CENTER FOR SECURITY POLICY
ACTIVITY REPORT 2005-2006

The background of the entire page is a close-up, slightly blurred image of the American flag, showing the stars and stripes. The stars are white on a dark blue field, and the stripes are red and white. The text is overlaid on a semi-transparent white rectangular box.

MISSION

OF THE CENTER FOR SECURITY POLICY

“To identify challenges and opportunities likely to affect American security, broadly defined, and to act promptly and creatively to ensure that they are the subject of focused national examination and effective action.”

We are guided in this effort by the time-tested philosophy the late President Ronald Reagan called “peace through strength”: International peace is most likely achieved – and as a result, we are most secure – when America is strong and engaged on behalf of freedom throughout the world.

SPECIAL FORCES IN THE WAR OF IDEAS

With the founding of the Center for Security Policy in 1988, a unique organization began performing a unique mission. Then, as now, the objective was to secure our country in the face of implacable foes and all-too-widespread confusion about their ominous intentions and capabilities.

Today, even more than two decades ago, we find ourselves in a life-and-death struggle with a totalitarian ideology bent on the destruction of freedom in this country and around the globe. We call it Islamofascism. Its explicit agenda is to compel Muslims and non-Muslims the world over to submit to an international theocracy under a repressive Taliban-style religious code known as Shari'a.

Unfortunately, the Islamofascists are made far more formidable and dangerous by the help they receive from state-sponsors – both those who embrace their Islamist ideology (like Saudi Arabia and Iran) and by others who do not (notably, Vladimir Putin's Russia, Communist China and Hugo Chavez's Venezuela).

Ronald Reagan understood that totalitarian ideological movements have to be fought and defeated on many fronts – including the strategic, military and economic ones. Perhaps his most important insight, however, was the necessity of waging and winning a war of ideas. Today's enemies compel us to wage such an ideological struggle with at least as much skill, discipline and tenacity as President Reagan employed to prevail in the Cold War.

The job of the Center for Security Policy is to help our government, countrymen and other freedom-loving nations conceptualize, conduct and succeed on this front of the current War for the Free World. In fact, as the following pages demonstrate, the Center's dedicated staff, associates and advisors constitute the Special Forces in this war of ideas – equipped with the experience, imagination, expertise, agility and drive not just to advance strategies for victory, but to get them adopted and implemented.

We are grateful to those who appreciate the unique contribution the Center is making to the future security of this Nation and its people and who, by their contributions, make ours possible – and effective.

President and CEO

HOW WE WAGE THE 'WAR OF IDEAS'

The Center performs its mission in the following ways:

We apply our focused research and analysis to promote among decision-makers, the media and the public a large understanding of the present conflict, the nature of our enemies and ways by which America can prevail.

In particular, we devise and encourage the adoption of strategies for addressing regional and global challenges – including innovative and often path-breaking initiatives employing energy security measures, economic and financial instruments, political warfare and statecraft, as well as, where necessary, the effective use of force.

We advocate “transformation” in offensive and defensive military capabilities – especially those required for power projection and defense of our homeland – to meet the needs not only of today’s military, but that of tomorrow, as well.

We work to preserve a critical ingredient of America’s security – its sovereignty – by providing “second opinions” on defective treaties and international judicial rulings and by challenging institutions like the United Nations that frequently undermine, rather than enhance, the interests of the Free World.

We provide “quality assurance” on presidential and congressional policies, initiatives and personnel by fostering debates and informing decision makers.

Like the real Special Forces, we use “force multipliers” to increase the Center’s impact in these and other areas.

These include:

- Drawing on teams of experts from the national security, military and academic communities.
- Creating, mobilizing and leading coalitions to promote Center-sponsored initiatives.
- Providing world-class, real-time commentary via the Center’s extraordinary presence in the media (television, radio, print and Internet) at all levels – local, national and international.
- Identifying, recruiting and training talented young people to serve as the national security policy practitioners of the future.

MAKING A DIFFERENCE

We take pride in the tangible impact these efforts are having in the War for the Free World. For example:

- We were instrumental in creating and informing the opposition that led to the termination of two attempted foreign government acquisitions of strategically sensitive U.S. assets. The Center was cited by Bloomberg News as “single-handedly” stopping Communist China’s purchase in 2005 of oil giant Unocal. Shortly after the Center provided congressional testimony in opposition to the United Arab Emirates’ bid to manage operations in some twenty-two American ports, the deal collapsed.
- The Center-sponsored Coalition for Security Liberty and the Law played a decisive role in securing congressional approval for renewal of the Patriot Act (see page 12)
- The Center’s Energy Security Initiative was a critical catalyst to the “Set America Free Coalition” and to securing Presidential and bipartisan Congressional support for its key policy and technology recommendations.
- Our DivestTerror.org campaign helped stimulate action on the part of authorities in New York City, Louisiana, Missouri, Illinois and New Jersey concerned that their respective public pension funds were invested in companies doing business with one or more state sponsors of terror.
- The Terrorism Awareness Program of the Center’s Islamist Project has provided briefings for over 300 CIA, FBI and local law enforcement personnel. These briefings offer analysis and tools needed to “connect the dots” about the myriad manifestations of Islamofascist operations in America including: the take-over of some eighty percent of the Nation’s mosques by Saudi-funded financial and ideological organizations; the penetration by Wahhabi clerics of the U.S. prison system and military chaplain corps; and Islamist recruitment on college campuses and influence operations in Washington, D.C.

