNN, adj. [A.S. brûn; Germ. braun], brown, Hkr. iii. 81, Fas. iii. 336; brun klæði, black dress, of the dress of a divine, Bs. i. 800: 'svartr' is never used of a horse, but brunn, dark-brown, whereas a bay is jarpr, Nj. 167, Grett. 122 A, Bs. i. 670, cp. Sturl. ii. 32; a black horse is called Brunn, a mare Brunka; dökk-brunn, raud-brunn, dark-brows, red-brown, etc. The word is not much in use.

brún-siðr, adj. = brúnasiðr, with overbanging brows, þiðr. 179. brún-ölvi, adj. a word spelt in different ways, found in about three passages. brunolr, Bjarn. 62; brunvolvi, Fb. i. 186; brunvaulfi, iii. 357; brúnölvi, Fms. xi. 114; brúnölfr, Jómsv. S. 32 (Ed. 1824):frowning, with a wolfish brow, look, [from brun and ulfr, a wolf.]

BRÚSI, a, m. a buck, be-goat, Edda (Gl.): name of a giant, Fms. iii. 214. In Norway (Ivar Assen), a lock of bair on the forehead of animals is called 'bruse.' In Icel. a. an earthen jar, to keep wine or spirits in (cp. Scot. greybeard, Scott's Monastery, ch. 9), no doubt from their being in the shape of a bearded bead. This has given rise to the pretty little poem of Hallgrim called Skeggkarlsvisur, Skyldir erum við Skeggkarl tveir, a comparison between Man and Greybeard (Skeggkarl = Beardcarle); cp. leir-brúsi = brúsi; flot-brúsi, Hým. 26. B. a bird, columbus maximus, called so in the north of Icel., but else heimbrini, Eggert Itin. § 556. II. a pr. name of a man, Landn.

brúskr, m. a 'brush,' tuft of hair, crest of a helmet, etc.

brú-steinn, m. pavement, Eb. 120.

brydda, dd, [broddr], to prick, point: a. to sharp or rough a borse, in shoeing him, Hm. 89: to spit, pin, Sturl. iii. 85 C. B. to shew the point; svá langt sem bænar-krossinn á Sævarlandi bryddir undan Melshorni, of a view, just shewing the point, Dipl. iii. 11: metaph. to prick, torment, Str. 25; b. á illu, ójafnaði, to sbew, utter, evil, injustice. to line a garment, (akin to borð, borði.)

brydding, f. lining, N. G. L. iii. no. 2 and 10, D. N., freq. in mod. usc. II. a rude bryoja, u, f. a sort of trough, Stj. 178. Gen. xxx. 38.

wonian, a bag, v. the following word.

BRYDJA, bruddi, brutt, no doubt qs. brytja, prop. to chop with the teeth, used of chewing biscuits or other hard brittle food; cp. provincial Ital. rottà, which is used in the very same sense, from Lat. rumpere, as bryðja comes from brjóta, brytja.

BRYGGJA, u, f. [v. brú, Scot, brigg], a pier, landing-stage, gangway, Eg. 75, 530, Hkr. ii. 11, Ld. 190, Fms. i. 158, ix. 478, 503, xi. 102. The piers were movable, and were carried about in trading ships; hence writing. It is curious that the language has no special expression for to a such phrases as, skjóta bryggjum (skut-bryggja), to sboot out the ganguay, for embarking or loading the ship. In English local names, Stanfurðu-bryggja, Lundúna-bryggja, Stamfordbridge, London-bridge, Hkr., Fms. vi. compos: bryggju-búð, f. bryggju-fótr, m. the head (end) of a pier-sbop, N. G. L. iii. no. 49. a pier, a cognom., Fms. bryggju-ker, n. a tub at the pier, Fms. x. bryggju-lægi, n. a lying with the gangway shot out, Grág. i. 92, Hkr. ii. 213. bryggju-mang keeper at a landing-pier, N. G. L. iii. bryggju-mangari, a, m. a 'bridge-monger,' sbopbryggju-sporor, m. the end, bead of a pier, Grag. i. 92, Eg. 121, Fms. iv. 41.

Digitized by GOGIC

bryn-brók, f. war-breeches, Sks. 405.

bryn-glofi, a, m. a war-glove, gauntlet, N. G. L. i. 247, El., Karl., etc. bryn-hattr and -höttr, m. and -hetta, u, f. a war-bat, Al. 78, Karl. 179, 239.

bryn-hosa, u, f. war-bose, greaves, Stj. 461, Sks. 405. I Sam. xvii. 6.

BRYNJA, u, f. [Ulf. brynio; A.S. burn; Hel. bry-nio; O. H.G. brunja; Swed. brynja; Dan. brynie]:—a coat of mail, in olden times woven of rings (hringa-brynja, ring-mail), hence in poetry called hring-skyrta, a chain-mail sark or shirt, with epithets such as 'iron sewed, knit, woven,' and the like, Lex. Poët.: the breast-plate, spanga-brynja (Fms. vii. 264, viii. 95, 388), is of later date, viz. of the time of the Crusades and the following ages, vide Fms. i. 43, ii. 309, iv. 65, vi. 410, 411, vii. 45, 46, viii. 403, xi. 137, v. l. etc. etc., Bs. i. 526, 528, 624. COMPDS: brynju-bitr, m. mail-biter, name of a sword, Sturl. brynju-bond, n. pl. cords brynju-hattr and -hetta = brynhattr. to fasten the b., Karl. brynju-hálsbjörg, f. a bauberk. brynju-hringr, m. the ring of a coat of mail, Fas. i. 197. brynju-lauss, adj. without a coat of mail, uncovered, Sturl, ii. 146, Fms. vi. 416 (in a verse). brynju-meistari, 2, m. a smith of a b., N. G. L. ii. 246. brynju-rokkr, m. a coat [Germ. rock] of mail, Karl.

brynja, 20, to cover with a coat of mail, Rom. 219; mostly in part. pass. brynjaor, wearing a coat of mail, Fms. v. 161, Orkn. 148: reflex. to put on a coat of mail, El. 103.

bryn-klungr, m. a sort of weapon, = Lat. lupus, Sks. 419.

bryn-knift, m. a war-knife, dirk, Sks. 406.

bryn-kolla, u, f. = mid. Lat. collare, a collar of mail, Fms. viii. 404. brynna, t, [brunnr], to water cattle, with dat. of the beasts; b. nautum, Skálda 163, Dropl. 34.

bryn-stakkr, m. a mail-jacket, Fær. 110, Lv. 107.

bryn-stúka, u, f. a mail-sleeve, Fms. ii. 323, viii. 387.

bryn-tröll, n. a sort of balberd, Ld. 148, Valla L. 208, Eg. 121, 122, K. p. K. 170, Thom. 343, Stj. 461. I Sam. xvii. 7, where the translator says of the spear of Goliah-slikt er nú kallat b.

bryn-pvari, a, m. a sort of balberd, probably synonymous to bryn-tröll, defined in Eg. 285, Fas. iii. 387.

BRYTI, old gen. brytja, mod. bryta, m. [A.S. brytta = villicus; old Dan. bryde], a steward, bailiff. This word occurs twice or thrice in Icel. books, of the bailiffs, of private farms, Nj. 201, porf. S. Karl. 408, Fs. 147; also of the two bishops' bailiffs, Bs. i. 247, 477, 839, 848, where bryti is inferior to rádsmaðr, a steward, and denotes the beadlabourer in the bishop's homestead. In Denmark it was more in use, cp. a treatise of N. M. Petersen ('Bonde og Bryde') upon the subject, publ. in Ann. for Nord. Oldk. 1847; even used in Denmark as a pr. name, as Steward, Stewart in the Brit. Isles, Hkr. i. 228; bryta eor hinum bezta manni er i bæ er staddr, Ghl. 428: the bryti was in Norway the bead-bondsman, tveir þrælar, þjónn ok bryti, N. G. L. i. 70, 36.

brytja, að, [brjóta-brotinn; A. S. bryttjan = to deal out], to chop, esp. of butcher's meat, Isl. ii. 337; svá brytju vér grísina, Sd. 163; b. búfé, Al. 80, Stj. 411. Judg. xiv. 6 (as be would have 'rent' a kid); b. nior, to eut down, as a carcase, Fms. vii. 123; b. mat, to chop meat, viii. 221.

brytjan, f. chopping, Grág. i. 148, 466.

bryt-akálm, f. a chopper, Gísl. 80.

bryt-trog, n. a butcher's trough, pryml. 3. 60.

brýna, d, [brún], to whet, sharpen, bring to an edge; b. ljá, kníf, sverð, to whet a scythe, knife, sword, Edda 48, Isl. ii. 348, Fs. 62. B. naut. to drag a boat or ship half a-shore, put her on the 'edge' of the sea-board; b. upp skipi, Nj. 19, Fs. 145, 147, Fms. viii. 333, v.l. 2. metaph. to egg on, incite, Al. 33.

bryna, u, f. whetting; mowers call 'bryna' the amount of mowing done before the scythe wants whetting again.

bryni, n. a wbetstone, Isl. ii. 348, Fas. iii. 43, 44. 2. metaph. spices (rendering of the Lat. incitamenta gulae), Róm. 306.

bryning, f. a whetting, sharpening, esp. metaph. egging on, sharpening; ek veit görst um yðr sonu mína, þurfi þér brýningina, Ld. 240; segir, at þá hefði þeir tekið brýningunni, Hkr. ii. 239.

brýnligr, adj. = brýnn.

brýnn, adj. [brún], prop. 'edged;' but only used metaph. prompt, ready; ef bryn fefong lægi fyrir, ready means, Fms. iv. 298; bryn málaefni, an evident, plain case, Ld. 66, Gisl. 119, 123; bryn sök, a just, cogent cause, Sturl. iii. 237; brýn vörn, a clear case of defence, Band. 15 new Ed.; brynt erindi, a pressing errand, business; brynn byrr, a straight, fair wind, Skálda 163, Fagrsk. 173 (in a verse).

2. seldom = bridge, D. I. i. 404. Thaving such or such a brow, in compds, hung-brynn, létt-brynn, sambrýnn, q. v.

bræða, dd, [bráð], to melt, Sks. 145; b. jökul, snjó, ís, Fms. iii. 180, ix. 355, K. A. 6; b. lýsi, to make oil. 2. metaph. to burry; nú seinkada ek, en þú bræddir heldr, I tarried, but you burried, Dropl. 25. 3. [bráð, n.], to tar, pitch; b. hús, skip, timbr, kirkju, etc., Fms. i. 291, v. 331, Vm. 62, Eg. 90, N.G.L. ii. 247, Gpl. 81.

bræði, f. [bráði], anger, ire, temper, Eluc. 41; í bræði, in a passion, Fms. vii. 130, Pass. 8. 14; med brædi, with ire, Stj. 153. mæli, n. pl. angry language, Sks. 25.

bræðrunga, u, f. [bróðir], a female first cousin, Grág. i. 346, Fms. vii. 274, Post. 656 A. ii. 15.

bræðrungr, m. [bróðir], a first cousin (agnate), Grág. i. 171, ii. 172; also = bræðrunga; hón var bræðrungr, sbe was first cousin, Asnýjar, Grett. COMPDS: bræðrungs-barn, n. child of a first cousin, Ghl. 244. bræðrungs- and bræðrungs-baugr, m. the share of weregild due to first cousins, N. G. L. i. 75, Grag. ii. 185.

brækja, u, f. a brackish, bad taste. brækir, m. a cognom., Landn. bræklingar, m. pl. [brók], 'breechlings,' a nickname of the Irish, Morkinsk. (Fr.)

brækta, t, [Dan. bræge; Ivar Aasen, bræka, brækta], to bleat; b. sem geit, to bleat like a she-goat, Fbr. 212 (rare).

bræla, d, [Fr. brûler], to burn, in the allit. phrase, brenna ok bræla.

bræla, u, f. tbick smoke and fire (= svæla).

brogoottr, adj. [bragd], crafty, cunning, Eg. 283, Glúm. 379, Háv. 56.

brogou-ligr, adj. cunning-looking, Mag. 7.

BROLTA, t, [bratl and bratla, Ivar Aasen], to tumble about (as a cow in 2 bog), Ld. 328, Nj. 27, Jómsv. S. (Ed. 1824), p. 38 (breylti); Fms. xi. 129 has a false reading breysti. brölt, n. a tumbling about.

brorr, m. [A.S. brær], a briar, Haustl. 14; the explanation given in Lex. Poët. is scarcely right.

BRÖSK, n. a noise, crackling, Eb. 97 new Ed. note 1.

bröstuliga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), in the phrase, láta b., to brag, Sturl. i. 140 C, [cp. braska = to twist, Ivar Aasen.]

budda, u, f. a purse, (mod.)

BUDKR, bauökr, Art. 7, mod. contr. baukr, m. [a for. word derived from Gr. ἀποθήκη; mid. Lat. apotheca; Ital. bottega; Fr. boutique; O. H. G. buttick; mod. Germ. böttich; hence Germ. böttcher, Dan. bödker, mod. Icel. beykir = a cooper]: -a box, originally a box to keep herbs and balsams in; tvá buðka með balsamum, Bs. i. 872, Mar. 43; buðkr nokkurr er húsfreyja átti, Glúm. 378, Stj. 215: Bauka-Jon, Pillbox-John, was a nickname given to a bishop in Icel. for having made money by dealing in medicine-boxes; kölluðu óvinir hans hann Bauka-Jón, sögðu hann hafa selt í smá-baukum, þat er hann léti sem væri dýrindi nokkur, Espol. Arb. 1685; hence prob. bauka, q.v. COMPD: bauka-gross, n. pl. berbs kept in a box, Str.

buölungr, m. a king, poët., Edda (Gl.), Lex. Poët.

buffeit, n. [Engl. buffet], a buffet, Gisl. 27.

buffeita, tt, (for. word), to buffet, Bær. 20, Mar. 60. buga, ad, to bow; in fishing for trout with nets people in Icel. say, buga fyrir, to draw the net round; but mostly used metaph. and in compds, yfir-buga, to bow down, subdue; 3rd pers. pret. reflex. bugusk, from an obsolete strong verb bjúga, baug, occurs in Eyvind, bugusk álmar, bows were bent, Fms. i. 49.

bugoa, u, f. a bow or bent, of a serpent's coil.

BUGR, m. pl. ir, a bowing, winding; so Icel. call the bight or bend of a river, brook, creek, or the like; renna i bugum, to flow in bights, hence ar-bugr, lækjar-bugr: the bight (inside) of a ring, finger, bow-string, etc.; i bug hringinum, Eg. 306; b. fingranna, Sturl. i. 189; gripa i bug snærum, poët. to grip the bight of the bow-string, Jd. 27: the scythe has þjó-bugr, q.v.: the concave side of the sails, sá af landi í bug allra seglanna, Fms. vii. 94: a curve, disorder, of a line of men or ships (in battle), rétta bann bug, er á var orðinn flotanum, i. 174; hence the phrase, aka e-m á bug, vide aka; vinda (göra) brúða-bug að e-u, to make baste, Grett. 98 A: á bug, Scot. abeigb (aloof). Úlf. 3. 27; mein-bugir, impediments. B. convexity; b. jardar, Rb. 468, unusual in this sense.

bugt, n. bowing, servile bomage: bugta, ad, to make many bows, B. a bight, bay, Dan. bugt (for. and rare). y. [boughtes, Snót 163. Spencer] = bugoa, Fms. iii. 190, or false reading = beit (?).

BUKKR, m. [A.S. bucca; Engl. buck; Germ. bock; Swed.-Dan. bukk; cp. bokki]:—a be-goat, rare; hafr is the common word, Stj. 177, O. H. 15: = Lat. aries, a battering ram, Al. 89. COMPDS: bukkabloo, n. the blood of be-goats, 544. 39. bukka-skinn, n. the skin of be-goats, Sks. 184. bukka-vara, u, f. id., Bs. ii. 177, Sks. 184.

bukk-ram, n. a buck-ram, ram, Vm. 124, Dipl. iii. 4 (a for. word). COMPD: bukkrams-hokull, m. the scapular of a ram, Vm. 70.

BUKL, n. [mid. Lat. bucula], the boss of a shield, Al. 40, (2 for. word.) buklari, a, m. [Fr. bouclier], a buckler, shield, Sks. 374, Eg. 202, Fms. viii. 170, 317, ix. 533, Fas. i. 179, Sturl. ii. 44, 221, etc. buklara-bóla, u, f. the boss of a buckler, Sturl. i. 196. buklara-2. [brun, brow], fetill, m. the strap of a buckler, Sturl, i, 147.

talk nonsense, and bull, n. nonsense :- all mod.

bulla, u, f. the shaft in a churn or pump. bullu-fotr, m. a pr. name, Grett. bulungr, m., proncd. buolungr, [bolr, bulr], a pile of logs, fire-wood, Stj. 593, Isl. ii. 417.

bumba, u, f. [onomatopoëtic, cp. Engl. bomb, to boom, etc.], a drum, Stj. 289, Sks., Al., Karl., Fas. iii, etc. 2. the belly of a tub, kettle, or any big jar; ketil-bumba, Od. viii. 436.

BUNA, u, f. [akin to ben], a stream of purling water; lækjar-buna, vatns-buna: bunu-lækr, m. a purling brook, Jónas 137; blóð-buna = blóðbogi. 2. one with the stocking banging down his leg, ungartered; a cognom. (Björn buna), Landn.

buna, ad, to gush out, of blood, water-spring, etc.

BUNDIN, n., mod. byndini, Pass. 17. 27, [binda], a sbeaf, bundle, Stj. 192. Gen. xxxvii. 7, Greg. 40; korn-bundin, a sheaf of corn, Blanda MS.

bunga, u. f. elevation, convexity. bunki, a, m. a beap, pile, v. búlki. fir. bunungr, m. a sort of wbale, Edda (Gl.)

burdeiga, að, (a for. word; vide burt), to tilt, þiðr.

BURDR, ar, m. pl. ir, [Engl. birth; Hel. giburd; Germ. geburt; cp. bera A. II]:-birth, esp. of the birth of Christ; fra Guds, Drottins, Krists burði, Bs. i. 112, 145, 158, 173; frá hingað-burði Christi, id., 64, 75, 79, 85; til burðar Christi, Rb. 84: of men, sótt burðar = jóðsótt, labours, K. A. 104. 2. of domestic animals, calving, lambing, hence saud-burdt, the lambing-time; beim kum er bezt buast til burdar, Bs. i. 3. birth, the thing born, an embryo; Fillinn gengr tvö ar med burdinum, Stj. 70; at þær (viz. the ewes) skyldi sinn burd geta, 178; fæða sinn burð, 97; með konum leysisk burðr (abort), Bs. i. 798. in pl. birth, extraction; heidinn at burdum (MS. sing.), beathen by birth, Ver. 40; burðir ok ætt, kith and kin, Fms. i. 83; er ekki er til Noregs kominn fyrir burða sakir, ix. 389; Hákon jarl hafði burði til bess, at halda föðurleifð sinni, ok hafa jarlsnafn, i. 223; þykkjumk ek hafa til pess burði ok frænda styrk, Eg. 474; hence in mod. usage burðir means one's 'physique,' strength; burðamaðr mikill, a mighty strong man; hafa litla burdi, to bave little strength; yfir-burdir, superior strength (cp. bera vfir), and afburðir, q.v. II. the bearing of limbs, body; lima-burdr, fóta-burðr, höfuð-burðr. III. [bera C], the compds at-burdr, vidburdr, til-burdr, bap, accident; fyrir-burdr, vision. IV. answering to bera A. I. vide byror, and compds like ú-burðr. B. samanburor, comparison. compos: buroa-munr, m. distance of birth, Fs. burðar-dagr, m. a birthday, Hom. 106; b. Maríu, the nativity of the Virgin Mary, Rb. 8. burðar-maðr, m. a bearer, Fms. i. 271. burðar-sveinn, m. an errand-boy, Fms. vii. 222. burðar-tími, 2, m. birth-time, Stj. 97; natal bour, 101.

burougr, adj. [Germ. ge-burtig], of bigh birth, Grett. 161 A, Stj. 238 (unclass.)

burgeiss, m. [Fr. bourgeois; Chaucer burgeis; a for. word, of Teut. origin, from burg]:—a burgess, Fas. iii. 358: in mod. usage, a big man. buris, m. (a for. word), borax, N. G. L. iii.

burkni, a, m. [Scot. bracken or breckan, cp. Engl. brake,], the common fern, Hjalt.

BURR, m., gen. ar, pl. ir, a son, akin to bera and barn, but poët., being used in prose only in allit, phrases such as, eigi buri viò bonda sínum, Stj. 428; sem burr eðr bróðir, Fms. xi. 75; áttu börn og buru (acc. pl.) grófu rætr og muru is a standing peroration of Icel. nursery tales, Isl. pjóðs. ii. 319, vide Lex. Poët.: else in prose only used in the weak form in the compd words tvi-buri, twins; pri-buri, three at a birth, (in modern statistics even fleir-buri.)

I. [A. S. byrst: Germ, borste; Swed, bösta], a bristle, BURST, f. Hb. (1865) 22; but also of a hog's back and bristles, Edda 70; cp. Gullinbursti, Gold-bristle, the mythical hog of the god Frey; Fas. i. 532 (of the sónargöltr, the sacred bog); Fms. v. 165: the phrase, draga bust or nch e-m, to draw a bristle out of one's nose, to cheat, gull one, Olk. 36, does not occur anywhere else that we know of; the Engl. say, 'to lead one by the nose,' in much the same sense. II. metaph. the gable of a bouse (hús-burst), Hkr. iii. 14 (of a shrine), Mar. 106, Konr. 57; og gogginn á bustinni brýnir (of a raven sitting on the top of a house and whetting his bill), Sig. Breidfjörd. COMPOS: bursta-kollr, m. bristlescalp, a nickname, Nj. 181. burstar-har, n. bristly bair, Fas. i. 105.

bursti, a, m. a brush, Dipl. v. 18:—from bursta, að, to brush. burst-igull, m. a bedge-bog, Thom. 145, 147; vide bjarnigull.

BURT-, v. brott-.

BURT, [Ital. bagordo; Fr. bobourt; bord in Chaucer; vide Du Cange s.v. bobordicum], in the phrase, rida burt, to ride a tilt; hence burtreið, f. a tilt, tournament, Bær. 17, Fas. ii. 295, Karl., þiðr., etc.; freq. in COMPDS: burtreiðar-maðr, m. a tilter, Mag. 8, Fas. iii. burtreiðar-vápn, n. a tilt-weapon, Fas. ii. 281. burt-241. stong, f. a lance for tilting, Mag. 8, Fas. iii. 360, Karl., etc.

busi, a, m. a bad, clumsy knife.

BUSSEL, n. (a for. word), a cask, busbel, Art. 99.

BUST, n. a kind of fish, Edda (Gl.)

bulla, 20, to boil up; b. og sjóða; cp. Lat. ebullire: metaph. to cbat, "BUSTL, n. bustle, Isl. ii. 59, Snót 217; of a fish splaubing in the water, Bb. 2. 28: bustla, 20, to bustle, splash about in the water.

BUTTR and butraldi, a cognom., Dipl. v. 26, Fbr.: sbort, cp. butr; Dan. butted.

BUZA, u, f. [a for. word; mid. Lat. bussa; O. H. G. buzo; Dutch buise; Engl. berring-buss], a sort of merchant-ship, Fms. vii. 289, ix. 304. xi. 425; freq. in the Ann. of the 14th century; it occurs first A.D. 1251. then 1299: in the 14th century, during the Hanseatic trade with Icel., nearly every ship was called buza, vide Ann. compp: busu-akip. n. = búza, Ann. 1251, etc., Hkr. iii. 118.

BU, n. [Hel. bû = domicilium; O.H.G. bû; mod. Germ. bau = tillage. cultivation; Hel. also uses beo or beu, = seges, cp. also Teut. bound = messis. in Schmeller Heliand Glossary:-the root of this word will be traced more closely under the radical form búa; here it is sufficient to remark that 'bu' is an apocopate form, qs. 'bug' or 'bugg;' the root remains unaltered in the branch to which Icel, bygg, byggja, and other words belong]:—a bouse; bu and bæ (býr) are twins from the same root (bua); bær is the house, bu the household; the Gr. olkos (Foikos) embraces both; þeir eta upp bú mitt, Od. i. 251; biðla til móður minnar og evða búi hennar, 248; bú mitt er á förum, iv. 318; gott bú, ix. 35; etr þú upp bú hans bótalaust, xvi. 431; svo hann er fær um að veita buinn Prose Translation by Egilsson. In the Northern countries 'bú' implies the notion of living upon the produce of the earth; in Norway and esp. in Icel, that of living on the 'milk' (malnyta) of kine, ewes, or she-goats: bat er bu, er madr hefir malnytan smala, it is 'bu' if a man bas a milking stock, Grag. i. 158; the old Hm. says, a 'bu,' however small it be, is better to have than not to have; and then explains, 'though thou hast but two sbe-goats and a cottage thatched with shingle, yet it is better than begging;' Icel. saying, sveltr saudlaust bú, i.e. a sheepless bousebold starves: 'bu' also means the stores and stock of a household; gora, setia. reisa bu, to set up in life, bave one's own bearth, Bs. i. 127. Bb. 1. 219, Sturl. i. 197, Eb. 40; bregða búi, to give up farming or bousebold; taka við búi, to take to a farm, Sturl. i. 198; eiga bú við e-n, to sbare a bousebold with one, 200; rádask til bús, id.; fara búi, to remove one's bousehold, flit, 225; hafa bú, hafa rausnar-bú, 226; eiga bú, iii. 79. Eg. 137: allit. phrases, börn og bú, Bs. ii. 498; bóndi er bú-stólpi, bu er landstólpi, the 'bóndi' is the stay of the 'bú,' the 'bú is the stay of the land; búa búi sínu, Fas. iii. 312; búa úmegðar-búi, to bave a beavy bous-bold (many children), K. þ. K. 90; hafa kýr ok ær á búi, Nj. 236: bouskeeping, in the phrase, eiga einkis i bu at bidja, to bave plenty of everything. Bs. i. 131, 132; bædi þarf í búit mjöl ok skreið, Nj. 18: bome, bouse. reid Hrutr heim til bus sins, 4; & bui, adv. at bome, Fms. iv. 256, Hm. 2. estates; konungs-bú, royal demesnes; bar er bú hans voru. Eg. 42, 43, Landn. 124, fara milli bua sinna, to go from one estate to another, id.; eiga bú, to own an estate. 3. the stock in a farmstead; sumir lágu úti á fjöllum með bú sín, Sturl. iii. 75; drepa niðr bú, höggva bú, taka upp bú, to kill or destroy one's stock, Fms. ix. 473, Stj. 90. COMPDS: bus-afleifar, f. pl. remains of stores, Grag. i. 299. buhlutir, m. pl. implements of busbandry, Grag. i. 200, 220, 221, Dipl. iii. 14, Bs. i, D. I. (freq.) bus-efni, n. pl. bousebold goods, Sturl. i. bús-far, n. = búfar, Bs. i. 477. bús-forráð, n. pl. management of bousebold affairs, Sturl. i. 131, Grett. 107. bús-gagn = bugagn, bus-hagr, m. the state, condition of a 'bu,' Fas. ii. 469. Ib. 166. bús-hlutir = búsbúhlutir, Hrafn. 22. bús-hægindi, n. pl. comfortable income derived from a 'bú,' Bs. i. 688, Hrafn. 22. bús-kerfi. n. movables of a bousebold, Grag. ii. 339 A, 249, where buskerti, an obsolete and dubious word, bus-tilskipan, f. the settling of a bousebold, Fms. ii. 68. bús-umsvif, n. pl. the care, troubles of a bu. business, Band. ii. bús-umsýsla, u, f. the management of a 'bú,' Ld. 22, Eg. 333, 334, Band. l. c.

BÚA, pret. sing. bjó, 2nd pers. bjótt, mod. bjóst; plur. bjoggu, bjöggu, and mod. bjuggu, or even buggu; sup. búit, búið, and (rarely) contr. buð; part. buinn; pret. subj. bjöggi, mod. byggi or bjyggi; pres. sing. indic. bý; pl. búm, mod. búum: reflex. forms býsk or býst, bjósk or bjóst, bjöggusk, búisk, etc.: poët, forms with suffixed negative bjó-at, Skv. 3. 39: an obsolete pret. bjoggi = bjó, Fms. ix. 440 (in a verse); bjöggisk = bjósk, Hom. 118. [Bua is originally a reduplicated and contracted verb answering to Goth. bian, of which the pret, may have been baibau: by bûan Ulf. renders Gr. ολκείν, κατοικείν; Hel. bûan = babitare; Germ. bauen; Swed, and Dan. bo. The Icel, distinguishes between the strong neut. and originally redupl. verb bua, and the transit. and weak byggja, q. v.: bua seems to be kindred to Gr. φύω, ἔφῦσα (cp. Sansk. bhii, bhavàmi, Lat. fui); byggja to Lat. fūcio, cp. Swed.-Dan. bygga, Scot. and North. E. to 'big,' i. e. to build; cp. Lat. aedificare. nidificare: again, the coincidence in sense with the Gr. olkos, olkely, Lat. vicus, is no less striking, cp. the references s.v. bú above. Búa, as a root word, is one of the most interesting words in the Scandin, tongues; bu, bær, bygg, bygð, byggja, etc., all belong to this family: it survives in the North. E. word to 'big,' in the Germ, bauen (to till), and possibly (v. above) in the auxiliary verb 'to be.']

Digitized by GOGIC

A. NEUTER, to live, abide, dwell. = Gr. olkeiv. Lat. babitare: Tally to prepare, make: b. smyrsl, to make ointments. Rb. 82. sú synd sem í mér býr. Rom, vii. 17, 20; í mér, bat er í mínu holdi. býr ekki gott, 18; hann sem býr í ljósinu, 1 Tim. vi. 16; fyrir Heilagan Anda sem í oss býr, 2 Tim. i. 14; Látið Christs orð ríkulega búa meðal vðar. Col. iii. 16; bá trú . . . sem áðr fyr bjó í þinni ömmu Loide, 2 Tim. i. 5; bat hit goda sem í oss býr, 14; hann sem býr í ljósinu, bar einginn kann til að komast, I Tim. vi. 16; hence íbúð, living in, etc.; in many of those passages some Edd. of N. T. use byggja, but búa suits better: of a temporary abode, hann bjó í tjöldum, be abode in tents. Fms. x. 413. 2. a naut, term: beir biuggu bar um nóttina. they stayed, cast anchor during the night, Fms. vii. 3: on board ship, to bave one's berth, sá maor bjó á skipi næst Haraldi er hét Loðinn, 166; engi maðr skyldi búa á þessu skipi yngri en tvítugr, x. 321. to live together as man and wife; henni hagar ad b. vid hann, I Cor. vii. 12; hagar honum hjá henni að b., 13; b. með húsfrú sinni, Stj. 47; b. við; Helgi prestr bjó við konu þá, er þórdís hét (of concubinage), Sturl. i. 141: but bua saman, of wedded life, K. A. 134. be present in the place; at Selborir muni fyrir b. i hveriu holti, Fms. iv. 260: recipr., sjór ok skógr bjoggusk í grend, Skálda 202, Baruch. esp. (v. bu) to bave a bousebold, cattle, sheep, and milk; hence buandi, bondi, bær, and bú; búa við málnytu (milk), ok hafa kýr ok ær at búi, Nj. 236, Grag. i. 168, 335; b. bui (dat.), 153, K. b. K. 90; bua bui sinu, to big ane's ain biggin, bave one's own bomestead.

[B. absol., medan B. absol., meðan bu vilt b., so long as thou wilt keep bouse, Hrafn. q; b. vel, illa, to be a good (bad) bousekeeper; vænt er að kunna vel að búa, Bb. 3. 1; Salomon kongur kunni ad b., 100; fara ad b., to begin bousekeeping, 2. 6; b. & jordu, to keep a farm, gesa beim odul sin er á bjoggu, Fms. i. 21. bia a..., at ..., i..., with the name of the place added, to live at or in a place: hann bió á Velli (the farm) á Rangárvöllum (the county), Nj. I; Hoskuldr bjó á Höskuldstöðum, 2; hann bjó at Varmalæk, 22; hann bjó undir Felli, 16; Gunnarr bjó at Hlíðarenda, 20; Njáll bjó at Bergbórshvali, 30, 38, 147, 162, 164, 173, 174, 213, Landn. 39-41, and in numberless passages; Eb., Ld., Eg., Sturl., Bs., Isl. ii, etc. (very freq.): also b. i brjosti, skapi, huga e-m, to be, dwell in one's mind, with the notion of rooted conviction or determination, þess hins mikla áhuga, er þér býr í brjósti, Fms. iv. 80; því er mér hefir lengi í skapi búit, 78; ekki muntu levnask fyrir mer, veit ek hvat í býr skapinu, Lv. 16. metaph, and with prepp.; b. um e-t, or b. yfir e-u, almost in an uncanny sense, to brood over hidden schemes, designs, resentment, or the like; bua um hversan hug, to be of a fickle mind, Skv. 3. 39; b. eigi um heilt, to brood over something against one, to be insincere, Fms. xi. 365; b. um skoll, to broad over some deceit, id.; b. um grun, to be suspicious, ii. 87; in good sense, b. um eitt lunderni, to be of one mind, Jb. 17; b. um brek, hug, to bave a bold beart, Lex. Poët.: b. i or undir e-u, to be at the bottom of a thing; en i bessu vináttu merki bjoggu enn fleiri hlutir. Ó. H. 125; mart býr í þokunni (a proverb), many things bide in the mist; en þat b. mest undir ferð Áka, at ..., Fms. xi. 45; þóttusk eigi vita hvat undir myndi b., Nj. 62: b. yfir e-u, to brood over something, conceal; (ormrinn) bjo yfir eitri, i.e. the snake was venomous, Fms. vi. 351: the saying, litill bukr byr yfir miklu viti, little bulk bides mickle wit, Al.; b. yfir flærð ok velum, to brood over falsebood and deceit, id.; b. yfir brögdum, Fas. i. 290: b. undir, vio e-t, to live under or with a thing, to bide, put up with; eiga undir slikum ofsa at b., to bave to put up with such insolence, Fms. xi. 248; at hart mun þykkja undir at b., Nj. 90, 101; ok mun eigi við þat mega b., i. e. it will be too bard to bide, 164; pvi at bændr máttu eigi við hitt b., Fms. xi. 224.

III. in a half active sense; b. at e-u, vid hitt b., Fms. xi. 224. or b. e-u (with dat.), to treat; peir höfðu spurt hvern veg þórólfr hafði búit at herbergjum þeirra, bow Tb. bad used their premises, Eg. 85; peir bioggu búi sem þeim líkaði (where with dat.); i. e. they treated it recklessly, Bs. i. 544; Haraldr jarl fór til bús Sveins, ok bjó bá heldr úspakliga komum hans, Orkn. 424 (in all passages in bad sense): búa vel saman, to live well together, be friendly, Fms. xi. 312; hence sam-bud, living togetber; b. við e-n, to treat one so and so; sart býr bú við mik, bóra, thou treatest me sorely, vii. 203.

B. ACTIVE, to make ready: the sense and form here reminds one of the Gr. moieiv: [this sense is much used in Old Engl., esp. the part. bone, boon, or boun, ready, ('boun to go,' Chaucer, etc.); in later Engl. 'boun' was corrupted into 'bound,' in such naut. phrases as bound for a port, etc.: from this part, the ballad writers formed a fresh verb, to boun, 'busk ye, boun ye;' 'busk' is a remnant of the old reflex. búask, see Dasent, Burnt Njal, pref. xvi. note, and cp. below III.] make ready, 'boun,' for a journey; b. fero, for sina; and as a naut. term, b. skip, to make ready for sea; bjoggu beir ferð sína, Fms. ix. 453; en er beir voru bunir, Nj. 122; ok voru ba mjök brott bunir, they were 'boun' for sea, Fms. vii. 101; bjó hann skip sitt, Nj. 128; en skip er brotið, svá at eigi er í för búanda á því sunri, i. e. sbip unfit to go to sea, Grág. i. 92: b. sik til göngu, to be 'boun' for a walk, Ld. 46; b. sik at keyra, to make one ready for ..., Nj. 91. B. as a law term, b. sök, mál, or adding til, b. til sök, mål å hendr e-m, to take out a summons against one, begin a lawsuit; b. mál í dóm, of the preliminaries to a lawsuit, hence mulatilbuningr, in numberless cases in the Gragas and Sagas.

Old Engl. to boun, i. e. to dress, equip; b. sik, to dress; svá búinn, so dressed, Fms. xi. 272; hence buningr, dress (freq.); vel buinn, welldressed, Nj. 3, Isl. ii. 434; spari-buinn, in boliday dress; illa buinn, illdressed; sidan bjó hon hana sem hon kunni, sbe dressed ber as well as sbe could, Finnb. 258; b. bed, rekkjur, to make a bed, Eg. 236; b. upp hvilur, id., Nj. 168; b. öndvegi, hús, to make a bigb seat, dress a bouse for a feast, 175, (hús-búnaðr, hús-búningr, tapestry); búa borð, to dress the table, (bord bunadr, table-service); b. stofu, Fms. iv. 75. búa til veizlu, to make 'boun' (prepare) for a feast, Eg. 38, Fms. vii. 307; b. til seydis, to make the fire 'boun' for cooking, Nj. 199; b. til vetrsetu, to make 'boun' for a winter abode, Fms. x. 42; til-bua, and fyrir-b., to prepare; eg fer héðan að til-b. yðr stað, John xiv. 3; eignizt það ríki sem yor var til-búið frá upphafi veraldar, Matth. xxv. 34. e-t, in mod, use with the notion of packing up, to make into a bundle, of parcels, letters, etc.; hence um-buningr and um-budir, a packing, packing-cover; b. um rum, hvilu, to make a bed; bua um e-n, to make one's bed; var búið um þú Þórodd í seti, ok lögðusk þeir til svefns, Tb.'s bed was made on the benches, and they went to sleep, O. H. 153; skaltú nú sjá hvar vit leggumk nior, ok hversu ek by um okkr (of the dying Njal), Nj. 201; er mér sagt at hann hafi illa um búit, of a dead body, 51; beir höfðu (svá) um sik búit (they had covered themselves so) at þá mátti eigi sjá, 261; kváðu nú Guðrúnu eiga at búa um rauða skör Bolla, said that G. would bave to comb B.'s (her husband's) bloody bead, Ld. 244; bua svå um at aldri mutti vokna, pack it up so that it cannot get wet, Fms. vii. 225; porolife let setja upp skip ok um bua, be bad the ship laid up and fenced it round (for the winter), Eg. 199; b. um andvirki, to fence and thatch bay-ricks, Grag. ii. 335: metaph. to manage, preserve a thing, Fms. ix. 52; aumlega buinn, in a piteous state, Hom. 115. ornament, esp. with metals or artificial work of any kind, of clothes laced with gold; kyrtill hladbuinn, Isl. ii. 434, Nj. 48, Vm. 120: of gloves, B. K. 84: of a belt with stones or artificial work, Fms. xi. 271: of a driffking-horn, D. N. (Fr.); but esp. of a weapon, sword, or the like, enamelled with gold or silver (gull-buinn, silfr-buinn); buin gulli ok silfri. Fms. i. 15; buinn knifr, xi. 271; vapn buit mjök, much ornamented, ii. 255, iv. 77, 130, Eb. 226, 228. β. part., buinn at e-u, or vel buinn, metaph. endowed with, well endowed; at flestum i brottum vel buinn, Nj. 61, Fms. x. 295; at aud vel buinn, wealthy, 410; vel buinn at hreysti ok allri atgörvi, Eg. 82; bezt at viti búinn, Fms. xi. 51. particular use of the part. pass. 'boun,' ready, willing; margir munu bunir at kaupa, ready, willing to buy, Fms. vi. 218; hann kvadsk bess fyrir löngu búinn, Ld. 66, Fms. iii. 123; nefna vátta at þeir eru búnir (ready) at leysa kvið þann af hendi, Grág, i. 54; vóru allir til þess búnir, Fms. xi. 360: compar., engir menn sýna sik búnari (more willing) til liðveizlu, Sturl. i. 103: the allit. phrase, vera boðinn og búinn til e-s, vide bjóða VI: denoting fitted, adapted, ek em gamall, ok lítt b. at (little fit to) hefna sona minna, Nj. 200; bott ek se verr til b. en hann fyrir vanheilsu sakir, Fms. vii. 275; eiga við búið (mod. vera við búinn), to keep oneself ready, to be on one's guard, Bs. i. 537. 2. on the point of doing, about to do so and so; hann var buinn til falls, be was just about to tumble, Fms. x. 314; en áðr þeir kómu var búið til hins mesta váða, ix. 444, v. l. B. neut, buið is used almost adverbially, on the point of, just about to; ok buid vid skipbroti, Isl. ii. 245; buid við váða miklum, Fms. ix. 310; sagði at þá var búit við geig mikinn med beim fedgum, Eg. 158: this is rare and obsolete in mod. usage; and the Icel. now say, liggja við mér lá við að detta, where an old writer would have said, ek var buinn at detta; the sense would else be ambiguous, as búinn, vera búinn, in mod, usage means to bave done; ég er búinn að éta, I bave done eating; vera búinn að e-u (a work, business of any kind), to bave done with it; also absol., eg er buinn, I bave done; thus e.g. vera b. að kaupa, fyrir löngu b., b. at græða, leysa, etc., in mod. sense means to bave done, done long ago; only by adding prepp. við, til (vera við búinn, til búinn) the part, resumes its old sense: on the other hand, buinn in the sense of baving done hardly ever occurs in old writers. y. búð (búið) is even used adverbially = may be, may bappen; with subj. with or without 'at,' bud, svá sé til ætlað, may be, it will come so to bappen, Nj. 114; bud, dragi til bess sem vera vill, 185; buð, eigi fari fjarri því sem þú gazt til, id., Ed. Johns. 508, note c; búð, svá þykki sem ek grípa gulli við þá, 9, note 3; búð, eigi hendi hann slík úgipta annat sinn, 42; búð, ek láta annars víti at varnaði verða, 106; buð, ver þurfim enn hlífanna, Sturl. ii. 137 (vellum MSS.; um ríð, Ed., quite without sense), cp. also Eb. 27 new Ed.: in mod. usage it is freq. to say, það er búið, vel búið, albúið, etc., it is likely, most likely that . . . svá búit, adverbially, and proncd, as if one word, as matters stand, or even temp. at present, as yet; eigi mun hlýða svá búit, i. e. it will not do 'so done,' i. e. something else must be done, Eg. 507; eigi munu pér fá at unnit svá búið, i. e. not as yet, Fms. vii. 270; stendr þar nú svá búit (i. e. unchanged), um hríð, xi. 81; en berjask eigi svo búit, not fight as yet, Nj. 229; segja Evjólfi til svá búins, they tell Eyolf the state of things, viz. that nothing had been done, Gisl. 41; þeir skildu við svá búit; þeir lögðu γ. gene- frá við svá búið, implying 'vain effort,' Germ, 'unverrichteter Sache,' búand-maör, m. = búandi, Grág. i. 479, 480, Fms. v. 77. I. [Engl. bootb; Germ. bude; Dan. bod; not from bua]. a booth, shop; farmanna budir, merchants' booths; setja budir, Eg. 163; hafa budir a landi, Grag. i. 91, the booths in the harbour being but temporary and being removed as soon as the ship went to sea. B. specially used of the temporary abodes in the Icel. parliament, where, as the meeting only lasted two weeks a year, the booths remained empty the rest of the year; hence tjalda (to dress) buoir, viz. during the session for the use of its owner. But every godi (priest) and every family had their own 'booth,' which also took their names from a single man or ruling family, e.g. Allsherjar b., Sturl. ii. 44; Snorra b., 125: b. Škapta, Nj. 220; b. Haflida, Sturl. i. 44: from families or districts, Ölfusinga b., Nj. 181; Möðruvellinga b., 182, 247; Skagfirðinga b., 182; Jöklamanna b., Sturl. ii. 158; Austlirðinga b., 158, 159; Saurbæinga b., 82; Dalamanna b., Nj. 48; Mosfellinga b., 164; Rangæinga b., 48, 180; Ljósvetninga b., 183, 223; Norðlendinga b., 228; Vatnshrdinga b., 248; Vestfirdinga b., Bs. i. 21; Svinfellinga b., Lv. 18; Skarðverja b., Sturl. i. 199, etc.: other names, Byrgis-búð, 31; Grýta, ii. 45; Dilkr, 158; Valhöll, 126; Hlað-búð, 82, Nj. 244; Virkis-búð, 247. As the albing was a public meeting, other booths are also mentioned, e.g. Truða búðir, booths of Jugglers, Troubadours, Grag. ii. 84; Ölbúð, an Ale-booth, beer-shop, Sturl. ii. 125; Sútara búð, a Souter's (cobbler's) booth, Grag. ii. 84; Sverd-skrida b., a Tanner's booth, id.; and Göngumanna búðir, Beggars' booths, a troop of beggars being an appendage to any old feast or public meeting, cp. Gisl. 54-56: the law (Grágas) forbade the sheltering of beggars at the parliament, but in vain; see numherless passages referring to alping or fjórðungsþing, esp. Grág. þ. þ., Nj., Sturl., Gísl. l. c., Korm. S., Kristni S. A short treatise, called 'Catastasis of Booths,' composed about A. D. 1700, is mentioned in Dasent's Burnt Njal; but it is the mere work of a scholar, not founded upon tradition. As buð is opposed to bu, as a temporary abode to a permanent fixed one, so búðsetumaðr (búð-seta), a cottager, is opposed to bóndi; fara budum is to change one's abode, Hkr. ii. 110. γ. in eccl., Tjald-búð is the Tabernacle. II. esp. in compds, i-bud, living in; sam-bud, living together; vás-buð, a cold berth, i.e. wet and cold; hafa harða, kalda búð, to bave a bard, cold abode, Fms. x. 158 (belongs perh. to I.) kalda búð, to bave a bara, cota toota, i ins. k. 150 (change processed proce m. a booth-kettle, Eb. 196. búðar-kvjðr, m. a law term, a sort of verdict given by the inmates of a booth at the parliament, a kind of búakviðr, defined in Grág. ii. 84, 85, where it is laid down that the inmates of the booths of shopkeepers, jugglers, and beggars cannot be summoned to serve on a jury, nor the dwellers in a booth which has not at least five inmates (five being a minimum in a jury). the inmates of a booth, Sturl. i. 32.

Digitized by GOOGIC

Ísl. ii, Hkr. i. 340: at svá búnu, adverbially, as yet, at present: hann booth. Fær. 222. kvaðsk eigi fýsask til Íslands at svá búnu, Nj. 123, Fms. xi. 131; þenna draum segium vér engum manni at svá búnu, this dream we will not tell to anybody as yet, Nj. 212; en at svá búnu tjár ekki, Fas. i. 364. reflex. to 'boun' or 'busk' oneself, make oneself ready, equip oneself; gengu menn há á skip sín, ok bioggusk sem hvatligast, Fris, v. 15; adding the inimitive of a verb as predicate, bjósk hann at fara norðr til Þrándheims, Eg. 18; or ellipt., where búask thus denotes the act itself, nú býsk hann út til Íslands, i. e. be 'busked' bim to go ..., Nj. 10; bjoggusk þeir fóstbræðr í hernað, they went on a free-booting trip, Landn. 31; seg Agli at þeir búísk þaðan finimtán, 94; or adding another verb denoting the act, in the same tense, bjósk Haraldr konungr úr þrándheimi með skipaliði, ok for suor a Mæri, be 'busked' bim ..., and went south, Eg. 7: the journey added in gen., búask ferðar sinnar, Fms. i. 3; búask menn ferða sinna, B. denoting intention, hidden or not put into action; for sa kurr, at Skúli byggisk á land upp, Fms. ix. 483. 2. to prepare for a thing: buask vid bodi, veizlu, etc., Ni, 10, Korm. 10; b. (vel, kristilega) viò dauda sinum, andlati sinu, (eccl.) to prepare for one's death, Fs. 80, Bs. i. 74; buask við vetri, to provide for the winter, get store in, Fms. xi. 415; b. við úfriði, vii. 23. \quad \beta to be on one's guard, take steps to prevent a thing; nú riða hér úvinir þinir at þér; skaltu svá við búask, i.e. be sure of that, make up thy mind, Nj. 264; bustu svá við, skal hann kveða, at ..., Grág. ii. 244. Y. such phrases as, búask um = búa um sik, to make one's own bed, encamp, make oneself comfortable, Nj. 259; tjölduðu búðir ok bjöggusk vel um, 219; var hörð veðrátta, svá at ekki mátti úti um búask, Fms. x. 13, Ld. 348; in the last passage the verb is 3. metaph., b. vid e-u, to expect, freq. in mod. usage; in denonent. phrases, bad er ekki við að búast, it cannot be expected; búast við e-m, β. to intend, think about : eg byst við að to expect a guest, or the like. koma, I bope to come; eg bjóst aldrei við því, I never boped for tbat, it never entered my mind, and in numberless cases. 4. passive (very rare and not classical); um kveldit er matr bjósk = er m. var búinn, Fms. ix. 364. búandi, a, m. = bóndi, q. v.

búand-karl, m. a farmer; b. eðr borpari, Fms. ii. 48, Eg. 49. buand-ligr, adj. yeomanlike, sturdy, stout, Ld. 274.

búðar-nagli, a. m. a booth-peg, Stj. 388, Judges iv. budar-rúm, n. lodging in a booth, Grág. i. 24, ii. 55, Lv. 93. budar-setumaðr, m. = budsetumaðr, Nj. 236. búðar-staðr, m. a booth-stand, N. G. L. i. 342. búðar-sund, n. a passage, lane between two bootbs, Band. 5, Grett. 115. búðar-tópt, f. the walls of a (deserted) booth, without thatch, Rb. 274, Nj. 166, Isl. ii. 194. búðar-veggr, m. the búčar-virki, n. a fortification wall of a booth, Ld. 290, Eg. 724. round a booth, Sturl. ii. 126, cp. Virkisbúð. búðar-vist, f. a lodging in a booth, Lv. 11. búðar-vörðr or búðar-verðr, m. [verðr = cibus], the cooking and stewardship in a vessel, work which the crew was bound to do in turn day by day; cooking and dairy work was thought unworthy to be the sole business of a man, and therefore the sailors were obliged to take it turn about, cp. Eb. 194, 196, 220:-metaph. meat, meal, eigi hafða ek bína veðra . . . mér til búðarvarðar, the rams of thy flock I bave not eaten, Stj. 181. Gen. xxxi. 38; lofa mér at búa þér búðarvörð, 'let me set a morsel of bread before thee,' in the Engl. V., Stj. 493. I Sam. xxviii. 22; ruda til b., to prepare for a meal, Fms. v. 287, viii. 357; honum bótti bar gott til blaut-fisks ok búðarvarðar. Bs. i. 853. D. N. i. 311, ii. 16, Fas. ii. 200.

bú-deigja, u, f. a dairy-maid; cp. deigja; (Norse.)

buo-fastr, adj. living in a booth, Grag. i. 32. bú-drift, f. a drove of cattle, D. N.

búð-seta, u, f. living in a cottage. сомрр: búðsetu-maðr, m. a cottager, answering to 'husmand' in Norway, or búandi bóndi in Icel., Nj. 236, Grág. i. 294; vide bóndi above.

búðu-nautr, m. a fellow inmate of a booth, Grag. i. 34, 35.

bú-evrir, m. value in stock, D. N.

bú-fang, n. domestic necessaries, K. Á. 176.

bu-far, n. bousebold condition, Sturl. i. 216. Bs. i. 477.

bú-fellir, m. a failing of stock, starvation of stock, Bs. i. 743. bú-ferli, n. bousebold, in the phrase, fara búferli, or b. sinu, to move. change one's bousehold and home; Olast for bangad b. sinu, Eg. 138. Fms. iii. 107: esp. live stock, Hallsteinn for hit efra med buferli, Gullb. 12; hafði hann með sér skulda-lið (people, family) ok b. (stock), Eb. 8: but sometimes the word is evidently used masc., an emigrant, mover of one's bousebold, cp. Róm-ferlar; en búserla (v.l. búserlar) eigu utan at fara beir er ómögum sínum megu vörð um veita, Grág. ii. 400.

bú-ferski, n. = búskerfi, Grág. ii. 339 B.

bú-fé, n. live stock, esp. the milch kine, Dipl. v. 28, Grág. i. 414, 427. ii. 301, Jb. 192, Eg. 532. compps: búfjár-eyrir, m. = búeyrir, Grag.
i. 428. búfjár-ferð, f. = búdrift, D. N. búfjár-fóðr, n. food for cattle, Fms. v. 219. búfjár-gangr, m. = búfjárhagi, Grág. i. 435-búfjár-gildr, adj. a being in proper condition, of cattle, D. N. búfjárhagar, m. pl. the pasture fields on an estate, esp. the home-pastures or closes, used daily for the home cattle, and opp. to afréttr, q. v.; hence the phrase in Nj., ríða upp ór b., denoting a pale of about three or four miles, 34; i b., within the pale of the b., Glum. 355, Eb. 54. búfiárhagr, m. the condition of stock, Vapn. 30. búfjár-hald, n. the keeping of stock, Grúg. i. 427. búfjár-lauss, adj. living wit Grúg. i. 294. búfjár-leiga, u, f. the rent of stock, Ghl. 62. bufjar-lauss, adj. living without stock, matr, m. food for cattle, stores of fodder, Fins. x. 400.

bú-félag, n. fellowship in bousekeeping, Fb. ii. 340. 7 $34 bú-færsla, u, f. a removing of one's bousehold, Landn. 207.

bú-gagn, n. bousebold utensils, B. K. 20.

bú-garðr, m. a farm, esp. a big one, Fms. iii. 85, 251, xi. 422.

bú-görð, f. the making a bousehold, Sturl. ii. 21, Bs. i. 658.

bú-hlífð, f. a sparing of provender, Fms. v. 306.

bú-hlutr = búsbúhlutr above.

bú-höldr, m. a thriving bouseholder.

BÚI, a, m. [búa]. I. a dweller, inbabitant, only in compds 25 haug-búi, hellis-búi, berg-búi, a dweller in cairns, caves, rocks, of a gbost or a giant; ein-bui, an anchorite, a bachelor; himin-bui, an inhabitant of beaven, an angel; lands-búi, Lat. incola; ná-búi, a neighbour; í-búi or II. a neighbour = nábúi; inn-bui, incola, Snot 71; stafn-bui, q.v. kom Steinn at máli við Þorbjörn búa sinn, Krók. 36; við Bárðr búi minn, Nj. 203; þau sýndu búum sínum úþokkasvip, Fs. 31; Steinólfr b. hans, Landn. 269; cp. búi-sifjar, búi-graðungr, búi-maðr (below), rare in this 2. hence a law term in the Icel. Commonwealth, a neighbour acting as juror; the law distinguishes between neighbours of place and person; as, vetfangs-buar, neighbours of the place where (e.g.) a manslaughter was committed; or neighbours either of defendant or plaintiff. e. g. heimilis-búar, bome-neighbours, opposed to dómstaðar-búar, Grág. ii. 405, and bingvallar-buar, neighbours of court or parliament: the number of the neighbours summoned was various; in slight cases, such as compensation for damage or the like, they were commonly five -sem buar fimm meta; in cases liable to outlawry they were usually nine, Grág. ii. 345; the verdict of the neighbour is called kviðr, the summoning kvöð, and kveðja búa, to summon neighbours; the cases esp. in the Grágás and Njála are almost numberless. The standing num in a jury). búðar-lið, n. Icel. law phrase 'sem búar meta' reminds one of the English mode búðar-maðr, m. an inmate of a of fixing compensation by jury. According to Konrad Maurer, the jury is of Scandinavian origin, and first appears in English law along with the Normans after the Conquest; but this does not preclude an earlier usage in the Scandinavian parts of England. In the old Dauish law they were called 'nævnd,' in Sweden 'nämd;' cp. csp. Nj. ch. 142 sqq. and Grag. b. b. and Vigslobi. The classical reference for this institution, Grág. i. 167, Kb. ch. 85, is quoted p. 58 s. v. bera B. I. 1. compos: búa-kviðburðr, m. = búakviðr, Grág., Nj. búa-kviðr, m. a verdict of neighbours, opp. to tylptarkviðr, q. v., Nj., Grág. búakvoo, f. a summoning of neighbours, Grag. ii. 52. búa-virðing, f. a fixing compensation by verdict of neighbours, Grug. ii. 343. a pr. name of a man, Jómsv. S.; mod. Dan. 'Boye' or 'Boy,' hence the mod. Icel. Bogi, Feoga-æfi, 27.

búi-griðungr, m. a neigbbour's bull, Vápn. 46. búi-maor, m. a neighbour-man, Sturl. i. 82 C, 167.

bú-jörő, f. a farm, estate.

bú-karl, m. = búandkarl, Fms. v. 186, vi. 139.

bú-kot, n. a cottage, Hkr. iii. 131. BUKR, m. [Hel. bûc = alveus; Germ. bauch], the trunk, body, Eg. 289; esp. the trunk without the head, Nj. 123, Fms. i. 218, Bs. i. 625. bu-lag, n. joint bousekeeping, Sturl. i. 64, 75.

bu-land, n. [Hel. bûland = arvum], bome land, Grág. ii. 315, 324, Jb. 51. bú-lauss, 2dj. baving no 'bú,' opp. to búandi, D. N. ii. 14, Jb. 12. bú-leiga, u, f. rent of a 'bú,' H. E. i. 394.

BULKI, a, m., in mod. spelling bunki, beap [cp. a ship's bunks]; this form occurs in the Hrokkinsk., a MS. of the 15th century, vide the references below; [cp. Engl. bulk, in the naut. phrase, to break bulk or begin to land a cargo]:-the cargo or freight of a ship; the allit. phrase, binda bulka, to bind bulk, sbut the bold, just when the ship is bound for sea, and levsa b., to break bulk, when in harbour; fyrir framan or aptan búlka, the b. was, namely, in the middle of the ship, Fms. vi. 108, 378, 381, N.G.L. i. 340, 371, Eb. 196, Grág. i. 209, Nj. 134, Fms. ix. 145, 468, Bs. i. 422, Fbr. 53. COMPDS: bulka-brun, f. the edge of the b. as it stood out of the ship, Jb. 398, 407, Fbr. 62 new Ed., where a sailor kept the look out, Sturl. iii. 106. bulka-stokkar, m. pl. the bulwark fencing the bulki in the middle of the ship, Edda (Gl.) In mod. usage, bulkast, ad, to be bulky; bulka-legr, adj. bulky.

bú-maor, m. a busbandman; goot, mikill b., a good bousebolder, skilled busbandman, Band. 8, Finnb. 334.

bú-missa, u, f. loss in stock, Gpl. 389.

búnaðr, m., gen. ar, [búa.] I. bousehold, bousekeeping, Bs. i. 76; reisa bunad = reisa bu, Sturl. iii. 106; færa b. sinn = fara buferli, to move one's bousebold, Jb. 288; bunadar-madr = bumadr, O. H. L. 30; Búnaðar-bálkr, the name of the section in the code of law Jb. answering to the Landbrigoa pattr of the Grag., treating of bousebold matters; and in mod. times the name of the very famous poem (of Eggert Olasson), the Icel. 'Georgics' (marked Bb. in this Dict.) II. dress, equipment, = buningr, Skálda 181, Fms. iv. 75, xi. 331; but esp. with the notion of crnaments in gold, silver, tapestry, Nj. 131, Eg. 701 (of a shield); altaris dukr glitaðr með búnaði, Am. 95. β. baggage, luggage, Bjarn. 19. v. a getting 'boun' (ready) for sea; in the naut. term, halda á bunaði sínum, Fms. ii. 254.

bunask, að, dep., in the phrase, e-m b. vel, illa, one bas good, bad, luck in bis business as bondi.

bú-nautn, f., in the phrase, til b., for bousebold use, Vm. 96, D. I. i. 419. buningr, m. [bua], dress, clothing, attire; hvers dags b., every day dress, K. p. K. 140; opp. to spari b., Sunday dress; karlmanns b., a man's dress; kvennmanns b., a woman's dress, etc., Nj. 190. ment, of a ship; reidi ok b., Fms. v. 103: the dressing and arrangement of a table, Bjarn. 27. y. ornaments, laces, Nj. 48, v. l. COMPDS: bunings-bot, f. dress-improvement, a piece of new or smart attire, Ld. 208, Fas. ii. 329. bunings-lauss, adj. without ornament, Pm. 65. bunings-munr, m. difference in apparel, Sturl. ii. 94.

bu-nyt, f. the milk of sheep and cattle, on a farm also more usually called málnyt or málnyta, Jb. 375, Hkr. i. 110.

bû-prestr, m. a curate-farmer, Vm. 59. BÛR, n. [Hel. bûr = babitaculum; A.S. bûr; Engl. bower; Scot. and North. E. byre; Germ. bauer], a word common to all Teut. idioms, and in the most of them denoting a chamber; this sense only occurs a few times in some of the old poems, esp. the Völs, kviður, and even only as an allit. phrase, Brynhildr í búri, Og. 18; björt í búri, Gkv. 2. 1: in prose now and then in translations of foreign romances, El. 22. in Icel. only in the sense of larder, pantry (the North, E. and Scot. byre = cow-stall); this sense is very old, and occurs in Hallfred, Fs. 89, where buri (not bruði) is the right reading, as the rhyme shews-*stæri' ek brag, fyrir 'búri;' skellr nú láss fyrir búrin þeirra Reykdælanna, Bs. i. 512, 601, Ld. 242; defined, bur bat er konur hasa matreiðu i, Grág. i. 459. β. a bouse where stores are kept = úti-bur, Nj. 74; now called skemma. In Icel. a game, in which children try to force open one's closed hand, is called ad fara i bur e-s, to get into one's larder.

bú-rakki, 2, m. a shepherd's dog.

bú-ráð, n. bousebold management, Nj. 51, Grág. i. 333.

bú-rán, n. a law term, a kind of burglary, theft, to the amount of three cows at least, or three cows' value; defined N. G. L. i. 180: metaph. damage, Bs. i. 350.

bur-brot, n. the breaking into a pantry, Sturl.

búr-dyrr, n. pl. a pantry-door, Bs. i. 601.

búr-hilla, u, f. a pantry-sbelf, Glúm. 367. búr-hringr, m. the door ring of a búrhurd, D. N.

búr-hundr, m. a pantry-dog, Fs. 89.

bur-hurð, f. the door of a 'bur,' Gpl. 344.

buri, a, m. and bur-hvalr, m. a sort of whale, physiter macrocephalus Sks. 127 B: for a popular superstition as to this whale v. Isl. þjóðs. i. 629.

bú-risna, u, f. the keeping open-bouse, Sturl. i. 194.

bur-lykill, m. a pantry-key, Sturl. iii. 7. búr-rakki, a, ni. = búrhundr, Ld. 112.

bú-sifjar [qs. búi-sifjar, from búi, a neighbour], f. pl. relation between neighbours; godar b., a good neighbourhood, Karl. 536; the phrase, veita e-m illar, pungar b., to be a bad neighbour, aggressive, Eg. 750, Fms. iii. 222; má vera at þá batni b. okkar, Fs. 31.

bu-skapr, m. bousebold life, state of life as 'bondi,' D.N.; cp. the saying böl er b., hrygð er hjúskapr, illt er einlifi, og að öllu er nokkuð.

bú-skjóla, u, f. a pail for measuring milk, Jb. 375.

bú-skortr, m. the failure of stores, Nj. 18.

bú-skylft, n. adj.; eiga b., to bave an expensive bousebold, Sturl. i. 136. bú-alit, n., in búalita-maor, m. a 'bóndi' without bomestead, Gpl. 330.

bú-slóð, f. cattle and chattels, bousebold gear.

bú-smali, a, m. sheep and cattle, sometimes also including borses; naut ok saudi ok anuan b., Fs. 26; esp. the milch cattle, Ld. 96, where it is opp. to barren cattle, Fms. i. 151; vide smali.

bu-sorg, commonly proned. buk-sorg, f. care for worldly affairs, esp. in a bad sense; thirst for gain.

bú-staor (bostaor, Grag. ii. 222), m. a dwelling, abode, Fs. 31; taka sér b., to fix one's abode, Eg. 127, Landn. 37, 56, Nj. 173.

bú-stjórn, f. management of bousebold affairs, Eb. 204.

bú-stýra, u, f. a female bousekeeper, Gullb. 13, Háv. 39.

bú-sýsla, u, f. bousebold business, Glum. 335, Isl. ii. 68; búsýslumaðr = búmaðr, Eg. 2.

BÚTR, m. a log of wood. búta, ao, to cut logs of wood.

bu-verk, n. dairy work in the morning and evening, milking, churning, and the like, Fs. 72; vinna heima b. með móður sinni (as a taunt), Fas. iii. 595; hence búverka, að, to do the dairy work; búverkatimi, a, m. the time, morning and evening, when dairy work is to be done: in the Grag. i. 147 buverk means generally every kind of bousebold work, but esp. the lower part of it.

bú-begn, m. a busbandman, in allit. phrases, bændr ok b., Fms. i. 33, Sks. 603; illr b., a bad busbandman, Fms. i. 69, where it is used in a morally bad sense; elsewhere a bad bousebolder, vi. 102, Skálda 203.

BYGĐ, f. [búa, byggja]. I. gener. babitation: one's abode, colonisation; Islands b., colonisation of Iceland, 1b. (begin.); Grænlands b., id. 2. residence, abode; var peirra b. ekki vinsæl, Ld. 136; the phrase, fara bygo, or bygouin, to remove one's bouse and bome, change one's abode, Grag. i. 457, Nj. 25, 151; færa b. sina, to remove, Fas. ii. 281; banna, lofa e-m bygð, to forbid or allow one's residence, Grag. l. c.; hitta b. e-s, abode, bome, Band. 10: metaph., Hom. II. inhabited land, opp. to úbygðir, deserts; but also opp. to mountains, wild woods, and the like, where there are no buman dwellings: bygo thus denotes the dwellings and the whole cultivated neighbourbood; thus in old Greenland there was Eystri and Vestri bygo, the Eastern and Western colony, and úbygðir, deserts, viz. the whole Eastern side of this polar land, cp. Landn. 105, Antt. Amer., and Grönl. Hist. Mind. i-iii. In Norway distinction is made between bygðir and sætr, Fms. i. 5. Icel. say, snjór ofan í b., when the mountains are covered with snow, but the lowland, the inhabited shore, and the bottom of the dales are free; i Noregi er litil b. ok po sundrlaus, i. e. Norway is thinly peopled, Fms. iv. 140, viii. 200, 202, 203, Eg. 68, 229, Orku. 8: spec. = county = hérað, í b. þeirri er Heggin heitir, Fms. ix. 232; b. þeirri er Strönd heitir, 358; heima i bygdum, Ghl. 34; miklar bygdir (great inhabited dis-COMPDS: bygoar-fleygr, adj. tricts) voru inn i landit, Fms. i. 226. rumoured through the bygd, Jb. 161. bygoar-folk, n. the people of a bygoar-lag, n. a district, neighbourhood, neighbourhood, Fins. ii. 88. county, Grett. 101 A, Jb. 223, Fs. 50. bygðarlags-maðr, m. a neigbbygoar-land, n. land in possession or to be taken bour, Stj. 197. into possession, Stj. 74. bygoar-leyfi, n. leave to settle, Fs. 31, bygðar-lýðr, m. the people of a land, Valla L. 208, Grág. i. 457. Bs. ii. 80. bygoar-menn, m. pl. id., Fs. 31, Stj. 649, Dipl. v. 19, Fms. i. 226, etc. bygðar-rómr, m. a rumour going about in the 34. bygðar-stefna, u, f. a meeting of the neighbourbood, Krók. 34. neighbourhood, D.N.

bygð-fleygr, bygð-fleyttr, = bygðarfleygr, N. G. L. i. 389.

BYGG, n. [Scot. and North. E. bigg; Swed. bjugg; Dan. byg; Ivar Aasen bygg; derived from byggja]:-barley, a common word over all L Scandinavia, cp. Alm. 33, Edda (Gl.). Stj. 99, Bs, ii. 5, 532. 5; vide barr II,

Digitized by GOOGIC

lest in

bygo.

bygg-braud, n. barley-bread, 655 xxi. 4. bygg-hjálmr, m. a barley-rick, Magn. 516. bygg-hlaða, u, f. a barley-barn, Stj. 344. bygg-hleifr, m. a barley-loaf, Sti. 303, Rb. 82.

bygg-hús, n. a barley-barn, Orkn. 196.

byggi or byggvi, m. an inbabitant, obsolete, but in compds as Eyrbyggjar, stafn-byggjar, fram-byggjar, aptr-byggjar, etc.

byggi-ligr, adi. babitable, Hkr. i. 108.

bygging, f. babitation, colonisation, Landn. 24, v.1., Stj. 176. tenancy, letting out land for rent, H.E. i. 495: in compds, byggingarbref, b. skilmali, an agreement between tenant and landlord. ings or bouses, Matth. xxiv. I; scarcely occurs in old writers in this sense; cp. Dan. bygning, Scot. and North. E. biggin, = building.

