A secret, bidden lore, mystery; frá jötna rúnum ok allra goða segðú it sannasta, Vþm. 42, 43; kenna rúnar, to teach wisdom, Rm. 33; dæma um rúnar ok regin-dóma, Hm. 112; minnask á fornar rúnar, Vsp. 59: saws, segja sannar runir, to tell true saws, Fas. ii. 302 (in a verse): a 'rowning' speech, viss runir, a woman's whispering, Bm.; heita e-n at rúnum, to consult one, Gh. 12, Skv. 3. 14, 43; hníga at rúnum, Gkv. II. a Rune or written character; the earliest Runes were not writing in proper sense, but fanciful signs possessing a magical power; such Runes have, through vulgar superstition, been handed down even to the present time, for a specimen of them see Isl. bjóðs. i. 435, 436, and Arna-Magn. Nos. 687. 4to, and 434. 12mo (Isl. Þjóðs. pref. ix); the classical passages for these spell-Runes are, Hm. 133 sqq., Sdm. 5 sqq., Skm. 29, 36, Eg. ch. 44, 61, 75, Yngl. S. ch. 7, Grett. ch. 85, N. G. L. iii. 286, 300, Vsp. 59; cp. also the phrase, rista tréniô, Grág., Fs. 56. The phrase in the old Danish Ballads, kaste runer, to throw Runes, i. e. chips (see hlaut, hlautvior), may be compared to the Lat. sortes, Mommsen's Hist. of Rome, vol. i. p. 187, foot-note (Engl. 2. Runes as writing; Ed.), or the Sibylline leaves in the Aeneid. the word was first applied to the original Northern alphabet, which at an early time was derived from the common Phœnician, probably through Greek or Roman coins in the first centuries of our era. From these Runes were subsequently formed two alphabets, the old Scandinavian (whence again the Anglo-Saxon), as found on the Golden horn and the stone in Tune, and the later Scandinavian, in which the inscriptions in kefli (a round piece of wood) as messages (cp. the Gr. σκυτάλη), as is freq. recorded in the Sagas, e. g. Gisl. 45, 67, Fms. ix. 390, 490, Grett. 154 new Ed., Fb. i. 251 (of the deaf and dumb Oddny). It is doubtful whether poems were ever written in this way, for almost the only authority for such a statement is Eg. 605, where we read that the Sonatorrek was taken down on a Runic stick, the other instances being mostly from romances or fabulous Sagas, Grett. 144, Orvar Odds S. (fine). This writing on a kefli is mentioned in the Latin line, Barbara fraxineis' sculpatur runa 'tabellis,' Capella (5th century). In later times (from the 13th century) Runic writing was practised as a sort of curiosity; thus calendars used to be written on sticks, of which there is a specimen in the Bodl. Library in Oxford; they were also used for inscriptions on tombstones, spoons, chairs, and the like: there even exists in the Arna-Magn. Library a Runic MS. of an old Danish law, and there is a Runic letter in Sturl. (of the year 1241); Runes carved on an oar occur in Fs. 177: a hidden treasure in a chest is labelled with Runes, Fms. vi. 271, Sd. 146, cp. also the interesting record in Bs. i. 435 (sex manna bein voru þar hjá honum ok vax ok rúnar þær er sögðu atburð lífláts þeirra). 3. the word run is also, though rarely, applied to the Latin alphabet; ef hann er á þingi þá skal hann rista nafn hans ef hann kann runar, N. G. L. i. 171; or generally, ræki ek eigi hvárt bú rítr o bitt eðr o, o eða a, g eða e, y eða u, en ek svara svá, eigi er þat rúnanna kostr þó at þú lesir vel eða ráðir vel at líkindum, þar sem rúnar vísa óskírt, heldr er þat þinn kostr, Thorodd 162; þessi er upphaf allra hátta svá sem málrúnar eru fyrir öðrum rúnum, Edda (Ht.) 121. Edda ii. 602; Kolbeins rúna, K.'s wife, Gd. 18; eyra-rúna, q. v. rún-henda, u, f., or rún-hending, f., is the name of the metre with end-rbymes, consecutive, not alternate; the word is now obsolete, and in ancient writers it only occurs in two places, the Ht. R. verse 24 and in Edda (Ht.), where the Cod. Reg. gives run-, Edda i. 696 sqq. (the foot-notes); but one is tempted to suspect that this is corrupt, and that the true form was rim-, as im and un can hardly be distinguished in MSS.; rim- would yield good sense, whereas run- is meaningless. The metre itself is evidently of foreign origin, borrowed from the A.S.:

the first poem in this metre was the Höfuðl. of Egil, who had lived in England; it was little used throughout the 10th and the following centuries, and the few poems and fragments composed in it can be traced to Egil's poem as their prototype. The single verse in Eg. ch. 27 is prob. a later composition.

RÖST, f., gen. rastar, pl. rastir, qs. vröst (?); [cp. reistr, rist; Engl. race; Norm. Fr. raz]:—a current, stream in the sea, such as the Pentland Firth; nú ef maðr hittir hval á röstum út, Gþl. 464; sigldu þeir í röst norðr fyrir Straumneskinum, . . . féll um sjórinn ok því næst vellti . . . hann lagðisk út í röstina, Fms. ix. 320; ok er þeir sigldu yfir Petlands-fjörð, var uppi röst mikil í firðinum, x. 145; vestr í röstum, Orkn. 154 (in a verse): in local names, Lútra-röst in western Iceland. rasta-fullr, adj. full of currents, Sks. 223.

BÖST, f., gen. rastar, pl. rastir, [different from the preceding; Ulf. rasta = μίλιον, Matth. v. 41; A. S. and Engl. rest; O. H. G. rasta; Germ. rast]:-prop. rest, but used only in the metaph. sense of a mile, i. e. the distance between two 'resting-places,' or 'baiting' points: distances on land were counted by rasts, on sea by vika, which seem to have been of equal length, thus in the old Swed. law, rost at landi, vika at vatni, Schlyter. The ancient Scandinavian rast seems to have answered to the modern geographical mile, which agrees with the Latin mille only in name, its actual distance being that of the rast, not the Roman mille passus. The distances were not measured, but roughly guessed, and varied (like the Swiss stunde) according to the nature of the ground traversed, the rasts through mountains or deserts being shorter than those in an inhabited district; hence such phrases as, hat eru langar tvær rastir, it is two long rasts, Fms. ix. 393; þeir sóttu svá hart þessa eyðimörk, at skammar vóru bá þrettán rastir eptir, thirteen short rasts, viii. 33: the following instances may serve, in Norway the distance from Oslo (the present Christiania) to Eidsvold was counted at eight 'rasts,' ix. 376; beir fórusk svá nær at eigi var lengra til en röst, 371; þeir ríða síðan átta rastir...þrjár vikur eptir vötnum, 376; riðu þeir nökkura hálfa röst, 523; þat var eina nótt, at eigi var lengra milli náttstaða þeirra en röst, viii. 63; rastar langr, ix. 394, 402; rastar-djúpr, Hým.: of the old forests, Eida-skógr er tólí rasta langr, Fms. ix. 354; skógr tólf rasta langr, ... þann skóg er áttján rasta var yfir, viii. 30, 31; sá skógr er Tvíviðr heitir, hann er tólf rasta breiðr. Rb. 332; fjögurra rasta ok tuttugu, Gullb. 52:-six 'rasts' done afoot in one night is recorded as something extraordinary, Olafi kom njósnin um kveldit, en þeir gengu um nóttina sex rastir ok þótti mönnum þat furðumikit farit, peir komu á Ryðjökul um óttu-söng, Fms. vii. 317; átta röstum, þkv.: an immense distance is given at 'a hundred rasts,' hundrað rasta å hverjan veg, Vþm. (Edda 41); hundrað rasta heyrði smell, Skíða R. 150: heim-röst, a bomestead; út-röst, the outskirt.

rösuör, m. one who emits; reyks r., poët. 'reek-vomiter,' i. c. fire, Yt. rösull, adj. [rasa], apt to stumble, of a horse.

rotuor, m. [rata], a bitter, finder, Bragi.

S (ess), the eighteenth letter, was, in the old Runes, on the stone in Tune, and the Golden horn, figured \gtrsim ; in the common Runes \mathfrak{h} ; in the latest Runic inscriptions (12th and following centuries) I or \mathfrak{l} . Its name was 'Sól' (Sun)—Sól er landa ljómi, in the Runic poem; the \mathfrak{h} was specially, from its form, called the 'kné-sól' (knee-sun).

B. PRONUNCIATION, CHANGES.—Sounded sharper than in English. The s is in mod. Icel. pronunciation the only sibilant sound; in olden times s and z were distinguished in sound as well as in writing, but afterwards the z sound was lost or assimilated with s. II. CHANGES: s into r, as vera, var, er, for vesa, vas, es; as also the particle es for er; Gothic s into Scandinavian r in the words, Goth. bausjan, auso, = led. heyra, eyra; the inflex. Goth. -s into Scandin. -r: an assimilation has taken place in such words as laus-s, is-s, for laus-r, is-r: again, in vellums, ss for s in such forms as buss (gen.) from bu, nyss = nys, hirdiss = hirdis (gen.): in mod, usage this inflexive s is dropped in sound and spelling, laus, is: the ancients, on the other hand, said vissa, vissi, mod. visra, visri (sapientum, sapienti):-sn is sounded stn, stnúa, stnöri, stnöggr, stnjór...,= snúa, snöri, snöggr, snjór..., and thus spelt in some Norse vellums (e.g. the Barl.): here come in also such forms as laustn, njostn, ristna, = lausn, njosn, risna, reistn and reisn, O. H. L. (pref.) ix; so also the forms Astríðr, Ást-leifr, Ást-lákr (see the remarks s. v. ást), = Ás-ríðr : . . As-lakr, 2. skl = sl, thus sklakka = slakka, D. I. i. 280, l. 10, but rare: 'cp. the Germ. spelling scbl = Icel. and Engl. sl (Germ. scblagen = Icel. slá); as also the Fr. esclave and slave. 3. sk corrupted into skr, skokkr, skykkjum, and skrokkr, skrykkjótt; analogous are leel. skjallr, Engl. sbrill:—sk for s, in sjaldan and skjaldan, Icel. saur-in, Dan. skör-levned. 4. sk answers to Engl. sb (skip, fiskr,=Engl. ship, fish), except in a few words, as Engl. skin, score, which may be borrowed from the Norse. There are more words beginning with s than with any other letter of the alphabet; this is due to the combination of sk, sm, sp, and st.

SADDR, part., older form saor, Hým. 1, which answers to the Goth. and Lat., [Ulf. safs, Luke vi. 25, xv. 16; O. H. G. sat; Lat. satur; see scoja]:—sated, baving got one's fill, Hým. 1; vera s. á e-u, Ld. 98; s. e-s, Hbl. 3; s. lífdaga, full of days, Bible; hálf-s., balf sated.

SAFI, a, m. [Engl. sap; Germ. safi], the sap of trees (the juice of berries is called lögr, q.v.); börkt af viði ok safi, Fms. viii. 32; þeir átu safa ok sugu birki-við, 33; ber ok safa, Fas. iii. 208, passim.

safn, n. a collection, Vm. 6, 15, passim in mod. usage.

sag, n. sawdust: -- sawing, keppa sag, Skiða R.

saga, 20, to saw, cut with a saw, Barl. 166, Fms. vii. 89.

SAGA, u, f., gen. sögu, pl. sögur; gen. pl. sagna is rare; and in compds the gen. sing. sögu- is preferred, thus sögu-bók, sögu-fróðr, where soguis used in a collective sense; when gen. sagna- is used it is often to be regarded as borrowed from sögu, as in sagna-fróðr, sagna-meistari; sagna from saga, however, occurs in dæmi-sagna, Stj. 560; Orkneyinga-sagna, O. H. 90, l. 3 from the bottom: [from segja; cp. Engl. saw; Germ. sage.]

B. A story, tale, legend, bistory. The very word owes its origin to the fact that the first historical writings were founded on tradition only; the written record was a 'saga' or legend committed to writing; the story thus written was not even new, but had already taken shape and had been told to many generations under the same name; hence the written history and the story told were both alike called Saga, just as in Gr. both were called λόγοι (Herod. i. 184, ii. 161, vi. 19). In some instances when history is mentioned by name it is difficult to say whether a told or written Saga be meant; the former seems to be the case, csp. in the Landnáma-þar hefsk saga Harðar Grímkels-sonar ok Geirs, Landn 62; þar gorðisk saga þeirra Þorbjarnar ok Hávarðar ens halta, 127; Ve björn var víga-maðr mikill, ok er saga mikil frá honum, 150; þar af gördisk saga Isfirdinga ok víg Þorbjarnar, id.; þar af gördisk saga Bödmóðs gerpis ok Grímólfs, 157; þar af görðisk Svarídæla saga, 208; þar af görðisk Þorskfirðinga saga, 124; ok þar var Þórðr gellir leiddr í áðr hann tok manuvirding, sem segir i sogu hans, 111. Some of these Sagas were perhaps never committed to writing; others not till a later date, when the tradition had deteriorated; but they were told and known by name at the time when the Landn, was first composed, see Sain i. 191. Written Sagas, again, are those recorded in later works,—ok getr hans i Laxdæla segu-Eb. 334; sem segir í sögu Laxdæla, Grett. 15; sem segir í Bandamanna sögu, 22; vísar svá til i sögu Bjarnar, 132; sem segir i sögu Njatðvíkinga, Ld. 296; sem í sögu þorgils Höllu-sonar segir, 290; sem seg r 1 Eyrbyggja sögu, Landn. (1824) 52; sem segir i Jarla sögum, as is said in the Lives of the Earls (of Orkney), Fb. ii. 347; sem ritað es í sögu hans, Landn. 41, Eg. 589; hann kemr ok við Heiðarvíga sögu, Eb. 334.

a messenger, which sense can still be seen in Akv. 1, 2, 6, as also in the allit. seggr and segja; at þú mér, seggr, né segir, Skm. 5; seggir segja mér hvártveggja, Hallfred. 2. gener. a man, Vkv. 7, 21; nóttum fóru seggir, 6; sénir vóru seggir (strangers) und hjálmum, Hóm. 20; seggja dróttinn, Bkv. 5: the word remains in mod. usage in such phrases as, grimdar-seggr, a cruel man; óróa-seggr, a rioter. fjöld, f. a bost of men, Lex. Poët.

segi or sigi, a, m. a slice, bit, clot; hjarta mitt var runnit sundr i siga. my beart was molten into drops, 'torn into sbreds,' Sol. 43; hann skar af tungu ormsins einn sega, Tristr.; hann skar hann sundr i siga, Bret. 170; hann (the dog) greip i kalfann ok þar ór siga, Fas. ii. 426; þórir kvadsk úviljaðr at skera stærrum segjum, to cut larger slices, Sturl. i. 61; töngu segi, the tongs' bit, poët. = the iron in the forge, pd. 15; blod-segi, a clot of blood; fjör-segi, the beart; tál-segi, a bait; kló-segi, kverk-segi, q. v.

SEGJA, pres. segi, segir, segi, pl. segjum, segit, segja; pret. sagdi. pl. sögðu; pres. subj. segja; pret. segða, segðir, segði; imperat. seg, segðu; part. sagor: doubtful forms are sagat, sagaor, Merl. 2. 4: a pres. indic. seg, segr, ek seg, Grag. i. 64, 134; segr hann, Fms. x. 421; segsk, Grag. i. 159, ii. 57: with a neg. suff. segr-at, Grag. ii. 214; sagdit, Hym. 14; segit-a, tell ye not! Vkv. 21: an older form seggja with a double g is suggested in Lex. Poët. in two or three passages, cp. A.S. secgan, as also seggr; but in Haustl. l. c. the g in 'sagna' is soft, and not hard (gg) as in mod. Icel. pronunciation, and sagna would fairly rhyme with segjandum: [a word common to all Teut. languages, except that, strangely enough, no Goth. form is recorded, for Ulf. renders Andeir. λέγειν, είπειν, by mapijan, quipan, rodjan; so it may be that the earliest sense was not to say = Lat. dicere, but a limited one, to tell, proclaim; A.S. secgan; Engl. say; Dan. sige; Swed. segja.]

A. To say, in the oldest poems chiefly, I. to tell, report. Lat. narrare, dicere; segou, imperat. tell thou mel say! seiðinn (seiðit Ed. wrongly), Fas. iii. 319: seiðis-hús, the bouse where the spell was worked, Fas. iii. 166, v. l.; in Yngl. S. ch. 7 the charm of 'seidr' is attributed to Odin; Odinn kunni ba ibrott, er mestr måttr fylgdi, ok framði sjálfr, er seiðr heitir, en af því mátti hann vita örlög manna ok úorðna hluti, svá ok at göra mönnum bana eðr úhamingju eða vanheilindi, svá ok at taka frá mönnum vit eðr afl ok gefa öðrum, en þessi fjölkyngi, er framið er, fylgir svá mikil ergi, at eigi þótti karlmönnum skammlaust við at fara, ok var gyðjunum kennd sú íþrótt, Yngl. S. ch. 7; as to the rites and ceremonies of the 'scidr' see esp. the interesting account in borf. Karl. S. ch. 3, compared with that in Vd. ch. 10 and Orvar Odds S. ch. 2 and 3; even the old poem Völuspå is framed as a song delivered by a prophetess working a spell. The witch scene in Macbeth is an echo of the ancient 'seidr' as it survived in tradition in Shakespeare's time, though the devilry and the cauldron are later additions.

N.

SKÁLD, n., pl. skáld; the word is in poetry rhymed as skald (with a short vowel), skald and kalda, aldri and skaldi, Kormak, and so on; but the plural is always spelt skáld, not sköld; the mod. Dan. skjald is borrowed from the Icel.: [the etymology and origin of this word is contested; Prof. Bergmann, in Message de Skirnir, Strasburg, 1871, p. 54, derives it from the Slavonic skladi = composition, skladacz = compositeur; but the earliest usages point to a Teutonic and a different root. In the ancient law skaldskapr meant a libel in verse, and was synonymous with flimt, danz, niò, q. v.; the compds skald-fifi, leir-skald (q. v.) also point to the bad sense as the original one, which is still noticeable in popular Icel. usages and phrases such as skálda (the verb), skáldi, skældinn (libellous), see also skáldmær below. On the other hand, skálda, Germ. schalte, means a pole (see skálda, skáld-stöng below); libels and imprecations were in the ancient heathen age scratched on poles, see the remarks s.v. nio, niostung. The word is therefore, we believe, to be traced back to the old libel-pole, 'scald-pole;' if so, Engl. scold = to abuse, Germ. schelten, may be kindred words; the old Lat. phrase (of Mart. Capella) barbara frazineis sculpatur runa tabellis may even refer to this scratching of imprecations on pieces of wood.]

B. A poet, in countless instances; beir voru skáld Haralds konungs ok kappar, Fas. i. 379; forn-skáld, þjóð-skáld, níð-skáld, hirð-skáld, leir-skáld, krapta-skáld, ákvæða-skáld, as also sálma-skáld, rímna-skáld: in nicknames, Skáld-Helgi, Skáld-Hrafn, Skáld-Refr, Landn., names given to those who composed libellous love-songs (?); Svartaskald, Hvita-skald. Some of the classical passages in the Sagas referring to poets, esp. to the hird-skald, are Har. S. harf, ch. 39, Hak. S. Good ch. and it seems that the men were seated in the former, the women in bkauti, a, m. a kerchief used as a purse by knitting all four corners $\Pi_{32}$, Eg. ch. 8, Gunnl. S. ch. 9, O. H. ch. 52-54, 128, 203, 205, O. H. L. ch. 57, 58, 60-62, Har. S. hardr. (Fms. vi.) ch. 24, 101, 108, 110. The Egils S., Korm. S., Hallfred. S., Gunnl. S. are lives of poets; there are also the chapters and episodes referring to the life of the poet Sighvat, esp. in the Fb., cp. also Sturl. 1. ch. 13, 9. ch. 16; for imprecations or libels in verse see níð. COMPDS: skálda-gemlur, f. pl., see Ísl. þjóðs. ii. 557. skálda-spillir, m. 'skald-spoiler,' the nickname of the poet Eyvind; the name was, we believe, a bye-word, a 'poetaster,' 'plagiarist;' we believe that this nickname was given to this poet because two of his chief poems were modelled after other works of contemporary poets, the Háleygja-tal after the Ynglinga-tal, and the Hákonar-mál after the Eiriksmál; (as to the latter poem this is even expressly stated in Fagrsk. 22); the word would thus be the same as ill-skælda, a word applied to a poet for having borrowed the refrain of his poem, Fms. iii. 65. Skálda. tal, n. a List of Poets, a short treatise affixed to the Cod. Ups. of the Edda and the Cod. Acad, primus of the Heimskringla.

skálda, u, f. [O. H. G. scalta; mid. H. G. schalte], a pole or staff, whence a flute, pipe; skálda með tönn, a flute made of walrus tusk, D. N. 2. [mid. H. G. schalte], a kind of boat, Edda (Gl.) iv. 359. Skálda, a contr. form of Skáldskapar-mál (List of Authors C. I), but usually applied to the old collection of Philological Treatises affixed to the Edda, (List of Authors H. I.)

skálda, 20, to make verses, but in rather a bad sense.

skálda, að, [cp. Engl. scall or scald], to rot, fall off, of hair; skáldaðr. skald-eik, f. [Germ. schalt-eiche], the bolm-oak, ilex, pd. (the MS. has skál-eik).

skáld-fé, n. a 'skald-fee,' reward for a poem, Ad.

skald-fift, n. a poetaster (perh. originally a libeller), Edda 40.

skáldi, a, m. a poetaster, a nickname given in Icel. to vagrant, extemporising verse-makers; thus in this century Páll skáldi (a vagrant priest and verse-maker); and in the 16th century Bjarni skáldi; the word is never applied to really good poets. 2. as a nickname. Baut. (on Runic stones).

skáld-kona, u, f. a 'skald-quean,' a poetess, a nickname of a woman, for which the reason given is this; hann átti þórhildi skáldkonu, 'hón var orðgifr mikit ok fór með flimtan,' she was a 'word-witch,' and made libels, Nj. 49.

skáld-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), poetical, Fms. ii. 50.

skáld-maor, m. a poet; skáldmenn miklir, ísl. ii. 191.

skáld-mær, adj. a 'skald-maid,' poetess, a nickname of the poetess Jórunn, Fms. i. 13; the name of her poem Sendi-bit looks as if it had been of a 'biting' libellous kind.

skald-pipa, u, f. a 'skald-pipe,' a flute (?), Clar. 135.

skáld-skápr, m. scaldsbip, poetry:

I. a libel in verse; eigi skal lýsa legorðs-sök um skáldskap, Grág. i. 351; ef maðr kveðr skáld-I. a libel in verse; eigi skap til háðungar manni,...ok varðar þat skóggang, skal sækja sem annan skáldskap, ii. 151, see the whole chapter in Kb. ch. 238, inscribed, um Skáldskap, of Libels; the word is therefore used synonymously with danz and flimt, níð, q.v. II. poetry in a good sense, Edda passim; Sighvatr var ekki hrað-mæltr maðr í sundr-lausum orðum, en s. var honum svá tiltækr, at hann kvað af tungu fram svá sem hann mælti annat mál, Ó. H. 171; ok kom þar brátt talinu at þeir ræddu um skáldskap, þótti hvárum-tveggja þær ræður skemtiligar, Eg. 686; skáldskapar grein, -háttr, poetical metre, Skálda 183, 210; skáldskapar laun= skáldfé, Eg. 152. Skáld-skapar-mál, n. pl. poetical diction, Edda 49, Skálda 195; hence the name of the second part of the Edda, the ancient Ars Poetica, containing the rules and laws of ancient poetry. Skáldskapr in old writers refers to the 'form' (metre, flow, diction), not to the contents; even in such phrases as, ekki var mikill skáldskapr i því kvæði, there was not much 'scaldship' in that poem, it was a bad composition, Fms. vii. 38. skáld-stöng, f. a 'libel-pole,' a pole with imprecations or charms scratched on it; ef maðr reisir stöng ok Rallar s., þá hefir hann fyrir-gört hverjum penningi fjár síns, N. G. L. i. 430.

skálgi, a, m. a fish of the carp kind (?), Edda (Gl.) skál-hús, n. = skáli, 655 xxx. 9.

skána, að, [skái], to get better, of illness and the weather; mér er farið að skána, and veðrið er farið að skána.