- We helped to put on the political map the issue of stealthy U.N. attempts to impose international taxes on American citizens, leading to the introduction of bicameral legislation aimed at blocking such egregious infringements on U.S. sovereignty and the major new step they would constitute towards supranational government.

THE PEOPLE OF THE CENTER

JACKSON AND TOWER CONGRESSIONAL FELLOWSHIPS

"The Center's fellowship program creates a connectivity between the proven global strategy of Ronald Reagan and the developing future generation of American foreign policy-makers, thus generating a historical learning experience, a personal understanding of politics, and a chance to affect positively the course of this great nation."

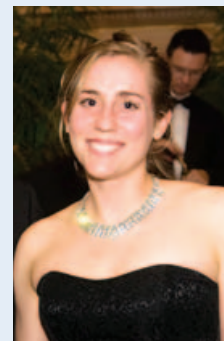

-Olivia Albrecht, 2005 John Tower National Security Fellow

The Center for Security Policy takes great pride in its Jackson and Tower Congressional Fellowships named in honor of two lawmakers who left a positive, lasting legacy for America's national security: the late Democratic Senator Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson of Washington and the late Republican Senator John Tower of Texas. These leaders epitomized the philosophy that drives the Center: "Peace through strength."

The two Fellowship programs offer promising young people an opportunity to develop a working understanding of that philosophy through compensated training at the Center, followed by placement in the offices of today's successors to Senators Jackson and Tower. The Center is profoundly grateful to the Boeing, Lockheed Martin and Northrop Grumman Corporations for support that helps make such training possible.

INTERNSHIP PROGRAM

"As an undergrad interning at CSP, I was looking for direction as to where to go after graduation. While at the Center, I was provided with the opportunity to explore various security issues, through brief-writing, presentations, consulting, public relations, and publishing. The highly regarded Center Fellows and staff, each with vast knowledge and experience in their specific fields, were always willing to answer my questions and engage in healthy debate. They took it upon themselves to expose me to the latest in security issues and gave me invaluable and applicable direction and advice for my academic and professional future."

-Aubrey J. D. Bettencourt, CSP Intern, Spring -2006

An axiom of government is that "People are policy." Accordingly, one of the Center's most valuable roles is to identify, recruit and train young men and women who exhibit the potential and aspiration to become highly skilled security policy practitioners.

Prior interns who have now gone on to full-time national security careers or graduate studies

Over the years, a number of the Center's interns have proven to be so capable they were invited to join our staff. What is more, nearly all of those whose Center internships have afforded hands-on training in security policy-making have gone on to work in executive branch positions, on congressional staffs, in think tanks, industry or academia where such experience has been of direct relevance.

The following are among those who interned at the Center in 2005-2006:

Derek Child, Georgetown
Simon Dinitz, University of Maryland
Dave Elias, Penn State
Felicia Enright, St. Johns (MD)
Matthew Gula, Pepperdine
Colin Maynard, Pepperdine

THE CENTER'S WORK PROGRAM

The Center addresses the most important security challenges of our time with a focus on developing practical solutions and seeking their adoption. We do so through eight projects and by our 'Special Forces' approach to addressing 'targets of opportunity.' These efforts are undertaken with imagination, tenacity and all the resources – intellectual (both those of the core staff and our 'force-multipliers'), financial and media – at our disposal.

THE ISLAMIST PROJECT

"Today, an intolerant and violent extremist political ideology known as Islamofacism has taken hold throughout Muslim communities in France and much of Western Europe. Moreover, this fast-spreading strain is on its way to becoming the dominant face of Islam in the EU. It is profoundly anti-Western,...and marked by wholesale rejection of such fundamental European values as democracy, secularism, separation of church and state, human rights and modernity."

Alex Alexiev, Vice President for Research, Washington Times November 10, 2005

The Center has been concerned with the rising threat of Islamofascism for years before the 9/11 attacks made evident the danger it poses. Through the various programs and initiatives of the Islamist Project, we explore the sources and manifestations of this ideology and promote political warfare, economic and financial and other techniques for countering them.

In particular, the Center is working with our natural allies in this struggle – non-Islamist Muslims, who are as much at risk from the Islamofascists as are non-Muslims. In 2006, we launched "Muslims Speak Out" – an international outreach program designed to provide a public forum in the United States and overseas for calling attention to and empowering adherents to Islam who reject the repressive, totalitarian ideology of the Islamists. Launched with a conference in Paris on March 13th that was co-sponsored by France's Institute pour la Defense de Democratie, this initiative will feature monthly events and a web site devoted to promoting the views and activities of anti-Islamist Muslims.