BYGGJA, older form byggva, d, [for the etymology v. búa], gener. to inbabit, settle, people, always in a transitive sense-not neut, as buabut often used absol. or ellipt., land being understood: a. to settle as a colonist; Hrollaugr bygði austr á Síðu, Ketilbjörn bygði suðr at Mosfelli, Audr bygði vestr í Breiðafirði, Helgi bygði norðr í Eyjafirði, all these instances referring to the first settlers of Icel., 1b. ch. 1, 2; en þat vas es hann tók byggva landit, id.; sumar þat er þeir Ingólfr foru at b. Island, the summer before Ingolf settled in Iceland, ch. 6; Ingolfr . . . bygði fyrstr landit, i. e. Ingolf was the first settler, id.; so in numberless instances, esp. of the 1b. and Landn., e.g. Landn. 42, 334, Eb. 8, Hrafn. 4, Eg. 99, 100; eptir Nóa-flóð lifðu átta menn beir er heiminn bygdu (peopled), Edda (pref.) B. to inbabit, live in a country; pesskonar þjóð es Vínland hefir bygt, Ib. ch. 6; þá er landit hafði sex tigi vetra bygt verit, Landn. 321; þeir b. þat hérað á Vindlandi er Ré heitir, Fms. xi. 378, H.E. i. 494, Bret. 100: allit. phrases, á bygðu bóli, i. c. among men, where men live: bygðr ból-staðr, possessed land, Grúg. ii. 214: the proverb, með lögum skal land byggja, with laws shall man build land, i.e. law builds (makes) lands and bome; and some add, en með ólögum eyða; eyða (to lay waste) and byggja are thus opposed to one another, Nj. 106; b. bæ, to settle on a farm; segi ek af því fyrst hversu bærinn hefir bygzk í Skálaholti... Ketilbjörn bygði þann bæ fyrstr er í Skálaholti heitir, Bs. i. 60; hann bygði bæ þann er í Eyju heitir, Gísl. 91, where it does not mean to build bouses, as in the mod. use of this phrase, but to settle, Lat. inbabiy. in more special or law phrases, to dwell in, occupy; b. sæng, to keep one's bed, sleep, Fas. i. 314; b. eina sæng, of married people, Fms. ii. 134; b. med e-m, to cobabit, Stj. 176; b. holl, to occupy a ball, Fms. vi. 147, x. 236; b. á skipum, undir tjöldum, to live aboard ship, in tents, vii. 138; b. hálfrými, a naut. term, viii. 199: metaph., ef Guð byggvir í peim, Eluc. 52, cp. also the references from the N. T. above under bua, where most of the Icel. Edd. use byggja. 2. to build a house, ship, or the like, [Scot. and North. E. to big; Dan. bygge; Swed. bygga]: this sense, common over all Scandinavia and North Britain, seems not to occur in Icel. writers before the 15th century or the end of the 14th, but is freq. at the present time; it occurs in the Ann. 1401, 1405, etc. Old writers always say, reisa or göra hús, skip . . ., not byggja. reflex. to be inhabited; Island bygðisk fyrst ór Noregi, 1b. ch. 1; Grænland fansk ok bygðisk af Íslandi, ch. 6; hundraði ára fyrr en Ísland bygðisk af Norðmönnum, Landn. (pref.); en áðr Ísland bygðisk, id.; bå er Island fansk ok bygðisk af Noregi, id. II. [Goth. bugjan, by which Ulf. renders ἀγοράζειν, and once πωλείν, which is elsewhere rendered by frabugian; A.S. bycgean; Engl. buy; Hel. buggean]:-to let out, esp. land or cottage; konungr má b. almenning hverjum sem hann vill, Gpl. 453; ef umbodsmadr konungs byggir jardar (acc.) konungs ... því at svá skal konungs jarðir b. sem um aðrar jarðir skill í lögum, 336; nú byggir maðr dýrra (lets out at a higher rent) en vandi hefir á verit, 337; İngimundr bygði þeim Hrolleifi bæinn í Ási, Fs. 34; er þeir bygðu lönd sín eðr tóku sér hjú, Grág, i, 445; hann tók mikit af landnámi Una, ok bygði þat (parcelled it out) frændum sínum, Landn. 244; byggja e-m út, to expel a tenant; b. e-m inn, to settle a tenant on one's 2. more properly, to lend money at interest; bat er ok ef menn b. dautt fé, eðr krefja framar af þeim hlutum er menn ljá, en innstæða, K. Á. 204; engi skal b. dautt fé á leigu, Bs. i. 684; um okr, er menn b. dautt fé, H. E. i. 459; Rútr . . . bygði allt féit, R. put all the money out at interest, Nj. 11. 3. the peculiar eccl. law phrase of the forbidden degrees; b. sifjar, frændsemi, to marry into such or such degree; this phrase may refer to buying (cp. brudkaup), or to cobabitation; þat er nýmæli, at jafn-náit skal b. sifjar ok frændsemi at fimta manni hvárt, i. e. intermarriage in the fifth degree is allowed, according to the decision of the council of Lateran, A. D. 1215, Grag. i. 304; frændsemi er eigi byggjandi, i.e. is forbidden, 307, 308, 321, N.G.L. i. 350; en þat var bannat með Ásum at b. svá náit at frændsemi, Hkr. Yngl. III. part. as subst.

bygg-mjöl, n. barley-meal, Gbl. 100. byggning = bygging, D. N. (freq.), Fr.

bygg-ваб, n. barley-seed, N. G. L. i. 385.

byggvandi, byggjandi, pl. byggendr, byggvendr, inbabitants, mostly in poetry, Stj. 399, Haustl. 10.

byggvi-ligr = byggiligr.

bygill, m. [Germ. bügel], a stirrup, Gbl. 359.

bygsla, u, f. = bygging, D. N.

BYLGJA, u, f. [cp. Dan. bölge, Swed. bölja, akin to bólginn, belgy]. a billow, Stj. 27, Fs. 142, etc.

bylja, buldi, pres. bylr, old byll, to resound, roar, of a gale; byll i öllum fjöllum, Al. 35; buldi í hömrunum, Fas. i. 425; freq. in mod. use. byljóttr, adj. gusty, Bs. i. 138.

BYLR, m. pl. bylir, gen. sing. byljar or rarely byls, a squall, gust of wind; kom b. á húsit, Gísl. 22; þá er bylirnir kómu, when the squails passed over, Fms. viii. 52.

bylta, u, f. a beavy fall, Grond. 147; bylting, f. a revolution; and bylta, t, with dat. to overtbrow.

byrða, ð, I. [borði], to embroider, Gkv. 2. 16. [bord], to board, in compds = si-byrda, inn-byrda, to pull on board; bykkbvrt, Fms. viii. 139.

byroa, u, f. a large trough, Stj. MS. 127, Ed. 178 reads brydjum. N. G. L. i. 255, B. K. 52.

byrði, n. the board, i. e. side, of a ship, Edda (Gl.), Jb. 147. byroingr, m. [old Dan. byrthing, from byror], a ship of burthen. merchant-ship, Eg. 53, Nj. 281, Fær. 12, 195, 196, Fms. iv. 255, vii. 283, 286, 310, viii. 208, 274, 372, ix. 18, 44, 46, 299, 470, x. 25, xi. 430, etc.; this is the genuine Scandin, word, wilst kjóll, kuggr, karfi (q. v.) are all of foreign origin. compos: byroings-maor, m. a merchantseaman, Fær. 4, Fms. ix. 18. byrðings-segl, n. the sail of a byrdingr, Fms. iv. 259.

byror (mod. byroi), f., gen. ar, pl. ar, mod. ir, [bera A. 1]:—a burtben, Nj. 19, Edda 74, Fas. ii. 514, Fms. v. 22, vi. 153, Fb. i. 74; hver cinn mun sina byrði bera, Gal. vi. 5. β. metaph. a burthen, task, Fms. ix. 330; hafi sá þá byrði er hann bindr sér sjálfum, 671. 1.

byrgi, n. [borg; A.S. byrgen = sepulcrum], an enclosure, fence, Eb. 132; helvitis byrgi, the gates of bell, Stj. 420, Post. 656 C. 6: metaph., COMPDS: byrgis-kona, u, b. hugar = hugborg, the breast, Hom. 148. f. a concubine, N.G.L. i. 327 (where spelt birg-), Bs. i. 663. skapr, m. concubinatus, Fms. iii. 145.

byrging, f. a sbutting up, Grag. ii. 110.

byrgja, d, [borg; cp. A. S. byrgjan, byrian; Engl. to bury]:—to close. sbut; b. dyrr eðr vindaugu, Grag. ii. 286; byrgja hús, Grett. 91 new Ed.; Hallfredr byrgdi húsit, Fms. ii. 83; b. sinn munn, to sbut one's mouth. Bs. i. 786; i byrgðum kviði sinnar móður, 655 xxvii. 10: metaph., byrgð syndum, overwhelmed with sins, Greg. 41. 2. adding prepp. aptr, inn, to shut; Grettir byrgði aptr húsit, Grett. l. c. MS. A; b. aptr gard, to sbut a fence, Grag. ii. 283; b. aptr hlid a gardi, id., Jb. 242; h. mann inni í húsum, to sbut a man up in a bouse, Grág. ii. 110, Sks. 140; hvárki byrgor né bundinn, 656 C. 32. 3. metaph. to bide, veil, of the face of God, the sun, or the like; sólin því ljóma sinn fékk byrgt, Pass. 44. 1; himna-ljósið var honum byrgt, 3. 2; byrg þig eigi fyrir minni grátheiðni Ps lv 2. 4. the phrase, b. e-n inni, to sbut one in, outwit; alla menn byrgir þú inni fyrir vitsmuna sakir, Fms. x. 247, xi. 31; b. e-n úti, to leave one outside in the cold, and metaph. to prevent, preclude; b. úti váða, to prevent misbap, x. 418, Sks. 44, Mar. 656 A. 18; byrg úti hræðsluna, Al. 25. 5. reflex., Fas. ii. 281. II. [borga], reflex. byrgjask, to be answerable for, vide ábyrgjask.

-byrja in compd úbyrja. BYRJA, að, [Swed. börja; lost in Dan., which has replaced it by begynde; Germ. beginnen; and probably also extinct in the mod. Norse dialects, vide Ivar Aasen, who seems not to have heard the word; it is in full use in Icel. and is a purely Scandin. word; the root is the part. pass. of bera A. II]:-to begin. I. in the phrase, b. mal e-s, to plead one's cause, O. H. L. 5; ek skal byrja (support) bitt mál, sem ek kann, Fs. 10. Fms. ii. 65; hann byrjaði hennar mál við Ólaf konung, x. 310; með einum hundraðs-höfðingja þeim er byrjaði mál hans, Post. 645. 96; heit bu fram byrjat bitt erindi, 655 xxx. 13, Al. 159: this sense, however, is rare and obsolete. II. to begin; b. fcro, to begin one's journey, to start, Edda I, Fms. iv. 232, Eg. 106, Ld. 162; b. ræðu, to begin a speech. Sks. 238; b. e-t upp, to begin, Bs. i. 825: reflex., Rb. 210: the word is not very freq. in old writers, who prefer the word hefja, incipere, hence upphaf, beginning; in mod. writers hefja is rather archaic, but byrja in full use, and is used both as act., impers., and reflex.; Icel. say, sagan byrjar, suguna byrjar, and sagan byrjast, all in the same sense. III. [bera A. II]. mostly in pass. to be begotten, Lat. suscipi; Elias af hjúskap byrjaðr, Greg. 16; á þeim mánuðum er barn var byrjað, Grág. i. 340; á þeirri sömu nótt sem hann byrjaðisk, Stj. 176; sem þau hittusk á fjallinu Brynhildrok Sigurðr ok hon (viz. the daughter Áslaug) var byrjuð, Fas. i. 257; heldr ertu bráðr að byrja þann er bein hefir engin, 250 (in a verse). 1. [bera C. III], to behove, beseem, be due; sem impers. with dat.: konungs-syni byrjar, Fms. i. 81; hann gefr sálu várri slíkan mátt sem henni byrjar, Hom. 157; svá byrjaði (behoved) Christo að líða, Luke xxiv. 46; þat byrjar mér meir at hlýða Guði en mönnum, 623. II; sem aðiljanum byrjaði, Grág. i. 394; sem þeim byrjaði at manntali, i.e. in due proportion to their number, ii. 381; sem byrjar (as it behoves) hlydnum syni ok eptirlátum, Sks. 12; er helzt byrjar kaupmönnum at hafa, 52. [byrr], the phrase, e-m byrjar vel, illa, one gets a fair, foul, wind; beim byrjaði vel, Eg. 69; honum byrjaði vel, 78, Eb. 8; byrjaði þeim vel um haustið, Fms. iv. 293; þeim byrjaði illa, Eg. 158.

Digitized by GOGIC

byrjun, f. beginning.

byrla, ad, [A. S. byreljan and byrljan; whence the word is probably borrowed]:-to wait upon, with dat., esp. to band the ale at a banquet, (answering to bera öl, Fs. 121); stóð þar upp Snjófríð dóttir Svása, ok byrlaði ker mjaðar fullt konungi, Fms. x. 379, Hkr. i. 102; hann setti annan mann til at b. sér, Post. 656 C. 32: metaph., hann byrlar optliga eitr sinnar slægðar mannkyninu, Fms. ii. 137: to fill the cup, síðan byrlar hann i hornin, Fas. ii. 550: in mod. use, to mix a beverage, esp. in bad sense, by putting poison in it.

byrlari, 2, m. [A. S. byrele], a cup-bearer, Fms. i. 291.

byr-leiði, n. a favourable course, Fms. x. 291, Sks. 175.

byr-léttr, adj. gently blowing, Hkr. ii. 143 byr-leysa, u, f. lack of fair wind, or a foul wind, Ann. 1392.

byrli, a, m. = byrlari, Fms. x. 302.

byr-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), promising a fair wind; bví at ekki et byrligt, Sd. 174, in the phrase, blasa byrlega, to blow fair for one; ekki b. draumr, a bad dream, Fas. i. 14.

byr-litill, adj. of a light (but fair) breeze, Fms. iv. 297.

BYRR, gen. byrjar, nom. pl. byrir, acc. byri: [Swed.-Dan. bör; cp. usage of Gr. ouplos]:—a fair wind; it is freq. used in pl., esp. in the impers. phrase, e-m gefr vel byri (acc. pl.), one gets a fair wind, rarely, and less correct, byr (acc. sing.), Nj. 10, Vápn. 9, but sing. Nj. 4, Eg. 98; byri geft hann brögnum, Hdl. 3; með hinum beztum byrjum, Bs. i. 81; bida byrjar, Fms. i. 131; liggja til byrjar, to lie by for a fair wind, Eg. 183; byrr rennt á, a fair breeze begins to blow; þá rann á byrt ok sigldu þeir, Nj. 135, Eg. 158; þá féll byrrinn, Eb. 8; þá tók byrr at vaxa, Eg. 390: allit. naut. phrases, blasandi byrr, blíðr byrr, beggja skauta byrr; hagstæðr byrr, fagr byrr, hægr, óðr byrr, Hm. 89; hraðbyri, etc.: also metaph., hafa góðan, mikinn, lítinn byrr, to be well, much, little favoured: in poetry in many compds, byrjar drosull, the borse of the wind, a ship; byr-skib, byr-rann, a ship; byrr always denotes the wind byrjar-gol, n. a fair breeze, Fms. ix. 21. on the sea.

byrsta, t, [bursti], to furnish with bristles or spikes, Sks. 418; gulli byrstr, F25. i. 184. 2. metaph. the phrase, b. sik or byrstask, to raise the bristles, to shew anger, Fms. ii. 174, Finnb. 248, Pass. 26. 1.

byr-sæll, adj. baving good luck, fair wind, Fms. x. 314. byr-vænligr, byrvænn, adj. promising a fair wind, Orkn. 332, Fms. ii. 5.

BYSJA. [Dan. buse; Swed. busa = to gusb], to gusb, a defect. verb, occurs only twice or thrice, viz. in pres. sing. byss, O. H. (in a verse), busti (pret. sing.), gusbed, of blood, Hkv. 2.8; of tears, Edda (append.) 217: the infin. never occurs, and the word is never used in prose.

byssa, u, f. [Lat. pyxis], a box, Vm. 117, D. N.: mod. a gun (Germ. büchse). bytna, 20. [botn], to come to the bottom, Krók. 20 new Ed.: metaph.,

b. a e-m, to tell on or against one.

BYTTA, u, f. [Dan. bötte], a pail, small tub, K. b. K. 82, Stj. 444. Fins. x. 54, Jm. 29, N. G. L. i. 327: of the bucket for baling a ship with, Fbr. 131, Grett. 95; hence byttu-austr, the old mode of pumping is defined, Fbr. and Grett. I. c.

byxa, t, to box, Bev. Fr.; byxing, f. boxing, Finnb. 344 (Engl. word). BÝ, n. [Lat. apis; the Goth. word is not on record; A.S. beo; Engl. bee; O. H. G. pia; Germ. biene, and older form beie, Grimm i. 1367; Swed.-Dan. bi]:-a bee; the spelling in Icel. with \(\vec{y} \) is fixed by long usage, and by a rhyme in the Höfuðl., Jöfurr sveigði ý | flugu unda bý, where ý (a bow) and by (bees) rhyme; because perhaps an etymology from bu floated before the mind, from the social habits of bees, Barl. 86; the simple by is quite obsolete in Icel, which only uses the compd, bý-fluga, u, f. a 'bee-fly,' bee, Edda 12, Stj. 91, 210, etc.; bý-flygi, n. id., Bs. i. 210, Stj. 411.

byfur, f. pl. the feet, with a notion of awkwardness; rétta byfur, to stretch the legs out in an awkward manner; bar la Kolfinnr son hennar, ok rétti byfur hölzti langar, Isl. ii. 416: the passage Od. ix. 298τανυσσάμενος δια μήλων-Egilsson in his rhymed translation renders graphically, ok meðal búfjár býfur rétti.

byli, n. [ból], an abode, mostly in compds, á-byli, etc.

býll, adj. [ból], living, in compds, ár-býll, harð-býll, þung-býll.

bý-akip, n. the ship of the bees, the air, sky, poët., Höfuðl. 17 (dub.) BYSN, n. [cp. A. S. bysen, bisen, which means example, whilst the lcel, word means] a wonder, a strange and portentous thing; commonly used in pl., urðu hverskonar býsn, 625. 42; þar sem þessi býsn (acc. pl.) bar syrir, Fms, xi. 13; þetta eru stór bysn, 64; slíkt eru banvæn bysn, Fas. iii. 13 (in a verse); sing., Fms. xi. 10, 64: in mod. use fem. sing., Fb. i. 212, Pr. 76, 91; bysna-vedr, portentous weather, Fms. iii. 137; bysnavetr, a winter of portents, when many ghosts and goblins were about, Bs., Sturl. i. 115: bysna-sumar, in the same sense, Ann. 1203. In mod. use

2. Germ. ziemlich; bysna-vel, b. goor, langr, fljotr, pretty well, pretty good, etc.: in early writers the sense is much stronger.

býsna, að, to portend, bode; betta býsnar tjón ok sorg, Karl. 402; the proverb, býsna skal til batnadar, i.e. things must be worse before they are better, Old Engl. 'when bale is highest, bote is nighest,' Fms. v. 199, (spelt bisna, O. H. L.); er býsna skal at betr verði, x. 261.

byta, tt, [butr], to deal out, give, with dat. of the thing; bytti Hrafn siltrinu, Fas. iii. 256: esp. byta út, or út byta, to give alms, Hebr. xiii. 16, Gal. vi. 6. B. to exchange, Dan. bytte; byttum við jörðum okkar. Dipl. i. 12, H. E. i. 561.

býti, n. exchange, barter, Krók. 65; býting, f. spending, Ann. 1408. BÆDI, [v. baðir, where in p. 54, col. 2, l. 7, the words 'rarely Norse' should be struck out], used adverbially, both, Scot. 'baith,' with conjunctions connecting two parts of a sentence: a. bæði ... ok, botb ... and; bæði vitr ok framgjarn, both wise and bold, Nj. 6; b. blar ok digr, Fms. vii. 162; vitandi bæði gott ok illt, knowing both good and evil, Stj. 145. Gen. iii. 5; b. fyrir sina hönd ok annarra, Bs. i. 129; b. at viti ok at öðru, 127; b. at lærdómi, vitrleik, ok atgörvi, in learning, wisdom, and accomplishments, 130 (where the subdivision after bædi is triple); b. lond ok kvikfé, Ísl. ii. 61; mun nú vera rofit bæði búlkinn ok annat, Fms. vi. 381; bæði var at hann kunni betr en flestir menn aðrir, ok hafði betri færi å..., Bs. i. 129; sometimes in inverse order, ok... bæði; hér og å himnum bæði, Pass. 24. 7; fagrt ok fátitt b., Hom. 117; undruðu ok hörmuðu b., 120. B. bæði...enda, where the latter part of the sentence, beginning with 'enda,' is of a somewhat disjunctive character, and can scarcely be literally rendered into English; it may denote irony or displeasure or the like, e. g. það er b. hann er vitr, enda veit hann af því, i. e. be is clever, no doubt, and knows it; b. er nú, jarl, at ek á yör margan sóma at launa, enda vili þér nú hafa mik í hina mestu hættu, if is true enough, my lord, that I have received many good things from you, but now you put me in the greatest danger, i. e. you seem to intend to make me pay for it, Fb. i. 193: or it denotes that the one part of a sentence follows as a matter of course from the other, or gives the hidden reason; b. mundi vera at engi mundi þora at etja, enda mundi engi hafa hest svá gódan, i.e. no one would dare to charge him, as there would hardly be any who had so good a borse, Nj. 89.

begi-fotr, m. [bágr], 'lame-foot,' a cognom., Eb.; Egilsson renders άμφιγυήειε (Od. viii. 349) by bægi-fótr.

beging, f. thwarting, Finnb. 344.

bæginn, adj. cross-grained, Fms. iii. 95; bægni, f. peevisbness; orð-bæginn, q. v.; mein-bæginn, pettisb.

bægja, 8, (an old pret. bagði, Haustl. 18), [bágr], with dat. to make one give way, push one back; troll-konan bægir honum til fjallsins, Bs. i. 464: b. skipi or lægi, to push the ship from her moorings, Fins. vii. 114; b. vist sinni, to change one's abode, remove, Eb. 252; peim bægði veðr, of foul wind, Eg. 245; honum bægði veðr, ok bar hann til eyja beirra er Syllingar heita, the weather drove him from his course, and he was carried to the islands called Scilly, Fms. i. 145. β. absol. to binder; ef eigi b. nauðsynjar, Grág. i. 446. 2. metaph. to treat barshly, oppress 3. reflex, with the prep. við; b. við e-n, to quarrel; one, Bs. i. 550. þá vill hann eigi við þá bægjask, Ld. 56; þá var við enga at bægjask (none to dispute against) nema i móti Guðs vilja væri, Bs. i. 128. bægjask til e-s, to contend about a thing, but with the notion of unfair play; betra er at vægjask til virðingar en b. til stór-vandræða, Fms. vii. 25. Y. impers., bægðisk honum svá við, at ..., things went so crookedly for him, that ..., Grett. MS.

bæki, v. beyki; bæki-skógr, m. a beech-wood, Fms. xi. 224. bæklingr, m. [bók]. a 'bookling,' little book, Lat. libellus, Bs. i. 59. I. [bal], to burn = bræla, in the allit. phrase brenna ok b., bæla, d, 671. 4, Fms. iv. 142, vi. 176; vide bræla, Fas. i. 4. II. [ból]. 10 pen sbeep and cattle during the night; reflex., dýr bælask í þeim stöðum, Greg. 68.

Gbl. 452. arnar-bæli, an eyry, a freq. local name of farms in Icel., Landn.; drekabæli, orms-bæli, a dragon's lair, serpent's den, Edda; even used of the lair of an outlaw, Grett. 132 (Grettis-bæli), Ld. 250.

BÆN and bón, f. [biðja], prayer, request, boon; these two words are nearly identical in form, and sometimes used indiscriminately as to sense: but in most cases they are different, bæn having a deeper sense, prayer, bón, request, boon; we may say biðja e-n bónar, and biðja e-n bænar, but the sense is different; only bæn can be used of prayer to God; göra e-t at bæn e-s, Fs. 38; er sú bæn allra vár, at . . ., we all beg, that . . ., Eg. 28; skaltú veita mér bæn þá er ek mun biðja þik, Nj. 26; fella bæn at e-m, to pray one earnestly, Isl. ii. 305. β. prayer to God, often in plur.; vera á bænum, to be at prayers; hon var löngum um nætr at kirkju á bænum sínum, Ld. 328; hann hellir út bænir fyrir dómstól Krists, Hom. 13, 156; bæn ok ölmusugjafir, Bs. i. 370, Pass. 4. 22, 44. 17: the phrase, vera e-m goot (illr) bæna (gen. pl.), to turn the ear (or a deaf ear) to one's prayers, Hom. (St.) 95; ver mér nú svá bæna, sem þú vilt at Guð sé þér á dómsbysna- is prefixed to a great many words in the sense of pretty, tolerably, degi, Orkn. 174; Drottinleg bæn, the Lord's Prayer; kveld-bæn, evening prayer; morgun-bæn, morning prayer; lesa bænir sínar, to say one's prayers, etc. compds: bæna-fullting, f. support of prayers, Fms. vi. 114. bæna-hald, n. a bolding of prayers, Landn. 111, Gpl. 41; bænahaldsmaðr, a man wbo prays to God, a religious man, Bs. i. 42. Hom. 154. bæna-hús, n. a chapel, Grág. i. 459, Bs. i. 646; b. tollr, 647: a bouse of prayer, Matth. xxi. 13. bæna-staðr, m. entreaty, intercession, prayer; þat er b. minn til allrar alþýðu, Nj. 189; ck ætlaða, at þér munduð láta standa minn b. um einn mann, Fms. vi. 101; göra e-t fyrir bænastað e-s, to do a tbing because of one's intercession or prayer, Lv. 13: supplication, Bs. i. 740; með beztu manna ráði ok b., Gpl. 13. bænar-bréf, n. a letter of entreaty, Ann. 1330; bónar-bréf, 1392. orð, n. pl. prayers, entreaties, Fs. 10, Fms. ii. 235, Sks. 515.

Digitized by GOOGIC

bæna, d, to pray, entreat one; bændi hann til at hann skyldi, Fms. x. 387; prestr sú er bændr er, requested, K. p. K. 8, 40; því ætla ek at senda hann til keisarans sem hann bændi (asked) sjálfr, Post. 645. 98, cp. Acts xxv. 25; grút-bæna, to pray 'greeting,' i. e. with tears.
(in mod. use) to cover the face with the bands in prayer.

ben-heyra, d, esp. thcol. to bear one's prayer, N. T. ben-hus = benahus, Pm. 41, Dipl. iii. 2, iv. 9, Vm. 78. ben-rækinn, adj. diligent in prayer, Hkr. ii. 191.

BÆR, bœr, or býr, gen. bæjar or býjar; gen. biar also occurs, esp. in Norse MSS, of the 14th century, Fb., but is rare and unclassical; pl. -ir, gen. -ja, dat. -jum. In Icel. people say bær; in Norway bö; in Swed. and Dan. (always with y) by; the root word being bua, bu: this word is very freq. in local names of towns and villages throughout the whole of Scandinavia; and wherever the Scandinavian tribes settled the name by or bo went along with them. In the map of Northern England the use of this word marks out the limits and extent of the Norse immigration, e. g. the name Kirkby or Kirby; about twenty or thirty such are found in English maps of the Northern and Midland Counties, denoting churches built by the Norse or Danish settlers, as Whitby, Grimsby, etc., cp. Kirkjubær in Icel. In Deumark and Sweden local names ending in -by are almost numberless. I. a town, village, this is the Norse, Swed., and Dan. notion; þeir brenna býi at köldum kolum, Fms. xi. 122; til bæjarins (of Nidarós), vii. 30; of Bergen, viii. 360, 438; Tunsberg, ix. 361; of the town residence of the earl of Orkney, Nj. 267: allit., borgir ok bæi, castles and towns, Ann. 1349, etc. etc.; bæjar-biskup, a town-bisbop, Fms. vii. 32; bæjar-prestr, a townpriest, D. N.; bæjar-lögmaðr, a town-justice, id.; bæjar-lýðr, bæjar-lið, bæjar-menn, town's-people, Fms. viii. 38, 160, 210, Eg. 240, Bs. i. 78; bæjar-brenna, the burning of a town, Fms. x. 30; bæjar-bygð, a town-district, viii. 247; bæjar-gjald, a town-rate, N.G.L. i. 328; bæjar-sýsla, a townoffice, Fms. vi. 109; bæjar-starf, id., Hkr. iii. 441; bæjar-seta, dwelling in town, Ld. 73, Isl. ii. 392. II. a farm, landed estate, this is the Icel. notion, as that country has no towns; bær in Icel. answers to the Germ. 'hof,' Norweg. 'ból,' Dan. 'gaard,' denoting a farm, or farmyard and buildings, or both together; hence the phrase, reisa, göra, setja bæ, esna til bæjar, to build the farmstead, Eb. 10, 26, 254, Ld. 96, 98, Fs. 26, Landn. 126, 127, Eg. 131, Gisl. 8, 28, Bs. i. 26, porst. hv. 35; byggja bæ, Bs. i. 60; the phrase, bær heitir..., a farm is called so and so, Isl. ii. 322, 323, 325, Ann. 1300, Hrafn. 22, Dropl. 5; the allit. phrase, búa á bæ..., þorst. hv. 37; the passages are numberless, and 'bær' has almost become synonymous with 'house and home;' and as it specially means 'the farm-buildings,' Icel. also say innan-bæjar, in-doors; utan-bæjar, out-of-doors; i bæ, within doors; milli bæjar ok stöðuls, K. p. K. 78; milli bæja; bæ frá bæ, from bouse to bouse; á bæ og af bæ, at home and abroad: things belonging to a bær, bæjar-dyr, the doors of the houses, the chief entrance; bæjar-hurð (janua); bæjar-veggr, the wall of the bouses; bæjar-bust, the gable of the bouses; bæjar-lækr, the home-spring, well; bæjar-hlad, the premises; bæjar-stett, the pavement in the front of the bouses; bæjar-leið, a furlong, a short distance as between two 'bæir; bæjar-sund, passage between the bouses; bæjar-hús, the home-stead, opp.

bæ, God be in this bouse, a form of greeting, cp. Luke x. 5; bæjar-bragr, the customs or life in a bouse; nema börn hvað á bæ er titt (a proverb). bæra, ð, [bera, báru], to move, stir, esp. reflex. to stir a limb, Bb. 3. 31; enginn sá hans varir bærast, no one saw bis lips move.

to fjár-hús, etc., where cattle is kept, or barns and the like; fram-bær, the front part of the bouses; torf-bær, timbr-bær, a 'bær' built of turf or timber: phrases denoting the 'bær' as hearth and home, hér sé Guð í beri-ligr, adj. fit, seemly, Stj. 141.

bærr, adj. due, entitled to, cp. Germ. gebührend; the proverh, b. er hverr at råda sinu, every one has a right to dispose of his own property, 1sl. ii. 145; vera b. at dæma um e-t, to be a fit judge in a matter (a proverh); unbecoming, Ýt. 11.

bessa, t, [búss], = bása, to drive cattle into stall, Gísl. 20; the saying, fyrr á gömlum uxanum at b. en kálfinum, Fms. vi. 28.

bessingr, m., prop. one born in a bass (q.v.); hence, as a law term, the child of an outlawed mother; pat barn er ok eigi arfgengt (that child is also not entitled to inheritance), er sú kona getr er sek er orðin skógarmaðr, þó-at hon geti við bónda sínum úsekjum, ok heitir sá maðr bæsingr, Grág. i. 178. Is not the name Bastard, which first occurs as the sur-prayer; morgun-bæn, morning prayer; lesa bænir sínar, to say one's prayers, name of the Conqueror, simply a Norman corruption of this Scandin. law etc. compos: bæna-fullting, f. support of prayers, Fms. vi. 114. bæna-hald, n. a bolding of prayers, Landn. 111, Gpl. 41; bænahalds- poët, the name of a sword, Edda (Gl.)

BÆTA, tt, [bót; Ulf. bôtjan = ἀφελείν; Hel. bôtian; A.S. bêtan; O. H. G. bôzan; Germ. büssen]:-to better, improve, amend, also to restore, repair, Nj. 163, Ghl. 411; b. aptr, to restore, Grag. ii. 336; b. upp, to restore, atone for, Fins. ix. 43; b. at e-u, to repair, 367; bæta rúð sitt, to better one's condition, to marry, Nj. 2: theol. to better one's life: Guð bætti honum af þessi sótt, God restored bim to health, Fms. ix. 391; with gen, of the sickness, O. H. L. 84. β. to mend, put a patch on a 2. reflex., e-m bætisk, one gets better, is restored to garment. bealth; at födur hans bættisk helstrid, Landn. 146: absol., bættisk honum begar, be got better at once, Bs. i. 318, 319, 325: with gen., bættisk Búa augna-verkjarins, Ísl. ii. 428 (rare); cp. heilsu-bót, recovery II. a law term, to pay weregild, the person slain of bealth. in acc., the money in dat.; Hrafnkell bætti engan mann fé, i. e. H. paid no weregild whomsoever be slew, Hrasn. 4; ek vil engan mann sé b., 9; Styrr vá mörg víg, en bætti engin (viz. víg), S. slew many men, but paid for none, Eb. 54; bæta þá menn alla er þar létusk eðr fyrir sárum urðu, 98; b. sakir (acc.) fé (dat.), Grág. ii. 169: the allit. law term, b. baugum, to pay weregild, 174: the amount of money in acc. to pay out, bæt heldr fé þat er þú ert sakaðr við hann, Frns. iii. 22; ok á hann eigi þat at b., be bas not to pay that, Grag. ii. 168; b. öfundar bot, Gpl. 358: part. bættr, Eb. 98, 246. metaph. to redress, adjust; b. við e-n, or b. yfir við e-n, to give one redress, make good a wrong inflicted; hefir bu yfir bætt við mik um petta bráðræði, Fms. ii. 25, xi. 434: also used in a religious sense, skaltu b. við Guð, er þú hefir svá mjök gengit af trú þinni, ii. 213 (yfir-bót, repentance); b. sál, or b. fyrir sál sinni, to do for the health of the soul, iv. 63, Fb. i. 345, Bs. i. 642 (in a verse); b. um e-t, to make a thing better (um-bot, bettering, improvement), Orkn. 442: reflex., ekki bætisk um, matters grow worse, Fms. ii. 53; b. við, to add to (við-bót, addition), Hav. 45. 3. part. pass. used as adj. in compar.; ok er eigi at bættra, bótt ..., things are no better, though ..., Fms. vii. 36; bykir mér Ólasr ekki at bættari, þótt ..., i. e. it is no redress for Olave's death, though ..., Fas. ii. 410; er mér ekki sonr minn at bættari þótt Bolli só drepinn, my son's death is none the more atoned for though B. is slain. 4. part. act. as noun; bætandi, pl. -endr, a law term, one Ld. 226. who has to pay weregild, Grag. ii. 174, etc.

BÆXL, mod. bæxli, n. [bogr], the shoulder (Lat. armus) of a dragon, whale, shark, or the like, Fms. vi. 351, Bret. 544. 16, Gullp. 7.

BÖÐ, f., gen. böðvar, [A.S. beadu], a battle, only in poetry, in which it is used in a great many compds; hence come the pr. names Böðvarr, Böðvildr, Böðmóðr, vide Lex. Poët.

böðull, m., dat. böðli, [Dan. böddel], an executioner, (mod. word.) i böðvask, að, dep. to rave, Hðm. 21.

BÖGGR, m., dat. böggvi, an obsol. word, a bag; breiðr b., a big bag, in a metaph. sense, Glúm. (in a verse): the dimin. böggull, m. a small bag, is in freq. use as a nickname, Arn. S. Bs. i. bögla, að, to sbrivel, v. bagla.

BOL, n., dat. bölvi, gen. pl. bölva, [cp. Goth. balva-vesei and balveins = βάσανος, κόλασις; A.S. balew; Engl. bale; Hel. balu; O. H. G. balv: lost in mod. Germ. and Dan.]:—bale, misfortune; allit. phrases, böl and bót, 'bale' and 'bote;' bölva bætr, Stor. 22; pegar böl er hæst er bót næst, 'wben bale is best, bote is nest,' Morris, E. Engl. Spec. 100; svá skal böl bæta at bíða annat meira (a proverb), Grett. 123, Fbr. 193; böl er búskapr (a proverb).

böl-bæn, f. imprecation, Sks. 435, Anecd. 10.

böl-fengi, f. malice, O. H. L. 32.

böll-óttr, adj. ball-sbaped, Sks. 634; b. eggskurn, Stj. 12; b. manna höfuð, Fms. v. 343, Rb. 466.

BÖLLR, m., gen. ballar, dat. belli, [Engl. ball; O. H. G. balla]:—a ball, globe: the ball, in the game of cricket, Gísl. 26 (in a verse, A. D. 963), but hardly ever used, knöttr being the common word: a globe, Al. 18; b. jarðar, Sks. 205 B; b. sólar, id., v.l.: the front of a phalanx, belli svinfylktar fylkingar, 384 B: a small body of men, Lat. globus, Fms. viii. 406, where some MSS. read bjöllr, probably to avoid the ambiguity: a peak, mountain, in the local name Ballar-á, a farm in the west of Iceland, Eb.

2. anatom. the glans penis, Grág. ii. 16.

bölva, 2δ, [Ulf. balujan = βασανίζειν], to curse, with dat. or absol., Stj. 37, 199, Sks. 539, 549, Hom. 33.
β. to swear, Sturl. iii. 239. bölv, n. swearing, (mod.)

bolvan, f. a curse, Stj. 37, 483: swearing, Fær. 239, Hom. 86.

bol-viss, adj. [Ulf. balva-vesei, Hel. balu-veso, = diabolus], 'bale-wise,' detestable, Hbl. 23: a nickname, Hkv.

BÖRGR, m. [Dutch and Germ. barg; Engl. barrow], a barrow-bog, Hd., Lex. Poët.

BÖRKR, m., gen. barkar, dat. berki, bark, Stj. 177, Pr. 473, Åm. 17; börku (acc. pl.), N. G. L. i. 242: a pr. name of a man, Landn. 26 u börr, m. a kind of tree, Edda (Gl.), Lex. Poët.

11. a son = burr, böruðr, m., poët. an ox, Edda (Gl.)

bostl, f., pl. böstlar, arrows, Edda (Gl.), Lex. Poët,

(

C (ce), the third letter, has all along been waning in Icel. The early Gothic Runes (Golden horn) use C for C, e.g. C for ek, ego; the later common Runes have no C. The Anglo-Saxon Runes follow the Gothic, and use C for C, as cen, a torch.

A. Spelling .- The rule given by the first Icel. grammarian, Thorodd (A. D. 1140), is curious; he says that he will follow the Scots in using c with all the vowels, as in Latin, and then makes c serve instead of k; but, though in other cases he makes the small capitals serve for double consonants, e.g. ubi, brat, men, halar, dog, = ubbi, bratt, menn, etc., he admits k to mark a double c, and spells soc sake, but sok sank; lycia to sbut, but lykja a knot; vaca to wake, but vaka vagari; becia to thatch, but bekia to know. Thorodd gives as his reason that other consonants have different shapes as small or capital, but c is uniform, whereas he says that k suits well for a double c, being a Greek letter itself, and having a shape similar to a double c, namely, (; this k or double c he calls ecc, but the single c he calls ce, Skálda 108. second grammarian (about the end of the 12th century) only admits c as a final letter, ranking with δ , z, or x, which are never used as initials: all these letters he calls 'sub-letters;' he thus writes karl, kona, kunna, but voc, soc, tac. Such were the grammatical rules, but in practice they were never strictly followed. As the Anglo-Saxon, in imitation of the Latin, used c throughout for k, so the earliest Icel. MSS., influenced by the Anglo-Saxon or by MSS. written in Britain, made free use of it, and k and c appear indiscriminately; k is more frequent, but c is often used between two vowels or after a vowel, e. g. taca, lécu, vica, boc, etc. etc. In such cases, t and c (k) can often hardly be distinguished; and readings can sometimes be restored by bearing this in mind, e.g. in Bjarn. S. (all our MSS. come from a single vellum MS.) the passage letu heim at landinu' should be read 'lécu (léku) honum landmunir,' 16; 'sáttvarr' is 'sacvarr,' i. e. sakvarr, 51; cp. also such readings as bikdælir instead of Hitdælir, Gullb. 3; drickin = dritkinn, id. In Ad. 20 it is uncertain whether we are to read veclinga- or vetlinga-tos, probably the former.

B. Foreign words .- Throughout the Middle Ages the spelling remained unsettled, but k gained ground, and at the time of the Reformation, when printing began, c was only kept to mark the double k, ck (cut on one face), and in foreign proper names; but it was not admitted in appellatives such as kirkja, klaustr, klerkr, kór, kross, kalkr or kalcikr, church (Scot. kirk), cloister, clericus, choir, cross, calix, etc., or in kista, kastali, kerti, keisari, kær, kærleiki, kyndill, kórona or krúna, kurteisi, kumpan, kompás, kapítuli, cista, castellum, cera, caesar (as appell.), carus, caritas, candela, corona, courtesy, company, compass, chapter. All words of that kind are spelt as if they were indigenous. The name of Christ is usually in editions of the N. T. and Vidal, spelt Christus or Christur, but is always sounded as a native word Kristr or Kristur, gen. Krists, dat. Kristi; in modern books it is also spelt so, and almost always in hymns and rhymes, ancient as well as modern, e.g. Stridsmenn bá höfðu krossfest Krist | skiptu í staði fjóra fyrst, Pass. 36. 1, 19. 1, 3, 10. 1, 14. 1, 15. 2, 16. 1, 49. 4; Postula kjöri Kristur þrjá, 41; Stríðsmenn Krist úr kápu færðu, 30. 1; Framandi maðr mætti Kristi | hér má finna hvern það lystir, 30. 6, 46. 12. Icel. also spell Kristinn, Kristilegr. Christian: kristna, to christen, etc. β. in the middle of syllables k for c is also used in words of foreign origin, Páskar = Pascha, Passover; dreki = draco; leikmenn = laici; Sikley or Sikiley = Sicilia; Grikland or Grikkland = Greece. In modern books of the last fifty years ck is turned into kk; and even C in proper names is rendered by K, except where it is sounded as S; thus Icel. spell Caesar, Cicero, Cyprus; for Sesar, Sisero, Syprus, Silisia-although even this may be seen in print of the last ten or twenty years—is a strange novelty. There is but one exception, viz. the proper name Cecilia, which, ever since the Reformation, has been spelt and pronounced Sesselja; where, however, the name occurs in old writers, e.g. the Sturl. i. 52 C, it is always spelt in the Latin form. Latin and foreign words are spelt with communis-bók, f. a missal, Vm. 52. c in some MSS. currentis-old, f. dies concurrentes, Rb. crucis-messa = kross-messa, K. b. K.

A digraph cb = k is at times found in MSS., as michill = mikill, etc. C is used in nearly all MSS. to mark 100; the Arabian figures, however, occur for the first time in the Hauks-bok and the chief MSS. of the Njála (all of them MSS. of from the end of the 13th to the beginning of the 14th century), but were again disused till about the time of the Reformation, when they came into use along with print. An inverted c (5) is sometimes in very early MSS. used as an abbreviation for con (kcm), thus \(\text{Digr} = \text{konungr}, \text{ } \text{5a} = \text{kona}, \text{ } \text{5or} = \text{konor} = \text{konur}; \text{hence the curious blunder in the old Ed. of Páls. S., Bs. i. 140, viz. that a bishop had to take charge of women and clergy instead of cboir and clergy, the word cor of the MSS. being mistaken for \(\text{5or} \) (konor). In MSS. of the 15th century c above the line is used as an abbreviation, e.g. \(\text{ta} = \text{taka}, \) \(\text{tr} = \text{tekr}, \) \(\text{mill} = \text{mikill}, \) etc.

D

D (dé) is the fourth letter of the alphabet; it is also written D & (ed). The Gothic Runes have a special sign for the d, or DD, namely, a double D turned together; this d is found on the Runic stone at Tune, the Golden horn, and the Bracteats. The reason why this character was used seems to have been that the Latin d was already employed to mark the tb sound (b), which does not exist in Latin. The Anglo-Saxon Runes follow the Gothic; again, the common Scandinavian Runes have no d, but use the tenuis t, to mark both d and t.

A. Pronunciation, etc.—The Icel, has a double d sound, one hard (d) and one soft (d commonly called 'stungið (cut) dé'); the hard d is sounded as the Engl. d in dale, day, dim, dark; the soft d as the soft Engl. tb in father, mother, brother, but is only used as a final or medial, though it occurs now and then in early MSS. to mark this sound at the beginning of words, e. g. dar, dinn, degar, but very rarely.

B. Spelling.—In very early Icel. MSS, the soft d in the middle or end of words was represented by p (tb); thus we read, blob, fabir, mobir, gub, orb, eymb, sekb, dypb, etc., blood...deptb, etc. Even Thorodd does not know the form θ , which was borrowed from the A. S. at the end of the 12th century, and was made to serve for the soft th sound in the middle or end of words, h being only used at the beginning of syllables; but the old spelling with h in the middle and at the end of syllables long struggled against the Anglo-Saxon 8, and most old vellum MSS. use & and h indiscriminately (blob and blod); some use h as a rule, e. g. Cod. Upsal. (Ub.) of the Edda, written about A. D. 1300, Ed. Arna-Magn. ii. 250 sqq. At the beginning of the 14th century 8 prevailed, but again lost its sway, and gave place to d, which marks both the hard and soft d sound in all MSS, from about A. D. 1350 sqq. Thenceforward & was unknown in Icel, print or writing till it was resumed in the Ed. of Njúla A.D. 1772 (cp. also the introduction to the Syntagma de Baptismo, A. D. 1770), and was finally introduced by Rask in common Icel, writing about the beginning of this century; yet many old people still keep on writing d throughout (fadir, modir). On the other hand, Norse (Norwegian) MSS. (laws) never use a middle or final p; and such words as ohr, gohr in a MS, are a sure mark of its Icel, origin.

I. assimilation: 1. dd change into dd, as in the feminines breidd, vidd, sidd, from breiðr, viðr, siðr; pret. beiddi, leiddi, ræddi, hæddi, hlýddi, etc., from beiða, ræða, hlýða, etc. ôt into tt, adj. neut., gott, ótt, brátt, leitt, from góðr, óðr, bráðr, 3. the Goth. zd, Germ. and Engl. rd, into dd in words such as rödd = Goth. razda; oddr = Germ. ort; hodd = Engl. board, Goth. 'buzd; gaddr = Goth. gazds, etc. Those words, however, are II. the initial p of a pronoun, if suffixed to the few in number. verb, changes into ð or d, and even t, e.g. far-ðu, gör-ðu, sjá-ðu, fá-ðu, bú-ðu, = far þú (imperat.), etc.; kalla-ðu, tala-ðu, = kalla þú, tala þú; or kon-du, leid-du, bid-du, sýn-du, sen-du, = kom þú, leið þú, etc.; or t, hal-tu, vil-tu, skal-tu, ben-tu, hljót-tu,=hald þú, vilt þú, skalt þú, bend bú, hljót bú; and even so the plur. or dual-komi-ðið, haldidid, ætli-did, vilid-id, göri-dér, gangi-dér, = komi pid . . . gangi þér; or following conjunctions, efad-dú = ef að þú, síðan-dú = síðan þú, úðren-III. change of d into 8: 1. d, whether ðú = áðr en þú. radical or inflexive, is spelt and pronounced θ after a vowel and an r or f_* g, e. g. blóð, þjóð, biðja, leið, nauð, hæð, brúðr, bæði, borð, orð, garðr, ferð, görð, bragð, lagði, hægð, hafði, höfðum (capitibus), etc. This is without regard to etymology, e. g. Goth. piuda (gens) and pjup (bonum) are equally pronounced and spelt 'pjoo;' Goth. daups and deds, Icel. dauði and dáð; Goth. gup (deus) and gods (bonus), Icel. guð, góðr; Goth. fadar, bruhar, Icel. fadir, brodir, cp. Germ. vater, mutter, but bruder; Goth. vaurd and gards, Icel. ord, gardr; Engl. burden and birth, Icel. byrðr, burðr, etc. Again, in some parts of western Icel. rð, go, and fo are pronounced as rd, gd, fd, ord, Sigurd, gerdu (fac), bragd (with a soft g, but hard d), hafdi (with a soft f and hard d); marks of this may be found in old MSS., c. g. Cod. Reg. (Kb.) of Sæm. Edda. a. after k, p, e. g. in pret. of an inflexive d is sounded and spelt 0: verbs, steypði, gleypði, klípði, drúpði, gapði, glapði, steikði, ríkði, sekði, hrökði, hneykði, blekði, vakði, blakði, etc., from steypa, klípa, drúpa, gapa, glepja, steikja, ríkja, sekja, hrökkva, hneykja, blekkja, vekja, or vaka, etc.; and feminines, seko, eyko, dýpo, etc. B. after the liquids l, m, n in analogous cases, valði, dulði, hulði, deilði, and dæmði, sæmði, dreyniði, geymði, samði, framði, and vanði, brenði, etc., from dylja, deila, dreyma, semja, venja, brenna, etc.; feminines or nouns, sæmð, fremð, vandi (use), yndi (delight), andi (breath), synd (sin): these forms are used constantly in very old MSS. (12th century, and into the 13th); but then they changed—lô, mô, nô into ld, md, nd, and kô, pô into kt, pt, y. after s (only on Runic stones; even the earliest Icel. MSS. spell st), e. g. raishi = reisti from reisa. In MSS. of the middle of that century, such as the O. H., Cod. Reg. of the Eddas and Grágás, the old forms are still the rule, but the modern occur now and then; the Grágás in nineteen cases out of twenty spells seko (culpa), but at times also 'sekt; kô, pò were first abolished; the liquids kept the soft d till the end of the T that the young Glum was very lazy, and lay in bed till day-meal every century, and lo, mo, no is still the rule in the Hauksbok; though even the chief vellum MS, of the Njála (Arna-Magn, no. 468) almost constantly uses the modern ld, md, nd. As to kt and pt, the case is peculiar; in early times the Icel. pronounced dypo or dypp etc. exactly as the English at present pronounce depth; but as the Icel. does not allow the concurrence of two different tenues, the modern pt and kt are only addressed to the eye; in fact, when & became t, the p and k were at once changed into f and g. The Icel. at present says dyft, segt, just as he spells September, October, but is forced to pronounce 'Seft-,' 'Ogt-.' The spelling in old MSS. gives sometimes a clear evidence as to the etymology of some contested words, e.g. the spelling eyko (q.v.) clearly shews that the word is not akin to Lat. octo, but is derived from auka (augere), because else it would have been formed like nott, atta, dottir, Lat. noct-, octo, Gr. $\theta \nu \gamma \dot{\alpha} \tau \eta \rho$; so and i, synd, shew that the d in both cases is inflexive, not radical, and that an, syn are the roots, cp. Gr. aveµos and Germ. sübnen; but when editors or transcribers of Icel. MSS .-- and even patriotic imitators of the old style—have extended the ô to radical ld, nd, and write land, band, hönd, vald, etc., they go too far and trespass against the law of the language. It is true that 'land' is in Icel. MSS. spelt '16,' but the stroke is a mark of abbreviation, not of a soft d.

Digitized by GOOGLE

D. Interchange (vide p. 49): I. between Greek, Latin, and Scandinavian there are but few words to record, θυγάτηρ = dóttir, $\theta \dot{\eta} \rho = d \dot{y} \tau$, $\theta \dot{v} \rho a = d y r \tau$, $\theta \dot{a} \nu a \tau \sigma s$ and $\theta \nu \dot{\eta} \sigma \kappa \omega = d \dot{a}$ and $d e y \dot{a}$, $\theta \dot{\epsilon} \dot{o} s = d \dot{a} \tau$, θαλλός = dalr (arcus), and perhaps θύω = domr; Lat. truncus = draugr, trabere = draga. II. between High German on the one hand, and Low German with Scandinavian on the other hand, a regular interchange has taken place analogous to that between Latin-Greek and Teutonic; viz. Scandin.-Engl. d, t, p answer to H. G. t, z, d, e.g. Icel. dagr, Engl. day = H. G. tag; Icel. temja, Engl. tame = H. G. zabmen; Icel. ping, Engl. thing = H. G. ding.

In very early Icel. MSS, we find the old Latin form d, which sometimes occurs in the Kb. of the Sæm. Edda, but it is commonly d, whence of is formed by putting a stroke on the upper part, A.S. of; this shews that the δ is in form a d, not a p (tb); vide more on this subject in the introduction to p: Thorodd calls the capital D edd, the d dé.

daðra, að, d. róunni, dat. to wheedle.

dafi, a, m. or dafar, f. pl. a dub. word, a shaft (?), Akv. 4, 14.

dafia, ad, and damla, with dat. to dabble with the oar, up and down, metaph. from churning, Krók. 59 C. damla, u, f., is used of a small roll of butter just taken from the churn, það er ekki fyrsta damlan sem þú færð, Brúnn, Isl. Þjóðs. ii. 124.

dafna, 20, to thrive well, a nursery term, used of babies. dafnan, f. thriving; dofnunar-barn, etc.

daga, að, to dawn; eptir um morguninn er trautt var dagað, Eg. 360; þegar er hann sá at dagaði, Fms. v. 21; hvern daganda dag, Mar. (Fr.): impers., e-n dagar uppi, day dawns upon one, in the tales, said of hobgoblins, dwarfs, and giants, uppi ertu nú dvergr um dagaðr, nú skínn sól í sali, Alm. 36, cp. Hkv. Hjörv. 29, 30; en Búrðdælingar segja hana (acc. the giantess) hasi dagat uppi þá þau glímdu, Grett. 141: single stone pillars are freq. said in Icel. to be giants or witches turned into stone on being caught by daylight, and are called Karl, Kerling, vide Isl. Þjóðs. i. 207 sqq.

dagan, dögun (deging, Sturl. i. 83 C), f. dawn, daybreak; i dagan, Edda 24; en er kom at d., 29; litlu fyrir d., 30, O. H. L. 51; um morguninn í d., Fms. ix. 258; í dögun, Eg. 261; í öndverða d., Sturl. ii. 249.

dag-drykkja, u, f. a morning-draught, which was taken after the dagverðr, Orkn. 276, Fas. iii. 42.

dag-far, n. a 'day-fare,' journey, used in dat. in the phrase, fara dagfari ok náttřari, to travel day and night, Fms. i. 203; hann hatði farit norðan dagfari, in a single day's journey, ix. 513. 2. mod. and theol. the ' journey of life,' daily course, conduct; hence dagfars-goor, adj. good dag-fasts, u, f. fasting by day, K. b. K. 106, Hom. 73.

dag-fatt, n. adj., in the phrase, verda d., to lose the daylight, to be overtaken by night, Fms. xi. 142, Rb. 376, Ver. 24.

dag-fero, dag-for, f. a day's journey, Symb. 15, Fms. xi. 440, Stj. 65. dag-ganga, u, f. a day's walk, Fas. iii. 643.

dag-goisli, a, m. a day-beam, Bjarn. 46, name given to a lady-love. dag-langr, adj. [A.S. dæglang], all day long; d. erfiði, toil all day long, Sks. 42; daglangt, all this day long, for this day, Eg. 485, Fms. ii. 268. dag-lát, n. pl. day-dreams, vide dreyma.

dag-leio, f. a day's journey, Fms. vii. 110, Hkr. i. 45; fara fullum dagleiðum, Grág. i. 48.

dag-lengis, adv. all day long, Korm. (in a verse), Karl. 481.

dag-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), daily, Fms. ix. 407, Sks. 42, Dipl. iii. 14, H. E. i. 432, Vm. 139.

dag-mal, n. (vide dagr), prop. 'day-meal,' one of the divisions of the day, usually about 8 or 9 o'clock A.M.; the Lat. bora tertia is rendered by 'er vér köllum dagmál,' which we call d., Hom. 142; enn er ekki morning, cp. also 343; Hrafn. 28 and O. H. L. 18-á einum morni milli rismála ok dagmála-where distinction is made between rismál (rising time) and dagmal, so as to make a separate dagsmark (q. v.) of each of them; and again, a distinction is made between 'midday' and dagmal, Isl. ii. 334. The dagmál is thus midway between 'rising' and 'midday,' which accords well with the present use. The word is synonymous with dagverdarmal, breakfast-time, and denotes the hour when the ancient Icel, used to take their chief meal, opposed to nattmal, night-meal or supper-time, Fms. viii. 330; even the MSS. use dagmál and dagverðarmål indiscriminately; cp. also Sturl. iii. 4 C; Rb. 452 says that at full moon the ebb takes place 'at dagmålum.' To put the dagmål at 7.30 A.M., as Pál Vídalín does, seems neither to accord with the present use nor the passage in Glum or the eccl. bora tertia, which was the nearest hour answering to the Icel, calculation of the day. In Fb. i. 539 it is said that the sun set at 'eyko' (i. e. half-past three o'clock), but rose at 'dagmál,' which puts the dagmál at 8.30 A.M. COMPDS: dagmálastaor, m. the place of d. in the borizon, Fb. I. dagmála-tið, í. morning terce, 625. 176.

dag-messa, u, f. day-mass, morning terce, Hom. 41.

DAGR, m., irreg. dat. degi, pl. dagar: [the kindred word doegr with a vowel change from \dot{o} (dóg) indicates a lost root verb analogous to ala, ól, cp. dalr and dælir; this word is common to all Teutonic dialects; Goth. dags; A.S. dag; Engl. day; Swed.-Dan. dag; Germ. tag; the Lat. dies seems to be identical, although no interchange has taken place]: -a day: in different senses: 1. the natural day :- sayings referring to the day, at kveldi skal dag leyfa, at eventide shall the day be praised, Hm. 80; allir dagar eiga kveld um síðir; mörg eru dags augu, vide auga; enginn dagr til enda tryggr, no day can be trusted till its end; allr dagr til stefnu, Grág. i. 395, 443, is a law phrase,-for summoning was lawful only if performed during the day; this phrase is also used metaph. = 'plenty of time' or the like: popular phrases as to the daylight are many-dagr rennr, or rennr upp, and kemr upp, the day rises, Bm. 1; dagr i austri, day in the east, where the daylight first appears; dagsbrun, 'day's brow,' is the first streak of daylight, the metaphor taken from the human face; lysir af degi, it brightens from the day, i.e. daylight is appearing; dagr ljómar, the day gleams; fyrir dag, before day; móti degi, undir dag, about daybreak; komið at degi, id., Fris. viii. 398; dagr á lopti, day in the sky; árla, snemma dags, early in the morning, Pass. 15. 17; dagr um allt lopt, etc.; albjartr dagr, habjartr d., full day, broad daylight; hæstr dagr, bigh day; ond-veror d., the early day = forenoon, Am. 50; midr dagr, midday, Grag. i. 413, 446, Sks. 217, 219; alidinn dagr, late in the day, Fas. i. 313; hallandi dagr, declining day; at kveldi dags, siò dags, late in the day, Fms. i. 69. In the evening the day is said to set, hence dag-sett, dag-setr, and dagr setzt; in tales, ghosts and spirits come out with nightfall, but dare not face the day; singing merry songs after nightfall is not safe, það kallast ekki Kristnum leyft að kveða begar dagsett er, a ditty; Syrpuvers er mestr galdr er i folginn, ok eigi er lofat at kveða eptir dagsetr, Fas. iii. 206, Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 7, 8: the davlight is symbolical of what is true or clear as day, hence the word dagsanna, or satt sem dagr, q. v. 2. of different days; i dag, to-day, Grag. i. 16, 18, Nj. 36, Ld. 76, Fms. vi. 151; í gær-dag, yesterday; í fyrra dag, the day before yesterday, Háv. 50; í hinni-fyrra dag, the third day; annars dags, Vigl. 23, Pass. 50. 1; hindra dags, the binder day, the day after to-morrow, Hm. 109; dag eptir dag, day after day, Hkr. ii. 313; dag frá degi, from day to day, Fms. ii. 230; hvern dag frá öðrum, id., Fms. viii. 182; annan dag frá öðrum, id., Eg. 277; um daginn, during the day; á dögunum, the other day; nott ok dag, night and day; lidlangan dag, the 'life-long' day; dögunum optar, more times than there are days, i.e. over and over again, Fms. x. 433; & deyjanda degi, on one's day of death, Grag. i. B. regn-dagr, a rainy day; sólskins-dagr, a sunny day; sumardagt, a summer day; vetrar-dagt, a winter day; hútidis-dagt, a feast day: fegins-dagr, a day of joy; donis-dagr, the day of doom, judgment day, Gl. 82, Fms. viii. 98; hamingju-dagr, heilla-dagr, a day of bappiness; gledidagr, id.; brúðkaups-dagt, bridal-day; burðar-dagr, a birtbday. pl. days in the sense of times; adrir dagar, Fms. i. 216; ek ætlada ekki at bessir dagar mundu verða, sem nú eru orðnir, Nj. 171; góðir dagar, bappy days, Fms. xi. 286, 270; sjá aldrei glaðan dag (sing.), never to see glad days. β. á e-s dögum, um e-s daga eptir e-s daga, esp. of the lifetime or reign of kings, Fms.; but in Icel. also used of the logsögumaðr, Jb. repeatedly; vera á dögum, to be alive; eptir minn dag, 'aster my day,' i. e. when I am dead.

'aster my day,' i. e. when I am dead.

'y. calendar days, e. g. Hvitadagar, the White days, i. e. Whitsuntide; Hunda-dagar, the Dog days: Banda-dagr, Vincula Petri; Höfud-dagr, Decap. Jobannis; Geisla-dagr, Epiphany; Imbru-dagar, Ember days; Gang-dagar, Ganging days, Rogation days; Dyri-dagr, Corpus Christi; etc. 4. of the weekdays; the old names being Sunnu-d. or Drottins-d., Mána-d., Týs-d., Óðins-d., Þórs-d., Frjá-d., Laugar-d. or Þvátt-d. It is hard to understand how the Icel. should be the one Teut. people that have disused the old names of the week-days; but so it was, vide Jons S. ch. 24; fyrir baud liðit af dagmálum, Hom. (St.) 10. Acts ii. 15; in Glúm. 342 we are told hann at eigna daga vitrum monnum heiðnum, svá sem at kalla Týrsdag

Digitized by GOOGIC

Oðinsdag, eðr Þórsdag, ok svá um alla vikudaga, etc., Bs. i. 237, cp. 165. Tsupper; corresponding as to time with the mod. Engl. breakfast, as to Thus bishop John (died A. D. 1121) caused them to name the days as the church does (Feria secunda, etc.); viz. priði-d. or priðju-d., Third-day = Tuesday, Rb. 44, K. p. K. 100, Isl. ii. 345; Fimti-d., Fifth-day = Tbursday, Rb. 43, Grág. i. 146, 464, 372, ii. 248, Nj. 274; Föstu-d., Fast-day = Friday; Miðviku-d., Midweek-day = Wednesday, was borrowed from the Germ. Mittwoch; throughout the 12th and 13th centuries, however, the old and new names were used indiscriminately. The question arises whether even the old names were not imported from a broad (England); certainly the Icel. of heathen times did not reckon by weeks; even the word week (vika) is probably of eccl. Latin origin (vices, recurrences). It is curious that the Scandinavian form of Friday, old Icel. Frjádagr, mod. Swed.-Dan. Fredag, is A.S. in form; 'Frjá-,' • Fre-,' can hardly be explained but from A.S. Frea-, and would be an irregular transition from the Norse form Frey. The transition of ja into mod. Swed.-Dan. e is quite regular, whereas Icel. ey (in Frey) would require the mod. Swed.-Dan. o or u sound. Names of weekdays are only mentioned in Icel. poems of the 11th century (Arnor, Sighvat); but at the time of bishop John the reckoning by weeks was probably not fully established, and the names of the days were still new 5. the day is in Icel. divided according to the position of the sun above the horizon; these fixed traditional marks are called dags-mork, day-marks, and are substitutes for the hours of modern times, viz. ris-mál or miðr-morgun, dag-mál, há-degi, mið-degi or mið-mundi, nón, miðr-aptan, nátt-mál, vide these words. The middle point of two day-marks is called jafn-nærri-báðum, in modern pronunciation joinu-badu, equally-near-both, the day-marks following in the genitive; thus in Icel. a man asks, hvad er fram ordid, what is the time? and the reply is, jöfnubáðu miðsmorguns og dagmála, balf-way between mid-morning and day-meal, or stund til (to) dagmála; hallandi dagmál, or stund af (past) dagmálum; jöfnu-báðu hádegis og dagmála, about ten or balfpast ten o'clock, etc. Those day-marks are traditional in every farm, and many of them no doubt date from the earliest settling of the country. Respecting the division of the day, vide Pál Vídal, s. v. Allr dagr til stefnu, Finnus Johann., Horologium Island., Eyktamörk Íslenzk (published at the end of the Rb.), and a recent essay of Finn Magnusson. II. denoting a term, but only in compounds, dagi, a, m., where the weak form is used, cp. ein-dagi, mál-dagi, bar-dagi, skil-III. as a pr. name, Dagr, (freq.); in this sense the dat. is dagi. Dag, not Degi, cp. Odinn lédi Dag (dat.) geirs sins, Sæm. 114. daga-tal, n. a tale of days, Rb. 48. dags-brún, v. above. dags-ljós, n. daylight, helgi, f. ballowedness of the day, Sturl. i. 29. dags-mark, v. above. dags-megin, n., at dags magni, in full day, 623. 30. dags-munr, m. a day's difference; svá at d. sér &, i. e. day by day, Stj.

dag-ráð, n. [A. S. dagrêd = daybreak], this word is rarely used, Eg. 53. 174, Fms. i. 131; in the last passage it is borrowed from the poem Vellekla, (where it seems to be used in the A.S. sense; the poet speaks of a sortilege, and appears to say that the sortilege told him to fight at daybreak, then he would gain the day); the passages in prose, however, seem to take the word in the sense of early, in good time.

dag-riki, n. (dag-rikt, n. adj., N.G.L. i. 342, 343, v.l.), in the phrase, bæta sem d. er til, of the breach of a Sunday or a holy day, to pay according to 'the day's might,' i. e. according to the time of the day at which the breach is committed, N. G. L. i. 342, 343, 348, 349; or does it mean 'the canonical importance' of the day (Fr.)?

dag-roor, m. a day's rowing, A.A. 272.

dag-sanna, u, f. true as day, Nj. 73, Fær. 169, Fas. i. 24, cp. Eb. 60. dag-setr (dag-setr, Sturl. iii. 185 C), n. 'day-setting,' nightfall; um kveld nær dagsetri, Landn. 285; í d., Fms. v. 331, ix. 345; leið til dagsetrs, Grett. 111; d. skeið, Fms. ix. 383. dag-sett, n. adj. id., Háv. 40: vide dagr.

dag-sigling, f. a day's sailing, journey by sea, Rb. 482.

dag-skemt, f. a day's amusement, games, telling stories, or the like, Sturl. i. 63 C, (dagskemta, gen. pl.) dag-skjarr, adj. 'day-scared,' sbunning daylight, poet. epithet of a dwarf, Ýt. 2. dag-slátta, u, f. a day's mowing, an Icel. acre field, measuring 900 square fathoms (Icel. fathom = about 2 yards), to be mown by a single man in a day, Dipl. v. 28, Isl. ii. 349.

dag-stingr, m. the 'day-sting,' daybreak, Greg. 57, (rare.)

dag-stjarna, u, f. the morning star, Lucifer, Al. 161, Sl. 39.

dag-stund, f. day time, a whole day. K. b. K. 6; dagstundar Leid, a · Leet' (i. e. meeting) lasting a day, Grag. i. 122:-elsewhere dagstund means an bour in the day time = stund dags.

dag-stæddr, adj. fixed as to the day, Thom. 56, Fms. xi. 445. dag-tio, f. [A.S. dagtid], day-service, 673. 60, 625. 177, Sks. 19.

dag-veizla, u, f. belp to win the day, = lioveizla, Fas. iii. 336. dag-veror and dog-uror, m., gen. ar, pl. ir, [Dan. davre], 'daymeal, the chief meal of the old Scandinaviaus, taken in the forenoon at the time of dagmál, opp. to nátturði or náttverði (mod. Dan. nadver), 📗 the nature of the meal with the Engl. dinner. The old Scandinavians used to take a hearty meal before going to their work; cp. Tac. Germ. 22. An early and a hearty meal were synonymous words (vide arlegr); the old Havamal advises men to go to the meeting 'washed and with full stomach' (pveginn ok mettr), but never to mind how bad their dress, shoes, or horse may be; and repeats the advice to take 'an early meal' even before visiting a friend, 32, cp. Hbl. 3. Several places in Icel. took their name from the settlers taking their first 'day-meal,' e.g. Dogurðar-nes, Dögurðar-á, Landn. 110, 111, cp. also Gísl. 12. δείπνον is rendered by dagveror, Greg. 43. Matth. xxii. 4; but in the Icel. N. T. of 1540 sq. δείπνον is constantly rendered by kveld-máltið; eta dögurð, Landn. l. c., Nj. 175, Gisl. l. c.; sitja yfir dagverði, Eg. 564, 577, Isl. ii. 336, Fms. iv. 337, ix. 30; dogurðar borð, a day-meal table, in the phrase, sitja at dögurðar borði, to sit at table, Fms. i. 40, vi. 411, Hkr. i. 153, iii. 157; dögurðar-mál and dögurðarmál-skeið, the day-meal time, time of the day-meal, Fms. viii. 330, v.l.; um morguninn at dagverðar máli, 443, Eg. 564, Edda 24, Hom. 91 (in pl.), O. H. L. 19. COMPD: dagverðar-drykkja, f. = dagdrykkja, the drinking after dagverðr, Fas. iii. 530, Mag. 3 dag-ville, adj. 'day-wild,' i. e. not knowing what day it is, K. A. 190, N. G. L. i. 342.

dag-voxtr, m. daily growth; in the phrase, vaxa dagvoxtum, to wax day by day, Finnb. 216, Eb. 318.

dag-bing, n. and dag-bingan, f. a conference, Ann. 1391; vera i d. við e-n, Fms. iii. 201, Bs. i. 882, freq. in Thom.

dag-pinga, ad, to bold conference with one, D. N., Thom. (freq.)

dala, 20, to be dented; dalaði ekki né sprakk, Eg. 769, cp. Fas. iii. 12 (the verse).

dal-búi (dalbyggi, Sd. 214), a, m. a dweller in a dale, Grett. 141 A. dal-bygo, f. a dale-country, Stj. 380, Hkr. ii. 8.

dal-land, n. dale-ground, Grág. ii. 257.

DALLR, m. a small tub, esp. for milk or curds; bæði byttur og dallar, Od. ix. 222, Snót 99.

dalmatika, u, f. a dalmatic, Stj., Fms. iii. 168, Vm. 2, 123.

DALR, s, m., old pl. dalar, acc. dala, Vsp. 19, 42, Hkv. 1. 46; the Sturl. C still uses the phrase, vestr i Dala; the mod. form (but also used in old writers) is dalir, acc. dali, Hkv. Hjörv. 28; old dat. sing. dali, Hallr í Haukadali, Íb. 14, 17; í Þjórsárdali, í Örnólfsdali, 8, Hbl. 17; mod. dal; dali became obsolete even in old writers, except the earliest, as Ari: [Ulf. dals = φάραγξ, Luke iii. 10, and βόθυνον, vi. 39; A. S. dæl; Engl. dale; Germ. tal (tbal); cp. also Goth. dala = κάτω, and dala above; up og dal, up bill and down dale, is an old Dan. phrase]:-a dale; allit. phrase, djúpir dalir, deep dales, Hbl. l.c.; dali doggótta, bedewed dales, Hkv. l. c.; the proverbial saying, lata dal mæta holi, let dale meet bill, 'diamond cut diamond,' Ld. 134, Fms. iv. 225: dalr is used of a dent or bole in a skull, dalr er i hnakka, Fas. iii. l. c. (in a verse): the word is much used in local names, Fagri-dalt, Fair-dale; Breid-dalt, Broaddale; Djupi-dalt, Deep-dale; pver-dalt, Cross-dale; Langi-dalt, Langdale; Jökul-dalr, Glacier-dale, (cp. Langdale, Borrodale, Wensleydale, etc. in North. E.); 'Dale' is a freq. name of dale counties, Breidatjardar-dalir, or Dalir simply, Landn.: Icel. speak of Dala-menn, 'Dales-men' (as in Engl. lake district); dala-fifl, a dale-fool, one brought up in a mean or despised dale, Fas. iii. I sqq.: the parts of a dale are distinguished, dalsbotn, the bottom of a dale, ii. 19; dals-oxl, the shoulder of a dale; dalsbrun, the brow, edge of a dale; dals-hlidar, the sides, slopes of a dale; daladrog, n. pl. the head of a dale; dals-mynni, the mouth of a dale, Fms. viii. 57; dals-barmr, the 'dale-rim,' = dals-brun; dals-eyrar, the gravel beds spread by a stream over a dale, etc.:—in poetry, snakes are called dalefishes, dal-reyor, dal-fiskr, dal-ginna, etc., Lex. Poët. [It is interesting to notice that patronymic words derived from 'dale' are not formed with an e (vowel change of a), but an æ, æ (vowel change of ό), Lax-dælir, Vatns-deelir, Hauk-deelir, Hit-deelir, Syr-deell, Svars-deelir . . ., the men from Lax(ar)dalr, Vatnsdal, Haukadal, Hitardal, etc.; cp. the mod. Norse Dolen = man from a dale; this points to an obsolete root word analogous to ala, ól, bati, bót; vide the glossaries of names to the Sagas, esp. that to the Landn.] II. $a \ dollar \ (mod.) = Germ.$ Joachims-thaler, Joachims-thal being the place where the first dollars dalr, m., gen. dalar, poët. a bow, Lex. Poët.; this word has a different inflexion, and seems to be of a different root from the above; hence in poetry the hand is called dal-naud, the need of (force applied to) the bow, and dal-tong, as the bow is bent by the hand.

dal-verpi, n. a little dale, Nj. 132, Fms. vi. 136, Al. 41.

damma, u, f. [domina], a dame, Fr. (for, and rare); hence in mod. use madama, madame.