Skáni and Skáney, f.; the gen. Skáneyjar occurs as early as in a poet of the 10th century, the syllable -ey answering to the Latinised -avia: - Scania, a local name, the Scandia or Scandinavia of Pliny and succeeding geographers, mod. Dan. Skaane; from the Saga time downwards the name of a county formerly belonging to Denmark, but since 1658 to Sweden; it is said to mean border-land, and may be akin to skán. Skáni forms the southernmost point of the great northern peninsula, and was accordingly the first district in the peninsula known to the Romans, whence in Latin writers it became the general name for the whole of the north; but not so in Icel. vernacular writers, who use it only in its proper sense of the county Skáni, Fms., Fb. passim.

IV. a pr. name, Nj., Hkr. (of the son of Odin, the ancestor of the Danish kings); Skjöldungar, Edda; Skjöldr Skánunga goð, Fb. iii. 246. compds: skjaldar-band, n. a sbieldstrap, a nickname, Fms. ix. 249. skjaldar-bukl, n. the shield-boss, skjaldar-fetill, m. the shield-strap (mid. H. G. scilt-vezzel, Al. 40. Gr. τελαμών), Bjarn. 36, Sks. 407. skjaldar-jötunn, m. 'sbieldskjaldar-rönd, f. the shield-rim, giant,' a war-engine, Sks. 430. Fms. i. 266, Korm. 120, Sks. 385. skjaldar-skirfi, n. pl. old wornskjaldar-sporor, m. the 'shield-tail,' out sbields, Band. 33 new Ed. the lower part of an oblong shield, Ld. 78, Glum. 333, Fas. i. 515.

B. Remarks on the shield.—A shield was raised as a signal in time of war; a red shield betokened war (rauðr skjöldr, her-skjöldr), a white shield peace (hvitr skjöldr, friðar-skjöldr, a peace-sbield); in a battle the red shield was hoisted, Hkv. I. 33; but, bregða upp friðar skildi, to boist the (white) shield of peace, was a sign that the battle was to cease; hann lét skjóta upp skildi hvítum, Fagrsk. 61, Fms. vii. 23; hence also the phrase, bera herskjöld, or, fara herskildi, to barry, overrun a land with the 'war shield,' see frid-skjöldr and her-skjöldr (s. v. herr). War ships were lined from stem to stern with a wall of shields,-skip skarat skjöldum, or skjaldat skip; hann kom í Bjarnar-fjörð með al-skjölduðu skipi, síðan var hann Skjaldar-Björn kallaðr, Landn. 156. The halls of the ancients were hung all round with a row of shields, Gm. 9, Edda 2, Eg. 43, see the curious story in Fas. iii. 42. For the shield-wall in battles sce skjald-borg. Ancient sayings; nú er skarð fyrir skildi, now there is a gap for a shield, a breach in the fence, of a heavy loss, such as the death of a person, nú er skarð fyrir skildi, nú er svanrinn nár á Tjörn, Jón Þorl.; höggva skarð í skildi e-s, to cut a notch in one's shield, inflict a severe blow, Orkn. (in a verse). Shields were furnished with a painted or carved 'ring' representing mythological or heroic subjects; these rings are the earliest works of Northern art on record, hence come the names rít, baugr, tönd, of which rít points to scratching (whereas Bragi used 'fá' = to paint); raudum skildi, rönd var ór gulli, Hkv. 1. 33. Such shields were a lordly gift, and gave rise to several ancient poems treating of the subjects carved or painted on the shield, such as the famous Haust-löng by Thiodolf, the Ragnars-kviða by Bragi, the two Beru-drapur (Shield-songs) by Egill; these 'shield-lays' were afterwards the sources of the writer of the Edda, but only a few fragments are preserved; (cp. the Greek lay on the shield of Heracles,' and the lay on Achilles' shield in the Iliad.)

Skjöldungar, m. pl. the famous lineage of the kings of Denmark, from Skjöld, the son of Odin, Edda, Yngl. S. The Danish legend derives the name from his being found in infancy in a bed of reeds to which he had floated on a shield; but in fact the name is derived from the ancient Teutonic custom of electing the king by lifting him on a shield in the Skjöldunga-ætt, f. the kin of the S., Fas. ii. 10. assembly.

BON, f. [Germ. sübne, ver-söbnung]:—an atonement, sacrifice, of the heathen age; this ancient Teut, word remains in the Norse only in a few COMPDS: Sonar-blot, n. an atonement-sacrifice, and at the same time an oracle; Dagr konungr...gékk hann þá til sónar-blóts til fréttar, Hkr. i. 24, Fas. i. 532. sonar-dreyri, a, m. the blood of atonement (the blood of the sonar-göltr, q. v.), Hdl. sonar-göltr, m. the 'atonement-boar, consecrated to the sun-god Frey. The ancient sacrifice of atonement (sónar-blót) was thus performed:—the largest boar that could be found in the kingdom was on Yule-eve led before the king and his men assembled in the hall; the king and his men then laid their hands on the boar's bristly mane and made a solemn vow, strengja heit at Bragafulli. The animal being sacrificed, divination took place, probably by chips shaken in the boar's blood; for descriptions see Herv. S. ch. 10 (Fas. i. 531, 532), Hkv. Hjörv. (the prose), Yngl. S. ch. 21 (ganga til sónar-blóts til fréttar). The boar's head at Yule-tide in Queen's College, Oxford, is probably a relic of this ancient heathen sacrificial rite. II. Son was the name of one of the vessels in which the blood of Kvásir (the mead of wisdom and poetry) was kept, Edda; hence poetry itself is called fyllr Sonar, id.; orða-sáð Sonar, the wordseed of Son, i. e. inspired poetry, Kormak. G. L. i. 140; sultar-kví, a 'famine-fold,' Fms. xi. 248.

SUMAR, n., dat. sumri; pl. sumur; sumra, sumrum; in the old language this word was masculine in the form sumarr, of which gender a trace may still be seen in the contracted forms sumri, sumra, sumrum, for a genuine neuter does not admit these contractions. But there remains a single instance of the actual use of the masculine in the rhyme of a verse of the beginning of the 11th century, sumar hvern frekum erni, Skálda,-from which one might infer that at that time the word was still masc.; if so, it is not likely that in a poem so old as the Vsp. it would be neuter, and 'sumur' in 'of sumur eptir' perhaps ought to be corrected 'sumra' or 'sumar' (acc. sing.); as also 'varmt sumar' should be 'varmt sumarr,' Vbm. 26: [A.S. sumar; a word common to all Teut. languages; in the Orm. sumerr, denoting a long u; the mod. Dan., Germ., and Engl. have sommer, summer, with a double m]:-a summer. passim. II. mythical, Sumarr, the son of Svásao, Edda 13

B. Chronological Remarks.—The old Northmen, like the Icel. of the present time, divided the year into two halves, summer and winter; the summer began on the Thursday next before the 16th of April in the old calendar, which answers to the 26th of the Gregorian calendar (used in Icel. since A. D. 1700). The Northern and Icelandic summer is therefore a fixed term in the calendar, and consists of 184 days, viz. six months of thirty days, plus four days, called aukanzetr ('eke-nights'). Summer is divided into two halves, each of three months (=ninety days), before and after midsummer (mið-sumar); and the four 'ekenights' are every summer intercalated immediately before midsummer; thus in the Icel. Almanack of 1872-Sumar-dagt fyrsti, or the first summer-day, falls on Thursday the 25th of April; Auka-nætr from the 24th to the 27th of July; Mid-sumar on the 28th of July; Sumar-dagr síðasti, or the last day of summer, on the 25th of October; cp. sumarnátt síðasta, Gísl. 67. In mod. usage the time from April to October is counted by the summer weeks, the first, second, ... twentieth ... week of the summer, and in Icel. Almanacks every Thursday during summer is marked by the running number of the week. The ancients, too, counted the summer by weeks, but only down to midsummer, thus, tiu vikur skulu vera af sumri er menn koma til alþingis, K. p. K. 166; but in the latter part of the summer they counted either by the weeks from midsummer or by the weeks still left of the summer, thus, halfum manadi eptir mitt sumar, Nj. 4; er átta vikur lifa sumars, Grág. i. 122; frá miðju sumri til vetrar, 147; er átta vikur eru til vetrar, Nj. 192; er tveir mánaðir vóru til vetrar, 195; líðr á sumarit til átta vikna, 93; ellipt., var Rútr heima til sex vikna (viz. sumars), 10.

C. Compos: sumar-auki, a, m. 'summer-eke,' the intercalary week, an Icel. calendar-term; the ancient heathen year consisted of 364 days, or twelve months of thirty days each, plus four days, which were the auka-nætr or 'eke-nights' (see above); the remaining day and a fraction was gathered up into an intercalary week, called 'Summer-eke' or 'Eke-week,' which in ancient times was inserted every sixth or seventh year at the end of summer, which in such years was 191 days long; the 'Summer-eke' was introduced by Thorstein Surt (Thorstein the Wise) in the middle of the 10th century, see 1b. ch. 4, and is still observed in Icel.; now that the Gregorian style is in use in Icel. the intercalary week is inserted every fifth or sixth year; thus the year 1872 is marked as the first year after sumarauki,' (the years 1860, 1866, and 1871 being years 'with sumarauki'); 1872 sem er 'fyrsta ár eptir Sumarauka,' Icel. Almanack, 1872; the years 1864 and 1870 were 'fjórða ár eptir sumarauka; thus in 1871 the summer had twenty-seven weeks, the eke-week being the 21st to the 27th of October. sumar-avoxtr, m. the summer produce, Fms. x. 337. sumar-björg, f. support during the summer, Sturl. i. 136. sumar-bok, f. a summer-book (missal for the summer), Vm. 52, Pm. 86. sumar-bu, n. summer-stock, Sturl. ii. 65. sumarber, adj. calving in the summer. sumar-dagr, m. a summer day, N. ty; Engl. ten.]

A. A ten, decade. The ancient Scandinavians and Teutons had no indeclinable numeral adjectives from twenty to a hundred; the word tigr (like hundrad and husund) being a regular substantive. The ancient way of counting is therefore complex and curious; e.g. forty-one was called 'four tens and one,' or 'one of the fifth decade;' forty-eight was called 'four tens and eight,' or by counting back, 'five tens short of two,' cp. the Lat. un-de-viginti, duo-de-triginta: forty-five was called 'half the fifth ten,' and so on, as will best be seen from the references below; and so it goes on to 'one hundred and twenty,' for in Icel. a hundred means the duodecimal hundred. In the 14th century (in deeds) 'tigr' began to lose its character of a substantive, e.g. þrjátigir, fimtigir . . ., or þrjátigi, fimtigi (used indecl.), whence at last came the mod. þrjátíu, fjörutíu, fimtíu..., the tíu being a contracted form from the acc. pl. tigu. At the same time hundrad and busund became indecl. adjectives, e. g. þrjátíu, þrjúhundruð, þrjuþúsund skipum, for the old þrem tigum hundruðum, þúsundum skipa.

TIL, prep. with gen. As to this particle, the two branches of the Teutonic family vary: all the South Teut., including the Goth., present the form without the final l; Goth. du (qs. tu) = $\pi \rho \delta s$, ϵls : A.S., Hel., Old Fris. te, to; North. E. te; Engl. to; Dutch te, toe; O. H. G. zi, za, zuo; Germ. zu; Old Frank. to, te, ti; while the Northerners add the l, as Dan., Swed., North. E. and Scot. til; the Swedes double the l, till. That til is the truer form is seen from rhymes, til vilja, Vigl.: on the other hand, mod. provinc. Norse and Swedish drop the I, thus te, Ivar Aasen, Rietz. The Engl. uses both forms, to, of place, till, of time, of which the latter is no doubt borrowed from the Norse or Danish: til = to is quite common still in Cumberland and other North. E. counties, '10 gang til Carlisle,' etc.; a single instance of the form til is said to halfr fimti tugr kugilda, balf the fifth decade, i.e. forty-five, Dipl. v. Pbelieve, identical, the latter being a compound particle, ti-l, although the origin of the I has not as yet been made out. The uncompounded particle ti- is not entirely unknown in the Scandinavian, for it has been preserved in the compds mikils-ti, hölz-ti, unz-t, qq. v. Go Particles. even brief monosyllabic ones, often turn out to be compds, as e.g. ok (conj.), or the suffixed verbal negative; the prep. 'til' therefore is no more akin to the Germ, noun ziel than is 'ok' (and) to ok (a yoke); the apparent similarity in sense is in both cases merely accidental.

The passages quoted all refer to Iceland, except two or three to the Orkneys, and one to Norway, viz. torfmenn. In a country bare or stripped of wood, turf plays an important part in husbandry, as sod for buildings and fencing, and as peat for fuel. In the Orkneys the Norse earl Einar got the soubriquet of 'Turf-Einar' (Torf-Einarr) for having taught the Norsemen to dig peat (having probably learnt it himself from the Gaelic tribes in Scotland); the place was hence called Torf-nes, Orkn. The digging of peat in the poem Rigsmal is one of the many proofs of the birthplace of that poem. The only passage referring to Norway is that cited under torfmenn, a peat-man (see B), unless the legislator here specially had in mind the Norsemen of the Orkneys who, at that time, were an integral part of the Norse kingdom, without a special code of laws.

The ancient Scandinavians, like other old Teutonic people, had no towns; Tacitus says, 'nullas Germanorum populis urbes habitari satis notum est...colunt discreti ac diversi, ut fons, ut campus, ut nemus placuit,' Germ. ch. 16. In Norway the first town, Nidarós, was founded by the two Olaves (Olave Tryggvason and Saint Olave, 994-1030), and this town was hence par excellence called Kaupang, q.v. But the real founder of towns in Norway was king Olave the Quiet (1067-1093); as to Iceland, the words of Tacitus, 'colunt diversi ut fons, etc., placuit,' still apply; 120 years ago (in 1752), the only town or village of the country (Reykjavík) was a single isolated farm. In the old Norse law, the 'Town-law' is the new law attached as an appendix to the old Land-law.

UNDORN, m. (not n. as stated in Lex. Poët.), also spelt undurn and undarn, see the references below: [this word occurs in all ancient Teut. languages; Ulf. undaurni-mats or undurn-meat = άριστον, Luke xiv. 12; A.S. undern; Hel. undorn; O.H.G. untarn. Afterwards it was disused in writing, but in provincial dialects it still survives in all Teutonic countries, Scandinavia, Germany (Bavaria, the Rhine), England (Cumberland, Yorkshire), everywhere, except in Iceland, where, strange to say, it is unknown in speech as well as in writing; thus, Swed. undan, undarn, unden; in Norway undaaln; Bavaria untern (Schmeller); Fris. ounern; provinc. Engl. orndorns, ownder (Brocket); in all these dialects it means a middle-meal, a kind of lunch, taken either in the afternoon at three o'clock (this seems to be the prevailing sense, at least in Scandinavia), or in the forenoon at nine: even a verb has been formed, thus in Sweden sova und is to take a nap at lunch-time, at midday (Rietz); in the Rhine country ondern is said of cattle lying down at midday (Schmeller).]

B. Usage.—In old Icel. or Norse writers the word occurs five times, thrice in poets, twice in prose; the original sense was undoubtedly a time of the day, either mid-afternoon, i. c. three.o'clock P.M., or mid-forenoon, i.e. nine o'clock A.M., the sense of food being a derived one (like I. mid-afternoon, answering to the nones of eccl. mál, q. v.): writers; morgin hetu ok miðjan dag, undorn ok aptan, they called morning and midday, 'undorn' and evening, Vsp. 6 (undurn, Hb. l. c.), where undorn is placed midway between noon and eve. forenoon; um morguninn at undurni, in the morning at undurn time, O. H. L. 65; þá hringt er til miðs-morguns, ok hafa unninn eiðinn (Hb.) 45; þá telja Paktar nótt æri (ærna Ed.), Rb. 32; þó at eig sé fyrr en hringi at undurn (dat.) at Krists-kirkju, when it rings at midmorning time, and shall have taken the oath ere the bells at Christ's II. a meal; hjuggu kirk ring at undurn, N.G.L. i. 308. ver undurn frekum vargi, we carved a meal for the greedy wolf, i. e. we slew many in the battle, Km. 2; örn drekkr undarn, the eagle drinks undarn, Edda 101 (in a verse of about 1030 A.D.), the various readings (undranar and undjarn) shew that the transcribers did not in the Icel. day-marks only non (q. v.) understand the word. is of eccl. Lat, origin; may not undorn be the old heathen term which was displaced by that word? the passage in Vsp. favours this suggestion.

Ú

U- or 6- is the negative prefix before nouns, adjectives, and adverbs (Engl. and Germ. un-), for the spelling of which see p. 469, col. 2. The use of this particle is almost unlimited; it may e.g. be prefixed to almost every past part., in frequent instances answering to Engl. 'not;' ókominn, not come; ofarinn, not gone; ugefinn, not given; or to the part. act. as gerundive, það er óhafandi, unfit for use; ógöranda, not feasible; ódrekkandi, undrinkable; oetandi, uneatable; usigrandi, ovinnandi, invincible; 2. special usages: a. prefixed to comótakandi, impregnable. paratives, answering to Engl. 'less;' eigi úauðgari, not less rich; údaufligra, less dull; and so in endless instances, see the references below: esp. after a negative, eigi ósannara en, not less true than. often with another negative, with an intensive force; hann var aldrei úgrátandi, 'be was never unweeping,' i. e. be cried all along; aldrei ósofandi, never unsleeping, i. e. always sleeping: so also, eigi ugaman, not unpleasant, i. c. very pleasant; eigi úákaft, 'not uneager,' i. c. very eager; eigi úpessligr, not unlike that, i. e. quite of that kind; eigi úfóthvatr, not unswift, i.e. very swift indeed. y. eiga skamt úlifað, see úlifað; at úsögðum sundr griðum, hafa úfengit þess fjár.

is little used, though not quite unknown in Icel. vellums. B. PRONUNCIATION, CHANGES.—The v is now sounded in Icel. 25 in English, by a slight touch of the lip and teeth (not like the South German, with both lips). It is said (Rietz) that a w or double w is still sounded in a remote Swedish county (Dalarne), and the opinion of English phonetic philologists is that the English w represents the old Teutonic value of that letter, which has since been lost all over the Continent, as well as in Iceland. The Icelandic formation of words goes far to prove that the old Scandinavian v was a semi-vowel, and not a full 1. traces are found of v alliterating with a consonant as it is now: vowel; on an old Runic stone (of the 10th century?) in the island Öland (off the coast of Schonen) we read-Vandils jörmungrundar. ur-grandari (v, i, and u making the three staves). In verses which have passed through Icelandic oral tradition, alliteration like this could hardly have survived, except in a very few cases (there are, however, some such, svaf vætr Freyja átta nóttum, þkv. 28; Óðinn á jarla þá er i val falla, Hbl. 24; onu verr, Ls. 36, cp. Hm. 22); but on the Runic stone, the words still remain as they were first engraved. 2. the frequent 'vocalisations' involving the loss of v, which is indeed the most mutable a. ve, vi change into y, vá into ó: a v cannot be sounded of all letters: before a u-vowel, viz. before o, o, u, u, y, y, a, o; countless instances of this are to be found under the heads of v-, dv-, bv-, kv-, sv-, rv-, pr-: cp. as specimens the tenses of verbs, vada, valda, vaxa, vefa, sofa, koma, vinna, vinda, svimma, svella, vella, velta, verpa, verða, hverfa, svelta, svella, sverfa, þverra, svelgja, þvá, sverja; and also hváll and hóll, hvat and hót, ván and ón, váru and óru, kvef and kóf kaf kœfa, svartr and sorti surtr syrta, verk and yrkja orka. β. more rarely, before other vowels, as, beita for bveita, silungr for svilungr, hika for hvika, skak for skvak, þí and því. y. v and j interchange, as in hjol for hvel, sjót for sveit, skjal for skval, jurt for vurt, jartegn for vartegn, hvern for hjarni; in verbal inflexions, -va into -ja, as byggva into bygg.a, syngva into syngja. 8. in a few words the v has been saved by a change in the following vowel, as in verk, cp. A.S. weore, virkr for vyrkr; virgull (a balter, Goth. wurgils), væðr and æðr, Svænskr Sænskr. for the loss of v before a u-vowel see the introduction to the letters O, U, Y, Æ, Ö; so in parts of England and in Scotland at the present day men say ool for wool. s. in a few other words initial v is dropped when in compds, vegr in Nor-egr, einn-ig, hinn-ig, hann-ig, hvern-ig; var.gr in kaup-angr, Harð-angr; völlr in þreskj-öldr; valdr in Arn-aldr, Haraldr; verðr in dög-urðr; vindr in Ön-undr; vin in Björg-yn; ve or veig in byri, qs. bor-ve, and in Dan. Odens-e. n. again u has changed into v in varr qs. urr, orr, A.S. ure, Engl. our, and in vesall qs. usall (see varr and vesall). II. changes of later date, in the 14th and 15th centuries, or somewhat earlier, -old Icel. vá was turned into w. and at last into vo; svá, svó, svo; vár, vór, vor; tvá, tvó, tvo; ván, vón, von; vápn, vópn, vopn; vátr, vótr, votr; váði, vóði, voði; kváma, kvóma, koma: the old vá is proved by rhymes, as vátr and grata, svá and á; that this vá did not change immediately into the present vo, but passed through an intermediate vo, is shewn by rhymes in poems of the 14th and 15th centuries; e.g. vớt and bớt, Skida R. 47, 70, 119, 181; stór, vớr, 69; vớdinn, Odinn, 109; vớt (testem), vớt, 122; góma, kvóma, Völs. R. 199; vórt, stórt, 212; stórt, hvórt, 248: the w still remains in voru (erant), although short o in voru is rapidly displacing the old long vowel. This later change of vá into vó, compared with the old dropping of the v whenever it came in contact with a m or o, shews that at the time when it took place (the 14th century), cannot any longer have had the same sound as it had five or six centuries before, when the great and systematic vocalisation of it took place. In mod. Icel. v has even reappeared in a few, especially verbal, forms (where people are still conscious of the lost v), so that Icel, now say hvurfu, hvorfinn, hvyrfi (from hverfa); so also, but esp. in later vellums, less in speech, the forms vurou, vordinn, vultu, vundu, vorpid, etc., from verca, velta, vinda, verpa; cp. also the mod. sound of the word Guo: again, in words like ull, úlfr, oro, una, etc., a restoration was impossible, all remembrance of the v having been lost for a thousand years; but phonetically, since v became a labial consonant, an Icelander might and could say vull, vúlfr, vorka, vorð, etc., just as well III. for the dropping of v before r (and l) as von, vor, votr. see the introduction to the letter R (as in range = Engl. wrong): it is doubtful whether Icel. vág-rek (= a wreck, flotsom) bears any relation to vágr (a wave): the v may here have been saved by means of a false etymology, vagrek for vrak. 2. in a few cases an aspirate (b) has been substituted for an original w, e.g. Icel. hreidr (a nest), cp.