ENERGY SECURITY PROJECT

"The Center for Security Policy was among a coalition of right-leaning organizations that released an energy plan this year promoting plug-ins as one way to increase fuel efficiency in light of the instability of the Middle East. 'If you're thinking about this as an environmental issue first and foremost, you're missing the point,' Mr. Gaffney said. Curbing dependence on foreign oil, he added, 'is a national security emergency.'"

New York Times April 2, 2005

There is a "perfect storm" of national security, energy, economic and environmental conditions that compel the United States to begin immediately reducing its dependence upon unstable and hostile foreign sources of energy and cutting their cash flow. The Center is a driving force behind the "Set America Free" blueprint that would transform the transportation sector via diversified, indigenously produced alternative fuels as well as the cars and trucks that can use them. The project also aims to reduce revenues and dual-use equipment and technology used by oil-producing terrorist-sponsoring states to support attacks on the U.S. and curb the access of such governments to the Western investment, equipment, technology and financing they enjoy today.

THE CENTER'S WORK PROGRAM

HOMELAND SECURITY PROJECT

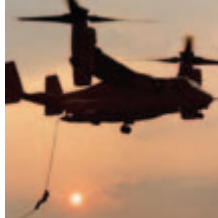

The Center is contributing to the security of the American homeland and population in four areas:

- warning of and preparing our critical infrastructure against electromagnetic pulse (EMP) attack;
- ensuring that U.S. law enforcement and intelligence authorities are equipped with the knowledge (the focus of our Policing Terrorism Program, conducted in collaboration with the Manhattan Institute) and the tools needed to protect us, such as those provided by the Patriot Act (see page 12);
- promoting crisis simulation training for state and local officials needed to avoid on-the-job training in case of terrorist attacks or other emergencies; and
- protecting our borders and advancing security-minded immigration reform.

The Center also seeks to recognize and support "Heroes of the Homefront" – individuals and organizations that are making real contributions to the war effort here at home. (see page 23).

DEFENSE TRANSFORMATION PROJECT

The Center champions U.S. exploitation of critical technologies to ensure America always enjoys the military advantages that deter aggression – and assure victory if deterrence fails. This project focuses on understanding the nature of technologies that are truly decisive and transformational and effectively advocating for their development and utilization by the United States, and keeping them out of the hands of foreign foes and competitors. The project supports policies, programs and the budgets necessary to provide enhanced global power-projection and defensive capabilities.

DIVESTTERROR.ORG

"It just doesn't make sense for our trust fund money, taxpayer money, to be invested in companies that do business with countries that engage in terrorist activities against the United States—the terrorists who are fighting and killing our own sons, daughters, friends, and family members, fighting to undermine the very foundation upon which this country was founded and is based."

State Representative Pete Schneider of Louisiana

In 2004, the Center launched a campaign to deny state sponsors of terror the immense resources currently being provided – unwittingly – to them by Americans who invest in publicly traded corporations that do business with Iran, Libya, North Korea, Syria and Sudan. By drawing on the lessons of the successful divestment campaign of the 1980s against apartheid South Africa, the Center is raising public awareness about the leverage American institutional and individual investors could bring to bear as part of the War for the Free World.

DEMOCRACY AND SECURITY IN ASIA PROJECT

"China National Overseas Oil Company Ltd. [shares] fell after Frank Gaffney, President of the Center for Security Policy, told the U.S. Congress that CNOOC's $18.5 billion bid for Unocal Corp. is an 'ominous' move by China to dominate energy resources for the benefit of its economy and military."

Bloomberg News, July 13, 2005

Communist China poses a threat to both freedom and stability across Asia – and beyond – as it seeks to dominate strategic choke points, energy resources and other minerals, materials and technologies. This project seeks to call attention to and contend with China's ever-more-aggressive regional and global ambitions. The Center is working with the U.S.-China Economic and Security Review Commission, Congress and others to develop strategies for countering the growing Chinese threat. This project also sheds light on and promotes policies to counter North Korea's threatening behavior and reinvigorate ties to the region's democratic countries – including notably, Japan, India, Australia and Taiwan.

THE CENTER'S WORK PROGRAM

HEMISPHERIC SECURITY PROJECT

The Western hemisphere is fast becoming a major new front in the War for the Free World, thanks to a rising tide of radical leftist and anti-U.S. regimes in much of Latin America. In fact, Latin America is awash with increasingly serious challenges to this country's security, economy and society and to our vital interests in the region. These include: the resuscitation of Fidel Castro's dictatorship and his agenda for destabilizing democracies, made possible by the oil wealth of the ever-more-authoritarian Venezuelan regime of Hugo Chavez; the presence of Hezbollah and other terror networks in the "tri-border" region of Paraguay, Argentina and Brazil; the pro-Western Colombian government's mounting troubles with its neighbors and their support of narco-terrorist guerillas.

Washington has, for too long, neglected this vital region, contributing to the emerging instability there and facilitating its penetration by Chinese and Islamist entities. The Center is helping to identify these threats and to provide ideas for defeating them.

Iranian president Mahmoud Ahmadinejad and Venezuelan dictator Hugo Chavez.