COMPDS: damm-stokkr, m. a sluice. dammr, m. a dam, D. N. damm-stæði, n. a dam-yard, D. N. (for, and rare).

dampr, danpr, m. [Germ. dampf], steam, (mod. word.) 2. a pr. name, Rm., Yngl. S.

dan, m. [dominus], sir, D. N.; hence comes perhaps the mod. Icel. word of-dan, það er mér ofdan, 'tis too great a bonour for me; else the word wake, Arna S. ch. 2; in Sturl. i. 23; at the banquet in Reykhólar, 1119, is quite out of use.

Digitized by GOOGIC

Danskr, adj., Danir, pl. Danes; Dan-mörk, f. Denmark, i. e. the mark, march, or border of the Danes; Dana-veldi, n. the Danish empire; Dana-virki, n. the Danish wall, and many compds, vide Fms. xi. This adj. requires special notice, because of the phrase Dönsk tunga (the Danish tongue), the earliest recorded name of the common Scandinavian tongue. It must be borne in mind that the 'Danish' of the old Saga times applies not to the nation, but to the empire. According to the researches of the late historian P. A. Munch, the ancient Danish empire, at least at times, extended over almost all the countries bordering on the Skagerac (Vik); hence a Dane became in Engl. synonymous with a Scandinavian; the language spoken by the Scandinavians was called Danish; and Dönsk tunga' is even used to denote Scandinavian extraction in the widest extent, vide Sighvat in Fms. iv. 73, Eg. ch. 51, Grág. ii. 71, 72. During the 11th and 12th centuries the name was much in use, but as the Danish hegemony in Scandinavia grew weaker, the name became obsolete, and Icel, writers of the 13th and 14th centuries began to use the name 'Norræna,' Norse tongue, from Norway their own mother country, and the nearest akin to Icel, in customs and idiom. 'Swedish' never occurs, because Icel. had little intercourse with that country, although the Scandinavian tongue was spoken there perhaps in a more antique form than in the sister countries. In the 15th century, when almost all connection with Scandinavia was broken off for nearly a century, the Norræna in its turn became an obsolete word, and was replaced by the present word 'Icelandic,' which kept its ground, because the language in the mean time underwent great changes on the Scandinavian continent. The Reformation, the translation of the Old and New Testaments into Icelandic (Oddr Gotskalksson, called the Wise, translated and published the N. T. in 1540, and bishop Gudbrand the whole Bible in 1584), a fresh growth of religious literature, hymns, sermons, and poetry (Hallgrimr Pétrsson, Jón Vidalín), the regeneration of the old literature in the 17th and 18th centuries (Brynjólfr Sveinsson, Arni Magnússon, pormódr Torfason),-all this put an end to the phrases Dönsk tunga and Norræna; and the last phrase is only used to denote obsolete grammatical forms or phrases, as opposed to the forms and phrases of the living language. The translators of the Bible often say vort Islenzkt mál, our Icelandic tongue, or 'vort móður mál,' our mother tongue; móður-málið mitt, Pass. 35. 9. The phrase Dönsk tunga' has given rise to a great many polemical antiquarian essays; the last and the best, by which this question may be regarded as settled, is that by Jon Sigurdsson in the preface to Lex. Poët.; cp. also that of Pál Vídalín in Skýr. s. v., also published in Latin at the end of the old Ed. of Gunnl. Saga, 1775.

DANZ, mod. dans, n. a word of for. origin; [cp. mid. Lat. dansare; Fr. danser; Ital. danzare; Engl. dance; Germ. tanz, tanzen.] This word is certainly not Teutonic, but of Roman or perhaps Breton origin: the Icel. or Scandin, have no genuine word for dancing,—leika means 'to play' in general: the word itself (danza, danz, etc.) never occurs in the old Sagas or poetry, though popular amusements of every kind are described there; but about the end of the 11th century, when the Sagas of the bishops (Bs.) begin, we find dance in full use, accompanied by songs which are described as loose and amorous: the classical passage is Jóns S. (A.D. 1106-1121), ch. 13. Bs. i. 165, 166, and cp. Jóns S. by Gunnlaug, ch. 24. Bs. i. 237-Leikr sá var kær mönnum áðr en hinn heilagi Jón varð biskup, at kveða skyldi karlmaðr til konu í danz blautlig kvæði ok rægilig; ok kona til karlmanns mansöngs vísur; þenna leik lét hann af taka ok bannaði styrkliga; mansöngs kvæði vildi hann eigi heyra né kveða láta, en þó fékk hann því eigi af komið með öllu. Some have thought that this refers to mythical (Eddic) poetry, but without reason and against the literal sense of the passage; the heathen heroic poems were certainly never used to accompany a dance; their flow and metre are a sufficient proof of that. In the Sturl. (Hist. of the 12th and 13th century) dancing is mentioned over and over again; and danz is used of popular ballads or songs of a satirical character (as those in Percy's ballads); flimt (loose song) and danz are synonymous words; the Sturl, has by chance preserved two ditties (one of A. D. 1221, running thus-Loptr liggr i Eyjum, bitr lunda bein | Sæmundr er á heidum, etr berin ein, Sturl. ii. 62, and one referring to the year 1264-Minar eru sorgirnar bungar sem bly, Sturl. iii. 317) sufficient to shew the flow and metre, which are exactly the same as those of the mod. ballads, collected in the west of Icel. (Ögr) in the 17th century under the name of Fornkvæði, Old Songs, and now edited by Jon Sigurdsson and Svend Grundtvig. Danz and Fornkvæði are both of the same kind, and also identical with Engl. ballads, Dan. kæmpeviser. There are passages in Sturl, and Bs. referring to this subject — færðu Breiðbælingar Lopt í flimtun ok görðu um hann danza marga, ok margskonar spott annat, Sturl. ii. 57, cp. 62; Danza-Bergr, the nickuame of a man (Sturl. ii), prob. for composing comic songs; danzagörð, composing comic songs; fylgðar-menn Kolbeins fóru með danzagörð, ... en er Brandr varð varr við flimtan þeirra, iii. 80; þá hrökti pórðr hestinn undir sér, ok kvað danz þenna við raust, 317.

the guests amused themselves by dancing, wrestling, and story-telling; be var sleginn dauz í stofu, ii. 117; í Viðvík var gleði mikil ok gott at vera; þat var einn Drottins dag at þar var danz mikill; kom þar til fjöldi manna; ok ríðr hann í Viðvík til danz, ok var þar at leik; ok dáðu menn mjök danz hans, iii. 258, 259; honum var kostr á boðinn hvat til gamans skyldi hafa, sögur eða danz um kveldit, 281:—the last reference refers to the 21st of January, 1258, which fell on a Sunday (or wake-day): in ballads and tales of the Middle Ages the word is freq. :- note the allit. phrase, dansinn dunar, Isl. Djóðs. ii. 8: the phrases, stiga danz; ganga í danz; brúðir í danz, dansinn heyra; dans vill hun heyra, Fkv. ii. 7. Many of the burdens to the mod. Icel. ballads are of great beauty, and no doubt many centuries older than the ballads to which they are affixed; they refer to lost love. melancholy, merriment, etc., e. g. Blitt lætur veröldin, fölnar fögr fold | langt er síðan mitt var yndið lagt í mold, i. 74; Út ert þú við æginn blá, eg er hér á Dröngum, | kalla eg löngum, kalla eg til þín löngum; Skín á skildi sól og sumarið fríða, | dynur í velli er drengir í burtu riða, 110; Ungan leit eg hofmann í fögrum runni, | skal eg í hljóði dilla þeim mér unni ; Austan blakar laufið á þann linda, 129; Fagrar heyrða eg raddirnar við Niflunga heim; Fagrt syngr svanrinn um sumarlanga tíð, þá mun list að leika sér mín liljan fríð, ii. 52; Einum unna eg manninum, á meðan það var, | þó hlaut eg minn harm að bera í leyndum stað, 94; Svantinn víða, svanurinn syngr víða, 22; Utan eptir firðinum, sigla fagrar fleyr | sá er enginn glaður eptir annan þreyr, 110; Svo er mér illt og angrsamt því veldur þú, | mig langar ekki í lundinn með þá jungfrú, Espol. Ann. 1549. The earliest ballads seem to have been devoted to these subjects only; of the two earliest specimens quoted in the Sturl. (above), one is satirical, the other melancholy; the historical ballads seem to be of later growth: the bishops discountenanced the wakes and dancing (Bs. I.c., Sturl, iii), but in vain: and no more telling proof can be given of the drooping spirits of Icel. in the last century, than that dancing and wakes ceased, after having been a popular amusement for seven hundred years. Eggert Glasson in his poems still speaks of wakes, as an eyewitness; in the west of Icel. (Vestfirðir) they lasted longer, but even there they died out about the time that Percy's ballads were published in England. The Fornkvæði or songs are the only Icel. poetry which often dispenses with the law of alliteration, which in other cases is the light and life of Icel. poetry: vide also hofmaor, viki-vakar, etc. In the 15th century the rimur (metrical paraphrases of romances) were used as an accompaniment to the danz, höldar danza harla snart, ef heyrist visan min; hence originates the name man-songr (maid-song), minne-sang, which forms the introduction to every rima or rhapsody; the metre and time of the rimur are exactly those of ballads and well suited for dancing. An Icel. MS. of the 17th century, containing about seventy Icel. Fornkvæði, is in the Brit. Mus. no. 11,177; and another MS., containing about twenty such songs, is in the Bodl. Libr. no. 130.

danza, mod. dansa, að, to dance, Sks. 705, not in Sturl. and Bs., who use the phrase slá danz; the verb danza occurs for the first time in the ballads and rimur-Ekki er dagr enn, vel d. vifin, Fkv. ii. 102.

danz-leikr, m. dancing, Sturl. i. 23.

dapi, a, m. a pool, Ivar Aasen: a nickname, Fms. viii.

DAPR, adj., gen. rs, of a person, downcast, sad, Nj. 11, Isl. ii. 248, 272, Band. 9: of an object, dreary, d. dagr, Am. 58; d. nætr, Sl. 13; döpr heimkynni, Hbl. 4, Fms. x. 214: the proverb, fyrr er d. en daudr, one droops before one dies, i.e. as long as there is life there is bope; daprt böl, Pass. 44. 3; döpr dauðans pína, Bs. ii. 501; döpr augu, weak eyes, Vidal, i. 25; augn-dapr, weak-eyed; hence depra or augn-depra, weak sight: a faint flame of a light is also called daprt, tvo dopur ljos sitt log, Jón Þorl. i. 146.

dapra, 20, to become faint, in swimming; e-m daprar sund, be begins to sink, Njard. 374; more usually dep. daprask, Fbr. 160, Fas. iii. 508.

dapr-eygr, adj. weak-sighted, Bjarn. 63.

dapr-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), dismal, sad; hnipin ok d., Isl. ii. 196; kona d., a dreary looking woman, Sturl. ii. 212; d. ásjóna, a sad look, Fms. i. 262; d. draumar, dismal dreams, vi. 404.

darka, 20, to walk beavily, to trample, (2 cant term.)

DARRADR, m., gen. ar, [A. S. dearod; Engl. dart; Fr. dard; Swed. dart]:-a dart, Hkm. 2 (in the best MSS.), cp. Dl., where vefr darradar simply means the web of spears; the common form in poetry is darr, n., pl. dörr, vide Lex. Poët., in mod. poetry dör, m., Ulf. 1. 16, 4. 47, 7. 61; the word is probably foreign and never occurs in prose. sort of peg, Edda (Gl.)

dasask, ad, [Swed. dasa], to become weary and exhausted, from cold or bodily exertion, Bs. i. 442, Fær. 185, Fms. ii. 98, Orkn. (in a verse). Sturl. iii. 20, O. H. L. 16; dasaor, exhausted, weary, Ld. 380, Fas. ii. 80, Fms. viii. 55, Bb. 3. 24.

DASI, a, m. (dasinn, adj., Lex. Poët.), a lazy fellow, Edda (Gl.), Fms. vi. (in a verse).

datta, 20, to sink, of the heart, Fbr. 37, vide detta. daud-dagi, a.m. a mode of death, Isl. ii. 220, Lv. 68, Fas. i. 88, Greg. 67. dauð-dagr = dauðadagr, Bs. i. 643

Digitized by GOOGLE

dauö-drukkinn, part. dead-drunk, Fms. xi. 108, Orkn. 420. daud-færandi, part. death-bringing, 623. 26, Greg. 14. daud-hræddr, adj. frightened to death.

DAUĐI, a, m. [Ulf. daupus = θάνατος; A.S. dea δ; Engl. death; Germ. tod; Swed. and Dan. dod]:—deatb; the word is used in the strong form in all Teut. dialects from Gothic to English, but in Icel. it is weak, even in the earliest writers; though traces of a strong form (dauor, s or ar) are found in the phrase til dauds (to death) and in compds, as mann-daudr; cp. also Hm. 6q, where dauor seems to be a substantive not an adjective: Fagrsk. 139 also writes daudar-ord instead of dauda ord; an old song, Edda 52, has Dvalins dauds-drykkr = dauda-drykkr, i. e. the death-drink of the duarf; the strong form also remains in such words as daud-dagi, daudhræddr, dauð-yfli, dauð-ligr, dauð-vána, which could not possibly be forms of a weak daudi, Nj. 198; at dauda kominn, Fms. i. 32; d. fór á hann, Nj. 27; the references are numberless, though heathen proverbs and sayings prefer to use 'hel' or 'feigo,' which were more antique, whereas dauoi recalls Christian ideas, or sometimes denotes the manner of death. medic. mortification. compos: dauda-blod, n. 'death-blood,' gore, dauöa-bönd, n. pl. death-bonds, Greg. 48. dauða-dagr, m. death's day, Nj. 109, Stj. 168. dauda-da, n. a death swoon. daudadómr, m. death's doom, Sks. 736. dauða-drep, n. plague, Stj. 437, dauða-drukkinn, adj. dead-drunk, Fms. ix. 22. dauðadrykkr, m. a deadly draught, Fms. i. 8. dauða-dyrr, f. gates of death. dauoa-damdr, adj. doomed to death, Bs. i. 222. dauðatylgja, u, f. a ' death-fetch,' an apparition boding one's death, Nj. 62, v. l.; vide fylgja. dauða-hræddr = dauðhræddr. dauða-kvöl, f. the death-pang, Mar. dauda-leit, f. searching for one as if dead. daudalitr, m. colour of death, 623. 61. dauda-madr, m. a man doomed to die, Fms. vii. 33; hafa e-n at daudamanni, 656 A. I. 25, Eg. 416. daude-mark, -merki, id, n. a sign of death (opp. to lifs-mark), medic. decay or the like, Nj. 154, 656 C. 32; a type of death, Hom. 108. dauda-mein, n. death-sickness, Bs. i. 616. dauda-ord (v. l. and better daudayror, f., from yror = uror, weird, fate), n. death, 'death-weird,' Yt. 8. dauon-rao, n. ' death-rede,' fatal counsel, Gisl. 35. dauða-róg, n. deadly slander, Landn. 281. Dauða-sjór, m. the Dead Sea, Rb., Symb. dauda-akattr, m. tribute of death, Niorst. 6. dauða-skellr, m. a death-blow, Bs. ii. 148. dauda-skuld, n. the debt of nature, 655 xxxii. 19. dauða-alag, n. = dauðaskellr, Stj. 280. dauða-slig, n. deadly splay, a disease of horses, Bs. i. 389. dauða-snara, u, f. snare of death, Hom. 144. dauða-steytr, m. [Dan. stöd], = dauðaslag, Bs. dauda-strid, n. the death-struggle. ii. 182. dauða-stund, i. the hour of death, Al. 163. dauða-svefn, n. a deadly swoon, fatal sleep, as of one fated to die, Fas. iii. 608: medic. catalepsis, also called stiarfi, Fél. x. 43. dauda-sok, f. a cause for death, a deed deserving death, Fms. i. 48, iii. 20, vi. 383. dauða-tákn, n. a token of death, Bret. 66, cp. Il. xx. 226. dauda-teygjur, f. pl. the death-spasms, Fél. ix. dauda-utlego, f. penalty of death, Sturl. ii. 2. verk, n. a work deserving death, Isl. ii. 413.

dauð-leikr, m. mortality, Stj. 21, Greg. 17.

dano-ligr, adj. deadly, Sks. 533, Hom. 52, Stj. 92, K. A. 202, Fms.

daudr, adj. [Ulf. dauhs; A. S. dead; Engl. dead; Germ. todt; Dan. dod]:-dead, Grag. i. 140, Nj. 19; the phrase, veroa d., to become dead, i.e. to die, 238, Jb. ch. 3, Am. 98; d. veror hverr (2 proverb), Fs. 114 (in a verse); falla nior d., Fms. viii. 55: metaph. eccl., 623. 32, Hom. 79, 655 xiv. Á; dauð trúa, Greg. 13, James ii. 17, Pass. 4. 23. 2. in-animate, in the law phrase dautt fé, K. Á. 204. $\beta$. medic. dead, of a 3. compds denoting manner of death, sæ-dauðr, vápn-dauðr, sott-daudr; sjálf-daudr, of sheep or cattle, = svidda, q.v.: again, hálf-daudr, balf dead; al-daudr, quite dead; stein-daudr, stone-dead; the old writers prefer to use andaor or látinn, and in mod. use dáinn is a gentler term, used of a deceased friend; daubr sounds rude and is scarcely used except of animals; in like manner Germ. say abgelebt.

daud-vana, adj. ind., and daud-vænn, adj., medic. sinking fast, when no hope of life is left, Grett. 155, Fms. vi. 31, H. E. i. 480.

dauð-yfli, n. (cp. Goth. dauþublis = ἐπιθανάτιος, 1 Cor. iv. 9), a carcase, lifeless thing, Stj. 317 (Lev. xi. 38).

dauf-heyrask, d, dep., d. vid e-t, to turn a deaf ear to, Fms. xi. 134, Thom. 374dauf-heyror, adj. one who turns a deaf ear to, 655 xxxi, Fms. vi. 30.

daufingi, a, m. a drone, sluggard.

dauf-leikr, m. deafness, sloth, Fas. i. 7 dauf-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), 'deaf-like,' lonely, dull, Eg. 202, 762, Lv.

22, Fms. vi. 404 (dismal).

DAUFR, 2dj. [Gr. τύφλου; Goth. daubs = πεπορωμένου, Mark viii. 17; A.S. deaf; Engl. deaf; Germ. taub; Swed. dof; Dan. dov]:-deaf, 623. 57, Luke vii. 22: allit. phrase, daufr ok dumbi, deaf and dumb, Stj. 207; dumbi sá er ekki mælir, d. sá er ekki heyrir, K. Á. 56; blindr eðr d., Gpl. 504, Hom. 120.

2. metaph., Bs. i. 728.

3. (mod.) witbout savour, = daufligr.

daun-mikill, adj. stinking, Bs. ii. 23.

DAUNN, m. [Goth. dauns = σσμη; cp. Swed.-Dan. dunst; O. H. G. dauns]:—a smell, esp. a bad smell, Anecd. 8; illr d., Rb. 352; opp. to ilmr (sweet smell), 623. 22; in Bb. 3. 27 used in a good sense.

daunsa or daunsna (mod. dunsna), ao, to smell at, sniff at, esp. of cattle; gékk Glæsir (an ox) at honum ok daunsnaði um hann, Eb. 320.

daun-semő, f. = daunn, Mar.

dauss, m. [mid. H. G. tûs; Fr. deux], the dice; kasta daus, to cast a die, Sturl. ii. 95. II. the rump, of cattle, Fas. ii. 510, cp. dof.

DA, n. [the root word of deyja, dauor]. 1. catalepsy; Icel. say liggja í dái or sem í dái, to lie motionless, without stirring a limb and without feeling pain; hann vissi þá ekki til sín löngum, ok þótti þá sem hann lægi í dái, Bs. i. 336, Fas. ii. 235; falla í dá, to fall into a senseless 2. it is medic, used of the relieving swoon, like state, Bs. i. 451. the sleep which follows after strong paroxysms, Fél. ix. 204; it is different from aungvit (swoon) or brotfall (epilepsy).

ds, d, to admire, be charmed at, a word akin to the preceding, denoting a sense of fascination, a kind of entrancement (cp. dár); with acc., dá e-t, dáðu menn mjök danz hans, Sturl. iii. 259; dáðu þat allir, 625. 96, Konr. 59 (Fr.); but esp. and in present usage only dep., dást (mod. dáðst) að e-u, Fms. ii. 192, xi. 429.

dá- is esp. in mod. use prefixed to a great many adjectives and adverbs, denoting very; dá-góðr, very good; dá-vel, very well; dá-vænn, dá-fallegr, v. below; dá-fagr, very bandsome; dá-lítill, in the west of Icel. pronounced dultio, dulitill, very little. DAD, f. [Ulf. deds, in missdeds, = παράβασιε, Germ. missetbat, Engl. misdeed; A. S. dæd; Engl. deed; O. H. G. tat; mod. Germ. tbat; Dan. daad]:-deed; allit. phrase, drýgja dáð, to do a daring deed, Sturl. iii. 7, 10; dáð ok drengskapr, Band. 10; cp. the compds ó-dæði, a misdeed; for-dæda, an evil-doer; the adverbial phrase, af sjálfs-dáðum, of β. valour; ef nokkur dáð er í þér, Fms. xi. 86, one's own accord. 623. 49; the word is not much in use, or merely poet. in compds as dáð-framr, dáð-fimr, dáð-gjarn, dáð-göfugr, dáð-kunnr, dáðmildr, dáð-rakkr, dáð-sterkr, dáð-sæll, dáð-vandr, etc., all of them 'epitheta ornantia,' bold, valiant, Lex. Poët., but none of them can be used in prose without affectation.

dáði, a, m. a dainty, Snót 216.

dáð-lauss, adj. 'deedless,' lubberly, Ld. 236, Lv. 53: impotent, Fél. ix. 204.

dáð-leysi, f. meanness, impotency, Grett. 131.

dáð-leysingi, 2, m. a good-for-naught, (fainéant), a lubber, Sturl. iii. 135. dáð-rakkr, adj. bold, Sks. 358. dáð-semi, dáð-samliga, v. dá-semi, etc.

dáð-vandr, adj. virtuous, Sks. 486.

dá-fallegr, adj. very pretty, Fas. iii. 3, v. l.

dáindis-, pretty, rather, as an adverb. prefix to adjectives and adverbs. dainn (v. deyja), dead, deceased, (freq.) β. masc. the name of a dwarf, Edda (Gl.): cp. Dan. daane = to swoon.

dá-la, adv. very, quite; ekki d., not quite, Bjarn. 42. dá-leikar, m. pl. (prop. cbarms), intimacy, Nj. 103.

dá-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), [Dan. daarlig], bad; d. tré, Stj. 24; d. deyning, bad smell, 51; d. fero, Ld. 324; d. kostr, Fms. i. 202; d. dæmi, Sks. 481: wretched (of a person), Magn. 494, Stj. 157, 473.

DALKR, m. [cp. mod. Germ. dolch, which word does not appear in Germ. till the 16th century (Grimm); Bohem. and Pol. tulich; mod. Dan. dolk]:-the pin in the cloaks (feldr) of the ancients, whence also called feldar-dálkr, Glúm. ch. 8, Korm. ch. 25, Fms. i. 180, Gísl. 55, Hkr. Hák. S. Góða ch. 18; cp. also the verse l. c., where the poet calls it feldar-stingr, cloak-pin, cp. Tac. Germ. ch. 17. 2. the vertebrae of a fish's tail; it is a child's game in Icel. to hold it up and ask, hvað eru margar árar á borði undir sporði? whilst the other has to guess how many joints there are, cp. the Ital. game morra, Lat. 'micare digitis.' β . a column in a book.

dálpa, v. dafla. dá-læti, n. fondness, intimacy.

dámaðr, adj. flavoured, Sks. 164.

dámgast (proncd. dángast), 20, to get seasoned: metaph. to thrive; hence, damgan, dongun, f. thriving; donguligr, adj., etc. dam-goor, adj. well-flavoured, N. G. L. ii. 419.

DAMB, m. [perh. akin to the Germ. dampf], flavour; görði síðan af dám ekki góðan, Bs. i. 340; illr d., Konr. 57; the phrase, draga dám af e-u, to take a (bad) flavour from a thing; hver dregr dam af sinum sessunautum: Icel. also use a verb dáma, ao, in the phrase, e-m dámar ekki e-t, i. e. to dislike, to loatbe; a filthy person is called o-damr, etc.

dánar-, a gen. form from dá or dáinn, in dánar-arfr, m. a law term, inheritance from one deceased, Hkr. iii. 222; danar-bu, n. estate of one deceased; dánar-dagr, m. or dánar-dægr, n. day, bour of death, Fms. i. 219, Hs. verse 44 (where it nearly means the manner of death); danar-16, n. property of a person deceased, Grag. i. 209, Fms. vi. 392, cp. Dan. dannefæ, but in a different sense, of property which is claimed by no one, and therefore falls to the king.

DAR, n. scoff; in the allit. phrase, draga d. at e-m, to make game of one, Hkr. iii. 203; gys og dár, Pass. 14. 2.

dar, adj. [dá], scarcely used except in the neut, datt, in various phrases; Digitized by e-m verð dátt (or dátt um e-t), numbness comes to one, one is benumbed, 623. 10; við þau tíðendi varð honum svá d. sem hann væri steini lostinn, at those tídings be was as 'dumbfounded' as if be bad been struck by a stone, Bs. i. 471.

B. in phrases denoting a charm or fascination exercised over another, always of uncertain and fugitive nature (cp. dá, ð); göra sér dátt við e-n (v. dá-leikar), to become very familiar with one, Korm. 38; svá var dátt með þeim at..., they so charmed one another that..., Nj. 151; þá var nú í dátt efni komit, i. e. they came to be close friends, 8d. 138; varð mönnum dátt um þat, people were much charmed by tt, Bjarn. 9, 20, cp. Hm. 50.

V. dár gleymsku-svefn, a benumbing sleep of forgetfulness, Pass. 4. 11.

dára, 2d, to mock, make sport of, with acc., Fas. i. 9, Stj. 22, 165, 199, Grett. 139.

dári, a, m. [Germ. tor or thor; Dan. daare], a fool, buffoon, Fms. ix. 272; dára-samlegr, adj. foolish, Stj. 269; dára-skapr and dáru-skapr, m. mockery, Fas. ii. 337, Grett. 108 A, 144.

dá-sama, að, to admire, Fms. vi. 57. Magn. 504; dásamandi, part., Fms. v. 239, Mar. 39; this word and the following are by mod. theol. writers much used of God, the grace of God.

dé-samligr, adj. (-liga, adv., Bs. i. 305), wonderful, glorious, Fms. x. 234, iv. 71; d. tákn, Bs. i. 325, Magn. 504, 532, Clem. 46.

dá-semd and dá-semi, f. glory, grace, Mar. 33, 68, Post. 188. dá-semőar-verk, n. work of glory; mikil eru dásemőar verkin Drottins, great are the glorious works of the Lord, cp. Ps. cxi. 2.

dá-vænn, adj. very pretty, Fær. 157, Fas. ii. 343.

deging, f. dawn, Eluc., Sturl. i. 83 C.

doig, n. [Ulf. daigs, m. = ϕ ύραμα; A. S. dåg; Engl. dough; Germ. teig; Swed. deg]:—dough, Ann. 1337, Matth. xiii. 33, I Cor. v. 6–8, Gal. v. 9; the earliest trace of this word is the Goth. deigan, a strong verb by which Ulf. renders the Gr. π λάσσειν, as also $\dot{\sigma}$ στράκινοs by the part. digans, π λάσμα by gadik in Rom. ix. 20, and $\dot{\epsilon}$ πλάσθη by gadigans in I Tim. ii. 13: to this family belong the following Icel. words, deigr (moist), deigia, digna, deigla, digull, the fundamental notion being plasticity: vide the following.

deigja, u, f. a dairy-maid; this word is the humble mother of the Engl. lady, qs. la-dy (vide p. 76, s. v. braud), A. S. blæf-dige = bread-maid; cp. Norse bú-deigja (q. v.), Chaucer's dey (a maner dey), and West Engl. day- (or dey-) bouse, a dairy. The deigja in old Norse farms was the chief maid, but still a bondwoman, N. G. L. i. 70, H. E. i. 510; öll ertú d. dritin, Ls. 56, where it is curiously enough addressed to the daughter of Byggvir (bygg = barley), a handmaid of the gods; deigja seems to mean a baker-woman, and the word no doubt is akin to deig, dough, and Goth. deigan, to knead, the same person being originally both dairy-woman and baker to the farm: in Icel. the word is never used, but it survives in the Norse bu-deia, sæter-deia, agtar-deia, reid-deia (Ivar Aasen), and Swed. deja, = a dairy-maid.

deigja, u, f. wetness, damp.

deigla, u, f. a crucible, Germ. tiegel, v. digull.

deigr, adj. 'dougby,' damp, wet; Icel. say, vera d. i fætrna, to be wettish, less than våtr, wet, and more than rakr. damp. β. soft, of steel, and metaph. timid; d. brandr, Eb. 238, þiðr. 79; deigan skal deigum þjóða (proverb), Háv. 40, Fins. i. 143 (in a verse), iii. 103, Pr. 173.

deigull = digull, m.; deigul-mor, m. a sort of clay.

DEILA, d, [Goth. dailjan and ga-dailjan = μερίζειν, μεταδιδόναι, διαιρείν, etc.; A. S. dælan; Engl. to deal; Germ. theilen; O. H. G. tailjan; Swed. dela; Dan. dele.] I. with acc. (never dat.), to deal, divide; the phrase, vilja bæði kjósa ok deila, will both choose and deal, of unfair dealing, a metaphor taken from partners, e. g. fishermen, where one makes the division into shares (deilir), and the others choose (kjósa) the shares they like best, Ld. 38; deildr hlutr, a dealt lot, i.e. sbare dealt or allotted to one, Grag. i. 243; d. e-m e-t, to allot one a thing, to deal out to one, ii. 294; deila dögurð, d. mat (in mod. usage skamta), to deal out portions of food in a bousebold, Isl. ii. 337; ser at bar var manni matr deildr, Gísl. 47; þú kunnir aldregi d. mönnum mat, Ls. 46; þá er maðr á bröt heitinn ef honum er eigi deildr matr á málum, Grág. i. 149; cp. the proverb, djarfr er hver um deildan verð; d. fé, Skm. 22; d. bauga, Rm. 20; d. e-t út, to deal out, give, Fms. xi. 434. 2. of places, to divide, bound; firoir deila, the firths are the boundaries, Grag. ii. 217; vatnsfoll (rivers) d. til sjávar, Eg. 131; svá vítt sem vatnsfoll deila til sjávar, Landn. 57, K. þ. K. 34.

β. used impers. as it seems; deilir norðr vatnsföllum, Ísl. ii. 345; fjöll þau er vatnsföll deilir af milli héraða, β. used impers. as it seems; deilir the fells that divide the waters, form the water-shed, between the counties, Grág. i. 432; þar er víkr deilir, Hlt. 3. metaph, to distinguish, discern; eptir þat sá sól, ok máttu þá d. ættir, after that the sun broke forth. and they could discern the airts (of heaven), Fb. i. 431, Fms. iv. 38; deila liti, to discern colours (lit-deili), hence the proverb, eigi deilir litr kosti (acc. pl.), colour (i. e. look, appearance) is no sure test, Nj. 78: metaph., d. vig, to act as umpire in a fight, tourney, or the like, Ls. 22; we ought perh. to read deila (not bera) tilt með tveim, 38. phrases, deila sér illan hlut af, to deal onself a bad sbare in, to deal badly in a thing, Ld. 152: the phrase, e-t deilir mali (impers.), it goes for a great deal, is of great importance, Hs. 65, mod. usage skipta máli, miklu, etc. :

d. mál, to deal with a thing, Hom. 34; d. mál e-s, to deal speech, to discuss or confer with one, O. H. 82 (in a verse); d. e-n malum, to deal, i. e. speak, confer, with one, Krók. 36 C; d. ordspeki vid e-n, to deal, i. e. contend in learning with one, Vhm. 55; runar, Rm. 42; eiga við e-t at d., to bave to deal with a thing, Fms. viii. 288: the phrase, d. mál brotum, to deal piecemeal with a case, take a partial or false view of a thing, or is the metaphor taken from bad payment (in bauga-brot, q. v.)? Eb. 184; peir hasa eigi deilt petta mal brotum, i. e. they bave done it thoroughly, have not been mistaken, Konr. 52: to share in a thing, d. knif ok kjötstykki, to sbare knife and meat, Grag., Isl. ii. 487: the phrase, d. hug, to 'deal one's mind,' pay attention to, with a notion of deep concern and affliction; heil vertú Sváfa, hug skaltú d., thy beart shalt thou cleave, Hkv. Hjörv. 40; deildusk hugir, svá at húskarlar héldu varla vatni, their minds were so distraught, that the house-carles could bardly forbear weeping, Fms. vi. (in a verse); hence a hardened man is called litill skapdeildar maor, (Hugdeila, mind's concern, is the name of a poem of the 17th century): at peir deildi enga úhæfu, that they should forbear dealing outrageously, Fms. i. 22; d. heiptir, to deal batred, to bate (poët.), Hkv. I. 41: d. afli, ofriki við e-n, to deal barsbly and overbearingly with one, Fms. i. 34; d. illyroum, ill-deildum, to chide, abuse one another, Háv. 37, Ld. 158. II. neut, to be at feud, quarrel; the saying, sjaldan veldr einn þegar tveir deila; deili gröm við þig, Hkv. 1.43; ek bað flögð d. við þau, Sighvat: d. til e-s, to quarrel for a thing, Eg. 510: d. upp å e-n, to complain of one, Stj. 294. Exod. xvii. 2, Wby chide ye with me?' β. impers., ef i pat deilir, if there be dissent on that point, Grag. ii. 125; ef i deilir med beim, if they dissent, i. 58. d. um e-t, to contend about a thing, as a law term; peir deildu (they bad a lawsuit) um jardir, Fms. iv. 201; beir deildu um landaskipti, 315: beir deildu um land þat er var ..., Landn. 125; þeir deildu um leysingja-arf, 100, 101: mctaph., d. um stafn, to come to a close fight, Orkn. 232. reflex. to spread, branch off; vatnsföll deilask milli héraða, Grág. ii. 218; svá víða sem hón (i. e. Christianity) deilisk um heim, Hom. 49. medan mer deilisk lifit til, as long as life be dealt (i. e. granted) me, Fms. viii. 205; e-t deilisk af, a thing comes to pass, Hkr. iii. 55 (in a verse); kölluðu þeir, at lengi mundi vörn deilask af úti, that a long defence would be dealt out, i. e. there would be a long struggle, Sturl. i. 59, cp. the Goth. afdailjan = to pay off; hugr deilisk (vide above); þat mun oss drjúgt deilask, it will cost us dear, Am. 19. deila, u, f. disagreement, a contest, often as a law term, law contest deila, u, f. disagreement, a contest, often as a law term, law contest (laga-deila, þing-deila), Nj. 90, Fms. i. 68, iv. 119, 198, vi. 136, viii. 146, Sturl. i. 105, Eg. 367, Rd. 304, Ld. 204. compps: deilu-gjarn, adj. quarrelsome, þórð. 59. deilu-mál, n. a quarrel, Sturl. i. 30.

deilu-vænligr, adj. likely to lead to a quarrel, Eg. 725.

deild (deilb, deild), f. a deal, dole, sbare, Edda 147; fara at deildum, to be parcelled out, Orkn. 88, 1sl. ii. 337 (a portion of meat); gota d., to give a dole, N. G. L. i. 142; the phrase, fa illt or deildum, to get a bad sbare, be worsted, Sighvat (in a verse). 2. dealings; hardar deildir, bard dealings, Fbr. (in a verse); sannar deildir, just dealings, Lex. Poet.; ill-deildir, ill dealings; grip-deildir, dealings of a robber, robbery; skap-3. seldom used of fighting with weapons (N.G.L. i. deild, temper. 64), but freq. of a lawsuit (ping-deild), Nj. 138, 141, 86, 36, Eg. 738, Fms. vi. 361, viii. 268, Gbl. 475: the parliamentary phrase, leggia mál i deild, to 'lay a case under division' in court (cp. leggja mál i gorð), a phrase which recalls to mind the English parliamentary phrases 'division' and 'divide,' Sturl. i. 59; leggja mál til deildar, id., Laxd. 204 (MS., Ed. deilu). β. cp. also local names, Deildar-tunga, -hvammr, -hjalli, Landn., Sturl. y. in Icel. a boundary river is often called Deild or Deildar-á, Deildar-lækr, etc.; or of other boundary places, Deildar-hvammr, 8. metaph., í aðra d., þriðju d., etc., secondly, tbirdly, etc., Stj. COMPDS: deildar-arfr, m. inberitance in shares, Grag. i. 172. 0. 21. deildar-lio, n. a strong body of men, so that some can be kept in reserve, Fms. v. 14. deildar-maör, v. dældarmaðr.

deili, n. pl. marks, whereby to discern one thing (person) from another; sá pó öll d. á honum, all bis features were visible, Fas. i. 298; the metaph. phrase, kunna, vita, deili á e-u (e-m), to know the marks of a thing (man), i. e. to know it so as to discern it from another thing; vita öll d. á, to know exactly; vita eingi d. á, to know nothing about, Eg. 185, Fas. ii. 113, Fms. v. 316.

deili-ker, n. a cup, Js. 78, cp. N. G. L. i. 211. Vin Driadeiling, f. division, dealing.

deilir, m. a dealer, Lex. Poët.: arithm. divisor. deili-steinn, m. a 'mark-stone,' land-mark, D. N.

deill, m. [Germ. theil; Goth. dails; Engl. deal; Swed.-Dan. deel, del], D. N.; this word never occurs in old writers, and can scarcely be said to be in use at present. Icel. use the fem. deild and deila, vide above. dekr, n. [mid. Lat. dicra], ten bides, B. K. 125.

2. [deck = to dress], flirtation, finery.

dekret, n. a decree (Lat. word), Bs. i. Arna S.

dekstra, að, to coax for one; in phrases as, vertu ekki að d. hann, or hann vill láta d. sig (of spoilt children).

deli, a, m. a dog, (cant word.)

Digitized by

Dellingr, qs. deglingr, m. [dagr], Dayspring, the father of the Sun, Edda. demant, m. diamond, (mod.)

demba, d, with dat. to pour out.

demba, u, f. a pouring shower. β . a mist (= dumba), Ivar Aasen. demms, u, f. [dammr], to dam, D. N.; demning, f. damming, id. denging (dengo, Grag. ii. 338), f. the whetting a scythe by hammering the edge, Grag. i. 200.

dengir, m. one who whets, a cognom., Fms. x. 219.

dengja, d, [Swed. dänga], to bammer and so whet a scythe; d. ljá, Grág. ii. 211.

dengsla, u, f. = denging.

dentinn, adj. dainty, Snot (Stef. Ol.) 212.

depill, m., dat. depli, [depil = a pond, little pool, from dapi = a pool, Ivar Aasen], a spot, dot; hvitr, svartr d., O. H. L. 59: a dog with spots over the eyes is also called depill.

depla, ad, d. augum, to blink with the eyes.

depra, u, f. [dapr], vide aug-depra or augn-tepra, p. 33.

der, n. the peak or shade of a cap.

des, f., gen. desjar, pl. desjar, = Scot. and North. E. dass or dess (a bayrick), cp. also Gael. dais; menn eru við heygarð þinn ok reyna desjarnar, Boll. 348; hey-des, a bay-dass, Bs. 54, Sturl. i. 83, 196: it exists in local names as Desjar-mýri in the east, Des-ey in the west of Icel.

des, n. [cp. Swed. desman], musk, in the compd des-hús, n. a smelling box for ladies to wear on the neck, of gold or ivory.

DETTA, pret. datt, 2nd pers. dazt, pl. duttu; part. dottinn; pres. dett; pret. subj. dytti :--to drop, fall : d. nior daudr, to drop down dead, Fms. iii. 132; of a bird when shot, 179; þeir tóku brandana jafnskjótt sem ofan duttu, Nj. 201; spjótið datt ór hendi, El. 91; duttu þær ofan, they tumbled down, Fas. ii. 84; draga þá stundum upp, en láta stundum d., Karl. 161: to drop, die suddenly, saudienadt datt nidt unnvorpum i megro, Bs. i. 873; þau hafa nú niðr dottið í hor, the cattle dropped down from starvation, 875: to sink, of the heart, Fbr. 108: metaph., lif dettr or e-m, the life drops out of one, Fms. iii. 214: denoting to come on suddenly, daudinn dettr á, Al. 90; láttu niðr d., engu er nytt, drop it, it is all false, Fs. 159: the phrases, e-m dettr e-t i hug, a thing drops into one's mind, i.e. one recollects it suddenly; d. ofan yfir e-n, to be overwhelmed, amazed; d. i stafi, to fall in pieces (as a tub without hoops), to be amazed: cp. datta, dotta.

dett-hendr, adj. a kind of metre, Edda 124, 129: cp. Ht. 29. dettr, m. the sound of a heavy body falling; heyra dett, Fms. iv. 168. dett-yroi, n. dropping unregarded words, Mirm.

DEYDA, dd, [v. dauor; Ulf. daubjan; Germ. töden; Swed. döda]:to kill, put to death, with acc., Ld. 54, Nj. 158, Fms. ii. 270: allit., deyda illum dauda, to put to an ill death, Clem. 57; dræpr ok deydandi, a law term, Germ. wogelfrei, Gpl. 137; dræpr ok deyðr, N.G.L. i. 351: metaph. (theol.), Fms. ii. 238; d. sik, to mortify one's lusts, Bs. i. 167.

DEYFA, &, [v. dauft; Ulf. ga-daubjan; Germ. betäuben; Dan. dove; Swed. döfva]:-to make blunt; d. sverð, vápn, eggjar (of weapons blunted by the look of a wizard), Korm. 220, Gisl. 80, Isl. ii. 225; bær er d. sverð ok sefa, Sdm. 27, Eg. 509 (in a verse), Dropl. 36, Hm. 149, where this power is attributed to Odin himself. 2. to 'deave' (Scot. and North. E.), i. e. stupefy; medic., d. hönd, Fas. iii. 396: metaph. to sootbe or stupefy, d. sakar, to soothe, Ghv. 2. 23; d. sefa, Sdm. l. c. =Goth. daupjan, Germ. taufen, = to dip; d. i vatn, to dip in water, N. G. L. i. 339, 378, v. l.; vide dyfa.

deyfo, f. (deyfa, u, f.), [Ulf. daubiha], deafness, N.G.L. i. 228; numbness, baving no savour.

DEYJA, pret. dó, 2nd pers. dótt, later dóst, pl. dó, mod. dóu; part. dáinn; pres. dey, and pers. deyr (in mod. familiar use deyrð); pret. subj. dzi; in the south of Icel people say dzoi, inserting a spurious o; old poems with neg. suffix, deyr-at, dó-at; a weak pret. form deyði (died) occurs in the Ann. 1400-1430, and was much used in biographies of later centuries, but is borrowed from Dan. döde, unclassical and unknown in the spoken tongue; Icel. always say do: [the root is akin to da, q. v., Gr. Gáraros, etc.; Ulf. uses a part. divans, by which he sometimes renders the Gr. θνητόε, φθαρτόε; undivans = αθάνατοε, άφθαρτοε; undivanei = άθανασία; but the Gr. θνήσκειν he renders not by divan but by gasviltan; Hel. uses dojan, but rarely; the A.S. seems not to know the word, but uses suiltan, whereas in Icel. svelta means to starve, die of bunger; the Engl. perhaps borrowed the verb to die from the Scandin., whereas to starve (used by Chaucer = Germ, sterben) now means to die of bunger or cold]:-to die; deyr fé, deyja frændr, Hm. 76; hann dó af citri, 623. 27; er þat sögn manna, af hón hafi af því dáit, Korm. 164; hann dó ór sárum, Fs. 120; þeir dó allir, Landn. 294; dó þar undir ellifu naut, Bs. i. 320; hann do litlu sidarr, Fnis. i. 108; þat áttu eptir sem erfidast er, ok hat er at d., Nj. 56; betra er at d. med sæmd en lifa með skömm, Orkn. 28: the proverb, deyja verðr hverr um sinn, omnes una mamet non: the allit. phrase, a devjanda degi, Ld. 106, Grag. ii. 207. Hkr. iii. 50: eccl., dauda deyja, Gen. iii. 3, Matth. xv. 4, 'let him die the death, Engl. A.V.; d. godum, illum dauda, to die a good. bad death, etc.: it sometimes has in it a curious sense of motion, hann kaus at d. i d fjürðinn, Espol. Árb. 1768.

Mælifell, Landn. 192; þeir Selþórir frændr dó í Þórisbjörg, 78; trúði at hann mundi deyja i fjallit, Eb. 7 new Ed., v.l., where it means to die (i. e. pass by death) into the fell, i. e. they believed that after death they would pass into the fell; cp. hinnig deyja or Helju halir, Vpm. 43. y. of inanimate things; dainn arfr, medic. to die, of a limb, Pr. 239. a law phrase, a dead inberitance, i.e. left to the beir, Gpl. 263; hence dánar-fé, dánar-arfr, q. v.

DEYNA, d, [daunn], to stink, 544. 39, Hom. 151, 623. 22, Stj. 91

deyning, f. a stink, bad smell, Stj. 51.

digla, ao, to drip, prop. of a running at the nose (v. dígull), Sd. 168; to drip, of wet clothes hung out, Konr. 32.

digna, ad, to become moist (deigr): to lose temper (of steel), Nj. 203; metaph. to lose beart, Karl. 390, O. T. 20, Flov. 44, Fas. iii. 540, G. H. M.

DIGR, adj., neut. digrt, [the Goth. probably had an adj. digrs; Ulf. renders άδρότηs by digrei; Swed. diger; the Germ. dick is different, and answers to Icel. bjokkr, bykkr]:-stout, big; a pole is digr, a wall bykkr: the phrase, d. sem naut, big as an ox, Eb. 314; har ok d., Anal, 79; d. fotr, Nj. 219; Olafr Digri, Olave the Fat, O. H.; er kalfi var digrastr, Nj. 247; digrt men (monile), Fms. vi. 271; falr langr ok digr, Eg. 285; digrir fjötrar, Sks. 457; (hon) gékk digr með tveim, sbe was big with twins, Str. 16. β. irregularly = þykkr; d. panzari, Sturl. ii. 59; d. ok feit nautssida, a thick side of bacon, Fins. ii. 139. gora sik digran, to puff oneself out, Bs. i. 719, Karl. 197; digr ord, big words, threats, Isl. ii. 330, Bs. i. 758. β. gramm. deep, of a tune, sound, Skálda 177, Ísl. ii. 467, v. l.

digrask, að, to grow big, of a pregnant woman, Fms. xi. 53; d. í gerdum, id., Bard. 173, Fb. i. 157: mctaph. to make oneself big, d. ok dramba, Th. 11.

digr-barkliga, adv. 'big-throated,' baughtily, Finnb. 252, Bs. i. 764. digr-beinn, adj. big-legged, Fms. iv. 28.

digro, f. bigness, stoutness (cp. lengd, hæð, breidd, þykt), Fms. iii. 209.

digr-hálsaðr, adj. = háls-digr, big-necked, þiðr. 18.

digr-leikr, m. (-leiki, a, m.), bigness, Edda 20, Ann. 1345, Bs. ii. 167, 173: aspiration, Skálda 180.

digr-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), big, boastful, Bs. i. 728, Eg. 711, v. l. digr-nefjaör, adj. = nef-digr, big-nosed, Sturl. iii. 111 C.

digr-yrði, n. pl. big words, Stj. 461.

DIK, n. a run, leap; taka dik (taka undir sig d.), to take a spring, Bs. ii. 143: the word is probably foreign, but root uncertain; hence comes mio-dik, n., pronounced mio-bik, the middle of a thing; hun (i. e. the Reformation) hefir upphafit illt og efnislaust, mið-dikið mátalaust, og endann afskaplegan, Bs. ii. 313, a pastoral letter of the old popish bishop Ögmund, A. D. 1539.

dika, 20, to run, (mod.)

dikt, n. composition in Latin, Latinu-dikt, Fms. iii. 163, Bs. i. 869, ii. 121; þat nýja dikt, 77: söngva-dikt, composition of songs, Sörla R. 1. 5.

DIKTA, 20, [Lat. dictare], to compose in Latin; Gunnlaugr munkr er Látínu söguna diktað hefir, Bs. i. 215, 786; dikta ok skrifa bréf á Látínu; bréf skrifað ok diktað, 798; d. bækr, 79; d. vers, 655 xxxii. 17; d. röksemdir, Bs. i. 786: in old writers dikta is only used of Latin (not Icel.) compositions, but as these compositions were in an affected and artificial style, the word also got the sense of fiction, cp. Germ. dichten, dichter = a poet, dichtung = poetry; mod. Dan. digter; Engl. ditty; in Icel, mostly with the notion of falsebood, not as in Germ. and mod. Dan. 2. to romance, lie; logit edr diktad, Stj. 40; diktadu of fancy. þar andsvör þau er eigi vóru sönn, 248; menn hugðu þetta ráð diktað (feigned), Bs. i. 757; sem fjandinn hafði diktað, Mar. (Fr.); Dóra þú lézt dikta ljóð, dári þig sérhver maðr, Vídal. (a ditty).

diktan, f. composition in Latin, Bs. i. 798.

diktr, m. a poem (rare), seldom used but as a name of several legendary poems of the 15th and 16th century, Ceciliu-d., etc.

dilk-fé, n. ewes together with their lambs, Bs. i. 719

DILKR, m. a sucking lamb, Grett. 137, borst. St. 51, Grag. i. 417. ii. 307, in the last passage also of sucking pigs, calves or kids; kviga (a 'quey' or young cow) med tvá dilka, Isl. ii. 401; in Icel. households the lambs are separated from the mother in June, this is called 'færa frá,' the time 'fráfærur,' the lamb 'fráfæru-lamb;' the lambs that are left with the mother all the summer are called 'dilkar' as opp. to 'fráfæru-2. metaph. the small folds all round a great sheepfold. the phrase, e-t dregr dilk eptir sér, it brings trouble in its train.

dilk-sauor, m. a sheep with a lamb, Grag. i. 418.

dilk-eer, f. a ewe with a lamb, Grag. ii. 304.

dilla, ab, with dat. to trill, lull; dillandi rodd, a sweet voice: dillindo, interj. lullaby: dillari, a, m. a triller, of the nightingale; hjartans danspípu dillarinn, Jón Þorl. i. 131.

dimma, d, (but dimmadisk, Fb. i. 91; dimmat, part., Mar.):-to become dim; neut. or impers., um kveldit er d. tok, when it began to grow dark, Fms. viii. 305; dimmir af nott, the night darkens, iii. 135: also of clouds, to grow dark (of a gale, storm); bá hvesti ok dimdi í dimma, u. f. dimness, darkness, esp, of clouds, nightfall > seglio bar i afima ordnar ber disir. the disir bave left thee, thou art a lost man. fiardar-dimmuna, Espol. Arb. l. c.: metaph. gloom, Pass. 4. 11; the phrase, dimmu dregt & e-t, it becomes clouded, looks threatening, Band. 10.

Digitized by GOGLE

dimm-hljóðr, adj. = dimmraddaðr, Fas. ii. 231.

DIMMR, 2dj. [A. S. and Engl. dim], dim, dark, dusky; d. ok dökt sky, a dim and dark sky, Fms. xi. 136; verða dimt fyrir augum, to see dimly, esp. of sudden changes from darkness to light, iii. 217; var dimt hit neðra, dark below, Háv. 40; d. himin, Matth. xvi. 3; harla dimt var af nott. Pass. II. I: dimm nott, a dark night; d. stigr, a dim path, Fins, i. 140; dimt él, a dark storm, Úlf. 7. 63; d. regn, Lex. Poët.; d. dreki, the dusky dragon, Vsp. 66. B. of voice, bollow, Isl. ii. 467; vide the following word.

dimm-raddaör, adj. deep-voiced, Grett. 111.

dimm-viori, n. dark, cloudy weather.

dindill, m. the tail of a seal.

dingla, 20, to dangle; dingull, m. a small spider, cp. dor-dingull. dirfs. 8. (vide diarfr), to dare, always with the reflex, pronoun separated or suffixed, dirfask or d. sik, with infin. to dare, Fms. xi. 54, Isl. ii. 331; d. sik til e-s, to take a thing to heart, Al. 88, 656 A. I. 36: reflex., dirfask, to dare; bændr dirfdusk mjök við Birkibeina, became bold, impudent, Fms. ix. 408; er beir dirfdusk at hafa med höndum hans píslar-mark, vii. 195; engi maðr dirfðisk at kveðja þess, i. 83, K. Á. 114; dirfask í e-u, þá dirfðumk ek í ræðu ok spurningum, I grew more bold in speech, Sks. 5.

dirfo, f. boldness, often with the notion of impudence, arrogance, Eg. 47, Glum. 309, Fms. iv. 161, xi. 54, Post. 645. 71; of-dirfo, impudence.

dirfska, u, f. = dirfo; of-dirfska, temerity.

DISKR, m. [a for, word; from Gr. δίσκος; Lat, discus; A. S. and Hel. dise; Engl. desk and disk; Germ. tisch]:-a plate; þá vóru öngir diskar, 1sl. (Heidarv. S.) ii. 337, O. H. L. 36, Fms. i. 259, Bs. i. 475; silfr-d., gull-d., silver and gold plate are mentioned as a present given to a king, O. H. 154, cp. Fb. iii. 332; both the words used in this sense, diskr and skutill (Lat. scutellum, Germ. schüssel) are of for. origin; cp. also Rm. 4, 20: in the earliest times small movable tables also served as plates.

dispensera, 20, to dispense (Lat. word), H. E. i. 510.

dispenseran, f. dispensing, Stj., Bs.

disputa, disputera, ab, to dispute (Lat. word), Stj.

diametr, n. diameter (Gr. word), 732.7.

DIAR, m. pl. [the Icel. has two words, but both of them poetical and obsolete, viz. díar answering, by the law of Interchange, to Gr. θεόs (Icel. $d = Gr. \theta$), and tivar, by the same law, to Lat. deus (Icel. t = Lat. d); cp. Sansk. devas, Gr. θείοs, Lat. divus, Ital. dio, Fr. dieu]:-gods or priests; this word occurs only twice, Yngl. S. ch. 2-bat var bar sior, at tólf hofgoðar vóru æðstir, skyldu þeir ráða fyrir blótum ok dómum manna i milli; bat eru diar kallaðir eðr drottnar, - where diar means not the gods themselves but the priests; and by the old poet Kormak in an obscure periphrasis, in a poem addressed to the staunch heathen earl Sigurd; Snorri (Edda 96), in quoting Kormak, takes the word to mean gods; but the version given in Yngl. S. seems more likely; the diar of the Yngl. S. were probably analogous to the Icel. godi, from god (deus). The age of Kormak shews that the word was probably not borrowed from the Latin.

I. the mucus of the nose; d. er horr, Edda dígull, m. [deig]. (Lauf.), Lex. Poët.; hence hor-digull, Fas. ii. 149; mod. hor-dingull, as II. [Swed.-Dan. digel; Germ. tiegel], a if it were from dingla. crucible; hence poët., gold is called digul-farmr, digul-snjór, -jökull, the load, snow, icicle of the crucible, Lex. Poët.

DIKI and dik, n. [Germ. teich], a dike, ditch, Eg. 529-531, Hkr. iii. 154, Jb. 245, Grett. 161, Fms. iii. 187, vi. 406, O. H. 21 (in a verse), Orkn. 452; díkis-bokki, a, m. an eel, poët., Kormak.

DILI, a, m. a spot, mark; allodin nema d. undir vinstri hendi, Fms. iii. B. esp. medic., b. dila, to burn with caustic; this operation was in olden times performed (caustic being unknown) with a pointed hot iron, and is described in an interesting passage in Bs. i. 379, cp. also Rafns S. ch. 4, Bs. i. 644, Nj. 209.

Y. a brand (on thieves), esp. on the back (v. brenna); fyrr skulu grónir grautar-dílarnir á hálsi þór, þeir er þú brant . . . en ek myna gipta þér systur mína, Eb. 210, Hkr. iii. 148, Fbr. 190; vide brenna.

DÍS, f., pl. dísir, and an older but obsolete form jó-dís, which remains in the earliest poems, jódís (the sister of) úls ok Nara = Hela, Ýt. 7; but Loga dis, the sister of Logi, 9; cp. Edda 109: it also remains in the Icel. fem. pr. name Jódis,—the explanation given in Skálda 183 (from jor, equus, and dis) has no philological value, being only the poet's fancy: [Hel. idis = virgo; A.S. ides; Grimm ingeniously suggests that the Idistaviso in Tacitus may be corrupt for Idisiaviso, the virgin-I. a sister, Yt. l. c.; mead, from idis and viso = Germ. wiese.] heitir ok systir, dís, jódis, a sister is called dís and jódis, Edda 109; dis skjöldunga, the sister of kings, Bkv. 14. II. generally a goddess or priestess (?), a female guardian-angel, who follows every man from his birth, and only leaves him in the hour of death, cp. the very interesting passages, Hallfr. S. Fs. 114, Porst. Sidu H. Anal. 184, 115; djösla-mót, meeting of d., Greg. 51 185, Gisl., Fms. ii. 192-195 (cp. Nj. 148); hence the phrase, ek kved diabolical power, Fms. x. 283, Fas. i. 254.

Am. 26; cp. also the phrase, heillum horfinn. 2. poët, a maid in general, Lex. Poët. 3. freq. in Icel. as a fem. pr. name, in compds, Jó-dís, Her-dís, Val-dís, Vig-dís, Hiör-dís, etc. COMPDS: diss-blot. n. a sacrifice to the disir, Eg. 205, Yngl. S. ch. 33. disa-salr, m. the temple of the disir, Yngl. S. ch. 33, Hervar. S. Fas. i. 454. dísa-skald. n. the 'disir-Scald,' surname of a heathen Icel. poet who composed a poem in honour of the disir, Edda, Skáldat.

dívisera, 20, to distribute (Lat. word), Stj. 42, 80.

djarf-leikr, m. (-leiki, a, m.), courage, Edda 16, Fs. 6, bior. 273. djarf-ligr, adj. bold, daring, Fb. i. 380, 445. djarf-liga, adv., Fms. i. 27, ix. 302, Nj. 48, Ld. 214.

djarf-mannligr (djarfa-mannligr), adj. daring, Bárð. 164.

djarf-mæltr, adj. bold-spoken, Nj. 6, Fms. xi. 53.

DJARFR, adi. [cp. dirfa above: Hel. derbi or derui = audax. improbus; mod. High Germ. derb = bard is a different word, answering to A.S. peorf, and originally meant unleavened (of bread); kindred words are, Engl. dare, daring, Gr. bappeiv]:-bold, daring, but also in a bad sense, audacious, impudent; d. i orrustum, bold in battle, Edda 16; d. ok dularfullt, impudent and arrogant, Fms. i. 75; at Olaft digri mundi eigi svá d. vera at ..., so foolishly daring, iv. 107; nú ver eigi síðan svá d., at þú talir ósæmilig orð við Harald, be not so presumptuous as to speak unseeming words to Harold, vii. 168; firna djörf kona ertú ok heimsk, impudent and foolish, xi. 54; djarfastr (boldest) ok bezt hugaðr, Edda 16; víg-djarfr, sókn-djarfr, hug-djarfr, valiant; ú-djarfr, sby.

djarf-tækr, adj. bold in taking, Stj. 422 (of Ruth gleaning). djákn, m. (djákni, a, m., Sturl. i. 180 C), the Lat. diaconus, a deacon, Dipl. v. 22, Bs., K. A., K. p. K., Vm., etc. djásn, n. a diadem, D. N. i. 321, 590, etc. (freq. in mod. use); prob.

a foreign word, though the root is uncertain.

djup, n. the deep; i djupum vatna, in the depths of the waters, Sks. 628; mikit djúp (a great gulf) á milli vor staðfest, Luke xvi. 26; at eigi svelgi oss djúpit, 655 xxxii; djúp árinnar, the channel in a river, Fas. i. 151. B. the deep sea off the shore is called djup; kastadi hann öxinni fyrir borð á djúpi, Eg. 196; síðan býr Agnarr sik til ok kafar í djúpit, Fas. i. 27: the fishers distinguish between grunn-mið and djúpmið, vide mið; Icel. also say, hundrað, sextigi ... faðma djúp: a large bay may be called djúp, e. g. Isafjarðar-djúp, Landn. 147; sjávar-djúp, hafsdjup, the main; hann let grafa ut d. (a 'deep,' i. e. channel) vio Skeljastein, y. metaph., eilift d., 656 B. 9: eccl. used of God. d. Fms. x. 153. miskunnar, gzzku, depth of mercy, grace, etc.; cp. dýpt, dýpi.

djup-audigr or -udigr, adj. the cognom. of Auda, Landn.; it probably djúp-

means the wise, deep.

djup-fyndni, f. 'deep-finding,' wit, ingenuity, Pass. 21. 3. fundinn, part. 'deep-found,' ingenious, Króka Refs R. 4. 2.

djup-hugsaor, adj. deep-musing, Sturl. ii. 202. djup-hyggja, u, f. (-hyggni, f.), sagacity, Fagrsk. 32.

djup-leiki (-leikr), a, m. depth, Magn. 514, Karl. 394. djup-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), deep, deeply, Sks. 552.

DJUPR, adj., compar. djúpari, superl. djúpastr; djúpust, Greg. 62; djúpari (fem.), Eg. 99; djúpara, Ld. 78; djúpastan, Edda 34; djúpasti, Hom. 144; but in mod. use more freq. dýpri, dýpstr: [Goth. djúps; A.S. and Hel. diôp; Engl. deep; Germ. tief; Swed. djup; Dan. dyb]:-deep, of water; d. vatn, Grag. ii. 131; d. tjörn, Greg. 62; i hinn djupa sæ, Edda 18, Sturl. ii. 202; djúp á, Eg. 99: of other things, a dale, pit, etc., djúpr dalr, Fms. i. 210, Edda 34; dökkva dala ok djúpa, 38; djúpar grafir (pits), Sks. 426; d. pyttr, Hom. 144: of a vessel (the ark), 625. 7; djúpt sár, a deep sore, i. e. wound, Dropl. 29; d. höttr, a deep bat, coming down over the eyes, Fms. viii. 368; d. hver, a deep kettle, Hým. 5. β. neut. as adv. deep, deeply; bitu hvelin djupt í jörðina, Al. 140. 2. metaph., d. tákn, Hom. 134: beavy, severe, d. laun, 100: the phrase, leggjask djúpt, to dive deep, Nj. 102: in mod. usage freq. in a metaph. sense, deep, profound.

djúp-ráðigr and -ráðr, adj. deep-counselling, þiðr. 135, Fagrsk. 32. djúp-ræði, n. deep-scheming, Fagrsk. 32, v. l djup-settr, adj. deep, deep-laid; d. rad, Magn. 466, Fas. iii. 218; d. orð, Stj. 4; d. maðr, a deep man, Fms. xi. 44.

djup-skygn, adj. (-skygni, f.), deep-seeing.

djup-sei, f. the seeing deep, profoundness, Stj. 560.

djúp-sepr (-seeligr), adj. seeing deep, penetrating, Eb. 224, Sks. 552. djúp-úðigr, adj. [A. S. deop-bydig], deep-minded.

djup-vitr, adj. deeply wise, Orkn. 230, Fas. iii. 53.

DJOFULL, m., dat. djöfli, pl. lar; [Gr. διάβολοε; eccl. Lat. diabolus; A. S. deofol; Engl. devil; Germ. teufel; Swed. djefvul; Dan. djævel; the nearest to the Icel. is the A.S. form, which shews that the word came from England with Christianity; of course in the old Saga time the word was almost unknown; the evil spirits of the heathens were trolls and giants]:-a devil, Nj. 273, Fms. ii. 184; but in Bs., Fms. viii. sqq., the legendary Sagas, etc. it is freq. enough: as a term of abuse, Sturl. ii. 115. Fms. viii. 95, 368, ix. 50; djöfla-blót (vide blót). Mart. 115; djöfla-mót, meeting of d., Greg. 51; djöflals-kraptr, devil's craft, djoful-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), devilish, 623. 24, 625. 72, Fms. x. 289, Gr. δρύφακτοι, Lat. cancelli; the Goth. stana, = court and judge, properly 290, Barl. 149, Mar. 60.

Digitized by GOOGIC

djöful-6or, adj. 'devil-wud,' possessed, Orkn. 518, Clem. 51, N. T.

djöful-ærr, adj. = djöfulóðr, Mar. 656 B. 7.

djörfung, f. [djarfr], boldness, in a good sense, Fms. iv. 133, Pass. 40. 17: impudence, Fms. ii. 184, H. E. i. 503: cp. dirfd, dirfska.

DODI, 2, m. [dauor], deadness, insensibility.

dooks, u, f. the bird tringa fusca, lækjar-duora, Fél. i. 17, Edda (Gl.)

doo-na, 20, to become insensible, Anal. 196. door-kvisa, u, f. a kind of bird, Edda (Gl.)

doff, a, m. [daufr], medic. torpor, in the hands, feet, etc.,-handar-dofi, fota-dofi; as to the art, stein-dofi, anaestbesia; nála-dofi, 'needle-torpor, pins and needles,' Fel. ix. 205, 206: metaph. torpor, numbness, Stj. 97, Hom. 108.

dofinn, adj. dead, of a limb; d. er mer fotr minn, Vapn. 21: metaph.

drowsy, [Dan. doven], Al. 71.

dofna, 20, [Goth. daubnan; Swed. domna], to become dead, of limbs; dofnadi höndin, Fms. vi. 203, Stj. 296, 297: of water, flat, Sks. 165: metaph. the phrase, dofnar yfir e-u, the matter begins to die out, people cease to talk about it, Fms. x. 301, Bs. i. 348, Band. 4; hugr dofnar, the mind gets beavy, Brandkr. 60.

dogg, n. a pillow (?), in the phrase, ad sitja upp vid dogg, to lie balf erect in bed, leaning the head upon a high pillow.

dokk, dokka, t, f. a windlass, Fms. x. 53.

doparr, m., and doppa, u, f. a boss of metal, pior. 111, Karl. 550 (in a saddle); of earrings, D. N. i. 321: (the last word is freq.)

dor-digull (dordingull), m. a small spider; araneus totus ater splendens, filo demissorio, Eggert Itin. 609; also called fiski-karl, fisher-carle; the word is no doubt to be spelt dorg-digull, i. e. angling spider; for popular lore as to the dordígull vide Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 547, 548: the small spider's web is called hégómi, q. v.

dorg, f. an angler's tackle, rod and line, etc., for trout or small fish; þeir réru tveir á báti með dorgar sínar at smá-fiski, Sæm. Gm. (introd.), D. 32; land-dorgar, the land of dorg, the sea, Edda 66; dorgar-skot, a kind of fishing implement, D. N. iii. 201; cp. dorga.

dorga, ad, to fish with a dorg: in mod. use dorg is only used of fishing through holes in the ice; metaph. Icel. also say, d. vio e-t, to go angling for a thing, go dangling after it.

dorma, ao, [Lat. dormire], to doze.

dornikar, m. pl. [from Doornik in Flanders], a kind of water-tight boots, Jón Þorl.

dorri, a, m. a wetber.

dotta, 20, (dott, n.), to nod from sleep; dottr, m. a nodder, Hav. 44. dólg (dolg), n. [A.S. dolg = vulnus; O.H.G. tolg], direful enmity, only in poetry in compds, as dólg-brandr, -eisa, -ljós, the fire, embers, light of the d., = sword; dolg-lio, the ale of the d., i. e. blood; dolg-linnr, the d. snake, i.e. spear; dolg-svala, the battle-swallow, i.e. the shaft; gaping wounds are called dolg-spor, Hkv. 2. 40.

dolg-ligr, adj. fiendish, Finnb. 326.

dólg-maðr, m. = dólgr, Hkv. 2. 49 (Ed. dólgar mær).