Engl. wreath, Goth. wribus; Icel. hrista, akin to Engl. wrist, Dan. Tame, Vöölar, Vööla-bing, in the north of Iceland, Rb. 202, Ann. wriste; Icel. hrekja, akin to A.S. wrecan, Engl. wreck; Icel. hrina, akin to Dan. wrinske; and perhaps a few more words. 3. in still fewer instances the r has fallen out, the w or v remaining; these words are veita (to trench), veiting (a trench, drainage), for vreita, vreiting (akin to writa); veina (II) = vreina; and lastly, vá for vrá (a cabin). an interchange of v and f occurs in a few instances, e. g. ái-fangi, áfangi, qs. ái-vangr; in var-nagli and far-nagli; in varinn and farinn, see fara A. VI. β; in válgr and fjálgr. 2. in inflexive syllables, like örfar, snjófar, bölfi (ör, snjór, böl), and the like, the change of v into f is etymologically erroneous, but phonetically indifferent, final or medial f being one in sound with v. V. for the v or u as the cause of a vowel change, see Gramm. p. xxix. 2. it is dropped in inflexions in many words, such as in mörr, böð, stöð, dögg, högg, böl, öl, söl, fjör, smjör, mjöl, kjöt, hey, sær, snær, fræ, bygg, lyng; adj. hár, mjór, þjökkr, dokkr, röskr, glöggr, etc.

Many of the preceding phenomena (esp. in I. and III) could not possibly be accounted for, unless we assumed that, at some early time, when those changes took place, the v was sounded, not as a consonant, but as a kind of oo sound, half consonant, half vowel; if so, no sound could answer more nearly to it than the mod. Engl. w; the change may have taken place at a very early date, prob. before the settlement of Icel. Norse words in the Shetland and Orkney dialects point to v not w, e.g. voe = Icel. vágr.

VAD, n., pl. vóð; [A.S. wæd; Swed.-Dan. vad, vade-sted; cp. Lat. vadum; vað is derived from the verb vaða, and is not borrowed from the Latin noun]: - a wading-place, ford, across a river or creek; & árbakkanum við vaðit, Fms. xi. 255; þar vissi hann vað eitt ok reið par til, 354; rekr hann ofan á vaðit, ok heitir þar síðan þorgeirs-vað, Nj. 108; öll vöð á ánni, Stj. 394, Grett. 140; háska-vað, Art. 66; þar var þá vað á ánni, en nú er ekki, Glúm. 352; halda vörð á vöðum öllum, Dropl. 30: phrases, hafa vaðit fyrir neðan sig, to act warily; fara á hunda-vaði yfir e-t, 'to pass by a dog's ford over a thing,' i. e. to slur it over, do it burriedly and badly.

II. in the Icel. parliament (albingi) the word assumed a peculiar sense, for in the Grag. 'vapnatak' means the breaking up of the session, when the men resumed their weapons, which had been laid aside during the session (see vapnaburor, vapn A); bat skal vera fjórtán nóttum eptir vápnatak, en þat heitir v. er alþýða ríðr af alþingi, Hrafn. 19, referring to the middle of the 10th century, where however it may be an anachronism; but in the Gragas and in Icel. of the 12th and 13th centuries it was a standing term, see Grág. passim; eptir vápnatak, i. 80; fjórtán nóttum eptir vápnatak, 123, 194, ii. 178. in that part of England which formed the ancient Denelagu, 'wæpentak' or 'wapentagia' came to mean a subdivision, answering to 'hundred' in the Saxon shires. Although altered in sense, this word was no doubt imported from the Danish, for in Leges Edvardi Confessoris, ch. 30, the words 'sub lege Anglorum' and 'lingua Anglica' are simply an error of a scribe for Danorum, Danica, for 'taka' is not A.S., but Norse, see Konrad Maurer, Germania xiv. 317 sqq.

VÁRR, vár, várt, mod. vor, a possess. pron. This word has undergone several changes, starting from an original form uns, Goth. unsar, which was contracted into ús, cp. órir, p. 469; next the s changed into r (as in vera, heyra, eyra, járn), thus it became ûrr or ór-r, cp. A. S. ûre, Engl. our; lastly, the initial vowel was turned into the cognate consonant v, prob. from being confounded with the personal pronoun vér. The old poets seem only to know the vowel form, as is always seen in alliteration, Vpm. 4, 7, Hým. 33, Hkv. Hjörv. 23; and so in rhymes, stórr, órar, Kormak. Thorodd cites this form, órar eru ú-rækðir órar; and the earliest vellums use it throughout. About A. D. 1200 várr begins to appear, an innovation prob. imported from abroad; thus in Clem. S. (Arna-Magn. 645), p. 147, 'ór,' 'órum,' six times (ll. 1, 4, 9, 12, 13, 28), but 'várra,' 'vár,' twice (ll. 6, 25); in a few poems of the 12th century, preserved in late vellums, the spelling is 'vórr,' whereas the alliteration and rhyme demand ó. e.g. Likn. 24. Harms. 52, 54, 58:

vé-fang, n. [from vé-, a prefixed negative particle answering to Goth. waia- = ill, in waia-mêrjan, to 'ill-praise' = βλασφημείν, and waja-merei = blaspbemy; this waia- is not to be confounded with the interjection wai = vei, but is related to va-=woe, evil, cp. Goth. waidedja = an evil-doer; vé-fang therefore stands for vá-fang, prop. meaning 'misfetching,' miscarriage, but is only used in a specific sense as a law term]:—division or disagreement in court. In the old Icel. courts of law the whole court was composed of thirty-six members, the quorum being six; and in case of disagreement the court was held to be divided if the minority could muster at least six votes; in this case, each side delivered a separate judgment, which was called véfang and véfengja, whereby the suit was stopped or quashed, the one judgment neutralising the other; in the earliest Saga times if a case thus broke down, it could only be taken up again by an appeal to wager of battle (hólmganga), but after the introduction of the fifth court (the court of appeal), it was brought before that court. The véfang is described in an especial chapter of p. p. (Kb.), VERA, older form vesa, the verb substantive; pres. em, ert, er, pl. erum, eruð, eru; pret. var, vart (mod. varst), var, pl. váru or vóru; an obsolete oru occurs, Sæm. (once), Orkn. 426. l. 11, Nj. 81, Thom. 28, 90, 102, 116, 150, 196, Isl. ii. 482: pres. subj. sé, sér (Vpm. 4, 7), sé; the older form is sjá, en ek sjá, Clem. 138. l. 14; at ek sjá, ... ok sé mer eigi reidr, 145, Fms. viii. 299, x. 384, xi. 124, Eg. 127; for the forms sják, sjákk, see below: the mod. forms are sé, sért, sér (eg sé, þú sért; sért and ert make a rhyme in Pass. 34. 5): imperat. ver, vertú; see Gramm. p. xxiii: there also occurs a subj. pres. verir, veri, Sdm. 22, Ls. 54; þatz án veri, Am. 36; skósmiðr þú verir, Hm. 126, but rarely.

A. Changes and Forms.—Vera is an anomalous verb, which has undergone several changes: I. by changing s to r; of the older form there occur, the infin. vesa, pres. es, pret. vas, vast (vastu), vas; making the 1st and 3rd pers. uniform; this new form appears in vellums pres. subj. vesi; imperat. ves, MS. 623. 25. l. 14, 645. 61. l. 33, 677.

Hom. (Arna-Magn. 237) p. 214. l. 8; pres. indic. 2nd pers. est, Glum. 372; 3rd pers. es: but no traces remain of the older form in pret. plur. indic. and subj. (váru væri, never vásu væsi). Rhymes in poets and the spelling of the oldest extant poems shew that the s form alone existed in Icel. down to about the end of the 12th century, the time of Snorri Sturluson, when the modern forms crept in probably from Norway, for there the change seems to have taken place a century or so earlier; the old Norse veilums (written in Norway or by Norsemen) are distinguished from the Icel, by their constant use of the r: the phrase 'at upp vesandi sólu,' in N.G.L. i. 4, being the only instance of the s form in all the Norse vellums. The earliest instances extant of a rhyme to the r form are, the Ht. of Rögnvald, earl of the Orkneys; he was a native of Norway, born about A.D. 1100, and the poem was composed about A. D. 1145; another instance is 'vara, fara' in Fms. vii. 185, in a poem about A.D. 1140, written by an Icelander who had lived in Norway the greater part of his life, the rhyme is therefore a Norwegianism. The first instance in an Icel. poem is in the Ht. of Snorri, A. D. 1222. Instances from poets, Hallfred, Sighvat, Arnorr, and coeval poets; vesa, visi; sás með Sygna ræsi; þági vas sem þessum; vask til Róms í báska; vastu, kosta; vas fyrir Mikkjals-messu; nú es um verk bau er vísi; bráskat bat dægt báski: from A. D. 1100-1150, Geisli, Pd., etc., svás, ræsir; esat, risnu; vasa, tysvar; vestu, freistni; vestu, trausta: on the other hand, in the poem of earl Rögvald, vera, skera; gera, vera; var, skar (twice): from later Icel. poems it is sufficient to note, erou, fyrðum; ertú, hjarta; verðú, forðast, Leiðarv. etc. This may sometimes serve as a test, e.g. var ek nær viðr-eign þeirra, Grett., and skap-kers saman vera, Gisl., are impossible in the mouth of poets of the early Saga time; the verses of both these Sagas are a later composition. to the spelling of the MSS.,—the oldest (the Arna-Magn. 677, the Eluc. 674, the Ib. etc.) use the s throughout: vellums of the next period, about A.D. 1200 (e. g. Arna-Magn. 623 and 645), use the later form sparingly, even the second hand in the Reykholts maldagi gives 'es,' not Again, in the vellums of the middle of the 13th century, such as the Cod. Reg. of the Sæm., the Grág., and the Mork., the mod. spelling has entirely got the better of the old, and an 'es' only creeps in, as if unawares, from an older copy. Of the poetical literature, the Pd. alone has been preserved in a copy old enough to retain the s; all the rest have the modernised spelling, even in the rhymed syllables quoted above; such too is the case with the Cod. Reg. of the Sæm. Edda; but had that vellum been but fifty or sixty years older, the forms vesa, es, vas, etc. would now be the established spelling in Editions of these poems. on Danish and Swedish Runic stones, the 3rd pers. pret. sing. is a word of frequent occurrence; the best Danish monuments have was, e. g. ias vas farinn vestr, Thorsen 93 and 101 (on a stone of the reign of Sweyn, died A.D. 1014). In Sweden the great majority present the later form: the so-called Ingvar stones are chronologically certain, being of the middle of the 11th century (Ingvar died A. D. 1039); there we read, 'vas' (twice), 'varinn' (once), 'var' (thrice, being twice spelt with A, once with R): this shews that about this time in Sweden the later or more modern form had begun to be used, but that the old was still II. suffixed personal pronoun or suffixed negation; remembered. em'k (tautologically ek em'k=I-am-I), emk, Ad. I, Vpm. 8, Fms. xi. 91; ek emk, Mork. 89. l. 13, 104. l. 23, Clem. 136. l. 20, 138. l. 13; vask, I was, 133. l. 25, Mork. 89. l. 16; vark, Post. 225, v. l. 15; ek vark, Ls. 35; vestu, be thou, Clem. 129. l. 27; es pú, art thou, l. 30, 130. l. 11; sjá'k (may I be), ek sják, Mork. 134; at sják, 189. l. 29; ek sják, Hbl. 9, Hkv. 1. 20; at ek gjarn sják, Stor.; with double kk, þó at ek sjákk, Mork. 89. 2. a medial form, erumk, erumz, or apocopated erum, Stor. 1, Ad. 16, Hkv. 1. 25, Korm. ch. 5. 2, Ls. 35, Bragi (see senna); leið erum-k fjöll, Edda (in a verse); várumk, were to me, Am. 3. suff. neg. eru-mk-a, it is not to me, Stor. 17, Eg. (in a verse); emkat-ek, am I not I, i. e. I am not, Hbl. 34, Skm. 18, O. H. 192 (in a verse): er-at, es-at, or er-a, es-a, is not, passim; eru-b, are not, Skv. 1. 42; ert-attu, thou art not, Vtkv.; vart-attu, thou wast not, Gs., Eg. (in 4. sá's = sá es, that is, Hallfred a verse); veri-a, be not, Mork. 37.1.8. (Fs. 95); svá's = svá es, so is, Fms. vii. (in a verse). III. the plur. eru when suffixed to words ending in r drops the initial e, and is suffixed; this spelling, which agrees with mod. Icel. pronunciation, was afterwards disused; peir-ro, they are, Gm. 34; margir-ro, many are, Hkv. 2. 11; Æsir-ro, the Ases are, Vsp. 40; skildir-ro, shields are, 44; torogætir-ro, rare are, Korm. VESALL, adj., fem. vesul or vesöl, neut. vesalt. The forms vary, being contracted or uncontracted, veslir, etc., as well as vesalir, etc., whence a. contr. veslir, veslar, veslum, Al. 57, Th. 6; lastly, vesælir, etc.: vesla (acc. pl.), Hom. 109; veslu (gen. fem.), Post. (Unger) 108; veslir, O.H. 151, Sks. 681; vesla (gen.), Fms. viii. 242 (vesæla, v.l. of a later vellum); selum ok veslum. B. uncontr. vesala = vesla, Fms. ii. 46; vesala, Post. (Unger) 18 (vesæla, v. l.); vesalir, Al. 96, l. 18; this regular declension is still in full use in Icel. speech, only not contracted, e.g. vesall, vesalingr, vesalir (not veslir); vesæla, Fas. i. 49 (paper MS.): so also in the compar. either vesalli, Greg. 37, Sd. 188; vesalla, 656 C. 34; vesalstr, Kormak, Bjarn. (in a verse); but veslari, Barl. 23 (vesalli, v. l.) Ves is the root, -all the inflexive syllable: the form vessell is a later form, from a false etymology, as if from vé- privative, and sæll, bappy. The origin of vesall is dubious, the radical s is against a derivation from the compar, verri, Goth, wairiza; and the short vowel is against deriving it from vás, vés, q.v. The true etymology, we believe, is that vesall stands for 'usall,' being derived from the prep. ur, or-, in its ancient form us; Goth. us-; Icel. ur-, or-; this etymology is confirmed by form and sense alike; the old phrases, alls vesall (omnium expers), vesall eigu (proprii expers), were originally alliterative phrases; in Hm. 22, 69, vesall is made to alliterate with a vowel (vesall maor ok illa skapi ...erat maor alls vesall bott hann sé illa heill); usall is actually found written in Nj. (Lat.) 264, v.l.; the change of us into ves may be illustrated by the case of varr (q. v.); it is the opposite to that vocalisation of v which so frequently takes place. As to sense, vesall originally meant bereft, destitute of, = Lat. expers; and is followed by a genitive: [the Dan. form is usel, less right ussel.]

B. Usages: I. with gen. bereft of; mæl bú alls vesall, Nj. 124, v.l.; ok em ek vesall eigu, bereft of my own, Háv. 42 new Ed.; mæl þú alls usall, Nj. (Lat.) 264, v.l. VETR, m., gen. vetrar, dat. vetri; pl., nom. and acc. vetr, gen. vetra, dat. vetrum: it was an assimilated form anciently written vettr or vittr, qs. vintr; vitrar or vittrar (gen.), Post. (Unger) 233; vettr is freq., esp. in N.G.L.; double consonants are in vellums difficult to distinguish from single, and so tt may well have been the current form, although the Edd. give the mod. form (vetr): in poets we find, mitt sextigu vittz, Glum. (in a verse): vintr occurs in Icel. ballads of the 15th century, see pryml., Völs. R., Skáld H. R., but here it is merely an imitation of Danish originals, for the word in Icel. always took the assimilated form: [Uif. wintrus = xeepan and eros; A. S., Engl., and Germ. winter; Dan. Swed. vinter, for the assimilation of nt into tt did not prevail in the south of Scandinavia, see Gramm. p. xxx, col. 1.]

A. A winter; winter, like summer (see sumar), is a calendary period, containing 180 days, or six months of thirty days; the winter begins on the Saturday next before St. Luke's day (old style), or on St. Luke's day, if a Saturday. In the Gregorian style, for 1872 and 1873, vetrardagt fyrsti, the first winter day = Saturday, the 26th of Oct.; mior vetr, mid-winter, the 24th of Jan.; sidasti vetrar dagr, the last winter day= Wednesday, the 23rd of April; Laugardagr skal fyrstr vera i vetri, en þaðan skal vera sex mánuðr þrjátigi nátta til sumars, K. p. K. 166; vetr kemr laugardaginn er næstr er fyrir Lúkas-messu, en hana sjálfa ef hlaupár ferr eptir, Rb. 490; Drottins-dagr inn fyrsti i vetri skal vera inn priði frá messu-degi Cosmi ok Damiani, Rb. 434: as a general term, í vetr, this swinter, Nj. 4; hafa blót hvern vetr, O. B. Usages .- A week, passim: used in a peculiar manner, as marking the remaining weeks of the summer; lior a sumarit til atta vikna, viz. till eight weeks remained before winter, Nj. 93; var Rutr heima til sex vikna, 10; vá Böðvarr Kolbein Drottins-daginn at fjórum vikum, Ann. 1376. The ancient Scandinavians and Teutons in heathen times seem to have counted the year by pentads, called fimt, as has already been remarked s. v. fimt (p. 153), to which may be added the authority of the late Prof. Schlegel of Copenhagen in a notice of 1825, mentioned in Lex. Mythol. p. 753. The time when the Scandinavians changed their system is quite unknown; it would seem that in Icel. 'weeks' were already in use in the middle of the 10th century, could we but trust the record in 1b. ch. 4 as authentic in its details. Vik-dælskr, adj. from the county W., Fms. vii.

víking, f. a freebooting voyage, piracy; see vikingr. In heathen days it was usual for young men of distinction, before settling down, to make a warlike expedition to foreign parts, this voyage was called 'viking,' and was part of a man's education like the grand tour in modern times; hence the saying in the old Saga,—'when I was young and on my voyage (viking), but now I am old and decrepit;' so a son begs his father to give him a 'langskip,' that he may set out on a 'viking,' cp. the scene of the young Egil and his mother Bera, and the reference Fms. i. 69; see B. The custom was common among Teutonic tribes, and is mentioned by Caesar B. G. vi. ch. 23 (latrocinia nullam habent infamiam, quae extra fines cujusque civitatis fiunt, sqq.), only there it is a foray on land; (cp. the mod. American filibustering.)

B. REPERENCES illustrating this word: Leifr for i hernað í vestrvíking, Landn. 32; Ólafr inn hvíti herjaði í vestr-víking ok vann Dyflinni, 108; Geirmundr heljar-skinn var herkonungr, hann herjaði í vestr-víking, 121; hann kom út síð landnáma-tíðar, hann hafði verit í vestr-víking ok hast or vestr-viking þræla Írska, 133; Ann varð missáttr við Harald konung inn hárfagra, hann fór því ór landi í vestr-víking, 140; Ingimundr var víkingr mikill ok herjaði í vestr-víking jafnan, 174; Ævarr fór til Íslands ór víkingu, ok synir hans, 185; Björn var á sumrum í vestr-viking en á vetrum með Öndótti, Eyvindr fór þá í vestr-víking, 204; þá var Þorsteinn son Ásgríms í víkingu, en Þorgeirr annarr son hans var tíu vetra, 202; hann var í víking á sumrum ok fékk sér fjár, Hkr. i. 171; Hjörleift konungt féll í víkingu, Fas. ii. 35; leggjask í viking ok hernad, Fms. xi. 73; fara i viking, Eg. 260; Grimr, beir vóru í vestr-víking, ok drápu í Suðreyjum Ásbjörn jarl skerja-blesa, ok tóku þar at herfangi Ólöfu konu hans, Grímr fór til Íslands, Landn. 314; þá er ek var ungr ok í víkingu ... en nú hálfu síðr at ek em gamall ok örvasi, Glúm. 337; ek vil senda yðr austr til Svíþjóðar á fund eins bezta vinar míns, er mí er kallaðr Hákon gamli, við vórum lengi báðir samt í víking, var með okkr inn kærasti félagskapr, ok áttum einn sjóð, Fms. i. 69; en er hann var á unga aldri, lá hann í víkingu ok hernaði, Eg. (begin.); Björn var farmaðr mikill, var stundum í víking en stundum í kaupferðum, 154; er mér þat nær skapi, sagði hann, at þú fáir mér langskip ok þar lið með, ok fara ek í víking (the words of a son to his father), 157: of an expedition in the East (in the Baltic), peir foru um sumarit í víking í Austrveg, fóru heim at hausti ok höfðu aflat fjár mikils ... skip þat höfðu þeir fengit um sumarit í víking, Eg. 170, 171; Björn var nú í víkingu at afla sér fjár ok frægðar, Bjarn. 13: the word occurs also on Swed. Runic stones, sá varð dauðr í vestr-vegum í víkingu, Baut. 962: þá lögðusk sumir menn út í víking ok á herskip, ok mörg endemi tóku menn þá til önnur þau er nú mundi ódæmi þykkja ef menn henti slikt, Bs. i. 62 (referring to Iceland of A.D. 1056-1180): one of the last instances on record is Sturl. i. 152,—hann hafði verit útan nokkura vetr ok verit i vikingu, referring to A.D. 1195: in the Orkneys, among the Norsemen, the viking-life lasted till the 13th century, if not longer.

víkingligr, adj. like a viking, martial, Ld. 276. víkingr, m. a freebooter, rover, pirate, but in the Icel. Sagas used specially of the bands of Scandinavian warriors, who during the 9th and 10th centuries harried the British Isles and Normandy: the word is peculiarly Norse, for although it occurs in A. S. in the poem Byrnoth (six or seven times), it is there evidently to be regarded as a Norse word; and prob. so too in the poem 'Exodus,' in the words rondas bærun sæwicingas, over salme mere; Iastly, in 'Widsith,' as the name of a people, and Lidvicingas (= Lidungar? q.v.) The word 'vikingr' is thought to be derived from vík (a bay), from their haunting the bays, crecks, and fjords;—or it means 'the men from the fjords,' the coincidence that the old Irish called the Norsemen 'Locblannoch,' and Norway 'Locblan,' is curious.