U.S. SOVEREIGNTY PROJECT

"...The Center for Security Policy, pointed out in testimony before the House International Relations Committee that...the Law of the Sea Treaty creates an unelected global governing agency...that claims 'the exclusive right to regulate what is done, by whom, when and under what circumstances on and beneath the sea-floor in international waters.'"

Human Events January 21, 2005

International organizations, treaties and tribunals have been increasingly employed as a means of diminishing and/or circumscribing U.S. sovereignty and our government's freedom to exercise it. The Center is defining the menace posed by such "asymmetric weapons" and leading coalition efforts to challenge and counteract their use at the expense of American security and interests.

The Center organized a press conference opposing the Law of the Sea Treaty in February of 2005 featuring Senator James Inhofe of Oklahoma and 20 public policy organizations.

'TARGETS OF OPPORTUNITY'

In addition to the standing projects described on these pages, the Center's Special Forces also routinely tackle issues that require timely attention and competent action. Recent examples of this distinctive facet of the Center's work program include:

- Highlighting the success of and need for sea-based missile defenses and urging their immediate and wide-spread deployment;
- Providing congressional testimony on such subjects as shortfalls in the 2006 defense and homeland security budgets and controversial foreign investments involving Unocal and U.S. port facilities;
- Warning of the adverse strategic implications for the US and Israel of the latter's surrender of territory to Islamofacist terrorists;
- Addressing the fatal defects of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty on the eve of its Review Conference; and
- Raising an alarm about the draft European Constitution's implications for U.S.-European ties.

PRESERVING THE PATRIOT ACT

The Center Special Forces' ability to create, mobilize and lead like-minded individuals and groups was much in evidence in the success of its Coalition for Security, Liberty & the Law (CSLL) in educating the public and Members of Congress about the need for reenactment of the Patriot Act. This legislation provides vital tools to the law enforcement and intelligence communities. Ever since its enactment shortly after 9/11, however, the Act has been subjected to vicious, and often wholly disingenuous, assaults by critics of various political stripes and agendas.

Pressure from such quarters resulted in the filibuster in December 2005 of a bill needed to reenact provisions slated to "sunset" at the end of that year. With political cover provided by four of their Republican colleagues, Senate Democrats twice succeeded in blocking action on that legislation, prompting Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid famously to declare that, "We killed the Patriot Act."

With characteristic skill and effectiveness, this Center-sponsored coalition engaged at several points and in various ways to help preserve the Patriot Act. These included:

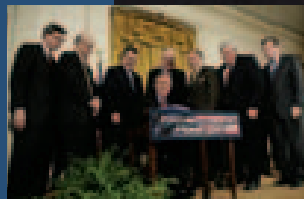

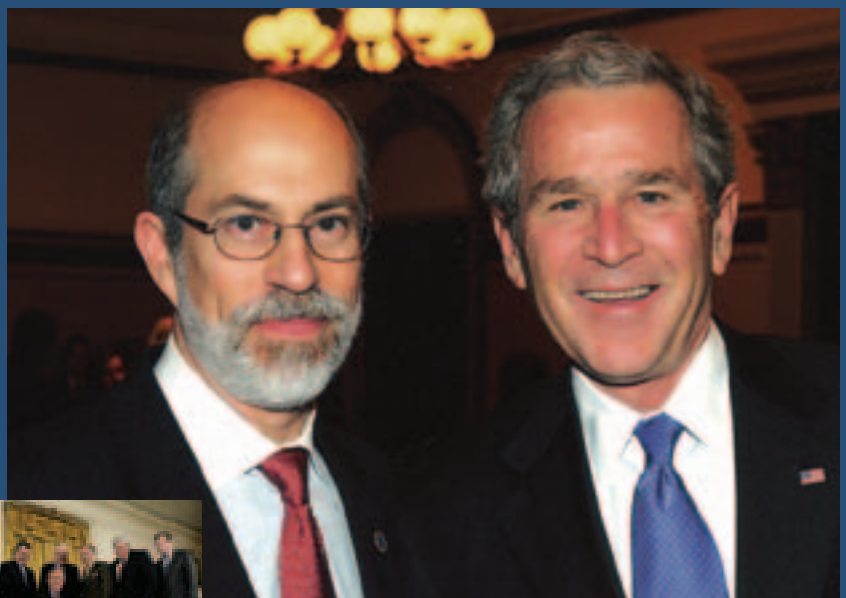

- Circulating three Open Letters to the congressional leadership in September 2004, December 2005 and January 2006 signed by dozens of leading legal authorities and security policy practitioners urging the reenactment of the Patriot Act. Among the letters' influential signatories were: former Attorneys General Edwin Meese, Richard Thornburgh, William Barr and John Ashcroft, former National Security Advisor William P. Clark, former Secretaries of Defense Caspar Weinberger and James Schlesinger, former Deputy Attorney General George Terwilliger, former Solicitors General Judge Robert Bork and Theodore B. Olson, former CIA Director R. James Woolsey, and former U.S. Representative to the United Nations Jeanne Kirkpatrick.