DOLGR (dolgr), m. [Ulf. renders χρεωφειλέτης, Luke vii. 41, by dulgisskula; and davecorhs, id., by dulgabaitja]:-a fiend; daudir dolgar, gbosts, Hkv. 2. 49-verða öflgari allir á nóttum dauðir dólgar mær, en um daga ljósa—used synonymous to 'devil,' djöfull, Fms. iii. 200, vi. 143, x. 172 (of a giant); þar sat dólgr í hásæti, mikill ok illiligr (of witches), Fas. ii. 184; svartir dólgar, Karl. 525; sögðu at sá d. væri kominn í bygdina er þeim þætti eigi dæll viðfangs, Grett. 127; söku-dólgr, a criminal; vide dylgia.

dóli, a, m. [dole, Ivar Aasen; cp. Engl. dull], a drudge, Edda (Gl.)

dólpr, m. a sort of dress, Edda (Gl.) 232.

dólpungr, m. the larva of a caterpillar, Björn.

dómandi, a. m., pl. dómendr, [A. S. dêmend], a judge, Fas. ii. 32, Grúg. i. 27, 65, 79, Nj., N.G. L. i.ii, Eg. ch. 57, Stj. 378 sqq.; as to the Icel. judges cp. esp. Grág. p. p. ch. 1, 6, and numberless passages in the laws and Sagas. dómari, a, m. [Dan. dommer; Swed. domare], a judge, this is the common form instead of dómandi, Edda 93, K. Á. 202, Sks. 472 B, Pass. 27. 5, 28. 10; dómara-sæti, n. judgment-seat, Sks. 480 B; Dómara-bók, f. the Book of Judges: used besides in many compds, lands-dómari, chief judge, of Pilate, Matth. xxvii. 27, Pass. 25. 1; yfir-dómari, undir-dómari, etc.

dom-16, n. a fee or payment fixed by sentence, D. N.

dom-festa, u, f. submitting to subpoena, N. G. L. i. 22, 221.

dóm-flogi, a, m. a law term, a runaway from court, used either of the plaintiff or judge if they do not appear in court, or quit the court, or even rise in court, without leave; in which case the judge forfeits his seat, and the plaintiff his case; defined N.G.L. i. 23, 220.

dom-hringr, m. 'doom-ring,' 'judgment-ring;' (cp. also vé-bönd, the sacred bounds or bar): the courts of heathen times were surrounded by the domhringr, about a bow-shot from the centre where the benches were placed; no evil-doer might enter this hallowed ring, or commit an act of violence within it; if he did so, he was called a vargr i véum (lipus in sanctis); the Engl. law term 'bar' answers to this old word, cp. 💄 220 of select men who stand outside and pronounce an opinion on the case.

means a staff, bar; the bar was, according to Eg. l. c., a pole of hazelwood, hesli-stengr: classical passages referring to this,—par sér enn dómhring þann, er menn vóru dæmdir í til blóts, í þeim hring stendr Þórs steinn, etc., Eb. ch. 10; þar stendr enn þórs steinn . . . ok þar 'hjá' (better) er så dómhringr er (in wbich) menn skyldi til blóts dæma, Landn. 98: another classical passage is Eg. ch. 57 beginning; cp. also Fas. iii. Gautr. S. ch. 7, Edda 10, though the 'ring' is not expressly mentioned in these last two passages: hann gengr i dómhringinn ok setzk niðr, Band. 6; en þeir eigu at rísa ór dóminum ok sitja í dómhring innan meðan um þá sök er dæmt, Grág. i. 78, cp. 17, 26: in early heathen times this sacred circle was formed by a ring of stones, cp. dóm-steinar: no doubt some of the so-called Celtic or Druidical stone circles are relics of these public courts, e. g. the Stones of Stennis in the Orkneys; cp. Scott's last note to the Pirate, referring to this subject: even in later times, when the thing was obsolete, the name still remained.

dom-hus, n. the 'bouse of doom,' court-bouse, Sks. 784; the idea is foreign, though the word is native: the old courts and meetings were always held in the open air.

dom-kirkja, u, f. [Germ. dom-kirche, from Lat. domus], a cathedral, dóm-leggja, lagði, a law term, to lay before a court, Dipl. iii. 13.

dom-nefna, u, f. the nomination of judges in the Icel. court, described in Ib. ch. 5; in parliament the godar (priests) had the right to appoint the judges, Grág. i. 25; peir (viz. the priests) skyldu domnesnur eiga á þingum, Fras. iii. 106.

DOMR, m. [Goth. dôms, which occurs once, but not in Ulf., who only uses the word in compds, and renders kpious and kpiths by staua; A. S. dôm; Engl. doom and the termin. -dom; O. H. G. tom; known in Germ. only from the termin. -tum (-tbum)]. I. a court of judgment, the body of judges, or the court' itself; the Icel. law of the Commonwealth distinguishes between several bodies of judges; in parliament there were Fjórdungs-dómar, 'Quarter Courts,' one for each of the political quarters of the country, Breidfirdinga-d. or Vestfirdinga-d. for the West, Rangæinga-d. for the South, Eyfirðinga-d. or Norðlendinga-d. for the North, and Austfirdinga-d. for the East; these courts were instituted by Thord Gellir A.D. 964: at a later date a fifth High Court, called Fimtar-domr, the Fifth Court, was erected about A. D. 1004; vide Nj. ch. 98, 1b. ch. 8, Grág., esp. p. p. in the first chapters, and many passages in the Sagas, esp. Nj., Sturl.; and of mod. authors, Konrad Maurer in his essay, Die Entstehung des Icel. Staates, Ed. 1852, Dasent's Introd. to Burnt Njal;—the treatise of Maurer is an indispensable guide in matters of the Fimtar-dómr. There are other courts on record, e. g. dyra-dómr, a court at the door of the defendant, vide Eb. ch. 18 and N. G. L.; nú skal dóm setja fyrir durum verjanda, en eigi á bak húsi; hann (viz. the plaintiff) skal setja dóm sinn eigi nær húsi en svá, at verjandi (the defender) megi setja sinn dóm milli dura ok dóms hans ok aka hlassi viðar milli dóms ok dura (vide dæma), N. G. L. i. 22: technical law-phrases as to the courts, setja dom, to set the court, let the judges take their seats; domar fara út, the courts 'fare out,' i.e. open; færa út dóm, dóma-útfærsla, i.e. the opening of the courts, Grag. i. 27,—the judges went out in a body in procession and took their seats; rydja dóm, to challenge the court, Nj.; ganga at dómi, to go into court; nefna dóm, to name the judges (dómnesna); sitja i dómi, to sit in court; mál ferr i dóm, a case goes into court; hleypa upp dómi, to break up the court by force; bera fé i dóm, to bribe the court; doms-afglapan, vide afglapan;-for all these phrases, vide Grág., b. b. in the first chapters, Nj., esp. ch. 140 sqq., Eg. ch. 57, N. G. L. i, Gpl. This sense is now almost obsolete, but it remains in the Manx demster and Scot. doomster. II. doom, judgment, sentence, and this may be the original sense; doms-atkvæði, doms-orð, and doms-uppsaga mean doom, sentence, as pronounced by the presiding judge, Nj., H. E. ii. 115, Sks. 159, Band. 6, Grag. i. 3, 83; domadagt, doomsday, the day of judgment; Norna-dómt, the doom of the Norns, their weird, fate, Yt. 23, Fm. 11; skapa-dómt, id. \(\beta\). judg-III. denoting state, condition, age, in words such ment, opinion. as heidin-domr, Kristin-domr, the beathen, Christian age, faith; konungdómr, a kingdom; biskups-dómr, a bisbopric, etc.; hefja ór heiðnum dómi, to lift out of beathendom, baptize, Sighvat. 2. helgir dómar, relics, Bs., H. E., Grág. ii. 165, Fms. i. 230, v. 143, Gpl. 70: but helgidómr, Old Engl. balidom, Germ. beiligtbum: leyndr d., mystery, puotipior of the N. T.; leynda dóma himnaríkis, Matth. xiii. 11; þenna leyndan dóm, Rom. xi. 25; sjáið, að eg segi yðr leyndan dóm, I Cor. xv. 51. in many compds = Engl. -dom, -bood, -bead; Guð-dómr, Godbead; manndómr, manbood, etc.

dóm-rof, n. disregard of judgment, Grág. i. 87, cp. Gbl. 21. dom-ruoning, f. a challenging of judges, Grag. i. 27.

dom-seta, u, f. sitting in court, judgment, Sks. 638, 641.

dóm-setning, f. opening the court, N. G. L. i. 220.

dóm-staðr, m. court, tribunal, Grág. i. 448, ii. 405, Edda 10. dom-staurr, m. a court bar, properly court rails, but used in N. G. L. i.

Digitized by GOOGIC

dóm-stefna (-stemna), u. f. a citing, summoning, Grág. i. 448. dóm-steinar, m. pl. court-stones, court-ring, Sturl. i. 31, vide dómhringr. dóm-stóll, m. the judgment-seat, John xix. 13, Sks. 622, 637, Hom. 46, Fms. x. 443.

dóm-sæti, n. = dómstóll, Sks. 488, 606.

dom-seetr, adj., in the phrases, vera d., N. G. L. i. 84; eiga domsætt, to be qualified to sit in a court, a lawful judge, Grag. i. 64.

dóm-varzla, u, f. guarding a court, Grág. i. 65. dómvörzlu-maðr, m. a man who guards the court, a javelin-man, Grág. l. c.

DÓNI, a, m. (and compds dóna-logr, -skapr, -háttr); this is a college word, by which the students of the old colleges at Skalholt and Hólar called outsiders as opposed to collegians, like the Philister of Germ. universities: it is still used: from Span. don, through the E. Engl. done, ('In pi dysche zette not pi spone, nober on pe brynke. as unlernyd done,' = einsog ólætör dóni, as an illiterate clown (used mockingly), Bodl. Ashm. MSS. no. 61, about A. D. 1500, Boke of Curtesy, E. Engl. Text Society, 1868.)

dós, f. [cp. Engl. dose, Dan. daase], a small box, snuff-box, (mod. word.) dót, n. [North. E. doit], trumpery, trifles, (cant word.)

DOTTIR, f., gen. dat. acc. dottur, plur. dœtr, later dætr or dætur; gen. dætra, dat. dætrum; the Icel. keeps a single t throughout in the plur., whereas Swed, and Dan, have döttre; dættr also occurs in Sks. B. (a Norse MS.), and at least once or twice in poetry, cp. the rhyme, Ægis dættr ok tættu. Edda (Ed. A. M.) i. 324; and Hlés dættr, Skulda 198: [Gr. θὔγάτηρ; Ulf. daußbtar: A.S. dogbtor; Engl. daugbter; Swed. dotter; Dan. datter; O. H. G. tobtar; Germ. tochter; the Greek has a short v, and the Goth, has au, answering to Gr. o; the diphthongal o and the double t in the Scandin. is only caused by the suppression of the middle consonant gb]:-a daughter; hann átti dóttur eina er Unnr hét, Nj. 1; Þóra dóttir Sigurðar Orms í auga; Þorgerðr dóttir Þorsteins ens Rauða, 2; Höskuldr átti sér dóttur er Hallgerðr hét, id.; er illt at eiga dáðlausa sonu, ok vist ætla ek yor til þess betr felda at þér værit dætr föðurs yðvars ok værit giptar, Ld. 236; gott skaplyndi hefðit þér þá fengit, ef þér værit dætr einhvers bónda, 216; nú veit ek at þú ert d. en ekki sonr, er bú þorir eigi at verja frændr þína, Háv. 43. If suffixed to a name, -dóttir denotes a woman, -son a man, e.g. porsteinn Egils-son, but his sister porgeror Egils-dóttir; Halldórr Ólafs-son, but Halldóra Ólafs-dóttir, vide the Index of Names to Landn., the Sagas, etc.: this custom, in early times common to all Teut. people, is still in almost exclusive use in Icel., where a lady keeps her name all her life, whether married or not: eingadóttir, only daughter; sonar-dóttir, son's daughter; dóttur-dóttir, a daughter's daughter, a granddaughter, Grag. i. 171; dottur-maor, a sonin-law, Germ. eidam, Fms. ix. 240, Grag. i. 175: the waves are poët. called Ranar-dætr, Hlés-dætr, Ægis-dætr, the daughters of Ran, etc., Edda: the Earth is daughter of Onar, and, on the mother's side, of Night, Edda; the Sun is daughter of Mundil-fari, 7. 2. Dótta is a fem. pr. name in Denmark, prob. akin to daughter, Fms. vi.

drabba, 28. (drabb, n., drabbari, 2, m.). to 'drab,' to dirty. draf, n. draff, busks, N. G. L. iii. nos. 2, 8. Luke xv. 16. drafa, 28, to talk tbick; pad drafaði í honum, of a drunken person. drafa, þiðr. 116, v. l., 205, 289, from the M. H. G. drabe or darabe, = tbereby, which the Icel. translator did not understand.

draft, n. tattle, Fas. iii. 423.

draffi, a, m. curdled milk when cooked, Grett. (in a verse); raud-seyddr d., a red-cooked d., a dainty.

drafna, ad, d. sundt, to become rotten as draff. Fas. iii. 325, 451.

drag, n. [draga], in compds as Endrag, a bow-sbot, of distance: spec. a soft slope or valley, i hverri laut og dragi, Arm. ii. 94: in pl. drög, the watercourse down a valley, dals-drög, dala-drög; Gljufrár-drög. Pm. 46; Kúlfadals-drög, id.; fjalla-drög. B. sing. the iron rim on the keel of boat or a sledge; the metaph. phrase, leggja drag undir e-t, to lay the keel under a thing, i. e. to encourage it, Eb. 20. y. a lining, in ermadrög, Bév. 16 (Fr.) b. Icel. also say, leggja drög fyrir e-t, to lay a drag (net) for a thing, i. e. to take some preparatory steps for a thing.

(net) for a supernumerary, additional line to a stanza, Edda (Ht.) 124, Fms. vi. 347.

draga, u, f., vide drögur.

DRAGA, pret. dró, pl. drógu; part. dreginn; pres. dreg; pret. subj. drægi: [Lat. trabere; Ulf. dragan, but only once or twice, = ἐπισωρεύειν in 2 Tim. iv. 3; Hel. dragan = portare, ferre (freq.); A. S. dragan; Germ. tragen; the Engl. distinguishes between to drag and draw, whence the derived words to draggle, trail, drawl; Swed. draga; the Danes have drage, but nearly obliterated except in the special sense to travel,—otherwise they have trække, formed from the mod. Germ. tragen]:—to draw, drag, carry, pull.

A. Act., with acc.

I. to drag, earry, pull; hann dró þau öll út, Nj. 131; djöfla þá er yðr munu d. til eilífra kvala, 273; d. heim við, to drag the logs home, 53; d. sauði, to pick sheep out of a fold, Bs. i. 646, Eb. 106; d. skip fram, to launch a ship; d. upp, to draw her up, drag her ashore, Grág. ii. 433; dró þorgils eptir sér fiskinn, Fs. 129; Egill dró at sér skipit, E. pulled the ship close up to himself, Eg. 221, 306;
dró at sér skipit, E. pulled the ship close up to himself, Eg. 221, 306; dró hann þá af grunninu, Fms. vii. 264; hann halði dregit (pulled) hött order to make the light fainter or stronger; d. e-n til e-s, to draw one síðan yfir hjálm, Eg. 375, cp. Ad. 3; d. föt, skóklæði af e-m, to draw off clothes, shoes; þá var dregin af (stripped off) hosa líkinu, Fms. viii. 265; dró hann hana á hönd ser, be pulled it on bis band, Eg. 378; d. hring á hönd ser, to put a ring on one's band, 306; (hann) tok gullhring, ok dró (pulled) à blóðrefilinn, id.: phrases, er við ramman reip at d., 'ais to pull a rope against the strong man, i. c. to cope with the mighty, Fms. ii. 107, Nj. 10,—the metaphor from a game; d. árat, to pull the oars, Fms. ii. 180, Grett. 125 A: absol. to pull, ok drógu skjótt eptir, they soon pulled up to them, Gullp. 24, Krók. 52: metaph., um margar íþróttir dró hann fast eptir Olafi, in many accomplishments be pressed bard upon Olave, Fms. iii. 17: d. boga, to draw the bow, x. 362, but more freq. benda (bend) boga: d., or d. upp segl, to boist the sails, Eg. 93, Fms. ix. 21, x. 349, Orkn. 260: d. fiska, or simply draga (Luke v. 7), to fish with a book, to pull up fish with a line (hence fisk-drattr, drattr, fishing), Fms. iv. 89, Hým. 21, 23, Fs. 129, Landn. 36, Fas. ii. 31; d. drátt, Luke v. 4; d. net, to fish with a drag-net; also absol., draga & (on or in) & (a river), to drag a river; hence the metaphor, d. langa not at e-u, = Lat. longue ambages, Nj. 139: d. steina, to grind in a hand-mill, Sl. 58, Gs. 15: d. bust or nefi e-m, vide bust: d. anda, to draw breatb; d. öndina um barkann, id., (andar-drattr, drawing breath); d. tönn, to draw 2. phrases mostly metaph.; d. seim, prop. to draw wire, a tooth. metaph, to read or talk with a drawling tone; d. nasir af e-u, to smell a thing, Isl. ii. 136; d. dam af e-u, to draw flavour from; draga dæmi af e-u, or d. e-t til dæmis, to draw an example from a thing, Stj. 13, cp. Nj. 65; d. þýðu eðr samræði til e-s, to draw towards, feel sympathy for, Sks. 358; d. grun & e-t, to suspect, Sturl.; d. spott, skaup, gys, etc. at e-u, to bold a thing up to ridicule, Bs. i. 647; d. á sik dul ok dramb, to assume the air of ..., 655 xi. 3; d. a sik ofbeldi ok dramb, Fms. vii. 20; d. e-n á tálar, to deceive one, metaphor from leading into a trap, 2 Cor. xii. 17; d. vél at e-m, to deceive one, draw a person into wiles, Nj. 280, Skv. 1. 33; d. & vetr, to get one's sheep and cattle through the winter; Hrasnkell dró á vetr kálf ok kið hin firstu misseri, Hrasn. 22, cp. Germ. anbinden, and in mod. Icel. usage setja á vetr; d. nafn af e-m, to draw, derive the name from, Eb. 126 (App.) new Ed.; the phrase, (hann skyldi ckki) fleiri ár yfir höfuð d., more years should not pass over bis bead, be must die, bord. II. to draw a picture; kross lét hann d. í enni á öllum hjálmum með bleiku, Fms. iv. 96; þa dró Tjörvi líkneski beirra á kamarsvegg, Landn. 247; var dregit á skjöldinn leo með gulli, Ld. 78, Pr. 428; í þann tíma sem hann dregt (draws) klæða-föllin (the folds), Mar. (Fr.): d. til stafs (mod.), to draw the letters, of children first trying to write; d. fjödr yfir e-t, a metaph. phrase, to draw a pen over ot through, to bide, cloak a thing : gramm. to mark a vowel with a stroke,a long vowel opp. to a short one is thus called 'dreginn;' hljóðstafir hafa tvenna grein, at þeir sé styttir (sbort) eða dregnir (drawn, marked with a stroke), ok er því betr dregit yfir þann staf er seint skal at kveða, e. g. ári Ari, ér er-, mínu minni, Skálda 171 : to measure, in the phrases, draga kvarða við vaðmál, Grág. i. 497, 498; draga lérept, N. G. L. i. III. to line clothes, etc.; treyja var dregin utan ok innan við rauðu silki, Flov. 19. IV. metaph. to delay; dró hann svá sitt mál, at ..., Sturl. iii. 13; hann dró um þat engan hlut, be made no subterfuge, Hkr. ii. 157; Halldorr dro ba heldr fyrir beim, H. then delayed the time, Ld. 322; vil ek ekki lengr d. þetta fyrir þér, 284; vil ek þessi svör eigi láta d. fyrir mér lengr, Eb. 130. V. with prepp. af, at, a, fram, frá, saman, sundr, etc., answering to the Lat. attrabere, abstrabere, protrabere, detrabere, distrabere, contrabere, etc.; d. at lio, to collect troops: d. saman her, id., Eg. 172, 260, Nj. 127; d. at fong, to collect stores, 208, 259: metaph., ba dró at honum sottin, the sickness drew nearer to bim, be grew worse, Grett. 119; d. af e-m, to take off, to disparage a person, Fms. vi. 287; d. af við e-n, ok mun héðan af ekki af dregit við oss, we sball not be neglected, stinted, Bjarn. 54: mathem. term, to subtract, Rb. 118: d. fram, to bring forward, promote; d. fram bræla, Fms. x. 421, ix. 254, Eg. 254; skil ek þat, at þat man mína kosti hér fram d. (it will be my greatest belp bere), at þú átt ekki vald á mér; d. fram kaupeyri, to make money, Fms. vi. 8; d. saman, to draw together, collect, join, Bs. ii. 18, Nj. 65, 76; d. sundr, to draw asunder, disjoin; d. e-t &, to intimate, (á-dráttr) drag eigi á þat, Sturl. iii. 110; d. undan, to escape; kómu segli við ok drógu undan, Fms. iv. 201; nú lægir segl þeirta ok d. þeir nú undan oss, v. 11: metaph. to delay, Uspakr dró þó undan allt til nætr. Nj. 272; hirðin sá þetta at svá mjök var undan dregit, Fms. ix. 251 (undan-dráttr, delay); hví dregt þú undan at bjóða mér til þín, Glúm. 326, Fms. ix. 251, Pass. 16. 13: mathem., d. rót undan, to extract a root, Alg. 366; d. upp, to draw a picture (upp-drattr, a drawing); to pull up, Edda I; to pull out of the snow, Eg. 546; d. út, to extract, draw out, 655 xxxii. 2; d. undir sik, to draw under oneself, to embezzle, Eg. 61, Fins. vii. 128; d. upp akkeri, to weigh anchor, Jb. 403; d. upp segl, to boist sail, vide above; ljós brann í stofunni ok var dregit upp, Sturl. i. 142; þar brann ljós ok var dregit upp, en myrkt hit neðra, ii. 230; ok er mönnum var í sæti skipat vóru log upp dregin í stofunni, iii. 182; herbergis sveinarnir drógu upp skriðljósin, Fas. iii. 530, cp. Gísl. 29, 113, -in the old halls the lamps (torches) were hoisted up and down, in towards a thing; mikit dregt mik til þess, Fs. 9; engi ofkæti dregt arðelvísk hestr hans, ii. 75: part. dreginn, drawn, pinched, starved, hestar mik til bessarar ferdar, i. e. it is not by my own choice that I undertake this journey, Fms. ix. 352; slikt dró hann til vinsældar, this furthered him in popularity, vii. 175, Sks. 443 B; mun hann slikt til d., it will move, influence bim, Nj. 210; of hann drægi ekki til, if be was not concerned, 2. draga til is used absol, or ellipt., denoting the course of fate, and many of the following phrases are almost impers.; nema til verra dragi, unless matters turn out worse, Nj. 175; buð, dragi til þess sen vera vill, Lat. fata evenient, 185; ef honum vill þetta til dauða d., if tbis draw to bis death, prove fatal to bim, 103, Grett. 114; hat samband heirra er beim dregr badum til bana, which will be fatal to both of them, Nj. 135; enda varð þat fram at koma sem til dró, Ísl. ii. 263; sagði Kveldúlfr at þá (tben) mundi þar til draga sem honum hafði fyrir boðat, Eg. 75; dró til vanda með þeim Rúti ok Unni, it was the old story over again, Nj. 12; dró til vanda um tal þeirra, 129; at hér mundi til mikillar úgiptu draga um kaup bessi, that mickle mischief would arise from this bargain, 20; dró þá enn til sundrþykkju með þeim Svíum, the old feud with the Swedes began over again, Fms. x. 161; ok er úvist til hvers um dregr, Fs. 6; svá er þat, segir Runólst, ef ekki dregt til, unless some unforeseen tbings bappen, Nj. 75; hón kvað eigi úlíkligt at til mikils drægi um, Isl. ii. 19; þá dró nú til hvárttveggja, Bret.; hence til-drög, n. pl. cause.

1. of clouds, shade, darkness, to be drawn before B. IMPERS. a thing as a veil; dimmu (acc.) þykir á draga ráðit Odds, it looked as if gloom were drawing over Odd's affairs, Band. 10; ok er i tok at draga skurimar (acc.), it began to draw into showers, i.e. clouds began to gather, Fms. iii. 206: often ellipt., hratt stundum fyrir en stundum dró frá, [clouds] drew sometimes over, sometimes off, of the moon wading through them, Grett. 114; dregr fyrir sól, [a veil] draws over the sun, he is hid in clouds; ský vônarleysu döpur drjúgum dró fyrir mína gleði-sól, Bb. 2. 9; dregt & gledi biskups, [clouds] drew over the bishop's gladness, it was eclipsed, Bs. ii. 79; eclipsis heitir er fyrir dregr sól eðr tungl, it is called an eclipse when [a veil] draws over the sun or moon, 1812. 4; tunglskin var ljóst, en stundum dró syrir, the moonshine was clear, and in turn [a veil drew over it, Nj. 118; þá sá lítið af tungli ljóst ok dró ymist til eðr frá, Isl. ii. 463; þat gerðisk, at á dregr tunglit, ok verðr eclipsis, Al. 2. in various connections; dró yor (acc.) undir hrakningina, en oss (acc.) undan, you were drawn into a thrashing (i. e. got one), but we escaped, Nj. 141; hann (acc.) dró undan sem nauduligast, be bad a narrow escape, Fms. ix. 392: absol., a noun or personal pronoun in acc. being understood, litt dro enn undan vid bik, there was little power of drawing out of thy reach, i.e. thy blow did its work right well, Nj. 199, 155; hvárki dró sundr né saman með þeim, of two running a dead heat: metaph. phrases, mun annarsstaðar meira slóða (acc.) draga, there will be elsewhere a greater trial left, i. e. the consequences will be still worse elsewbere, 54; saman dró hugi þeirra, their hearts were drawn together, of a loving pair, Bard. 271; saman dró kaupmala med peim, they struck a bargain, literally the bargain was drawn tight, Nj. 49; hann hreinsar þat skjótt þóat nokkut im (acc.) hafi á oss dregit af samneyti (although we have been a little infected by the contact with) annarlegs sidferdis, Fms. ii. 261; allt slaft (acc.) dró af Hairi, i. e. H. became quite mute, Grett. (in a verse): in a temp. sense, til bess er dró at degi, till the day drew nigh, Fms. x. 138; þá er dró at miðri nótt, Grett. 140; bá er dregr at Jólum, Yule drew nigh, Fbr. 138; dregr at hjaldri, the battle-bour draws nigh, Fms. vi. (in a verse); dró at því (the time drew nigb), at hann var banvænn, Eg. 126: of sickness, hunger, or the like, to sink, be overcome by, svá dregr at mér af elli, svengd ok borsta, at ..., Fms. iii. 96; nú þykki mér sem fast dragi at þér, thou art sinking fast, Fas. ii. 221; ok er lokið var kvæðinu dregr at Oddi fast, O. was sinking fast, 321: of other things, tok ba at d. fast at heyjum hans, bis stock was very low, Fms. iii. 208; boku dregr upp, a fog draws on, rises, 97 (in a verse), but ok taki sú þoka (nom.) fyrir at d. norðrljósit, Sks. 211 (better þá þoku, 2cc.) C. REFLEX. to draw oneself, move; ef menn dragask til föruneytis beirra (join them) úbedit, Grág. ii. 270; Sigvaldi dregsk út frá flotanum, S. draws away from the fleet, Fms. xi. 140; ofmjök dragask lendir menn fram, i. e. the barons drew far too forward, vii. 22; hyski drosk á flótta, they drew away to flight, Fms. vi. (in a verse); skeiðr drógusk at vígi, the ships drew on to battle, iii. 4 (in a verse); dragask undir = draga undir sik, to take a thing to oneself, Grág. ii. 150; dragask á hendr e-m. drógusk opt þeir menn á hendr honum er úskilamenn voru, Sturl. i. 136; dragask e-n á hendr, hann kvað þess enga ván, at hann drægisk þá á hendr, ii. 120; dragask aptr á leið, to remain bebind, Rb. 108; dragask int, to recede, of the tide, 438; dragask saman, to draw back, draw together, be collected, Fms. i. 25, Bs. i. 134; e-m dragask penningar. Fms. vi. 9; d. undan, to be delayed, x. 251; the phrase, herr, lio dregsk e-m, the troops draw together, of a levy, i. 94, vii. 176, Eg. 277; dragask å legg, to grow up, Hkr. iii. 108; sem aldr hans ok vitsmunir drógusk fram, increased, Fms. vi. 7; þegar honum drósk aldr. wben be rrew up, Fs. 9; dragask á legg, to grow into a man; dragask við e-t, to come discouraged, Fms. viii. 65; d. vel, illa, to do well, ill, Fs. 146: so be morn out, exbausted, drosk þá liðit mjök af kulda, Sturl. iii. 20; Llike a ghost.

mjök dregnir, Fms. ix. 270; görðisk fénaðr dreginn mjök, drawn, tbin, iii. 208; stóð þar í heykleggi einn ok dregit at öllu megin, a tapering bayrick, Hav. 53: of sickness, Herra Andrés lagdisk sjúkr, ok er hann var dreginn mjök, Fms. ix. 276.

β. recipr., þau drógusk um einn gullhring, they fought, pulled, Fas. iii. 387. From the reflex. probably β. recipr., þau drógusk um einn originates, by dropping the reflex. suffix, the mod. Swed. and Dan. at draga = to go, esp. of troops or a body of men; in old writers the active form hardly ever occurs in this sense (the reading drogu in the verse Fms. iii. 4 is no doubt false); and in mod, usage it is equally unknown in Icel., except maybe in allit. phrases as, e. g. út á djúpið hann Oddr dró, Snót 229 new Ed.; to Icel. ears draga in this sense sounds strange; even the reflex, form is seldom used in a dignified sense; vide the references above.

draga, u, f., only in pl. drögur, timber carried on borseback and trailing along the ground, Glum. 368; dragua-hross, a dray-horse, 369: metric. term, a sort of anadiplosis, when a stanza begins with the last word of the preceding one, Edda (Ht.) 126, Skálda 191.

dragi, a, m. a trail or long line of laden borses or carts, Bjarn. 36: cp. heim-dragi, a loiterer, Lex. Poët.

drag-kyrtill, m. a trailing kirtle or gown, Fms. vi. 440, viii. 336. drag-loka, u, f. a bolt; metaph. a loiterer, Finnb. 300.

drag-máll, adj. drawling, Fas. i. 382.

dragna, 20, [Engl. drain], intrans. to drag, trail along, Fas. iii. 525, Sturl. ii. 49; Skiði d. eptir, Sd. 169; hann dragnar síðan heim at búrinu, Háv. 54; haíði losnað annarr þvengrinn, ok dragnaði skúfrinn, Eb. 220: reflex., Fas. ii. 497.

drag-nál, f. a bodkin, Fas. iii. 621.

drag-net, n. a drag-net, opp. to lag-net, a laying-net. drag-reip, n. a 'draw-rope,' balyard, Bs. i. 276, Edda (Gl.), Fms. vi.

dragsa, 20, = dragna, Karl. 147, 554.

drag-sior, adj. trailing behind, of a gown, Eg. 702.

dralla, ao, (drall, n.), qs. dragla, to loiter, (slang word.)

I. prop. a roll of fat on the neck of fat men or DRAMB, n. beasts, hnakka-dramb, hnakka-drembi, cp. drambr, m. a knot in char-II. metaph. arrogance, Nj. 47; ofbeldi coal or logwood; hence β. pomp, Fms. x. 232: drambs-fullr, adj. ok dramb, Fms. vii. 20. arrogant, Hom. 151, Fms. x. 222: drambs-maor, m. a baughty, pompous person, Fms. x. 254, Hkr. ii. 288.

dramba, 20, to be baughty, pompous, Flov. 29, Hom. 135; d. i virðingu, 656 C. 11; d. yfir e-m, Greg. 22, Nidrst. 7; d. yfir ser, to boast, Fas. i. 36; d. í móti e-u, Fms. xi. 11.

dramb-hosur, f. pl. a sort of 'court-breeches,' Fms. vi. 440.

dramb-lauss, adj. (-leysi, n.), unpresuming, Bs. i. 275. dramb-latr, adj. baughty, Greg. 24, Hom. 7, Fas. i. 89, Luke i. 51, Pass. 35. 7 dramb-læti, n. pride, Fas. i. 18, Str. 81.

dramb-samliga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), baughtily, Hkr. iii. 244, Sks. 451. dramb-samr, adj. baughty, Sks. 701, Fas. i. 49, Pass. 21. 7.

dramb-semi, f. baughtiness, H. E. i. 519, Al. 153.

dramb-visi, f. = drambsemi, Str. 82.

dramb-viss, adj. = drambsamr, Hom. 152, Karl. 135.

dramb-yrði, n. pl. baugbty language, Sks. 558.

DRANGR, m. a lonely up-standing rock, Dipl. v. 23; kletta-drangr, fjall-drangr, etc., freq. in Icel., vide Eggert Itin. 497: many places take their names from these basalt rocks, Drangar (pl.), Drang-ey, Drangavík, Dranga-jökull, etc.; in popular lore these rocks were thought to be giants turned into stones, Isl. Þjóðs.

drang-steinn, m. = drangr, Greg. 62, Bs. i. 346, Mar. 93 (Fr.) drasa, u. f. [dros], prattle; drösu ok lygi, Anecd. 14; drösur (pl.) ok hégómlig orð, 78; hence the mod. drösla or drusla, u, f. a vulgar ditty. drasill, drösull, m., poët. a borse, cp. Ygg-drasill, vide Lex. Poët.

dratta, 28, (qs. dragta), to trail or walk like a cow, Fas. ii. 128, i. 484: Homer's ellimous is rendered by drattandi.

draug-hentr, n. adj. a sort of metre, Edda (Ht.) 137; a supernumerary syllable being added to every line, this syllable seems to have been called draugr, a plug or log.

DRAUGR, m. [Lat. truncus is perhaps akin]: Edda (Gl.); this sense, however, only occurs in old poets, in compds such as el-draugr, ben-d., hiròi-d., her-d., óðal-d., jó-d., gervi-d., in poetical circumlocutions of a man, cp. Edda 68, 85.

II. metaph. in prose (as it is now used), a ghost, spirit, esp. the dead inhabitant of a cairn was called draugr, Ld. 326, Fms. iii. 200, Bs. i. 256, Stj. 492. I Sam. xxviii. 15, Róm. 186, 217, Orkn. 210 (in a verse), Fas. (Hervar. S.) i. 436–438, Hkv. 2. 49, Isl. (Hard. S.) ii. 47 (in a verse); it also occurs in the verse on the Runic stone in Schonen, quoted and explained in Rafn Antiq. Orient. 178, but it is uncertain whether it is here used in the first or B. a sluggard, a drone who walks about as a ghost; second sense. draugs-ligr, adj.; drauga-skapr, m.; draugast, ad, to walk about y. metric., vide draughentr above.

drottinn, m. the lord of ghosts, is one of the names of Odin, Hkr. i. 11. Peroration; according to the length, a drapa is tvitug or a poem of drauga-fé, n. boards in cairns or tombs, Fas. ii. 368. drange gangr, m. a gang of ghosts. drauga-sögur, f. pl. gbost stories in nursery tales, for a collection of such, vide Isl. þjóðs. i. 222-354 draum-kons, u. f. a 'dream-woman,' a spirit in dreams, Gisl. 41. Þorst. Síðu H. 185.

draum-maor, m. a man who appears to another in a dream, Fms. ii. 230, viii. 107: a dreamer, Stj. 193. Gen. xxxvii. 19.

draum-orar, f. pl. (now m. pl.), dream-phantasies, Fas. iii. 79.

DRAUMR, m. [A.S. dream; Hel. drom; Engl. dream; Swed .- Dan. dröm; Germ. traum; Matth. i. and ii, and by a singular mishap Matth. xxvii. 10. are lost in Ulf., so that we are unable to say how he rendered the Gr. ovap:—the A. S. uses dream only in the sense of joy, music, and dreamer = a barper, musician, and expresses draumr, Engl. dream, by sveofnas.—even the Ormul, has dræm = a sound: so that the Engl. dream seems to have got its present sense from the Scandin. On the other hand, the Scandin, have dream in the proper sense in their earliest poems of the heathen age, ballir draumar, Vtkv. 1; Hvat er bat drauma, Em. 1; it is used so by Bragi Gamli (9th century), Edda 78 (in a verse); cp. draum-bing, Hkv. 2.48, whilst the A.S. sense of song is entirely strange to Icel.: it is true that svefnar (pl.) now and then occurs in old poets = Lat. somnium, but this may be either from A. S. influence or only as a poetical synonyme. Which of the two senses is the primitive and which the metaph.?]:—a dream. Many old sayings refer to draumr,—vakandi d., a day dream, waking dream, like the Gr. umap; von er vakandi draumr, bope is a waking dream, or von er vakanda manns d.; ekki er mark at draumum, dreams are not worth noticing, Sturl. ii. 217; opt er ljótr d. fyrir litlu, Bs. ii. 225. Icel. say, marka drauma, to believe in dreams, Sturl. ii. 131; segja e-m draum, to tell one's dream to another, Nj. 35; sáda draum, to read (interpret) a dream, Fms. iv. 381, x. 270, xi. 3; draumr rætisk, the dream proves true, or (rarely) draum (acc.) ræsir, id., Bret.; vakna við vándan (eigi góðan) draum, to wake from a bad dream, of a sudden, violent awakening, Fms. iii. 125, ix. 339, Stj. 394. Judg. viii. 21, 22; vakna af draumi, to waken from a dream; drevma draum, to dream a dream; lata e-n njóta draums, to let one enjoy bis dream, not wake bim: gen. draums is used adverb. in the phrase, e-m er draums, one is benumbed, dreamy; stóð hann upp ok fylgði englinum, ok hugði sér draums vera, Post. 656 C; draums kved ek ber vera, Hkv. Hjörv. 19; þótti honum sjálfum sem draums hefði honum verit, O. H. L. 81: hence comes the mod. e-m er drums, of stupid insensibility. Passages referring to dreams-Hkr. Hálfd. S. ch. 7, Am. 14. 25, Edda 36, 1b. ch. 4, Nj. ch. 134, Ld. ch. 33, Gunnl. S. ch. 2, 13, Hard. S. ch. 6, Lv. ch. 21 (very interesting), Gísl. ch. 13, 24 sqq., Glum. ch. 9, 21, porst. Síðu H., Vápn. 21, Bjarn. 49, Fbr. ch. 16, 37, porl. S. ch. 7, Sturl. i. 200, 225, ii. 9, 99, 190, 206-216, iii. 251-254, 272, Rafns S. ch. 7, 14, Laur. S. ch. 2, 65, Sverr. S. ch. 1, 2, 5, 42, Fms. vi. 199, 225, 312, 403, 404, vii. 162, Jómsv. S. ch. 2, etc. etc. COMPDS: drauma-maor, m. a great dreamer, Gisl. 41. draumaraoning, f. the reading of dreams, Anal. 177. drauma-akrimal, n a dream monster, phantasm, Fas. ii. 414. drauma-vetr, m., Gisl. 63.

draum-skrök, n. a dream phantasm, Ld. 122. draum-spakr, adj. skilled in interpreting dreams, Fms. vi. 361.

draum-speki, f. skill in interpreting dreams, Fms. iv. 30.

draum-spekingr, m. a skilful interpreter of dreams, Stj. 401. I Sam. xxviii. 3.

draum-stoli, adj. (cp. vit-stola), a 'dream-stolen' man, i. c. one who never dreams,—the ancients thought this a disease; bat er ekki manns eðli at hann dreymi aldri, Fms. vi. 199, cp. also Hkr. i. 71.

draum-bing, n. dream-meeting, poët. sleep, Hkv. 2. 49.

DRAK, f. (draka, u, f., Thom. l. c., mod. rák, f.), a streak; lá eptir ein blóð-drák í léreptinu, . . . fagra heilsu barnsins ok blóð-drákina, Bs. ii, 170; hafði hann þá blóðrás merkiligasta, at ein draka (drák) gékk af hægra veg hanns minnis í skakk um þvert andlitið á vinstri kinninni, ok með bví sama marki vitraðist hann síðan mörgum mönnum, Thom. 356; ein rauð blóðdrög, MS. Holm. no. 17 (Fr.), vide drög: rák is at present a very freq. word in Icel., but is hardly found in old writers; the identity of these two words cannot be doubted.

dráp, n. [drepa], slaughter, Eg. 222, Fms. v. 235, etc.; mann-dráp, man-slaughter, bomicide.

DRAPA, u, f. a beroic, laudatory poem; this word is probably derived from drepa, to strike, i.e. to strike the chords of an instrument, vide drepa A. I, as poems were at early times accompanied by instrumental music: the drapas were usually composed in the so-called 'drottkvætt' metre, q. v., and were much in fashion from the 10th to the 12th or even to the 13th century, but esp. flourished at the end of the 10th and during the 11th; the earliest poems of this kind on record are of the end of the 9th century: even poems in honour of gods, Christ, the holy cross, saints, etc. are called drapur if composed in the proper metre; but most of them are in honour of kings, earls, princes, or eminent men, vide Skáldatal. A drápa usually consisted of three parts, upp-haf introduction, stef or stefjamál the burden or middle part interpolated with artificial burdens, whence the name stefja-drápa, and lastly slæmr or pú skalt d. af tvá drykki, id.; d. brjóst (acc.), to suck (v. brjóst-drekkr), twenty stanzas, sextug or sixty stanzas, and so on; it is called erfi-drapa if in praise of a deceased man, mansongs-drapa (Germ, minne-sang) if addressed to a lady-love, etc.; as to metre, we have tog-drapa, hrynheud drápa, etc.; drápa is sometimes distinguished from flokkr, a less laudatory and shorter poem without burdens, Fms, vi. 301; hví ortir bú flokk um konunginn, eðr þótti þér hann ekki drápunnar verðr, Ísl. ii. 237. and the classical passage Knytl, S. ch. 10. Passages in the Sagas referring to the delivery of these poems are very numerous, e. g. Guunl. S. ch. 7-9, Eg. ch. 62, 63 (Höfuð-lausn), 80 (Sonatorek and Arinbjarnar-d.), 81 (Berudrápa), Ld. ch. 20 (Hús-drápa), Hallfr. S. ch. 6, 11, Bjarn. 6, 39, Fms. iii. 65, v. 173-175, Knytl. S. l. c., O. H. L. ch. 60, 61, Har. S. Hard. (Fms. vi.) ch. 24, 66, 110 (the interesting story of Stuf the Blind). Skáldat, 252, 268, Fb. iii. 241, 242, Hkr. i. 185, 186; the last on record is Sturl. iii. 303-306, referring to A. D. 1263, cp. also Sturl. ii. 56; most of these poems derive their name from the king or person in whose honour they were composed, e. g. Ólafs-d., Knúts-d. (king Canute), Eiriks-d., etc., vide Fms. xii, s. v. kvæði, or Jómsvíkinga-d., Íslendingad., the name of a laudatory poem addressed to the Icelandic people; or referring to other subjects, as Vell-ekla (want of gold), Hafgerdinga-d., Landn. 106, or Kross-d., Róða-d. (the Holy Rood), etc. Mythical drápas COMPDS: drápu-mál, n. a are, e.g. Ragnars-d., Haustlöng, Hus-d. lawsuit for a d., viz. a love song (mansongs-d.), which songs were forbidden, Fs. 87. drápu-stúfr, m. a nickname for a poetaster. Landn. 168. dráp-gjarn, adj. blood-tbirsty, Sks. 89.

drap-veor, n. a furious, destructive gale, Lv. 59. DRATTR, m., gen. ar, dat. drætti, pl. drættir, acc. dráttu and drætti, [draga, cp. Engl. draught]:-pulling, Jm. 1: metaph. besitation, Fms. x. II: a draught, of fishing (fiski-drattr), but esp. of a drag-net, Luke v. 4. DREGG, f., gen. sing. and nom. pl. dreggjar, dregs, lees; peir oguolegu skulu dreggjarnar af súpa, Ps. lxxv. 8, Fas. ii. 26: metaph., N.G. L. i. 330. dregill, m., dimin., dat. dregli, a ribbon, Nj. 214, Hkr. i. 320, Edda 20, O. H. L. 65, H. E. ii. 113; dregla-lið = dreglat lið, soldiers decorated with ribbons, Fb. ii. 337,-a reference to the custom of neophytes after baptism wearing a white ribbon round their heads.

drogla, 20, to lace, furnish with a ribbon, Sturl. iii. 218.

dreif, f. scattering; & dreif, id.; & vio ok dreif, scattered abroad. Grönd. 166. 2. a chain; haukr bundinn i gull-dreifum, and haukrinn komst hvergi þvíat dreifarnar héldu honum, El. (Fr.)

DREIFA, O, [Ulf. draibjan; v. drifa], to scatter, disperse, with dat.; dreifdu þeir þá öllu liðinu, Nj. 207, Hkr. i. 250; er þú dreifdir svá. mjök frå ber fjölmenni bví er ..., Fms. vii. 182: metaph. to divert, d. hug e-s, Hom. 38: with the notion of violence, to scatter, Post. 656 C. 14: to strew, tak duft ok dreif á sárit, Pröver 471: to sprinkle, d. vatni, Fms. i. 262, Ísl. ii. 403, Barl. 185: adding acc. of the person, d. e-n blodi, to bedabble with blood, Am. 19; ok dreifir ba medr blodinu, Stj. B. with acc. to disperse, dissolve; dreifoum ver Guos ovini (acc.). 655 xxxii; voru dreifo oll bein hans, 623. 33 (very rarely). reflex. to be spread out, Eg. 530; of the branches of a tree, Edda 10: ord dreifask (gramm.), words are derived from, Skálda 205.

dreifing, f. scattering, diffusing, Stj. 244, H. E. i. 500.

dreift, n. adj. 'adrift,' scattered, in the phrase, fara d., of troops, to march in loose order, Fms. i. 71, v. 56; dreifara, viii. 213.

dreita, tt, [drita], in the phrase, d. e-n inni, to lock one up so that be is forced to do bis business within doors (a disgrace), Sturl. i. 198, Ld. 209.

DREKI, a, m. [from the Gr. δράκων; Lat. draco; A. S. draca; Germ. drache: Engl. dragon: Swed. drake: Dan. dragel: - a dragon. Al. 160. 656 A, Gullb. ch. 4; this word, which undoubtedly is of foreign origin, is however very old; it occurs in Vsp. 65 (there is no reason to suspect the genuineness of this verse); it is most freq. used by poets of the 10th and 11th centuries, and is especially used of ships of war bearing a dragon's head as beaks, Fms. ii. 179, 182, 217, 303, iv. 354, v. 311, vi. 314, 360, vii. 51, 109, 248, x. 36, 77, 204-206, xi. 45, 375. the constellation Scorpion, Rb. 408. 2. naut. a small ancbor. COMPDS: dreka-hamr, m. the slough of a dragon, Fas. ii. 378. hofuð, n. a dragon's bead as a ship's beak, Eg. 42, Hkr. iii. 94. dreks. liki, n. the shape of a dragon, Niorst. I. dreka-merki, n. the sign of a dragon, Karl. 351; the constellation Scorpio is also called Spord-drekamerki. The language distinguishes between flug-dreki, the flying dragon of the tales, and spord-dreki, a tailed dragon, i.e. a scorpion.

drekka, u, f. drink, beverage, Edda 48: a banquet, N.G. L. i. 91, Og. 13; cp. Ægis-drekka, the banquet at Ægir, Edda.

DREKKA, pret. drakk, pl. drukku; sup. drukkit; pres. drekk; pret. subj. drykki; [Ulf. drigkan; A.S. drinkan; Engl. drink; O.H.G. trinkan; M. H. G. trinken; Dan. drikke; Swed. dricka]:-to drink, the beverage or feast in acc.; d. mjöð, Hm. 18; mungát, öl, Fms. viii. 166. Hm. 82; d. full, minni (a toast), Eg. 552, Fms. vi. 442; d. horn, to drain, drink off a born, a cup, Hkr. i. 35; síðan tók Kolskeggr justu eina af miði fulla ok drakk, Nj. 43; d. drykk, to drink a draught. Fms. xi. 233; eptir þat tók þórir kalkann ok drakk af tvá drykki, Gullþ. 7; Mar. 656 A. 23, cp. Gbl. 504. acc.; d. Jói, Fins. vi. 100, Fagrsk. 4 (in the poem of Hornklofi); d. veizlu, Nj. 11; d. brullaup, Fms. xi. 88; d. erfi, Nj. 167.
y. denoting the mode of drinking; d. ein-menning, to drink one to one, Eg. 551; d. tví-menning, to drink two to two, id.; d. fast, to drink bard, Eb. 184; d. úmælt, to drink without measure (cp. mál-drykkja), Fms. iii. 18; d. til e-s, to drink to a person, Eg. 552, Sturl. iii. 305, Bs. i. 848, 798; d. á e-n, id., Fms. iv. 333, vi. 442 (cp. á-drykkja); d. e-n af stokki, to drink one under the table, iv. 167; d. frá sér vit, to drink one's wits away, ix. 339, Hm. 11; the allit. phrase, d. ok dæma, to drink and ebatter, Rm. 29: adding the prepp. 2f, or, to drink off a cup; d. 2f dýra hornum, Fms. vi. 442, Eg. 206, 207: absol. to drink, bold a feast, Eg. 43. 8. impers. (vide á-drykkir) of a ship, to sbip a sea, metaph., Al. e. recipr., drekkask a, to drink to one another, Hkr. ii. 249, 139. €. recipr., dre N. G. L. i. 211, Js. 78. 2. part. pass. drukkinn, drunken, tipsy, Eb. 154, Fms. i. 59, Eg. 552.

drekk-hladinn, part. 'drench-loaden,' a ship laden till she sinks. drekkja, t and b, [Ulf. dragkjan; Engl. drencb], to drown, with dat., Edda (pref.) 144, Fms. iii. 28, Fas. ii. 35: metaph. to swamp, Fms. x. 395: with acc., Hom. 154 (rarely): reflex. to be submerged, Fms. xi. 66. drembi-liga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), baughtily, Fms. vi. 155, x. 237, Nj.

78, Fas. i. 39; cp. rembiligr.

drengi-liga, adv. brave, bravely, Korm. 238, Nj. 180, 258, Ld. 206. drengi-ligr, adj. brave, valiant, Ld. 272, Fms. vii. 105, xi. 57: generous, vi. 96, Nj. 73, Boll. 348.

drengja, d, a naut. term, to bind fast, baul taut to a pole (drengr); taka akkeri ok d. við ása, Fms. vii. 54; d. með köðlum, 82.

dreng-leysi, n. want of generosity, unmanliness, Stj. 396.

dreng-lundsor and -lyndr, adj. noble-minded, Hkr. i. 327, Nj. 30, Fms. ii. 220; hogyærr ok drenglyndr, gentle-minded and bigb-minded, Nj. 30 (of Njal).

dreng-maör, m. a bachelor, opp. to bondi, N.G.L. i. 21, 98: a stout doughty man, Lex. Poët.

dreng-mannliga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), bravely, doughtily, Nj. 78, v.l. dreng-menska, u, f. boldness, Fas. i. 404.

DRENGR, m., pl. ir, gen. drengs, pl. drengir, on Runic stones drengjar; this is a most curious word, and exclusively Scandinavian; it occurs in the A. S. poem By noth, but is there undoubtedly borrowed from the Danes, as this poem is not very old. 1. the earliest form was probably drangr, q. v., a rock or pillar, which sense still remains in Edda (Gl.) and in the compd ás-drengr, cp. Ivar Aasen; it also remains in the verb drengja. then metaphorically came to denote a young unmarried man, a backelor, A. S. bagestald, N. H. G. bagestolz; drengir heita ungir menn ok búlausir, Edda 107; ungr d., a youth, 623. 22, Post. 656 C. 32, Edda 35; drengr, a youth, Stj. 409; hverrar zettar ertú d., 465; (hence the mod. Dan. sense of a boy); far-d., a sailor.

3. hence came the usual sense, a sense of a boy); far-d., a sailor. bold, valiant, worthy man, and in this sense it is most freq. in all periods of the language. Drengr is a standing word in the Swed, and Dan. Runic monuments, góðr drengr, drengr harða góðr, denoting a good, brave, gallant man, a bold and gentle beart; lagoi pá hvert fram sitt skip sem d. var ok skap hafði til, Fms. vi. 315; drengir heita vaskir menn ok batnandi, Edda 107; hraustr d., a gallant d., Ld. 50; d. fullr, a bluff, out-spoken man, Isl. ii. 363; göfuligt d., Bær. 12; d. góðr, nobleminded; audigr at fé ok d. góðr, Fms. vi. 356; hann var enn bezti d. ok hófsmaðr um allt, Ld. 100; drengr góðr ok öriggr í öllu, Nj. 30; ekki byki mér þú sterkr, en drengt ertú góðt, thou art not strong, but thou art a good fellow, Lv. 109; drengs dáð, a' derring do, the deed of a drengr, Fbr. 90 (in a verse): also used of a lady, kvennskörungr mikill ok d. góðr ok nokkut skaphörð, Nj. 30 (of Bergthora); allra kvenna grimmust ok skaphörðust ok (but) d. góðr þar sem vel skyldi vera, 147 (of Hildigunna): the phrases, litill d., a small dreng, or d. at verri, denoting a disgraced man, Nj. 68; at kalla pik ekki at verra dreng, to call thee a dreng none the less for that, Ld. 42; drengir en eigi dadleysingjar, drengs' and no lubbers, Sturl. iii. 135; drengr and niðingr are opposed, N. G. L. ii. 420: at Hallgeror yroi beim mestr drengr, greatest belper, prop, Nj. 76; at þú mættir drengrinn af verða sem beztr, that thou couldst get the greatest credit from it, Gisl. 48: the phrase, hafa dreng i serk, to bave a man (i.e. a stout, bold beart) in one's sark, in one's breast, Fms. ix. 381: in addressing, goor d., my dear fellow, Eg. 407: cp. 'et quod ipsi in posterum vocarentur Drenges,' Du Cange (in a letter of William the Conqueror). COMPDS: drengja-móðir, f. a mother of drengja-val, n. chosen, gallant men, Fas. beroes, a cognom., Hdl. 18. drengs-aoal, n. the nature of a d., Km. 23. drengsi. 73, 304. bot, f. what makes a man the better d., Fms. ii. 276, vi. 107, Karl. 120. drengs-brago, n. the deed of a d., brave deed, Sturl. ii. 84.

dreng-skapr, m., gen. ar, courage, bigh-mindedness; the phrase, falla med drengskap, to fall sword in band, Fms. ii. 42; vit ok d., xi. 112; deyja með drengskap, opp. to lifa með skömm, v. 136; þínum drengskap (manliness) skal ek við bregða, Nj. 13: allit., dáð ok d.; með litlum drengskap, cowardly, Fms. viii. 29; má þat verða til drengskapar, Isl. ii. 366; drengskapar-raun, trial of d., Sturl, ii. 62, β. to bold a feast, the feast in drep, n. [A. S. drepe; Germ. treff], a smart, blow; the legal bearing of this word is defined Grag. Vsl. ch. 10-13; wound and 'drep' are distinguished-þat ero sár er þar blæðir sem á kom, en drep ef annars-staðar blæðir, ch. 51, cp. N. G. L. i. 69, 164, Eb. ch. 23: trail, vide dögg. slaying, killing, = dráp, Grág. Vsl. ch. 111. 8. plague, pest 3. plague, pest, = drepsótt, Stj. 546, Bret. 46, Sks. 731 B: a malignant disease, N. G. L. i. 145; metaph., Al. 86. 4. medic. mortification, gangrene, Fms. iii. 184. ix. 36, Bs. i. 346, Fél. ix. 207.

DREPA, pret. drap, and pers. drapt, mod. drapst, pl. drápu; pret. subj. drzpi; part. drepit; pres. drep; with the suff. neg. pret. drap-2, Orkn.: [A.S. drepan; Dan. dræbe; Swed. drapa; O. H. G. trefan; mod. Germ. treffen, whence the mod. Dan. treffe, in the sense to bit; Ulf. uses slaban and stautjan, but never dripan; in Engl. the word is lost.]

A. WITH ACC., OR ABSOL. högg (a blow) or the like being understood, to strike, beat: I. act. of music, to strike the chords, (cp. phrases such as, slá danz, to strike up for a dance; slagt is battle and poem, Trolla-slagr and Gýgjar-slagr are names of poems); hann tók hörpu sína ok drap strengi (struck the strings) til slags, Stj. 458 (hence drápa, a song); d. e-n vendi, to strike with a rod, Skm. 26: to knock, d. á dyrr, or d. högg á dyrr, to knock at a door, Nj. 150; síðan gengu þau heim bæði ok drápu á dyrr, 153; drápu þar á dyrr, Sturl. iii. 154: metaph., d. á. e-t, to touch slightly on a matter; d, both or keraldi, to knock the bottom out of a jar, Fms. xi. 34; d. járn, to beat iron (a blacksmith's term) with a sledge-hammer, Grett. 129, cp. drep-sleggja. sense of violence, to knock, strike; afallit hafdi drepit hann inn i batinn, Bs. i. 422; at eigi drepir þú mik í djúp, that thou knockest me not into the deep, Post. 656 B. 9; herða klett drep ek þér hálsi af, Ls. 57. a law term, to smite, strike: ef madr drepr (smites) mann, ok vardar hat skoggang, Grág. ii. 116; eigu menn eigi at standa fyrir þeim manni er drepit hefir annan, id.; ef maðr drepr mann svá at bein brotna, 14; nú vænisk så maðr því er drap, at..., 15; þat er drep ef bein brotna, ok verðr sá úæll till dóms er drepit hefir, 16; nú vænisk hinn því, at hann y. the phrases, d. e-n til heljar, Grag. ii. hafi drepit hann, 19. 161, or d. til dauds, to smite to death; Josúa drap til dauda alla þjóð Anakim, Stj. 456; d. í hel, id., Hbl. 27; hence 8. metaph. or ellipt. to kill, put to death, cp. Lat. caedere, Engl. smite; eigi er manni skylt at d. skógarmann, þótt..., Grág. ii. 162; skulu vér nú fara at honum ok d. hann, Nj. 205; þar varð illa með þeim því at Ásgrímr drap Gaut, 39; til bess at d. Grim, Eg. 114; toku beir af eignum jarla konungs en drápu suma, Fms. i. 6; er drepit hafði fóstra hans..., eigi hæfir at d. svá fríðan svein..., d. skyldi hvern mann er mann údæmðan vá, 80; konung drápum fyrstan, Am. 97; drap hann (smote with the bammer) hina öldnu jötna systur, pkv. 32; d. mátti Freyr hann með hendi β. in a game (of chess), to take a piece; bá drap sinni, Edda 23. jarl af honum riddara, Fms. iv. 366; tafisins er hann hafði drepit, vi. 29; Hvitserkr hélt töfl einni er hann hafði drepit, Fas. i. 285. y. adding prepp. af, nior, to slaughter, kill off; bott hiromenn binir sé drepnir nior sem svin, Fms. vii. 243: d. af, to slaughter (cattle); yxni fimm, ok d. af, Ísl. ii. 330; láttu mik d. af þenna lýð, Post. 656 B. 9. phrases; d. e-m skúta, to taunt, charge one with; áfelli þat er konungr drap oss skúta um, Fms. iv. 310; hjarta drepr stall, the beart knocks as it were against a block of stone from fear, Hkr. ii. 360, Orkn., Fbr. 36 (hence stall-dræpt hjarta, a 'block-beating' faint beart): d. upp eld, to strike fire, Fms. iv. 338: d. sik or droma, to throw off the fetter, Edda 19: d. e-t undir sik, to knock or drag down, skaltú standa hjá er fjandi sá drepr mik undir sik, Grett. 126, 101 A: d. sloo, to make a slot or sleuth (trail); d. kyrtlarnir slooina, the cloaks trailed along the ground so as to leave a track, Gisl. 154: to trail or make a track of droves or deer, Lex. Poët. : d. e-t út, to divulge a thing (in a bad sense), Fms. vi. 208; d. yfir e-t, to hide, suppress, drap hann bratt yfir (be soon mastered) harm sinn, Bs. i. 140 (hence yfir-drep, bypocrisy, i. e. cloaking). II. reflex., drepask, to perisb, die, esp. of beasts; fé hans drapsk aldrei af megrð ok drephríðum, Eb. 150; drapsk allt hans fólk, Fms. v. 250. 2. recipr. to put one another to death; bá. drepask bræðr fyrir ágirni sakar, Edda 40; nú drepask menn (smite one another), edr særask edr vegask, Grag. ii. 92; ef menn d. um nætr, Fms. vii. 296; er sjálfir bárusk vápn á ok drápusk, viii. 53; en er bændr fundu at þeir drápusk sjálfir, 68; drepask niðr á leið fram, Ld. 238; drepask menn fyrir, to kill one another's men, Fms. vii. 177; görðisk af því fjandskapr með þeim Steinólfi svá at þeir drápusk þar (menn?) fyrir, Gullb. III. impers., drepr honum aldregi ský (acc.) í augu, bis eyes never get clouded, of the eagle flying in the face of the sun, Hom. 47; ofrkappit (acc.) drepr fyrir beim (their high spirits break down) begar hamingjan brestr, Fms. vi. 155; drap þó heldr í fyrir honum, be ratber grew worse, i. e. bis eyes grew weaker, Bjarn. 59; nú drepr or hljóð (acc.) fyrst or kontinginum, the king became silent at once, Fms. xi. 115; stall drepr or hjarta e-s, Fbr. 36 (vide above, I. 4); ofan drap flaugina (acc.), the flaug was knocked down, Bs. i. 422; regn drepr i gögnum e-t, the rain beats through the thatch or cover, Fagrisk. 123 (in a verse). mod. usage, drepa is even used in the sense to drip (=drjúpa), e.g. bak, hús drepr, the thatch, bouse lets water through.

B. WITH DAT.: I. denoting gentle movement; in many cases

Digitized by GOOGLE

the dat. seems to be only instrumental: & kampa, be put his band to his beard, Hom. 21; d. fæti (fótum), to stumble, prop. to strike with the foot, Nj. 112, Fas. ii. 558, Bs. i. 742, Hom. 110, Grett. 120; d. fæti i e-t, to stumble against, 103; d. fæti við e-t, id., Fas. ii. 558; d. höfði, to droop, nod with the head; drap í gras höfði, (the horse) drooped with the head, let it fall, Gkv. 2. 5; d. nior hofdi, id., Nj. 32; Egill sat svá opt, at hann drap höfðinu niðr í feld sinn (from sorrow), Eg. 322, O. H. L. 45 (for shame); d. fingri i munn ser, to put the finger into the mouth, Edda 74; fingri drap i munninn sinn (of a child), the words of a ditty; d. hendi til e-s, or vio e-m, to give one a slap with the hand (inst. dat.), Nj. 27; hence metaph., d. hendi vio e-u, to wave away with the hand, to refuse a kind offer, Bs. i. 636; d. hendi við boðnu gulli, Al. 75: the phrase, d. hendi við sóma sínum, cp. Al. 162. 2. to tuck up the sleeves or skirts of a garment; d. skautum (upp), Fms. vii. 297; hann hafði drepit upp skautunum, Lv. 85; hann hafði drepit upp fyrir blöðunum undir beltið, Eb. 226; Sigurðr drap blöðunum undir belti ser, Orkn. 474; d. hari undir belti ser, to tuck the bair under the belt (of a lady), hárit tók ofan á bringuna ok drap hón (viz. því) undir belti sér, Nj. 24; hafði hár svá mikit, at hann drap undir belti sér, 272. II. to dip; d. skeggi í Breiðafjörð niðr, to dip the heard in the Breidafford, i. e. to be drowned, Ld. 316; d. hendi, or fingri i vatn, to dip the band, finger into water (vide above); d. barni i vatn, to dip a baby into water, i. e. to baptize, K. p. K. 10: the phrase, d. fleski i kál, to dip bacon into kale broth, Fas. iii. 381; nú taka beir hafrstökur tvær, ok d. beim í sýrukerin, Gísl. 7. B. the phrase, d. e-u, of wax, lime, butter, or the like, to daub, plaster, fill up with; þú skalt taka vax ok d. því í eyru förunauta þinna, Od. xii. 77; síðan drap eg því í eyru á öllum skipverjum, 177; vaxið er eg hafði drepið i eyru peim, 200; d. smjöri i ilat, to fill a box with butter. metaph. phrases; d. dul & e-t, to throw a veil over, Hkr. ii. 140, in mod. usage, draga dulur á e-t: the phrase, d. i skorðin (the tongue understood), to talk indistinctly, from loss of teeth; d. ordi, domi & e-t, to talk, reason, judge of a thing, Fms. ix. 500; d. huldu á, to hide, cloak, keep secret, xi. 106: d. e-u & dreif, prop. to 'throw adrift,' throw aside, i. e. think little of a thing, pessu var a dreif drepit, it was hushed up, Orkn. 248; aor hafdi mjök verit a dreif drepit um mal Bjarnar (there bad been much mystery about Björn), hvárt hann var lífs eðr eigi, sagði annarr þat logit, en annarr sagði satt, i. e. no one knew anything for certain, Bjarn. 20; en eigi varð vísan á dreif drepin (the song was not thrown aside or kept secret) ok kom til eyrna Birni, 32; drápu öllu á dreif um bessa fyrirætlan, bushed it all up, Eg. 49: d. i egg e-u, prop. to bate the edge of a thing, to turn a deaf ear to, Orkn. 188, metaphor from blunting the edge of a 8. d. e-u nior, to suppress a thing (unjustly); d. nior konungs tétti, N.G.L. i. 73; d. nior sæmd e-s, to pull down a person's reputation, Boll. 346; d. nior illu ordi, to keep down a bad report, suppress it, Nj. 21; d. niðr máli, to quash a lawsuit, 33; drepit svá niðr herörinni, e. d. glaumi, gledi, teiti e-s, to spoil one's joy, Lex. Fms. iv. 207. Poët.; d. kosti e-s, to destroy one's bappiness, Am. 69: impers., drap bá brátt kosti, the cheer was soon gone, Rm. 98.

drep-hrio, f. a killing snow storm, Eb. 150.

drepill, m., in knatt-drepill, a bat, in the game of cricket.

drop-ráð, n. pl. 2 law term (cp. áljóts-ráð, sár-ráð, bana-ráð, fjör-ráð), an intended affray or assault, Grág. ii. 116, 117, Vsl. ch. 75.

drep-samligr, adj. deadly, destructive, Stj. 71.

drep-sleggja, u, f. a sledge-bammer, Eg. 272.

drep-sott, f. a plague, pest, Ver. 21, Rb. 478.

drep-sottr, part. plague-stricken, Bs. ii. 33.

drettingr, m. [dratta], a loiterer, a cognom., Sturl. i. 89.

DREYMA, d and o, poët. obsol. pret. reflex. dreymdumk; [draumr; A. S. dryman = psallere; Hel. drômian = jubilari; Engl. dream; Germ. träumen; Dan. drömme; Swed. drömma]:-to dream; in Icel. impers. and with a double acc., that of the dreamer and the dream or person appearing; thus, mik dreymdi draum, mik dreymdi mann, etc.; þat dreymdi mik, Nj. 95; hvat hefir þik dreymt, id.; hinn veg d. mik þó, 53; hann kvað sik dreymt hafa Húkon jarl (acc.), 122; dreymt hefir mik mart i vetr, Ld. 126; enn dreymdi hann enn þriðja draum, Fms. xi. 8; or poët., draum dreymdumk = draum dreymdi mik, I dreamt a dream, Bjarn. 49; or with 'at' with subj., hann (acc.) dreymoi bat, at hann væri at lögbergi, 1b. ch. 4, cp. 385: konung dreymdi aldri, the king never bad a dream, Hkr. i. 171; the phrase, at dreyma fyrir daglátunum, esp. of light merry dreams at daybreak, which people in Icel. consider a sign of good health, Fél. ix. B. pers., the appearance in nom., (rare), sá maðr (nom.) dreymir mik jafnan, Fs. 98; dreymdi Svein Þórr heldr ófryniligr, Fms. ii. 162; þat er fyrir eldi er járn (nom. pl.) dreyma, Gkv. 2. 38; um vetrinn vóru dreymdir draumar margir, Bs. i. 497; vide draumr.

DREYPA, t and δ, [drjúpa, draup], to drop, put a drop of fluid, wine, medicine, etc., into the mouth of one sick, fainting, and the like, the fluid in dat.; d. e-u á e-t, or í munn em; hann dreypir vígðu vatni í munn henni, Bs. i. 199; at hann dreypi vatni á tungu mína, Greg. 23. Luke xvi. 24; d. víni á e-n (of fainting), Fas. iii. 508, 571; hann dreypti á konuna þar til at hon raknaði við, ii. 151: to dip, at hann dritin, dirty, Ls. 56.

1. of the limbs; hendi drap dreypi í vatn enum minsta fingri sínum, Greg. 22. Luke xvi. 24, where dreyra, ð, to bleed, ooze (of blood from a slight wound), always absolor neut.; þótti mér dreyra ór hlutunum, Ld. 126; ok dreyrði ór hlutunum, Fb. i. 67; eigi dreyrði ór hvirflinum, Fms. ii. 272; hann reist í lófa sér krossmark svá at dreyrði, so that blood flowed, v. 185; nýdreyrt blóð, neu-bled blood, þiðr. 199.

dreyr-blandinn, part. blent, mixed with blood, Lex. Poët.

dreyr-fáðr (-fár), part. blood-stained, Hkv. Hjörv. 9, Lex. Poët.

dreyr-gjarn, adj. blood-tbirsty, dreary, Al. 31.

DREYRI and drøri, a, m. [as to the root, cp. Goth. drjúsan, pret. draus, = to drop, fall, a verb analogous to frjósa, fraus, and fröri; this strong verb is lost in the Icel., only the weak dreyra is used; A.S. dreór = gore; O.H.G. trôr:—are A.S. dreôrig, Engl. dreary, from the same root, in a metaph. sense?]:—blood, esp. gore, properly blood ooxing out of the wound; vekja e-m dreyra, to bleed one, Fms. vii. 145; nú vökva þeir sér blóð, ok láta renna saman dreyra sinn, Gísl. 11; manna d., buman blood, Fms. xi. 233; the phrase, rauðr sem dreyri, = dreyrrauðr, red as blood, i. e. dark red, v. 127; rauðr d., Vsp. 33: allit., er hann etr hold mitt ok drekkr dreyra minn, 625. 195; dreyrinn dundi, the blood gusbed, Pass. 23. 3: poët. phrases, dals d., jarðar d., the blood of the dales, earth, rivers, Lex. Poët.; Kvásis d., the blood of K., poetry, Edda. Compp: dreyra-runninn, part. spattered with blood, Fms. vii. 89, dreyrigr, dreyrugr (drørigr, Yt. 5, 11), adj. [cp. Engl. dreary, Germ.

dreyrigr, dreyrugr (drørigr, Yt. 5, 11), adj. [cp. Engl. dreary, Germ. traurig]:—bloody, gory; uncontr., dreyruga, Al. 41; dreyruga húfu, Gísl. 64, 151; dreyrugra benja, Bragi: contr., dreyrgan mæki, Yt. 11; dreyriga steina, Sb. 58; dreyrgra darra, Jd. 9.

dreyr-rauor, adj. blood-red, Eg. 113, Fms. vii. 145.

dreyr-stafir, m. pl. dreary, bloody runes, Sl. 40. DREYSSA, 28, [drussi], d. sik, to vaunt oneself foolisbly, Pass. 1.12.

DRIF, n. [drifa], driven snow; hvitt sem d., Fms. iv. 372, v.l.: the foaming sea, sjór var hvitr fyrir drifi, Bs. ii. 116. compds: drifastormr, m., drifa-veðr, n. a strong storm.

drif-hvítr and drift-hvítr, adj. white as driven snow, Karl. 546: naut., leggja til drifs, to lie adrift.

drift, dript, f. a snow-drift; þar var snjár í driptum, Sturl. i. 84; hvítt sem drift, wbite as driven snow, O. H. 170.