B. A few selected references will illustrate the word:-Naddoddr hét maðr, hann var víkingr mikill, Landn. 26: Flóki Vilgerðarson hét maðr, hann var v. mikill, 28; slógusk í Eyjarnar víkingar ok herjuðu ok ræntu víða, 41; Úlfr víkingr ok Ólafr bekkt fóru samskipa til Íslands, 202; en er þeir lágu til hafs kómu at þeim víkingar ok vildu ræna þá, en Gautr laust stafnbúann þeirra við hjálmun-veli, ok lögðu víkingar við þat frá, síðan var hann kallaðr Hjálmun-gautr, 223; Hrafn hafnar-lykkill var vikingr mikill, hann for til Islands ok nam land . . 269; Ölvir barna-karl hét maðr ágætr í Noregi, hann var víkingr mikill, hann lét eigi henda börn á spjóta-oddum sem þá var víkingum títt, því var hann barna-karl kallaðr, 308; maðr hét Þorsteinn, gamall maðr ok sjónlítill, hann hafði verit rauða-víkingr (q. v.) í æsku sinni, þorst. visa, u, f. [Germ. weise; Dan. vise], a stropbe, stanza; kveda visu, Nj. 12; hann orti kvæði ok eru þessar vísur í, Fms. v. 108; vísu lengd, the length of a stanza, Edda (Ht.) i. 606, 656: referring to the repetition of verses as a means of measuring time (minutes), Fs. (Vd. ch. 26); lausa-vísa, a ditty; níð-vísa, söng-vísa; höldar danza harla snart, þá heyrist visan min, a ditty: as the names of shorter poems, as, Nesja-visur, Austrfarar-visur, by Sighvat; Visna-bók, a book of lays. Unlike the old Greek epics, as well as the poems of the Saxon Beowulf, all ancient Northern poetry is in strophic lays. Four sets of alliteration make a verse (visa), two a half strophe, visu-helmingr, Edda (Ht.) i. 610, or half visa, Grág. ii. 148; one set a quarter of a visa (visu-fjórðungt); each alliterative set being again divided into two halves, called visu-oro, a word or sentence, Edda (Ht.) i. 596, cp. Hallfr. S. ch. 6 (Fs. 96, 97); thus 'fastoror skyli fyrða | fengsæll vera þengill' is an alliterative set. 😝 The vellums give verses in unbroken lines, but in modern print each alliterative set is divided into two lines; this may do for metres of the dróttkvæð kind, with two rhyming syllables in each vísu-orð; but in the brief kviðu-háttr (the metre of the Vsp.) each alliterative set should, for the sake of the flow of the verse, be printed in one line, thus, Hljóðs bið ek allar helgar kindir | meiri ok minni mögu Heimdalar; for a pause only follows between each pair of sets, but none between the sub-staves and the head-stave. This plan is that advocated by Jacob Grimm: the other, commonly followed in the Editions, chops the verse into—hljóðs bið ek allar | helgar kindir | meiri ok minni | mögu VÖLVA, u, f., also spelt völfa, gen. völu, pl. völur; völfu, or also völfur or voluur; gen. pl. does not occur; the nom. Vala is erroneous: [the etymology as well as the origin of this word is uncertain; but may not the Norse Völva and the Gr. σίβυλλα be relations? the identity in sense at least is very striking; the Gr. word first occurs in Aristoph., and then in Plato; may it not have been adopted from some Scythian tribe, COMPDS: voku-mikill, adj. moist, juicy, for a word like this, if Greek, could hardly fail to occur in Homer? in völva an initial s, we suppose, has been lost (qs. svölva); in the Greck 🕆 fóðri hverju, Bs. i. 137; tóku þeir vöndul heys fyrir hvern hest, Sturl iii. the I would be an inserted vowel]:—a prophetess, sibyl, wise woman; völva, seiðkona, spákona (qq. v.) are synonymous. The ancient Sagas contain many remarkable records of the heathen wise-women or sibyls, who were held in honour and reverence; at the great feasts and sacrifices in the autumn, the völva (often a woman of rank) went with her troop of maidens through the country, where she, so to say, crowned the feast; she was scated on a high seat (seidhjallr) in the hall, where she wrought her spells and sang her 'weird-songs' (varðlokur), after which the guests went past her one by one, and she told each his fate, or whatever else one wanted to know, e. g. the course of the coming winter and the like. The former part of the Völuspá is evidently conceived as the inspired song of a völva, seated on her high seat, and addressing Odin, while the gods listen to her words; and the latter part of the poem appears to be a kind of necromancy, or the raising of a dead völva, as also is the lay Vegtamskviða; sú kona var þar í bygð er Þorbjörg hét, ok var kölluð lítil völva, hón hafði áttar sér níu systr, ok vóru allar spákonur, en hón var ein þá á líti, þat var háttr Þorbjargar um vetrum, at hón fór á veizlur ok buðu þeir menn henni mest heim er forvitni var á at vita forlög sín eða árferð, þorf. Karl. Names of such wise women, Gróa völva, Edda; Heimlaug völva, Gullb.; Heiðr völva, Landn. 173; Huldr völva, Yngl. S., Hkr. i. 21; to which add the 'Weleda' of Tacitus: class. passages are porf. S. ch. 3 (exceedingly interesting), Örvar-Odds S. ch. 3 (Fas. ii. 506), Vd. ch. 10: völu vél-spá, Vsp.; eru völfur allar frá Viðólfi, Hdl.; völva ok vís kona, Vtkv.; þá kom til völva sú er Gróa hét, Edda 58; var á því landi spákona sú er sagði fyrir örlög manna, ... þeir fara til móts við völuuna, Fb. ii. 28; ek fór í skóg til þin í völvu líki, Fas, i. 135; þóttusk menn vita at þar mundi verit hafa völu-leiði, Ld. 328; þá reið Óðinn fyrir austan dyrr þar er hann vissi völu leiði, Vtkv.; úrsvöl Gýmis völva, of Rún the goddess, Edda (in a verse); at hás völva valdi því bölvi, Kormak; in a bad sense, völva and skollvis kona, Hkv. 1. 34; Tacitus (Germ. ch. 8, 46, and Hist. iv. 61, 65, v. 22, 24) speaks of these practices, as also does Plutarch, Caesar ch. 19,—τα μαντεύματα των ίερων γυναικών. voxtu-ligr, adj. big, of great size, Fas. iii. 627. vozt, f., pl. vaztir (q.v.), the sing. being only used in Edda (Gl.)

 \mathbf{X} (ex) commonly represents ks, gs (as in other languages), where both letters are radical, thus, ax, fax, lax, sax, öx, vax, vaxa, sex, uxi, vöxtr, fox, jaxl, oxl, qq.v.; but hugsa from hugr; lags from lag; loks from lok; oks (gen.) from ok (jugum); rakstr, bakstr, from raka, baka, etc. The vellums use x in other cases, e.g. sterxti = sterksti, the strongest, Clem. 146; tax (gen.) from tak, N. G. L. i. 47; dux = duks, Clem. 127, 1. 8; lox = loks, 134; vitrleix = vitrleiks, 142; almattex = almattigs, 133; víxla = vígsla, N.G.L. i. 9; fulltinx = fulltings, O. H. 242; vaxcliga = vaskliga, Mork. 178; lyxc=lyksk, 1b. (fine); fexk=fékksk (from fá the verb), Bs. i. 351; ux = ups (q. v.), N. G. L. i. 368: or again, vegs = vex (the verb), Hm. 119; lags = lax (salmon), Sæm. 212, l. 20 (Bugge); dax = dags, N. G. L. i. 23; but on the whole the vellums distinguish gs, ks, and x, shewing the pronunciation in olden times to have been more distinct than it is now, when all three forms (gs, ks, x) represent the same sound, no matter whether the s be inflexive or not; thus in common modern spelling, both hugsa and huxa, dags and dax are used at random. In vellums x and r are very much alike; hence in the wellknown passage in Vsp. the misreading of sarrum (sordibus) for sarxum (ensibus), in all Editions, until Prof. Bugge noticed the stroke underneath the line in Cod. Reg.

V-Ý

Y is of later origin, and only found in derived words, being an 'umlaut' from u, (y from u, y from u); in the Runic alphabet it is placed at the end, and marked 1, see Skálda (ii. 72); it is there called yr, a yewtree,-yr er vetrgrænst vida, 'ýr' is the 'winter-greenest' of trees, Runic

B. The independent sound of y, y is now lost in Icel., being replaced respectively by the sounds i, i, whereas in mod. Dan., Swed. and Norse the old sound has been preserved; the old Icel. MSS., as well as the rhymes in old poems, distinguish both, except in a few instances, see Gramm. p. xxxv, col. 2 (η) . The change from y to i seems to have begun about the time of the Reformation, but in the first printed books, e. g. the N. T. of 1540 and the Bible of 1584, the distinction is still well kept, the remembrance of the old form and etymology being then still alive. Later, the writing became very confused. Some transcribers of the 17th century, e.g. Ketil Jörundsson, a noted copier of old vellums, took the better course, never writing y at all, but i throughout; the same may be observed in the handwriting of some Icelanders down to the present day. In printed books of the 17th and 18th centuries the confusion is great, till of late an accurate spelling has been re-established, though even this fails in a few words; e.g. the ancients spell prysvar, gymbr, qq.v.; the mod. prisvar, gimbr. The poets of the last three centuries make i and y, ei and ey rhyme indifferently, according to the usage of the living tongue. II. an initial v is dropped before y, as in yndi, yrði, yrkja, etc.

ýmis-ligr (ýmiss-ligr), adj. various, diverse, Edda (pref.) 147, 159, Skálda 193, Fms. viii. 1, Sks. 2, Barl. 53, Stj. 3, 93, passim: in mod. = sundry, tala um ýmisligt.

YMISS, a pronom. adj., esp. used in plur.; in Norwegian MSS. often spelt with i, imiss, imser, etc.; imisir, N.G.L. ii. 391. [This word is a compd, the latter part being the adverb miss or mis, for which see p. 480; the prefixed syllable y answers to Goth. aiw = unquam, wore; O.H.G. ei, io; Germ. je; A.S. a; Engl. aye; Hel. io; Icel. æ; see Grimm's Gramm. iii. 51]; hence the oldest form has a double ss, being uncontracted, ymissir, acc. ymissa, Stj.; ymissum, Orkn. (in a verse), Sky. 3. 39; this uncontracted form still remains in the neut. ymist. afterwards it was contracted and turned into a regular participial adjective (see Gramm. p. xix); thus, ymsir, ymsar, ymis, ymsa, or even dat. ymsum; acc. ymsa, ymsar, ynis; in the contracted forms the vowel is sometimes sounded short (ymsir). y. a radical neut. pl. ymsi, Edda

[Cp. Swed. ömse, ömsom, = alternately; ömsa = to sbift.]

B. The Usages: alternate = Lat. vicissim; hann kvað ýmissa (gen. pl.) vandræði mundu verða ef eigi réðisk bætr á, 1b. 8; mega ormar þar ymsir meira ok ýmsir þar undan leggja, Merl. 2. 18 (of the two serpents); Hákon jarl ok Gunnhildar-synir börðusk um Noreg ok stukku ýmsir ór landi, Fms. i. 89; færðu ýmsir aðra niðr, ii. 269; höfðu ýmsir sigr, Yngl. S. ch. 4; lugu ýmsir undir, Fs. 42; ok létu þau ýmsi eptir, ok skrækti hvárt-tveggja við hátt, and gave way

Z (zet). The ancient language had two sibilant sounds, s and z; of which the z never stands at the beginning of a word, but is merely an s assimilated to a preceding dental, in the combinations ld, nd, nn, ll, rb, go, t, see Gramm. p. xxxvi, col. 1. β: its use in ancient vellums is very extensive: 1. in genitives; trollz, illz (illr), allz (allr), holtz, Skm. 32; gullz, 22; ellz = elds, botz = botns, Gkv. 3.9; vatz and vaz = vatns; keyptz, Hm. 107; mótz, Knútz or Knúz = Knúts; vitz (vit); ordz, sverdz, bardz, bordz, gardz, hardz, langbarz, Gkv. 2. 19; Hjörvardz, Hkv. Hjörv. 19; mordz, bragdz, flagdz, Frissb. 107, l. 19; or also orz, Hm. 141, etc.; prestz, Christz, passim; tjallz, Edda ii. 314; landz or lanz, passim; fjallz, Edda ii. 339; but tjalldz, 527; elldz, vindz, 317,318; gandz, 525; brandz, 529; valldz, 338; sverðz, borðz, 331; but borz, 462, l. 20; garz, 529; loptz, 341 (twice); but lopz, 317; netz, 327; gautz, 345; hugskozins, Post. 251. 2. in special forms; stendz, Grág. i. 501 (from standa); stennz, id., O.H. 143; bitzt from binda, Post. (Unger) 154; vizk, vizt, vatzk from vinda (II), q. v.; but vinnz from vinna, q. v.; biz = biðsk from bioja, Post. (Unger) 240: indeed bizt, bazt may be both from binda and bioja: bletza and blezza (to bless), höllzti, qq. v.; beztr or baztı, the best; ceztr = cedstr; batz and baz = bat es, Sæm. passim; batztu, Am. 87; hvartz = hvart es, Grag. (Kb.) i. 161: even mz (or mzt) for the older mk, þóttumz, Gkv. 2. 37. 3. when the z is due to a t following it; in the reflex. -sk is the oldest form, whence -zt, -z, -zst; andask, andazt, andaz, andazst: in the superl. zt, efztir, Frissb. 78, 1. 20; hardazta, 1. 33; snarpazta, l. 16; ríkaztr, 207, l. 18; fríðuzt, l. 34; hagazt, Vkv. 18; grimmaztan, Edda ii. 530; máttkaztr, 280; hvítaz, 207; but st is the usual form, thus, sárastr, grimmastr, hvassastr, Gh. 17: in Azt-ríðr = Ast-ríðr, O. H. 198. 4. in such words as veizla, gzzla, reizla, leizla, hrzzla, gzzka, lýzka, zzka, zzli, vitzka or vizka, hirzla, varzla, hanzki, = veitsla, ... hirosla, varosla, handski, etc.: in reflex. neut. part., thus, hafa borizt, komizt, farizt, tekizt, fundizt, glazt, sagzt, spurzt, kallazt, dæmzt, átzt, ... (from bera...eiga): in reflex, and pers, pl. pres, and pret., e.g. ber segizt, þér sögðuzt, qs. segit-st, sögðut-st, so as to distinguish it from the 3rd pers., þeir sögðust, qs. sögðu-st. 5. Gitzurr or Gizurr, þjazi, Özurr; afraz-kollr, O. H. (pref.); huliz-hjálmr; Vitaz-gjafi, q. v.; but alads-festr, Grag. (Kb.) i. 88; viz, see vidr II: in foreign names, Janzleifr, Jariz-karr, Buriz-leifr, Gkv. 2. 19, Fms. vi. The etymology of words may often be decided by this; e.g. in beisl, a bridle, beiskt, buter, the s of the vellums shews that neither word is derived from bita; beiskr is in fact akin to Engl. beestings, Ulf. beist = ζύμη, A.S. beost: geiska fullr, Hkv. 2. 35, is not from geit, but from geisa: laz or latz (p. 376, col. 1) is from Fr. lace, not = Icel. láss: misseri (q. v.) is no relation to midr, etc.: at lesti, at last, being spelt with s, not z, is not related to latr, but derived from leistr = a cobbler's last, at lesti = Lat. in calce, see Mt. Sweet's Ed. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, p. 474: again, vaztir is akin to vatr = vatn: exceptional cases,—vissi, pret, from vita, and sess, a seat. after a single dental (unless it be t) s, not z, is written; thus, gen. Guds, boðs, brauðs, auðs, góðs, óðs, vaðs, liðs, öls, fals, háls, frjáls, víns, eins, etc., passim: z is quite exceptional, e. g. lioz, Frissb. 106, ll. 16, 33 (but lios, Hbl. 33, Am. 43): so also after rn, rl, nl, rn, fn, gn, barns, Clem. 134; karls, Hkv. 2. 2; jarls, Hm. 97; hrasis, segls, regns, tungls (regns, Edda ii. 340). The vellums are very irregular in the distinction of a single or double consonant, but the sibilant used shews the true form of the word; in 'Odz Colssonar,' O. H. (pref.) l. 11, the z and s shew the names to be Oddr and Kolr, not Odr, Kollr; in a vellum els would be gen. of él, ellz of eldr; in grunz, Edda ii. 287; lunz, 317; hlunz, ranz, lanz, 333; elz, Post. (Unger) 234; golz, 225, l. 23; odz, O. H. (pref.), l. 11; alz, etc., the z shews that though there is only one n, l, etc. written, they were actually sounded double, grunnz, hlunnz, rannz, landz, eldz, gollz, oddz, 2. the s does not change into z if the word is a compd; as, skáld-skapr, vind-svalr, út-suðr, passim; hirð-stjóri, Edda ii. 335. shewing that in ancient times the pronunciation was more distinct than at the present day; the z in ordztir (Edda ii. 344, orztir, 463) shews that the word is qs. ordz-tirr; yet we find such forms as innzigli, Post. 238; guðzspjall, 239; ástzamliga, 243; handzceld, Barl.; randzaka, Post. 134, l. 29; but rannsaka, l. 14; nauzyn = nauðsyn, Skálda 167. 21; nauzuu, Edda ii. 236; anzvara, annzkoti, = andsvara, andskoti, etc. about the 15th century (or earlier) the z sound began to disappear, and s took its place, being at present the only sibilant used in Icel. In later vellums the z is therefore either little used or is misapplied, as in the additions by the third hand in the Flatey-book, or it is used to excess as in modern Dutch. In modern spelling, including Editions of Sagas, the z has been disused, except in the instances coming under the rule given in I. 4: yet with exception of os, for the moderns write leiosla, hradsia, beiðsla, náðst, old leizla, názt, except in reisla (i.e. reizla) from reida: hirzla qs. hirðsla. 2. zz is sounded as ss, blessa, Gissur, Össur; so also vass, boss, = vatz, botz; even ors, gars, lans, sans, for orz, garz, lanz, sanz (gen. of orð, garðr, land, sandr).

P (born) was adopted from the Runic alphabet; its ancient name was born (thorn),-bann staf er flestir menn kalla born, Skálda (Thorodd) 168, cp. Edda ii. 365,—and it is still so called in Icel.; the ancients also called it 'burs' (giant), which was originally the name of a magical Rune, intended to cause love-madness, and in the Runic poem it is so called-burs veldr kvenna kvillu; but in the poem Skm. 'burs' means the magical Rune,—'purs' rist ek pér ok prjá stafi, 'ergi,' 'æði,' ok 'úpola,' Skm. 36. Thorodd proposed to call it 'pe' (like dé, té, bé), Skálda 168. In the Runic inscriptions it is marked , seldom ; the letter is evidently derived from Gr.-Lat., being a A or D with the vertical stroke prolonged both ways. B. Spelling, Pronunciation, Changes .- For the spelling of the ancient vellums see introduction to letter D (p. 93, col. 2). In Icel there is phonetically a double th sound, as in English, but subject to a different rule; the hard tb, marked b, is only sounded as the initial letter of distinct syllables; whereas the soft tb, marked o, is only sounded as a medial or final; and that the case was the same in olden times, as early as the 12th century, is borne out by the statement of the second grammarian (Gramm. p. xv, col. 1), who counts hard th, or h, among the 'headletters,' as he calls them, whereas the soft δ he counts among the 'subletters' (p. xv, col. 2, ll. 4-6). That the initial the had only one sound in Icelandic is also borne out by the mod. Faroe dialect, which has the closest affinity to the Icelandic; for here the initial h has, in pronouns and particles as well as in nouns, changed into t, as in ting, tu, teir. But in the rest of Scandinavia the case is different, for there (Dan., Swed., Norse) ti e initial p has been changed into d in all particles and pronouns, de, du, der, dem, den, dette, dig, deden, for-di (ti is an exception); whilst, in all other words, it has been changed into t, as in ting, taale, tre, etc., which points to a hard and soft th sound, used not as in Icelandic, but as in modern English. According to the views of a gradual and successive 'lautverschiebung,' as set forth in Mr. Sweet's essay 'On the Old English D' (Appendix 1. to Gregory's Pastoral Care, p. 496 sqq.), the Icelandic and the Faroïc represent phonetically a later, the early Danish (old Scandinavian and English) an earlier stage in the development of this sound. It is curious to see how in the Faroïc the sound has come round to Gr.-Lat. again; thus Faroic trir, tu, = Lat. tres, tu, in Dan. tree, but du. a word with initial p forming the latter part of a compound, or even if spelt separately, is apt to be changed into θ as soon as it loses its full sound, and is pronounced rapidly as an inflexive syllable, the latter part in questions becoming half enclitic, see introduction to letter D, p. 93, col. 2 (C. II). In vellums this is very frequent in the words al-dingi, Svi-diód, al-dýda (=alþingi...); so also á ðingi=á þingi, Js. 39; örvar-ðingi, id.; Vaf-ðruðnir, Sæm. (Bugge); hug-ðekkr, Ö. H. 16, etc.; the pr. names Halldorr, Hall-dóra point to a Hall-dórr, Hall-dóra, = Hall-þórr, Hall-þóra; so also Stein-dórr = Stein-bórr = Stein-þórr, for a p could only change into dthrough 0; in Arnorr, qs. Arn-porr, the b has been dropped (Arn-porr, Arn-dorr, Arn-orr?); litt-at = litt-pat, hitt-o-heldr = hitt-po-heldr, flyttier, make baste, already cited in Run. Gramm.; cp. also the change of the pron. $p\dot{u}$ into -du, -bu, -tu, $-\dot{u}$, when suffixed. Quite different and much older is the dropping of initial h (i.e. δ) in the particles enn = ann = h pann, Engl. tban, and in at = bat, Engl. tbat, Old Germ. daz: in the pronouns ber, bid, for er, id, the h comes from the termination of the preceding verb. For the rest see the introduction to letter D, to which we may add that a single Icelandic vellum, the later handwriting in Arna-Magn. 645, now published in Post. (Unger) 216-236, is interesting for its uncertain use of p and d; at the time it was written, the d was still a newly adopted letter, and the transcriber uncertain as to its use, so that no conclusion may be drawn from this isolated case; these are the instances,-upp du, 216. ll. 19, 27, 219. l. 39; skirpr degar, 217. l. 9; upp degar, 220. l. 1; blezobu deim, 217. l. 34; af deim, 223. l. 10; fyrir deim, 224. ll. 14, 18; bober deim, 228. l. 19; viþ dá, 218. l. 13, 235. l. 5; þá daþan, 235. l. 17; af ðvi, 219. l. 15, 232. l. 21, 234. l. 11, 235. l. 13; ifer ðá, 222. l. 31; firir đa trú, 232. l. 34; frá đór at þú (sic), 226. l. 23; frá þér ef ðu (four lines below); ek biþ ðik, 227. l. 17; viþ ðik, 236. l. 7: after a comma, đá er rétt, 231. l. 36; du laust, 233. l. 32: with nouns and verbs, of dorp ok borgir, 217. l. 35; ok dokkubu, 224. l. 25; firir dys alþydo, 227. 1. 12. III. the Icel. p answers to Gr.-Lat. t, see e. g. the τοοt tan (τείνω, tendo, tenuis), compared to the Icel. benja, bunnr; brir = Lat. tres; promr = Gr. τέρμα, Lat. terminus; befr, cp. Lat. těpidus, etc., see the special words. 2. again, Germ. d answers to Icel. b. ding, drei, denken; in a few words the laut-verschiebung is irregular, thus, Engl. tight, Icel. hettr; hurfa = Engl. dare. Only a few words with initial b have been adopted in later times, such are, penkja, panki, prykkja (= Germ. denken, ge-danke, drücken); these words were borrowed about the time of the Reformation, probably from German, not Danish, i. e. from words with d; in these words the laut-verschiebung, strange to say, has been duly observed, as if by instinct, which would hardly have been the case had it been borrowed through the Danish 1: but in trass = Germ.

dratzen, mod. Germ. trotzen, Icel. bratta, the true form has not been restored; so also in mod. usage Icelanders are beginning to say tak, tak (= Dan. tak = tbanks), unmindful of their own bakk, bakka: t and b are unsettled in tyrma and byrma; tolla, see bola (II); tremill and premill; peisti and teista: f and p interchange in Icel, pel, Engl. file; pel and Lat. pilus, bel and fjöl, and in a few other words: s and b in sust for bust.

pagsi, adj.; the parent-word of the mod. Dan. tavs (silent) has hitherto not been found in the old Icel. literature; it should be pagsi, but most if not all words of that form were obsolete as early as the 12th and 13th centuries, and have disappeared in mod. Icel., as hugsi, stadsi, heitsi . . .; we believe it is preserved in the corrupted 'begn varo' in the transcript of the Ib., where we propose to read, svá at allir menn myndi 'bagsi verda' (= Dan, blive tavse) medan hann mælti at lögbergi, so that all men would become silent whilst be spoke on the Law-bill, 1b. 7. In an ancient vellum a si, with the upper end of the s faint or blotted out, and an n or μ would be distinguished with difficulty; and as to an Icel transcriber bagsi was quite an unknown word, while 'begn,' 'bagn' were familiar syllables, he would choose the latter; the vellum itself was lost soon after the copy had been taken in A.D. 1651. In Rb. (Isl. i. 385) the word has been paraphrased into 'begja;' see the Academy, vol. i, p. 278.

poims = peim es, Hm. 3, Fms. i. 100 (in a verse), vi. 38.