- Collaborating with former Attorneys General Meese and Thornburgh in a press conference at the National Press Club on January 25 aimed at explaining the urgent need to preserve the Act's threatened provisions and at correcting the many serious distortions of those provisions and their practical effects.
- Participating in separate strategy sessions on the Patriot Act and related national security issues with President George W. Bush and Attorney General Alberto Gonzalez.

- Sponsoring a television issue-advertising campaign featuring Debra Burlingame, sister of Capt. Charles "Chic" Burlingame, the American Airlines pilot of Flight 77 which was hijacked and then crashed into the Pentagon on September 11, 2001. The ads ran in the Washington market on February 2, 2006 during Fox's hit program, "24," and thereafter in markets in New Hampshire, Nebraska, Idaho and Alaska. Less than a week after the Coalition's ads began airing, the four Republican Senators who had joined the filibuster in December – John Sununu (NH), Chuck Hagel (NE), Larry Craig (ID) and Lisa Murkowski (AK) – reached an agreement with the White House clearing the way for reenactment.

FORCE MULTIPLIERS

The Center for Security Policy leverages its networks of national security and military professionals, academics and other policy practitioners as ‘force multipliers’ that give the Center an impact in the War of Ideas far greater than its staff size and budget would otherwise allow.

NATIONAL SECURITY ADVISORY COUNCIL

From the Center’s inception, its National Security Advisory Council (NSAC) has served as an invaluable instrument for networking, information-sharing, and the generation and dissemination of policy analyses and recommendations.

We are proud to have as honorary co-chairs of the NSAC Senator Jon Kyl, Republican of Arizona, and R. James Woolsey, a former Director of Central Intelligence under President Clinton – leaders of extraordinary vision and courage in the War for the Free World. Former National Security Advisor to the President William P. Clark is the NSAC’s honorary chairman emeritus.

Members of the National Security Advisory Council include many of America’s most capable and accomplished national security practitioners (see pages 26-27). We take special pride in the fact that, as noted in the list on page 26, a number of them continue to serve the country with distinction and are, therefore, on leave from the Council for the duration of their time in government.

MILITARY COMMITTEE

Among the Center’s most important functions is its ability rapidly to provide informed and reliable information about the various emerging, dynamic and diverse threats to U.S. national security and interests – and the means by which they can most safely and effectively be addressed. An invaluable resource in this regard is the vast experience and expertise of the Center’s Military Committee.

Founded in 1999 under the chairmanship of former Commandant of the Marine Corps Gen. Carl E. Mundy, Jr., the Military Committee assists the Center in engaging the military community, and those attentive to its views, as catalysts for renewing America’s defense capabilities and adopting effective peace-through-strength policies to guide their use. The Committee’s current chairman is Major General Paul Vallely, whose contributions to the national security have continued since his retirement from a distinguished military career not only through his leadership at the Center but also via his role as a prominent Fox News Military Analyst and co-author (with another Committee member, Lieutenant General Thomas McInerney) of the bestselling book, Endgame: The Blueprint for Victory in the War on Terror.

THE ACADEMIC COUNCIL

The Academic Council is a formidable and much needed resource for training and inspiring the next generation of security policy practitioners. Unfortunately, the potential of this country's institutions of higher learning to contribute to the war effort is largely unrealized, due primarily to the hostility of many professors to our government's leaders, policies and objectives.

Fortunately, there are a number of influential national security scholars who subscribe to the philosophy of peace through strength and are striving to equip their students to apply it. The Center is proud to have enlisted sixteen of these professors as members of its Academic Council. The Council's goals are to:

- Help in the education and development of the next generation of robust academics and policy practitioners in the defense, national security, international affairs, intelligence and related fields.
- Serve as a networking vehicle among established and emerging scholars, their students, prospective students and the policy community.
- Promote the intellectual work of its members, their colleagues and students, and to afford them the greatest possible public exposure.
- Ensure that no professor or student in the field feels intellectually or professionally isolated on account of his or her commitment to robust foreign and defense policies.

FORCE MULTIPLIERS

THE NATIONAL SECURITY ACADEMY

“Your inaugural National Security Academy was indeed a roaring success – primarily for the selection and strength of your speakers. Let me say, nonetheless, as one with an inside-the-Government view of many of the topics covered, your audience heard in those two short days, and in one place, what is spread around the Government and buried in at least a half dozen departments and agencies, and passed around amongst themselves. Putting this out there for others to hear – especially young people – is something that will continue to be needed.”

S. Eugene Poteat, President, Association of Former Intelligence Officers

The force-multiplying potential of the Academic Council was on impressive display during June 2-3, 2005 when the Center convened its first annual National Security Academy. Fifty promising students and young professionals in the national security field were treated to lectures and roundtable discussions with professors on the Council and eminent senior security policy practitioners. The former included: Victor Davis Hanson, Robert Kaufman, Peter Leitner, Jeremy Rabkin and Michael Waller. Among the latter were: John Rood of the National Security Council; Michelle Van Cleave, the National Counter-Intelligence Executive; Assistant Secretary of State Paula DeSutter; Jason Bruzdinski of the MITRE Corporation; Andrew McCarthy of the Foundation for the Defense of Democracies; and Roger W. Robinson of the U.S.-China Economic and Security Review Commission.