DBIT, n. (mod. dritr, m.), [Engl. dirt, cp. drita], dirt, esp. of birds, fugla-d., dufna-d., Stj. 620. 2 Kings vi. 25; siðan tekr hann fugla dritið, þiðr. 79, v.l.: local names, Drit-sker, Eb. ch. 4; Drit-vík, Bárð. ch. 4: nicknames, Drit-kinn, Gullþ.; Drit-ljóð, Fms. ix; Drit-loki, Sturl. i. 30.

DRÍFA, pret. dreif, pl. drifu; pres. drif; pret. subj. drifi; part. drifinn: [Ulf. dreiban = ἐκβάλλειν; A.S. drifan; Engl. drive; O.H.G. triban; mod. Germ. treiben; Swed. drifva; Dan. drive, all in a transitive sense = to drive. I. to drive like spray, either pers. or impers. with dat. or even neut.; þá kemr áfall mikit...ok dreif yfir búlkann, Bs. i. 422; laudri dreif a lypting útan, the spray drove over the poop, Fms. vi. (in a verse); hence metaph. phrases, lata yfir d., to let drift before wind and wave, Isl. ii. 461: or even reflex., lata yfir (fyrir) drifask, to let drive or drift away, let go, give in; rán ok útlegðir þeirra manna er eigi létu fyrir drifask, Fb. i. 70; þat dugir á enga leið, at menn láti yfir drífask, Bs. ii. 51; ok er þó þat ráð, at láta eigi fyrir drífask, Karl. 386, 452: allit. phrase, drifa á dagana, e. g. mart hefir drifit á dagana, many things (splashes) have happened; driftin doggu, besprent with dew, Vtkv. 5: naut., roa drifanda, to pull so that the spray splashes about, pull bard, Fms. viii. 263, 431: to drift, of a snow storm or the like, tré med drifandum kvistum, a tree with the branches full of snow, Sks. 49; veor var drifanda, it snowed, Sturl. iii. 50, O. H. 85; pegar dreif i Löginn krömmu, there fell soft snow in the Lake, i. e. it began to sleet, Fms. v. 196; ba drift snær or öllum attum, Edda 40: metaph. of missiles, to shower as flakes of snow, borgarmenn láta þegar d. skot á þá, Al. II; láta þeir d. · II. neut. to crowd, throng; bá drift ofan vápn á þá, Fb. i. 135. mannfjöldi mikill til strandar, a great crowd rusbed down to the shore, Ld. 76; tóku menn þá at d. brott frá hertoganum, the men began to desert (run away) from the duke, Fms. ix. 531; dreif allt folk & hans fund, all people rushed to see him, i. 21, iv. 105; d. a dyrr, to rush to the door. Vkv. III. to perform; eiga e-t at d., to have a thing to perform, Gbl. 15, 16; en í annan stað á ck at d. mikinn vanda, I am in a bard strait, Fms. i. 221; d. leik, to play, Fas. i. 37: the sense to drive out, expel, so common in all other Teut. dialects, hardly occurs in old writers. and sounds foreign even now; the proverb, með íllu skal illt út drífa; d. sig, to exert oneself, etc., (cant phrases.)

drífa, u, f. a fall of snow, sleet; fjúk ok d., Bs. i. 185; veðr var þykt ok d., Fms. v. 341; skotvápn flugu svá þykt sem d., i. 45; um kveldit görði á drífu-él blautt, Orkn. 414; kom þá drífu-él mikit, ok var allmyrkt, Fms. ix. 23.

drsii, n. a petty beap of peat or the like, hence metaph. drsidinn, adj. petty; drsidni, f. pettiness.

DRÍTA, pret. dreit, dritu, dritinn, to dirty, cacare; hann sögðu þeir dríta á alla þá er við hann áttu af hrópi sínu, Sturl. ii. 39: part. fem, dritin, dirty, Ls. 56. drjóli, a, m. a drone, (cant word.)

drjóni, a, m. an ox, Edda (Gl.) II. [Swed. drönare], a drone.

drjúg-deildr, part. substantial, Sturl. i. 166.

drjúg-genginn, part. taking long to walk or pass, of a road, Lex. Poët. drjúg-látr, adj. wanton.

drjúg-liga, drýg-liga, adv. with an air of importance; láta d., Fms. ii. 145. Nj. 76.

drjúg-ligr, adj. substantial, solid, Sks. 382.

drjug-mæltr, adj. long-winded in speaking, Greg. 39: neut., Vigl. 24. DRJÚGR, adj., compar. drjúgari, superl. drjúgastr; in mod. use more freq. drýgri, drýgstr, solid, substantial; the phrase, verða drjúgari or drjúgastr, to get the better or best of it, to prove the better (of two champions); varð Þórir þeirra drjúgari, Bárð. 170; þú, Kári, munt þeim öllum drjúgari verda, thou, K., wilt outdo them all, Nj. 171; hvárir bar mundi drjúgari verða, Ld. 222; þótti þeim, sem hann myndi drjúgastr, Bárð. 170; hverr yðar drjúgastr (strongest) er höfðingjanna, Ísl. ii. 165, Grett. 151. the neut. drjugt and drjugum is used as adv. in great numbers, much; Kolskeggt vá drjúgt menn, Kolskegg slew men in numbers, Nj. 108; þaðan af muntu d. spekjask, 677. 12; vegr Gunnarr drjúgum meim, Nj. 96; lá þá drjúgum í fyrir þeim, Hrafn. 27: almost, nearly, drjúgum allr, almost all, Fms. ix. 318; drjúgum allra manna virðing, Bret. 38; drjúgum hverr bóndi, Landn. (Mant.) 330; drjúgum dauðr af kulda, Fms. ix. 467: driugan (acc. masc.) as adv., id., Fb. i. 304, Karl. 246, 181 (Fr.): the proverb, þat er drjúgt sem drýpr, i.e. many drops make a flood; þar var drjugt manna, a good many people, Bs. i. 536. 2. substantial, lasting, rich, ample, [Swed. dryg, Dan. droj], in compds as, drjug-virkr, vinnu-d., one who works slowly but surely; rada-d., hamingiu-d., etc. saving, blanda agnar við brauð, ... til þess at þá sé drjúgari fæzlan en aðr, Sks. 321; til þess at rit verði minna, ok bókfell drjúgara, i.e. to save parchment, Skálda 168; at jafndrjúg verði sagan ok Jólin, that the story shall last as long as Yule, Fms. vi. 355.

DRJÚPA, pret. draup, pl. drupu; subj. drypi; sup. dropit; pres. dryp; [Engl. drip; Germ. trausen; Dan. dryppe]:—to drip; bloð drypr, Frms. x. 366; drupu þá of bloðdropar, 625. 98; svá at brúðnaði ok draup, Edda 4: absol., þá sveittisk róðan helga, svá at draup á altarit ofan, Frms. viii. 247; þórólfr kvað d. smjör af hverju strái, Landn. 31. β. to let in rain, of houses or things not water-tight; öll hlaðan draup, Fms. ix. 234; ok tóku húsin at drjúpa, Gísl. 22. • drokr, m., one MS. wrongly dirokr, [cp. Dan. drog, Engl. drudge], a drudge, Edda (Gl.)

drolla, 20, [drjóli], Old Engl. to droil, i. e. loiter, (cant word.)

dropi, a, m. [A. S. dropa; Engl. drop; Swed. droppe; Germ. tropfen; Dan. draabe], a drop, Ld. 328, H. E. i. 488. compos: dropa-lauss, adj. water-tight, Gpl. 331. dropa-rum, n. a dripping-place, from the eaves, Gpl. 433. dropa-tal, n., i dropa-tali, in drops, drop by drop.

dros, f. [A. S. dreas; Ulf. drus = πτωσιs; Swed. drosse = a beap of corn; cp. also the Dan. drysse], dross, poët., in the compd alm-dros, the dross of the bow, the arrows, Lex. Poet.

dróg, f. (drogi, a, m., Edda (Ub.) 277), = drák, Rb. 478, 480; sásk dróg á himni björt sem tungl, Ann. 1334; blóð-dróg, a streak of blood, Thom. (Fr.)

2. a jade.

drómi, a. m. [cp. Swed. drum = thrums], the fetter by which the Fenrir (Wolf) was fettered, Edda 19; used in the phrase, keyra í dróma, to tie 'neck and beels;' Drottim í dróma keyrðr, Pass. 6. 10; keyrði hann saman í dróma, Úlf. 7. 134.

drómundr, m. a kind of sbip of war (for. word), [Gr. δρόμων; mid. Lat. dromon; O. H. G. drabemond], Orkn. 358 sqq., Fms. vii. 2: a nickname, Grett.

drós, f. [cp. Ital. druda = a sweetbeart], poöt. a girl; drósir heita þær er kyrlátar eru, Edda 108, Fas. iii. 618, Al. 70, 152.

I. the sill or beam above a door, also a door-post DROTT, f. (dyra-drótt). II. bousebold, people, Vpm. 24, (inn-drótt, sal-drótt, Lex. Poët.); dyggvar dróttir, good, trusty people, Vsp. 63; dverga d.. the dwarf-people, 9; d. Irskrar þióðar, the Irish people; Engla d., English persons, etc., Lex. Poët.; öll drótt, all people, Hkv. 2. 48: twenty people make a drótt, Edda 108. 2. esp. the king's bodyguard; cp. Goth. ga-draubts, by which word Ulf. renders the Gr. στρατιώτη (drjûgan, pret. draub = στρατεύειν); A. S. dright; the Scandinavian drótt thus answers to the comitatus of Tacitus, Germ. ch. 13, 14, in the Saga time called 'hird.' Drott is obsolete in prose, but occurs in Hkr. Yngl. S. ch. 20,—áðr vóru þeir (viz. the kings) dróttnar kallaðir, en konur beirra dróttningar, en drótt hirðsveitin: poët., víg-drótt, her-d., folk-d., hjálm-d., etc., warriors. III. a fem. pr. name, Yngl. S. ch. 20; cp. drós.

drótta, 20, d. e-u 2t e-m, to bring to one's door-post, i. e. impute to one. dróttin-hollr, 2dj. faithful to one's master, Fms. vi. 401. Skelp 5) dróttin-lauss, 2dj. without a master, Fms. iii. 13.

dróttin-ligr, adj. lord-like, of the Lord, Bs. i. 171, Stj.; Drottinleg bæn, the Lord's Prayer, Mar., Hom. 26; d. dæmi, 656 A. 24.

dróttinn, mod. drottinn, but in old poetry always rhymed with an 6, e. g. flóttstyggr—dróttni, Sighvat; dat. dróttni or drottni, pl. dróttnar or drottnar, etc.; [A.S. drighten; Hel. drubtin = dominus]:-the master of a 'drott' or bousebold, a lord, master: the proverb, dyrt er drottins ord, e.g. strong is the master's word, Bs. i. 484, Al. 128, Ld. 212; præll eða d., Hom. 29; Josep fékk svá mikla virðing af dróttni sínum, 625. 16, Grág. ii. 86; þrjá dróttna átti hann í þessi herleiðingu, Fms. x. 224; eigi er þrællinn æðri enn dróttininn, Post. 656. 37, cp. John xv. 20; en þó eta hundar af molum þeim sem detta af borðum drottna þeirra, Matth. xv. 27; verit hlýðugir yðrum líkamligum drottnum, Ephes. vi. 5: in mod. usage this sense remains in prose in the compd lánar-dróttinn, q. v. name for a king, Hkr. Yngl. S. ch. 20 (vide drótt). y. as a name of beathen priests; þat eru díar kallaðir eðr dróttnar, Hkr. Yngl. S.ch. 2. the Lord, which also is the standing phrase in mod. usage, in the Bible, sermons, hymns, ever since the Reformation; losaor sé Drottinn, Nj. 165; af miskun Drottins, Mar. 656 A. 6; greidit Dróttins götur, 625. 90; Christr Drottinn, Grag. ii. 167; an grats var Drottinn fæddr, Rb. 332; Drottinn sagði mínum Drottni, Matth. xxii. 44; elska skaltú Drottinn Guð þinn, 37; Dróttinn Guð Abrahams, Luke xx. 37, xxiv. 34; hefi eg eigi séð Dróttinn vorn Jesum Christum, eruð þér ekki mitt verk í Drottni? 1 Cor. ix. 1, 5, 14, x. 21, 22, 26, 28, 30, xī. 10, 19, 22, 25, 26, 28, 31, xii. 3, 5, etc. etc. COMPDS: Drottins-dagr, m. the Lord's day, K. p. K. 68, Rb. 112, 655 iii, Sturl. iii. 37, 159, 226, Nj. 165; Drottinsdaga hald, ballowing the Lord's day, Nj. 165; Dróttinsdags nótt, Saturday night, 194; Drottinsdaga veiðr, K. p. K. 85. Drottins-kvold, n. Sunday even-Drottins-myrgin, m. Sunday morning, Sturl. iii. ing, Fms. ix. 19. Drottins-nótt, f. Sunday night, Fms. vii. 187.

dróttin-svik, n. pl. treason towards a lord or master, Hkr. ii. 132, Sks. 571, Hom. 23 (Judas).

dróttin-svikari (-sviki), 2, m. a traitor to bis master, Nj. 260, K. A. 60.

drótt-kvæðr, adj. (-kvæði, n.), in the beroic metre, the metre used in the drápas (q. v.) or poems which were recited before a king and the king's men (drótt), whence the name probably comes; dróttkvæðr is opp. to kviðu-háttr, the epic, narrative metre, and ljóða-háttr, the metre of didactic poems or poems in the form of dialogues, Edda (Ht.)

drótt-lát, f. adj. beloved by the bousehold, gentle, epithet of a queen, drótt-megir, m. pl. men, people, Vpm. 11, 12.

Am. 10.

dróttna or drottna, að, [Ülf. draubtinon = στρατεύεσθαι], to rule, govern, bold sway; d. yfir e-m, to rule over one, Stj. 396, Fms. viii. 242: with dat., þó lætr hann þat eigi d. huga sínum, Greg. 32; at oss drottni eigi dauði síðan, Niðrst. 8; fyllit jörðina, stjórnit henni ok drottnið, Stj. 21.

dróttnan or drottnan, f. sway, rule, 625. 5, Stj. 20, H. E. i. 502; drottnunar-gjarn, adj. ambitious; drottnunar-gjrni, f. ambition.

dróttnari, 2, m. a ruler, Stj. 20.

dróttning and drottning, f. a mistress; præll sá er vegr at dróttni (master) sinum eðr dróttningu (mistress), Grág. ii. 86 (vide above); ef præll verðr sekr skógarmaðr um víg dróttnis sins eðr dróttningar, 161; drottning hans girntisk hann, Ver. 16. Gen. xxxix. 7; this sense is quite obsolete except in old law phrases and translations.

2. a queen, common to all Scandinavians, Swed. drottning, Dan. dronning, whereas drottinn = king is obsolete, Hkr. Yngl. S. ch. 20, Fins. i. 99, vi. 439, Sks. 468; the instances are endless.

COMPDS: drottningar-efni, n. a future queen, Fas. iii. 456.

drottningar-maðr, m. a queen's busband, a prince consort, Nj. 5, v.l.

drottningar-nafn, n. the title of queen, Fins. i. 101.

drótt-seti, a, m. a steward at the king's table; this word occurs in various forms throughout the Saxon parts of Germany, Holland, Belgium, Friesland, Brabant, etc. Du Cange records a 'drossardus Brabantiae;' it is in mid. Lat. spelt drossatus, Germ. and Saxon drost, land-drost, reichsdrost (drozerus regni), Fris. drusta, vide Grimm; the Dutch preser the form drossardus: in the court of the king of Norway the office of dróttseti is not heard of before the beginning of the 12th century (the passage Bs. i. 37 is monkish and of late composition), and is there a kind of bead-cook or steward at the king's table, who was to be elected from the king's skutilsveinar; d. spurði hvat til matar skyldi búa, the d. asked the king what meat they should dress, Fms. vii. 159 (about A.D. 1125), ix. 249, x. 147; d. ok skenkjari, N. G. L. ii. 413, 415; cp. also Hirðskrú (N. G. L. l. c.) ch. 26, Fms. x. 100 refers to the drost of the German emperor. In the 14th century the dróttseti became a high officer in Sweden and Denmark. The derivation from drótt and seti (seti can only mean a sitter, not one who makes to sit, cp. land-seti, a landsitter, a tenant) is dubious; the Norse word may be an etymologising imitation of the mid. Lat. drossatus.

drukna, að, [drukkinn, drekka], to be drowned, Nj. 59.

druknan, f. being drowned, death by drowning, Ld. 58, Orku. 246, Ann. 1260, 1026.

drumbr, m. a log of dry or rotten wood, Fms. viii. 184; drumba, u, f. a cognom.. Rm.

drungi, a, m., medic. beaviness, fulness in the bead. drunga-legr, adj. drunur, f. pl. [drynja], a rattling, thundering, Dan. drön. drussi, a, m. a drone; þú d. (άφρον), 1 Cor. xv. 36.

Digitized by GOOGLE

DRŪPA, t or ð, to droop (from sorrow), different from drjúpa, to drip; drúpa is in Icel. an almost obsolete word, in old poets and writers esp. used in a metaph. sense; at the death of a dear person, the country, hills, mountains are said to droop; swá drúpir nú Danmörk, sem dauðr sé Knútr sonr minn, Fms. i. 118; svá þótti drúpa Ísland eptir fráfall Gizurar biskups, sem Rómaborgar ríki eptir fráfall Gregorii páfa, Bs. i. 71; Ari prestr hinn Fróði segir hve mjök várt land drúpði eptir fráfall Gizurar biskups, 145; staðrinn í Skálholti drúpti mjök eptir fráfall hins sæla þorláks biskups, 301; drúpir Höfði dauðr er þengill, hlæja hlíðar við Hallsteini, Landn. 224 (in a verse); hnípði drótt ok drúpði fold, Lex. Poët.; drúpir örn yfir, Gm. 10; Vinga meiðr (the gallows) drúpir á nesi, Hlt.; en Skæreið í Skírings-sal of brynjálfs beinum drúpir, Ýt. 22; hans mun dráp um drúpa, dyrmennis mér kenna, Sighvat; knáttu hvarms af harmi hnúpgnípur mér d., my bead drooped from grief, Eg. (in a verse); drúpðu dólgárar, the swords drooped (to drink blood), Hkm. 2: in mod. usage drjúpa and drúpa are confounded, aví, hve má eg aumr þræll, angraðr niðr drjúpa, Pass. 41. 4.

drupr, m. drooping spirits, coldness; ok þó at þar hefði orðit nokkurr d. með þeim, þá..., Fms. xi. 76.

drykk-fátt, n. adj. sbort of drink, Hkr. iii. 117.

drykkja, u, f. [drukkinn], a drinking-bout, carousal, banquet; sitja við drykkju, Eg. 88; var veizla hin bezta, ok d. mikil inni í stofunni, 205; at þeim veizlum er drykkjur vóru, Bs. i. 394; matmála í milli ef eigi vóru alþýðu-drykkjur, a public banquet, l.c.; göra d., to make a banquet, Og. 27; þá var ár mikit ok drykkjur miklar, O. H. 71; þar var öl-d. ok fast drukkit, Eb. 184, cp. Flóam. S. ch. 2; taka til drykkju, to take to drinking, Fms. ii. 266; drykkja (banquet) skyldi vera at hvárratveggja, Gísl. 27; tóku menn til drykkju um kveldit, 28; hafa samd., to bave a carouse, Grett. ch. 8; Jóla boð ok sam-drykkjur, O. H. ch. 95, cp. 33, 34, 131, Eg. ch. 11, 44; á-drykkja, q. v., Har. S. Harðr. ch. 23, Fms. vii. 203, cp. Orkn. ch. 33, 34, 70, 101, 104, Sverr. S. ch. 36, 98, 103, 104, Fagrsk. ch. 11, 219, 220: the ancients drank hard, 'diem noctemque continuare potando nulli probrum,' Tac. Germ. ch. 11: with kings the drinking (dag-drykkja, q.v.) began immediately after the day-meal, vide the references above; the words of Tacitus, 'tum (viz. after breakfast) ad negotia, nec minus saepe ad convivia, procedunt armati,' l.c., are therefore true enough, Edda (Gg.) ch. 39, 46; the phrase, preyta drykkju (cp. kapp-d., a drinking match), Edda 32. The Icelanders of the Saga time seem to have been of much more abstemious habits than their Norse kinsmen of the same time, and drinking is scarcely mentioned but at public banquets; the Sturlunga time is worse, but only those who had been abroad are mentioned as strong drinkers (cp. Arons S. ch. 10); cp. also a treatise of the end of the 12th century, named De profectione Danorum, ch. 11-" in cunctis illius regni (i. e. Norway) civitatibus uniformis consuetudo sed vitiosa inolevit, scilicet jugis ebrietas, 2. = beverage = drykkr (rare), Egill bað fá sér drykkju, Eg. 107. COMPDS: drykkju-boro, n. a drinking-table, Fms. xi. 2. drykkjufong, n. pl. drinkables, Sturl. iii. 289. drykkju-litill, adj. sober, Bs. drykkju-maör, m. a great drinker, Fms. vii. 175, viii. 238, i. 275. Edda 32. drykkju-mál, n. drinking at meal time, Anal. 195, Fas. ii. 266. drykkju-rútr, m. a drunkard. drykkju-skapr, m. bard drinking, drunkenness, Fms. iii. 191, Ann. 1389. drykkju-skáli, a, m. a banquet drykkju-stofa, u, f. = drykkjuskáli, ball, Orkn. 244, Fms. i. 299. Fms. vii. 147, Eg. 553. drykkju-stútr, m. a drinking-can, Bs. i. 877. drykkja, or, part. drunk, Rb. iii. 384, Karl.

drykk-langr, adj., in the phrase, drykklanga stund, just a moment, a measure of time whilst one drinks a draught.

drykk-lauss, adj. (-leysi, f.), without drink, Bs. i. 822, Finnb. 234, K. A. 34.

drykkr, jar, m., pl. ir, [A. S. drine; Engl. drink; Germ. trunk; Dan. drik]:-drink, beverage, Fms. xi. 108, 233; eiga drykk ok sess við e-n, Eg. 95: a draught, Edda 32, 48; hvat hafa Einherjar at drykk? 24; vatns-d., a draught of water, id.; svala-d., borsta-d., a thirst-draught; muntu nú eigi sparask til eins drykkjar, one draught more, 32; breyta á drykkinn, to take a deep draught, id.; drekka í tveimr, þremr.. drykkjum, to drain in two, three . . . draughts, id.; undarliga mundi mér þykkja ef þvílíkir drykkir væri svá litlir kallaðir, id. B. sour wbey, proncd. drukkr, Krók. 64; freq. in western Icel. COMPDS: drykkjar-bolli, a, m. a drinking-bowl, Mart. 119. drykkjardrykkjar-horn, n. a drinking-born, Fr. föng, n. pl. drinkables. drykkjar-ker, n. a drinking-cup, Greg. 50, Sks. 725, Stj. 486. drykkjar-kostr, m. drinking cheer, Vm. 56.

drykk-sæll, adj. lucky in drink or brewing, Bs. 108.

dryllr, m. a nickname, Fms. i; drylla, u, f., Snot 184; also spelt with u, proluvies alvi, (vulgar.)

drymba, u, f. a kind of stockings (?), Art. (Parcevals S.)

DRYNJA, drundi, pres. dryn, to roar. This root word is common to Goth., Scandin., Fris., and Dutch; for Ulf. drunjus = φθόγγος, Rom. x. 18, is a sufficient proof; in Swed. we have dröna, and drön neut.; Dan. dröne and drön; Dutch dreunen; North. E. to drone, as a cow; Fris. dröne; the mod. High Germ. dröhnen was, in the 17th century, DRÚPA, t or ô, to droop (from sorrow), different from drjúpa, to drip; drúpa is in Icel. an almost obsolete word, in old poets and writers esp. used in a metaph. sense; at the death of a dear person, the country, hills, mountains are said to droop; svá drúpir nú Danmörk, sem dauðr sé Knútr sonr minn, Fros. i. 118; svá þótti drúpa Ísland eptir fráfall Gizurar biskups, sem Rómaborgar ríki eptir fráfall Gregorii páfa, Bs. i. 71; Ari prestr hinn Fróði segir hve mjök várt land dunur þungar, of the roaring surf, Od. (poët.) v. 401.

drynr, m. pl. [Dan. and Swed. drön], roaring; drunur, f., vide above. dryn-rann, n., poët. 'the roaring inn of drink,' a drinking-born, Fas. l.c. drysil-, dusil-, a term of contempt, paltry, in the compos drysil-jordll, m. a petty, paltry devil, devilkin, Fms. iii. 201, in the amusing ghost story, opp. to the big inmates of hell. drysil-hross (speat dusil-), n. a paltry borse, 1sl. iii. 333. drysil-menni, n. a paltry, petty man, Edda (Gl.)

DRÝGJA, δ, [drjúgr; A. S. dreógan = to endure; North. E. and Scotto dree = to endure, suffer]:—to commit, perpetrate, mostly in a bad sense; d. synd, to commit a sin, K. Á. 202; d. glæp, id.; d. hórdóm, to commit wboredom, Sks. 340; þú skalt ekki hórdóm d., thou shalt not commit wboredom; d. misræðu við konu, id., Grág. i. 338; d. hernað, to pirate, ii. 79; d. ílsku, Orkn. 32: it is a standing phrase in eccl. or sacred writers, N. T., Pass., Vídal.: in a good sense only in a few phrases as the allit., d. dáð, Sturl. iii. 7; or in poets or bad old prose; orlög d., A. S. orlég dreogan (cp. the North. E. to dree one's weird = to abide one's fate), to try one's luck, Vkv. I, cp. also the Germ. tales, in die welt geben; d. hlýðni, Sks. 675; d. mannliga náttúru, to pay the debt of nature, 447; d. e-s vilja. to comply with one's wishes, Bær. I4,—the last three passages are bad prose.

β. to make to keep longer, to lengthen, Bs. ii. 173, Bb. 3. 30.

drægr, adj. that which can be pulled against. dræmt, n. adj. [from draum?], slowly, Osv.

dræplingr, m., dimin. [drápa], a paltry drápa, Hkr. ii. 82, Fms. xi. 204. dræpr, adj. who may be killed with impunity, N. G. L. i. 82, Grág. i. 92, Ni. 111.

ĎRŎFN, f., gen. drafnar, pl. drafnir, [akin to drefjar], spots, spray-like spots; hence drofnóttr, adj. spotted; rauð-d., blá-d., etc., red-, blue-spotted; poët. the foaming sea is called dröfn, Edda.

drösla, 20, to roam about; cp. drasill, drösall.

dubba (dybba), 20, (for. word), to dub a knight; nú hefir þú dybbat mik til riddara, Bær. 5, 18, Fms. x. 109, Karl. 193: to arm, dress, Stj. 464. I Sam. xvii. 38; upp dubbaor, dressed in full dress, Finnb. 226; d. sik, to trim oneself, Fms. vi. 208.

dubban, f. dubbing a knight, Karl. 222. dubl (dufl), n. double, Alg. 366 (mathem.) Grett. (in a verse).

β. gambling, Gpl. 521, and a buoy.

dubla, dufla, að, [dubla = a coin, Du Cange], to gamble, Gpl. 521; dublari, a, m. a gambler, Róm. 161.

DUGA, pret. dugði; pres. dugi; sup. dugat; imperat. dugi þú, mod. dugou; [A. S. dugan; Scot. and North. E. to dow; O. H. G. tugan; Germ. taugen; Dan. due; Swed. duga; Engl. do, in phrases such as, that will do]: -to belp, aid, with dat.; dugi þú mér Hvíta-Kristr, Fs. 101; d. frændum sínum, Post. 658 C. 19; ok vill eigi d. henni, will not support ber, Grág. i. 368; hann dugði heiðnum mönnum, 655 iii. 4: with the notion to do, suffice, bat er ber man d., which will do for thee, Nj. 13; hefir oss bo dugat bessi átrúnaðr, this faith has done well for us, Fms. i. 34; mun pat d. minum hesti, it will do for my borse, Mag.: the proverb, fatt er svá illt at einu-gi dugi, cp. the Engl. ''its an ill wind that blows nobody good,' Al. 46, Hm. 134; mun ber eigi bat d. at sofa her, it will not do (is not safe) for thee to sleep here, Fms. v. 307: adding prepp. vio, at, til, to succour, lend belp, en Gisli for at d. peim vio, Gisl. 22; d. þeir nú at þeim mönnum er lífs var ván, Finnb. 316, cp. at-dugnaðr; hon dugir eigi verr til enn einhverr karlmaðr, Fb. i. 533: impers., e-m dugir e-t, it does well, beseems, becomes; hon dugir mer illa (vel), Mar. (Fr.), Hkv. 1. 45; bo myndi mer enn vel d. (it would do well for me), ef ek fengja at drekka, Isl. ii. 369. β. absol. or even neut. to shew prowess, do one's best; dugi þú enn, belp! Fms. ii. 75; dugði hverr sem matti, every one did bis best, viii. 139; dugi nú hverr sem drengr er til: mundi þá eigi nauðsyn at d. sem drengilegast, ix. 509: denoting moral force, vel sidadir menn ok jafnan vel dugat, bonest men and who bave ever y. to suffice, be strong done well, Eg. 96; d. i burft e-s, Hom. 47. enough; ef bitt zoi dugir, if thy wit does suffice, Vpm. 20, 22; ef vitni d., if the witnesses do, i. e. fail not, N. G. L. i. 136; dugoi veor it bezta, the weather did well.

dugandi- or dugandis-, as a prefix to nouns, denoting doughty; d. madr (dugand-madr, Fms. viii. 104), a doughty man, Dipl. i. 3, Orkn. 456, Rd. 260, Róm. 137.

dugan-ligr, adj. dougbty, Yt. 15.

DUGGA, u, f. a 'dogger,' small (Dutch or Engl.) fishing vessel, Ann. 1413, where it is reported that thirty English 'fiski-duggur' came fishing about Icel. that summer; (hence the Engl. Dogger-bank):—duggari, a, m. the crew of a dugga, D. N. ii. 651.

2. a lazy dogged fellow, Edda (Gl.), Trist. (Fr.)

dug-lauss, adj. (-leysi, n.), good for nothing, poro, 47 (Ed. 1847).

Digitized by GOOGLE

dugnaor, ar, m. doughtiness, valour, aid, assistance; bioja e-n sér dugnadar, to ask one's belp, 655 v. 1, Isl. ii. 262, 293; veita e-m dugnad, to give belp to one, Fms. v. 259: skyrtunnar d., the virtue of the kirtle, COMPDS: dugnadar-maor, m. an aider, Fas. iii. 441: in pl., Greg. belp in need, 656 A, Fms. vi. 118, Fas. iii. 181: a bonest bard-working man (mod.) dugnaðar-stigr, m. the path of virtue, Hom. 14.

dugr, m. pl. ir, [North. E. dow], doughtiness, strength of soul and body, Fms. viii. 411; aldri er d. i ber, thou art good for nothing, Grett. 24 new Ed.

I. prop. concealment, in phrases, med dul, DUL, f. [dylja]. secretly, Bárd. 168; drepa dul á e-t, to conceal, Hkr. ii. 140; and in the COMPDS dular-bunaor, m. a disguise, Fms. vi. 61; dular-kufl, m. a cloak used for a disguise, Grett. 139 A. II. metaph. self-conceit, pride, in phrases as, dul ok vil, pride and wilfulness, Skalda 163, Sl. 34; ztla sér bá dul, to be so conceited, Finnb. 282; ztlask mikla dul, Fas. ii. 521; dul ok dramb, 655 xi. 3; mikinn dul (masc.), þórð. MS. (wrongly): the phrase, ganga fram i dul, to go forth in one's conceit, Hm. 78, (mod., ganga fram í þeirri dulunni): proverb, maðr verðr dælskr af dul, conceit makes an envious, moody man, Hm. 56; dul bin, Band. (MS.) 13.

dula, u, f. a worn strip of cloth. dula, 8, (cp. dylja), a law term, to deny, with gen., N. G. L. i. 93, 94, 330: with subj., Js. 77: absol., 83.

dul-eior and dular-eior, m. [Swed. duls-ed], a law term, an oath of denial, Gpl. 199, Js. 58.

dul-höttr, m. a disguise-bood, bood used for a disguise, Fms. x. 383; dró ek dulhött (MS. wrongly djarfhött) um dökkva skör, Ad. 3.

dul-klesői, n. disguise, Fas. ii. 441. dul-kofri, a, m. = dulhöttr, (v. kofri.)

dulnaör, m. = dul, Fr.

dulr, adj. silent, close; the phrase, ganga duls e-s, to be unaware of a thing, Fms. v. 265.

dul-remmi, f. stubborn self-conceit, Sks. 536 B. dul-ræna, u, f. id., v.l. dul-samr, adj. self-conceited, Stj. 122.

dulsi, a, m., poët. a dwarf, Yt. 2.

dul-vigi, n. a law term, secret manslaughter, = laun-vig, not so strong as murder, Gbl. 150.

dumba, u, f. a mist; cp. the mod. dumbungr, m. a dark, misty, gloomy sky. dumbungs-veor, m. gloomy weather. In the east of Icel. dumba is the bran of oats when ground, Fel. ii. 155; in Edda (Gl.) it is even mentioned as a sort of seed; hann (the wizard) hristi einn poka, ok bar ór fykr ein dumba svört (black powder like mist)... blés þar ór vindi miklum móti dumbunni, svá at hon fauk aptr í augu á Grims mönnum, svá þeir urðu þegar blindir, Fas. iii. 338. dumbr, m. id., also occurs as a name of a giant, the misty; the Polar Sea is called Dum s-haf = the Misty, Foggy Sea, (cp. Bárð. ch. 1; cp. also Gr. τῦφος, τυφών, which probably are kindred words.

rupár, which probably are kindred words.

dumbi, 2dj. dumb; dauf ok dumba skurðgoð, Stj. 207, K. Á. 56.

dumbóttr, adj. of dark misty colour (of cows).

DUMBR, adj. [Ulf. dumbs = κωφόε; A.S. dumb; Engl. dumb; O.H.G. tumb; Germ. dum = stupid, whence Dan. dum; Gr. τυφλόε and τύφοε are kindred words, the fundamental notion being dusty, clouded]:-dumb, 656 C. 34; dumbir ok daufir, 623. 57; gramm. a mute letter, Skálda 176. In Norway dumme or domme means a peg inside doors or gates.

dumpa, ao, [Ivar Aasen dump = a gust; Dan. dumpe], to thump, Lv. 81 (άπ. λεγ.)

DUNA, ad, (cp. dynja), to thunder, give a bollow rushing sound; dunar í skóginum, Edda 30; svá skal danzinn duna, Ísl. Þjóðs. (of dancing).

duna, esp. pl. dunur, f. a rusbing, thundering noise, Eb. 174, Fms. iii. 184; hence the Dan. tor-den, qs. Thor-dön, the din of Thor, i. e. thunder, supposed to be the noise of the god Thor in his wain.

dunda, ao, to dally, Bb. I. 9.

dun-henda, u, f. (-hendr, adj.), a sort of metre, having four anadiploses, Edda (Ht.) 124, 128.

dunn, m. a band, gang, drove; ganga i e-m duni, to march in one band, Sturl. iii. 185 C; sauda-dunn, a drove of sheep, Sd. 164: a number of ten is called dunn, Edda 108.

dunna, u, f. the wild duck, Edda (Gl.), cp. Engl. dun.

DUPT, m., better duft, [it properly means the powder of flowers or the like; so dust in Germ. means a sweet smell as from flowers; in old writers duft is rare, dust (q. v.) freq.; in mod. use dust is almost obsolete, and as these two words can hardly be distinguished in old MSS. (where ft and st look like one another), the transcribers have often substituted duft, where the old MS. has dust: again, dufta (a verb) is never used, but only dusta: duft is probably a foreign South-Teutonic word; the Swedish uses only the more homely sounding anga, vide angi]:proder; d. ok aska, Stj. 204, Sks. 211, Magn. 448: botan. pollen; duptberi, a, m. the stamen of a flower; dupt-knappr, m. the anther; duptbraor, m. the filament, Hjalt.

dura-, v. dyrr.

durgr, m. [dvergr], a sulky fellow. durgs-legr, adj. sulky. durna-legr, adj. sulky, rude. durna-skapr, m., etc.

durnir, m. a dwarf, Yt. 2: metaph. a sulky man. durtr, m. = durgr. durts-legr, adj. sulky, rude. dur-voror, m. a door-keeper, Eg. 409, Fms. ii. 160.

dusil-, v. drysil-.

dusla, ao, to bustle, be busy, Njaro. 368, (cant word.)

DUST, n. [A. S. dust; Engl. dust], dust, Fms. v. 82, 324, xi. 12, Stj. 336. Num. xxiii. 10, Greg. 98: flowers ground to dust, Pr. 471, 472, 474, 475.

dust, n. [Dan. dyst; Swed. dust], a tilt; halt eitt d. med mik, Karl. 72; d. ok turniment, Fr.

dusta, ao, to dust.

dustera, ao, to tilt, fight, Bev. (Fr.)

dusti, 2, m. a grain of dust; engi d. saurs, 656 A. ii. 8.

dúða, 20, to swathe (in clothes). dúði, a, m. swaddling clothes.

DUFA, u, f., gen. pl. duma; [Goth. dubo; A.S. duva; Engl. dove; Dan. due; Swed. dufva; O. H. G. tiba; Germ. taube]:—a dove, Stj. 111, Hom. 57, 65, Al. 168: as a term of affection, my dove. 2. poët. a wave, one of the daughters of Ran, Edda. COMPDS: dufu-ligr, adj. dove-like, 655 xxxii. 7. dufu-nef, n. a cognom. 'dove-neb,' dove-beak, dufu-ungi, a, m. the young of a dove, Mar. 656, Stj. 317. dúka, 20, to cover with a cloth, Fas. iii. 187, 373.

dúk-lauss, adj. without a cloth, Pm. 108.

DUKR, m. [Engl. duck; Swed. duk; Dan. dug; Germ. tuch]:—any cloth or texture, Bard. 160; vaomáls-d., lín-d., etc., a cloak of wadmal, linen, etc.: a carpet, Fms. ix. 219: tapestry in a church, fimm dúka ok tvá þar í búna, annarr með rautt silki, Vm. 77, vide altaris-dúkr, 20: a neck-kerchief of a lady, dúkr á hálsi, Rm. 16.

β. a table-cloth (borðdúkr); as to the ancient Scandin. custom of covering the table with a cloth, vide esp. Nj. ch. 117, Bs. i. 475, Guom. S. ch. 43; and for still earlier times the old heathen poem Rm., where Modir, the yeoman's good-wife, covers the table with a 'marked' (i. e. stitched) white linen cloth, 28; whilst Edda, the old bondman's good-wife, puts the food on an uncovered table (verse 4); by a mishap the transcriber of Ob. (the only MS. wherein this poem is preserved) has skipped over a verse in the second line of verse 17, so that we are unable to say how Amma, the husbandman's good-wife, dressed her table: the proverb, eptir dúk og disk, i. c. post festum. y. a towel; at banquets a servant went round to the guests in turn bearing a basin and a towel on the shoulder, Lv. ch. 13; to be served first was a mark of honour; cp. also Nj. l. c., Har. S. Haror. ch. 79 (the Danish king and the old woman): a napkin, Blas. 45, 655 xvii. 5: belonging to the priest's vestment, Pm. 133; d. ok corporale, Vm. 154, Stj. Gen. xxiv. 65 (a veil).

dúk-slitr, n. rags of a d., Vm. 77. dún-beor, m. a bed of down-clothes, D. N. (Fr.) dun-grind, f. a frame whereon to clean eider-down.

dún-hægindi, n. a pillow or bolster of down, D. N.

dun-klesoi, n. pl. bedclothes of eider-down, Js. 78, Sturl. iii. 108, Bs. Lowell i. 802

DUNN (dýnn, Mart. 126), m. [Dutch dune; Engl. down: Swed. and Dan. dun; Germ. daun is prob. of Saxon or Dutch origin, as the d remains unchanged]: down; taka dun ok dyna, N.G.L. i. 334; esp. used of bedclothes of down; the word occurs in the old heathen poem Gs., sofi hann á dúni, 5; blautasti d., Mart. l. c.; á dúni ok á guðvefi, Fms. x. 379; vöttu (pillows) dáns fulla, a verse of Hornklofi. In Icel. 'dún' is chiefly used of eider-down, which word is undoubtedly of Icel. origin, Fr. édre-don, Germ. eder-don or eider-daun; the syllable er is the Icel. gen. zoar-dun, from nom. zor (the name of the eider duck), acc. zoi, gen. zoar. The eider-down, now so important as an article of trade, is never mentioned in old Icel. writers or laws; they only speak of the eggs (egg-ver). The English, during their trade with Icel. in the 15th century, seem first to have brought the name and article into foreign markets. At first it was bought in a rough state; Bogi Benediktsson in Feoga-æfi II records that a certain Jon i Brokey (born 1584), after having been in England, was the first who taught the Icel. to clean the down-var hann líka sá fyrsti hér vestra sem tók að hreinsa zoar-dun..., en sor (i. e. during the English and Hanseatic trade in Icel.) seldist óhreinsaðr dún eptir Búa-lögum. Icel. say, hreinsa dún, hræla dún. The Danes say, have dun på hagen, to bave down on the chin.

dun-tekja, u, f. gathering eider-down.

dúra, 20, to nap, Skálda 163.

DURR, m. a nap, slumber, Hom. 116, O. H. L. 80: in mod. usage in such phrases as, milli dúra; sofa góðan, væran, dúr.

DUS (dos, Björn), n. [Norse duus], a lull, dead calm, in the proverb, opt kömr zöiregn or dusi, a lull is often followed by a beavy shower, Eb. (in a verse).

dúsa, u, f. a sugar-teat for babies to suck.

dúsa, ad, prob. to doze, Og. 18.

dvala, u, f. [Dan. dvale], = dvöl, Fr. dvala, að, to delay, with dat.; at dvala ekki förinni, Fms. xi. 22; ef ér dvalit ferðinni, 115; dvalar hann ekki brotferðinni, Fb. ii. 147;

Digitized by GOO

muna nú Helgi hjörping (hjörpingi or -pingum, better) dvala, Hkv. 1. 49 : Tto trust in one's integrity, Fs. 121 (of 2 judge); fyrir sakir þinnar dygðar, with infin., Kjartan bað þá ekki dvala, Ld. 176.

dval-samr, adj. dilatory, Stj. 122; e-m verðr dvalsamt, one is delayed, Greg. 80, Fbr. 136.

DVELJA, dvaldi, dvaldi; pres. dvel; part. dvaldr, dvalinn; sup. dvalit: [A.S. dveljan; Engl. dwell; O.H.G. tvelan; Swed. dväljas; Dan. dvæle]:--to dwell, delay, with acc.; d. für, ferð, to keep back, delay, Grág. ii. 385, Isl. ii. 266; því dvalða ek dauða þinn, Blas. 47; d. dóm (a law term), to defer judgment, Grag. i. 67; d. rad fyrir konu, to put off a woman's marriage, 307; at þat dveli garðlagit, ii. 332; gútu þeir hann eptir dvalit, they managed to keep him back, Fms. vii. 169; d. e-n frá e-u, to keep one from doing a thing, Jb. 380; dvelr mik engi hlutr, at ek geng ekki ..., i. e. I will go at once, Fms. ii. 37: the proverb, mart um dvelr þann er um morgin sefr, Hm. 58: absol., dvaldi þat fyrir ferð beirra, that caused delay, Njaro. 374. 2. in neut. sense = dveljask, to tarry, cp. Engl. to dwell on a thing; ok vildu eigi dvelja, ok eigi bida Olafs konungs, Fms. iv. 118. 3. with acc. of time, to wait, abide; konungr dvaldi mestan hluta sumars á Hálogalandi, Fms. iv. 233; d. af stundir, to kill time, Band. 8; d. stund e-s, to bold one up, Karl. II. reflex, to stop oneself, i. e. to stay, make a stay; myndi bar dveljask um hríð, Nj. 122; ok er þeir höfðu þar dvalisk til bess er ..., Ég. 28; dvaldisk þar um hríð, 59; ok er konungr hafðr dvalsk par um hrið, Fms. viii. 428: d. at e-u, to tarry over a thing, D. I. i. 2. the phrase, e-dvelsk, one is kept, loses time by a thing; dvaldisk þeim þar lengi, Eg. 230; dvaldisk þeim þar at því, in (doing) that they lost much time, Nj. 241. 3. with pass. notion; sá dagr mun dveljask, that day will not soon come, will come late, Ld. 174; dveljask munu stundirnar, the bours will be taken up, it will take many bours, it will grow late before all is told, Edda 15; ef bat dvelsk, at ek koma eigi hingat, if I should be bindered from coming, Fms. xi. 51: to tarry, er ek hefi svá lengi dvalisk at sækja yðvarn fund, Ld. 32.

DVERGR, m. [A.S. dveorg; Engl. dwarf; Germ. (irreg.) zwerg; Swed. dverg]:—a dwarf; about the genesis of the dwarfs vide Vsp. 6-16, Edda 9: in mod. Icel. lore dwarfs disappear, but remain in local names, as Dverga-steinn, cp. the Dwarfy Stone in Scott's Pirate, and in several words and phrases: from the belief that the dwarfs lived in rocks, an echo is called dverg-mál, n. (-máli, m.), dwarf-talk, Al. 35, 37, Fas. iii. 369; and dverg-mala, ad, to echo: from the skill of the dwarfs in metal-working, a skilful man is called dverg-hagr, adj. (skilled as a dwarf), or dvergt, a dwarf in bis art; dverga-smidi, n. dwarf'swork, i. e. all works of rare art, such as the famous or enchanted swords of antiquity, Hervar S. ch. 2, Fas. i. 514, ii. 463-466 (Asmund. S.), Gisl. 80: crystal and prismatic stones are in Norway called either dwarf's-work or 'dwarfy-stones,' as people believe that they are worked out by the dwarfs in the depths of the earth: botan., dverga-sóleyg, f. ranunculus glacialis, Hjalt. β. from its dwarfed shape, a dog without a tail is in Icel. called dvergr or dverg-hundr, m., Clar.: sbort pillars which support the beams and rafters in a house are called 'dvergar;' this sense occurs as early as Hom. (St.) 65, and is still in use in some parts of Icel.: the four dwarfs, East, West, North, South, are in the Edda the bearers of heaven, Edda 5. y. ornaments in a lady's dress worn on the shoulder are called 'dvergar,' Rm. 16; smokkr á bringu, dúkr á hálsi, dvergar á öxlum, prob. a kind of brooch. For compos vide above.

DVÍNA or dvina (in old writers even dvena), 20, [North. E. dwyne], to dwindle, pine away; bá dvenar tómr maðr, Hom. 26; dvinar allr proti (of a tumor), Sks. 235; lét hann eigi dvina kveðandina, Fms. v. 174; þaðan í frá sögðu menn at dvinaði liðveizla Sæmundar við Þorgrim, Sturl. i. 171; görir nú eigi at dvina við, it will not do to saunter, Karl. 380; dvina munda ek láta ferðina, I would let the travelling cease, Fs. 172; heit dvinudu Heina, their bragging dwindled away, Lex. Poet. In early times this word was probably sounded with an i (short), which may be inferred from the form dvena; and the word was rather common, and occurs rarely. In later times it was ennobled by the frequent use made of it in Pass., and with altered inflexion, viz. an i throughout, the pres, indic, either strong, dvin, or weak, dvinar; thus, her begar mannlig hjálpin dvín, Pass. 44. 12; görvöll þá heimsins gleðin dvín, 41. 8; þá æfin lífsins dvín, 36. 10; but holds megn og kraptr dvínar, 44. I; dvínar og dregst í hlé, 47. 4: infin., sjón og heyrn tekr að dvína, 41. 10.

dvol, f., gen. dvalar, old pl. dvalar, mod. dvalir, [cp. 'dwelling' = delay, Engl. Ballads], a short stay, stop; dvalir ok náttstaði, Stj. 294; eiga dvöl, to stop, Nj. 181; afhvarf manna ok dvalar (acc. pl.), Ld. 204; meðan þessi dvól (pause) var, Fms. xi. 135: delay, iv. 179; bera til dvala, to cause delay, Fas. iii. 543:—used once as neut. pl., urðu dvöl dægra, Am. 102. β. gramm. quantity, Skálda 175.

dyörill or dyröill, m. a nickname, seems to mean a tail, = mod. dindill, Fms. i. 186, ii. 253, 279; cp. daora. to wheedle.

DYGD, f. [A. S. dugub = doughtiness, valour; O. H. G. tugad; Germ. tugend; Swed. dygd; Dan. dyd]:-virtue, probity, only used in a moral metaph. sense; the original sense (from duga, q.v.) of valour, strength, probity, Fms. vi. 58; lio ok d. (belp and faithful service) goos drengs, 2271 fyrir sina dygo, for bis faithfulness, vii. 158. β. in mod. eccl. writers the Lat. virtus is rendered by dygo, Vidal., Pass., etc.; ó-dygo, wickedness. y. virtue, of an inaminate discounting dygoar-lauss, adj. wicked, K. A. 230: bad, 24. dygoar-lauss, adj. wicked, K. A. 230: bad, 24. dygoar-lauss, in. dygoar-maor, in. a faitblessness, wickedness, Stj. 487, Bs. i. 40. trusty man, Grett. 147 A. dygöar-verk, dygoar-verk, n. faithful work, Mar. : cp. dugr, dugnaðr.

dygougr, adj. 'doughty,' faithful, trusty; d. bjónusta, Fas. i. 90; d. madr, Grett. 143 A, Th. 12: efficient, baving virtue in them, of inanimate things, Stj. 99, 215. B. in mod. eccl. writers, virtuous, good. dyggiligr, adj. faithful, Stj. 198. dygg-leikr, m. faithfulness, H. E. ii. 66, Fms. viii. 29. things, Stj. 99, 215.

dyggliga and dyggiliga, adv. faithfully, trustily, Stj. 9, 152, Fms. iii. 115, 138, Bs. i. 40.

dyggr, adj., mostly with v if followed by a vowel, e.g. dyggvar, dyggvan, superl. dyggvastr, compar. dyggvari, but sometimes the v is dropped:faithful, trusty; dyggvar drottir, worthy, good people, Vsp. 63; d. ok trúr, Fms. x. 233; d. ok drengileg meðferð, vi. 96; dyggra ok dugandi manna, Stj. 121; enn dyggvasti hirðmaðr, Magn. 484; reynda ek hann enn dyggvasta i öllum hlutum, Fms. i. 69; dyggvastr ok drottin-hollastr. Hkr. iii. 150; but dyggastr, Fms. vi. 401, l.c.; ú-dyggr, faitbless: in mod. usage esp. as epithet of a faithful servant, d. þjón, dygt hjú; ódyggt hjú, a bad servant, etc.: of inanimate things, dyggir ávextir. Stj. 234.

DYKR (mod. dynkr, with an inserted n), m. a cracking, snapping noise; vard af því d. mikill, it gave a great crack, Grett. 96 A, cp. new Ed.; heyrðu þeir dyki mikla, Bárð. 32 new Ed.; mikill dykr, Al. 76; dunur ok dynki, Fas. iii. 412 (paper MS.); varð þat svá mikill dykr, sem nauts-búk flegnum væri kastað mör á gólfit, Eb. 220 (new Ed. 78); dynkr, Grett. 178 new Ed.

dyl-dúkr, m. a veil, B. K. 83.

dylgjur, f. pl. [dólgr], suppressed enmity, finding vent in menaces, bootings, and the like; vóru þá dylgjur miklar með þeim, Eb. 22; nú eru dylgjur miklar þat er eptir var þingsins, Band. 13; vóru þá dylgjur miklar millum þeirra allra, Sturl. i. 196.

DYLJA, pret. duldi and duldi, part. duldr, dulidr, Fms. ii. 97; dulinn, Fb. i. 11 (Hdl. 7), Fs. 97 (MS. Arna-Magn. no. 132); [Swed. dölja; Dan. dolge]:-to conceal, bide, with acc. of the person, gen. of the thing concealed; d. e-s, to disavow, deny, dissemble; ætla ek því alla (þá varla?) kunna at dylja þessa ráða, they can hardly deny it, Eg. 49; þórir dylr þess ekki, 173; Eysteinn duldi ok þeirra orða fyrir sik, E. said be bad never said such a thing, Fins. ix. 329; bó duldu þeir ekki illvirkja sinna, they denied not their guilt, confessed it, Sks. 583: with following subj., en allir duldu at né eitt vissi til Hrapps, all dissembled, Nj. 133; en ef umbodsmaðr dylr (disavows), at hann hafi við umboði tekið, Gbl. 375. II. reflex. to conceal, bide oneself; ok kendi brátt... þó at hann dyldisk, Fms. ii. 173; ok fékk hann svá dulzk fyrir honum, at eigi vissi jarl . . . , be bid bimself (bis thoughts) so well, that ..., viii. 16; at hat se flugumenn, ok vili dyljask (disguise themselves) undir munka bunadi, vi. 188. 2. metaph., d. vid e-t, to conceal for oneself; purfu vér eigi at dyljask vid, at ..., Fms. v. I; megu þeir þú eigi við dyljask, at ek hefi drepit hann, Grett. 155 A; en Sveinn duldisk við þat, S. sbrank from believing it, Orkn. 298; ckki dyljumk ek við (I don't disavow) skuldleika okkra, Ld. 40; en ef goði dylsk við (disavows) þingsesti þess manns, Grug. i. 23; truit þessu eigi medan per megit vid dyljask, believe it not as long as you can disavow it, i. e. till you get full evidence, Fms. ix. 477: dyljask i e-u; Eirikr konungt parf nú ekki at d. i því, at..., king E. cannot conceal it for bimself, tbat . . ., Eg. 424, bior. 118, 191, 196. III. part. pass., the phrase, vera (ganga) dulior (duldr, dulinn) e-s, or vera d. at e-u, to be unaware, to be kept in ignorance of a thing; hefir hon verio alls bessa duld, Vigl. 33; en at þú gangir lengr duliðr þess er skylt er at vita, than that thou shouldest be longer ignorant of things which all people ought to know, Edda 13; veit engi ætt mina, ok ganga þess allir duldir, Frns. viii. 21; dulin ertú Hyndla, H., thou art mistaken, Hdl. 7; ok ertú of mjök dulinn at honum, herra, thou, my lord, art too much mistaken about him, i.e. trustest bim too well, Fs. 97, cp. Fms. ii. 57: the phrase, e-t fer, gengt, dult, is bidden, kept secret.

dylma, d, [Dan. dulme]; d. yfir e-t, to be careless or indifferent about a thing, Fr.; dylminn, part. careless, indifferent, Stj. 122.

dymbil-dagar, m. pl. the 'dumb-bell days,' i. e. the three days before Easter; hence dymbildaga-vika, u, f. [Swed. dymmel-vecka; Dan. dimmel-uge], Passion week, Bs. i. 71, Fms. x. 72, H. E. i. 491, Sturl. i. 25; during the dymbildagar the bells in Icel, were rung with a wooden tongue called dymbill, m.; a dymbill is often mentioned among the inventories of Icel. churches of the 14th century, e.g. kirkja á dymbil, Vm. 47, 51: it is, however, likely that the word dymbill itself is simply derived from the Engl. dumb-bell, as in the Roman church the bells were dumb or muffled in the Passion week: Björn (Lex.) mentions that in the century before his time people used to strike the time to a dance with the dymbill. which prevails in the A.S., is quite obsolete; trúa e-m til dygðar um e-t, 占 It was also an old Icel, custom that the father of a house inflicted a general chastisement on his children and household on Good Friday for the sins T than haugr, Ld. 152, Eb. 172, 176, Dropl. 9, Fas. i. 438 (in a verse), of the past year, gently or strongly as they had been obedient or not; hence the popular phrase, lior ao dimbildogum, or koma dymbildagar, = the dimmel-days are nigh, i. e. the day of reckoning will surely come; cp. H. E. iv. 180, 181 (note).

Digitized by GOOGI

dymbil-nott, f. the three nights next before Easter, Vm. 144.

dyn-bjalla, u, f. a tinkling bell, Grett. 129.

dyndr, adj. = dunhendr, Bs. ii. 103 (in a verse).

DYNGJA, u, f. a lady's bower, in old Icel. dwellings, Eg. 159, Nj. 66, Bjarn. 68, Rd. 270, Korm. 10, Fs. 88, Gísl. 15; in those passages it is different from 'stofa,' and seems to have been a detached apartment: [as to the root, cp. A.S. dyng, O. H. G. tunc, Engl. dungeon;the common sense prob. being that both the bower and the dungeon were secluded chambers in the inner part of the house or castle]:-Trolladyngiur, a mountain in Icel., a bower of giantesses. 2. a beat. dung, Dan. dynge, (mod.)

DYNJA, dundi; pres. dyn, dunio; [cp. A. S. dynnan; Engl. din; the Icel. word is irregular in regard to the interchange of consonants; for the Lat. tonare, Engl. thunder, Germ. donner would properly answer to Icel. bynja, a word which does not exist]:—to gush, shower, pour, of rain, with the additional notion of sound; dundi ákaft regn ór lopti, Stj. 594. 1 Kings xviii. 45; of blood, bloo er dundi or sárum Drottins, 656 A. I. 31, Pass. 23. 3; dundi þá blóðit um hann allan, Nj. 176: of air quivering and earth quaking, Haustl. 14, Vtkv. 3: of rain and storm, steypi-dögg görði, ok vatnsflóðið kom, og vindar blésu og dundu á húsinu, Matth. vii. 25, 27; dynjandi logi, Yt. 6, Mar. 2. metaph. to pour, shower, like hail; Otkell lætr þegar d. stefnuna, O. let the summons shower down, Nj. 176: of weapons, dundu á þá vápnin, the weapons showered upon them, Fms. viii. 126; spiotin dundu á beim, xi. 334: the phrase, dynja á, of misfortune; eigi var mér ván, at skjótara mundi á dynja, vii. 125; hvat sem á dynr, whatever so bappens. 3. metaph. also of men, to pour on or march in a body with a din; dundu jarlar undan, Lex. Poet.; dynja i bod, to march to battle, Sighvat; dynja þeir þá fram á þingit, Lv. 31; konungs menn dynja þegar á hæla þeim, Ål. 11. dynr, m. pl. ir, [A. S. dyn; Engl. din; Swed. dån; Dan. dön]. a din; engi d. veror af hlaupi kattarins, noiseless are the cat's steps, Edda 19; gnýr eða þrymr, dynr eða dunr, Skálda 169; d. ok brestr, Bær. 15: marching as troops, rida mikinn dyn, to ride with mickle din (of horsemen galloping), Isl. ii. 333: the phrase, koma e-m dyn fyrir dyrr, to make a din before one's door, take one by surprise, Fms. viii. 60, 180; gera sem mestan dyn, to make the greatest noise, 403: in pl., heyrdi Gangleri dyni mikla, Edda 44.

dyn-skot, n. a shot making a din, but barmless, Fms. v. 198.

dynta, t, to dint.

dyntr, m., dynta, f., dyntill, m. a dint, a cognom., Fms.; vide dyttr.

dyrgja, u, f. [durgr], a dwarf woman, a bag, þjal. Jón. 17.

dyrgja, ô, to fish with a dorg, = dorga, piòr. 91. dyri-gætt, f. a door-frame, Sd. 158, Odd. 16.

dyri-staft (mod. dyru-), m. a door-post, Stj. 279. Exod. xii. 7, Sd.

153, Grett. 121, Ver. 21, Sturl. ii. 49.

DYRR, n. or f. pl., in mod. usage always fem., and often so in old writers; sometimes even in old MSS.: neut, with the article; dyrrin with a double r (or dyrin, Eb. 42 new Ed., Stj. 520, Edda 29, Nj. 198): fem. dyrnar; aðrar dyrr, Fms. iv. 220, 221; dyrr byrgðar, Stj. 40; einar dyr, Sturl. i. 189; dyr opnar, id. (but dyrin, id., one line below, perhaps wrongly by the transcriber): in most cases, however, the gender of the gen. and dat. cannot be discerned: there is hardly any instance of its neuter use if joined to an adjective; thus, in Njala we read, gengu þeir þá inn allir ok skipuðusk í dyrrin (neut.); but only four lines below, ef nokkurar væri laundyrr á: hversu margar dyrr eru á Valhöll eða hversu stórar, Edda 25; but settisk Borr í dyrrin, 20: in old writers the gen. and dat, are spelt with u, dura, durum, and that they were so pronounced may be seen from Skálda 163-þegar gestrinn kveðr 'dura,' þá skyldi eigi bondinn 'dura;' cp. also Grag. ii. 194, Fms. iv. 221, viii. 161, Gm. 23, Sturl. iii. 218, Edda 25, Landn. 231; but dyra, dyrum, Isl. ii. 342 (rare): in mod. usage y throughout (spelt dyra, dyrum, proucd. as i):-[Gr. bupa; Goth. daur, neut., and dauro, fem.; A.S. duru; Old Engl. dore (now door); Dan. dör; Swed. dörr; Germ. thure; the root vowel is short in Gr. and Goth. as well as the Scandin.]:—a door, viz. the opening (hurð is Lat. janua); karl-dyrr, branda-d., úti-d., leyni-d., and-d., eldahús-d., Sturl. iii. 218; synztu-d., id.; úti-dyrr enar syðri, 185; suðrdyrr, 186; syðri-d., 190; skála-d. nyrðri, 187; kvenna-skála-d., 188; í beim dyrum er skálar mættusk, 189; and-dyri hit syðra, 218; sund-d. (= suðr-dyr?), ii. 106; stofu-d., 181; dýrshöfuðs-d., i. 106, a door over which a stag's head is placed. COMPDS: dura-dómr, m., vide dómr. dura-gætti = dyrigætti. dura-stafr = dyristafr. dura-stob, f. a door-post, N. G. L. i. 55. dura-umbuningr, m. a door-frame, Grett. dura-veggr, m. a door-jamb, Sturl. i. 178. dura-voror, m. a door-keeper, Sks. 289. dyra-drótt, f. a door-sill, vide drótt. dyr-skíð, n. = dyrigætti (?), D. N.

DYS, f., gen. sing. nom. pl. dysjar, [Dan. dös and dysse], a cuirn, less Hbl. 45, pord. 73; kumbl-dys, Gg. 1. dysja, ad, [Dan. dysse = to bide], to bury in a cairn, beap stones over a witch, criminal, or the like, never used of a proper burying, Eb. 172, Grett. 112, Fms. v. 222, Landn. 107.

dytta, tt, [Engl. dint], to meddle: recipr., ber höfdut til dytzt, Stj.

510: in mod. usage, dytta ad e-u, to varnish.

dyttr, m. a dint, a nickname, Fms. ii. 67; hnakka-d., a 'neck-dint,' i. e. a shot by a bolt in the nape of the neck, Orkn. 416 (in a verse); the hnakka-dyz of the MS. is = dytts, as vaz = vatns, braz = bratts.

DÝ, n. a bog, Sturl. iii. 50, Gbl. 393, Róm. 259. dýbliza, dýfliza, u, f. a dark dungeon, Al. 94, Fms. i. 258, iii. 89, vi. 164, Eluc. 12, 42, Sks. 457, Þiðr. 63, Grett. 158, Fagrsk. 111: [no doubt a foreign word, perhaps from 'diabolus' = the dungeon of bell.] DÝFA, δ, [cp. Goth. daupjan = βαπτίζειν; O. H. G. taufjan; Germ. taufen; Dan. dobe; A. S. dyppan, akin to djupt; cp. also dufa, a billow; all these words are akin, but the Engl. dive is the same word]:-to dip, with dat.; d. e-m i vatn, to dip one into water, Hom. 139, K. A. 6, cp. N. G. L. i. 339; d. sér, to dive: the word is now freq., but rare in old writers, who preferred drepa; in Germ. etc. it is only used in the sense of christening = baptizare, prop. to dip into water, but never so in the Icel., which renders baptize by skíra.

dýfa, u, f. dipping in. DYJA (mod. dúa), duði, to sbake, quiver, of spears or the like; d. frökkur, dörr, to sbake spears, fight, Rm. 32, Fms. vi. (in a verse); d. skör, to sbake the locks, bkv. 1; hann duði spjótið inn í dyrnar, Sturl. iii. 218, Ld. 278: in mod. usage, það dúir undir, of boggy ground that shakes dýna, u, f. [dúnn], a down-bed, feather-bed, a pillow or bolster, Fms. iii. 125, vi. 279, ix. 26, x. 186, Dipl. iii. 4, Bs. ii. 167, Lex. Poët. boggy ground, Dropl. 26, v. l.

dýna, ô, to cover, belay with down, N. G. L. i. 334.

dýpi, n. [djúpr; Ulf. diupei; Germ. tiefe], deptb.

dypka, ad, to become deeper, deepen.

dýpt (and dýpð), f. [Goth. djupipa], depth, Clem. 33, Bs. i. 209.

DÝR, n. [Gr. θήρ; Ulf. djus = θηρίον, Mark i. 13, I Cor. xv. 32; A. S. deôr; Engl. deer; Germ. thier; Swed.-Dan. dyr]:-an animal, a. excluding birds, dýr ok fuglar, Edda 144 (pref.); fuglar, dýr eðr sækvikindi, Skálda 170; dýrum (wild beasts) eða fuglum, Grág. ii. β. used of wild beasts, as bears, Nj. 35, Grett. 101, Glum. 330, Fs. 146 (bjarn-dýra): in Icel. esp. the fox, Dropl. 27, Bs. ii. 137, the fox being there the only beast of prey, hence dýr-bit; úarga-dýr, the lion; villi-d., a wild beast. Y. used esp. of binting deer, the deer of the forest, as in Engl. deer, the bart, etc., Hkv. 2. 36, N. G. L. i. 46, Str. 3, Fas. iii. 4, bior. 228-238; hrein-d., the reindeer; raud-d., the red deer. dýra-bogi, a, m. a trap to catch foxes. dýra-garor, m. a yard or inclosure to catch wild beasts, Gpl. 456. dýra-grof, f. a pit to catch wild beasts, Gpl. 456, 457. dýra-kjöt, n. the flesh of animals, Stj. 8. dýrarödd, f. the voice of beasts, Skálda 170. dýra-skinn, n. the skin of wild beasts, Fas. iii. 124. dýra-veiðar, f. pl. deer-bunting, þiðr. l. c., 655 x. 2, Gbl. 447. dýrs-belgr, m. a beast's skin, Fas. ii. 518 (of a bear). dýrs-horn, n. a deer's born used for a drinking cup, Eg. 306, dýrs-höfuð, n. the bead of a deer, Sturl. i. 106. dyr-bit, n. 'deer-bite,' of the worrying of lambs by a fox, Bs. i. 587.

DYRD, f. [Engl. dearth], glory; himinrikis d., the glory of beaven, Fms. v. 143, 230, Fat. 137, 625. 163, Fms. v. 216 (a glorious miracle): in pl., 623. 32, Eluc. 47; tóm d., vain-glory, 655 xxvi. 3: in N. T. and eccl. writers since the Reformation this word is much in use; the dofa COMPDS: dýrðar-dagr, of the N. T. is usually rendered by dyro. dýrðar-fullr, adj. full m. a day of glory, Hom. 90, Fms. ii. 142. Dýrðar-konungr, m. the King of of glory, Fms. ii. 199, vii. 89. dýrðar-kóróna, u, f. a crown of glory, Glory (Christ), Niorst. 4. Magn. 502, Pass. 25. 11. dýrðar-maðr, m. a glorious man, Hkr. iii. 250, Bs. i. 90. dýrðar-samliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. glorious, Stj. 288, 655 xxxii. 17, Fms. iv. 32, Stj. 34. dýrðar-staðr, m. a glorious place, Ver. 3. dýrðar-söngr, m. a song of glory.

dyr-gildr, adj. dearly paid for, Fms. vi. 106.

dyr-gripr, m. a jewel, treasure, a thing of great value, Eg. 4, 55, 179, Orkn. 354.

dýr-hundr, m. a deer-bound, esp. a fox-bound, Eb. 216.

dýrka (and dýrčka), að, with acc. to worsbip, Stj. 103: to glorify, Ver. 6; d. Drottinn Guð þinn, Stj. 458; d. Guðs orð, 655 C. 15; d. kenning postulanna, 14: to celebrate, d. benna dag, Hom. 8: to exalt, nú er tíð Drottinn, sú er þú d. oss ambáttir þínar, Blas. 47; ek em Guð sá er þik dýrkaða'k, ok mun ek enn d. þik, 50; hann dýrkaði válaðan, Greg. 24; d. e-n med e-u, Fms. x. 315; d. e-n, to pray one reverentially; hón kastar sér fram á gólfit, dýrkaði hann, svá segjandi, Stj. 522. 2 Sam. xiv. 4; hence the common Icel. phrase, vertu ekki að d. hann, don't 2. reflex. to magnify oneself; þá mundu Gyðingar beg (coax) bim. dýrkask í sjálfum sér, Stj. 392; hirð eigi þú maðr at d. í krafti þínum, thou man, glory not in thy strength, Hom. 8; sá er dýrkask, kvað Paulus postuli, dýrkisk hann með Guði, 23: in pass. sense, Fms. xi. 415; dýrkaðisk dæla, u, f. bolinmæði réttlátra, Hom. 49; verit ér þolinmóðir litla stund, at ér dýrkisk, 623. 32. In N. T. and mod. eccl. writers the Gr. δοξάζειν is sometimes rendered by dýrka, e. g. Matth. v. 16.

dýrkan, f. worsbip, adoration, 623. 11; veita goðum d., 655. 1: in pl., Stj. 54: glorifying, dýrkan andar ok likama, 50; afguða-d., skurðgoða-d., idolatry.

dýr-kálfr, m. a deer-calf, Hkv. 2. 36.

dýr-kálkr, m. a dub. reading (of a horse), Glúm. 356.

dýr-keyptr, part. dearly bought, Fbr. 56 new Ed.

dýr-lagor, part. dearly rated, Ld. 30.

dýr-leikr, m. (-leiki, a, m.), dearness, Dipl. ii. 5.

dýr-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), glorious, Fms. iv. 82, vii. 85, x. 223, xi.

51, Eg. 478; d. veizla, Bs. i. 133; d. matráð, 139. dýrlingr (dýrðlingr, Hom. 115, Bs. i. 202, Fms. i. 227), m. [A. S. deôrling; Engl. darling]:—a saint, boly man; Guðs d., Ver. 1, Fms. iv. 227, 232, v. 214, Bs. i. (freq.)

dýr-menni, n. a glorious man, Lex. Poët.

dýr-mætr, adj. precious, Stj. 180, 204, Fas. i. 455, Sks. 183.