PEIR, pær, pau. This is the plur of the personal pron., answering to sing. hann, hón, pat; gen. peira and mod. peirra; dat. peim; acc. pá, pær, pau; in mod. speech pau is sounded paug, which form occurs as early as Run. Gramm. of 1651, and often rhymes in mod. poets with words ending in g, e. g. flaug, paug, Bb. 2. 17: [the A. S. uses the forms bi, bira, bin, bi, and so in early South. E., whereas the North. E. has thay, thair, thaim; South. E. and Chaucer bii, bere, bem, Morris' Specimens, p. xv; Dan. de, deres, early Dan. deræ, dat. dem.]

A. They, them, theirs (see Gramm. p. xxi); töluðu þeir mart, ríða þeir heim af þingi; þeir kómu í Fljótshlíð, Gunnarr tók vel við þeim; Njáll mælti til þeirra..., slíkar fortölur hafði hann fyrir þeim,... þeir spurðu þær tíðenda, búðu þær eigi leyna, þær sögðu svá vera skyldu; at þeim muni illa sækjask at vinna oss,... vér getum þá eigi með vápnum sótta, and so in endless instances.

2. a peculiarity of the Icel, is the constant use of the neut. plur. 'þau' as collective for a masc. and fem.; síðan gengu þau inn bæði (i. e. Njall and Bergthora), at hann skyldi breiða yfir þau húðina; börn þeirra Þjálfa ok Rösku, ok görðusk þau... þá er þau höfðu gengit litla hríð, Edda 28; Ask ok Emblu... önd þau né áttu óð þau né höfðu, Vsp.; and so also of things, e.g. þau páll og reka; þau hönd og fótr, and so on.

B. Special usages; this pronoun is used collectively before the names of two or more persons, the neuter being used when the persons are 1. where more than one are expressly named; pau Asgerdr ok porsteinn, they, Asgerd and Thorstein, Eg. 702; peir Starkaðir ok Þórðir, ok Flosi, Nj. 282; börn þeirra Hildigunnar ok Kára, the children of H. and K., id.; synir þeirra Starkaðar ok Hallberu vóru beir borgeirr ok Börkr ok borkell, 89; synir hans voru beir Kolr ok Ottarr ok Haukr, id.; bræðr Hallgerðar vóru þeir Þorleikr, faðir Bolla, ok Ólafr faðir Kjartans, ok Búrðr, they, Thorleik, Olave, and Bard, 2; faðir þeirra þorkels föður Brands, ok þorgils föður míns, Jb. 20 (restored by Maurer; the emendation in the Editions is an error; the passage is parallel to that given above from Nj.); porr ok peir lagsmenn, Thor 2. ellipt., as it seems, where and they-bis followers, Edda 28. the one part is understood, and not named; in this case the neut. pau is used whenever the name understood is different in gender; peim Oddi, to Odd and bis men, Fms. vi. 379; peir Vagn, W. and bis men; peir Pálnatóki, P. and bis men, xi. 95; peir póroddr, . . peim póroddi, Hkr. ii. 251; frá skiptum þeirra pórðar, the dealings of Thord (and Björn), Fms. iv. 110; beir sedgar, they, father and son, Nj. 8; hau Asgerdt, Asgerd and ber son, Eg. 702; vinatta var med heim frændum beirra, i. e. between bim and their kinsmen, Grett. 132; beirra brædra, Fms. xi. 160; þeir í Orkneyjum, Nj. 270; af þeim (those) fyrir austan árnar, 210.—This use of the pronoun beir, bær, bau is peculiar to the old Scandin, and Icel, tongue, and is not found in any other Teut. language. We take it to be a remnant from an ancient time when the article was still used detached and not suffixed, being, as in Homeric Greek, used half as a demonstrative pronoun; thus Iliad viii. 457, aid 'Αθηναίη τε και "Ηρη, sounds quite Icel., þær Aþena og Hera; Icel. extend it also to the other cases, peirra (gen.) Abenu og Heru, peim Abenu og Heru; cp. also Il. xiii. 496, 526; the usage of the neut., as above, seems peculiar to Icel. It is therefore an error to explain 'beir bóroddr,' etc., as if a copula 'ok' had been dropped between the pronoun and the pr. name, peir 'ok' poroddr; it is in fact an elliptical abbreviated version of the usage in B. 1: similar is the use of hann and hón for the sing. (see hann B. II. p. 239, col. I), and of Gr. & as in Od.

C. For this pronoun as demonstrative, see pat, p. 731.

ÞEKKJA, δ, and later t; an older pret. pátti answers to Goth. pagkjan, pabta, and occurs in old poems in four instances, which see below: [Goth. pagkjan = λογίζεσθαι; A.S. pencan, pôbte: Engl. tbink, pret. tbought; Hel. penkjan, pret. pabta; O.H. G. dankjan; Germ. denken, pret. dachte; whence mod. Dan. tænke; Swed. tänka; whence mod. Icel. penkja. In the old Norse the sense of 'to think' is still undeveloped, and only appears in the borrowed mod. form penkja; cp. pykkja.]

A. To perceive, know: I. to perceive, espy, notice, of the senses; bóttuð mér, er ek þátta, Þorkels liðar dvelja, when I espied them, O. H. L. (in a poem of A. PESSI, fem. pessi, neut. petta, a demonstr. pron.

A. THE FORMS.—The Icel., like other Teut. languages, except the Goth., has two demonstr. prons., one simple, sá sú þat, another emphatic or deictic, bessi, betta (cp. Gr. o and ode, Lat. bic and bicce); the latter is a compound word, the particle -si, sometimes changed into -sa, being suffixed to the cases of the simple pronoun; Dr. Egilsson, in Lex. Poet., first explained that this suffix was the imperative 'see,' Goth. sai; bessi, as well as the Engl. thi-s, the-se, tho-se, is therefore qs. the-see, that-see. The forms vary much: I. the earliest declension is with the suffixed particle, like -gi in ein-gi, q.v., indeclinable; it is mostly so on the Runic stones, where we find the following forms,—dat. peim-si (buic-ce), Rafn 178; acc. pann-si (bunc-ce), passim; pá-si (banc-ce): plur. peir-si (bi-ce); dat, peim-si (bis-ce); acc. pá-si (bos-ce); neut. plur. bau-si (baec-ce), passim; of this declension the vellums have only preserved the dat. sing. neut. pvi-sa, and the dat. masc. sing. and plur. peim-a. On the Runic stones the acc. masc. sing, and plur,, the acc. fem. plur., and the acc. neut. plur. are, so to say, standing phrases—to raise 'this stone,' 'these stones,' or 'these kumbls' (neut. plur.), or to carve 'these Runes;' but the other cases can only be assumed from later forms; in the Runic inscriptions they are wanting, because there was no occasion for them; thus pvi-sa and peima are freq. in old Icel. vellums, but are hardly met with in Runes. Even nom, sing, masc, and fem. sá-si (bic-ce) and sú-si (baec-ce) are said to occur in two or three Runic inscriptions. the whole word was next turned into a regular adjective with the inflexion at the end, just like margr from mann-gi, öngr from ein-gi, in which case the suffix became assimilated to the preceding pronoun, sometimes the inflexive s and sometimes the final letter of the pronoun prevailing; hence arose the forms as given in Gramm. p. xxi: a. the s prevailed in the forms bessi qs. ber-si; in bes-sa; in bessum qs. beim-sum, bem-sum; runum pimsum (bisce literis) occurs in Rafn 165, but is there erroneously explained; in bessu qs. því-su: acc. plur. bessa qs. bú-sa, bessar qs. bær-sar, bessi qs. bau-si. β. again, the final of the pronoun prevailed in penua qs. pann-sa, petta qs. pat-sa; so also in peima, which stands for penmma, which again is an assimilation for beim-sa or beim-si. 2. the older form for gen. and dat. sing. fem., as also gen. plur., is bisyllabic (gen. pessa, dat. pessi, gen. plur. pessa); bessar messu, Hom. 41; bessar upprúsar, Fms. i. 166: í þessi útlegð, 78; af þessi sótt, ix. 390; til þessa saka, Grug. i. 324, and passim; hence, later, bessarrar, bessarra; thus, pessarrar, MS. 544. 151; pessarri, Sks. 672 B; pessarrar, 786 B, and so in mod. usage.

III. a spec. form is pessor (q. v.), formed like nokkorr or engarr, but only used in nom, sing, fem, and nom, acc. neut, plur. (pessor bæn, pessor orð); it seems to be a Norse form: [A.S. pes, pl. bas; Engl. this, these; Hel. pese; O. H. G. deser; Germ. dieser; Dan.-Swed. denne is formed from the old acc. penna; pl. disse.]

B. The Sense.—This, pl. these. For the usages see the writers passim; it suffices to observe, that pessi is used both as adjective and as substantive; as adjective it may be placed before or after its noun (bessi kona or kona bessi): ellipt. usages are, i bessu, in this moment, Fins. u. 60; i bessi (viz. hrið), in this nick of time. x. 415. For its usage with the article inn, see hinn, p. 263, col. I (II. 1); bessi inn skakk-borm, sveinn, Al. 29; benna inn unga dreng, 656 C. 32, and passim.

poss-konar, gen. of that kind, such, Hkr. i. 119, Isl. ii. 391, Ib. 9, Sks. 97, Fms. x. 289.

Pindar-lauss, adj. without a diaphragm, one who is never out of breath in running, esp. used as an epithet of the fox.

ping, n. [no Goth, higg is recorded; A.S. and Hel. bing; Engl. tbing; O. H. G., Germ., and Dutch ding; Dan.-Swed. ting.]

A. A thing, Lat. res. In the Icel. this sense of the word is almost unknown, although in full use in mod. Dan.-Swed. ting, where it may come from a later Germ. influence.

II. in plur. articles, objects, things, esp. with the notion of costly articles: beir rannsaka allan hans reiðing ok allan hans klæðnað ok þing, articles, Sturl. iii. 295; þau þing (articles, inventories) er hann keypti kirkjunni innan sik, Vm. 20; þessi þing gaf Herra Vilkin kirkjunni í Klofa,—messu-klæði, kaleik, etc., 26.

2. unluables, jewels (esp. of a married lady), the law often speaks of the 'ping' and the 'heimanfylgja;' ef maðr fær konu at lands-lögum réttum... þá skulu lúkask henni þing sín ok heimanfylgja, Gþl. 231; hann hafði ór undir-heimum þau þing at eigi munu slík í Noregi, Fms. iii. 178; síðan tók hón þing sín, 195; eptir samkvámu (marriage) þeirra þá veitti Sveinn konungr áhald þingum þeim er ját vóru ok skilat með systur hans, x. 394; maðr skal skilja þing með frændkonu sinni ok svá heiman-fylgju, N. B. As a law phrase [see bingvöllr]: I. an assembly, meeting, a general term for any public meeting, esp. for purposes of legislation, a parliament, including courts of law; in this sense bing is a standard word throughout all Scandinavian countries (cp. the Tyn-wald, or meeting-place of the Manx parliament): technical phrases, blasa til bings, kveðja bings, stefna bing, setja bing, kenna bing (N.G.L. i. 63); helga bing, heyja ping, eiga ping; slita pingi, segia ping laust, to dissolve a meeting, see the verbs: so also a ping 'er fast' when sitting, 'er laust' when dissolved (fastr 1. y, lauss II. 7); Dróttins-dag hinn fyrra í þingi, ríða af þingi, ríða à ping, til pings, vera um nott af pingi, öndvert ping, ofanvert ping, Grag. i. 24, 25; nu eru par ping (parliaments) tvau à einum pingvelli, ok skulu þeir þá fara um þau þing bæði (in local sense), 127; um várit tóku bændr af þingit ok vildu eigi hafa, Vápn. 22; hann hafði tekit af Vöðlaþing, skyldi þar eigi sóknar-þing heita, Sturl. i. 141: in countless instances in the Sagas and the Grag., esp. the Nj. passim, 1b. ch. 7, Gisl. 54-57, Giúm. ch. 24, 27, Eb. ch. 9, 10, 56, Lv. ch. 4, 15-17: other kinds of assemblies in Icel. were Leidar-bing, also called bridja-bing, Grag. i. 148; or Leid, q. v.; hreppstjórnar-bing (see p. 284); manntalsþing; in Norway, bygða-þing, D. N. ii. 330; hús-þing, vápna-þing, refsi-ping, v. sub vocc.:—eccl. a council, H. E. i. 457, Ann. 1274; bing 2. a parish (opp. to a benefice); in Iceland í Nicea, 415. 14. this word is still used of those parishes whose priest does not reside by the church, no manse being appointed as his fixed residence; such a parish is called bing or binga-braud (and he is called binga-prestr, q. v.), as opp. to a 'beneficium,' Grág. i. 471, K. p. K. 30, 70, K. A. passim; bondi er skyldr at ala presti hest til allra nauðsynja í þingin, Vm. 73; tíundir af hverjum bónda í þingunum, 96, Bs. i. 330, H. E. ii. 48, 85, 3. an interview, of lovers, H. E. i. 244; pat var talat at porbjörn væri í þingum við þórdísi, Gísl. 5; nær þú á þingi mant nenna Njardar syni, Skm. 38; man-bing, laun-bing. II. loc. a district, county, sbire, a ping-community, like log (see p. 369, col. 2, B. II); 2 'ping' was the political division of a country; hence the law phrase, vera i pingi med goda, to be in the district of such and such a godi, to be his liegeman, cp. þingfesti; or, segjask or þingi, see the Grág., Nj., and Sagas, passim; full godord ok forn þing, Grág. i. 15; í því þingi eðr um þau þing, 85. In later times Icel. was politically divided into twelve or thirteen counties. In old days every community or 'law' had its own assembly or parliament, whence the double sense of 'lög' as well as of 'ping.'

C. HISTORICAL REMARKS.—In Norway the later political division and constitution of the country dates from king Hacon the Good and his counsellors Thorleif the Wise and earl Sigurd. As king Harold Fairhair was the conqueror of Norway, so was his son Hacon her legislator as also the founder of her constitution, and of her political division into 'pings;' for this is the true meaning of the classical passage,—hann (king Hacon) lago mikinn hug & laga-setning i Noregi, hann setti en áðr höfðu sér hverir fylkis-menn lög, Ó. H. 9; in Hkr. l.c. the passage runs thus-hann setti Gulabings-log med rudi borleifs spaka. ok hann setti Frostabings-lög med radi Sigurdar iarls ok annara brænda beirra er vitrastir voru, en Heidsævis-lög hafdi sett Hálfdan svarti, sem fyrr er ritad. Hkr. 340 new Ed.; the account in Eg. ch. 57, therefore, although no doubt true in substance, is, as is so often the case in the Sagas, an anachronism; for in the reign of Eric 'Bloodaxe,' there were only isolated fylkis-bing, and no Gula-bing. In later times St. Olare added a fourth hing, Borgar-ping, to the three old ones of king Hacon (those of Gula, Frosta, and Heidsævi); and as he became a saint, he get the name of legislator in the popular tradition, the credit of it was taken from Hacon, the right man; yet Sighvat the poet speaks, in his Bersöglis-visur, of the laws of king Hacon the foster-son of Athelstan. Distinction is therefore to be made between the ancient 'county' bing and the later 'united' bing, called lög-bing (Maurer's 'ding-bund'); also almennilegt bing or almanna-bing, D. N. ii. 265, iii. 277; fjordunga bing, ii. 282; alþingi, alls-herjar-þing. The former in Norway was called fylkis-þing, or county þing; in Icel. vár-þing, héraðs-þing, fjórðungs-þing (cp. A. S. scirgemot, a shiremote). Many of the old pre-Haconian tvikisbing or sbiremotes seem to have continued long afterwards, at least in name, although their importance was much reduced; such we believe were the Hauga-bing (the old fylkis-bing of the county Westfold), Firs. viii. 245, Fb. ii. 446, iii. 24; as also prondarness-ping, Arnarheims-ping, II. in Iceland the united bing or Kefleyjar-bing, Mork. 170. parliament was called Al-bingi; for its connection with the legislation of king Hacon, see 1b. ch. 2-5 (the chronology seems to be confused): again, the earlier Icel. spring bings (vár-bing), also called hérads-bing (county bing) or fjórðunga-þing (quarter þing), answer to the Norse fyikis-þing; such were the porness-ping, Eb., Landn., Gisl., Sturl.; Kjalarness-ping. Landn. (App.); pverár-þing, 1b.; also called þingness-þing, Sturt. ii. 94; Húnavatns-þing, Vd.; Vöðla-þing, Lv., Band.; Skaptafells-þing, Ni.: Arness-ping, Floam. S.; pingskala-ping, Nj.; Hegraness-ping, Glum., Lv., Grett.; Múla-bing (two of that name), Jb. (begin.), cp. Grag. i. 127: porskafjarðar-þing, Gísl., Landn.; þingeyjar-þing, Jb.; further, Kraka-lækjar-þing, Dropl. (vellum, see Ny Fél. xxi. 125); Sunnudals-þing, Vápo.: bing við Vallna-laug, Lv.; bing í Straumfirði, Eb.; Hvalseyrar-bing, Gisl.; or þing í Dýrafirði, Sturl.; Fjósatungu-þing, Lv. III. in Sweden the chief bings named were Uppsala-bing, O. H.; and Mora-bing (wrongly called Mula-bing, O.H. I.c., in all the numerous vellum MSS, of this Saga; the Icelandic chronicler or the transcriber probably had in mind the Icel. ping of that name). Knytl. S.; Iseyrar-ping, Jómsv. S. IV. in Denmark, Vebjarga-bing, V. in the Faroe Islands, the bing in borshöfn, Fær. : in Greenland, the bing in Gardar, Fbr. freq. in Icel. local names, ping-völlr, ping-vellir (plur.) = Tingwell, in Shetland; Þing-nes, Þing-eyrar, Þing-ey, Þing-eyri (sing.); Þing-múli, Þing-skálar, etc., Landn., map of Icel.; Þing-holt (near ping-festi, f. a law term, domicile in or allegiance to a ping-community. In the Icel. Commonwealth every franklin had to declare his allegiance to one of the priests, and to say of what community he was a member; vet the word was political rather than strictly geographical, for the 'pings,' like the 'godords,' were not strictly geographical divisions, Grág. i. 164: hence the phrase, spyrja at þingfesti e-s, to speer after a man's bingfesti, call on bim to declare it, as also ganga vid b. e-s, to acknowledge one's p. (of the priest), Grág. (Kb.) i. 3, 43, 132, Nj. 87; pví at einu er rétt at hafa þingfesti í öðrum fjórðungi heldr enn er maðr býr, ef goða er þat lofat þeim at lögbergi at taka þriðjungs-mann útan-fjórðungs, Grág. i. 165, which last passage is evidently a 'novella.'

B. There was also a different use of 'binn' in the vocat., viz. in addressing a person generally in connexion with some word of abuse; pinn heljar-karl, thou bell-carle! Fb. i. 212; bitt illmenni! Fs. 36; binn skelmir! 166; also placed after the noun, even with the suffixed article, hefir þú svikit mik, hundrinn þinn! Isl. ii. 176; mun fóli þinn nokkurum manni grið gefa? Ld. 220; dyðrillinn þinn, Fms. ii. 279; klifar þú nökkvat jafnan mannfýla þin! Nj. 85; hirð eigi þú þat, milki þinn, thou milksop! 182; alldjarfr er þjófrinn þinn, Fms. vii. 127; hvat vill skelmir pinn? Fs. 52; hvat mun bjofr binn vita til bess? Eb. 106; lydda bin, Krók. 7: also freq. in mod. Dan., Norse, and Swed., e. g. Dan. din bund! din skjelm! dit afskum! For In Norway, even in a sense of compassion, nú frys du i hel, ditt vesle ting! gakk heim-atter, din krok=thou, poor fellow! but more freq. as abuse, di sugga! ditt naut! ditt stygge fæ! or it is even there extended to the first person, eg, min arming, I, poor thing! me, vaare stakarar = we, poor fellows! eg viste inkje bettra, min daare! Ivar Aasen's Norse Gramm. p. 332. 2. in cases other than the vocative, but much more rarely; viltú nú biggja grið? þá svarar jarl, eigi af hundinum binum, not from thee, thou dog! Fms. vi. 323; af fretkarli þínum, Fs. 160: acc., er ek sé þik, frænda skömm þína ..., er ek ól þinn úvita, Krók. 7 new Ed.; skulu vér færa þinn úvin til 3. in old writers even in plur., but very rarely; heljar, Fms. vi. 212. hví roa djöslar yðrir (ye devils!), fyrir oss í alla nótt, Fms. ix. 50.—We believe this 'pinn,' as a vocative, to be not the possess. pron. but a compounded form of the pers, pron, 'bú' and the article 'inn,' pinn being qs. p'inn, literally thou the . . .! A strong, and almost conclusive, proof of this is that the uncontracted form actually occurs, and is used in exactly the same sense as the contracted 'binn;' bu inn vandi slangi, thou the wicked scamp! Skida R.; bu inn armi, thou the wretch ! Ld. 326; bu inn mikli madr, thou the great man! Eg. 488; vel, bú hinn góði þjón og trúlyndi, Matth. xxv. 21: the full phrase was accordingly altered in one of two ways; either the article was dropped, bu góði og t. þjón, 20, or pronoun and particle were both contracted into one word, as above. The phrase, we may presume, at first could only have been used in the vocative (binn!); but the origin being soon lost sight of, it was gradually extended to other cases (hundinum binum); and even, esp. in mod. usage, to the other possessive pronouns (diohar yorir). Bearing this in mind, it is easy to understand why this usage is peculiar to the Scandinavian tongue, for although the possessive pronoun binn,' thine, etc., is common to all Teutonic languages, the article 'inn' is peculiar to the northern languages, and therefore a word compounded with it would be so also. Analogous are the phrases, sá inn, þat it, þau in, pann inn ..., see p. 263, col. I (A. II). For another view, see Grimm, Kleine Schr. iii. 256, and 271 sqq.