The twin aims of the Academy were: 1) To build on the Center’s Academic Council and its efforts to encourage and facilitate improvements in the quality and breadth of national security education in the United States. And 2) to help identify promising students with the interest and personal qualities necessary to become part of the next generation of security policy practitioners. The following were among the topics addressed:

- The War for the Free World
- Homeland security
- Islamofascism at home and abroad
- The rising power of Communist China
- How to wage a War of Ideas
- The threat of Weapons of Mass Destruction
- “Lawfare” – the use of treaties, international organizations and tribunals as “asymmetric weapons” against the United States

By every measure, this inaugural Academy was a huge success on both scores. In addition to receiving very positive feedback from nearly all attendees, the Center has forged new ties with individuals who share an understanding of the importance of promoting in academia the cause of American strength, security and freedom.

THE BOARD OF REGENTS

THE BOARD OF REGENTS

Since its founding in New York City in 2003, the Board of Regents has become a key part of the Center team. Under the leadership of its founding and current chairmen, Terry Elkes and Miles Prentice respectively, as well as Amanda Bowman, its distinguished members have brought the Center's work to the attention of new, influential audiences and helped the Center secure the resources to accomplish its mission.

The Regents have advanced the Center's goals by facilitating interactions between business and community leaders and the Center's personnel and associated security policy practitioners. Such interactions occur at the monthly Regents Breakfast Series held at New York's St. Regis Hotel, which have introduced over 400 people to the Center over the past three years. In addition, the Board sponsors each year two major events in

New York: the Regents Annual Dinner held in June and the Mightier Pen Award luncheon held in the late fall (see page 25)

Members of the Board of Regents have also been instrumental in arranging events sponsored by or with other organizations that help promote the Center's ideas and initiatives. For example, Frank Gaffney has been a frequent speaker at prestigious forums in New York and the Tri-State area, including the Women's National Republican Club, the America-Israel Friendship League, the Chaos Club and a number of civic and religious institutions. The Center's commitment to forging collaborative relationships with like-minded organizations has also resulted in an on-going partnership with the Manhattan Institute's Center for Policing Terrorism.

In November, 2005, the Center co-sponsored with the Council on Foreign Relations and the Organization of American Ambassadors a highly successful, half-day symposium on Preserving an Open Society in an Age of Terror. Among the participants were Board of Regents Member Bruce Gelb, Sen. Jon Kyl, New York Police Commissioner Raymond Kelly, former Assistant Attorney General Viet Dinh and Frank Gaffney.

In 2005, the Center formed the Regents Council, a group of younger professionals working closely with the Board of Regents. The Council is currently under the leadership of Richard Rubinstein and Jennifer White, its Chairman and Vice-Chairman, respectively.

Since its founding, the New York-based Board of Regents has become an indispensable part of the Center's success. We are excited at the prospect of further expanding its membership and building it into a truly national force-multiplier for the Center and the cause of freedom.

RECOGNIZING OTHERS' CONTRIBUTIONS

The Center has long sought to inspire America's leaders and those they represent to pursue and advance robust national security policies by acknowledging the inspiring work of others who have done just that. Throughout the year, the Center confers four honors – the Keeper of the Flame Award, the Freedom Flame Award, the Sacred Honor Award and the Mightier Pen Award – to recognize such past achievements on the part of the recipients and to encourage others to emulate them.

The Keeper of the Flame Award

Since 1990, the Center for Security Policy has recognized those who are Keepers of the Flame – individuals whose visionary leadership in the service of the cause of freedom is noteworthy in its own right, and an inspiration to all who share their commitment.

- 2005 Senator James Inhofe and the Heroes of the Homefront
- 2004 General Peter Pace and the Defenders of Freedom
- 2003 Deputy Secretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz and the Liberators of Iraq
- 2002 Gen. Richard B. Myers, USAF and the Men and Women of the U.S. Armed Forces
- 2001 James R. Schlesinger
- 2000 Floyd D. Spence
- 1999 James L. Jones
- 1998 Donald H. Rumsfeld
- 1997 Christopher Cox
- 1996 Newt Gingrich
- 1995 Ronald Reagan
- 1994 Jon Kyl
- 1993 Malcolm S. "Steve" Forbes, Jr.

2004 GENERAL PETER PACE AND THE DEFENDERS OF FREEDOM

In October 2004, the Center paid tribute to the Defenders of Freedom -- namely, the men and women of the U.S. armed services (active duty and reserve); officials of the executive, legislative and judiciary branches; those responsible for the security of our borders and homeland; the first responders; the law enforcement community; intelligence personnel; our allies; and industrial base. Accepting on their behalf was the then-Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, General Peter Pace, USMC.

General Pace's address to the nearly 400 attendees at this elegant black-tie dinner held at the Mayflower Hotel was preceded by a welcome from Harry Stonecipher, President and CEO of the Boeing Company, who served as the Dinner's Chairman. Gen. Pace was introduced by the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, General James Jones, USMC, following a powerful address by the Homeland Security Advisor to the President, Fran Townsend.