DYRR, adj., compar. dýrri, superl. dýrstr, mod. more freq. dýrari, dýrastr; dýröztum, Fb. i. 211: [Ulf. does not use this word, but renders έντιμος etc. by reiks or svêrs; A.S. deore; Engl. dear; Dan. and Swed. dyr; O. H. G. tiuri; Germ. theuer]:-dear: 1. of price, of such and such a price: referring to the weregild, at sá maor sé vel dýrr, Hrafn. Q; fésætt svá mikla, at engi maor hafi dýrri verit hér á landi enn Höskuldr, i.e. that there has never before been paid so high a weregild as for Hoskuld, Nj. 189; munu þat margir ætla at hann muni dýrstr gerr af þeim mönnum er hér hafa látizt, 250; dýrr mundi Hafliði allr, Sturl. i. 47: of other things, ek met hana dyrra en adrar, I put ber at a bigber price than the rest, Ld. 30; hversu dýr skal sjá kona, bow much is she to cost? id.; kaupa dýru verði, to buy dearly, at a bigh price; þér eruð dýru verði keyptir, I Cor. vi. 20. 2. precious, costly; bókina dýru, Fms. vii. 156; skjöldinn þann inn dýra, Eg. 698; enn Dýri dagr, vide dagr, Ann. 1373, Mar. 96; eigi var annarr (gripr) dýrri í Noregi, Fas. ii. 65; því betr sem gull er dýrra en silfr, Ld. 126; dýrar hallir, lordly balls, Rm. 45; enn dy'ri mjöor, the nectar, the godly mead, viz. the poetical mead of the gods, Hm. 106; hence dyr-gripr, a B. as a metrical term; enn Dyri hattr, the artificial metre, Edda 131; hence the phrase, kveda dyrt, to write in an artificial metre; dyrt bragr, bragar-háttr, an artificial air, tune, opp. to a plain one. ó-dýrr, common, Lex. Poët., mod. cheap; fjöl-d., glorious, and many other poet. compds: the proverb, dyrt er drottins ord, vide dróttinn. 8. of bigb worth, worthy; en dýra drottning María, Mar. 18; Abraham er kallaðr dýrstr (the worthiest) allra höfuðfeðra, Ver. 12; skatna dýrstr, the best of men, Edda, Ht. 82; Jon Loptsson, er dyrstr madr er a landi þessu, Sturl. i. 105; at því er at gæta við hversu dýran mann (noble, wortby man) þú átt málaferli, 33; af hinum dýrustum höfðingjum, Fb. l. c.: dýrr is not used in Icel. in the exact Engl. sense of beloved.

dýr-skinn, n. a deer-skin, N. G. L. iii. ch. 47.

dýr-tíð, n. a time of dearth, famine, N. T. dægi-ligr, adj. [Dan. deilig], fair, (mod. and rare.)

deegn (doegn), n. [Swed. dygn; Dan. dogn], = dzgr, q.v., N.G.L. i.

335, Skálda 190; this form is very rare.

DÆGR (dogr), n. [dagr; in Dan. dögn means the natural day = 24 hours, and answers to Icel. solar-hringr, whereas Icel. dægr usually means both night and day, so that one day makes two dzgr]: hence dzgramot or dægra-skipti, n., denotes the twilight in morning and evening, Hom. 41, Sks. 218; í degi dægr tvau, í dægri stundir tólf, in a day two dægt, in a dægt twelve bours, Rb. 6; þau (Day and Night) skulu ríða á hverjum tveim dægrum umhverfis jörðina, Edda 7; tuttugu ok fjórar stundir skulu vera í tveimr dægrum, Sks. 54; hann sigldi á átta dægrum til þess er hann tók Eyjar ú Íslandi, and below, ek skildumk fyrir fjórum nóttum (viz. Sunday to Thursday) við Ólaf konung Haraldsson, Fms. iv. 280; þeir vóru þrjú dægr í leitinni, Nj. 265; á hverju dægri, Grág. ii. 169; á dægrinu, 360; tvau dægr, Fb. i. 539; þrjú d., 431; skipti þat mörgum dægrum, id.:--in all these passages the 2. in some few cases it seems to be sense seems clearly to be as above. used of the astronomical day = 24 hours, or the Danish dogn; such is the case with the interesting passage Landn. I. ch. 1; the journey between Iceland and Ireland is here reckoned as five dægr, between Norway and Iceland seven, between Iceland and Greenland four, and to the deserts of Greenland (the east coast) one, etc.: sjau dægra sigling, fjögra d. sigling, fimm dægra haf, i.e. a sail of six, four, five dægr, Landn. 25, 26. COMPDS: desgra-far, n. the division of day and night, Sks. 26, Fms. iv. degra-stytting, f., in the phrase, til dægra styttingar, to sborten dægra-tal, n. ' day-tale,' calculation the time, of pastime, Fas. iii. 39. of time, Rb. 488: sam-dægris (sam-dægnis, O. H. L. 86), adv. the same day; also sam-dægrs: jafn-dægr or jafn-dægri, equinoctial time.

dægr-sigling, f. a day's sail, Landn. 26.

deel (doel), f. [dalr. dol], a little dale, Nj. 253, Sd. 173, Sturl. ii. 100 C; of fjalldala ok dælar, Greg. 59.

dæla, u, f.

I. a small dale, Sturl. ii. 100 (Ed.)

II. a naut. term, a contrivance to serve the purpose of a ship's pump, Edda (Gl.); hence dælu-austr, m. emptying a ship by a dæla, Fbr. 131, Grett. 95; dælu-ker, n. a kind of bucket: hann bað þrælinn færa sér í d. þat er hann kallaði sjó, Landn. 251; hence the metaph. phrase, láta dæluna ganga, to pour out incessantly, chatter without ceasing, Grett. 98. The ancients cannot well have known the pump; but as dælu-austr is distinguished from byttu-austr, where the buckets were handed up, so dæla seems to have been a kind of groove through which the bilge water was made to run out into the sea instead of emptying every bucket by handing it overboard: in Norse döla means a groove-formed trough, eaves, a trench, and the like, D. N. iv. 751, Ivar Aasen s. v. dæla, p. 75.

dæld, f. = dæl, Fms. x. 319. dæld, f. [á], gentleness, in the compp dældar-maðr (deildar-maðr, v. l.), m. a gentle, easy man, Ld. 68, 276.

dælir (dæll, sing.), m. pl. dales-men, O. H. L. 23; mostly in compds, as Lax-dælir, Vatns-dælir, Sýt-dælir, Svarf-dælir, Fljóts-dælir, etc., the men from Laxeydale, Waterdale, etc.

dell, adj. gentle, familiar, forbearing; this word is no doubt akin to deila (qs. deill), i. e. one who is easy 'to deal with;' vertu nú dæl (i. e. keep peace, be gentle) meðan ek em brautu, Nj. 52; ekki þótta ek nú dæll heima, I was not good to deal with at home, Fms. xi. 51; ekki d. vidfangs, not easy to deal with, Grett. 127; dæll (easy, affable) öllu lands fólki, Orkn. 184; engum þótti dælt at segja konungi hersögu, Fms. i. 41; þat er eigi svá dælt (easy) at taka Sigurð jarl af lífdögum sem at drepa kið eðr kalf, 53; þótti þeim dælla at taka þat er flaut laust, vi. 262; þótti nú sem dælst mundi til at kalla, er ungr konungr réð fyrir ríki, Eg. 264: the phrases, gora ser dælt vid e-n, to put oneself on a free, familiar footing towards one; poror gordi ser d. vid pau porvald ok Gudrunu, Ld. 134; ck mun nú gera mér dælt um ráðagörð við þik, I will take the liberty to give thee straightforward advice, Nj. 216; hann gördi sér við þá dælt, Grett. 144; mun dælt við mik þykja, ef þú ert eigi í för, tbey will pay me little beed, unless thou art with me, Lv. 37; botti vera spottsamr ok grár við alla þá er honum þótti sér dælt við, rude and taunting against all whom he thought his match to deal with, Bjarn. 3: proverb, delt er heima hvat, at bome anything will do, Hm. 5.

dæl-leikr, m. (-leiki, a, m.), familiarity, often with the notion of over great freedom, easy dealing; mjök kennir nú dælleika af várri hendi ... er svá vándr dúkr er undir diski þínum, Bs. i. 475; fyrir dælleika sakir, Sks. 553; til þeirra dælleika, 482; gör allt í dælleikum við oss, make no ceremony with us (the king's words to his host), Fms. vi. 390; hann (Moses) var svá í dælleikum við Guð, M. was in such familiarity with God, Ver. 23: affability, condescension, mildi ok dælleika, Fms. ix. 535, v.l. (of a duke): ú-dæll, overbearing; inn-dæll, delightful.

dællig-leikr (-leiki), m. = dælleikr, Sks. 482, 553, v. l., Sturl. i. 215 C. dæl-ligr, adj. [hence Dan. deilig], genteel, fine to look at, Edda 58. = dæll, familiar, Al. 33.

dælska, u, f. familiarity.

β. idle talk, nonsense, Edda 110, Karl. 437.

dælskr, adj. [6], belonging to a dale, mostly in compds: Breið-dælskr, from Broaddale, Sturl. i. 112 C.
β. [Engl. dull], moody, dull; en til dælskr af dul, Hm. 56; d., fólskr, impertinent, foolisb, Fms. iv. 205.

DÆMA, d or o, [domr; Ulf. domian; A. S. deman; Engl. deem (as in demster); O. H. G. tomjan; lost in mod. Germ.; Swed. domma; Dan. domme]:—a law term, to give judgment, pass sentence; d. mál, to give judgment in a case, Nj. 56, Eg. 417; hvat sem at dæma er, porst. St. 55; lét dæma vörnina, caused judgment to be given on the part of the defence (in reference to a curious Norse custom, by which both plaintiff and defendant pleaded before different courts, which had finally to adjust the sentence according to rules varying with the circumstances), Nj. 240; d. dóm, to pass sentence, Fms. xi. 246; d. rangan dóm, Sks. 109 B: the fines etc. in acc., d. fé, útlegðir, sekð, to pass sentence to a fine, outlawry, payment, etc., Grág. i. 320; útlegðir þær er á alþingi eru dæmðar, 3; fé þat á dæmask á heimili þess er sóttr er, 320; á þá at dæmask féit þannug, then the money is to pass (by sentence) to them, 378; dæma eindaga a té, to fix a term for payment, 3; d. lög, to pass a lawful sentence, Fms. xi. 224; d. af, to make void, Sks. 11: d. um e-t, to judge of a thing, 625. 60: with acc. of the person, d. e-n skógarmann, to proclaim one an outlaw, Nj. 240; d. syknan, sekan, etc.: adding dat. of the person, d. e-m e-t, to adjudge a thing to one; d. e-m fé, or the like; even, dæma e-m dom, to deal a sentence out to one, Fms. xi. l. c.: adding prep. af, d. sé af e-m, to give judgment against bis claim, Bs. ii. 91; but more usually, d. e-n af e-u, to declare one to bave forfeited; the instances in B. to ' deem,' give an Grág., N. G. L., and the Sagas are almost endless. II. to chatter, talk, mostly in poetry; esp. in the opinion, judge. allit. phrase, drekka ok d., vide Lex. Poët. and drekka; en er beir áttu of pessa hluti at d., when they were talking of those things, 623. 55.

dæmi, n., usually in pl., [dómr.]

1. an example, case: hörð dæmi, a bard fate, Hkv. 2. 2; úlfa d., the case (doings) of vodves, Hðm. 30; kvenna d., womanish example, behaving like a woman, þorst. St. 52; at mér verði vargsins d., Band. (MS.) 35: in plur., forn dæmi ok síðu foreldra sinna (cp. the Germ. weisthümer, alterthümer), old tales and customs of their forefathers, Fagrsk. ch. 219; pessi dæmi (i. e. verses) öll eru kveðin um þenna atburð, Mork. 114; þó hafa mörg dæmi orðið i forneskju, many things have happened in olden times, O. H. 73 (margs d., Fms. iv. 172, less correctly), cp. dæmi-saga; spekingr at viti ok at öllu frodt, lögum ok dæmum (old lore, tales), mannfræði ok ættfræði, Fms. vii. 102; Ari prestr hinn Frodi, er mörg d. spakleg hefir saman töld, Bs. i. 145, cp. also Barl. 47, 73, 112; hence fu-dæmi, an unexampled, partentous thing; eins dæmi, in the proverb, eins dæmin eru vest, viz. a singular, unexampled fate is the worst: used even of pictures, a story represented by drawing, Pm. 122: gramm. a citation, proof, nú skal láta heyra dæmin, now let us bear the proofs, Edda 49; pessi dæmi (those references) ok nóg önnur, Anecd. 6, 15, 18, 21; draga dæmi af bókum, B. example, generally; djarfari en d. eru til, Fms. iv. 311; Sks. 468. vita dzmi til e-s, Róm. 234; umfram d., or dzmum, unexampled, portentous, Stj. 143, Fms. i. 214, viii. 52; svá sem til dæmis at taka, to take an example, Mar. 40, Bs. ii. 116; hence the mod. adverb, til dæmis (commonly written short t. d. = e.g.), for example; sem d. finnask, Fagrsk. ch. 9, Barl. 50; meir en til dæma, beyond example, Stj. 87, 167, 179. v. example for imitation (eptir-dæmi, example); eptir dæmum Kristinna manna, Fms. v. 319; eptir þínum dæmum, Niðrst. 4; d. dæmi af e-u, to take example by it, Greg. 134. 2. judgment, only in compds as, sjálf-dæmi, rétt-dæmi, justice, etc. COMPDS: dæma-fátt, n. adj. dæma-froor, adj. wise in old lore, Fms. iv. 89. almost unexampled. dæma-lauss, adj. unexampled, Stj. 391. dæma-maör, m. a man to be imitated, Greg. 12.

Digitized by Google

dæming, f. judgment, Grág. i. 235, Skálda 211.

demi-saga, u, f. a fable, parable; in old eccl. translations, the parable of the N. T. is rendered by 'dæmisaga,' Greg. 22; but in mod. versions and writers since 1540 a distinction is made, and dæmisögur are fables, e.g. of Aesop, Reynard, or the like; whereas the parables of the N. T. are called 'eptir-liking;' heyrit mik ok mína dæmisögu, Stj. 399. Judges ix. 7: anold saw, Fms. vii. 102, v.l.: a proverb, Stj. 560. I Kings iv. 32, (rare.) dæmi-stóll, m. the judgment seat, 623. 12, 13, 73, 625. 79.

dessa, t, to utter a deep groan, Sturl. ii. 154: reflex. to lose breath from exhaustion, Sks. 231: part. dzstr, exhausted, breathless, Grett. 98.

DOF, s., pl. dasar, the rump, Scot. doup; her ysir skipunum uppi mættusk dösin ok hösuðit dýrsins (of a bear), Fas. ii. 172, while 510 has dausin; cp. Norse dov = rump, Ivar Aasen.

2. a kind of spear, Edda (Gl.), Akv. 4, 14.

II. [cp. dasna, and Swed. däfven = moist], suck (?) and metaph. rest, in the poët. phrase, vær dös, sweet rest; milli Belindar brjösta-kulna búið hefi eg þér væra dös, Grönd. 67; hreppa væra dös, sweet rest (of one dead), Feðga-æsi, 83 (in a verse).

DÖGG, f., old gen. döggvar, Korm., Sks. 606, Fms. ii. 278, mod. daggar; old pl. döggvar, Vsp. 19, Vpm. 45; mod. daggir, Sks. 40; dat. sing. döggu, Vtkv. 5, 656 A. 18: [A. S. deau; Engl. dew; Germ. thau; Dan. and Swed. dug]:—dew; natt-dögg, night-dew; morgun-dögg, morning-dew, Vpm. 45, Hkv. Hjörv. 28. COMPD: (mod. daggar-, old döggvar-), döggvar-drep, n. a dew-track, Fms. ii. l. c.

dogg-fall, n. dew-fall, Stj. 17.

dogg-litr, adj. dew-besprinkled, Hkv. 2. 41.

döggóttr, adj. bedewed, Hkv. I. 46.

dogg-akór, m. [Swed. dopsko], the tip or chape of a sheath, etc., Fas. i. 173, Gullb. 47, Gisl. 115.

dogg-aloo, f. the slot or track left in the dew, Gisl. 67.

döggva, 2ð or ð, to bedew; pres. döggvar, Stj. 73. 397; hon döggvaði, fætr Drottins, 655 xxxi. 2; á morni hverjum döggvir hann jörðina af méldropum sínum, Edda 7; döggðu andlit sín í tárum, 623. 58; d. hjörtu manna, Skálda 210, Hom. 45.

döggvan, f. bedewing, Stj. 14.

Döglingt, m., poët. a king, descendant of king Dag, Edda 105, Hdl. 8. 2. mockingly, a draggle-tail, Sturl. i. 62.

dögun, dögurör, v. dagan, dagverör.

dokk, doko, f. [dock], a pit, pool, Gpl. 393, Mart. 107.

dokk-blar, adj. dark blue, Sturl. ii. 212.

dökk-brúnaðr, adj. dark brown, Fas. i. 172.

dökk-greenn, adj. dark green, Stj. 62.

dokk-harr, adj. dark baired, Hkr. iii. 281.

dökk-jarpr, 2dj. dark auburn, Ld. 274.

dokk-litaor, adj. dark coloured, Sturl. ii. 212, Fms. vii. 239.

dokkna, 20, to darken, Fms. i. 216, x. 284, Fas. iii. 12.

DÖKKB, adj., acc. dökkvan etc., with v inserted, [Swed.-Dan. dunkel], dark, Rb. 108; ský dökt ok dimt, Fms. xi. 136; dökkvir hjálmar, vi. 150; dökkt yfirbragð, i. 97; d. á hár, dark of bair, Nj. 39; dökkvan skima, Sks. 229; compar., dökkvara ljós, 203; dökkvir villustigar, Fms. i. 138.

dökk-rauör, adj. dark red, þiðr. 178.

dökkva, ð, to darken; eigi döktusk augu hans, Stj. 348. Deut. xxxiv. 7; þá er dökkvir skilning, 656 C. 33: impers., dökkvir þik, andskoti, art thou in darkness ? 623. 31; dag (acc.) dökði, the day darkened, Skálda (in a verse).

dökkvi, 2, m. a dark spot, Fas. iii. 560.

E

E (a), the fifth letter, is in the old Gothic and Anglo-Saxon Runes represented by M, being in Anglo-Saxon called 'eob;' the common Scandinavian Runes have no character for e, but mark it either ia or i, and, still later, |, with a knob in the middle ('stungium Iss' \).

A. PRONUNCIATION, etc.—The Icel. e is sounded as English a in same, take, and in modern printed books is only used in radical syllables without regard to etymology; but there is sufficient evidence that in early times in Icel. the e had a double sound, one long, like the Italian e or English a (long), the other short, like e in English wet. These two sounds are etymologically different; the first is of comparatively late growth and derived from a by vowel change or otherwise; it is therefore in kindred languages (Swed., Germ.) often spelt ä, so as to indicate its origin from the mother-letter a: the other e is much older, nearly akin to i, being related to that letter as o to u. Grimm suggests that e is derived from i as o from u (only admitting a, i, u as primitive vowels), but in the Icel. at least e and o are in spelling as old as i or u, and seem to be primitive. The Runes in Tune and on the Golden horn have special marks for e and o. At the time of Ari and Thorodd the two seem to have been distinguished in Icel. The latter grammarian uses a special sign for each; he proposes to represent the long sound (Engl. a) by & (commonly e), adding (as he says) the bight of a to the body of e, to express a sound intermediate between \bar{a} and e; he therefore would have written tæk (I take), vænja, tæmja (to tame), but eðr, en, ef, etc., Skálda 161-163; in the unique vellum MS. (and in Edd.) the characters are not given correctly, as transcriber and editors did not fully understand the bearing of the author's words. About 700 years later, Jacob Grimm (without knowing the Icel. grammarian or the spelling of MSS. not then edited) recalled the old double e sound to life, guided by the analogy of other Teutonic languages. He proposed to represent a (the e of Thorodd) by e, and the genuine e by e. He (Gram. i. 281-284) drew out a list of words founded on the supposed etymology, and kept this distinction wherever he spelt Icel. words. It is curious to observe the difference between Grimm's artificial list of words and the phonetic spelling in some MSS.; there are especially two MSS., both of them Norse, which are remarkable for their distinction of the two sounds, the long e being spelt with æ, the short with e: these MSS. are the O.H.L., published from a vellum MS. Ups. De la Gard, no. 8, written in Norway at the beginning of the 13th century, and edited by C. R. Unger; the second, small fragments of Norse law MSS., published in N. G. L. ii. 501-515 and i. 339 sqq. Some words compiled from them are as follow: I. a: the verbs, bærja, blækkja, ærja, æggja, færja, hængja, glæðja, hæfja, hærja (to barry), kvæðja, læggja, sægja, sælja, sætja, strængja, væðja (to bail), værja, etc.; bænda, brænna (brændi), bræsta, æfia, æfina (Swed. amna), fælla (to fell), frægna, gægna, hæmna (= hæfna), hværfa (to turn), kænna, mætta, næmna (Swed. namna), rænna (to let run), ræfsa, spænna, stænina (stafn), tælja, værða (to become), værka, vækra (vakr), þværra: nouns, bæn, a wound (but ben, N. G. L. iii. 388); bær, a berry; bæor, a bed; bælgr; bærsærkr; bælti, a belt; dæpill; drængr, a man; drægg; ækkja, a widow; zndi, end; zldr, fire; zmni (=zfni=Swed. ümna); zmbztti (Germ. amt); ældri (in for-ældri, forefatbers, Germ. ältern); ælja, a concubine; zrendi, an errand; zrzndr, exanimis; zngill, an angel; zrmr, a sleeve (armr); zrvi, zrfingi, zrfo (arfr); znni, the forebead; zrtog (a coin); zng, a meadow (ang = a sweet smell); Ærlingr (a pr. name); zrki-, Engl. arcb- (doxi-); zrveði, toil, and zrveðr, toilsome; zgg, an edge; fæðgar (faðir); fælmtr (falma); færð (fara); frælsi (frjals); hæl, bell; hælviti; hælla, a stone; hællir, a cave; hærra, a lord; hærr, troops; hærbudir; hærnadr; hærad, in county (but herad in N.G. L. i. 344 sqq.); hærðar, sboulders; kæfli (Swed. kafle); kær, a jar; kælda (kaldr), a well; kætill, a kettle; fætill; kvæld, evening; kværk, the throat; læggr, a leg; mærki, a mark; mærgð (margr); mægn, mægin, main; mærr, a mare; næf, nose; næss, a ness; ræfill, tapestry; rækkja, a bed; sækt, sake; skægg, beard; skællibrögð; skæpna, a creature (skapa, Dan. skæbne); sværð, a sword; sænna, sound; væfr, weaving; værk (but verk better, N. G. L. i. 339 sqq., cp. virkt); væstr, the west; væl, a trick; vætr, the winter (but vittr or vitr better, N. G. L. ii. 509); vær (in sel-vær); værðr, a meal; bængill, a king; bækja, tbatcb; bægn, tbane; Ængland, England; Ænskr, English; Ænglændingar, the English (Angli); Tæmps, the Thames, etc.: datives, dægi, hændi, vændi, vælli, hætti (höttr), bælki (balkr): adjectives, compar. and superl., fræmri, fræmstr; skæmri, skæmstr; ældri, ælztr; længri, længstr; bætri, bæztr; værri, værstr; hældri, hælztr: sækr, guilty; værðr, due; fæginn; hælgr, boly; bærr, bare; stærkr, stark, etc.: prepositions, hænni, hænnar (hann); tvæggja, duorum; hværr, wbo; ænginn, none; ækki, notbing (but also engi, which is better), etc.: particles, æftir, after; væl, well; ælligar, or: inflexive syllables, -sæmd (-samr); -ændi; -spæki, wisdom, etc.: the diphthongs æi and æy = ei and ey, læita, bæita, hæyra, æyra, etc. II. e: the pronouns and particles, eda, or; ek, ego; enn, still; en, but; sem, wbicb; ef, if; med, with; medan, wbile; medal, between; nema, nisi; snemma, early; er, is, and eru, are; em, I am; pessi, this; petta, that; sex, six; sek, mek, e and the derived ja make different words, as berg and bjarg, fell and bek, sometimes instead of sik, mik, bik: nouns, elgr, an elk; sef, sib; brekka, brink; vedt, weather; nevi, a kinsman (Lat. nepos); nevi, a neave, fist; segl, a sail (cp. segla); vetr, a wight; selr, a seal; net, a net; nes, a ness; el, a gale; messa, a mass (Lat. missa); hestr, a borse; prestr, a priest; begn (O. H. L. 47); vegr, a way, bonour; sel and setr, shielings; veröld, the world; vesold, misery: verbs, geta, to 'gar,' to do; drepa, to kill; bera, to bear; bresta, to burst; gefa, to give; geta, to get; meta, to measure; kveda, to say; drekka, to drink; stela, to steal; vera, to be; mega, must; nema, to take; eta, to eat; vega, to weigh; reka, to drive; skera, to cut: participles and supines from piggja, liggja, biðja, sitja, þegit, legit, beðit, setið: preterites as, hengu, gengu, fengu (Germ. gingen, fingen); greru, reru, sneru (from gróa, róa, snúa): e if sounded as é, e. g. hét, blés, lét, réttr, léttr; even in the words, hér, bere; mér, sér, þér, mibi, sibi, tibi; neðan (niðr), hegat (= buc); héðan, bence: adjectives, mestr, flestr, prennr, etc.: inflexions, -legr, -ly; -lega, -ly; -neskja, -neskr (cp. Germ. -iscb); in the articles or the verbal inflexions, -en, -et, -er, -esk, etc. The e is often used against the etymology, as dreki, dragon; menn, men (from madr). In some other Norse MSS, the two sounds are marked, but so inaccurately that they are almost useless, e.g. the chief MS. of the Barl. S.; but in other MSS. there is hardly an attempt at distinction. The list above is mainly but not strictly in accordance with the etymology, as phonetical peculiarities come in; yet the etymology is the groundwork, modified by the final consonants: both old spelling and modern pronunciation are of value in finding a word's etymology, e. g. the spelling drængr indicates that it comes from drangr; hærað and hær, troops (but her, bere), shew that hærað (hérað) is to be derived from hærr (herr), exercitus, and not from her (hér), etc. The Icel. idiom soon lost the short e sound in radical syllables, and the long e sound (like the Italian e) prevailed throughout; there was then no more need for two signs, and e prevailed, without regard to etymology. Some few MSS., however, are curious for using æ almost throughout in radical syllables, and thus distinguish between the e in roots and the e in inflexions (vide B below); as an example see the Arna-Magn. no. 748, containing an abridgement of the Edda and Skalda and poems published in the edition of 1852, vol. ii. pp. 397-494; cp. also Vegtamskviða, published by Möbius in Sæm. Edda, pp. 255, 256, from the same MS.; this MS. uses α in radical syllables, but ϵ or i in inflexions. It is clear that when this MS. was written (at the latter part of the 13th century) the Icel. pronunciation was already the same as at present. In some other MSS. e and æ, and e and g now and then appear mixed up, till at last the thing was settled in accordance with the living tongue, so that the spelling and sound went on together, and æ (or g) was only used to mark the diphthong; vide introduction to Æ.
Digitized by

114 E-EDDA.

B. Spelling of e and i in inflexions.—The Germans, Swedes, Danes, English, and Dutch all express the i sound in inflexional syllables by e, not i, as in Engl. father, mother, brother, taken, bidden, bidden, beaven, kettle; or in Germ., e. g. batte, möchte, sollte, lange, bruder, mutter, soltest, bimmel, etc.: in the earliest times of Icel. literature also it is almost certain that e was used throughout: Ari probably signed his name Are (en ek heiter Are, 1b. fine): Thorodd, too, seems to have followed the same rule, as we may infer from several things in his treatise, e.g. the words framer and frá mér, which would be unintelligible unless we suppose him to have written framer, not framir: even the name of Snorri is twice spelt Snorre in the Reykholts-máldagi, probably written by one of his clerks. Some old vellum fragments may be found with the e only; but even in the oldest extant, i is used now and then. The reason is clear, viz. that the Icel, never admits the long e in inflexive syllables, and in roots it never admits the short e, consequently the same sign would not do both for roots and inflexions; hende, velle, gefe have each two vowel sounds; therefore the short i was admitted in inflexions; yet in most MSS, both e and i are used indiscriminately, e.g. faðir and faðer, tími and tíme, manni and manne, kominn and komenn, komið and komet, höndin and hönden, fjallit and fjallet; even those that use i admit e if following δ or d, e.g. vide, bæde, lide, lande, but fjalli, vatni. As the spelling was partly influenced from abroad, the e even gained ground, and at the time of the Reformation, when printing became common, it was reassumed throughout, and remained so for nearly 230 years, when (about A. D. 1770-1780) i was reinstated and expelled in all inflexions, as being inconsistent with the spelling and ambiguous; but the sound has undoubtedly remained unchanged from the time of Ari up to the present time: the English father, mother, German vater, mutter, and Icel. fabir are, as to the inflexion, sounded exactly alike.

C. Interchange of e and i.—The adjectival syllable -ligr, -liga, is in MSS. spelt either -ligr or -legr; in modern pronunciation and spelling always -legr, -lega (Engl. -ly). β. in a few root words e has taken the place of i, as in veror, qs. viror (food); brenna, qs. brinna; premr and primr; tvenna and tvinna; ef, efa, efi, =if, ifa, ifi; einbirni and einberni (born): e has taken the place of o in such words as hnetr (nuts) from hnot, older form hnøtr: so also in eðli and öðli; efri efstr from öfri öfstr: Sigurðar Þögla R. 5. 4, Rímur af Ill Verra og Vest, 4, 3, Jarlmanns R.

fjall, bergr and bjargar, etc.

D. DIPHTHONGS: I. ei answers to Goth. ai, A.S. a, Germ. ei, Engl. ō (oa or the like); in Danish frequently expressed by ee; in Swedish and Northern English the diphthong is turned into a plain e and a, which, however, represent the same sound: Goth. stains, A.S. stan, Swed. sten, North. E. stane. The o sound is English-Saxon; the a sound English-Scandinavian; thus the forms, bome, bone, oak, oath, broad, one, own, more, none, no, may be called English-Saxon, from A. S. bam, ban, etc.; the North. E. and Scottish bame, bane, aik, aith, braid, ain, mair, nain, may be called English-Scandinavian: cp. Swed. bem, ben, ek, ed, bred, en; Icel. beimr, bein, eik, eidr, breidr, einn, meir, neinn, nei; cp. also Icel. bleikr, Swed. blek, North. E. blake, etc. The Runic stones mark the ei with a+i or i simply, e. g. stin or stain. Old Norse and Icel. MSS. frequently for II. ey is in modern usage sounded as ei, and only ei give æi. distinguished in writing; in old times a distinction was made in sound between ei and ey. Norse MSS. almost always spell öy, and in Norway it is to the present time sounded accordingly, e.g. öyra, = Icel. eyra, sounded nearly as in English toil: the ey is properly a vowel change of au: ey frequently answers to an English e (ea) sound, as heyra, to bear: eyra, ear; dreyma, to dream; leysa, to lease. In very old MSS., e.g. Ib. (ai in the Ed. is a wrong reading from a in the MS.), au and ey are even spelt alike (a or au), though sounded differently. In some MSS. ey is also used where it is not etymological, viz. instead of or o, in such words as hreyqva, seyqva, steyqva, deyqvan, greyri, geyra, seyni, etc.,= hrökva, sökva, ... greri or grori, syni, e. g. the Cod. Reg. of Sæm. Edda, the Rafns S. Bs. i. 639 sqq.

E. é is sounded almost as English ye (or ya); it is produced, by an absorption of consonants, in words as réttr, léttr, þéttr, sétti, flétta, rétta, cp. Germ. recht, Engl. right; Germ. leicht, Engl. light: or in fé, kné, tré, hlé, sé (Icel. fé = Engl. fee, Goth. faibu, Lat. pecus), etc. by a lost reduplication in the preterites, fell, grét, réð, lét, blés, hét, gékk, hékk, lék, fékk, from falla, gráta, etc.; in some old MSS. this é is replaced by ie, e.g. in the Hulda Arna-Magn. no. 66 fol. we read fiell, liet, hiet, griet, gieck, liek, cp. mod. Germ. fiel, biess, liess, etc.; perhaps in these cases \acute{e} was sounded a little differently, almost as a bisyllable. in such words as the pronouns vér, þér or ér (you), mér, sér, þér (tibi): the particles hér (bere), héðan (bence), hérað, vél, él. sounded after g and k, and often spelt ie in MSS., gieta, giefa, kier, kierti: this sound is, however, better attributed to g and k being aspirate. In Thorodd and the earliest MSS. é is marked with ' just like the other long or diphthongal vowels; but the accent was subsequently removed, and e and é are undistinguished in most MSS.: again, in the 15th century transcribers began to write ie or ee (mier or meer). In printed books up to about 1770 the is prevailed, then e, and lastly (about 1786) e (cp. the 5th and 6th vols. of Fél.): è is an innovation of Rask, and is used by many, but máttr, dráttr, and réttr, sléttr, etc. are etymologically identical, though the sound of \dot{e} is somewhat peculiar: the spelling je is also a novelty, and being etymologically wrong (except in 2 above) is not to be recommended.

Ebreskr, adj. Hebrew, Skálda 161, 167, Stj. 26. Ebreaks, f. the Hebrew tongue, Ver. 11, Ann. (H.) 14. eð, a particle, vide er.

eðal-, noble, in compds, borrowed from Germ. and rare.

EDDA, u, f. a great-grandmother, Rm. 2, 4; móðir (mother) heitir ok amma (grandmother), pridja edda (the third is edda), Edda 108: this sense is obsolete. II. metaph. the name of the book Edda, written by Snorri Sturluson, and containing old mythological lore and the old artificial rules for verse making. The ancients only applied this name to the work of Snorri; it is uncertain whether he himself called it so; it occurs for the first time in the inscription to one of the MSS. of Edda, viz. the Ub., written about fifty or sixty years after Snorri's death: Bok bessi heitir Edda, hann hefir saman setta Snorri Sturlusonr eptir beim hætti sem hér er skipat (viz. consisting of three parts, Gylfagynning, Skáldskaparmál, and Háttatal), Edda ii. 250 (Ed. Arna-Magn.); svá segir í bók þeirri er Edda heitir, at sá maðr sem Ægir hét spurði Braga... 532 (MS. of the 14th century); hann (viz. Snorri) samansetti Eddu, be put together the Edda, Ann. 1241 (in a paper MS., but probably genuine). As the Skáldskaparmál (Ars Poëtica) forms the chief part of the Edda, teaching the old artificial poetical circumlocutions (kenningar), poetical terms and diction, and the mythical tales on which they were founded. the Edda became a sort of handbook of poets, and therefore came gradually to mean the ancient artificial poetry as opposed to the modern plain poetry contained in hymns and sacred poems; it, however, never applies to alliteration or other principles of Icel. poetry: reglur Edd . the rules of Edda, Gd. (by Amgrim) verse 2, Lil. 96, Nikulas d. 4; Eddu list, the art of Edda, Gd. (by Arni) 79;—all poems of the 14th century. The poets of the 15th century frequently mention the Edda in the introduction to their Rimur or Rhapsodies, a favourite kind of poetry of this and the following time, Reinalds R. 1. 1, Ans R. 7. 2, Sturlaugs R.

Digitized by GOO

the greater part of them belonging to the 15th century. Poets of the 16th century (before 1612), Rollants R. 9. 6, 12. 1, Pontus R. (by Magnus Gamli, died 1501), Valdimars R., Ester R. 2. 2, 6. 3, Syraks R. 1. 2. 6. 2. Tobias R. I. 2; from the first half of the 17th century, Grett. R., Flores R. 6. 3, 9. 2, Króka Refs R. I. 7, Lykla Pétrs R. 4. 2, 12. 1, Apollonius R. 1. 5, Flovents R. 6. 3, Sjö Meistara R. 1. 7, 2. 1, 3. 8; -all in MS. In these and many other references, the poets speak of the art, skill, rules, or, if they are in that mood, the obscure puerilities and empty phrases of the Edda, the artificial phraseology as taught and expounded by Snorri; and wherever the name occurs (previous to the year 1643) it only refers to Snorri's book, and such is still the use of the word in Icel.; hence compd words such as Eddu-lauss, adi, void of Eddic art; Eddu-borinn, part. poetry full of Eddic phrases; Eddu-kenninger, f. pl. Eddic circumlocutions, Kötlu Draumr 85, e.g. when the head is called the 'sword of Heimdal,' the sword the 'fire or torch of Odin,' etc.; Eddu-kendr= Edduborinn; Eddu-bagr, adj. a bungler in the Eddic art, etc. The Icel. bishop Brynjolf Sveinsson in the year 1643 discovered the old mythological poems, and, led by a fanciful and erroneous suggestion, he gave to that book the name of Sæmundar Edda, the Edda of Sæmund; hence originate the modern terms the Old or Poetical and New or Prose Edda: in foreign writers Eddic has been ever since used in the sense of plain and artless poetry, such as is contained in these poems, opposed to the artificial, which they call Scaldic (Skald being Icel. for a poet); but this has no foundation in old writers or tradition. Further explanation of this subject may be seen in Ersch and Gruber's Encyclopedia, s. v. Graagaas.

EDIK. n. [from Lat. acidum or acetum; A. S. eced; Germ. essig; Dan. edik]:-vinegar (qs. acidum vini); the word is modern in Icel., being borrowed from Danish, and probably first used in Matth. xxvii. 34, 48; edik galli blandað, Pass. 33. 1, 2.

EDLA (eyola, O. H. L. 27), u, f. [old Swed. ydbla], a viper, Hkr.

eola-, in compds [from Germ. edel-, Dan. ædel-], noble, Pass. 48. 6, (rare and mod.)

EDLI, n., akin to and derived from obal, q.v.; old MSS. also always use the form øðli (eyðli, D. I. l. c.), Fms. x. 301, Hom. 47, 118, Greg. 48, O. H. L. 86, Eluc. 16, Hkr. i. 225, Hbl. 9, Bs. i. 335, 342; edli is more modern, but öbli is still preserved: 1. nature; mannligt e., buman nature or character, 623. 19, Eb. 110, Fms. x. 301; natturligt e., buman condition, Mag. (Fr.); vera i e. sinu, to be in one's own nature or frame of mind, Fs. 59; eptir e., natural, ordinary, Fms. iii. 118; móti e., against nature, extraordinary; með líkindum ok e., Edda 69; undruðusk er jörðin ok dýrin ok fuglarnir höfðu saman e. í sumum hlutum, 144 (pref.); eðli and nattura (natura) are used synonymously, id.; engla ödli, the nature of angels, Eluc. 16; arnar ödli, the eagle's nature, Hom. 47; allt mannkyns öðli, Greg. 48; öðrlez (= öðlis) skepna, O. H. L. 86. origin, extraction, in the alliterative phrases, ætt ok ödli, Fms. i. 149; hann var Valskr (Welsb) at ætt ok eðli, vii. 56; Danskr at öðli, Danisb by origin, Hom. 118; nafn ok ödli, name and family, Hbl. 9: the phrase, at alda-ödli, for ever and ever, D. I. i. 266: in mod. usage, frå alda ödli, from the birth of time, from the beginning, only used of 'past time: the Dan. 'fra Arildstid' is probably a corruption of the same phrase. embryo, Lat. fetus, Mar. 156. сомроз: eðlis-fræði, f. pbysic, (mod.) eolis-heettir, m. pl. constitution, Bb. 2. 14. eðlis-skapan, n. and eolis-skepna, u, f. one's nature, Fms. v. 216, Hom. 123.

eoli-borinn, part. noble-born, well-born, Hkr. ii. 135.

edli-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), natural, proper. edlingr, m. = ödlingr, poët. an 'etbeling.

eði-vina, adj., probably corrupt, as a viper (?), Hdl. 45.

EDB or eoa, which is the more freq. form in mod. use, conj., [Goth. aubba; A.S. odde; Engl. or; Germ. oder]:-or; joining two nouns, verbs, or adjectives, hold eor bloo, heitr eoa kaldr, illr eoa goor, etc., esp. after the pronouns annadhvart, hvart, eitber; heradsektir e. utanferdir, Ni. 189; slikr vetr eða verri, Ísl. ii. 138; kaupmenn e. formenn, Fms. i. 11; í Blálandi eðr Arabia, Bb. 468; kirkjum eðr klaustrum, H.E. i. 419; í skógum eðr í öðrum fylsnum, Fms. iv. 384; skjóta e. kasta, e. höggva e. leggja, Sks. 430; fyrr e. siðar, sooner or later, Hkr. ii. 368. B. in comparison of two unlike things, the two things are connected with the disjunctive eda instead of the copulative ok, where the Engl. may use and, e.g. the proverb, sitt er hvað, gæfa eðr görfuleiki, there's a difference between luck and wit; er úglikt at hafa með sér góða drengi ok hrausta eðr einhleypinga, Ísl. ii. 325; úlíkr er þessi eða hinn fyrri, be is unlike and the first one, Mar. (Fr.); mun nokkut allikt, garpskapt Bersa eor stuldir porarins, i.e. can one compare the valour of B. and the thievishness of Thorarin? Korm. 142.

y. after a comparative, or even, sooner; ek em eigi verri riddari en Salomon konungr, eor nokkuru betri, I am no worse a knight than king S., nay, rather somewhat better, pior. 161; eigi sior, ... eor nokkrum mun heldr, not less, but rather a little more, Barl. 97: otherwise, else, = ella, lykt skal landskyld vera fyrir sumarmál, eðr..., N.G.L. ii. 106 (rare): ellipt. = enn, than, meta hvárt þau sé meiri, eðr hennar föng sé, Js. 61.

7. 1, 5, 11. 3, Dinus R. 2. 4, Konraos R. 7. 5;—all these in vellum and 2 query, exclamation, abrupt sentence, or the like, as Engl. or, what, but: ek heiti Audgisl, edr ertú Hallfredt, my name is A., or art thou Hallfred? Fms. ii. 80; ek heiti Onundr, ... eda hvert ætli bit at fara, but whither do you think of going? 81; nú vil ek gera at skapi bínu, eðr hvar skulum vit á leita? Nj. 3; sagði, at þeir mundi vera menn stórlátir, eðr hvat þeir mundi fyrir ætlask, Eg. 17; eðr með hverjum fórstu norðan? Finnb. 256; vituð ér enn, eðr hvat? Vsp. 22, 31, 38, 39.

eor, adv. still, yet, older form instead of 'enn,' only in poetry; eor of sér, one still bas to see, i. e. the next thing is . . . , Haustl. 14; stod edr i hausi. stood, i. c. remains, still in his bead, 19.

A. neut. subst., older form if. Barl. 114, 124, Hkv. l. c., Vellekla l.c., Hkv. Hjörv. 33:-doubt, used in plur., hver se if, what doubt can there be? Vellekla: it still remains in the phrase, mer er til efs, I doubt; en bar sem ef er å, wherever it is doubtful, K. A. 28; hvervetna bar sem ef er á nokkuru máli, 204; ekki er til efs, at beir menn ríða at grindhliði, it cannot be doubted, that ..., Lv. 19; sæmilig til efs, dubiously good, rather bad, Vm. 55; utan ef, without doubt, Fms. vii. 37, Stj. 421; fyrir utan allt ef, H. E. i. 519, Barl. I. c.

B. conj. [Goth. ibai; A. S. and Scot. gif; Engl. if; O. H. G. ipu; Germ. ob; lost in Swed. and Dan.]:-if, in case; en ef bit eigit erfingja, Nj. 3; ef eigi (unless) væri jafnhugaðr sem ek em, 264; ef bú átt þrjár orrostur við Magnús konung, Fms. vi. 178; ef hann er varmr, if be is warm, 655 xxx. 1: very freq. as a law term = in case that, Grag., N.G. L.; if it be Eric, bid bim come in, Em. 1; nálgastu mik, ef þú megir, if thou may'st, Gm. 53; vega þú gakk, ef þú reiðr sér, if thou be wroth, Ls. 15; ef Gunnars missi, Akv. 11; ef hann at yor lygi, Am. 31; ef sér geta mætti, Hm. 4; heilindi sitt ef maor hafa nái (better than náir), 67; ellipt. passages where 'if' is omitted, but the subj. retained, v. Lex. Poët.; skór er skapaðr illa eðr skapt sé rangt (= ef skapt sé rangt), Hm. 127; but indic. sometimes occurs, ef hann freginn erat, 30; ef bitt zoi dugir (indic.) ok þú Vafþrúðnir vitir (subj.), Vþm. 20: in prose the subj. is rare, and only in peculiar cases, e. g. nú munu vér á þá hættu leggja, ef (if, i. e. granted, supposed that) ek ráda ok binda ek við hann vináttu, Fms. iv. 82; ok bæta um þat, ef konunginum hafi yfirgefizt, xi. 283; þat var háttr Erlings, ef úvinir hans kæmi fyrir hann, vii. 319; en skotið á þá, ef þeir færi nær meginlandi, viii. 419; ef ek lifi ok mega'k ráða, Edda 34. if, whether, Germ. ob, with indic. or subj.; sjá nú, ef Jakob leysir hann sa þessum böndum, 655 xxx. 3; þá spyrr Frigg, ef sú kona vissi, then Frigg asks, if the woman knew, Edda 37; hann kom opt á mál við konung, ef hann mundi vilja bæta þórólf, Eg. 106; Egill spurði, ef hann vildi upp or gröfinni, 234; at Bölverki þeir spurðu, ef hann væri með böndum kominn, Hm. 109; hitt vil ek fyrst vita, ef bú fróðr sér, Vbm. 6; vittu ef þú hjálpir, see if thou canst help, Og. 5:- this sense is now obsolete, and 'hvárt' (hvort) is used instead.

efa, 2d, in old writers usually spelt with i, ifa; efa occurs in Nj. 207, Hkr. ii. 326, Sks. 153, Stj. 256, Fms. ii. 42, iii. 115, vi. 184, Al. 43, Grett. 110 A, Bs. ii. 169, etc.; in mod. usage always with e:-to doubt, with acc.; engi ifar pat, Fms. x. 319: the phrase, efa sik, to besitate, Grett. l. c.; skulu pér eigi e. yor (doubt), at ..., Nj. 307: used as neut. to feel a doubt, ifi pér nokkut, at, Fms. v. 38, Hkr. l. c., 623. 33; ifa (efa) um e-t, to doubt about a thing, Hkr. i. 223, Grág. ii. 47, Fms. ii. 283, v. 37, vi. 184. 2. reflex., efask (ifask) i e-u, to doubt or besitate in a thing; i því má engi maðr ifask, at ..., Sks. 272 B; ekki efumk ek í því, 153, Stj. l. c.; Freysteinn efaðisk í, hvárt . . . , F. was in doubt, whether ..., Fms. iii. 115; þér efisk í um þeirra almátt, ii. 42: efask um e-t, to doubt about a thing, x. 392; hvárt ifisk ér um ok hræðisk, Niorst. 2. B. absol. to doubt, besitate, Str. 22; statt upp ok ifask alls ekki, Hom. 119. y. with gen., efask e-s, to change one's mind in a matter, Grag. i. 312, 313.

efan, ifan, f. (almost always with i; efan, H. E. l. c.), doubt, besitation, Barl. 149, H.E. i. 396, Bær. 14, Hom. 23. COMPD: efanar-lauss. adj. undoubted, Stj., 655 xxvii. 2: neut. as adv. undoubtedly, Fms. ix. 347, El. 2, Str. 35, K. A. 202.

efan-laust, n. adj. undoubtedly, Hom. 15 (spelt ifan-).

efan-leikr, m. doubtfulness, Skálda 188.

ofan-ligr (ifan-ligr), adj. doubtful, Skálda 188, Ld. 58, Fms. x. 317, 369 (in the last two passages spelt with i).

off, a, m., in old writers almost always iff: -doubt, Greg. 37, Fms. iii. 8, x. 392, Hkr. i. 223; vera ifa, to be in doubt, Mar. 17; enn er eptir isi i hug minum, 623. 26; an isa (esa), without doubt, Fms. x. 336, Skálda 210: suspicion, Fms. x. 260. COMPDS: efa-lauss (ifa-lauss), adj. undoubted, clear, Nj. 87: neut. as adv. undoubtedly, Grág. efa-lausligr, adj. id., Bs. i. 263. efa-samr, ifað-samr, efaö-samligr, adj. doubtful, Al. 5, Stj. 172. efa-samliga, adv. efa-semo and efa-semi, f. doubt, Bs. i. 272. doubtfully, Bs. ii. 153.

scheder, not less, effa-80k, f. a doubtful case, Grág. i. 73.

effa-80k, f. a doubtful case, Grág. i. 73.

effa-80k, f. a doubtful case, Grág. i. 73.

effa-80k, f. a doubtful case, Grág. i. 73.

effa-80k, f. a doubtful case, Grág. i. 73.

effa-80k, f. a doubtful case, Grág. i. 73.

effa-80k, f. a doubtful case, Grág. i. 73.

effa-80k, f. a doubtful case, Grág. i. 73.

effa-80k, f. a doubtful case, Grág. i. 73.

effa-80k, f. a doubtful case, Grág. i. 73.

effa-80k, f. a doubtful case, Grág. i. 73.

effa-80k, f. a doubtful case, Grág. i. 73.

Digitized by GOQI

nýju Danavirki, they restored the Danish wall, Fms. i. 121. raise, endow; effa stab, kirkju, to endow or raise a church, bishopric, Barl. 65, Fms. iv. 110; c. bu, to set up one's bouse, Band. (MS.) 3: milit., e. her, lid, to raise troops, Fms. v. 279; e. flokk, to raise a party, 140; e. ófrið, to raise a rebellion, make war, xi. 268: e. e-n, to aid, side with one, in a fight or lawsuit; efidi Dofri hann síðan til ríkis í Noregi, Bárð. 164; ok hét honum liðveizlu sinni at hann skyldi e. Steinar, Eg. 722; e. e-n til rangs máls, to belp one in a wrong case, Js. 8; Danir höfðu þá herrana efit upp á Svíaríki, Fms. x. 50; bað liðit e. sik, Fagrsk. Y. to perform solemnly; e. heit, to make a vow, Gisl. 90; ch. 179. e. blot, to perform a sacrifice, Nj. 158; e. at brullaupi, to bold a wedding, Fms. ix. 21: poët., e. dáð (dáð eflir, a bero); e. tafl, to play a game, 8. neut. to be able; sem vér eflum ok Orkn. (in a verse), Lex. Poët. orkum, Stj. 149; sem þú eflir ok orkar, id., 186, (rare.) reflex. to grow strong; hversu stadrinn hefir efizk ok magnask, Bs. i. 59; hann fann at mótstöðumenn hans efldusk, grew strong; eflask at her, liði, to gather, raise troops, Gísl. 7, Fms. i. 199, vii. 23; síðan var efldr (raised) flokkr í móti honum, iv. 140: eflask til ríkis, to win a kingdom, get a kingdom by force of arms, Bárð. 165: eflask við e-n (poët.)= mægjask, to marry into one's family, Hdl. 15.

ef-lauss and if-lauss, adj. undoubted, Greg. 25, Mart. 121, Fas. ii. 539. efling, f. growth, increase in strength and wealth. Bret., Greg. 43: strength, belp, assistance, Glum. 346, 347, Ld. 88, Hkr. iii. 185, Mork. 128. eflir, m. a belper, promoter, Lex. Poet.

EFNA, d, (ad, Nj. 189, Fms. ix. 453, xi. 286), [Swed. ämna; A.S. efnan, æfnan, = to perform :-- to perform, chiefly to fulfil a vow or the terms agreed upon; e. oro sin, to keep one's word, Fms. i. 4; pat efndi Gunnarr, Nj. 45; þat skal ek e. sem ek hét þar um, Fms. i. 217; e. sætt, to fulfil an agreement, Nj. 258: Olafr efnir vel vid ambattina, Olave behaved well to the bandmaid, Ld. 156. β. reflex. to turn out so and so, come to a certain issue; efndisk pat ok vel, Nj. 72; pat efnask (better efnisk) opt illa, it comes to a bad end, 189. II. efna, að, to prepare for a thing, make arrangements; ekki er þess getið at hann efnaði til um fégjaldit, Fms. xi. 286; hann efnaði þar til vetrsetu, x. I; þeir efnuðu til vetrsetu í Oslo, ix. 453; þar hafði Ólafr konungr efnat til kaupstadar, king O. bad there founded a town, iv. 93; efnadi Olafr konungr þá til ágætrar veizlu, king O. made a great feast, ii. 133; þeir Ingjaldr efna par seid, Ingjald made a great sacrifice, feast, Fs. 19.

efnaor, adj. rich, baving ample means. efnd, f. fulfilment of a pledge, promise, Sturl. iii. 170, Fms. vi. 29, vii. 121. EFNI, n. [Swed. amne = stuff, materia, and Dan. ævne = achievement]: -a stuff, originally like Lat. materia, timber; and so the stuff or material out of which a thing is wrought; audskæf mærdar e., Ad. 16; at allir hlutir væri smíðaðir af nokkru efni, that all things were wrought (created) of some stuff, Edda 147 (pref.); skapa af engu efni, to create from nothing (of God), Fms. i. 304; efni (materials) til garðbóta, Grág. ii. 263, Sks. 287 (of a cloth); ek em görr af ústyrku efni, I am made of frail stuff, 543, Barl. 140, Stj. 17, 67; smíðar-efni, materials; efni-tré, a block, tree; csni i ljá, orf, etc., or of any piece fitted as materials. B. in a personal sense; manns-efni, a promising young man; karls-efni, a thorough man, a nickname, Landn.; the proverb, engi veit hvar sæls manns efni sitr, of youths of whom no one can tell what may be hidden in them: begns e. = manns-efni, Stor. 11; gott manns-e., gott bónda-e., promising to be an able man; and on the other hand, onytt, illt manns-e., in whom y. merely in temp. sense, applied to persons designate or elect; konungs-e., a crown prince; biskups-e., a bishop-elect; brudare., a bride-elect; konu-e., one's future wife. 8. a subject, of a story, book, or the like, Lat. argumentum, plot; yrkis c., Id. 11; e. kvæða, a plot, subject for poetry; sogu-e., a subject for tales or history; in old writers it rarely occurs exactly in this sense: the contents of a written thing, bréfs-e., efni i bók; hence efnis-laust, adj. void, empty writing; efnis-leysa, u, f. emptiness in writing; Björn hafði ort flim um þórð, en þau vóru par efni i, at ..., but that was the subject of the poem, that ..., Bjarn. 42; þótti mönnum þar mikit um, hversu mikil efni þar vóru til seld, i. c. people thought the tale interesting, Ld. 200; eigi med sonnu efni, falsely, with untrue statements, Sturl. iii. 305; hvart efni peir höfdu i um rogit, bow they had made (mixed) their lies up, Eg. 59; meir en efni sé til seld, i. e. (related) more than what was true, the tale was overdone, Bs. i. 137; talar af sama efni (subject) sem fyrrum, Fms. ix. 252. metaph. a matter, affair; til sanninda um sagt e., Dipl. i. 8; segir konungi frá öllu þessu e., Sturl. i. 3; er þat merkjanda í þessu e., Rb. 250; fátt er betr lutid enn efni cru til (a proverb), few things are reported better than they really are, Band. 2; fyrir hvert efni, for this reason. cause, reason; latask badir af bvi e., both died from this cause, Isl. ii. 197; med hverju e. Sturla hesdi bessa for gort, what was the reason of S.'s doing so? Sturl. ii. 132; gleði e., sorgar e., matter of joy, sorrow, etc.: the proverb, en hvert mál, er maðr skal dæma, verðr at líta á tilgörð með efnum (causes), Eg. 417; fyrir þat efni (for that reason) keypti hann landit, Hrafn. 22, H. E. i. 471; en þetta efni (cause) fundu

β. to found, deigi görla efni Gunnlaugs, I know not bow Gunlaug's matters stand, 240; Helgi kvað eigi þat efni í, at láta lausan þjóf fjölkunnigan, H. said that it would never do, to let a thief and wizard go, Sturl. i. 62; ef pess eru esni, if that be so, Grag. i. 76; ser, hvers esni i eru, be saw bow matters stood, Band. (MS.) 11; sagði hver efni í vóru, said bow matters stood, Nj. 99; mér þykir sem málum várum sé komið í únýtt efni, cf... 150; munu ill efni i, some mischief may bave bappened, Fs. 144; gott, bungt e., Karl. 402, Bs. i. 815; e-t gengr, kemr svá til efnis, bappens so and so, Mar. (Fr.); skipta sitt lif i betra e., to repent, id.; bera til efnis, to bappen, Pr. 410. 3. plur. means, ability; minni nytjamenn af meirum esnum en hann, Sturl. i. 126; eptir sinum esnum, to the best of their ability, Hom. 123; ok bjoggusk um eptir beim esnum sem beir hösðu til, Orkn. 360; sjái þér nökkuð ráð (possibility) eðr efni vár (means), 358; grunar mik, at þórólfr muni eigi görr kunna at sjá efni sín, i.e. I fear that Th. will overrate his own means, power, Eg. 76; há væri hat efni nú i vóru máli, it would be a chance for us, Fms. ix. 239; har vóru engi esni önnur, there was no other chance, xi. 144; nú eru þess eigi esni, if that be impossible, Grág. ii. 140; her eru engin efni til pess at ek muna svikja hann, i. e. I will by no means deceive bim, it is out of the question that I should do so, Eg. 60.

B. in mod. usage, means, property, riches. compos: efna-feod, f. want of means, Bs. i. 457.

efna-lauss, adj. efna-leysi, n. want of means, Hrafn. 5. Afnawanting means. lítill, adj. poor; vera vel við efni, to be a well-to-do man.

skortr, m. sbortness of means, Bs. i. 525.
efni-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), bopeful, promising, e. g. of a youth, Nj. 39, Eg. 147, 599, Fms. i. 17, v. 263, Orkn. 202; efniligt rad, a wise issue, Fms. xi. 21; sögðu allt hit efniligasta, made a flattering report, ix. 488; ekki efniligt, not advisable, Sturl. i. 186.

efni-mark, n. a sign, 732. 17.

efning, f. keeping (=efnd), Grág. i. 316.

efni-tré, u. a block, timber, Gisl. 146, Fas. ii. 210, Stj. 618, Mork. 91. EFRI, compar.; EFSTR, superl.; older form öfri, Hkv. 2. 36, O. H. ch. 248 (in a verse), Greg. 41, N.G. L. i. 10, 384, 1b. 5, Hom. 116; ofstr, Fms. x. 394, 686 C. 2, Ls. 50, 51, Hbl. 18, Edda 115, 116 (Gl.); compar. and superl. without the positive [as Lat. superior, supremus, Gr. ὑπέρτεροs], but formed from the root syllable 'of-,' cp. ofar, yfir; very old MSS, therefore mostly spell with \ddot{v} , a vowel change of o; the mod. form, as well as that of most MSS., is with e, efri, efstr, Am. 50, Og. I. the upper, higher; the phrase, bera efra skjöld, to carry the bigher shield, i. e. carry the day, Fms. x. 394 (MS. æfra): opp. to neori = upper, at Mosselli enu öfra, ib. 5: the adverb. phrase 'it efra' denoting the upper or inland road, opp. to the shore; allt hit efra suor, Eg. 58; sumir fóru it efra til þríhyrnings-hálsa, Nj. 207; hit efra um Uppliend, Fms. i. 22: by land, opp. to the sea, Hkr. ii. 8: of the inner part of a building, opp. to fremri or the part nearest the door, Eg. 43: in the air, opp. to the earth, Sks. 115: superl. efstr, the bindermost, e. lior, the bindermost joint, 623. 32: neut. efst as adv. bigbest up, uppermost, efst á stólpanum, 655 xxv. 2. β. metaph. superior, better; er öllum öfri er, Greg. 43. II. the latter, last part: 1. temp., á efra aldri, in the decline of life, Eg. 4; inn öfri, the latter, opp. to fyrri, N. G. L. i. 342; efri hluti sumars, in the decline of summer, Eg. 712; Olafs-messa hin öfri (= sidari), the latter (i. e. second) day of St. Olave (viz. Aug. 3), opp. to Olafs-messa fyrri (July 29), N.G.L. i. 10; efsti domr, the last judgment, Stj. 58; öfsti domr, id., 686 l.c.; efsta vika, the last week of Lent = the Passion week, Orkn. 386, Mar. 78; öfsti dagt Paska, the last day in Easter, N.G.L. i. 348; efsta bæn, the last prayer, 623. 50; þeim gef ek erni efstum bráðir, Fas. i. 429 (in a verse); efsta sinni, for the last time, 227; þó vér ritim hana öfri en aðrar, Hom. 2. loc., where aptari and aptastr or eptri and eptstr are the common words; fyrstr and efstr are opposed, foremost and last, in a rank, Ls. l.c.; sá fyrstr er efstr gekk inn, Grág. i. 32.

EFSA, t, [cp. Swed. efsing = thrum, stump], to cut; e. e-m skör, to cut one's head off, Sighvat, ($\tilde{\alpha}\pi$. $\lambda \epsilon \gamma$.)

egoir, m., poet. an eagle.

Egőskr, adj. from Agðir, a county in Norway, Fms., Landn.

EGG, n. [A.S. äg; Engl. egg; Swed. ägg; Dan. æg; Germ. ei]. an egg, Eg. 152, Grág. ii. 346; arnar-e., æðar-e., álptar-e., hrafns-e., dufu-e., kriu-e., etc., an eagle's egg, eider duck's, swan's, raven's, dove's, etc.; also, höggorms egg, a snake's egg: eggja-hvíta, f. the white of an egg: eggja-rauða, f. or egggla-blómi, m. the yolk; verpa eggjum, to lay eggs; liggja á eggjum, to sit on eggs, brood; koma, skríða ór eggi, of the young, to come out of the egg, Fagrsk. 4 (in a verse): an egg is glæmýtt fresh, stropað balf-batched, ungað batched; vind-egg, a wind-egg, addled egg; fúl-egg, a rotten egg; vera lostinn fúlu eggi, proverb of a sad and sulky looking fellow that looks as if one bad pelted him with rotten eggs, Gísl. 39 (in a verse); fullt hús matar og finnast hvergi dyrnar á, a riddle describing an egg; but fullt hús drykkjar og finnast hvergi dyrnar á, the berry: eggja-fata, f. a bucket in which to gather eggs: eggja-kaka, f. an 'egg-cake,' omelet: eggja-leit, f. a gathering of eggs, etc.

peir til, Sks. 311. y. a state, condition, affair; Rutt sagòi allt e. sitt, BGG, s., gen. sing. and nom. pl. eggjar, old dat. eggju, mod. egg; Nj. 4; i uvænt esni, a bopeless state, Band. (MS.) 13, Isl. ii. 225; ek veit [Lat. acies; A.S. ecg; Engl. edge; Hel. eggja; lost in Germ.; Swed.

Digitized by GOOGIG

ägg; Dan. æg]:—an edge, Eg. 181, 183, Nj. 136: the phrase, með oddi ok eggju, with point and edge, i.e. by force of arms, with might and main, O. H. ch. 33, Grág. ii. 13, Nj. 149, 625. 34; oddr ok egg, 'cut and thrust,' Hom. 33; drepa i egg, to blunt: as the old swords of the Scandinavians were double-edged (only the sax had a single edge), egg is freq. used in pl.; takattu á eggjum, eitr er í báðum, touch not the edges, poison is in both of them, Fas. i. 522 (in a verse); the phrase, deyfa eggjar, vide deyfa: the sword is in poetry called eggjum-skarpr, m. with sharp edges; and the blade, tongue of the bilt, Lex. Poët.; sverðs-eggjar, sword edges; knifs-egg, öxar-egg, the edge of a knife, axe. 2. metaph., fjalls-egg, the ridge of a mountain, Hkr. ii. 44; reisa á egg, to set (a stone) on its edge, opp. to the flat side, Edda 40: eggja-broddr, m. an edged spike, Fms. x. 355.

egg-bitinn, part. bitten, smitten by an edge, Bs. i. 644.

egg-dauor, adj. slain by the edge of the sword, Lex. Poët.

egg-elningr, adj. baving an ell-long edge (of a scythe), Grág. i. 501.

egg-farvegr, m. the print of an edge, pord. 54 new Ed.

egg-frann, adj. sbarp-edged, Lex. Poët.

egg-hvass, adj. sbarp, Lex. Poët.

egging, f. an egging on; eggingar-fift, n., v.l. for eggjunar-fift, Nj. 52.

oggja, að, to egg on, incite, goad, with acc. of the person, gen. of the thing; (e. e-n e-s), er þá eggjaði hins vesta verks, Nj. 213; allmjök muntu eggjaðr hafa verit þessa verks, Fs. 8; e. lið, a milit. term, to encourage, cheer troops just before battle, Fms. v. 73: proverb, illt er at e. óbilgjarnan, 'tis not good to egg on an overbearing man, Grett. 91; e. e-n á e-t, to egg one on to do a thing, Nj. 21, Pass. 22. 9: absol., er þat gráta á annari stundu er eggja á annari, þorst. St. 52. 2. reflex., láta at eggjask, to yield to another's egging on; eigi mun konungr láta at eggjask um öll níðingsverk þín, Eg. 415; Haraldr konungr lét at eggjask, Fms. xi. 23; eggjask upp á e-n, to thrust oneself upon one, provoke one, Róm. 120: recipr. to egg one another on in a battle, eggjuðusk nú fast hvárirtveggju, Nj. 245.

eggian (eggiun), f. an egging on, Fms. v. 75, vii. 260, Eg. 473, 623.

29. comps: eggiunar-fifi, n. a fool, a cat's paw, Nj. 52; vide eggingar-fifi. eggiunar-orð, n. pl. egging words, Fms. ii. 290, viii. 219. eggiari, 2, m. an egger on, inciter, Barl. 52.

egg-leikr, m., poët. the play of edges, battle, Gkv. 2. 31.

egg-móðr, adj., poët. epithet of the slain in a battle-field; e. valr, mown by the sword, Hôm. 31, Gm. 53; no doubt from má, to mow, not from móðr, weary.

egg-skurn, n. (mod. egg-skurmr, m.), an egg-sbell, Edda 12, Stj. 10. egg-sléttr, adj. 'edge-plain,' i. e. quite plain, of a meadow to be mown.

egg-steinn, m. an edged, sharp stone, Edda (Ub.) 290.

egg-teinn, m. 'edge-rim,' one of the two rims running along the ancient swords, with a hollow between them; blanaor 'annarr' eggteinninn, Nj. 203; svá at fal búða eggteina, the blade sank so deep that both edge-rims weere bidden, 125, Ísl. ii. 55, Fas. ii. 415; ritað gullstöfum fram eptir eggteinum, of the sword of Charlemagne, Karl. 178.

egg-tio, n. 'egg-tide,' the egg-season (May), Edda 103.

egg-ver, n. 'egg-field,' a place where the eggs of wild fowl are gathered in quantities (cp. sel-ver, sild-ver, silpta-ver), Grág. ii. 263, 338, Jb. 217, Eg. 42: gathering eggs = varp, Bs. i. 350; eggvers-holmi = varpholmi, Jm. 1.

egg-volr, m. the slope on the edge (as of scissors), Fbr. 142, Bs. ii. 94. egg-bunnr, adj. thin-edged; e. öx, Ann. 1362.

Egipskr, adj. Egyptian; Egiptaland, n. Egypt, Al., Fms., etc.

EGNA, d, [agn], to bait, with dat. of the bait, Edda 154, Hym. 22: the prey for which the bait is set either in acc., e. örriða, to bait for trout, Sighvat; e. veiði, to set bait for the prey, Sturl. i. 18; or in mod. use, e. fyrir fisk: even used, e. neti (better acc.), to cast a net, Fms. ii. 140; e. snörur, gildru, Mar. passim; egnd snara, Grett. (in a verse).

2. metaph. to provoke, Sks. 232, Fas. i. 39; reiði Drottins þá uppegnd er, Pass. 40. 3.

egning, f. = eggjan; egningar-kviör, m. a kind of verdict, v. kviör. EI and ey (cp. also se), adv. [cp. Gr. alw; Lat. aevum; Goth. aivs = eternity, everlasting time: hence are derived the O. H. G. eva, A. S. a, Hel. co, in the metaph. sense of law (the law being symbolical of what is everlasting), which word still remains in the mod. Germ. ebe = marriage; whence the mod. Germ. echt = genuine, mod. Dan. ægte, mod. Icel. ekta, q. v. (Grimm)]:-ever; the phrase, ei ok ei, or ey ok ey, for ever and ever; gott ey gömlum mönnum, gott ey ungum mönnum, Landn. 45; öllungis muntu hafa bau ei ok ei, Hom. 15, Al. 120; hans riki stendr ei ok ei, 160; Guos ei lifanda, Blas. 43: the proverbs, ey sér til gyldis gjöf, Hm. 146; ey getr kvikr kú, 69; ey lýsir mön af mari, Vþm. 12; ey bað hon halda, Hkv. 1. 4; ey var mér týja, Akv. 27; lifa ey, Hm. 15, 34; er ok ey eða ei þat er aldregi þrýtr, Skúlda 172; ei at vera, 677. 3; til hins sama var ey at ætla, Bs. i. 108. II. [Dan. ei, Swed. ej], not ever. not, properly a contraction from ei-gi, in the MSS. freq. spelt é or eg; ei is often used in mod. writers, but not in speech; it is also used now genuine. 2. ey in a negative sense; ey manni, no man, Vpm. 55;

EID, n. an isthmus, neck of land; mjótt e., Eg. 129; rastarlangt eið, Fms. ix. 402; hence the names of places, Satíris-eið, the Mull of Cantire, Orkn. 152; Skalp-eið, Sealpa (in Orkney), 244; Eiðar (a farm), Eiðaskógr (in Sweden), Eiða-fjörðr, Eiðs-berg, Eiðs-vágr, Eiðs-völlr (in Norway), Eið = Aith (in Shetland).

EIDA, u, f. [Ulf. aipei; Finn. aiti], a mother, Edda 108; an obsolete word, which only occurs once or twice in old poetry; perhaps akin to edda, q.v.

eio-brooir, m. an oath-brother, confederate, Fms. ix. 294, Bær. 16: metaph., arnar e., the oath-brother of the eagle, the raven, Fagrsk 4 (in a verse).

eið-bundinn, part. bound by oath, Hkr. iii. 26.

eio-byggjar, m. pl. inhabitants of an isthmus, Fms. viii. 194.

eið-fall, n. 2 law term, failing in one's oath, Grág. ii. 22, Glúm. 387, K. p. K. 146.

eid-falli, 2, m. one who fails in an oath, N.G.L. i. 431.

eið-færa, ð, a law term, to charge one with a thing by an oath, Grág. i. 244, 245, Sturl. iii. 98, (in a case of alimentation.)

eio-færing and eio-færala, f. charging by an oath, Grag. i. 235, 244, eio-færr, 2dj. able, competent to take an oath, Fb. i. 555.

eið-hjálp, f. a Norse law term, 'oath-belp,' metaph. last belp, issue; svá er, segir Þórarinn, ok er þó nokkur í eiðhjálpin, Band. (MS.) 16, H. E. i. 467, v. l.

eio-laust, n. adj. without an oath, K. p. K. 72.