G. and Germ. dorf; Lat. turba is taken to be the same word: this word, we think, was originally applied to the cottages of the poorer peasantry crowded together in a bamlet, instead of each house standing in its own enclosure, like the 'tún' or 'bzr' or 'garor' of the 'buandi,' hence porpari = a churl (see below); the etymological sense being a crowd, throng, as seen in pyrpast, pyrping (qq. v.), as also in Lat. turba]: I. a bamlet, village, rarely of an isolated farm; foru þau um kveldit í annat þorp skamt þaðan,... þorsteinn hét þar bóndi, Hkr. i. 189 (in East-Norway), Fms. x. 219; margir vóru búendr þar í þorpinu, Ó. H. 151; til Niðaróss, þar var þorp nokkut sett ok kaupstaðr, Fms. x. 294; um þorp ok um bæi (Scotland), Orkn. 78; in Edda 108, porp ef prir eru,... 2. when used of foreign countries it means a thorp or village; borgir, kastalar, porp, Fms. vii. 94; porp ok tún, Sks. 631; Irar hlaupa saman í eitt þorp, Ld. 78; borg eða borp, Stj. 96, 183; þar (in Frisland) varð brátt fyrir þeim þorp eitt ok bygou þar margir bændr, Eg. 528: Lat. villa is rendered 'porp,' Róm. 132, Hom. (St.), (= Matt. xxii. 5); borpin stóðu á bryggjunum ok mikit fjölmenni í þeim þorpum (of London), O. H. L. ch. 10: metaph., þrætuporp, the abode of quarrel, i. e. the mouth, Fms. vi. (in a verse). the word occurs twice in poets in the same sense as in the Goth., a land; hrörnar þöll sú er stendr þorpi á, hlýrat henni börkr né barr, Hm. 49 (here 'porp' seems to mean a field, fenced place, or garden, as opp. to the 'wood'); þrjár þjóðár falla þorp yfir meyja Mögþrasis, three great rivers fall over the field of the Norns, Vpm. 49. II. very freq. as the second compd of Dan. local names, as -trup, or -rup dropping the t, Hos-trup, Kra-rup, Kolde-rup, Vins-trup, Sverd-rup; but in early Dan. -torp or -tborp, thus Bukke-tborp, Thume-tborp, Ny-tborp = mod. Dan. Nyrup, and in many names of places, see Dipl. Thorkel. passim; so also Engl. -tborp and Germ. -dorf: in Norway such local names are rare, in Iceland still more so, yet a porpar, f. pl., occurs in western Iceland, in Stranda-sysla, called 'i porpum.' The reason is that in flat countries cottages lie closer together than in a mountainous country, borpari, a, m. a cottier, peasant, boor, churl, clown, of the lower pea-

FORR, m., gen. Þórs, dat. and acc. Þór, but Þóri dat., Bragi; in Runic inscriptions spelt Þur; [A.S. bunor; Engl. thunder; North. E. thunner; Dutch donder; O. H. G. donar; Germ. donner; Hel. thunar; Dan. Tor, in tor-den; cp. Lat. tōno and tonitrus; the word Þór-r is therefore formed by absorption of the middle n, and contraction of an older dissyllabic Þonor into one syllable, and is a purely Scandinavian form; hence in A. S. charters or diplomas it is a sure sign of forgery when names compd with pur-appear in deeds pretending to be of a time earlier than the Danish invasion in the 9th century; although in later times they abound; the Engl. Thurs-day is a later form, in which the phonetic rule of the Scandin. tongue has been followed; perh. it is a North. E. form. There is a short essay by Jacob Grimm on the etymology of this word.]

A. The god Thor, the god of thunder, keeper of the hammer, the ever-fighting slayer of trolls and destroyer of evil spirits, the friend of mankind, the defender of the earth, the heavens, and the gods, for without Thor and his hammer the earth would become the helpless prey of the giants. He was the consecrator, the hammer being the cross or holy sign of the ancient heathen, hence the expressive phrase on a heathen Danish Runic stone, purr vigi hassi runar, 'Thor, consecrate ibese Runes!' Rafn 193. Thor was the son of mother Earth; blunt, hot-tempered, without fraud or guile, of few words and ready stroke,-such was Thor, the favourite deity of the ancients. The finest legends of the Edda, and the best lays (the lays of Hymir, Thrym, and Harbard) refer to Thor, see the Edda passim, Eb. the first chaptershann varðveitti þar í eyinni Þórs-hof, ok var mikill vin Þórs, ... hann gékk til fréttar við þór ástvin sinn . . . , Eb.; Helgi var blandinn í trú, hann truði á Krist, en hét á þór til sjófara ok harðræða, Landn. 206. For a head of Thor carved on the high-seat pillars, see Eb., Fbr.: or on a talisman, Fs. 97.

B. COMPDS OF PROPER NAMES .- The name of Thor has always been thought to sound well, and is much used in pr. names; (hann átti) son er Steinn hét, þann svein gaf Þórólfr Þór vin sínum ok kallaði Þorstein, Eb.; uncompd only in the form porir of a man, pora of a woman, but common in compds, where in mod. usage the vowel is sounded long before a vowel, and before b and d, elsewhere short, but in old times it was no doubt o throughout;—thus, as a prefix, por-alfr, porolfr, porarr, por-arinn, por-oddr, por-haddr, por-halli, porhallr; but por-bergr, por-björn, por-brandr, por-finnr, porgautr, por-geirr, por-gestr (porgestlingar, the family of Th., Eb.), por-grims, por-gils, por-gnyr, por-kell (qs. porketill), por-laker (sounded pollaker, Bs. i. 356, l. 18, and so in mod. usage), por-leifr, por-leikr, por-ljótr, por-móðr, por-mundr (Dan. Runic stone), por-steinn (sounded posteinn, and often spelt so in later vellums), por-valdr, por-vardr, por-vidr; of women, porey, þór-arna, þor-finna, þor-gríma, þor-gunna, þór-halla, þór-hildr, þór-unn, þór-dís, þor-gerðr, þor-björg, þor-katla, Þór-ný, Þor-veig, Þór-vör. 2. as a suffix, -borr, -bora, -dórr, -dóra; Arn-órr, qs. Arn-þórr and Arn-óra, Stein-dórr, Hall-dórr and Hall-dóra, Berg-þórr and Berg-þóra, Ey-þórr and Ey-þóra, Haf-þórr. Of all these names, three demand special mention, viz. poror, being a contr. qs. por-roor (as Burdr = Bur-roor), the old uncontr. form occurs in poems of the 10th century, e.g. pórröðr vinon óra, Korm. 132; so Sighvat calls his own father porroot (dissyll.), yet he makes it rhyme as if contracted (porrödr er var fordum), so pordr skordu, Bjarn. (in a verse): the other name is purior, a fem. name, a weakened form for Þóríðr, Íb. 363 (qs. Þór-ríðr, like Sig-ríðr); thirdly, Þyri, a fem. name, weakened from Þór-vé, or still older Þór-veig, mod. Dan. Thyra, \downarrow fýsn, Mag.

PRESKJA, t, priskja and pryskva are less correct forms; [Ulf. prisking = άλοαν; A.S. perscan; Engl. thresh; O. H.G. drescan; Germ. dreschen; Swed. turska; Dan. tarska; Lat. tero; Gr. reipo]:-to thresh, D. N. vi. 196; priskja (sic) korn, Fms. viii. 96 (pryskva, v. l.)

preskjöldr, m. [this word is derived from preskja and völlr, and prop. means a threshing-floor, because in ancient times the floor at the entrance was used for threshing, but it then came to mean the block of wood or stone beneath the door, doorsill or threshold; and that in ancient times it was so, is borne out by phrases as, Grima sat & preskeldi, Fbr.; or, stiga yfir þresköldinn, Eb. l. c.; or, þresköldrinn var hár fyrir durunum, O. H. L. 85; see the references. The latter part of the compd. -öldr, is from a time when the older ld had not as yet become assimilated into ll. The word is declined like völlr; nom. preskjöldr, or, dropping the j, presköldr: acc. preskjöld or presköld, Bs. i. 44, Fms. v. 140, Fbr. 14. Korm. 10, Eb. 220, Fs. 68, Edda ii. 122, Hkr. iii. 116, N. G. L. i. 18, 431: dat. preskeldi, Fms. ii. 149, Fbr. 98 new Ed., N. G. A): dat. changing e into i, þreskildi (as if from skjöldr), H. E. i. 496, N. G. L. ii. l. c. The form prepskjöldr, found in mod. Icel. books, is a bad attempt at an etymology, as if it were derived from brep and skijoldr. The form tréskjöldrinn, O. H. L. 85. l. 21, is prob. merely a scribe's error. at last came the mod. form pröskuldr, declined as a regular substantive (like Höskulldr), Sturl. iii. 33; [A. S. persewold or perscold; Engl. thresbold; Dan. tærskel; O. H. G. dirscuwili.]

Sks. 705: $\stackrel{\circ}{\Box}$ of the King and the Giant, and the number of the giant's house-carles tvær, brjár ... búsundir, 623. 53: in mod. usage it is mostly neut. (influenced by Latin?), but also fem. It is spelt bus-hund, Barl, 53; bus-hundum, Fms. vi. 400 (v.l.), Geisli 40; another form bus-hundrao (q.v.) is freq., esp. in Stj., Barl.; this double form -hund and -hundrao answers to the equally double form of 'hundred,' see p. 202, and is a proof that busund is a compound word, the latter part of which is 'hund' or 'hundred;' the etymology of the former part 'bús' is less certain; it is, we believe, akin to bysja, byss, baus-nir (a lost strong verb busa, baus, busu); busund would thus literally mean a swarm of bundreds; [in Goth, the gender varies, busundi, pl. busundjos = xiλιοι, or busundja, neut.; A.S. bûsend; Engl. thousand; O. H. G. dusunta; Germ. tausend. as. dausend; Swed. tusende and tusen; Dan. tusinde; Dutch tuvsend: this word is also common to the Slavon, languages: again, the Lapp, dubat and Finn, tubat are no doubt borrowed from the Slavon, or Scandin.: the Gr., Lat., and Sansk, use other words]:—a thousand.

B. There is little doubt that with the ancient heathen Scandinavians (and perhaps all Teutons), before their contact with the civilised southern people, the notion of numbers was limited, and that their thousand was not a definite number, but a vague term, denoting a swarm, crowd, host (cp. the Gr. μυρίοι): in ancient lays it occurs thrice (Hkv., Em., Fas. i. 502), but indefinitely; hvat brym er bar sem busund bifisk eor mengi til mikit, what a din is there as if a thousand were shaking, or an over-mickle multitude, Em. 2; sjau busundir, Hkv. 1. 49, literally = seven thousands, but in fact meaning seven bosts of men. 2. the dat. pl. búsundum is, like hundruðum, used adverbially = by thousands, in countless numbers, Fms. vi. 400 (in a verse), Geisli 40. ancient popular literature, uninfluenced by southern writers, 'busund,' as a definite number, occurs, we think, not half-a-dozen times. As the multiple of ten duodecimal hundreds, ere the decimal hundred was adopted, 'busund' would mean twelve decimal hundreds; and such is its use in the Sverris Saga, Fms. viii. 40, where one vellum says 'tvær búsundir,' whilst the others, by a more idiomatic phrase, call it 'twenty hundreds. II. in ecclesiastical writers, and in annals influenced by the Latin and the like, it is frequent enough; tíu búsundir, fjórtán búsundir, Fms. i. 107, 108 (annalistic records); fimm busundir, xi. 386, Al. 111; tíu þúsundum, Sks. 705; tíu þúsundum sinna hundrað þúsunda, Hom.; busund busunda, a thousand of thousands, i. e. a million, (mod.); hundrað þúsundir rasta ok átta tigir þúsunda,...hundrað þúsund mílna, Fb. i. 31 (in the legend of Eric the Far-traveller and Paradise, taken from some church-legend); fjórar búsundir, biðr, 234: or of the years of the world, sex busundir vetra, Fs. 197; sjau busundir vetra, Landn. 34.

C. REMARKS.—The popular way of counting high numbers was not by thousands, but by tens (decades) and duodecimal hundreds as factors: thus ten ... twenty bundreds, and then going on three, four, five, six...tens of hundreds (a 'ten of hundreds' being = 1200). The following references may illustrate this—tíu hundruð, ellefu hundruð, tólf hundrud, prettán hundrud, fimtán hundrud . . . , 1b. 17, O. H. 119, 201, Fms. vii. 295, xi. 383, 385. From twenty and upwards-tuttugu hundrad manna, twenty bundreds of men, Fms. vii. 324, viii. 40; halfr þriði tugr hundrada skipa, two tens and a balf bundreds of ships, i. e. twentyfive bundreds, Fas. i. 378; brjá tigu hundraða manna, three tens of bundreds of men, Fms. viii. 311; var skorat manntal, hafdi hann meirr enn briá tigu hundraða manna, vii. 204; þrír tigir hundraða, D. N. v. 18; nær fjórir tigir hundraða manna, nearly four tens of bundreds of men, Fms. vii. 275; á fimta tigi hundrada, on the fifth ten of hundreds, i. e. from four to five tens of bundreds, viii. 321; sex tigir hundrada, six tens of bundreds, 311, xi. 390; sex tigu hundraða manna, Fb. ii. 518, D. I. i. 350,-all odd amounts being neglected. The highest number recorded as actually reckoned in this way is 'six tens of hundreds' (fimtan tigir hundrada, fifteen tens of bundreds, Fms. viii. 321, v. l., is a scribe's error): it is probable that no reckoning exceeded twelve tens of hundreds. All high multiples were unintelligible to the ancients; the number of the Einherjar in Walhella is in the old lay Gm. thus expressed,—there are 'five hundred doors in Walhalla, and five tens beside (the 'five tens' are, by the way, merely added for alliteration's sake), and eight hundred Einherjar will walk out of each door when they go out to fight the Wolf' (on the Day of final Doom). There seems to have been some dim exaggerated notion of a definite thousand in an ancient lay, only preserved in a half alliterative prose paraphrase, Fas. i. 502, where a mythical host is given thus,-there were thirty-three phalanxes, each of five 'thousand,' each thousand of thirteen hundreds, each hundred four times counted. The armies in the battle of Brawalla, the greatest of the mythical age, are given, not in numbers, but by the space the ranks occupied, Skjöld. S. ch. 8. This resembles the story in O. H. ch. 59, of the two young brothers, king's sons: when asked what they would like to have most of, the one said: 'Cows.' 'And how many?' 'As many,' said he, 'as could stand packed in a row round the lake (Mjösen in Norway) and drink.' 'But you?' they asked the other boy: 'Housecarles' (soldiers), said he. 'And how many?' 'As many,' said he, 'as would in one meal eat up all my brother's cows.' Add also the tale Edda ii. 514, 634.

Maurer's Volksagen 306. No less elementary was the rule for division and fractions, of which a remarkable instance is preserved in an ancient Icelandic deed, called Spakonu-arfr, published in D. I. i. 205. See also the words tigr, hundrað, skor, skora, and the remarks in Gramm. p. xix. The Homeric numeration, as set forth in Mr. Gladstone's Homeric Studies. vol. iii, p. 425 sqq., is highly interesting, and bears a striking resemblance to that of the ancient Scandinavians. We may notice that in Iceland land and property are still divided into hundreds (hundreds of ells = 120), see hundrað B: in this case a thousand is never used, but units and hundreds of hundreds as factors, thus, sex togu hundrada, in Reykh. Máld. (a deed of the 12th century), and so still in mod, usage; a wealthy man of the 15th century is said to have bequeathed to his daughters in land, 'tólf hundruð hundraða ok ellefu-tíu og tvau hundruð betr. en i lausafé fimm hundruð hundraða,' i. e. twelve bundreds of bundreds and 'eleventy' and two bundreds, and in movables five bundreds of bundreds, Fedga-æfi 16 (by the learned Bogi Benidiktsson of Stadarfell in Iceland, A. D. 1771-1840); siau hundruð hundraða og briátigi hundrud betr. 21: hann eptir-let börnum sinum fjármuni upp á níu hundruð hundraða, 22,-a proof that in very remote times, when this valuation of land first took place, 'thousand' was still unknown as a definite number.

This is a double letter— α , compounded of $\dot{\alpha}$ and $e(\alpha + e)$, being a kind of appendage to a, and a, compounded of b and b (a + b), being an appendage to o. In the alphabet of Thorodd the former was marked é, the latter &, as in ven, fotr; later, the accent was dropped. The & is also written s, o, a, or even o or eo, thus foti, fati, fati, or eorri = ærri, whence in modern print α , α : most vellums write α (a+e) and α (o+e)respectively, which characters have been adopted in modern print. In Icel. the æ-sound was soon lost; only the earliest vellums distinguish the two sounds; then in later vellums 6, o are used indiscriminately, the difference in sound being lost, the characters remaining, till at last the useless sign disappeared. Almost all the Icel. Sagas are preserved in vellums later than the time when the sounds had become confounded; the Cod. Reg. of the Grág, still keeps the distinction, owing probably to its excellent old originals; the Cod. Reg. of the Sæm. Edda uses both signs, but misplaces them, thus, Hm. 92 mela, but for (pres. from fá), in the same verse. The confusion between a and a is purely Icelandic, for in Denmark, Norway, and Sweden the distinction has been preserved up to the present day, thus, Dan. brodre, Swed. broder, dottre, fodder, bone, but sæde, nætter, læge, etc., Icel. bræðr, dætr, fætr, hæna, sæti, nætr, læknir, etc. The æ was sounded \bar{e} (as Germ. \ddot{a} , in näbe, or a lengthened Engl. a, perhaps more protracted), this sound was still heard down to the time of Arni Magnusson (end of the 17th century), see Gramm. p. xxxv, col. 2; it is now sounded like Engl. long i (time), but this sound was unknown to the ancients, except in the interjection ai (= x, see below):—we can only guess at the sound of a; judging from the analogy of a, it may have been like Germ. bobe, Fr. feu, only more protracted; in a diphthongal form (like æ into ai) it would be oi, and indeed the word celi in its modern form auli (i. e. oïli) may be a relic of this. 2. v cannot be sounded before æ, being a u-sound; thus we have æðr, æða, from vaða, óðr; but before æ, being an a-sound, it is both sounded and written. For the umlaut see Gramm, p. xxix.

Æ, adv.; in vellums also spelt e, i.e. = e; e hverr, Blanda; þess Guðs er lifir ok e man lifa, Blanda: ea, ea standa mér augu of eld til Gunnildar, Ágrip (in a verse); freq. ey and ei, see ei, p. 117: [Goth. aiw in ni-aiw = never; A. S. â, âwa; Engl. aye]:-for aye, ever; bat er ey eða 'æ' er aldregi þrýtr, Edda (Ups.) ii. 366; hans aldar mun æ vera at góðu getið, Hkm. 19; gott æ gömlum mönnum! Landn. æstiligr, adj. desirable; væn kona ok æstilig, MS. 625. 94; girniligr ok æ., 77.

æti, n. [eta, át], an edible thing; in compds, hrá-æti. [A.S. âten], oats; bygg heitir med mönnum, en barr med godum, kalla vöxt Vanir, æti jötnar, Alm. 33 (a απ. λεγ.) COMPDS: æti-sveppr, eti-pang, etc., edible tang or sea-weed, Hjalt.

m-tíð, adv. at every tide, ever, Magn. 464, Sks. 304; the word is very freq. in mod. usage.

ÆTLA, að, often spelt etla, but ætla, Ld. 32 (vellum); in mod. usage it is often sounded atla: [a derivative akin to Goth. abjan = to mind, tbink, and aba = a mind, as also to Germ. achten, O. H. G. ahton; the Northern languages use none of these words, but only the derivative ætla; an old Germ. abtilon would answer to Icel. ætla; Scot. ettle.]

B. To think, mean, suppose; jarl ætlaði þat, at þær myndi blóta, Blas. 45; munu þeir ætla at vér hafim riðit austr, Nj. 206; forvitni er mér á, hvat þú ætlar mér í skapi búa, Lv. 16; hann ætlaði henni líf en ser dauda, be ettled (expected) life for ber, but death for himself, Sturl. iii. 190 C; ekki er til þess at ætla, segir hann, at ek mona skipask við orð ein saman, Fms. xi. 38; ekki barítú til þess at ætla at ek ganga við frændsemi þinni, 61; verði þér nú at ætla hvárt-tveggja, think of both things, Sks. 285; ef ek á svá mikit vald á þér sem ek ætla, Nj. 10. to intend, purpose; hann kvedsk hafa ætlað ferð sína til Róms, Fms. vii. 155; ck ætla nú ferð mína í Cesaream, 655 xvii. 1; en þat sæti eptir hans dag ætlaði sér hverr sona hans, Fms. i. 7; verðr þat hverr at vinna er ætlað er, ... sem ætlað er fyrir, what is allotted him, Ni. 10, 259; ef Guð hefir svá fyrir ætlað, Fms. ix. 507; ætluðu menn Ospaki þat verk, suspected bim to bave done it, Band. 14; ætlar hann at görask konungr norðr þar, Eg. 71; menn ætluðu til liðs við Þórólf, 98; skautsk at ok ætlaði at höggva fót undan Kúra, Nj. 262; ætla til upp-göngu, Fms. vii. 254; hann ætlaði út vindauga, Dropl. 17; ætla e-t fyrir, to purpose, intend a thing, Fms. xi. 256 (fyrir-ætlan); hann lézk hat fyrir sér ætla at illa mundi hlýða, be was of opinion that ..., vii. 141; ek ætla ok at styrkja Gunnar at nokkuru, Nj. 41: hence with mere notion of futurity, eg ætla að fara, I think to go, I shall go: in queries, hvað ætli hann ætli ser, what do you think he is thinking of doing? hvað ætli hann ætli sér (sounded hvatl-ann-atli sér? hvatl'-ann-atl'-a'-fara?); 3. to tbink, guess; en þó má hverr á fyrir-ætlaðri, tíð, Eluc. 26. ætla hvílíka mannraun hann hafði, Bs. i. 139: to calculate, hann tók sér bústað, ok ætlaði þar landeign til, be destined a strip of land for that use, Eg. 735; bera i burt heyit, en ætla vel til alls fjår, they carry the trusses of hay away, but leave enough for the live stock on the farm, Isl. ii. 140; þeir skolu ætla til heys en eigi til haga, svá sem peir ætla réttast, Grág. ii. 340; ætla sér hóf, to keep wilbin bounds, Fms. x. 349. In the verse of Sighvat (Fms. vi. 43) 'ætla' is, we believe, a corruption for 'Atla,' pr. name of a Norse Lagman in Gula, mentioned in Fms. x. 401 (Agrip ch. 29), and in N.G.L. i. 104; but it is now hardly possible to restore the whole verse, which had already been corrupted in tradition, so that when the compiler of Magnis Saga quoted it, he did not make out the full sense of it. The true context has been pointed out by Maurer in Abhandl. der k. Bayer. Acad. der W. 1872.

ætlan or ætlun, f. thought; eptir ætlan, deliberately, Sks. 119 new Ed.; er þat mikil ætlan (a great instinct) skynlaussar skepnu at sjá, 12 new Ed.; hogson ok ætlan, thought and reason, Mar. 2. design, plan; sú ætlan sem áðr var sett, Fms. ix. 507; tvískiptask í ætlaninni, x. 270; hasa ætlan á um serðina, xi. 115; þessar ætlanir, iv. 79; þat er engi ætlan, it is no plan, impossible, Nj. 41; fyrir-ætlan, intention; ú-ætlan, a calculation. etlanar-verk, n. a task.

ætr, adj. [cta. át], eatable, Hkr. ii. 252, Grág. ii. 122, 192, Bárð. 176; ú-ætr. uneatable.

ÆTT, f., like sætt (q. v.), the forms vary between att and ætt; in old writers the latter form is by far the more common; in mod. usage they have been separated, att meaning a quarter in a local sense, ætt a family: [ætt is akin to Ulf. aibts = τα ὑπάρχοντα; A. S. æbte = property; Early Engl. agte; Germ. acht = patrimony; the root verb is eiga, atti, like mega, mattr; from this original sense are derived both the senses, $\alpha t t = a$ family, and ætt or átt = Scot. 'airt,' 'regio caeli;' the etymology of átt from átta (eight), suggested at p. 47, col. 1, is too fanciful.]