In accepting the award, Gen. Pace spoke movingly of the courage and commitment of those who serve -- and in some cases die for -- their country. With particular poignancy he reminisced about the sacrifices made by men he led in battle -- and the inspiration they give to all who defend this country today.

Among those in attendance for the fifteenth annual Keeper of the Flame Award were: Under Secretary of Defense for Policy Douglas Feith; Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Policy Peter Rodman; Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Forces Policy John Rood; and Special Assistant to the President and Senior Director for Proliferation Strategy, Counterproliferation, and Homeland Defense, NSC, Robert Joseph.

Members of Congress in attendance included: Keeper of the Flame Award recipients Senator Jon Kyl (1994) and Congressman Christopher Cox (1997); Senator Ted Stevens, Senator Kit Bond and Congressman Norm Dicks.

Other distinguished guests included: Chairman of the Broadcasting Board of Governors Kenneth Tomlinson; former Chairman of the Defense Policy Board Richard Perle; and former Secretary of Defense, Secretary of Energy and Director of Central Intelligence and 2001 Keeper of the Flame Award recipient Dr. James Schlesinger.

The event concluded with remarks by Center Board of Regents Chairman Terry Elkes. Mr. Elkes joined in thanking Gen. Pace and the men and women he represented on this occasion, and encouraged their continued support through the work of the Center for Security Policy.

RECOGNIZING OTHERS' CONTRIBUTIONS

2005 SENATOR JIM INHOFE AND THE HEROES OF THE HOMEFRONT

In October 2005, the Center for Security Policy honored the men and women here at home who render invaluable service in protecting our country and its people and in supporting our soldiers overseas. Accepting the Keeper of the Flame Award on their behalf was Senator James Inhofe of Oklahoma.

The 350-plus guests at this dinner held at Washington's landmark Union Station were welcomed by the former Director of the Central Intelligence Agency R. James Woolsey. Sen. Inhofe was then introduced by Deputy National Security Advisor to the President J.D. Crouch.

Among those in attendance for the sixteenth annual Keeper of the Flame Award were: Homeland Security Advisor to the President Fran Townsend; Under Secretary of State for Arms Control and International Security Robert Joseph; National Counterintelligence Executive Michelle Van Cleave; Assistant Secretary of State for Verification and Compliance Paula DeSutter; Senior Director of Defense Policy and Strategy at the National Security Council William Luti; and Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Western Hemisphere Affairs Rogelio Pardo-Maurer.

Members of Congress in attendance included: Senator Conrad Burns; Congressmen J.D. Hayworth, Roscoe Bartlett, Robin Hayes, Charles Taylor and Geoff Davis.

Other distinguished guests included: Chairman of the U.S.-China Economic and Security Review Commission Dick D'Amato; Chairman of the Broadcasting Board of Governors Kenneth Tomlinson; former Chairman of the Defense Policy Board Richard Perle; and former Senator Tim Hutchinson.

Individuals and organizations specifically honored for their efforts on the Homefront were:

Karen Theobald-Conlin, President of Helping our Heroes Foundation, which provides mentors, patient advocates, counseling and assistance with emergency funding needs for our wounded veterans for Iraq and Afghanistan.

Lt. Bob Fromme of the Sheriff's Department of Iredell County, North Carolina who, in working with the FBI and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms uncovered a multimillion-dollar tobacco smuggling ring which was raising money for Hezbollah.

Peter Gadiel of the 9/11 Families for a Secure America, an organization that has worked tirelessly to ensure that national vulnerabilities made evident by the September 11, 2001 attacks are rectified.

Jim Weiskopf, Vice President for Operations of Fisher House, which operates at least one residential facility at every major U.S. military medical center, annually providing over 8,500 military families with a supportive home environment as their loved ones are recovering from injury or illness.

RECOGNIZING OTHERS' CONTRIBUTIONS

Chief Jim Schwartz of the Arlington County Fire Department whose members' heroic actions – from the 9/11 attack on the Pentagon to their rescue efforts in New Orleans after hurricane Katrina – have saved lives with professionalism, courage and compassion.

Mayor Ernie Currier whose city of Enid, Oklahoma was the first community officially to join the Defense Department's "America Supports You" program. Over 20,000 Enid residents have volunteered to help the troops in a number of ways, including by sending letters, books, magazines, DVDs and other items to the service members deployed overseas.

Gen. and Mrs. Paul Valley, who through the Scott Valley Soldiers Memorial Fund, are conducting holiday gift-drives for service members and creating a Fallen Heroes statue to pay tribute to those who have given their lives in the service of our nation.

Gen. Valley and his wife, Muffin, in turn, made a moving presentation to the Center of a scale model of the statue commemorating the sacrifices of our fallen heroes. And,

Debra Burlingame, sister of Capt. Charles F. "Chic" Burlingame who was the pilot of American Airlines Flight 77, the plane that was crashed into the Pentagon by terrorists on September 11, 2001. Through her intrepid, inspiring and courageous leadership, Ms. Burlingame ensured that the site of the World Trade Center will remain hallowed ground, a tribute befitting those whose lives were lost on that terrible day.