EIDR, m. [Ulf. aips: A.S. ad; Engl. oath; North. E. aith; Swed. ed; Dan. eed; Germ. eid]:-an oath; vinna eid, but also sverja eid, to take an oath, to swear, Glum. 387, Nj. 36, Grug., Sdm. 23; ganga til cida, to proceed to the taking an oath, Nj., Grug.; cidar, ord ok særi, Vsp. 30; fullr e., a full, just oath, Grett. 161; rjufa eid, to break an oath (eid-rofi); perjury is mein-særi, rarely mein-eior (Swed.-Dan. men-ed, Germ. meineid); eidar úsærir, false, equivocal oatbs, Sks. 358; hence the proverb, litio skyldi i eioi úsært, with the notion that few oaths can bear a close scrutiny, Grett. 161; trúnadar-e., hollustu-e., an oath of fealty, allegiance: cp. the curious passages in Sturl. i. 66 and iii. 2, 3; dýr eiðr, a solemn oath; sáluhjálpar-e., sverja dýran sáluhjálpar-eið, to swear an oath of salvation (i. e. as I wish to be saved). In the Norse law a man was discharged upon the joint oath of himself and a certain number of men (oath-belpers, compurgators, or oath-volunteers); oaths therefore are distinguished by the number of compurgators,—in grave cases of felony (treason etc.), tylptar-e., an oath of twelve; in slighter cases of felony, séttar-e., an oath of six, (in N. G. L. i. 56, ch. 133, 'vj à hvára hönd' is clearly a false reading instead of 'iij,' three on each side, cp. Jb. bb. ch. 20); grímu-eiðr, a mask oath, a kind of séttar-e.; lýrittar-e., an oath of three; and lastly, ein-eidi or eins-eidi, an oath of one, admissible only in slight cases, e.g. a debt not above an ounce; whence the old law proverb, eigi veror einn eior alla, a single oath is no evidence for all (cases), Sighvat, Fms. iv. 375, v. l., Bjarn, 22, Nj. 13: other kinds of oaths. dular-e., an oath of denial; jafnadar-e., an oath of equity, for a man in paying his fine had to take an oath that, if he were plaintiff himself, he would think the decision a fair one; vide N.G.L. i. 56, 254-256, 394, Jb. and Js. in many passages. In the Icel. law of the Commonwealth, oaths of compurgators are hardly mentioned, the kviðr or verdict of neighbours taking their place; the passage Glum. ch. 24, 25 is almost unique and of an extraordinary character, cp. Sir Edmund Head's remarks on these passages in his notes to the Saga, p. 119, cp. also Sturl. iii. 2; but after the union with Norway the Norse procedure was partly introduced into Icel.; yet the Js. ch. 49 tries to guard against the abuse of oaths of compurgators, which led men to swear to a fact they did not know. As to the Icel. Commonwealth, it is chiefly to be noticed that any one who had to perform a public duty (lög-skil) in court or parliament, as judge, pleader, neighbour, witness, etc., had to take an oath that he would perform his duty according to right and law (baug-eiðr ring-oath, bok-eidr gospel-oath, log-eidr lawful-oath), the wording of which oath is preserved in Landn. (Mantissa) 335, cp. pórð. S. (Ed. 1860) p. 94, Band. (MS.) COMPDS: eiða-brigði, n. breach of oath, eioa-fullting, n. an oath help, Fas. ii. 204. eiða-konur. Band. 6. eiða-lið, n. men ready to f. pl. women as compurgators, Grett. 161. take an oath, Eg. 503, referring to Norway, the men elected to an oath of eiða-mál, n. an oath affair, Sturl. iii. 2. eiða-sekt, f. a fine twelve. for an (unlawful) oath, N.G.L. i. 211. eiða-tak, n. giving security for an oath, bail, N.G.L. i. 314, 321. II. a pr. name, Landn.

eið-rof, n. breach of an oath, perjury, K. Á. 148.

eið-rofi (eið-rofa), 2, m. a perjurer, violater of an oath, Fms. viii, 387, K. Á. 148, N. G. L. i. 152, 429, Edda 43.

til hins sama var ey at ætla, Bs. i. 108.

II. [Dan. ei, Swed. ej], not ever, not, properly a contraction from ei-gi, in the MSS. freq. spelt é or eg; ei is often used in mod. writers, but not in speech; it is also used now and then in Edd. of old writers, though it is doubtful whether it is there etc. But the syllable eið- may be derived from eið, an isthmus, because their parliament was held on an isthmus, Eid, now called Eidsvold; vide med konungi, the men who owed following to (i.e. were bound to attend) eið-spjall, n. delivery of an oath, in the Icel law phrase, hlýða til eiðspjalls e-s, to listen to one's oath, Nj., Grag. i. 39, 76, etc.

Digitized by GOGIC

eio-stafa, 20, to say the oath formula for another to repeat, D. N.

eio-stafr, m. the form or wording of an oath; sverja med pessum eiðstaf, Ghl. 7, Fms. vi. 53, viii. 150, x. 418.

eio-svari, a, m. a confederate, one bound by oath, Nj. 192: a liegeman bound by a hollustu-e., Orkn. 106, Fms. v. 44 (Hkr. ii. 333).

eio-særr, 2dj. such that it may be sworn to, absolutely true, Eg. 347 (in a verse, MS.; Ed. audsært).

eið-unning, f. the taking an oath, Grág. i. 57.

eio-vandr, adj. 'oath-fast,' religious as to an oath, Lex. Poët.

eio-varr, adj. cautious (conscientious) as to an oath, Isl. ii. 98.

eið-vinning, f. = eiðunning, K. þ. K. 156. eio-vætti, n. testimony on oath,]b. 448.

EIGA, pret. átti; pret. subj. ætti, pres. eigi; pres. ind. á, 2nd pers. átt (irreg. eigr, Dipl. v. 24), pl. eigum, 3rd pers. pl. old form eigu, mod. eiga; imperat, eig and eigou; sup. att; with suffixed neg. pres. ind. 1st pers. á'k-at, 2nd pers. átt-attu; pret. subj. ættim-a: [Gr. έχω; Goth. aigan; A. S. agan; Hel. egan; O. H. G. eigan; Swed. aga; Dan. eje; Engl. to owe and own, of which the former etymologically answers to 'eiga,' the latter to 'eigna']:-to bave, possess.

A. Act. I. denoting ownership, to possess: proper sense; allt þat góz sem þeir eiga eðr eigandi verða, D. N. i. 80; hann eigt hálfa jörðina, Dipl. v. 24; Björn hljóp þá á skútu er hann átti, Eb. 6; Starkadr átti hest góðan, Nj. 89; þau áttu gnótt í búi, 257; hón á allan arf eptir mik, 3; átti hón auð fjár, Ld. 20; ef annarr maðr ferr með goðorð en sá er á, Grág. i. 159; annat vápnit, ok á þat Þorbjörn, en borgautr á betta, Ísl. ii. 341; eignir bær er faðir hans hafði átt, Eb. 4; í ríki því er Dana konungar höfðu átt þar lengi, Fms. xi. 301, Rb. 494, Eb. 54, 118, 256, 328, Sturl. ii. 60, Eg. 118; e. saman, to own in common, Grág. i. 199; ef tveir menn eigo bú saman, ii. 44; e. skuld (at e-m), to be in debt, Engl. to owe; en ef hann atti engar skuldir, if be owed no debts, i. 128; þar til átti honum (owed bim) meistari borgeirr ok bá mörk, D. N. iv. 288 (Fr.); e. fé undir e-m, to be one's creditor, Nj. 101; in mod. usage, e. fé hjá e-m, or ellipt., e. hjá e-m. 2. in a special a. eiga konu, to bave ber to wife; hann átti Gró, Eb. 16; hann átti Ynghvildi, 3; þorgerðr er (acc.) átti Vigfúss, ... Geirríðr er (acc.) átti þórólfr, 18; hann gékk at eiga þóru, be married Tbora, id.; puridi haidi hann adt atta, Thorida bad been bis first wife, 42; enga vil ek bessa e., I will not marry any of these, Nj. 22; Björn átti bá konu er Valgerðr hét, 213, 257; faðir Hrúðnýjar er átti Þorsteinn, Landn. 90; Asdísi átti síðar Skúli, S. was A.'s second busband, 88; Þorgerðr er átti Ónundr sjóni, 89; Vigdis er átti Þorbjörn enn digri, 87; Árnþrúðr er átti Þórir hersir, 66; Hungerð er átti Svertingr, 61, 86, and in numberless passages: old writers hardly ever say that the wife owns her husband—the passages in Edda 100 (vide elja) and Nj. 52 (til lítils kemr mér at eiga hinn vaskasta mann á Íslandi) are extraordinary—owing to the primitive notion of the husband's 'jus possessionis' (cp. brúðkaup); but in mod, usage 'eiga' is used indiscriminately of both wife and husband; Icel. even say, in a recipr. sense, eigast, to own one another, to be married; þau áttust, they married; hann vildi ekki at þau ættist, hann bannaði beim ad eigast, be forbade them to marry:—to the ancients such a phrase was almost unknown, and occurs for the first time in K. A. 114. börn, to bave children, of both parents; áttu þau Jófriðr tíu börn, J. and ber busband bad ten bairns, Eg. 708; hann átti dóttur eina er Unnr hét, Nj. 1; þau þorsteinn ok Unnr áttu son er Steinn hét, Eb. 10, Nj. 91, 257; áttu þau þórhildr þrjá sonu, 30; e. móður, föður, to bave a mother, father, Eb. 98; vænti ek ok, at þú eigir illan föður, id. y. the phrase, e. heima, to have a home; þeir áttu heima austr í Mörk, Nj. 55; því at ek tek eigi heim í kveld, þar sem ek á heima út á Íslandi, 275; in mod. usage = to live, abide, in regard to place, cp. the questions put to a stranger, hvað heitir maðrinn? hvar áttu heima? used in a wider sense than búa. 8. eiga sér, to bave, cp. 'havde sig' in Dan. ballads; Höskuldr átti sér dóttur er Hallgerðr hét. Nj. 3; ef hann á sér í vá veru, Hm. 25, (freq. in mod. use.) 3. without strict notion of possession; e. vini, òvini, to bave friends, enemies, Nj. 101; hverja liòveizlu skal ek þar e. er þú ert, what belp can I reckon upon from thee? 100; e. ván c-s, to have bope of a thing, to reckon upon, 210; e. til, to have left; ekki eigu it annat til (there is nothing left for you) nema at bidja postulann, Joh. 623. 22: in mod. usage e. til means to own, to bave left; hann å ekkert til, be is void of means, needy; eiga góda kosti fjár, to be in good circumstances, Isl. ii. 322; e. vald & e-u, to bave within one's power, Nj. 265: the phrase, e. hlut at e-u, or e. hlut i e-u, to bave a sbare, be concerned with; eptir þat átti hann hlut at við mótstöðumenn Gunnars, 101, 120; par er þú ættir hlut at, where thou wast concerned, 119; mik uggir at hér muni eigi gæfu-menn hlut í e., 179: hence ellipt., e. í e-u, to be engaged in, chiefly of strife, adversity, or the like; thus, e. i striði, fátækt, baráttu, to live, be deep in struggle, want, battle, etc. II. denoting duty, right, due, obligation:

the king's person, Fms. vii. 240; & ek bar fyrir at sja, I am bound to see to that, Eg. 318; Tylptar-kviðr átti um at skilja, Eb. 48; þeir spurðu hvárt Njáli þætti nokkut e. at lýsa vígsök Gunnars, Nj. 117; nú áttu, Sigvaldi, now is thy turn, now ought thou, Fms. xi. 109, Fs. 121; menn eigu (men ought) at spyrja at þingfesti, Grág. i. 19; þá á þann kvið einskis meta, that verdict ought to be void, 59; ef sa maor a (owns) fe út hér er ómagann á (wbo ought) fram at færa, 270; nú hafa þeir menn jammarga sem þeir eigu, as many as they ought to have, ii. 270; tíunda á maðr fé sitt,... þá á hann þat at tíunda,... þá á hann at gefa sálu-gjafir, i. 202:—'eiga' and 'skal' are often in the law used indiscriminately, but properly 'ought' states the moral, 'shall' the legal obligation, -elska skalt þú föður þinn og móður, þú skalt ekki stela, where 'átt' would be misplaced; sometimes it is merely permissive, gefa & maor vingjafir at sér lifanda, et hann vill, a man 'may' whilst in life bequeath to bis friends, if be will, id.; maor a at gefa barni sinu laungetnu tólf aura, ef hann vill, fyrir ráð skaparfa sinna, en eigi meira nema erfingjar lofi, a man 'may' bequeath to the amount of twelve ounces to his illegitimate child without leave of the lawful beir, etc., 203; ef bat a til at vilja, if that is to bappen, Fas. i. 11. 2. denoting claim, right, to own, be entitled to, chiefly in law phrases; e. dom, sakir, to own the case, i. e. be the lawful prosecutor; ok á sá þeirra sakir, er . . ., Grág. i. 10; eðr eigu peir eigi at logum, or if they be not entitled to it, 94; e. mál á e-m, to bave a charge against one, Nj. 105; e. rétt á e-u, to own a right; sá sem rétt á á henni, who has a right to ber, K. Á. 16; þeir sögðu at þeim þótti slíkr maðr mikinn rétt á sér e., such a man had a strong personal claim to redress, Nj. 105; hence the phrase, eiga öngan tétt á sér, if one cannot claim redress for personal injury; på eigu peir eigi rétt á sér, then they have no claim to redress whatever, Grág. i. 261; e. sök, saka-stadi á e-u, to bave a charge against; bat er hann átti öngva sök á, Nj. 130; saka-staði þá er hann þótti á eiga, 166; kalla Vermund eigi (not) eiga at selja sik, said V. bad no right to sell them, Eb. 116: hence in mod. usage, eiga denotes what is fit and right, hu att ekki að göra það, you ought not; eg ætti ekki, Í ought not: in old writers eiga is seldom strictly used in this sense, but denotes the legal rather than the moral β. eiga fé at e-m (mod. e. hjá e-m), to be one's creditor, Grág. i. 90, 405, Band. 1 C: metaph. to deserve from one, ok áttu annat at mér, Nj. 113; e. gjafir at e-m, 213; in a bad sense, kváðusk mikit e. at práni, they bad much against Thrain, 138. y. the law phrase, e. útkvæmt, fært, to bave the right to return, of a temporary exile, Nj. 251: at hann skyli eigi e. fært út hingat, Grág. i. 119; ok á eigi þingreitt, is not allowed to go to the parliament, ii. 17; e. vigt, Grag., etc. III. denoting dealings or transactions between men (in a meeting, fight, trade, or the like), to keep, bold; þætti mér ráðliga at vér ættim einn fimtardóm, Nj. 150; e. orrustu við e-n, to fight a battle, Fms. i. 5, Eg. 7; e. högg vid e-n, to exchange blows, 297; e. vápna-vidskipti, id., Fms. ii. 17; eiga handsöl at e-u, to sbake bands, make a bargain, x. 248; e. ráð við e-n, to consult, bold a conference with, Nj. 127; e. tal vid e-n, to speak, converse with one, 129; e. mál vio e-n, id., Grág. i. 10; e. fund, to bold a meeting, Nj. 158; e. þing, samkvámu, stefnu, to bold a meeting, Eg. 271; þetta haust áttu menn rétt (a kind of meeting) fjölmenna, Eb. 106; e. kaupstefnu, to bold a market, exchange, 56; e. féránsdóm, Grág. i. 94; e. gott saman, to live well together, in peace and goodwill, Ld. 38; e. illt vid e-n, to deal ill with, quarrel with, Nj. 98; e. búisifjar, q. v., of intercourse with neighbours, Njard. 366 Le. drykkju vid e-n, to be one's euch 'cup-mate,' Eg. 253; e. viò e-n, to deal with one; ekki á ek þetta við Razpik, this is no business between thee and me, Nj. 93; gott vilda ek vid alla menn e., I would live in goodwill with all, 47; e. vid e-n, to fight one; eigum vér ekki við þá elligar (in a hostile sense), else let us not provoke them, 42; edr hvart vili it Helgi e. við Lýting einn eðr bræðr hans báða, 154; brátt fundu þeir, at þeir áttu þar eigi við sinn maka, Ld. 64; Glúmr kvað hann ekki þurfa at e. við sik, G. said be bad no need to meddle with bim, Glum. 338; e. um ab vera, to be concerned; ekki er við menn um at e., Nj. 97; þar sem við vini mína er um at e., where my friends are concerned, 52; vid færi er ba um at e., ef Kari er einn, there are fewer to deal with, to fight, if K. be alone, 254; vid brögdótta áttu nú um, Fms. v. 263; ætla ek at oss mun léttara falla at e. um við Svein einn, iv. 80; Sveinn svarar, at þeir áttu við ofressi um at e., that they had to deal with odds, 165.

B. almost as an auxiliary e., that they had to deal with odds, 165. verb; e. skilt (skilit), to bave stipulated; hafa gripina svá sem hann átti skilt, Fms. vi. 160; pat átta ek skilit við þik, il. 93; sem Hrani átti skilt, iv. 31; e. mælt, of oral agreement; sem vit áttum mælt með okkr, xi. 40; þá vil ek þat mælt e., 124: in mod. usage e. skilit means to deserve, eg á ekki þetta skilit af hér, etc. y. sometimes used much like geta; við því átti Búi eigi gett, B. could not guard against that, Fms. i. deserve, eg á ekki þetta skilit af hér, etc. 117, cp. xi. 109:—also, e. bagt, to be in a strait, poor, sickly; e. heimilt, to bave at one's disposal, Eb. 254. IV. to bave to do; skal porleisr eigi (not) e. at því at spotta, Eb. 224; e. hendr sínar at verja, to bave to defend one's own bands, to act in self-defence, Nj. 47; e. e-m varlaunad, to stand in debt to one, 181; e. um vandrædi at halda, to be 1. to be bound, etc.; peir menn er fylgð áttu hin a strait, Eb. 108; e. erindi, to bave an errand to run, 250; en er peir

Digitized by GOGIC

Attu um betta at tala, when they had to talk, were talking, of this, Stj. 391; e. rikis at gæta, to bave the care of the kingdom, Nj. 126; en bó & ek hverki at telja við bik mægðir né frændsemi, i. e. I am no relation to thee, 213; ok zetti heir vid annan at deila fyrst, III; e. mikid at vinna, to be much engaged, bard at work, 97; e. e-t eptir, to have left a thing undone, 56; e. for, ferd, to bave a journey to take, 11, 12; hann átti þar fe at heimta, 261; e. eptir mikit at mæla, 88. 2. metaph. in the phrases, e. mikit (litio) 'at' sér, or 'undir' sér, to bave much (or little) in one's power; margir menn, beir er mikit bottusk at ser e., Sturl. i. 64; far þu við marga menn, svá at þú eigir allt undir þér, go with many men, so that thou hast the whole matter in thy hands, Ld. 250; en avalt atta ek nokkuð undir mér, Vígl. 33; kann vera at hann eigi mikit undir sér, Fas. i. 37; eigum heldr undir oss (better keep it in our own bands), en ganga i greipar beim mædginum, Fs. 37; sem beir, er ekki eigu undir ser, who are belpless and weak, porst. St. 55; e. bykisk hann nokkut undir ser, i. e. be bears bimself very proudly, Grett. 122; petta ráð vil ek undir sonum minum e., I will leave the matter in my sons' bands, Valla L. 202; e. lif sitt undir e-m, to bave one's life in another's bands, Grett. 154; mun ek nú senda eptir mönnum, ok e. eigi undir ójöfnuði hans, and trust bim not, 110: hence in mod. usage, e. undir e-u, to risk; eg bori ekki 20 e. undir því, I dare not risk it: e. saman, to bave or own in common; the saying, pad a ekki saman nema nafnið, it bas notbing but the name in common; rautt gull ok bleikt gull á ekki saman nema nafn eitt, Fms. v. 346: the proverb, þeygi á saman gamalt og ungt, Clf. 3. 44; e. skap saman, to agree well; kemr þú þér því vel við Hallgerdi, at it eigit meir skap saman, you are quite of one mind, Nj. 66; eigi veit ek hvárt við eigum heill saman, I know not whether we shall bave luck, i. c. whether we shall live bappy, together, 3. B. to deal with one another (sam-eign); er vér skulum svá miklu úgæfu saman e., that we are to have so much mischief between us, Nj. 201; e. e-t yfir höfði, to have a thing hanging over one's head, Sks. 742.

V. to agree with, to fit, to suit one:

1. with acc., pad & ekki vid mig, it suits me not, it agrees not with me. 2. with dat., medic. to agree, beal, the sickness in dat., thus the proverb, margt & viò mörgu, cp. 'similia similibus curantur,' Vídal. ii. 109. 3. absol. to apply to; at hann skyldi eigi trúa lágum manni rauðskeggjuðum, því at meistarinn átti betta, the description suited to the master, Fms. xi. 433; pat muntu ætla, at ek muna e. hinn bleika uxann, that the dun ox means me, Vapn. 21.

B. REFLEX., in a reciprocal sense, in the phrase, eigask vio. to deal with one another, chiefly to fight; en er þeir höfðu langa hríð við átzk, when they had fought a long time, Eb. 238, 74; eigask vid deildir, to be engaged in strife, 246; áttusk þeir höggva-viðskipti við, they came to a close fight, Fms. i. 38; áttusk þeir fá högg við, áðr ..., they had a short fight before ..., Eg. 297; sátt áttusk þeir við þjóstólft ok þorvaldr, Thostolf and Thorwald had little to do with one another, kept aloof from each other, Nj. 18; var nú kyrt þann dag, svá at þeir áttusk ekki við, that day passed quietly, so that they came not to a quarrel, 222. marry, vide above (A. I. 2).

eiga, u, f. ownership, property; bá er af hans e., Grág. ii. 304, Gbl. 312; alla eigu sina (al-eiga), Nj. II; eiga i eigunni (mod. eigu sinni), to own, possess, Fms. vii. 156, 280; kasta eigu sinni å, to take in possession, Eg. 335. COMPD: eigu-ligr, adj. worth baving, precious, Fms. i. 294, v. 260, Sks. 696, Sturl. i. 2.

eigandi, pl. eigendr, part. possessor, owner, Grág. i. 410, 420, 623. 21. ei-gi, sometimes (though rarely) egi, or even contracted ei, adv. (vide ei 2, p. 117); [the negative eigi is particular to the Scandin., mod. Dan. ei. Swed. ej]:-not. Old Icel. writers usually make a distinction between ekki, neut. adj. = nullum, nibil, and eigi, non; but in mod. usage ekki has, as adv., taken the place of eigi (whilst ekkert is used as the neut. adj.), e. g. ekki góðr, ekki vel, where the oldest writers use eigi góðr, eigi vel; this use of ekki is, however, very old and freq. used, e.g. in the Njála, and even in as old a vellum MS. as the Miracle-book (Bs. i); in most cases ekki and eigi are difficult to distinguish, because of the contraction in MSS. (vide ei); editors commonly print eigi:-that old poets used eigi, not ekki, may be seen from rhymes such as eigi varð ens ýgja, Fms. vi. 420: vide the negative -gi.

eigin, n. [Ulf. aigin = οὐσία], one's own, of property; sitt eigin, bis own, Stj. 448; girnask annars eigins, Hom. 54, Fms. ix. 453, v.l., Grag. ii. 191 (rare), vide eign. II. a seed, Edda (Gl.); cp. the Norse iend or ejende = the first sprouts of corn, Ivar Aasen.

eigin-bondi, m. one's own busband, K. A. 122, 655 xxxi. 3.

eigin-bruor, f. one's own bride, Lex. Poët.

eigin-bygo, f. one's own county, Fms. ii. 185. eigin-dóttir, f. one's own daughter, Stj. 516.

eigin-gipt, f. part. one's own wife, H. E. ii. 111.

eigin-giptask, dep. to marry, Bs. ii. 167. eigin-girnd and eigin-girni, f. selfishness, Stj. 134, Fas. i. 396.

eigin-gjarnligr and eigin-gjarn, adj. selfish, Sks. 528.

eigin-húsfrú, f. one's own bousewife, Stj. 251.

eigin-kons, u, f. one's own wife, Eg. 342, Grág. i. 376, K. A. 122, Fms. vii. 306, x. 265, Sturl. ii. 197.

eigin-kvángaðr and eigin-kvæntr, part. lawfully married, 671 B. 17, Sturl. i. 226.

eigin-kyn, n. 'own-kind,' peculiarity, Stj. 22.

eigin-leikr (-leiki), m. peculiarity, quality, Skálda 174. eigin-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv. properly), one's own, Fms. v. 232, x. 230, Magn. 496, K. A. 432: gramm., e. nafn, a proper name, Skalda 185.

eigin-maor, m. one's own wedded busband, K. A. 136, Titus i. 6. eiginn, adj. [A.S. agen; Engl. own; North. E. ain; Germ. eigen; Swed.-Dan. egen]:-own, one's own; this word is in mod. usage indecl. in case and number, only marking the gender, e.g. min, minnar, minum eigin..., but mitt eigio, etc.; old writers use a full declension, til eiginnar konu, K. Á. 110; eigna konu, Str. 20; sínum eignum bróður, Hom. 158; spýju sína eigna, 159; í sínu eignu fóstrlandi, Štj. 103; fyrir sinum eignum sonum, 240; hafa at eignum manni, one's own busband, Fagrsk. 10; eiginnar konu barn, 13.

eigin-ord, n. as a law term, ownership, possession, Grág. i. 417, ii. 259, O. H. 98; fá at eiginordi, to get into possession, Eg. 511. a wedding, betrotbal, Korm. 74, Grag. i. 162, 174, 310, Vigl. 20. eigin-spúsa, f. = eiginkona, Str., (for. word.)

eigin-tunga, u, f. one's own native tongue, Edda 153 (pref.)

eign, f. property, possession, patrimony; riki bessu er ek kalla mina eign, Fms. i. 201; fá til eignar, to get, Stj. 484; kasta sinni eign & e-t, to take into possession, Fms. iv. 238, Eg. 466. B. chiefly in pl. estates, landed property, opp. to lausafé or movable; hann åtti eignir i Vik austr, Eg. 466, K. A. 84: sing., en ef eign (a landed estate) er i þegngildi, Gþl. 131; eignir eða lausafé, N.G.L. i. 121; eignir er hann tekr, 122. COMPDS: eigna-lauss, adj. without estates, Fagrsk. 33. bur. n. one's own barn, N. G. L. i. 383. eignar-hluti, m. private sbare, property, Dipl. ii. 6: part of an estate, Bs. i. 762. eignar-jörð, f. a patrimony, landed inberitance, Bs. ii. II. eignar-kona, f. = eiginkona, Fms. x. 152, K. A. 136. eignar-lyör, m. one's own people, Stj. eignar-maör, m. an eignar-lýrittr, m., vide lýrittr, Grág. ii. 204. owner, possessor, Jb. 371, Dipl. v. 9. eignar-mark, n. a mark of ownership (on cattle), Jb. 121. eignar-nafn, n. a proper name, Stj. 258, Fms. xi. 444. eignar-skipti, n. [mod. Dan. mageskifte], exchange of land, Jb. 192, D. N. eignar-vitni (-vætti), n. a witness of ownersbip, Jb. 191.

eigna, 20; e. e-m e-t, to attribute to one, Stj. 25, Grett. 147 A, Fms. v. 277: to dedicate, name after one, mikit hof ok eignat bor, i. 294; kirkju ok e. hinum helga Kolumba, Landn. 43; eigna daga vitrum mönnum heiðnum, Bs. i. 237; eigna sér, to declare a thing to be one's own property; fé minu ok eignir ykkr Helgu, say that you and Helga are the owners, Nj. 257; e. ser land, to take land into one's own bands, Fms. v. 168: the proverb, sér eignar smalamaðr fé, þó enga eigi hann kindina, the shepherd calls the flock his own, though he owns not a sheep. reflex. to get, become the owner of, Grag. i. 4, Nj. 94, Fms. i. 28, iv. 79, Edda 145 (pref.): part. eignaor, baving possession, Fnis. iv. 23, v. l.

ei-góor, adj. 'ever-good,' dear, beloved, a nickname, Fms. eigra, 20, to walk beavily, denoting pain from age or debility, Fas. ii. 130 (in a verse), now freq.

eigu-ligr (eigur-ligr, Barl. 205), vide eiga.

EIK, gen. eikar, pl. eikr, [O. H. G. eik; Germ. eiche; A. S. ac; Engl. oak; North. E. aik; Swed. ek; Dan. eg]:-an oak, Skálda 151. used in Icel. (where are no trees) in the general sense of tree, Lat. arbor; and wherever found it is a sure test of Icel. authorship; brotna eikmar fyrir því, Fb. i. 133; í skóg við eik eina, Fs. 69; hann reist á honum kviðinn ok leiddi hann um eik, Nj. 275, Fms. xi. 9, 12 (Jómsv. S.), (an 'oak' with apples); átu hverjar aðrar því eikrnar með skyndi, Núm. 2. 98; 'saepius ventis agitatur ingens pinus' (of Horace) is by Stefan Olafsson rendered, opt vindar 'eik' þjá ef að hún er mjög há, Snót 87: but in the oldest proverbs the sense is probably that of oak, e.g. bat hefir eik er af annari skeft, cp. one man's meat, another man's poison, Hbl. 22, Grett. 53 new Ed.; or, bá verðr eik at fága sem undir skal búa, Eg. 520;—this last proverb seems to refer to an old custom of building houses under an old oak as a holy tree.

eiki, n. oak timber, Lex. Poët.

eiki-ass, m. an oaken beam, El. 12.

eiki-kylfa, f. an oaken club, Lex. Poët.

eiki-köstr, m. a pile of oak-wood, Gh. 20.

eikinn, adj. savage (of a bull), freq. in mod. use; in Skm. 17, 18 it is II. oaken, Edda i. 430 (in a verse). used of wild-fire.

eiki-skógr, m. an oak-sbaw, oak-wood, Fms. vi. 426, xi. 224.

eiki-stobbi, a, m. the stump of an oak, Flov.

eiki-stokkr, m. an oak-stock, Fms. vii. 37 eiki-súla, u, f. an oaken column, Róm. 148.

eiki-tindaör, part. with oaken pegs, Sks. 418.

eiki-viör, m. an oak-wood, Sks. 415. eiki-vöndr, m. a twig of an oak-tree, Sks. 416.

EIKJA, u, f. [eikja, Ivar Aasen], a small ferry-boat, Hbl. 7, Fms. iv. 185, viii. 37, N. G. L. i. 239, 243; for Bs. i. 674 vide eykr.

ei-ligr, adj. eternal, 677. 2, 3, (rare.)

```
judge in a case, Sturl. ii. 2, Fms. ii. 11, O. H. L. 36; cp. sjâlf-dæmi. ei-lifo, f. everlasting life, eternity, Mar., (freq. in mod. use.) ei-lift, n. = eilifd, Barl. 76, 93.
                                                                                a single example, Sks. 649: an unexampled thing, cp. the proverb, eith-dæmin eru verst, Grett. 93 A, vide dæmi; cp. also endemi.
 ei-lifleikr, m. eternity, Stj. 8. ei-lifliga, adv. to eternity, Fms. i. 202, Fb. i. 322, Eluc. 3, Fzr. 137, 655 xxxii. 10, N. T.
 ei-lifligr, adj. everlasting, eternal, N. T. ei-lift, adj. everlasting, eternal, 625. 188, Fms. i. 75, K. A. 228, N.T.; at eilifu, for ever and ever, Niorst. 8, Hkr. i. 19.
ei-litill, adj. 'ever-little,' very little.
 EIMR, m. and eimi, a, m. [this word may be akin to O. H. G. âtam; Germ. athem; Fris. ethma, adema, omma; A. S. âdm,-a Scandin. contracted form would be sounded eim; Dan. em; Norse æm, Ivar Aasen]:
  -reek, vapour, from fire or embers, different to gufa, steam from boiling; eimr ok reykr, Stj. 58; e. ok aldrnari, vapour and fire, Vsp. 57; eim hratt, vapour gusbed out, Orkn. (in a verse); eimr skaut hrimi, the vapour sent forth soot, Lex. Poët .: when the poets (Edda Gl.) call fire eimr, this can only be in a metaphorical sense; the sword is poët. called eimnir, m. reeking (with blood).
                                        β. in mod. usage eimr is also used of sound, a faint sound, tune; fyrir songlistar sætan eim, Bb. 1. 4. ei-muni (and ey-muni), a, m. an ever-memorable thing; hat er heim eimuni, they will never forget, Fms. iv. 240; bat man ber eymuni, thou wilt never forget it, Bjarn. 25 (in a verse); eymuni hinn mikli (name of a very severe winter), Ann. 1291.
                                      β. nickname of a Dan. king, the ever-beloved, Fms. xi; vide ein-muni. eim-yrja, u, f. [Dan. æmmer; Ivar Aasen eimor], embers; in allit. phrases, eldr ok e., Fms. iii. 180, Fas. ii. 75 (in a verse), or eisa ok e.; hann var borinn i eimyrju, Greg. 57; akin to eimr, qs. eim-myrja, a quantity of eimr, q. v.
 EIN- in compds denoting only, or only one in an intensive sense, vide the following words.
 ein-angr, m., Lat. angustiae, a narrow passage: metaph. a great strait; the proverb, margr verðr vaskr í einangrinum, þótt lítt sé vaskir pess á milli, many a man is bold in perils, though . . . Éb. 60; útilleitinn (unprovoking) en öruggr i einangri, but bold if put in a strait, Grett. 120.
  ein-angra, ad, to put one in a strait, drive into a corner, Stj. 71. einaro-liga, adv. firmly, Fms. ix. 509, v.l.: beartily, 625. 195; vel ok e., well and beartily, Fms. x. 35; eigi mjök e., not very beartily, 99.
  einaro-ligr, adj. firm, trusty looking, Fms. ii. 39.
ein-aror (qs. ein-haror), adj. firm, and metaph. bonest, sincere; einörd tru, firm belief, Hom. 38, 159; röskr maðr ok e., a bold and trusty man, Nj. 223; e. ok skelegr, firm and undaunted, Sturl. iii. 217; djarfr ok e., daring and bold, Fms. iv. 204: faithful, trusty, ix. 256, opposed to tvi-II. single; einord sæng, a single bed, D. N. ii. 94 (Fr.); bæta einörðum rétti, to pay a single fine, N. G. L. i. 69, 71,—this sense is Norse and obsolete and rarely occurs in Icel, writers; einart pak, a single thatch, Ld. 280; en hann slitt af sér böndin eigi seinna en ein-ardan vef, Stj. 416. Judges xiv. 12 ('like a thread,' A. V.) einart, mod. einatt, or even einlagt, adv. incessantly; gekk annarr maor út en annarr inn einart, one went out and another in incessantly, Fms. iv. 261; sitja einart við drykk, xi. 366; mærin grét einart, the girl 'grat sore,' kept on weeping, Eg. 481; fylgja e., to follow on one's beels, 371; Ogmundr var e. (always) med Karli, Sd. 171; sóttusk e. í ákafa, Ísl. ii. 268; hann ferr einart (straight, directly) til himna-ríkis, Hom.
159; boginn má eigi e. uppi vera, a bow must not be ever bent, 623. 19; lá þó allr herrinn Dana ok Svía einart í skotmáli, Fms. ii. 313.
 ein-asta, adv. only, solely, Sks. 439: in mod. usage also adj. indecl.
  ein-bakaör, part. once-baked, Stj. 279.
  ein-bani, 2, m., poët. the only, i.e. the great, slayer, Hým. 22, Hkm. 3.
  ein-baugr, m. a single ring, opp. to tvi-baugr, a double ring.
  ein-beittr, adj. resolute.
  ein-berni, mod. ein-birni, n. [barn], the only bairn, only beir, Grag.
ii. 183, Eg. 25, 83.
  ein-berr, adj. sheer, pure.
  ein-beygor, part. (cp. baugr II. 4), in the phrase, e. kostr, dire necessity, only chance, Hkr. ii. 172, Orkn. 58.
  ein-bjargi (ein-bjarga), adj. able to belp oneself, Bs. i. 328.
  ein-bregoa, brá, to braid a single knot.
  ein-breior, adj. of a single breadth, balf a yard broad, of stuff, opp.
to tví-breiðr, N. G. L. iii. 114. ein-bui, a, m. a single dweller, Eg. 109.
  ein-bæli (ein-býli), n. [ból], a single bousebold, opp. to tví-býli, Fms.
iv. 93, Fagrsk. 57.
  ein-daga, að, to fix a day for pay or the like, with acc.; e. fé, þing, brullaup, etc., Grág. i. 102, 266, 391, Gpl. 212.
 ein-dagi, a, m. a term for pay or any other duty to be done, Grag. i.
3, 383, Fms. v. 278, N. G. L. i. 7, 27, 83. ein-dreginn, part., e. vili, decided, firm will.
  ein-drægni, f. (ein-drægr, adj.), unanimity, barmony, Ephes. iv. 3.
  ein-dell, mod. and more freq. inn-dell, adj., prop. very easy: metaph. agreeable, Fas. ii. 402; vide inndæll.
```

```
ein-eggjaör, part. one-edged, Stj. 383. ein-eiði, n. (eins-eiðr, m., K. Á. 150, Gbl. 25), a single oath (vide eidr), Ghl. 196, 361, K. p. K. 42, Jb. 119, 120, 123, 126, 443, passim. ein-eigis, adv. with sole ownership, D. N. ein-eign, f. sole ownership, D. N. ein-elti, n. the singling one out.
                                                                              ein-eygőr (ein-eygr), adj. one-eyed, Bárð. 178, Fas. i. 379.
                                                                              ein-falda, ab, to 'single,' address with 'thou,' Sks. 303.
                                                                              ein-faldleikr (ein-faldleiki), m. simplicity, Stj. 34, 44, Hom. 67. ein-faldliga, adv. simply, Stj. 60, K.A. 224: specially, singularly, Skálda 190, Alg. 354. ein-faldligr, adj. simple, singular, Skálda 190.
                                                                              ein-faldr, adj., prop. baving 'one fold,' Lat, simplex, simple, single.
                                                                             Vm. 135: metaph. simple, plain, of men or things, Bs. ii. 39, 147, Hom.
                                                                            49, Hkr. iii. 97, Fas. i. 76: simple, silly, (mod.) ein-farir, f. pl. walking alone, Hkr. ii. 106; fara einförum, with the notion of melancholy, (freq.)
                                                                              ein-feldr, part. [fella], resolute, bent on one thing, Isl. ii. 36. ein-fyndr, adj. as finder entitled to the whole, N. G. L. ii. 146, l. 9, 13.
                                                                            or belonging only to the finder, id. l. 13, 14.
                                                                              ein-færr, adj. able to do for oneself, Fas. ii. 113, Glum. 344. ein-fætingr, m. a one-legged man, Rb. 344, cp. porf. Karl. 432.
                                                                              ein-fættr, adj. one-legged, Grett. 87.
                                                                              EINGA- [from einigr; Ulf. ainaba; A.S. anga; Germ. einig], only, single; only used in compos: oinga-barn, n. an only bairn, Barl. 174. pidr. 130, Sturl. ii. 197, Bær. 14.
                                                                                                                   einga-brúðr, f. the only belowed bride, Lex. Poët. (the Church, the bride of Christ).
                                                                                                                                     einga-dóttir, i.
                                                                            an only daughter, Fas. i. (in a verse), Stj. 407. Judges xi. 34, pior. 224, einga-dróttinn, m. the only Lord, Hom. 74.
                                                                            Fas. i. 76.
                                                                            sauor, m. an only sbeep, Stj. 516. 2 Sam. xii. 4.
                                                                                                                                   einga-sonr, m. az
                                                                            only son, Mar. 43, Gg. 2, Karl. 209.
                                                                                                                      einga-vinr, m. an only friend, bosom friend, Nj. 77. In mod. usage einka- (q. v.) is used instead of einga-, which is an obsolete form; and even in old MSS, both torms occur, e. g. Stj. (l. c), v.l.: pior. 130 spells 'einka-,' and it even occurs in old vellums as 623, p. 41; einka-sonr, Luke vii. 12. ein-ganga, u, f. = einfarar, N. G. L. iii. 36: eingöngu, as adv. solely.
                                                                              ein-getinn, part., eccl. only begotten, Clem. 40, Sks. 604 (of Christ).
                                                                             EINGI, einginn, in old writers more freq. spelt 'eng' (which accords with the mod. pronunciation), engi, enginn, qs. einn-gi from einn, one, and the negative suffix -gi:-none.
                                                                                  A. THE FORMS vary greatly:
                                                                                                                       1. the adjective is declined, and the suffix left indeclinable; obsolete forms are, dat. eino-gi or einu-gi (nulli), ægishjálmr bergr einugi, Fm. 17; einugi feti framar, not a step further, Ls. 1; svá illr at einugi dugi, Hm. 134; in old laws, ef maðr svarar einugi, Grág. (þ. þ.) i. 22; acc. sing. engi, engi mann, Hkv. 1. 37; engi frið, Hm. 15; engi jötun (acc.), Vþm. 2; engi eyjarskeggja, Fas. i. 433 (in a verse); also in prose, engi mann, O. H. 68; engi hlut, 33. 34; engi liðsamnað, 36, Mork. passim; engi knút fékk hann leyst.
                                                                            ok engi álarendann hreift, Edda 29.

2. the -gi changes into an adjective termination -igr; gen. sing. fem. einigrar, Hom. 22, Post. 64=.
                                                                            ok engi álarendann hreift, Edda 29.
                                                                            73; dat. sing. fem. einigri, Hom. 17; acc. sing. fem. einiga, Fas. i. 284
                                                                             (in a verse); nom. pl. einigir, Jd. 1; fem. einigar, Grág. i. 354; gen. pl. einigra, Post. 73; dat. einigum: this obsolete declension is chiefly used in the sense of any, vide below.
                                                                                                                 3. declined as the pronom. adj. hverr or nekverr (=nokkur); dat. sing. fem. engarri; gen. pl. aungvarra, Frns.
                                                                            ix. 46, Stj. 70; dat. sing. fem. aungvarri, Mork. 187; hereto belongs also the mod. neut. sing. ekkert.
                                                                                                              4. the word is declined as the adj. brongr, with a final v; nom. fem. sing. öng sorg (no sorrow), Hm. 94; nom. masc. öngr or aungr, Skv. 2. 26, Nj. 117 (in a verse), Fms. vi. 42 (Sighvat), i. 132 (Vellekla), etc.
                                                                                                  5. adding -nn, -n to the negative suffix, thus einginn, fem. eingin, neut. pl. eingin (or enginn, engin); in the other cases this #
                                                                                          Out of these various and fragmentary forms sprung the normal form in old and modern writings, which is chiefly made up of I, 4, and 5: old writers prefer nom. engi or eingi, but modern only admit einginn or enginn; gen. sing. masc. neut. eingis, einskis or einkis (enskis, Grag. i. 163; einskis, 25 C), engis or eingis, Eg. 74, 714, 655 xxxii. 10; einkis, Fms. x. 409: in mod. usage einskis and einkis are both current, but eingis obsolete: neut. sing. ekki assimilated = eit-ki or eitt-ki, in mod. usage ekkert, a form clearly originating from 3 above, but which, however, never occurs in old MSS.,—Fms. iii. 75, Landn. (Mant.) 329, Gbl. 343 (cp. N. G. L. ii. 110), are all paper MSS., -and only now and then in those from the end of the 15th century, but is common ever since that time; the N. T. in the Ed. of 1540 spelt ekkirt: in the nom. sing. old writers mostly use eingi or engi alike for masc, and fem. (eingi maor, eingi kona), whereas modern writers only use einginn, eingin (einginn madr, eingin kona); this form also occurs in old MSS., though rarely,
                                                                            e. g. engin hafði þess gáð, Stj. 6; einginn karlmaðr, 206; eingin atkvæði, ein-demi, n. a law term, the right to be an absolute, sole umpire or | Fins. v. 318; eingin hey, Isl. ii. 138; chiefly in MSS, of the 14th or 15th centuries: acc. sing. masc. engan or öngan is in MSS. much commoner than eingi (engi), see above, e. g. engan háska, Fms. ii. 322; fyrir engan mun, Gpl. 532, etc.: in the other cases the spelling and pronunciation are at variance. Editions and mod. writers usually spell engra, engrar, engri, engum, engu, engan, enga, engir, engar, but these forms are pronounced throughout with o or au, ongra, ongrar, ongri, ongum or ongvum, ongu or öngvu, öngan or öngvan, önga or öngva, öngir or öngvir, öngar or öngvar; that this is no mod, innovation is amply borne out by some of the best vellum MSS., e. g. Arna-Magn. 468, O. H., Fb., Mork.; öngum manni, Nj. 82; öngri munuð, 10; öngvar sakir, 94; önga fárskapi, 52; aungu vætta, Stj. 208; öngvan þef, 7; öngu nýtr, Fb. i. 284, 365; öngvan hlut, 166; öngum, 25; aungum várum bræðra, 63; avngir, O. H. 184; öngva, 146; öngu, 184 (freq.); avnga menn, Isl. ii. 349 (Heið. S. MS. Holm.); öngvir diskar, 337; öngum, Grág. i. 27; avngver menn, Bs. i. 337 (Miracle-book); öngom, 346, 347; önga björg, 349; en sér öngu at una, Hm. 95, Mork. passim, etc.: these forms are clearly derived from 4 above. [The word is exclusively Scandin.; Dan. ingen, neut. intet; Swed. ingen, inga, intet; Ivar Aasen ingjen, neut. inkje.]
```

B. THE SENSE: I. 'not one;' used as adj. with a subst. none, no, not any; peir vissu sér eingis ótta ván, Eg. 74; man hann einigrar (= ongrar) ömbunar vætta af Guði, Post. 73, and in numberless 2. used absol. (Lat. nemo) as subst. none, naught; ekki er mér at eigna af þessu verki, Fms. ii. 101; enda virðask einkis vætti pau er þeir bera, Gråg. i. 25; enginn konungs manna, Fms. i. 104; ok lét þá ekki (naught) hafa af föðurarfi sínum, Eg. 25; eingi þeirra, Skálda 165; fur hann var enskis örvænt, Isl. ii. 326; en svarar engu, Ld. 202; at öngu, for naught, Fms. iv. 317; öngum þeim er síðarr kemr, Grág. i. 27; på skal enga veiða, none of them, ii. 338; engi einn, none, Fms. v. 239; sem engin veit fyrri gert hafa verit, K. Á. 28; ekki skorti þá (ekkert, Ed. from paper MS.), Fms. iii. 75. β. neut. ekki with gen. pl. in a personal sense, ekki manna, 'nought of men,' = engir menn or enginn madr, no man, not a single man, O. H.; ekki vætta, nought, Fms. viii. 18; öngu vætta, nought (dat.), xi. 90; ekki skipa, not a single ship, etc. (freq. in old writers): einskis-konar, adv. in nowise, Sks. 713: engan-veginn, adv. noways. 8. neut. ekki is freq. used as adv. = eigi, q.v., Edda 20, Fms. ii. 81, vii. 120, xi. 22, Grág. i. 206, Eg. II. any; this sense is rare and obsolete, and probably also etymologically different from the preceding (cp. A. S. ânig): a negative; & hón eigi at selja fjárheimtingar sínar, né sakar einigar, Grág. i. 354; er eigi saurgisk í einigri líkams úhreinsun, Hom. 17; hvat sem engi segir, þiðr. 178; aldregi skalt þú þat heyra né engi annarra, 128; aldri fyrr i engri herferð, 29; má eigi þar fyrri undir búa eingi sá er tempraðan bólstað vill hafa, Sks. 45 new Ed.; né önnur eingi, Skálda (Thorodd) 165; því at hann má hvárki vaxa né þverra, né á engi veg skapask í sínu at kvæði, 166; eigi skal maðr gildra í mörku annars til einigra dyra, N.G.L. i. 242. β. after a comparative; prettvísari en ekki annat kvikendi, Mar.; þíðari ok fegri en engi maðr annarr, Stj. 524; sæmilegri en engan tíma fyrr hafði hann verit, 196; um þat fram (= framar) en engi hans frænda hefir haft fyr húnum, Fagrsk. 11.

ein-girni, n. [garn], single-threaded yarn.

ein-hagi and ein-agi, a, m. a piece of ladies' dress, Edda (Gl.), Bjarn. 42 (in a verse).

ein-hama and ein-hamr, adj. 'one-shaped,' as equivalent in the phrase eigi e., 'not single-shaped,' a werewolf; it is also used with berserkr, q. v.; sem hattr er beirra manna sem eigi eru einhamir...er af beim gengr berserks-gangrinn, Eb. 136; þrándr var kallaðr eigi e. (Tbrand was thought to be a werewolf), medan hann var heidinn, en ba tok af flestum tröllskap er skírðir vóru, 306; þykkir sem hann hafi eigi síðan dyggilega e. verit, Fb. i. 260; því at þú ert eigi e., Ísl. ii. 29: without a preceding eigi (less correctly), at hann hafi sterkastr maðr verit . . . sá er e. hefir verit, i. e. of those who were not berserkers, Fb. i. 524, Fas. ii. 261; cp. hamr, hamramr, hamremi, hamask, etc.

ein-hendis, adv. straight, off-hand, Bs. i. 13 (in a verse).

ein-hendr, adj. single-banded, Edda 17, Landn. 186.

Ein-herjar, m. pl. the 'only' or great champions, the dead warriors in Valhalla; about this mythological word vide Edda (Gg.) 23-25, Em. 1, Hkm. 16, Gm. 23, Vpm. 40, 41: sing. voc. einheri, thou great champion! (of Thor), Ls. 60: the name Einarr is properly = einheri; cp. einardr bold, einörð valour, all kindred words.

ein-hjal, n. secret gossip, O. T. 2.

ein-hleypi, n., einhleypis-maör, m. = einhleypingr, Gbl. 94.

ein-hleypingr, m. one who goes alone, hence a vagabond or person without bearth or home (cp. Scot. landlouper), Hrafin. 13; e. félausir, Stj. 398. Judges ix. 4 ('vain and light persons,' A. V.) ein-hleypr, adj. a single man without fixed bousehold, unmarried, K. A. 126, N.G. L. i. 142; opp. to buandi, 26.

ein-hlitr, adj. [hlita], trusting to oneself alone, self-confident, not needing the belp of another; vera ser e. i e-u, Eb. 90, Orku. 283; lata ser e-t einhlitt, to think it enough, rest satisfied, Fms. iv. 78; hat var mælt at hon leti mik eigi einhlitan, it was said that she was untrue to me (a euphemism), Sturl. i. 44; svá mundi þá, ef hón hefði bónda sinn einhlítan gjört, Dropl. 9; vera e. um e-t, to bave to decide a thing; eigi em ek e. um svör þessa máls, ok vil ek ráðask um við móður hennar, Ísl. ii. 159.

```
121
 ein-hugsa, 20, to make up one's mind, Fs. 18.
 ein-hversa, b, to decide upon, determine, with acc., Fms. v. 39.
 ein-hverfr, adj. determined, Sturl. i. 213.
 ein-hverr, v. einn.
 ein-hyrndr, adj. baving one born, Stj. 69.
 ein-hyrningr, m. 'one-born,' a unicorn, Karl. 386.
 ein-hæfr, adj. only fit for one thing.
 einigr, v. eingi.
 eining, f. unity, Hom. 55, Ver. 46, Fms. i. 281, Sks. 604.
 EINIR, m. [Swed. en], juniper, Edda (Gl.), Stj. 396, Hjalt. einir-ber, n. berries of the juniper, Hjalt. einir-lauf, n. leaves of the juniper, Björn.
 ein-jarnungr, m. all of one piece of iron, e. g. a knife, Krók. 40.
 einka, ad, to appoint for a peculiar use; hann einkadi til bess eitt hus, Sks. 622; hlutr einkaðr kirkjunni, H. E. i. 258; ok var þar til einkaðr Gudmundr prestr, Bs. i. 452: to dedicate, Karl. 301.
 EINKA- (rarely einkar-), in compos denoting,
                                                                 I. special,
personal, particular: einka-gjöf, f. a special gift, Lex. Poët. grio, n. special truce, N.G.L. i. 417.
                                               einka-gripr, m. a special family beir-loom, Glum. 339; bæði runar ok e., runes and tokens, Fms. einka-hlutr, m. a special, particular, personal thing, 625.
       einka-jartein, f. a special token, Skálda 167. einka-leyfi, 105.
n. a law term, an especial leave, Grag. i. 364, ii. 491, 492: (mod.) a privilege.
              einka-lof, n. id., Grág. i. 6.
                                                 einka-lækning, f. an einka-maor, m. a person of special rank, especial remedy, Hom.
a dignitary, Sks. 271, N.G.L. i. 4. einka-mál, n. pl. a special, personal agreement, treaty, Eg. 37, F2grsk. 179, Fms. i. 23, ii. 290; binda sætt eidum ok einka-málum, vii. 282: a privilege, e. ok réttar-bætr, Bs. i. 699, Js. 47, Játv. 8. einkar-eðli (einka-öðli), n. especial nature, Skálda 171, 677. 3. einkar-nafn, n. a special name, proper name, Edda 108.
                              einka-skriptargangr, m. a special confession, Hom. 74.
                       einka-sæla, u, f. bappiness, beatitude, Greg. 18.
einka-vinr, m. a particular friend, Bárð. 173, Nj. 77, v. l., Orkn. 448, II. only: einka-dóttir, -barn, -sonr, etc., (vide einga-vinr.)
vide einga- above.
 einkan-liga, adv. especially, particularly, Fms. i. 20, 191, K. A. 216, 230, Bs. i. 771. einkan-ligr, adj. especial, Stj. 6, H. E. i. 502, 655 xxxii. 8: extraordinary, Bs. ii. 18, 159, 170. ein-kanna, 20, = einka, to attribute, N. G. L. ii.
 ein-kanna- in einkanna-hlutr, m. an especial thing, Fms. vii. 120.
 einkar- prefixed to adjectives or adverbs = Scot. unco = specially, greatly, very; e. vel, very well, Fms. xi. 18; e. fagr, very fine, beautiful, ii. 300;
e. skjótt, with great speed, Eg. 354; e. traudt, very unwilling, Fms. xi.
98; e. mjök, very much, viii. 186; e. litill, very small, Fbr. 99 new Ed.:
cp. Lex. Poët., (very freq. in mod. use.) ein-kenna, d, to mark, signalise, Stj. Josh. ii. 18, Hkr. iii. 264, v. l. ein-kenniligr, adj. especial, particular, Str. 3, 39.
 ein-kenning, f. distinction, Karl. 288. ein-kili, m. [cp. Swed. kela; Dan. kjæle = to fondle], a fondling, Edda (Gl.); hence einkilju-legr, adj. fondled, spoilt, Björn. ein-kleyfr, adj. clear, unequivocal, Hkr. iii. 203, v.l. einkum, dat. used as adv. 'unco,' chiefly, especially, Landn. 282, Fms. ci. 25, viii. 102, Fs. 21, K. p. K. 162. 2. = cinkar, very; e. goo, xi. 25, viii. 102, Fs. 21, K.b. K. 162.
Hom. 111; e. vel, 655 xxx. 7; e. lítið, Sks. 188; e. bezt, Mork. 79. particularly, Fms. xi. 45, 127.
 ein-kunn, f. a mark, sign, Grag. i. 414, 415, ii. 303, Hkr. iii. 364.
 ein-kunna, að, = einkenna, Grág. ii. 345.
 ein-kynna, t, = einkenna, esp. of marking sheep or cattle, to brand or mark their ears, Grag. i. 414, 415, ii. 303, 348.
 ein-lagi, adj., vera, gerask e. um e-t, to act alone in a thing, Ld. 266, Fms. iv. 87.
 ein-lat, n. pl. 'letting alone,' deserting one's wife, Grag. i. 178.
 ein-leikit, part. neut., in the phrase, það er ekki e., of an uncanny thing, not by fair means.
 ein-leitr, adj. singular, odd, particular, Mar. ein-litr, adj. of one colour, Stj. 45, H. E. i. 492, Rd. 251.
 ein-lyndr, adj. odd, strange, stubborn, Nj. 184, Sks. 435.
 ein-lægni, f. sincerity, earnestness.
 ein-lægr and einlæg-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), sincere.
 ein-læti, n. = einlát, Hkr. i. 245.
 ein-man, n. solitude, in the phrase, i einmani; nú ef madr býr i einmani ödrum mönnum fjarri, in solitude, far from other men, N. G. L. i.
340; nú er maðr staddr í einmani, 343.
ein-mani (ein-mana), adj. solitary, alone, lonely; e. svú langt frú öðrum mönnum, Fas. i. 48, iii. 227: with the notion of a belpless, orphan ein-mall, adj. one-sided in speech, Skalda 164. Digitized by Google state, bottisk hann nú mjök e., left alone, Nj. 260; bar bu ert kominn her e. (single-banded), Fbr. 154; ungrok e., young and friendless, Fms.
```

viii. 3; hversu e. (bow bereft) margir fara, Sl. 48.

ein-manuor, m. the 'single month,' i. e. the last month of the winter, thirty days long, beginning on the Tuesday between the 9th and 15th of the best, the fleetest, but in a somewhat depreciatory sense. March (old style), Grág. i. 166, Edda 103, Rb. 516. COMPD: einmánaðar-samkváma, u, f. a meeting beld (in northern and eastern Icel.) at the beginning of the Einmanad, mentioned in Sturl. iii. 311, Lv. 65, Vápn. (Ný Fél. xxi. 124), Jb. 301, Fs. 67.

ein-menningr, m., drekka e., to toss off a bumper at one draught, Eg. 551.

ein-mitt, n. adj. as adv. just, exactly. ein-muna, adj. 'alone remembered,' memorable, always in a good sense; e. blior, exceedingly mild; e. veor, fine weather, cp. eimuni.

ein-munaligr, qs. ein-manaligr, adj. lonely.

ein-mæli, n. private talk or conference, Eg. 54, 741, Nj. 10, Sks. 363, Fms.i. 204, iv. 123, 303: common talk, var þat allra manna e., Fagrsk. 179. ein-mæling, f.=einmælt, Mar. 155. ein-mælis, adv. once a day, N.G. L. ii. 359.

ein-mælt, n. adj. [mál = meal], one meal a day; eta, matask e., Fms. viii. 447; fasta e., K. p. K. 102.

ein-mæltr, part. spoken by all, Fms. ix. 501, Eg. 514, Eb. 310.

EINN, adj., pl. einir, acc. sing. einn, but also einan, esp. in the sense al-einan etc.; [Gr. els, ev; Lat. unus, and early Lat. oinos; Ulf. ains; A. S. an; Engl. one, in E. Engl. proncd. like stone, bone; Scot. ane; Swed. en; Dan. een]:-one.

A. Cardinal number, one; einn, tveir, þrír ..., opp. to báðir, fleiri, etc.; einum edr fleirum, Grag. i. 108; eina sök edr fleiri, 78; unnu badir eins verk, Fas. i. 515; einum ok einum, one by one, ii. 252; tveir menn veðmæltu um einn grip, Grág. i. 412. 2. in old poems it is used as an ordinal number; Urð hétu eina, aðra Verðandi, Vsp. 20; segðu þat it eina ..., opp. to pat it annat, Vpm. 20; hjalp heitir eitt, belp ranks first, Hm. 147, Vkv. 2; but this use is quite obsolete. 3. with the notion of sameness, one and the same (unus et idem); i einu husi, in the same bouse, Grag. ii. 42; ein ero lög um, hvart sem ero naut edr saudir, i. 422; allt á eina leið, all one way, Fms. ii. 315; til einnar gistingar badir, vii. 274; i einu brjosti, Alm. 36; allr einn, the very same, Nj. II. indefinite, a, an, a certain one; einn vetr, a winter, Fms. i. 57; einn dag, x. 11, Fas. i. 514; eitt kveld, Ld. 38; einn hinn versti madr, Fær. 91; Breidlingr einn, a man from Broaddale, Sturl. ii. 249; einn vinr boris, a certain friend of Thorir, Fms. vi. 277: einn as the indefinite article is hardly found in old writers; and though it is freq. in the Bible, sermons, hymns, etc., since the Reformation, it was no doubt borrowed from the German, and has never been naturalised. B. about, before numbers; ein tvau hundruð vaðmála, about two bundred pieces, Sks. 30; einar fimm busudir, about three thousand, Al. 111, - obsolete, in mod. usage hérum-bil or the like. III. alone, Gr. μόνοs, Lat. solus, used both in sing, and plur.; Guðrún skyldi ein ráða, Ld. 132; Hallr tók einn upp fang, 38; lata einan, to let alone; lattu mig Drottinn einan ekki, Pass. 34. 11; as a law term, to let one's wife alone, ba let hann eina Guðrúnu, Fms. x. 324 (cp. einlát); Gunnarr mundi vera einn heima, Nj. 113; sjá einn hlutr, that one thing only, 112; þau ein tíðendi (plur.), only β. if put after the noun, einn denotes, only, but, such news, 242. sbeer, and is almost adverb.; segja þetta prett einn, a mere trick, Sturl. ii. 249; raufar einar, all in boles, Nj. 176; urdu bordin i blódi einu, the tables were bedabbled with blood all over, 270, O. H. 116; öll ordin at hvölum einum, all turned into whales, Fas. i. 372; gabb eitt ok håd, sheer mockery, Sks. 247; ord ein, mere words, Nj. 123; ígangs-klæði ein, Eg. 75; vin eitt, wine only, Gm. 19; heiptyrði ein, Fm. 9; hamingjur einar, Vpm. 49; ofsamenn einir, Ld. 158; bá nótt eina, for that one night, N. G. L. i. 240: also after an adj., litid eina, only a little, Stj. 177; pat eina, er hann ætti sjálfr, Eg. 47, Fms. v. 303; nema góðs eina, naught but good, Eg. 63; fatt eitt, few only, but few; vilt eitt, but what is agreeable, Hm. 125; mikit eitt skala manni gefa, a proverb, 'small gifts shew great love,' 51; så einn, er..., he only, who..., 17; satt eitt, sooth only, Fm. 9; the sense differs according as the adj. is placed before or after the noun, einn Gud, the One God; but, Gud einn, God only, none but God. IV. plur. in a distributive sense, single; ein gjöld, a single weregild, opp. to tvenn, brenn, fern, double, triple, quadruple, Grág. ii. 232; thus Icel. say, einir sokkar, skór, vetlingar, a pair of socks, shoes, gloves; einar brækr, a pair of breeches; also with nouns which have only plur., e. g. ein, tvenn, prenn Jól, one, two, three Christmasses (Yules); einar (tvennar) dyrr, a single ... door; eina Páska, one V. gen. pl. einna is used in an intensive sense; einna manna bezt, best of all single men, Fms. ix. 258; i mesta lagi einna manna, foremost of all single men, Bjarn. 65; fatt er sva einna hluta, at örvænt sé at hitti annat slíkt, O. H. 75. B. ellipt., manna, hluta, or the like being omitted, einna becomes almost an adverbial phrase, by far, exceedingly; at engi viti einna miklogi görr (= einna manna), that no one (no single man) shall know it much better, Grag. i. 2; einna verst, by far the worst, Orkn. 162, Nj. 38; einna sizt, by far the least, least of all, Fms. i. 37; einna mest verðr, Ld. 8; er einna var ríkastr, who was the mightiest of all, Fms. i. 297; engan rétt einna meir kunnan at göra (=einna rétta meir), Sks. 22; engi er einna hvatastr (=e. manna), there is none so mighty but be may find his match, Hm. 63: in mod. usage deinninn syngja i kirkju, Bs. (Laur. S.)

used adverb .: 1. gen. sing. eins, a. eins ok, as, as if; eins ok væri hann með öllu óttalauss, Hkr. iii. 275; allt eins ok (just as) rakkar metja með tungu, Stj. 392. β. likewise, in the same way; mikill borri var þat er þær sögðu eins báðar, Landn. (Hb.) 320; this use of eins is very rare in old writers, but freq. in mod. use; in the spoken language at y. only; er ek hefi least 'eins' (=as) has almost replaced the old 'sem.' áðr spurn til eins, Fms. iv. 139 (rare). 8. at eins, only, but, Grag. i. 235; vel at eins, ironically, well enough, Ld. 248; eigi at eins, not only, Fms. i. 266; með sínum at eins kostnaði, vii. 184; því at eins, only in that case, Nj. 228; par at eins, Isl. ii. 400; allt eins, not the less for that, 216: in mod. use, just as (vide allr A. V. 5). 2. dat. at einu = at eins; údauðr at einu, Ld. 242; því at einu = því at eins, Fms. iv. 195; því at einu er rétt ..., Grág. i. 164; svá at einu, id., Nj. 103; sá eykr syndir sinar at einu, be but adds to bis sins, Hom. 157; allt at einu, all the same, Isl. ii. 216, v. l.: af því einu, only because, Mork. 140.

B. Joined to another pronominal adj. or adv.: hverr, 2dj. pron., in old writers usually in two words and with a double declension (see below), but now and then (and in mod. usage always) in a single word, einn being indecl.; einhverja (acc. f.), Hbl. 30; einhverjum (dat. sing.), Hm. 122, Fms. x. 71; einhverjo héraði, Al. 98, Nj. 2; einhverra (gen.), Fms. iv. 75; einhverir (nom. pl.), viii. 202; einhver, einhverir, etc.: the form eins-hverr is peculiar, keeping the gen. indecl. through all the cases, nom. einshverr, N. G. L. i. 6; acc. einshverja, Stj. 156, 655 xxxii. 18, Gpl. 135; dat. einshverjum, Stj. 22, 442, 448; this form seems to be chiefly Norse, is very rare in old writers, and now quite obsolete; neut. sing. eitthvert, Vm. 73, or eitthvat, Stj. 442, the mod. usage makes a distinction, and uses eitthvert only as adj., eitthvað as subst.: 1. each one, each single one; madr er einn hverr, Edda 108; pær eru svá margar, at ein hver må vel endask, Eg. 414; ór þeirra fjórðungi sem ór einum hverjum öðrum, 1b. ch. 5; skal einn hverr (eacb) þeirra nefna sér vátta, Grág. i. 74; jafnmikinn arf sem einn hverr (each) sona hans, Sturl. ii. 77; fatt er svå herra einhverra hluta, of any single thing, β. joined to a superl. it strengthens the sense; ágætastr Fms. iv. 175. madr einn hverr, one of the very first men, Nj. 282; vinsælastr hofðingi einhverr, bigbly popular, Fms. vii. 4; einhver drengilegust vorn, ix. 2. in an indefinite sense, some, somebody, a certain one; eltthvert ríki, Sks. 350; eina hverja nótt, some night, 686 B. 4; eitthvert sinn, once, sometime, Sturl. i. 77, Nj. 79; einhverju sinni, id., 2; einhvern dag, some day, Fms. v. 177, Isl. ii. 212; eina hverja þessa tíð, about this time, N.G.L. i. 355; til einnar hverrar stefnu, to some meeting. Fb. i. 354; eins-hverja hluti, Stj. 156; með eins-hverjum sveini, 442; at ekki sé minna vert, at hlýða prests-messu nývígðs hinni fyrstu, heldr en biskupsmessu einhverri, Bs. i. 131. β. used as subst.; einn hverr várr búandanna, Fms. i. 34; einn hvern manna hans, Eg. 258; einhverr i hverjum dal, Ld. 258, Nj. 192. y. einhver-stadar (eins-hver-stadar, Fms. vii. 84), adv. somewbere, Grett. 130, Fms. iv. 57, Sd. 181. einn-saman, adj. 'one together' (vide einsamall), i. e. quite alone; maðrinn lifir ekki af einu-saman brauði, Matth. iv. 4; með einni-saman sinni sýn, með einni-saman sinni þefan, Stj. 93; ef útlegðir fara einarsaman, if it be solely a matter of outlay (fine), Grag. i. 103; ef pat færi eitt-saman, ii. 10: of a woman, vera eigi ein-saman, to be not alone, to be with a child, Fms. iii. 109. III. with other words; einir . . . ymissir, 'one and sundry,' various, mixed, Stj. 88, 204; eina hluti ok ýmissa, Fb. i. 191. B. hverr ok einn, 'each and one,' every one, 677. 1. H. E. i. 393, Rb. 492; fyrir hvern mun ok einn, Fas. i. 396. 8. einn ser, apart, for oneself, alone; ok sér-hverr, one and all. Múspells-synir hafa einir sér fylking, Edda 41; einn sér, sole, Fms. ii. 308; sér einir, Sturl. ii. 53: metaph. singular, peculiar, ein var hón sér í lýðsku, Fs. 30. e. sér-hverr, adj. every one, q. v.: eins-konar, adv. of one kind, Skalda 165; mod. indef. of a certain kind, a kind of: einskostar, adv. particularly, 1sl. ii. 322, Mork. 81. I. né einn, not one, none; in old writers usually so, but now and then contracted neimin (q. v.), and in mod. usage always so; né eina seko, Grág. i. 136; né eitt uhreint, Stj. 409; né einu sinni, not once, Fms. xi. 13; né eins, not a single thing, 112; né eina herserd, vii. 28. n. fáir einir, only a few, in mod. usage in one word, nom. fáeinir, dat. fáeinum, gen. fáeinna: ein-stakr, single, q.v.: al-einn, alone, q.v.: ein-mana, q.v. (cp. Gr. μόνος): einum-megin, adv. on one side, Nj. 248 (vide vegr). ein-nefna, d, to appoint specially, Grág. i. 11.

einn-ig (einn-eg, einn-og, einn-ug), in mod. pronunciation and in MSS. of the 15th century einninn or einneginn (qs. einn veginn), adv. [from einn and vegr, qs. einn veg; cp. hvernig, bow; pannig, thus; hinnig, otherwise :- in the same way, likewise, also; the subst. notion is still seen in the phrase, & einneg, in the same manner, 686 B. 12, Hom. (St.) 64; ek vil sjá hvernog þú markar þinn hlut, at eigi markim vit einnog báðir, Hkr. iii. 59; eigi þótti öllum einnug, Isl. ii. 352; Torfa Svartsson einnig (likewise), Sturl. i. 103; einneginn Ölver, O. likewise, Fas. iii. 470; fylgir honum ok einninn sá kappi, Fas. i. 419; létu þeir

Digitized by GOOGLE

```
Ein-riði. 2. m., pr. name, also Eind-riði, mod. Indriði, but freg in good MSS. spelt ein-, Mork., O. H., Orkn.; it properly means the great B. nickname of Thor the god of thunder from his driving in the clouds, Edda (Gl.); cp. reio, thunder. ein-rum, n. a privy; i einrumi, privately.
 ein-redi, n. self-will, obstinacy, Fms. ii. 254, Ld. 4, 188, Mork. 83.
 ein-rænligr, adj. singular, strange, odd, Fms. vi. 217. / 1/2 ein-rann, adj. of singular temper, self-willed, Eg. 573/Fms. ii. 154, iii. 202. Bs. i. 144, in the last passage probably a false reading, = einvænn.
ein-samall, adj., einsömul, einsamalt, pl. einsamlir, etc., alone, rarely, in old writers, who use einn saman in two words, and it only occurs in later MSS., Fas. i. Q1, iii. 460 (paper MSS.) ein-seta, u, f. bermitage, Hom. 26, Mart. 125.
                                                      compos: einsetu-kona, u, f. a female anchorite, Bs. i. 478, Ld. 332, Hkr. i. 316.
setu-lif, n. and einsetu-lifnsor, m. the life of an anchorite, Bs. i. 204, einsetu-maor, m. an anchorite, Fms. i. 145.
setu-munkr, m. a bermit, Greg. 70, 655 iii. 4.
 ein-setia, setti ; e. sér, to resolve firmly.
 ein-skapan, f. the right to fix one's own terms, Orkn. 214, Fms. xi. 24.
 ein-skepts, u, f. stuff woven with a single weft, a kind of flannel, ein-skilt, n. adj. taken aside for a private purpose, (Fr.)
 ein-akipa, adj. with a single ship, Fms. ii. 5, vii. 214, ix. 499.
 ein-skirr, adj. quite clear; e. veor, Njaro. 374.
 oin-skjaldar, gen. as adv. under one shield, acting together, Fms. ix. 240.
 ein-skora, ad; e. hug sinn, to make one's mind up, Bær. 11.
 ein-skerlier, 2di. pure: e. rodd, a pure voice. Thom, 151.
 ein-akerr, adj. pure; e. nao, pure grace.
 ein-skopuor, m. a sole judge or umpire, Lex. Poët. eins-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), alone, by oneself, Sks. 2: singly, Fms. i.
130, Stj. 184: especial, Magn. 512: gramm. singular, Skálda 185, 101. ein-stake, adj. single, isolated (with the notion of few, now and then, bere and there); e. víg, Fms. xi. 99; e. slög ok skeinur, Háv. 50; e. kossar, Fb. i. 304; e. visur, extemporised ditties (hence staka, a ditty), Fbr. 69.
 ein-stakr, adj. = cinstaka.
                                  B. mod. famous, notorious, chiefly in a bad sense; e. armingi, svíðingr, þjófr, galdramaðr, etc.
 ein-stapi, a, m. a kind of fern, pteris aquilina, Str. 45.
 ein-stigi, a, m. a single path, so narrow that only one can pass, Eg.
576, 577, 583, Fzr. 267, Rd. 246, 247, Fms. ii. 110, viii. 49 ein-strengia, d, to resolve firmly, Fms. iii. 40: reflex. to grow bold, ix. 50.
 ein-steedingr, m. an orphaned (bereft) person. einsteedings-skapr,
m. a state of bereavement.
 ein-steor, adj. left alone, bereaved, widowed, Hom. 5. ein-sýnn, adj. = eineygr, one-eyed, Fas. i. 41, Fms. ii. 138, x. 301.
at einsynu, clearly, evidently, Hom. 5. ein-sett, n. adj. evident, what clearly ought to be done; e-t er c., i. e.
that and nothing else is to be done; ok er ber e. at bjona eigi lengr fjanda, Fms. ii. 39, 124, vi. 154, 242, vii. 19, 25, 27, Boll. 342, Orkn. 408. ein-tal, n. private conversation, Nj. 103, Fms. i. 205, iv. 145, 308, vi.
11, vii. 103, Mork. 176. ein-talat, part., verda e-t um e-t, to speak of nothing but that, Isl. ii. 245.
 ein-teiti, adj. quite merry, in bigb spirits, Eg. 526, Fms. iv. 167.
 ein-tómi, adj. at one's ease, undisturbed, Orkn. 266.
 ein-tómis, adv. alone.
 ein-tomr, adj. sole, alone, sbeer.
 ein-trjanungr, m. made of one piece of wood, Karl. 96, v. l. ein-vala, adj. ind. chosen, excellent (Lat. egregius); e. kappi, a great champion, Stj. 512; e. ker, a chosen vessel, of a saint, Orkn. 226, Bs. ii.
148; e. lid, chosen, picked troops, Fær. 79, Stj. 480; e. madr, a choice man, Blas. 37; e. riddari, a fine borseman, Stj. 450. ein-vald, n. monarchy, sovereignty, Stj. 499; koma einvaldi á landit, to make the country (i. e. the Icel. Commonwealth) submit to the monarch, Fms. ix. 435; tiundi vetr einvalds hans, the tenth year of his reign, x. 161.
compos: einvalds-höfðingi, a, m. a monarch, Ann. 492.
                                                              einvaldskonungr, m. an absolute king, Fms. i. 4, Eg. 6, 118, 263.
rîki, n. an empire, Stj. 576, Fms. i. 19.
 ein-valdi, a, m. and ein-valdr, s, m. a monarch, Fms. i. 2, iv. 126, Eg. 6, Fb. i. 40.
 ein-valinn = einvala, Bs. ii. 70, 183.
 ein-veldi, n. = einvald.
 ein-verougr, adj. = einvirouligr, (Fr.)
 ein-vili, a, m. self-will, Fms. x. 418. ein-virðing, f. one's own choice, Bs. ii. 46, H. E. i. 523.
 ein-virðis, adv. in particular, Mar. 49, 139.
 ein-virouliga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), especially, Lv. 37, H. E. i. 518.
 ein-virki, also ein-yrki, a, m. [verk], a single worker, one who works ] ein-nættr, adj. one night old, Sturl. i. 174, Hm. 85.
```

ein-reikull, adj. straying alone, Bs. i. 243.