B. An airt, quarter of the beavens, in gen. dat. pl. atta, attum; eptir þat sá sól, ok mátti þú deila ættir, Fb. i. 431; átta ættir, eina ætt, Sks. 54; af suðr-ætt, ... vestr-ætt, flugu brott í sömu ætt, ... ór þeim ættum sem ber bottu ernirnir fljuga, Isl. ii. 195, 196; ba drift snær or öllum attum, Edda i. 186 (so also Ub. l. c., but ættum Cod. Genealogies (ættir, ættar-tölur, ætt-vísi) form the ground-work of the old Icel, historiography; the ancient Saga-men delighted in them, and had a marvellous memory for lineages; in the Sagas the pedigrees give the clue by which to trace the succession of events, and supply the want of chronology. Whole chapters in the best Sagas, esp. at the beginning of a work, are set apart for genealogies, thus, Nj. ch. 1. 19, 20, 25, 26, 46, 57, 96, 97, 114, 115, 155, as also 47, 57, 58, 106 (begin.), Eb. ch. 1, 7, 8, 12, 65, Ld. ch. 1, 31, 32, Eg. ch. 23, Guilp. ch. 1, Dropl. In the Sturlunga S. the initial chapters (Sturl, i. 44-55, with which the work of Sturla begins) are devoted to the tracing the families of that time; so also Sturl. i. 202-206, iii. 96, 97. But the chief store-house for genealogical knowledge is the Landnama, which contains about 5000 pr. names, of which perhaps a third are names of women.

Ö (Ø)

This letter properly consists of two vowels, different in sound and in origin; an a-vowel, an 'umlaut' of a, and nearly related to it; and a u-vowel, nearly related to the letters o, u, and y: in modern Danish these two ö-sounds are still distinguished in pronunciation, the one being open almost like Engl. i before r, as in fir, the other closed like eu in French feu: Rask and Petersen, the founders of the philology of the Danish tongue, were the first to give separate symbols for these two sounds; the first they marked ö, the second o (born, bore). The modern Icel. knows only one sound, answering to the Danish ö; but that it was not so in old days may be proved from the vellums and from the grammarians. Thorodd marks the two sounds respectively by a and o. Most of the vellums are very loose in their spelling, marking at random o, o, au, w, s (oll, coll, aull, wil): phonetically o stands exactly in the same relation to α , the umlaut of δ , as \ddot{o} to δ , the umlaut of \dot{a} . so that \dot{a} and ö are the short, a and o respectively the corresponding long vowels; of and ce, of and of being two pairs of sounds, just as are o o, u u; cp. 'Goðróði' and 'góð rœði,' Skálda, Thorodd: in very old vellums, e.g. the Rb. Cod. 1812, the o is often marked eo, thus keomr = komr, eoxn = ϕ xn = yxn, geora = gjöra or g ϕ ra: in Norse vellums ϕ is often written α , e.g. smoer = smjör, confounding the two sounds, ϕ and α . A few good vellums keep the distinction in the main, not as Thorodd's alphabet does, but generally by writing ey for o (this must not be confounded with the diphthong ey); among those vellums are the Cod. Reg. of Sæm. Edda, the Cod. Acad. of the Hkr. (now lost), the Cod. Fris., the (lost) vellum of Rafns S. (see Bs. i. pref. lxix), although none of them strictly follows the rule; only a few Editions (e.g. Prof. Unger's Edit. of the Hkr.) have tried to observe the distinction; most Editions print ö throughout. We shall now try to give a list of the chief words and forms which have the ϕ . The chief guide in doing this is twofold, the ey of the vellums and the change of o into e or e, by which a triple form arises, o, ey, and e, of which o and ey, no doubt, are mere varia-1. the umlaut of o: in the tions: I. the o is either, plurals, sonir seynir senir, hnotr hnetr, stoor steor (sonr, hnot, stoo): in the compar. and superl., norðri neyrðri nerðri, norztr neyrztr nerztr, ofri efri, øfstr efstr (from norðr, of): in the subj., þørði þerði, þølði þeylði (Fms. viii. 380), mondi (from bora, bola, monu or munu), bjoggi beyggi, hjøggi heyggi (from búa, bjoggu, höggva, hjoggu): the presents, kømr, troor treyor treor, soft sefr (from koma, troda, sofa): the prets., frori freyri freri, gnori gneyri gneri, sori seri, slori sleri, rori reyri reri, kjori keyri keri, snøri sneyri sneri, grøri greyri greri (see Gramm. p. xxiii): the words ooli eyoli eoli, oola (a lizard) eyola eola, hollzti heylzti hellzti: in -roor (Goordor, see Thorodd), -froor -freyor -fredr (Hallfroor Hallfreyor Hallfreor), hnori hneyri hneri, oxn eyxn exn, kori keri (a probe), kjør (a choice) keyr ker, kjøptr keyptr keptr kjaptr: ørendi eyrendi erendi: the prefix particle, or-eyr-er-: the words kjot ket, smjor smer, miol mel (prop. kot, smor, mol), gorsemar gersemar, orr and eyer, a scar, Fms. viii. 275, v.l.; hror and hreyr, heyrum and horum (p. 261, 2. in the case of roots in -vi or -vj, where both v and jcol. 2). struggle for the umlaut, the result is an ϕ ; in this case even a radical a changes into ϕ (this was for the first time observed by the late Danish scholar Lyngbye), thus, gorva geyrva gera (from garvian), gorr geyrr gerr (=ready), gφrvi gervi, gφrsemi gersemi, φx eyx ex (Goth. aqwisi), sφrvi seyrvi. This is esp. freq. in those roots which have g or k for the middle consonant, in which cases the root vowel, either a or i, changes into ϕ ; as in the verbs sløkva, søkkva, støkkva, hrøkkva, kløkkva, sløngva, høggva, hnøggva, þrøngva; in the adjectives, døkkr, nøkviðr, gloggr, hnoggr, snoggr; similarly with the orthography ey for φ,-heygg (caedo), Am. 39; deyqva hramns, Skv. 2. 20; at kleycqvi Guorun, Am. 58; klecqua, Akv. 24; hví er þér steyct ór landi, Hkv. Hjörv. 31; nú mun hón seyqvaz, Vsp. 62; seycstu nú gýgr (sink thou now!), Helr. 14; sleyngdi svá silfri, Am. 46; steyccr lúðr fyrir, Hkv. 2. 2; sýtir æ glæyggr við gjöfum, Hm. 48; gleyggr, Skv. 1. 7; gleggr, 291; neykðan (nudum), Am. 49; neycqviðr, Hm. 49; Beyggvir = böggvir, Ls. 45; rokvið and rekvið, Hkv. Hjörv. 35, Bugge (pref. ix); reykr = rokr, Fms. iv. 70: the word rekkja (a bed) is also spelt reykkja, and even rjukja, Art. (Ed. Kölbing) 64; vekka and vökvi. Phonetically connected with this change, but in a reverse order, is the change in the words nekkverr nökkurr nokkurr and eingi öngr öngvan, etc. In all the above instances the ey means ϕ , and is merely substituted for that sound, and is accordingly altogether different from the diphthong ey, see p. 114, col. 2, l. 15 3. one may also assume an ϕ in the few instances where $j\delta$ and jo, and jo and y interchange; in mjölk and mjolk (milk), mjok or mjök and mykill, þjökkr and þykkr, mjörkvi and myrkvi. This φ of the ancient tongue is the parent of the e in several modern words and forms, e.g. in the presents, sefr, kemr, treor, heggr, sekkr, stekkr, hrekkr; in the preterites, greri, snéri, réri; the compar., efri, efstr, helztr; in gera, erindi, frerar, and fredinn: so also in the words ket, mel, smer; and in inverse one another; in ancient timbered halls the benches were placed longways, running along the walls of the halls (see bekkr), with the two seats of honour in the middle facing one another; the northern bench facing the sun, was called ondvegi it zora, the bigher or first bigh-seat, the opposite or southern bench being it uxora, the lower or second high-seat; the two high-seats were the most honoured places in the hall, and a chief guest used to be placed in the southern high-seat. In England the master and mistress sitting opposite one another at each end of the table may be a remnant of this old Scandinavian custom. The sides of the highseat were ornamented with uprights (öndugis-súlur) carved with figures, such as a head of Thor or the like; these posts were regarded with religious reverence; many of the settlers of Iceland are said to have taken the highseat posts with them, and when near Iceland to have thrown them overboard to drift ashore, and where they found them, there they took up their abode. When a man of rank died, the son, after all rites performed, solemnly seated himself in his father's seat, as a token of succession: in Vd. ch. 23, the sons sat not in the father's seat before they had avenged his death.

OB- (i. e. or-), a prefixed particle, altered from us-; the s remains in usall = vesall, see p. 699, col. 2; also spelt er-, er-vita, Hkv.; or eyr-, eyr-grynni, O. H. 106; eyr-lygi, Eg. (in a verse): [Ulf. us-; O. H. G. ur-; when uncompounded, see or, mod. ur, p. 472; as a prefix to nouns, or- or or-, for which see p. 469, col. 2. Indeed, there is a strong probability that the negative prefix o- is a contraction, not of un-, but of or-, so that ó-bættr is from or-bættr, ó-verðr from or-verðr, by agglutination of r, whereby the vowel becomes long (as the O. H. G. prefix ar- in A. S. appears as \hat{a} -): this would account for the fact, that in the very oldest and best vellums there is hardly a single instance of u- for δ -, and this is the sole modern form not only all over Iceland, but also in most popular idioms of Norway and Sweden; a farther proof is that in many words or-, the ancient form, is preserved in a few vellums, especially of the Norse laws, in such rare forms as ör-sekr, ör-bætiligr, ör-vænt, and ó-vænt, where the current form is ó-sekr, etc.; so also, ör-keypis and ó-keypis, ör-grynni and ó-grynni, ör-hóf and ó-hóf. Therefore or-, not un-, is, we believe, the phonetical parent of the later Scandinavian negative prefix &. The extensive use of or- and the utter absence of uor un- may be explained by the supposition that, for the sake of uniformity, all words beginning with or- and un- gradually took the same form; for though in ancient days ör- was more extensively used than it is at present, it can hardly have been the sole form in all words now beginning with 6-]:--or- is used as denoting a negative, as or-grynni, a being bottomless; or lack or loss of, as ör-sekr, out of being sekr; örverðr. 2. special usages are, what is of yore, as in or-log (cp. Germ. ur-, as in ur-theil, Engl. or-deal), ör-nefni, ör-gelmir, ör-vasi. in mod. usage or- is prefixed to adjectives, = utterly, but only in instances denoting 'smallness,' or something negative, e.g. ör-grannr, ör-stuttr, ör-skammr, ör-grunnr, ör-mjör, ör-fátækr, ör-snauðr, ör-eyða, ör-taka, ör-reyta, qq. v.

During the printing of this Dictionary, sheets of these works have, by the kindness of the Editors, been forwarded to me, so that I have been able to refer to the printed pages long before they were published, as e.g. under kitla (p. 340) and matvælar. Prof. Unger has also communicated some highly interesting extracts from an old Norse version of 'Vitae Patrum' (cited Vitae Patrum, Unger), given in the Addenda (kaka, kaza, etc.), for which kindness I hereby tender him my hearty thanks: a few minor errors and corrections have been pointed out to me by Mr. Thorkelsson of Reykjavík.

Poët. and p. 43 is to be cancelled; the word means like, equal, resembling; amun ero augu ormi beim enum frana, the eyes are like the flashing serpent's, Vkv. 16; ámunir ossum niðjum, like to our kinsmen, Hkv. 2. 9. This sense is clearly seen from an old Icel. hymn of the 17th century,-nyti eg ei náðar þinnar ... yrði rás æfi minnar ámynt og skuggi rýr, but for thy grace the race of my life would be like a vain shadow, Hymn-book (1746, p. 448). á-orka, að, to effect, (mod.) ár, an oar: add,-árar-blað, n. an oar-blade; ára-kló, f. 'oarclutch,' poët. a sbip, Edda (Gl.) á-reiðanligr, adj. trustwortby, (mod.) ár-flognir, m. the early flier, i. e. a bawk, Edda. 6-rioandi, part. important, (mod.) ast-blindr, adj. love-blind, Mkv. ást-fenginn, part. love-mad, Mar. att,-for a fuller account of this word see ætt, p. 760. átt-faldr, adj. eightfold. átt-strendr, adj. octagonal, Mar. 1055. á-ætlan, f. a calculation, (mod.) Baldrs-brá; add,—the Icel. Baldrs-brá, if we remember rightly, resembles the Engl. 'ox-eye' or 'dog-daisy.' ball-riði, a, m. the great rider, bold rider, Ls. 37. ballti, a, m. the name of a bear, Lex. Poët. barka, 20, to bark, tan. barn-gjarn, adj. eager for bairns, Gsp. bastaror, m., cp. the remarks on bæsingr, p. 92, col. 1 at bottom, to which add,—This word is, we believe, derived from bass, a 'boose,' stall, Goth. bansts; its original sense would then be, one born in a stall or crib; hence as a law term, a bastard: hornungr from horn (a corner) is an analogous term, cp. Germ. winkel-kind, for in ancient Teut. laws and language the bastard or outcast was considered as being born in an outof-the-way place. Both words, bastaror and bæsingr (q.v.), are, we believe, one in sense and origin, bastaror being the older form, bæsingr the later; from Goth, banst-s was formed bastardr, qs, banstardr; in Norway and Icel. bansts dropped the t and absorbed the n into the preceding vowel, and became bas-s; from this 'bass' was formed bæsingr, with ingr as inflexive syllable, and the vowel changed; whereas bastardr. we suppose, dates from an early time before vowel-change had taken place.

Digitized by GOOQ

Both words are law terms, the former Normannic (or Frankish), the latter Norse: both occur as the name of a sword, -bæsingr in the mythical tale, Fb. ii, of St. Olave's sword, ere it was taken out of the cairn; bastaror in Fms. vii. (12th century), perhaps a sword of Norman workmanship. Literally bastaror means boose-bardy, the bardy one of the stall, the bastard being the boy who got all kinds of rough usage, and so became hardy; we catch an echo of this in the words of the old lay-kóðu 'harðan' mjök 'hornung' vera, Hðm. 12.

Hjaoningar, add,—A. S. Heodeningas, Hetelinge or Hegelinge of the old German epos, Kudrun (Bartsch's Edition), Hjarrandi, a, m. a mythical name, the Demodokus or Orpheus of the old Teut. legends, Edda 89; A.S. Heorrenda; in old Germ. poems called Horant. Hjarranda-ljóð, n. pl. the lay or tune of H., a charmed tune on the harp, Fas. iii. 223 (Bósa S.): a mod. metre in the Ballads (Rímur) is, if we remember right, still in Iceland called Hjarranda-lag, the tune of H. (see Bartsch's Ed. of Kudrun, pp. ix, xvii, and the sixth Aventiure of Kudrun, inscribed 'wie suoze Horant sanc' = bow sweet H. sang). hjart-tegn = jartegn, Thom. hjá-lega, u, f., read 'hjá-legr, n.' hlaupa, the verb, add,—subj. hlæpi, O. H. 118; læpizk, O. H. L. 82; but hlypi, Hom. 158, Ó. T. 68, l. 24. hlersi, adj., mod. hlessa, q. v.; sló á hann ótta miklum svá sem hann yroi hlersi (hleyrsi, v. l.), Post. (Unger) 121. hleyti, add,-hleytis-maor, a rendering of Lat. vicarius, Post. 36. hljóð-semd, f. silence, Post. 74. hlýð-skylldi (hluþscylldi) = lýðskyldi, Fms. x. (Ágrip) 398, 399. hnauss, m., add,—the old true form is knauss, whence Dan. knos. hnori, a, m., add,—Gr. Zeῦ σῶσον. hnita, 20, [see neit], to gleam white like flour, Pal Vidal. (in a ditty). hnjósa, add,—Skíða R. 189: metaph., hnyss hann við prestrinn, & sneezed against, i.e. remonstrated, Bs. i. 181; monnum matti naliga hnjósa (=hrjósa) hugr við, Vitae Patrum (Unger).

hreppr, m., observe,-Konrad Maurer has communicated to me his opinion that the ancient heathen had organised rules and laws for the maintenance or vagrancy of the poor, which the Christian bishops afterwards amended and expanded. If so, it is hardly to be doubted that the division into Rapes existed even in heathen times; and indeed it would have been recorded by Ari in the 1b, had it been made in the time of the first bishops. The word itself and the autumn meetings for the poor are mentioned in Sagas referring to the heathen age, e. g. Fms. ii. 225. The men of the 12th century looked on these meetings as a time-honoured institution, as is proved by the reference Fb. iii. 421 (only lately noticed, and given in full s. v. binga); cp. also Bolla b. (Ld. 350). These meetings are still held in Iceland.

höfuð,—the words in line 6 to 7, etc., are true in substance, yet the spelling hofuð does at least occur once in Cod. Reg. Sæm., viz. Hbl. 15 (Bugge); haufuð is certainly the true old form. To höfuð-hlutr, p. 307, col. 2, add, -in mod. usage, höfða-hlutr (in the dual), opp. to fotablutr, and so spelt in Eg. 398; so also Icelanders say höfða-lag, the bead-piece of a bedstead, also the pillow; eg fann það undir höfðalaginu: cp. the phrase, at hofdum porsteins, at the heads of Thorstein's bed (here in plur. used of a single person); a similar usage of plur. or dual instead of sing. in A.S. is marked in a note to Mr. Sweet's Gregory's Pastoral Care.

hörmeitiðr, m. 2 απ. λεγ. in Hým. end; may not this word contain a variation or corruption of some month's name, occurring under various forms in A.S. and Germ., and of which the Scandin. form is not known, such as Horemaent = November or December, Hornunc = February, Hartmonat = January (Dr. Karl Weinhold),-months of great festivals and sacrifices? For an attempt at interpretation of the passage, see véar, p. 687, col. 1, at bottom.

knetta, t, to grumble; engi knettir um annars mein, Mkv.

knjúkr, m. a crag, knoll; the mod. form is hnjúkr.

pr. name, Landn.; spelt knykr, D. I. i. 399.

kol-fella, d, (and kol-fellir, m.), to lose utterly, of a man who loses all his live stock from cold or hunger; hann kolfeldi, be lost bis all; það varð kolfellir: it may be a metaph. from cutting wood for charcoal; or perhaps a remnant of an ancient Scandin, law term, preserved in early Swed., viz. kull-svarf = the death of mother and child in childbirth, and kjöl-svarf = of busband, wife, and child, all perisbing at sea, see Schlyter, cp. Ld. ch. 18.

koll-vatr, adj. wet-baired, i. e. drowned, esp. in a ditty.

koma, the verb, D, at the end add,-vera kominn upp á e-n, to depend upon one for belp; vera upp á aðra kominn, (mod.)

konr, add,-konar (generis), Skálda (Thorodd) ii. 40.

korn, add,-eitt köku-korn; see kaka kreppingr, m. a bird, the creeper (?), Edda (Gl.)

kriari, a, m. a crier. = Lat. praeco, Mar. (pref. p. xvii).

kross, in the remarks on cross-worship add, - porkell er svá baðsk fyrir at krossi, gott ey gömlum manni, gott ey ungum manni, Landn. 45.

krýja or krúa, ð, hence the mod. Icel. grúa (það úir og grúir), changing k into g; [Norse krye; cp. Engl. crowd]:—to swarm; pad udi og krúði, Egilsson's Poems, 25.

krækil-blinda, u, f. 'crook-blind,' blind man's buff; a game also called skolla-leikr, Mar. 1056.

kveisa, u, f., add,—kveisu-flug, n. a shooting pain, Mkv.

Evenn., the compds, p. 362, col. 2, observe—the ancients prob. said kven-with a single n; 'kven' is still sounded in Kven-grjót, a local name in western Icel., being the only remnant of the old form.

kviðja, the verb, add,—reflex., kviðisk þessa verks, forbear to do it, Krók, 6 new Ed.

kvika, u, f. obstructions of the ducts in the nose, which used to be thought to be quick (i. e. live) worms; Vespasianus hafði kvikur í nösum, T en þat mein kalla þeir 'vespas,' því var hann kallaðr Vespasianus, V. bad 'worms in the nose,' which disease they call vespas, therefore he was called V. (sic), Post. (Unger) 155.

kvisa, u, f. a kind of bird, Edda ii. 488.

kvistr, m., add,-kvikr kvistr, live stock; hann á eigi meir í kvikum kvisti en eina kú, Mar. 1049.

kyrfa, o, to carve, Grag. ii. 257; cp. kurfur.

kyrra, u, f. calmness, calm, Mar. 1195 kögðir, m. a kind of stone, Edda (Gl.) ii. 424.

kögurr, m., as to the reference Hbl. 13, add,—the vellum has ogur, but the emendation into kögur is received by Editors; and is made certain by 'kögur-sveinn' in the same verse; but the sense and origin of kögurr in this place have been missed by the interpreters. It is indeed a wellknown Teut. word, A.S. cocur, O. H.G. chochar, Germ. kocher, Dutch koker; the Dan. kogger is prob. borrowed from the Germ., as is the Icel. koffur from Luther's Bible; once on a time it was also a Scandin. word, which was since displaced by the compounded örva-malr or ör-malr, q. v.; this passage being the only place where it occurs in an uncompounded form, but it remains in kögur-sveinn, a quiver-boy, who carried the bunter's quiver (?); and in kogur-barn, Norse kogge-barn. Prof. Bergmann has, with his usual insight in Eddic matters, divined the sense when he says, p. 123, 'über den Sund zu schwimmen und dabei seinen feurigen Donner-und-blitz-keil, ... im Wasser zu netzen und abzukühlen.' The fact is, Thor is here represented carrying a quiver full of thunder-bolts on his back, and so the poet makes the mighty thunder-god stop at the Sound, embarrassed, and begging to be ferried over, as he could not wade over from fear of wetting his quiver and quenching the fire, for he must 'keep his powder dry,' although in Gm. and pd. Thor is not much afraid of the water. Whether kögurr, a quilt, be any relation to kögurr, a quiver, we cannot tell, prob. not; if so, this word should be placed under a separate head.

kör-leginn, adj. = körlægr, Post. 40. körugr, adj. [kar], slimy, (mod.)

laga-setning, f. legislation (p. 370, col. 1); this word requires explanation,-in old writers it means the constitution, the fundamental laws or political constitution of a commonwealth; as Ari, the historian, says, 'frá Íslands bygð, frá landnáms-mönnum ok lagasetning,' of the settlement of Iceland, of ber settlers and ber political constitution, 1b. (pref.); where lagasetning refers to the institution of the alping, and the other events related in 1b. ch. 2 and 3; so also, ritadi hann (viz. Ari) mest í upphasi sinnar bókar um Íslands bygð (the settlement), ok lagasetning (constitution), Hkr. (pref.), referring to the constitutional laws of Ulfljot recorded in ch. 2 of the Icelander Book; lagasetning here exactly answers to what Konrad Maurer, by a mod. term, calls 'die entstehung des Isländisches staates.' So also of the laws of king Hakon the Good (cp. the remarks s. v. bing), lagasetning Hákonar konungs, . . . hann (the king) var maör stórvitr, ok lagði mikinn hug á lagasetning, hann 'setti' Gulaþings-lög ..., Hkr. i. 135 (cp. Fms. i. 31): again, in Ó.H. 227 it answers to the mod. word legislation (of the laws of Sweyn, the son of Alfifa), and so Orkn. 24. It is to be borne in mind that 'log' has a double sense, viz. law in a strict sense, and in a local-political sense = a* law-community,' legally constituted state, nearly answering to Gr. πύλιε. lang-viðri, n., add,—langviðrum skal eyða grund, Mkv. 24; cp. Ísland eyðist af langviðrum ok lagaleysi, Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 438.

laus-lyndi, add-fem. in Fas. ii. 124.

laus-mæli, add-the sing. occurs in Fb. iii. 185.

laus-yrði, add,-fem. in Pr. 133, Fbr. 64 new Ed.

laut, f., add,—this word occurs in Landn. 197 (Hjaltdæla-laut). lán, n., add,—ekki er lán lengr en léð er, Vídal., a saying.

ledda, u, f. a lead, plumb, a fisher's term in western Iceland.

leio-angr, m. a levy; add,—may not this word be qs. leiovangr = the field of the Leet, where a Leet was held? if so, it would throw light on the origin of this meeting in very remote times as being a mustermeeting or levy of the king's service: afterwards leidangr might have come to mean the levy itself. It is indeed difficult to explain this word in any other way, esp. the latter part -angr, which usually denotes a place.

léttis-maðr = leytismaðr (or hleytismaðr), a vicar, Post. 34.

liðr, observe,—the passage in Hm., svá at hón lyki þik liðum, is perhaps illustrated by Chaucer's 'locen in every lith,' Nonne's Priest's Tale; embraces of witches being believed to rob a man of his manhood.

limpa, u, f. limpness, weakness, Fél. xv; það er limpa í mér, (mod.) lík-brá, f. = valbrá (q. v.), Fél.

lim-stokkinn, part. out of joint, bidr. 16.