60, Eg. 424, Fms. ii. 266, v. 44, Orkn. 34: masc., Mork. 84.

ein-rendr, part, baving a single stripe (of cloth), Ni. ob, v. l.

ein-rédit, sup., hafa e., to bave resolved, made up one's mind, Greg.

ein-ráor, adj. self-willed, Ld. 314, Fms. xi. 246, Fas. ii. 113, Bjarn. 70.

single-banded, a poor busbandman that has no servants; the einyrki is reckoned partly as bondi, and not cottager; he could serve as a neighbour (būi) in case of his property amounting to two cows' value per head of his household (wife and children), Grág. i. 145, defined in ii. 42, 43: the Norse sense of the word, Gbl. 438, cp. Jb. 184: in N. G. L. i. 199 distinction is made between bændr, einhleypingar, and einyrkjar.

ein-vist, f. in the phrase, vera einvistum, to live alone, 625. 88, Bs.

ein-vigi, n. [A. S. ânvig], a single combat; distinction is made between the hólmganga (q. v.) and einvigi, the rules of einvigi being plain, cp. the curious passage in Korm. 84: Edda 18, Nj. 33. Fms. vii. 229. COMPD: einvigis-maör, m. one who fights in single combat, Fms. x. 88. ein-voldugr, adj. absolute, Fs. 17.

ein-venn, adi. [ván]: medic., liggja e., to lie in a bopeless state, to be sinking fast, Bs. i. 353; hón hafði aldri orðit einvænni, ber life bad never been in greater danger, id.; fylgði bæði svefnleysi ok matleysi, ok þótti hann þá einvænn vera, and they thought he was in a bopeless state, 144, (Ed. einrænn, which no doubt is a misspelling in the MS.)

ein-vörðum, adv. specially, D. N., Sks. 787.

ein-pykkr, adj. (ein-pykkni, f.), stubborn, self-willed, Fb. i. 543. ein-æri, n. [ár], a term of one year, D. N.

ein-serr, adj. lasting one year, D. N.

ein-eeti, n. pl.; eta einætum, to eat 'off-band,' Glúm. 340, cp. Edm. Head's Transl. 24.

ein-örð, mod. einurð (Norse form einarð), f. [einarðr], frankness, boldness, fairness; vit ok e., Fms. ix. 333; ef þú vilt heldr trúa lygi... en e., ratber to believe a lie tban simple truth, Eg. 63; e. ok vinatta, frankness and friendsbip, Ísl. ii. 234; þá munu þér ætla, at sá muni eigi e. til hafa við at ganga, tbat be bas not the fairness (boldness) to confess, Ld. 172, Fms. ii. 32; nú vilju vér sýna e. várrar frásagnar, we will shew the fairness of our story, viii. 48.

B. faith, fidelity: at engi skjoplisk í einurðinni (fidelity) við annan, O. H. 61; að landfölkit mundi snúit frá einörðinni við konung, 177; fáir munu nú vera í Noregi þeir er einörð sinni haldi nú við mik, 194.

y. in mod. usage, einurð means frankness, as opp. to shyness; thus einarðar-lauss, adj. = shy: einarðar-leysi, n. shyness: einarðar-lítill, adj. rather shy, whereas in old writers these words mean faithless or irresolute; verða einarðar fátt, to fail in courage, Nj. 208; einarðar-lauss, wavering, Al. 71, Sks. 357, N. G. L. ii. 420: einarðar-maðr, m. a stedfast, trusty man, Sturl. ii. 64: einarðar-skortr, m. = einurðarleysi, Nj. 208, v.l.

EIR, m. [Lat. aes; Goth. aiz; A. S. ar; Engl. ore; O. H. G. er; Hel. erin; Germ. erz]:-brass, Stj. 340, 656. 7, Greg. 80, Hkr. i. 265, COMPDS denoting brazen, of brass: eir-altari, m. a Fms. x. 284. brazen altar, Stj. eir-baugr, m. a brazen ring, Fb. i. 370. hestr, m. a brazen borse, Merl. eir-hjálmr, n. a brazen belmet, Stj. eir-ketill, m. a brass kettle, Grág. i. 504, Eg. 396. 461. eirkross, m. a brazen cross, Vm. 49. eir-kyrtill, m. a brazen cloak (used for torment), Blas. 46, 655. 14. eir-lampi, a, m. a brass lamp, Jm. 2. eir-ormr, m. a brazen serpent, Stj. 333. Numb. xxi. 9. eir-penningr, m. a penny of brass, Post. 645. 78. a brazen shield, Stj. 461. 1 Sam. xvii. 6. eir-stólpi, a, m. a pillar of brass, Stj. 564. eir-teinn, m. a wire of brass, Fms. ii. 129. uxi, a, m. an ox of brass (image), Stj. 2 Kings. xvi. 17.

EIR, f. peace, elemency; this word occurs several times in old poetry (Kormak), but not in prose, cp. Lex. Poët., and in compos: eirar-samr (eir-samr), adj. mild; eirar-lauss and eirar-vanr, adj. merciless, martial.

II. one of the heathen goddesses, Edda.

eira, 8, [A.S. arian = parcere], to spare, with dat.; hafa allir hlutir unnit eida at e. Baldri (not to burt Balder), Edda 37; hann eirdi öngu hvárki í orðum né verkum, be spared naught either in word or work, Nj. 184, Fms. vii. 312; at þeir skyldu e. konum ok kirkjum, spare women and churches, Sturl. iii. 40; e. undan e-u, to yield; höfum vér lengi undan eirt fjandskap yðrum, Ld. 204; kvað hann þá ekki mundu tjá at letja sik, kvaðsk lengi hafa undan eirt, Fms. vii. 244; ok meir tjå at letja sik, kvaosk iengi naja undan ein, amo vid þykjumk vér undan eira, Sturl. i. 72; eptir þetta ríða þeir Ögmundr í brott ok eirir hann undan bá enn fyrst, iii. 103. B. impers., e-m eirir e-t illa, it displeases one, i. e. to feel ill at rest with a thing; illa eirði mér fall þitt, Flóv. 29; Eiríki konungi eirði þetta stórilla, Fms. i. 19; honum eirir illa ef hann hefir eigi sitt mål, Isl. ii. 236; Bergi eirði hit versta, Fs. 53; eira vel (ironically), to be well pleased, meira efni hefir hann til eldingar en honum megi vel eira inni at vera, 45: to do for one, vitum hve oss eiri öl þat er Bárðr of signdi, let us see bow Bard's draught will agree with us, Eg. ch. 44 (in a verse); Egill fann, at honum mundi ekki svå buit eira, E. felt that this would not do, Eg. 552. In mod. usage, eira means to feel at rest (= una), of a man or beast who is restless or runs from one place to another, -it is said 'hann eirir hvergi,' be can nowbere rest; the other senses are obsolete.

eira, u, f. rest, = eiro.
eiro, f. clemency, mercy, Fms. ix. 36, v.l., Hkr. iii. 257, Gullp. 48, O. H. L. 40.
2. mod. rest, quietness; pl. ú-eiroir, uproar, tumult.
eirinn, adj. forbearing, Bs. i. 766; 6-eirinn, overbearing, mod. restless.

Digitized by GOGIC

```
sitt-tan
Muffy Lead
```

Filar Kin

Valel

eir-ligr, adj. brazen, Stj. 377. EISA, u, f. [Swed. ässia; Norse eisa and esja], glowing embers, Edda (Gl.), esp. in the allit. phrase, eisa ok eimyrja. oisa, ad, in the phrase, e. eldum, to shower down embers, Fas. ii. 469:

poët., ganga eisandi, to go dashing through the waves, of a ship, Hkv. 1.2; lata skeidr e., id., Sighvat; vargr hafs eisar, the sea-wolf (the ship) goes dashing, Edda (in a verse); eisandi uor, foaming waves, Bs. i. 483 (in a verse), vide Lex. Poët.

eiskald, n., poët. the beart, Edda (Gl.), Lex. Poët.: in pl., eisköld, Fm. 27. eiskra, 20, to roar or foam, rage; gekk hon útar ok innar eptir gólfinu eiskrandi, Isl. ii. 338; görvir at eiskra, enraged, Hom. 11; hann eiskraði þá mjök ok hélt við berserksgang, Fas. i. 524; eiskraði sút í berserkjunum, 425: in mod. usage, það ískrar í honum, it roars witbin bim, of suppressed rage.

EISTA, n., gen. pl. eistna, a testicle, Sturl. ii. 182, Fas. ii. 342, Bs. i. 615, Fb. ii. 161; sels-eista, a nickname, Fbr.

EITILL, m. a nodule in stone, iron, or the like; hence the saying, hardr sem e., 'bard as a flint,' poët. name of a giant, Edda (Gl.) eitla, ad, in the phrase, eitla augum, 'to set the face as a flint,' Sks. 230 B. EITR, n., gen. eitrs, [A.S. ator; O.H.G. eitar; Dan. ædder; Old Engl. atter-cop; the spider is in A. S. ator-coppa, whence Dan, adder-kop = cup of poison]:-poison, Bær. 15, Fms. vi. 166, viii. 303, Edda 155 (pref.), Al. 49, Fas. i. 522 (in a verse).

eitra, ad, to poison, Ann. 1360: part. eitraor, empoisoned.

eitr-á, f. a poisonous stream, Edda 42.

eitr-blandaör (eitr-blandinn), part. poisoned, Rb. 358.

eitr-blastr, m. inflammation from poison, Bs. ii. 95, 157.

eitr-bólginn, part. swoln with poison, Greg. 79.

eitr-dalr, m. dales with rivers of poison, Vsp. 42.

eitr-drep, n. deadly poison, mortification, Stj. 97.

eitr-dropi, a, m. a drop of poison, Vsp. 44.

eitr-drykkr, m. a poisoned draught, Fas. iii. 392. eitr-eggjaör, part. baving a poisoned edge, Fms. iii. 78.

eitr-far, adj. glittering (of poison), venomous (of snakes), Edda (Gl.)

eitr-fluga, f. a venomous insect, Bs. ii. 183.

eitr-fullr, adj. full of poison, Magn. 470.

eitr-heror, part. tempered in poison (of steel), Bret.

eitr-kaldr, adj. deadly cold, Lex. Poët.

eitr-kveisa, f. venomous sore, a nickname, Fms.

eitr-kvikendi, n. a poisonous animal, Sks. 88, Stj. 253, Al. 1, 623. 26.

eitr-kvikja, u, f. poisonous yeast, Edda 3.

eitr-ligr, adj. poisonous, Stj. 91.

eitr-maokr, m. a venomous maggot, Stj. 97.

eitr-naora, a, u, f. a poisonous adder.

eitr-ormr, m. a viper, Stj. 37, 96, Rb. 344, Fms. vi. 164.

eitr-tandraör, adj. = eitrfár, Al. 168.

EK, pers. pron., mod. eg, proned. ég or jeg; eg occurs as early as in MSS. of the 15th century, Arna-Magn. 556 A; jak, Fms. x. 287, cp. the mod. Swed. form and the mod. Icel. jeg; old poets make it rhyme with ek, as, Halldorr ok ek | höfum engi prek, Korm. 154 (in a verse), cp. Ld. 108: [Ulf. ik, but ek on the Golden horn and on the stone in Tune; A. S. ic; Engl. I; Germ. icb; old Swed. jak, mod. jag; Dan. jeg; cp. Lat. ego, Gr. έγω]:—I, Nj. 10, 30, 132, etc.

2. in poetry and Lat. ego, Gr. έγω]:—I, Nj. 10, 30, 132, etc.

2. in poetry and old prose a pronominal 'k or 'g is suffixed to the verb; em'k buinn annan í at neína, Grág. i. 103; ek em'k, 623. 56, Blas. 41, Mork. 89, 94, 99, 104, Vþm. 8, Ls. 14, Ad. 1, Post. 645. 33; jók'k, 'I eked' (added), 156; ok rít'k á þessa lund, Skálda (Thorodd) 166; sjá'k (sim), Mork. 183: g before k becomes by assimilation k, e. g. hyk'k = hygg'k, Skm. 5: the pronominal k is inserted between the suffixed negative and the verb, ek skal'k-a, hef'k-a, mon'k-a, sá'k-a, má'k-a, veit'k-a, or skal'k-a ek, hef'k-a ek, etc.: even a double k after a diphthong, siá'kk (sim), Mork. 89, 134, but chiefly in poetry with the suffixed negative, e.g. ek sé'kk-a: this form is obsolete, whereas the suffixed g (or k) in bisyllables or after a vowel is more freq.; svá at ek fæ'k eigi leyzt mik, Edda 20; er ek vilda'g helzt, Fms. xi. 146; eigi munda'k trúa, Edda 32; ef ek lifi ok mega'k ráða, 34; þá hafða'k bundit með gresjarni, id.; sem önga frægð muna'k af hljóta, 20; sýnda'k bæði þeim ok Sæmundi, Íb. (pref.); þá er ek var heima heyrða'k sagt, Edda 81; er ek æva kenni'g, Hm. 164; draums ætli'g þér, Hdl. 7; þorða'g, Ad. 1; ræka'g, mætta'g, Stor. 8; skýt ek ok ræ'k (ræ'g, v.l.), Fms. vi. 170 (in a verse); líkara at ek vitja'g hingat þessa heita, Eg. 319; næða'k (or næða'g), if I could reach, Eb. 70 (in a verse); at ek nemni þá menn alla ok beiði'g, Grág. ii. 317; vilja'k, I will, Ht. 1; þvíat ek ætla'g, O. H. 59; ok náða'k svá öllu ríki peirra, 74; pvíat ek trúi'k yðr bezt, 88; ek setta'k, Mork. 62; flytta'k, 94; geri'k, heyrda'k, 36; mæli'g, 39; ek vetti'g, 175; tefli'g, 186; setta'g, lagoa'g, id.; vilda'g, 193; vide Lex. Poët. and the word '-at' [p. 2]: sometimes a double pronoun occurs, g and k, matti'g-a'k, Og. 32; no reference from an old writer is on record seems to be a mere Tbjargi'g-a'k, Hm. 153; stöðvi'g-a'k, 151; hversu ek má'k, Fms. vi. 102; vide Lex. Poët. and Frump. 228 sqq.

B. DAT. AND ACC. are from a different root:—dat. mer, [Ulf. mis; Germ. mir; lost in Dan.], Nj. 10, etc. etc.; acc. mik, mod. mig, which form occurs even in MSS. at the beginning of the 14th century, e.g. Hauks-bók: mek occurs now and then in MSS., e. g. O. H. L., N. G. L., Sks. B, else it is rare and obsolete, Al. 42, O. H. 107, [Ulf. mik; A. S. mec; Engl. me; Germ. micb; Dan. mig.] As the word is so common, we shall only mention the use of mik which is special to the Scandinavian tongue, viz. its use as a verbal suffix. The ancients had a double form for the reflexive; for 1st pers. -mk, i. e. mik suffixed to the plur. of the verb; for the 3rd pers. -sk, i.e. sik suffixed to sing. and plur. alike; thus, ek (vér) þykkjumk, I (we) seem to myself (ourselves); but hann bykkisk, be seems to bimself; peir bykkjask, they seem to themselves: the -mk was later changed into -mz, or -mst of editions and mod. use; but this is a grammatical decay, as if both -mst and -st (bykjumst and bykist) arose from the same reflex, sik. 1. the subject may be another person or thing (plur. or sing.) and the personal pronoun mik suffixed as object to the verb, a kind of middle voice found in very old poems, and where it occurs freq. it is a test of antiquity; in prose it is quite obsolete: jotna vegir stodum'k yfir ok undir, the ways of giants (i.e. precipices) stood above and beneath me, Hm. 106; er lögðum'k arm yfir, the lass who laid ber arms round me, 108; mögr hétum'k fögru, my son promised me fair, Egil; hilmir budum'k löd (acc.), the king gave me leave, i. e. bade me, sing, Höfuðl. 2; úlfs bagi gáfum'k íþrótt, the wolf's foe (Odin) gave me the art (poetry), Stor. 23; Ragnarr gafum'k reidar mana, R. gave me the shield, Bragi; bat erum'k synt, it is shewn to me, id.; stöndum'k ilmr fyrir yndi, the lass blights my joy, Kormak; hugr tjúðum'k, courage belped me, Egil; snertum'k harmr við hjarta, grief touches me to the beart, Landn.; stöndum'k til hjarta hjörr, the sword pierces me to the beart, Fm. 1; feldr brennum'k, my cloak catches fire, Gm. 1; draum dreymdum'k, I dreamed a dream; grimt várum'k hlið, the gap (breach) was terrible to me, Stor. 6; half van fellum'k, balf my bope failed me, Grufeldar-drápa; heiðnir rekkar hnekðum'k, the heathen men turned me out, Sighvat; disir hvöttum'k at, the 'disir' booted us, Hom. 29; gumi gordum'k at vígi, the man made us fight, id.; lyst várum'k, it list me, Am. 74: very common is erum'k, 'tis to me (us); erum'k ván, I (we) bave to expect; mjök erum'k tregt tungu at hræra, 'tis bard for me to move the tongue, i. e. the tongue cleaves to my mouth, Stor. 1, 17, Ad. 16. sometimes oneself is the subject, freq. in prose and poetry, either in deponent verbs or as reflex. or recipr.; at vit skillin'k sáttir, O. H. 119; at vér komim'k, that we shall come, 85; finnum'k her þá, 108; ef ver finnum'k, 111; ek skildum'k við Ólaf konung, 126; ef ek komum'k í braut, 140; sigrom'k, if I gain the victory, 206; æðrom'k, 214; ef ek öndum'k, if I die, Eg. 127; ck berum'k, I bear myself, Grag. ii. 57, Mork. passim; ek þykkjum'k, þóttum'k, ráðum'k, látum'k, setjum'k, bjóðum'k, skildum'k, kveljum'k, etc., = ek þykisk, þóttisk, ræðsk, lætsk, setsk, býðsk, skildisk, kvelsk, etc.: even at the present day the forms eg þykjumst, þóttumst are often used in writing; in other words the suffix -mst (-mk) is almost β . the obsolete interjection or mik = I am; vel or mik, well is me (= bless me!'), O. H. L. 71; z er mik, ab me! 64; kendr er mik, I am known, 66: with a reflex. notion, hvat er mik at bvi, what is that to me? Skv. 1. 28; er mik þat undir frétt þeirri, that is my reason for asking, Grag. i. 19:—this 'er mik' is clearly the remains of the old erum'k.

C. DUAL AND PLUR. also from a different root: 1. dual vit. mod. vio, a Norse form mit also occurs, Al. 170, 171, [cp. mi, Ivar Aasen]:-we two; gen. and dat. from a different root, okkar and okkr, [cp. Goth. iggqis; A.S. inc and incer; O. H. G. incb and incbar: Ivar Aasen dikke and dykk]:—our. 2. plur.: 6. nom. vér Ivar Aasen dikke and dykk]:-our. a. nom. vér and vær, the last form now obsolete, [Goth. veis; A.S. and Engl. we; -we. β. gen. vár, mod. vor, Eg. 524, Fms. γ. dat. and acc. oes, [Goth. uns (acc.), unsis Germ. wir; Dan. vi]:-we. viii. 213, 398, etc. (dat.); A.S. us; Germ. uns; Swed. oss; Dan. os]:-us: it need only be noticed that in mod. familiar usage the dual-við, okkr, okkar-has taken the place of the plural, vér, oss; but that in written books the forms ver, oss are still in freq. use, except in light or familiar style; old writers, on the other hand, made a clear distinction both in speech and EKJA, u, f. [aka], a carting, carrying in a cart; tóku þá sumir til ekju, en sumir hlóðu heyinu, Eb. 260; cp. Swed. aska, vide áss [p. 46]. COMPD: ekju-vegr, m. a cart-road, D. N.

EKKI, a, m. [akin to öngr, Lat. angustus], as a medic. term, a convulsive sobbing, caused by the repression of tears, Fél. ix. 208, Hkv. 2. 43. Skv. 1. 20, Gisl. 64 (in a verse), Rafns S. (in a verse), Am. 44, Hkr. iii. (in a verse of Sighvat), Stor. 2, where we ought to read, byi at ekki stendr höfugligr i (not 'or') hyggju stad, because a beavy sobbing oppresses, stifles my breast; angrs ok ekka, Stj. 428, (freq.)

ekki, adv. not, vide eingi. okkill, m. a widower, akin to the preceding; freq. in mod. use; that accident. Ekkilsiurt, Acbillaea L., Bb. 3. 75. ekkja, u, f. [Swed. enka and Dan. enke shew that the root consonants are nk: this word is peculiar to the Scandin, tongue; even Ulf. renders xhoa by vidovo, which is the Lat. vidua]:—a widow, Grag. i. 108, 306, Blas. 21, Bs. ii. 161, Fas. i. 223. COMPDs: ekkju-bunsor, m. widow's weeds. Stj. 197. ekkiu-domr, m. widowbood, Stj. 107. nafn, n. a widow's name, widowbood, Fas. i. 223, Am. 98 (MS. ekkiunam clearly a false reading = namn). ekkju-skapr, m. widowbood, ekkiu-sonr, m. a widow's son, 656 A. ii. In Edda Fms. x. 433. 108 there is a distinction between hæll, a widow whose bushand is slain, and ekkja, the widow of one who died a natural death; hall is merely a poet, word and obsolete, but ekkia is in full use. In old poetry ekkia is used = a lass, girl, cp. Lapp. akka = Lat. mulier; cp. also Lex. Poët. ekla, u. f. dearth, want, Sks. 218, v. l.: Vell-ekla, Dearth of Gold, the name of a poem, Hkr.; suml-e., scarcity of drink, Eg. (in a verse): the word is rare in old writers, but still in use in Icel., e. g. hey-e., scarcity of bay; matar-e., dearth of meat; vinnu-folks-e., scarcity of servants. ekla, adv. scarcely; beir Helgi tóku e. til matar um kveldit, konungr spurði hvárt þeir væri sjúkir, Fms. v. 317 (απ. λεγ.) EKRA, u, f. [from akr, p. 10], an acre, corn-field, Landn. 125, Al. 52, N. G. L. i. 217, Stj. 400. Judges ix. 32. ektar- and ekta-, [Germ. ecbt], adj. genuine, mod. (vide ei). wedded; taka til ekta, to marry: chiefly used in COMPDS, ekta-maor, m. a busband; ekta-skapr, m. matrimony, etc.; ektar-kons, u, f. a wedded wife, occurs in D. N. i. 501, (mod.) £L, n., spolt iel, Edda (Kb.) 72, Fms. xi. 136; él, Hom. 109; gen. dat. pl. éla, élum; mod. élja, éljum, inserting j; [cp. Dan. iling]:—a snow-shower; the proverb, öll él linna um sídir, every 'él' comes to an end; él eitt mun vera, ok skyldi langt til annars slíks, Nj. 200; þá görði él mikit ok illviðri, Fms. i. 175; élum ok hreggi, x. 135, xi. 136, 137; drífu-él, Orkn. 414; meðan él dró á, 396; í éli einnar stundar, 656 B. 12; él augna (poét.), tears, Edda 72. B. metaph. a sbock, uproar, Hom. 109: a bot figbt, ok verðr et harðasta él, Fms. xi. 32. élja-drög, n. pl. (qs. elia-drog, f.?), streaks of snow-showers seen far off, etc. elda, d, mod. also ao, [eldr], to light, kindle a fire, with dat. of the fuel; e. viði, Grág. ii. 211, 338; ef þeir e. görðum, grindum eðr andvirki, Ghl. 422: absol., at vér eldim úsparliga í Hvammi, Sturl. i. 67: to beat, warm, þá skulu þeir e. hús at manntali, Jb. 225; e. ofn, Hkr. iii. 115: metaph., elda hug e-s, to kindle one's mind, Hom. 107; ek skal yora hud e. knáliga med klungrum (make you smart), Stj. 395; e. vita, to kindle a beacon, Orkn. 264; en bo eldi her lengi af med beim brædrum, the spark of resentment was long felt among the brothers, Lv. 34; e. járn, to forge iron, Rkv.: the phrase, elda grátt silfr, to be bad friends, is a metaphor taken from smelting drossy silver that cannot stand the fire; þeir Stórólfr eldu löngum grátt silfr, en stundum vóru með þeim blíðskapir, Fb. i. 522. 2. to cook, or gener. to expose to II. reflex. to be kindled; må vera at eldisk her langr a light fire. opokki af, it may be that long ill-feeling will be kindled therefrom, Lv. 50. eldask, d, [aldr], to grow old; eldisk árgalinn nú, Fms. vi. 251; er bá tók mjök at eldask, viii. 108; hann tekr nú at eldask (MS. öldask) mjök, xi. 51; ek finn at ek eldumk, en þverr kraptrinn, Orkn. 464; beir hrymask eigi né eldask, Rb. 346. β. part. eldr, old, worn by age; Gísli kvaðsk eldr vera mjök frá úfriði, Sturl. iii. 10: equivocal is the phrase, eldir at ráðum ok at þrotum komnir (in the dream of king Sverrir), Fms. viii. 108, cp. Orkn. ch. 34. y. impers. in the phrase, nott (acc.) eldir, the night grows old (cp. elding); há er nótt eldir, Fas. i. 147. eld-bakaor, part. baked on embers, Stj. 595. I Kings xix. 6. eld-beri, a, m. a brasier, lantern, H.E. ii. 107, Pm. 26, 73, Jm. 12, Vm. 164; eldbera-ker, id., Pm. 106. eld-borg, f. a volcanic crag, vide borg. eld-bruni, a, m. fire, conflagration, D. N. eld-bollr, m. a fire-ball, Dipl. v. 18. eld-firm, adj. inflammable, easily catching fire, Sks. 427. eld-fjall, n. a fire-bill, volcano. eld-færi, n. pl. an apparatus for striking fire, tinder-box, Jb. 145. eld-gamall, adj. [from Dan. ældgammel = Icel. elli-gamall], stone old, (mod. word.)

Digitized by GOOGLE

eld-gleringar, f. pl. 'fire-glare,' seen in darkness. eld-gos, n. 'fire-gusb,' a volcanic eruption. eld-grof and eld-grof, f. a 'fire-groove,' Isl. ii. 405, 417, Eb. 272, v. l. eld-gýgr, m. a crater eld-gögn, n. pl. cooking-vessels, D. N. eld-heitr, adj. bot as fire. eld-hraun, n. a 'fire-field,' lava-field. eld-hús (elda-hús, Eg. 397, 603, Sturl. iii. 219, Ghl. 344), n. the fire-bouse, i. e. the ball or parlour, one of the chief rooms in ancient dwellings, where the fire was kept up, used synonymously with eldaskáli, but opp. to stofa, the ladies' room; stofa, eldhús, búr, Grág. i. 459; stofu-hurð, búr-hurð, eldahús-hurð, Gbl. 344, H.E. i. 495; eldhús eðr stofur, Grág. i. 468; ganga milli stofu ok eldhúss, Fbr. 164; cp. Gísl. I floor, N. G. L. i. 256.

II. poët. name of a sea-king, Edda (Gl.): botan., 4 14, 15, 97, (Mant.) 324, Eb. ch. 52, vide new Ed. 98, v.l. 1, 3, 4; gékk porgeror pegar inn í eldahús, Eg. 603; eldhúss dyrr, Lv. 89, Ld. 54, Sturl. iii. 218, 210; eldhúss-skot, n. id., cp. Eg. 307; eldhús-hurð, f. the burdle of an e., N. G. L. i. 38, Ghl. l. c.; eldhús-fifi, n. a 'fireside fool,' an idiot who sits all day by the fire, Fas. ii. 114; in Sturl. iii. 210 eldahús and skáli seem to be used differently. B. it may also be used of any room having a hearth and fire, eldahús ... var bat brott frá öðrum húsum, Eg. 203; and even of a kitchen, 238, cp. Nj. 75. In mod. usage eldhús only means a kitchen, eldi (elbi, Grag.), n. [212], feeding, maintenance, Grag. i. 117, 143: the person maintained, 236: in mod. usage esp. of keeping another's lambs, sheep, in winter, hence lambs-eldi, 'lambs-keep,' an obligation on every householder to feed a lamb for the priest in winter; elda-skildagi, m. the time when the lambs are sent back (middle of May); the phrase, skila ur eldum, to send back (lambs): eldis-hostr, m. a borse kept in stall, 2. a thing born; mislit eldi, Stj. 179. Gen. opp. to útigangs-hestr. xxxi. 8; e. þat er fram fer af kviði konunnar, 656 B. 7; skaltú þiggja pat af Guði at hann gefi þér gott eldi, Mar. 3, 6, 19; komask frá e. sinu, to be delivered of a child, Fas. iii. 276; cp. upp-eldi, breeding.

eldi-brandr, m. fire-wood, fuel, Grag. ii. 261, Fms. ii. 82, viii. 358, v.l., Fbr. 97: a fire-brand, Stj. 402, Fs. 45, pior. 332, Grett. 117: metaph., Post. 645. 84.

eldi-ligr, adj. elderly, Fas. i. 120, Mag. 5.

elding, f. firing, fuel, Scot. eilding, Grag. ii. 338, 358, Fs. 45; eldingarsteinar, (bituminous?) stones to make a fire, Karl. 18: smelting metals, gull er stenzk e., gold which resists the heat of the crucible, Grag. i. 501; cp. elda grátt silfr. II. lightning, also in plur., Fms. x. 30, xi. 136, Fas. i. 372, Sks. 229, Stj. 300, Al. 41: eldinga-flug, n. a flash of lightning, Rb. 102: eldinga-manaor, m. the lightning month, id. elding, f. [aldr], the 'eld' or old age of the night, the last or third part of the night; allt frå eldingu ok til mids aptans, Hrafn. 7; vakti borhildr upp sína menn begar í elding, Fms. ii. 231; í elding nætr, vii. 214; kómu i elding nætr á Jadar, O. H. 117. The ancients divided the night into three equal parts, of which the last was called either ótta (q. v.) or elding, (ba er bridjungr lifir nætr, i. e. where the third part of the night is left); the mod. usage is, það er farið að elda aptr, it begins to rekindle; and aptr-elding, rekindling, as though 'daybreak' were from fire 'eldr;' but in old writers 'aptr' is never joined to these words (Anal. 193 is taken from a paper MS., cp. Fb. iii. 405, 1. 6); the phrase elding 'nætr' also shews that the word refers not to daylight, but to night, and means the last part of the night, opp. to midnight, mid-nætti. eldi-skíð, m. a log of fire-wood, Fs. 6, bior. 262; loganda e., a firebrand, Stj. 413.

eldi-stokkr, m. a lóg of fire-wood, Glúm. 338.

eldi-torf, n. turf for firing, Isl. ii. 112, Dipl. v. 23, Bs. ii. 135.

eldi-vior, m. fire-wood, Fms. ii. 82, vii. 97, K. p. K. 90: but, as Icel. is barren of trees, eldivior means fuel in general, peat, etc., Orkn. 16; torf-skurð svá sem hann þarf til eldiviðar, digging peat for fuel, Vm. COMPDS: eldivioar-fatt, n. adj. wanting fuel, Fbr. 97. eldiviðareldivioar-leysi, n. want of fire-wood lauss, adj. sbort of fuel. (fuel), Fms. vi. 146, Stj. 150. eldivioar-stika, u, f. a stick of firewood, Stj. 268.

eld-ker, n. = eldberi, Am. 5.

eld-knöttr, m. a fire-ball.

eld-kveykja, u, f. kindling fire, Nj. 194: metaph., 625. 74, Mork. 7. eld-ligr (elligr, Al. 65), adv. fiery, of fire, Greg. 19, Niorst. 6, Fas. iii. 414, Sks. 208, Rb. 442, Stj. 98.

eld-neyti, n. fuel, Gpl. 369.

old-næmr, adj. easily catching fire, Sks. 427, Fms. xi. 34, Mork. 7. ELDR, m., gen. ellds, also spelt ellz, [a word that may be taken as a test of Scandin, races; Dan. ild; Swed. äld; for the Teut. nations use the word feuer, fire, which is wanting in Scandin., though used by old Icel. poets, who probably borrowed it from A.S.; on the other hand, Ulf. constantly renders $\pi \hat{\nu} \rho$ by fon, Icel. funi, q.v.; in A.S. poetry and in Hel. äled = incendiary occurs a few times, and älan = Lat. urere (Grein and Schmeller); Rask suggests a Finn. origin]:—fire. In cold climates fire and life go together; hence the proverb, eldr er beztr með ýta sonum, ok sólar sýn, fire is best among the sons of men, and the sight of the sun, Hm. 67: in reference to the healing power of fire, eldr tekr við sóttum, fire consumes (cures) fevers, 138; sá er eldrinn heitastr er á sjálfum brennt, Grett. 136 new Ed.: allit., e. né járn, fire nor iron, Edda 82; hvárki egg né eld, 162; eldr (sparks of fire) hraut or sverðum peirra, Flov. 29; e. þótti af hrjóta er vápnin kómu saman, Sturl. iii. 187, vide Fms. i. 292, vi. 153, vii. 338 (MS. ell), viii. 74, 202, x. 29, Nj. 74, Eluc. 19, 625. 178. B. the eruption of a volcano, Bs. i. 803, 804; jard-eldr, 'earth-fire,' subterranean fire. compos: elds-bruni, a, m. burning of fire, Stj. elds-daunn, m. smell of fire, Finnb. 242. gangr, m. the raging of fire, Fms. i. 128, x. 29, Sturl. iii. 132, Bs. i. 327, elds-glor, n. glare of fire, Fas. iii. 471. Orkn. 368, 458, Sks. 141. elds-gneisti, 2, m. a spark of fire, Greg. 74. elds-golf, n. a bearthelds-gögn, n. pl. materials for firing, Vm.

Digitized by GOOQI

elds-hiti, a, m. fiery beat, Fms. x. 379. =eldkveikja, Greg. 77. elds-litr, n. orbs of fire, Nj. 194, Rb. 336. elds-liki, n. a likeness, shape of fire, Clem. 30, Rb. 388. elds-ljós, n. fire-light, Fms. ix. 49. elds-logi, a, m. a flame, Stj. 414. eldsmatr, n. food of fire, Th. 19. elds-neyti, n. pl. fuel, Band. 10, Fms. ix. 339, Fas. i. 84. elds-stólpi, a. m. a pillar of fire, Stj. 326. eldsuppkváma, u, f. the eruption of a volcano, Landn. 269, Bs. i. 148, 498. elds-vélar, f. pl. fire devices, Flov. 43. elds-vimr, m. 'fire-whims,' flickering fire, of the aurora borealis, fire-gleam, Sks. 203. virki, n. a tinder-box, Fms. vii. 225, Orkn. 208, Band. 30. esp. in plur. a fire on the bearth; the proverbs, vio eld skal öl drekka, by the fireside shalt thou drink ale. Hm. 82; allir eldar brenna út um sidir, all fires (beacons) burn out at last (of the death of an aged man): allit., eldr á arni (vide arinn). In the old halls in Scandinavia an oblong hearth was built in the middle of the hall, and the fires kindled were called langeldar, long fires, with an opening in the thatch called ljóri for a chimney; the benches in the hall were ranged on both sides of the langeldar, vide Edda 82 (the hall of king Adils); hence the phrase, bera öl um eld, to band the ale round the fire, viz. to one's cup fellow on the opposite bench, Fagrsk. ch. 219, Grett. ch. 10, new Ed. p. 23; eldaskálar vóru stórir á bæjum, sátu menn við langelda á öptnum, þá vóru bord sett fyrir menn fyrir (innan MS. Holm.), svátu menn upp (út MS. Holm.) frá eldunum, Kristni S. ch. 2; þá vóru görvir eldar stórir eptir endilöngum skálanum, sem í þann tíma var títt, at drekka öl við eld. Bs. i. 42; cp. Orkn., eldar vóru á gólfinu, on the floor, ch. 18, where the fire seems to have been made in a pit (vide eldgrof) in the middle of the floor, cp. also kipti honum upp at pallinum, vide bakeldr: again, at the evening and morning meals people gathered round the 'meal-fires' (máleldar), hence the phrases, sitia vio elda, to sit at the fire; voru gorfir måleldar hvert kveld í elda-skála sem siðr var til, sátu menn löngum við eldana áðr menn gengu til matar, Eb. ch. 52: máleldr, the 'meal-fire' or the small fire, is distinguished from langeldr, the great fire, 276; bat var í þann tíma er þeir Snorri sátu við málelda (yfir málborði, v. l.), ch. 26; höfðu menn orðit vátir ok vóru görvir máleldar (langeldar, v. l.), Nj. ch. 8; ok er skálabúinn var mettr sat hann við eld, Fs. 6; snýr at dyrum, er menn satu við langelda (in the evening), Korm. ch. 15; um kveldit er menn sátu við elda. Orkn. 448: the phrase, sitja milli elda, to sit between two fires, to be in a strait, vide Gm. COMPDS: elda-hús, n., vide eldhús. olda-skáli, a, m. = eldhús, Eb. l, c., Grett. l. c., cp. Eb. 170; einn laugaraptan sat Helga í elda-skála, Ísl. ii. 274; hafði hann lagzt niðr í eldaskála eptir dagverð, Gísl. 97; þrándr hafði látið göra elda mikla í eldaskála, Fær. 183; ekki lagðisk Ormr í elda-skála, Fb. i. 521, Eg. 238. olda-skára, u, f. (olda-skári, a, m., Lex. Run.), a 'fire-rake,' poker, III. a beacon. Nj. 236. elds-goro, f. making fire, Fs. 45. IV. in old poetry the fire of wounds or of bale-fire, Gs. 18. Odin = weapons, the fire of the sea = gold; hauga-eldar, magical fire in old cairns; maur-ildi, a glow-worm; hrævar-eldt, a Will o' the wisp, ignis fatuus.

V. as a prefix to pr. names, Eld-grimr, Eld-járn, Eld-rio, etc.: in names of places it denotes volcanic ground, Eld-borg, eld-fjall, eld-gjá, etc.

old-rauor, adj. fiery-red.

eld-sókn, f. fetching fire, Grett. 89.

eld-stokkr, m. a burning beam, Nj. 202.

eld-stó, f., pl. stóar, a 'fire-stove,' bearth, Bárð. 2 new Ed., Nj. 236, Fb. iii. 446, Fas. ii. 115, Mork. 91; sitja við eldstó móður sinnar, Fs. 6. old-surr, adi. bot as fire, of vinegar or the like.

eld-sætr, adj. always sitting by the fireside, as a spoilt boy; Oddr var eldsætr í æsku ok seinlegr ok kallaðr kolbítr, Landn. 235 (Hb.); Grímr var mikill ok eldsætr, ok þótti vera nær afglapi, Gullb. 14, Krók. 33 (Ed. eldseti), Fas. ii. 112 (Ed. eldsætinn).

eld-tinna, u, f. a flint stone, Fas. i. 447.

ELFR, f., gen. elfar, acc. dat. elfi, a pr. name of the three rivers called Elbe, Lat. Albis, viz. Gaut-Elfr, the Elb of the Gauts (a Scandin, people) = the River Gotha of the present time; Sax-E., the Elb of the Saxons, the Elbe; Raum-E., the Elb of the Raums (a people in Norway), i. e. the present Glommen and Wormen, Bær. 3, Nj. 42, Fms. i. 6, ii. 128, iii. 40, iv. 121, ix. 350, 393, 401, x. 292: Elfar-bakki, the bank of one of these Elbes, Bær. 3, Fms. ix. 269, 274; Elfinar-bakki, Fms. i. 195, of the river Ochil in Scotland, is a false reading = Ekkjals-bakki, vide Orkn. 12. COMPDS: Elfar-grimar, m. pl. dwellers on the banks of the Gotha, Elfar-kvislir, f. pl. the arms of the Gotha, Fms. vii. 17, 19, 321. Fms. i. 7, iv. 9, ix. 274; used of the mouths of the Nile, Edda 148 (pref.) Elfar-sker, n. pl. the Skerries at the mouth of the Gotha, Fms., Fas.; cp. álfr, p. 42. 2. meton, used of any great river, (rare in Icel, but freq. in mod. Dan.)

Elfskr, adj. a dweller on one of the Elbe rivers, Landn., Fms. ii. 252. elgja, ð, to belch.

ELGR, m., gen. elgs or elgjar, [Lat. alces; O. H. G. elab; Engl. elk], an elk, Gpl. 449, Fms. viii. 31, Fas. i. 54; elgja-grof, f. an elk pit, a hunting term, D.N.; elgja-veior, f. bunting elks, Gpl. 448; elgjar-galgi, a, m., poët. 'elks-gallow,' the ice, as elks were hunted on the ice, Stor. 15; elds-kveykja, f. but some explain the phrase = tree, cp. Caes. Bell. Gall. vi. 27. deep pools of balf-melted ice; akin to olga, ylgr.

elg-skógr, m. a forest with elks, Gbl. 449.

eligr, adj. [Swed. elig], vile, Hom. 151; e. ambatt, a poor bandmaid, Stj. 484. I Sam. xxv. 24; afleitt cor elikt, vile and refuse, 456. I Sam. xv. q; illr ok e., Hb. 31: it is probably akin to el-, Germ. elend, vide aulandi, p. 34.

Eli-vágar, m. pl. the Ice-waves, a mythol, name, Edda.

ELJA, u, f. a concubine, as opp. to a wedded wife; this word is either akin to eljan in the sense of zeal, jealousy, or to the word eligt, as these women were often captives of war and handmaids; cp. the case of Melkorka, Ld., cp. also Gen. xxi. 10:-the word is defined in Edda 109,-bær konur eru eljur, er einn mann eigu, those women are called eljur, wbo are wives of one man; stattú upp or binginum frá elju minni, Nj. 153; en elja hennar görði henni jafnan skapraun, Stj. 428. I Sam. i. 6 ('and her adversary also provoked her sore,' of the two wives of Elkanah); systur konu binnar skaltú eigi taka til elju hennar, Stj. 320. Lev. xviii. 18: in poetry the earth is called the elja of Rinda, one of Odin's wives, Fms. vi. (in a verse): this word points to the remotest time; the sole passage where it occurs in an Icel. hist. work is Nj. (above), where it is wrongly used, the wedded wife being called the elia by the concubine; cp. arin-elja.

ELJAN, f. (in mod. usage elja, u, f.), [Ulf. aljan = (ηλοε; cp. A.S. ellian; Hel. ellan], endurance, energy; eljun ok styrk annarra manna, Fms. vii. 228; heilsu ok eljun, 277; aft ok eljun, Fas. i. (in a verse); atferd ok eljun, Ld. 318; ok fari bar e. eptir ok öll tilræði, Fs. 4. COMPDS: eljanar-lauss, adj. [ellennlæss, Ormul.], weak, feeble, Al. 100, eljunar-leysi, n. weakness, want of energy, Fms. iv. 163. Fbr. 157. eljunar-maor, m. an energetic man, Fms. iv. 163, viii. 447. mod. usage elju-lauss, adj., elju-leysi, n., with the notion of impatience; hann hefir enga elju å e-u, be is too restless to perform anything.

eljara-gletta, u, f. [cp. elja], pertness, sauciness, Skýr. 53 (pref.)

Elj-úðnir, m. the ball of Hela, Edda (Gl.)

61-kaldr, adj. ice-cold, epithet of a stream, Yt. 23.

ELLA, adv., in Norse laws freq. ellar, and so in Fms. vi. 214, vii. 17, 115, etc.; in mod. Icel. usage ellegar; elligar, O. H., Grag., Mork., passim, etc., which seems to be the original form, qs. ell-vegar, 'otherways,' cp. pann-ig, hinn-ig, einn-ig; ella, though it is the usual form in the MSS., would be an apocopated form, the r being dropt: [A.S. elles; Engl. else; Swed. eljest; cp. Lat. alius, Gr. allos]:-else, otherwise; er yor nú annat-hvárt til at leggja í brott þegar, ella búisk þér við sem skjótast, Nj. 44; en þann þeirra e. er réttari er, Grág. i. 78; en ella jamt skerða sem at skuldadómi, 84; ella liggr á þér víti, Fms. iv. 27; hann hét vináttu sinni ef þessu vildi játa en elligar afarkostum, Ó. H. 141; ella man ek láta drepa þik. Nj. 74; eða-ella, or-else, Fms. vi. 196 (in a verse); eda heit hvers manns nidingr ella, or else be called the 'nithing' of every man, Nj. 176; eda drepit hann ella, Fms. xi. 100; edr stökki hann af eignum sínum ellar, vii. 17.

ELLI, f. indecl. [Dan. ælde], 'eld,' old age; the saying, öllum hefir elli à kné komit, old age bas brought all on their knees, cp. the tale in Edda 33, 34, where the old giantess Elli wrestles with Thor, whence in poetry she is called 'the antagonist of Thor,' Eg. (in a verse); engi hefir sá orðit..., at eigi komi ellin öllum til falls, Edda 34; fyrir elli sakar, Eg. 107; eigi er þat síðr en elli..., Nj. 171. COMPDS: elli-belgr, m., in the mythol. phrase, kasta e., to east the 'slough of age,' to be young again, Mag. 3, (freq.) elli-bjúgr, adj. bowed down with age, Mag. elli-dagar, m. pl. old days, Stj. 190, Sks. 458. dauor, adj. dead (dying) from old age, Nj. 58, Fms. i. 117, Edda 18. elli-dómr, m. old age, Stj. 192. elli-gamall, adj. exceeding old, Stj. 190, Sks. 92, Al. 3. elli-glop, n. pl. dotage from old age, Fas. i. elli-hamr = ellibelgr (of serpents shedding their slough), Stj. 98. elli-hrumr, adj. tottering from old age, Stj. 432. pl. the boariness of age, Stj. 214. elli-karl, m. an old carle, Batl. elli-lyf, f. medicine to bar old age, elixir vitae, (mythol.), Haustl. Q, cp. Edda 63. elli-móor, adj. worn, weary from age, Ld. 12. elli-sjúkr, adj. sick from age, þiðr. 30. elli-stoð, f. Landn, 117. the stay of old age. elli-tio, f. time of old age, Hom. 13. elli-vafur, n. pl. wavering from age, decrepitude, Bret. 162 (of king Lear); in Eg. 756 (the verse), the old poet said, vals hefi'k vafur elli = elli-vafur; the comparison with the passage in Bret. is decisive, and the explanation in Lex. Poët. s. v. váfur is undoubtedly wrong. elli-vam, n. the being a elli-pokki, a, m. looking old; hratt hon af ser dotard. Bret. 162. ellibokka, Stj. 627. 2 Kings ix. 30 (of the old queen Jezcbel).

elliði, a. m. a kind of ship with a high poop, Edda (Gl.), Fas. ii. 5; hence Elliða-ey, f. the name of an island, from its resemblance to these old-sashioned ships, Landn., Eb.; Elliði, a, m. a sarm, Korm.; Elliða-Grimr, m., pr. name of a man, Landn., Nj.

ellifti, mod. ellefti, ord. numb. the eleventh, Landn. 199, Fms. ix.

ellifu, mod. ellefu, ord. numb., the Goth. ainlif; A. S. ellefne; Eugl. eleven; Germ. eilf; Swed. elfva; Dan. elleve :- 'lif' is an obsolete word.

Digitized by GOOGIC

denoting ten, so that 'eleven, twelve' are formed just like thirteen, four-TFms. ix. 305: Icel. now say, eltask vid e-n, e.g. of catching a horse, teen, etc.

61-ligr, adj. [él], stormy, Vápn. 51.

ellri (eldri), compar. elder, and ellstr (eldstr), superl. eldest; vide elma, u, f. [almr], a branch, twig, Mar. 183.

-eln, adj. in compds, tvi-e., pri-e., etc., two, three . . . ells long.

elna, 20, [cp. Goth. aljanon; A. S. elnjan = aemulari], to wax, grow, a medic. term, in the phrases, soft elnar & hendr e-m, the fever grows upon one's bands, i. e. becomes worse; en sott elnadi á hendr Gizuri biskupi, Bs. i. 69; þá elnaði sótt á hendr Kveldúlfi, en er dró at því at hann var banvænn, etc., Eg. 126; e-m elnar sótt, id.; ok elnar honum sóttin, Band. 14; en Lopthænu elnaði sóttin (of a woman in labour), Fas. ii. 162; sótt elnaði við Lopthænu, 504.

elptr, f. = alpt, a swan, Str. 52, 62, etc. elrir, m., and elri, n. the alder-tree, Lat. alnus, A.S. alor, aler, Germ.

erle, Edda (Gl.), O. H. 250, Fbr. 10.

elska, að, to love, love dearly, with acc.; elskaðr sem sá er framast elskaði sannan Guð, Fs. 80; konungr elskaði Hákon meir en nokkurn annan mann, Fms. i. 17; Birkibeinar elskuðu því meir sveininn, sem ..., ix. 244; halt vel trú þína ok elska Guð, ii. 255; Hrafnkell elskaði ekki annat god meir enn Frey, Hrafn. 4; kona þess hins ríka manns elskaði Joseph, Sks. 455; hann sá at Guð elskaði Davíd (acc.), 708; ok er svá auðr svá sem hann er elskaðr til, 442. 2. reflex., elskask at e-m, to grow fond of; porkell var lengi með jarlinum ok elskaðisk at honum, Frns. iv. 217 ('elskaði' at jarli, act., O. H. 93, is scarcely right). β. recipr. to love one another; höfðu þau Jón elskask frá barnæsku, Bs. i. 282; þessir ungu menn elskask sín í millum mjök hjartanliga, 655 xxxii. 20. Icel. have a playful rhyme referring to lovers, running thus—elskar hann (hún) mig. | af öllu hjarta, | ofrheitt || harla litið | og ekki neitt, which calls to mind the scene in Göthe's Faust, where Gretchen plucks off the petals of the flower with the words, liebt mich-nicht-liebt mich-nicht.

ELSKA, u, f. (zlska, Barl. 6, O. H. L.), [this word is peculiar to the Scandin, races; it is probably derived from él and an inflexive sk, and properly means storm, whence metaph. passion; the Swedes and Danes have not the single word, but älskog and elskov, qs. elsk-hogr; Icel. elskhugi or elskogi]:-love; með Guðs elsku ok náungs, Hom. 48; hafa elsku á e-m, to love one, Bs. i. 36; mikla elsku hafði jarl á konungs syni, Fms. ix. 242; vit höfum lengi saman haldit okkarri elsku, vii. 140; svá mikla ást sem þú hefir á hinum digra manni ok elsku við hann lagt, iv. 182. COMPDS: elsku-band, n. a bond of love, Mar. brago, n. a deed of love, Mar. 220. elsku-fullr, adj. full of love, Barl. elsku-geő, n. a loving kindness, Pass. 30. 11. elsku-gras, n. love's flower, vide brönugrös s. v. brana, p. 76. loveless, and elaku-leysi, n. want of love, Lex. Poët. elsku-lauss, adj. elsku-merki, elsku-váttr, m. a n. a love token. elsku-semi, f. lovingness. love token. Elska never occurs as a verb or noun in old heathen poets; Arnor is the first poet on record who uses it; old writers prefer using ast; with Christianity, and esp. since the Reformation, it gained ground; dyamar of the N. T. is usually rendered by elska (to love) and dyamy by elska (love) or kærleiki (charity); so, mann-elska, humanity, kindness. elskandi, part. a lover, Greg. 30.

elskan-liga, adv. lovingly, 655 xxxii. 17.

elskan-ligr, adj. beloved, N. T.

elskari, a, m. a lover, Barl. 88, 187, Karl. 545, Mar. 197, (rare.)

elsk-hugi or elsk-ogi, a, m. [Swed. älskog; Dan. elskov], love, Edda 21; vináttu ok elskhuga, Stj. 8; ástúð ok e., 130, Bev. 8 (Fr.); elskugi (ælskugi), Barl. 6: a sweetbeart, minn sæti herra ok ágætr elskugi (my love), Fb. i. 514.

elskr, adj., in the phrase, e. at e-m, fondly attached to one, fond of one, of the attachment of children, or to children; hann var elskr at Agli, be loved the boy Egil, Eg. 187; Egill (the father) unni honum mikit, var Böðvarr (the child) ok e. at honum, 599: also used of animals, ok svá elskir hvárr at öðrum, at hvárr rann eptir öðrum, two steeds that never left one another, Nj. 81; hann (the ox) er mjök elskr at mér, Fms. iii. 132; hence mann-elskr, of pet lambs or tamed animals (but never used of cats, dogs, or animals that are constant companions of man); heima-e., bome-loving, one who never leaves the bearth, Fs. 4.

elsku-ligs, adv. lovingly, beartily, Fms. i. 140.

elsku-ligr, adj. loving; e. alvara, warm affection, Fms. iii. 63, K. A. 22: dear, beloved, hitt e. andlit, 655 xxxii. 7; e. sonr, Th. 7; var heini mjök e., Fms. i. 81; αγαπητόν of the N. T. is usually rendered by elskuligr. él-skur, f. a snow-sbower, Sks. 227.

ELTA, t, to chase, with acc.; beir eltu einn hjört, Flov. 27; elta dýr à spori, Barl. 199; e. saudi, to run after sheep, in order to fetch them back, Nj. 27, Korm. 28 (in a verse); eltu þjálfa, Hbl. 39; þeir höfðu elt af skipum Tryggva konung, they bad driven king T. from bis ships, Fms. i. 37; Styrkárr elti þá suðr í Karmsund, ix. 54; hljópu á land upp ok eltu þá, iv. 304, Gullþ. 21; e. öxn með vendi, to drive cattle with a goad, Karl. 471.

sheep, when grazing wild in an open field. II. to knead, work; 2. a tanner's term; elta leir, to mix lime, Stj. 247, cp. Exod. i. 14. e. skinn, to tan a bide, i. e. rub, scratch it, so as to make it soft; ek skal yora huo elta med klungrum, Stj. 395. Judges viii. 7; elt skinn, tanned bide; oelt skinn, rough bide, (freq.) 3. = velta, to overthrow, in the Runic phrase, at rita sa varpi es ailti stain pansi epa hepan dragi, Rafn 188, 194.

elting, f., chiefly in pl. pursuing, chasing, Fms. vii. 128, 294, Fs. II. botan., proncd. elking, [Swed. ältgras], spearwort, equisetum vulgare, arvense, Björn.

eltur, f. pl. pursuing, Fms. vii. 407, viii. 406, Róm. 276.

Embla (in Ub. spelt Emla), u, f. a mythol, word, which only occurs in Vsp. 17; and hence in Edda (where it is said that the gods found two lifeless trees, the askr (ash) and the embla; of the ash they made man, of the embla woman), it is a question what kind of tree the embla was; some suggest a metathesis, qs. emla from almr, elm, but the compound emblu-askr, in one of Egil's poems, seems to shew that the embla was in some way related to the ash.

embætta, tt, mod. að, to attend, wait upon, with dat.; e. gestum, to wait upon guests; kann vera at Gud ydvarr sé á málstefnu, eðr eigi gestum at e., Stj. 593. I Kings xviii. 27; eigi samneytti hon, heldr e. hon, she ate not with the people, but waited on them, 655 xxxi A. 3; e. fé, to serve the cattle, to milk, Isl. ii. 334, 482. 2. eccl. to say mass, to celebrate the eucharist, D. N. β. in mod. usage since the Reformation, to officiate as a clergyman.

embætti (embuð, Anecd. 38), n. [Germ. amt; Dan. embede; as to the root vide ambatt, p. 19], service, office; bjóða e-m af e., to depose one from office, Bs. i. 550; Guds e., Hom. 121, 160, Stj. 613. 2 Kings iv. 13; mikit e., bard work, a great task, Hom. 153; veita e-m e., to serve one, Fms. viii. 332, 406; bindask i e-s e., to enter one's service, Sks. 357; fremja e., to perform a service, Bs. i. 426; Gudligt e., boly service, Fms. ii. 198; heilagt skirnar e., boly baptism, i. 148: officiating at mass, D. Ń. 2. in mod. use, a. divine service, answering to 'mass' in the Roman church; fyrir, eptir e., before, after service. secular sense, [Germ. amt, Dan. embede], a public office. COMPDS: embættis-færr, adj. able to perform one's duties, Ann. 1332. em. embættisbættis-görð, f. officiating (of a clergyman), Bs. i. 811. lauss, adv. bolding no office (of a priest), Sturl. ii. 118. embættismaor, m. a minister (priest), Hom. 119, Sks. 162, Fms. v. 146: in mod. use, embættismaðr, -lauss, etc. (=Germ. beamter, Dan. embedsman) mean an officer, chiefly in a secular sense.

emenders, ao, to amend (Lat. word), Fb. i. 517.

EMJA, 20, to bowl, Fms. vi. 150, x. 383, Fas. i. 213, 656 B. 10, Fagrsk. 8.

emjan, f. bowling, Fs. 44.
EN, disjunctive conj.; in MSS. spelt either en or enn, [a particle peculiar to the Scandin.; in Danish men; in Swedish both men, an, and endast; Norse enn and also men, Ivar Aasen]:-but; en ef hann hefir, þá..., but if be bas, then..., Grág. i. 261; en ef menn gefa þeim mat, id.; en heima mun ek sitja, but I will stay at bome, Fms. vi. 100; en fjöldi féll, but a great many fell, Fas. ii. 514; eyrum hlýðir en augum skoðar, Hm. 7; en ekki eigu annarra manna orð, Grág. i. 84, 99, 171; en Skíðblaðnir skipa, en jóa Sleipnir, en hunda garmr, Gm. 44; en ór sveita sjár, en ór beinum björg, Vpm. 21; and passim. It is even used with a slight conjunctive sense; þykki mér sem því muni úhægt saman at koma, kappi þínu ok dirfð en skaplyndi konungs, metbinks it will be bard to make the two things go together, thy vehemence and rashness 'and' (on the other hand) the temper of the king, Eg. 521; ek kann ráðum Gunnhildar 'en' kappsemd Egils, I know the devices of Gunnbilda ' and' (on the other band) Egil's eagerness, 257: used in narratives to begin a sentence, merely denoting the progress of the tale, much the same as 'and,' cp. the use of auk III, p. 33; thus in Yt. some verses begin with 'en,'—En dagskjarr..., 2, 3, 14, 23; En Gunnlaugr grimman tamði, Hlt.; En Hróalds á höfuðbaðmi, Ad. 19, without any disjunctive notion.

EN, temporal adv., better spelt enn, [prob. akin to endr and eor, q. v.] :- yet, still; þú hefir enn eigi (not yet) heyrða kenning Drottins, Mar. 656 A. ii. 14; vildi hann enn svá, Fms. i. 11; at hann mundi enn svá göra, vi. 100; þá ríkir hann enn fyrir mik, Al. 29; til betri tíma en (tban) enn (still) er kominn, Sks. 596 B. 2. before a comparative; enn sidarr, still later, N.G. L. i. 94; enn betr, still better; enn fyrr, still later; enn verri, still worse; enn zori, still wortbier; enn hærri, still bigber; enn firr, still further off; enn nær, still nearer; enn heldr, still more, Sks. 304: separated from the comparative, enn voru fleiri dætr Haralds, the daughters of H. were still more, i.e. H. had more daughters yet, Fms. i. 5. β. curious is the use of en (usually spelt in or inn) in old poems, viz. before a comparative, where in prose the 'en' can be left out without impairing the sense; thus, helt-a in lengr rumi, be kept not bis place longer, i.e. ran away, Am. 58; rad en lengr dvelja, β. reflex. to pursue one eagerly; eltask eptir e-m, to delay no longer, 61; menn in sælli, a bappier man, Skv. 3. 18; né in bardier man, Hbl. 14; nema bu in snotrari ser, unless thou art wiser, Vpm. 7; drekka in meira mjöo, to drink more mead; bita en breidara, to bite broader, i. e. eat with better appetite, pkv. 25; pars bætti skáld in verri, where poets were kept in less honour, Jomsv. S. (in a verse); né in heldr, neitber; né hests in heldr, neitber for bis borse, Hm. 60; né in heldr hugdir sem var Högni, neither are ye minded as H., Gh. 3, Sdm. 36, Hkv. 1. 12, Skv. 1. 21: in prose, eigi in heldr ætla ek, þat ..., neither do I think, that ..., Nj. 219. 3. to boot, further, moreover; bolöxar ok enn ambod nokkur, pole-axes and some tools to boot, Dipl. v. 18; ok þat enn, at, and that still more, that, Róm. 302; Ingibjörg hét enn dottir Haralds, Ingeburg was further Harold's daughter, Fms. i. 5. EN or enn, conj., written an in very old MSS., e. g. Hom., Greg., Eluc., but in the great bulk of MSS. en is the standing form, both ancient and modern; [formed by anacope, by dropping the initial b; Ulf. banub; A. S. banne; Engl. tban; Hel. tban; O. H. G. danna; Germ. dann, but here almost replaced by 'als;' Swed. ann; Dan. end; Norse enn, Ivar Aasen; the anacope is entirely Scandin.]:-tban, Lat. quam; heldr fadir an modir, more father than mother, Eluc. 5; bjartari an sól, brighter than the sun, 45, 52; meira an adrir, more than others, Greg. 51; vidara an adr, wider than before, id.; betr an begja, better than being silent, 96; ædri an betta, Eluc. 51; annat an annat, one thing rather than another, 50; ljosara an nú, 44; heldr an vér, 17; annat an daudan, 15; meira an Gud, 13; fyr an, 6; annat an bú ert, 59; framarr an beir hafa, id.; framar an vesa, 60; heldr an færi eðr fleiri, Hom. 45; heldr an, 63; betra er þagat an mælt, 96; helgari an annarra manna, 126; framar an sin, 135, etc.; cp. Frump. 158-163: 'en' however II. the form 'en' (or 'enn') occurs passim, occurs in Hom. 126. Grág. i. 173, ii. 13, Al. 29, Sks. 596 B, N. G. L. i. 32, etc. etc.

Digitized by GOOGIC

The particle en differs in sense when placed before or after the comparative; if before, it means still; if after, than; thus, fyrr enn, adr enn, before, Lat. priusquam, but enn fyrr, still earlier, sooner; enn heldr, still more, but heldr enn, rather than; enn betr, still better, but betr enn, better than; enn sidar, still later, but sidar enn, later than, etc. Again, there is a difference of sense, when neither en is a comparative; en ef, but if; ef enn, if still, etc.

EN is now and then in MSS., esp. Norse, used = er, ef, q. v., but this is a mere peculiarity or false spelling: 1. wben; mér vórum í hjá en (= er) beir, when they, D. N. i. 271; til bess en = til bess er, 81. as a relat. particle, which; sú hin ríka frú en (which), Str.; mina dóttur en allra meyja er fegtst, my daughter who is the fairest of all women, bior. 249; af því en hann hefir fingit, Al. 145; sa ótti en, 107; en sungin er, which is sung, Hom, 41; but hvart en er, whether, N.G. L. i. 349. 3. = ef, if, [cp. Old Engl. an]; sælar væri sálurnar, en þær vissi, if they knew, Al. 114; en peir vildi = ef peir vildi, 118; en ver færim = ef vér færim, 120, esp. freq. in D. N. (vide Fr.) Very rate in Icel. writings or good MSS., e. g. en ek hefi með Guðs miskunn (i. e. er ek hefi), as I bave, because I bave, Bs. i. 59, Hung. ch. 1; vide er.

ENDA, a copul. conj. with a slight notion of cause or even disjunction: [the use of this copulative is commonly regarded as a test word to distinguish the Scandin. and the Saxon-Germ.; the A.S. ende, Engl. and, Hel. end, Germ. und being represented by Scandin. auk, ok, or og: whereas the disjunctive particle is in Scandin. en, enn, or even enda, answering to the Engl., A.S., and Germ. aber, but; the Gothic is neutral, unless jab, by which Ulf. renders kai, be = auk, ok:—this difference, however, is more apparent than real; for the Icel. 'enda' is probably identical with the Germ, and Saxon und, and: in most passages it has a distinct copulative sense, but with something more than this]:-I. with subj., a standing phrase in the law, connecting and, etc. the latter clause of a conditional premiss, if so and so, and if ..., and again if ...; or it may be rendered, and in case that, and supposing that, or the like. The following references will make it plainer; ef goðinn er um sóttr, enda hafi hann öðrum manni í hönd selt..., þú skal hann ok sekja ..., if a suit lies against the priest, 'and' be has named a proxy, then the suit lies also against him (viz. the proxy), Grug. i. 95; ef skip hverfr ok sé cigi til spurt á þrim vetrum, enda sé spurt ef beim londum öllum et vår tunga et å, på..., if a sbip disappears without being beard of for three years, 'and' inquiry has been made from all the countries where 'our tongue' is spoken, then..., 218; ef godinn gerr eigi nemna féránsdóm, enda sé hann at lögum beiddr ..., þá varðar goðanum fjörbaugsgard, if the priest name not the court of feran, 'and' bas been lawfully requested thereto, then be is liable to the lesser outlawry, 94; nú henr maðr sveinbarn fram fært í æsku, enda verði sá maðr veginn sidan, ba..., if a man bas brought a boy up in his youth, 'and in case that' be (the boy) be slain, then ..., 281; cf madr færir meybarn fram ..., enda beti svá at..., ok (then) skal sá maðr..., id.; ef menn selja ómaga sinn af landi héðan, ok eigi við verði, enda verði þeir ómagar færðir út hingat síðan, þá ..., 274; hvervetna þess er vegnar sakir standa úbættar á milli manna, enda vili menn sættask á þau mál..., þá..., ii. 20; ef sá maðr var veginn er á (wbo bas) vist með konu, enda sé þar þingheyandi nokkurr..., pa..., 74; pat voru lög, ef þrælar væri drepnir fyrir manni, hafa þetta nema þór, Fas. i. 104; segir honum eigi ella endask mundu.