Ljósa-vatn, n. the light-water, a local name: Ljósvetningar, m. pl. the men of L., Landn.

ljós-ker, n., prop. a 'light-vessel,' a lamp (not lantern), cp. Mar. 679, 1036, 1037, Thom. 483.

ljúga, the verb, add,—pret. pl. lógo, Post. 231; later lugu. loða, the verb, the Clem. 24 (Post. Unger 63), read,—fundu þeir, at hann loddi 'saman' flærð einni; the passage is therefore quite plain.

logn-alda, u, f. rolling in a calm, of a ship.

lok, n., add,—the word remains in Engl. bem-lock.

Loki, the name of the terrible fire-demon, half god, half giant, the friend and companion of the gods, and yet their most fearful toe. We have a new suggestion to make as to the origin of this name. The old Northern Loki and the old Italic Volcanus are, we believe, identical; as thus,—the old Teutonic form of Loki, we suppose, was Wloka, whence, by dropping the w before l, according to the rules of the Scandinavian tongue, Loki. A complete analogy is presented in Lat. voltus, vultus, A. S. wlits, but Icel. lit (in and-lit, a face); and, in point of the character of the two demons, the resemblance is no less striking, as we have on the one hand Vulcanus with Etna for his workshop (cp. the mod. rolcano), and on the other hand the Northern legends of the fettered firegiant, Loki, by whose struggles the earthquakes are caused. Of all the personages of the Northern heathen religion, the three, Odinn, Port, and Loki, were by far the most prominent; but not even the name of Loki is preserved in the records of any other Teutonic people. Can the words of Caesar B. G. vi, xxi, Solem 'Vulcanum' et Lunam, refer to our Loki? probably not, although in Caesar's time the form would have been Wlokan in acc., a form which a Roman ear might well have identified with their own Vulcanus. The old derivation from loka, to sbut, is inadmissible in the present state of philological science: a Wodan from vaða, or Loki from loka, is no better than a 'Juno a juvando,' or a 'Neptunus a nando.' May not Loki (Wloka) be a relation to the Sansk. vrika, Slav. vluku, Lith. vilkas, Icel. vargr, ulfr, meaning a destroyer, a wolf? it is very significant that in the Norse mythology Loki is the father of the world-destroying monsters,—the wolf Fenrir, the World-serpent, and the ogress Hel; and, if the etymology suggested be true, he was himself originally represented as a wolf.

lopt-hæna, u, f. a female pr. name, Landn.; prop. a kind of duck, cp. skálp-hæna (in the Addenda).

16kr, add,—that it originally was a law term, a receiver of stolen goods, is seen from Chaucer (Coke's Tale, 51), 'there is no thief without a loak.'

lund-lagt, part. n. minded, disposed, e-m er e-t l., Post. 481, 633. lyf-steinn, in the vellum of Korm. S. (A. M. 232) it is always spelt with y (not lifsteinn), thus Unger, who has himself consulted the vellum. lykt, f. [Dan. lögte], a lantern, Bs. ii. 257.

lýð-skyldi, add-fem. in Fms. x. 339 (sjá hlyðskyldi); but hlyð-

158a, the verb, II. 3. γ, lýsa e-u yfir, better is lýsa yfir e-u. leri-sveinn, this word is a translation of A. S. leorning-enibt, a word used in Ælfric's English at the time when Christianity was transported from England to Norway and Iceland; at a still earlier time the English rendered 'discipulus' by 'pegn' (Gregory's Pastoral Care).

100, f. a lathe, add—the old form was prob. laud, with a diphthong; the mod. form is löð, gen. laðar.

mal, n. the purring of a cat, Snot 132.

man, a bondman, add,-mans-folk, captive-folk, prisoners; in Orkn. 368 (Fb. ii. 486, l. 8), beir seldu beim silfr ok 'annat fé' is corrupted for 'mans-folk,' as is seen from the words of the Danish translation of 1615-'ok solde dennem fangerne.'

mann-bikkja, u, f. a 'man-bitch,' a term of abuse, Post. 151.

manngi, add,-prætta ek við manngi, Post. 230.

man-vélar, f. pl. love-tricks, Hbl. 20.

mat, n. an estimate; the truer form is mat (like drap, nam, gat, at, from drepa...); the word was originally a Norse law term, and is not found in the Grag, but was, at the union with Norway, adopted in Icel. where it soon lost its long vowel; it is actually spelt maat (i.e. mat) in D. N. ii. 225 (maats menn = taxation); eptir sex manna mati, Jb.; eptir góðra manni máti, Vm.; eptir máti, id. (Mr. Jón Thorkelsson).

mat-fiskr, m. fish for food, Post.

mál-friðr should be—a temporary peace; mod. stundar-friðr. mási, a, m. a nickname, Fms., add—prop. the name of a bird; in Faroe maasi is a sea-mew; val-maasi, Uislands-maasi (= an Icelandic mer.), fiski-maasi, see Mr. H. C. Müller's Færöernes Fugle-fauna (1863).

medan, add,—hence Dan. men = but, contracted from meden.

megin-byri, n. a fair wind, Post. 233.

mel-fluga, u, f. a moth in clothes, (mod.)

mest-megnis, adv. for the most part, (mod.)

met, n. sing. = mát, an estimate, D. N. ii. 31; lög-m., Mar. (pref. p. xxxv). meta, the verb, at the beginning, observe,-the subj. mæti occurs in Völs, S. 85 (Bugge's Ed.)

mey-nunna, u, f. a nun, = virgo monacha, Vitae Patrum (Unger). mið-seymi, n., sounded misseymi, the gut used in shoe-making.

mis-dægrt, n. adj.; in the phrase, honum verðr aldri misdægrt, of a person who is never ill for a single day.

mis-grip, n. a 'mis-grip,' mistake; in the phrase, taka e-t i misgripum, to take a thing by the wrong end, make a mistake, (mod.) mis-klíð, f. discord.

mjalli, a, m. [mjöll], whiteness; esp. in the phrase, vera ekki med öllum mjalla, to be not 'in one's whole whiteness,' i. e. to be not in one's senses, to be insane.

móða, u, f. II, add,-af allri móðu bitra munugða, Post. 555.

mót, a meeting; dele the word 'móts-minni,' which is only a false reading of m for ni, see njóts-minni below.

mun-hugð = munuð (q. v.), Post. (Unger) 117.

munu, the verb, add,-muni in exclamations of wonder, contempt; hvat moni hvelpr sá ráða griðum? Mork. 80; hvat muni of vinna órum astum, what should overcome our love? i.e. come what may, it is proof against all, Korm. (in a verse).

mystr = myrkr (?), Mar. 1031.

mýgja, the verb, add,—an older pret, mugði or mögði; hence, né mögdu menn ölteiti, nor did the people quell their cheer, i. e. they were in bigb spirits, pd. (and not as explained in Lex. Poët.); at hann mygdi (subj.) allri mekt Gydinga, that be quelled all the might of the Jews, Post. (Unger) 104.

mýr-dæla, u, f. 'mire-dale,' a miry, boggy bollow, Hallgr.

mögðir, m. a kind of stone, Edda ii. 494.

mösni, a, m. the name of a bear, Edda (Gl.)

-na, add,-satt-na, Bs. i. 469, v. l.

nagl-hald, n. a nail's bold, Bs. ii. 503.

naumr, add,-naum grið, Bs. ii. 508 (17th century); vera naumt við kominn, to be pressed for time.

nár, B, add,-ná-bond, n. pl. the cords by which the shroud is bound round the body, Mar.

nef-lauss, adj. [ncfi], 'kinless,' orphaned, desolate; sagt er frá hve neflauss narir, Mkv.

nekkverr, add,-Mr. Uppström, and since Bugge, derive this word from ne-veit-hverr, instead of Grimm's ne-hverr, cp. A. S. nathwat = newat-bwat = Icel. nakkvat; this would better account for the double k, but otherwise it has no influence on the inflexive changes of the word.

B. nekkverr. In B. IV. 3, nokkor should be put under a separate head as loc. adverb, = somewhere, anywhere, qs. ne-hvar or nenems, the verb, add,—a pret. numdi in mod. usage, formed from the part, numinn, as if from a verb nymja; örvaðist geð á allan hátt er eg numdi sjónum | föður-landið heldr hátt hafit upp úr sjónum, Eggert.

Nes-konungr, 2 pr. name, Baut. 402.

nett-leikr, m. neatness, (mod.)

njótr, m., add,—njóts-minni, n. [still in Norway called njös-minne, Ivar Aasen, in the new Edition of his Dict., of a cup drunk by customers after striking a bargain]: - a kind of 'earnest-cup;' sendi hann honum eina skál fulla mjaðar, ok bað hann drekka njótsminni (mótsminni is an error), hér með, segir konungr, vil ek gefa þér, Sveinn, jarlsnafn, etc., Fms. vi. 52: the suggestion at the end of the article is therefore true.

Noregr, add,—'Nurviag' on the Jellinge stone. nott, f., C, add,-netr-göltr, n. a roving about by night.

ný-lýsi, n., to the passage Orkn. 420 add,—According to the Saga and an entry in the old Annals the day in question was the evening of the 21st of Dec. 1154, old style; and from information given by Mr. Main (the Radcliffe Observer, Oxford), a full moon fell on this very day in that year, old style. This quite settles the question as to the true old sense of ny and nylysi. The chronology of Torizus in the old Ed. of Orkn. S. is altogether wrong.

nýting, f. a term of husbandry; góð, ill nýting, of getting in the hay or crop, Esp. 1761.

næðingr, m. a chilly blast, = gnæðingr, (mod.) ner-fellt, n. adj. as adv. nearly, almost, (mod.)

nökkor, adv., qs. ne-hvar or ne-veit-hvar, somewbere, very freq. in old writers, somewhere, anywhere; to this word belong the references under nekkverr, B. IV. 3, p. 452; to which add,—hér nökkur, Fb. i. 73; nökkur lands eða lagar, Al. 107. In mod. usage this word has become obsolete and is replaced by einhvers-stadar; the explanation given under nekkverr, B. IV. 3, must be altered accordingly, and the words 'somewbat, may be' struck out.

nökkvi, a, m.; in the phrase, þungr sem 'nökkvi,' or nökkva-þungr, of things like hay soaked with water or the like. This word can hardly be related to nökkvi, a boat; we think it is qs. n-ökkvi, cp. ökkr and ökvast, 'þungr sem einn ökvi' rapidly pronounced sem 'nökvi, the n being taken from the preceding word, as in njóli (jóll, p. 326, col. 2).

obbeldi = ofbeldi, Thom. 405.

ofan, adv.; instead of 'in bior. S. often spelt oman,' read 'the mod. Faroe dialect has oman.

of-glepr, m. a crime, Art. 20.

of-sinni, a, m. a follower; allir inir aztu Adils ofsinnar, Bm.; Sathan og hans ofsinnum, Vídal. ii. 25.

of-vægi, n. an enormity, an enormous weight.

opt, add,-with the notion of ever; árliga verða skyli maðr opt fá, Hm.; so opt, ósjaldan, Vsp.

oro, n., add the phrase,-fá sér e-o til oroa, to notice, to resent; eg vil ekki fá mér það til orða, Vídal. ii. 41: among compds, add,—orð-fyndni, f. facetiousness: ord-heppinn, adj. bitting: ord-hof, n. the word-sanctuary, i. e. the mouth, Stor.: oro-lagor, part. famous: oro-lengia, d, to dilate upon; eg vil ekki o. petta, I will cut it sbort: orð-reyrr, m. tbe word-reed, i. e. tbe tongue, Sighvat: orð-ræmör, part. notorious: orðstafir, m. pl. 'word-staves,' pbrases, Am. q: oro-svif, n. pl. rumours, Post. 92.

ostr,—the etymology of ostr, qs. jostr, is confirmed by the borrowed Finnish juusto, see Dr. W. Thomsen, p. 66.

60al, instead of B. II. 3, read,—In the old Norse there is a compd alda-odal, a property of ages or beld for ages or generations, Lat. fundus avitus, an ancient allodial inberitance; ok ef eigi er leyst innan þriggja vetra, þá verðr sú jörð honum at alda óðali, and if it be not released within three years, then the estate becomes his allocial property, D. N. i. 129; til æfinlegrar eignar ok alda óðals, for everlasting possession and allodial tenure, iii. 88: then this phrase became metaphorical, in the phrase, at alda ödli, to everlasting possession, i. e. for ever; Joann prestr skal vera þar meðan hann vill ok fylgja því at alda eyðli, i. 266; hverr verðr þykki at taka þann úmaga at alda ödli, to maintain bim (the poor man) for ever, Grag. i. 264: or of past time, frá alda öðli, from time immemorial; varla hefir þvílíkt heyrzt frá aldöðli, Vídal. ii. 181; whence the mod. Dan. frá 'arilds' tid (by corrupt pronunciation = fra ' ald-odels' tid, ld being changed into r). lieve the mid. Lat. all-odium to be derived from this compd, by way of assimilation; the old Teut. form would be alp-odal (Goth. alp-= aevum), whence all-odal, allodium, property beld in absolute possession, opposed to such as is beld in fee or subject to certain conditions. The remarks under óðal, 1. 7, 'from this word, etc.,' should be modified accordingly.

 síð-kast, n. the last throw, of dice; in the phrase, uppa á síðkastið, at the last moment.
 si-fellt, n. adj. continuously, (mod.)
 sink-girni, f. covetousness, Post. 640.
 sjá, the verb, l. 3, add,—pl. só, Clem.
                                                                           Bugge's foot-note to l. c. sjá, the pronoun, see sá, sú. This word or form might have been put under a separate head, it is often used in a pointedly demonstr. sense, like bessi; see the references s. v. sá. anum, Post. (Unger) 213.

skalli, a, m., add,—skalli, kom þú á morgin, Post. 250.

35 (see skapt I. 2. at the end).

megi skefjur þola, Post. 636.

skapt-har, observe, --- we suspect that in the phrase 'skaptha sol,' of the sun just after sunrise, is concealed another sense; it is not 'spear-high,' but akin to A. S. sceaft-mond = balf a foot, or six inches, meaning the moment when the sun has got just half a foot above the hills; the definition given by the ancients themselves in K. p. K. 96 is artificial and can hardly be etymologically true; the word was perhaps borrowed from the A.S., and so the old Icelanders themselves did not quite understand it; cp. the phrase, ganga skapta-muninn, to walk just balf a pace, Lv.

skata, u, f., add the saying,—begir barnið meðan það étr skötu-fétinn. skálp-hæna, u, f., add,—tbe scaup-duck, anas marila, see Bewick.

skefjur, f. pl. scrapes, rough bandling; (ungar) svá styrknaðir at þeir ' fyrir Svöld,' Edda 83, also Knytl. S. ch. 120, 122; see the conclusive essay on the place and date of this battle by Mr. Jörgensen, in Aarb, for Nord.

Oldk. og Hist. 1869; to which add, that 'Hédins-ey' actually occurs. although disguised, in Hallfred's poems, composed immediately after the battle, viz. 'á víðu sundi Héðins-eyjar' for 'Héðins-meyjar' of the MSS.; and breiðan bekk Héðins 'rekka' of the same poem (Fs. 218, 219, verses 12, 15, being a local name, not a kenning).

sylfr = silfr, cp. Dan. sölv, Post. 569.

tá, n. a walk, add,—uppi í hellunni sem liggr á táinu, D. N. vi. 339 (Fr.) tigjund (spelt tighiund) = tiund, a tithe, N. G. L. i. 401.

tignaor, m. = tign, glory, Post. 621.

tigr, add the saying,—opt verðr örgum eins fátt á tug, Skaufhala-balk. til-gero, f. affectation; tilgerbar-fullr, -samr, affected, (mod.) til-viljan, f. a mere chance.

tjalda, the verb, add-ad tjalda til einnar nætr, to pitch the tent for a single night, of shifty, changeable human things which stand to-day and to-morrow are swept away, a common saying in Icel. (even as in Arabic, see Mr. Littre's Inaugural Address to the French Academy); and, það veror ad tjalda því sem til er, one must use the bangings one bas, i. e. one must make the best of it. In the former case the metaphor is taken from the pitching a tent, in the latter from the dressing the hall (or church) on festive occasions.

tolla, the verb,-for a suggestion as to its origin see bola II; we now believe this to be the real origin of the word.

tólf-faldr, adj. twelvefold, Post. 513.

ton-laust, n. adj. without intonation, Thom. 455.

troll-volkaðr, part. witch-ridden, = trollriða.

truar-jatning, add,-when used with the article it means specially the Apostles' Creed; læra Trúar-játninguna og Faðir-Vor.

tvi-, add, -tvimælis-maor, m. a law term, one who contradicts bimself. um-vending, f. a turning inside out, Thom. 414.

um-preifing, f. a touch, Post. 415.

undir-göng, n. pl. an under-way, tunnel. undir-orpning, f. a subterfuge, Post. 551.

undir-skal, f. an 'under-cup,' saucer, Dan. under-kop, (mod.) unna, the verb, l. 3, add,—unt, loved, Post. (Unger) 416, l. 30.

upp-á-móti, adv. up-bill; opp. to ofan-í-móti.

upp-diska, 20, to dish up, Thom. 417.

upp-i-lopt, adv. turning the face upwards, (mod.); opp. to a grufu ú-kvæði, n. pl. (p. 662, col. 2), = Lat. ne-fas; eru þat ókvæði að hugsa, að . . ., Vídal. i. 320.

út-brjótr, m. an outburst, Thom.

vaðall, m. = vaðill, a wading; eptir vaðal í frosti, after wading in frost, Bs. i. 387.

vatn-prunginn, adj. dropsical, Thom. 500.

veiklast, 20, to grow weak or faint.

voiz = viz, see vior; veiz eptir skyldu, quite in order, Thom. 393. ver-budir, f. pl. sbeds or booths in which fishermen live, Eggert Itn. ver-gangr = verðgangr, Boll. 350.

votr-grænn, adj. 'winter-green,' ever-green (cp. Dan. vintergrönt), Rkv.

vhda, the verb, l. 1,- 'ving' in the ditty of Grett. is, we believe, qs. 'ving,' from the obsolete vringa, = to wring, from which vrungu, q. v. wnd-hogg, n. a stroke in the wind or a stroke aslant; in the phrase, hann slar ekki vindhöggin, of a steady worker who never loses a minute.

undottr, adj. bay-coloured, of a horse.

nin-sýra, u, f. vinegar, Post. 580.

rísa, u, f., add,-hann orti kvæði þat er hann kallaði Jóns-vísur, þvíat virki sá er eigi stefsettr, en þó kvæði svá langt, at þat hefir fjóra tigi eyrenda ok sjau umfram, Post. 511.

ýlun, f. bowling, Post. 426.

binku-loysi, n. thoughtlessness, stupidity; prysvar hann drakk i inku-leysi, Egilsson's Poems.

bioa, u, f. a thaw, mild weather; a porranum voru her svo miklar píður, að grasið fór að spretta kringum bæi, en það fékk fljótan enda á Gounni, a letter from western Icel. of March 11, 1873; cp. valt er 'porra bíð-vindi, Hallgr.

bokkr, m. a mood, add,—væri betr at ek þegða þokks, þat hefir hverr er verdr er loks, I bad better not speak my mind, Mkv.

brá-rækr, adj. persevering, Post. (Unger) 434.

prymr, m., add,-in the old lay, Em. 2, for hvat prymr par, we read, hvat þrym (dat.) er þar, wbat din is there? The lost vellum, we suppose, had 'hvat prym' par,' where ' might be the inflexive -r, but was meant to be the personal verb 'er,' often written in this abbreviated form above the line; pruma or prymja, =tonare, is never found in old prose writers or poets; the conclusive reason is that the true idiomatic construction in this case is 'hvat' with a dative, and not with a verb (cp. hvat er bat hlym hlymia, Skm.)

bursa-stafr, m., see burs,—the notion of the magical Rune is preserved in the phrase, rista e-m bursa-staf, to libel a person in a coarse, brutal manner; það var mesta ofdirfð af ótilkjörnu flóni, | að rista þenna þursa staf Þorláks-syni Jóni, Grönd.

bustr, m. [Lat. fustis], a flail; med hördum bust, Post. 562.

bvengr, m., add the following curious reference,-Hjörleifr konungr var upp festr í konungs höll með skó-þvengjum sínum sjálfs millum elda tveggja . . . A meðan vakti Hildr ok jós mungáti í eldana, ok kvað 'Hjörleifi þat verra,' hón leysti hann svá at hón hjó með sverði skópvengina (thus, we believe, to be emended for 'ok kvað Hjörleif bar vera,' etc., of the vellum), king H. was bung up in the king's ball by bis shoe-thongs between two fires ... In the meantime H. kept awake, and poured ale into the fires, saying that this was worse (more tantalizing) for bim; she then released bim by cutting the thongs with a sword, Fas. ii. 34. þver-höfði, a, m. a wrong-beaded person.

A LIST OF BRITISH RIVERS,

About a hundred in number, contained in old Icelandic alliterative memorial verses (inscribed á-heiti, i. e. names of rivers) from MSS. of the Snorra-Edda (ii. 479, 480, of the 13th century; the verses themselves may well be of the 12th century). Most of these rivers seem to belong to the northern Scottish counties, Caithness, Ross, Moray, Sutherland, and to the north-east of England. As specmens of an attempt at identification we add about thirty names, half for Scotland and half for England, leaving the rest open. In Scotland, Ormt, Armet W.; Sekin, Shin R.; Dyrn, Durn W.; Mein, Mein W.; Skialg, Stallag W.; Nis, Ness R.; Ekla or Ekkjall, Oykill R.; Spæ, Spey R.; Nie, Nith R.; Foll, Thuil R.; Dyna, Da R.; Njörn, Nairn R.; Bro, Brora R.; Maura, Strath More; Apardion, Aberdeen (here used of the river). In Ingland, Tems, Thames R.; Humra, Humber R.; Dun, Don R.; Alin, Alne R.; Svöl, Swale R.; Usa, Ouse R.: Pyn, Tyne R.; Tvedda, Tweed R.; Lodda, Ludd R.; Ver, Wear R.; Rudr, Rother R.; R6, Rye R.; Hrid, Reed R.; Myn, Maun R.; Mynt, Mint R. (Johnston). A few (ten or twelve) of the rivers in the verses are of other countries, being probably added for alliteration sake, e.g. Jordan, Tiber, Euphrates, Albis, Loire; these we have omitted. Some of these names also occur in old lays (Gm., Bm., Gs., Hkv.), and this list may thus afford a lint as to the age of these poems.

GAELIC NAMES AND NICKNAMES

Contained in the Landnáma-bók (Icelandic Book of Settlement); those in the Orkn. and the Njála are left out, as being already well known. The translation and identification we leave to Celtic scholars, only noticing that these names, as well as those of the rivers above, were taken from oral tradition, not from books; the Norse form may therefore throw some light on the Celtic pronunciation of the 10th to the 12th centuries.