The event concluded with remarks by the 1994 Keeper of the Flame, Senator Jon Kyl. Sen. Kyl paid his own tribute to the evening's honorees and expressed personal appreciation for the work of the Center for Security Policy.

General and Mrs. Paul Valley

The Freedom Flame Award

The Freedom Flame Award recognizes individuals who have exemplified the ideals of freedom, democracy, economic opportunity and international strength for which the Center strives. It is presented at the Regents Annual Dinner in New York City. Previous recipients include Senator Fred Thompson, William J. Casey, Albert Wohlstetter and Margaret Thatcher.

2004 LAWRENCE AND SUSAN KADISH

On June 14, 2004, General James L. Jones, Supreme Allied Commander, Europe and Commander of the United States European Command, was the featured speaker on the occasion of the presentation of the Freedom Flame Award to Lawrence and Susan Kadish in recognition of their immense contribution to the cause of American freedom, and most especially the work of the Center. Mr. Kadish forcefully evoked the spirit of this republic's Founding Fathers who pledged their "sacred honor" to the pursuit of liberty. His reference inspired the Center to use in the future that term to acknowledge those who, like the Kadishes, demonstrate an unstinting commitment to the cause of freedom.

2005 RICHARD PERLE AND THE SHELBY CULLOM DAVIS FAMILY

The Center and its Board of Regents presented the 2005 "Freedom Flame" Award on June 16TH of that year to former Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard Perle and the "Sacred Honor" Award to three remarkable generations of the Shelby Cullom Davis family. Mr. Perle was recognized for his distinguished career in service to the Nation, throughout which he has been a staunch advocate of President Reagan's philosophy of "peace-through-strength." As Amb. Bruce Gelb, the Dinner's chairman, observed, Mr. Perle has earned a "reputation for caring deeply about things like your country's well-being and its security.”

The Shelby Cullom Davis Foundation was honored for its generous support – both moral and material – of causes that contribute to America’s strength and security. The award was accepted by the inspiring Mrs. Kathryn Davis. On behalf of her extended family and its philanthropic foundation, Mrs. Davis’ granddaughter, Abby Moffat, noted: “Our foundation espouses the values on which our nation was founded: duty, freedom, individual responsibility, honor, and the work ethic.... The strength of our military reflects the strength of our people as well as our values and our ideas.”

The Mightier Pen

The 'Mightier Pen' Award was launched in 2001 in recognition of individuals who have, through their published writings, contributed to the public's appreciation of the need for robust U.S. national security policies and military strength as an indispensable ingredient in promoting international peace. The award – an engraved silver pen – is presented to the recipient at an elegant luncheon now sponsored by the Board of Regents in New York. Previous recipients were Mark Helprin, Charles Krauthammer and A.M. Rosenthal, .

2004 WILLIAM F. BUCKLEY, JR.

William F. Buckley, Jr. and Frank Gaffney

The Mightier Pen Award was presented in December of 2004 to William F. Buckley, Jr., a tireless defender of the principles of freedom and democracy and advocate of the philosophy of peace through strength. Renowned essayist and author Norman Podhoretz introduced the guest of honor award during a luncheon at the 21

Club in New York. Over 100 people were in attendance – including former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, the 2003 Mightier Pen recipient, A.M. Rosenthal, writer Midge Decter and actor Ron Silver – to salute one of the most influential thinkers and writers of our time.

2005 CLAUDIA ROSETT

On December 14, 2005, the Mightier Pen Award went to Claudia Rosett, a courageous and intrepid investigative reporter and editorialist long associated with the Wall Street Journal. Ms. Rosett, who is Journalist-in-Residence at the Foundation for the Defense of Democracies, was honored particularly for her indefatigable reporting that led to the exposure and multiple investigations of the U.N. oil-for-food scandal. Thanks to the sponsorship of the Board of Regents, New York’s 21 Club was once again crowded with Ms. Rosett’s fellow journalists, prominent business leaders and other admirers.

IN MEMORIAM

CASPAR W. WEINBERGER

On 28 March with the passing of former Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger, the Nation lost one of its most accomplished public servants and skilled practitioners of the philosophy of "peace through strength." The Center for Security Policy, which recognized Secretary Weinberger's tremendous contribution to America's security by bestowing upon him its first "Keeper of the Flame" Award in 1990, mourns his loss at a time when his clarity of vision, steadfastness of purpose and tenacious commitment to principle are needed more than ever.

A decorated combat veteran of World War II and graduate magna cum laude of Harvard College and Harvard Law School, Mr. Weinberger went on to serve as Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, Director of the Office of Management and Budget, and Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

It was as President Ronald Reagan's Secretary of Defense from 1981 to 1987, however, that "Cap" Weinberger made his most notable contributions to the Nation's well-being, with his leadership - indeed, with his personification - of the Reagan effort to rebuild America's military and to assume once again for the United States the role of leader of the Free World. Undoubtedly, history will recognize that his stewardship in the modernization and strengthening of America's armed forces was indispensable to the success of the Reagan strategy for destroying the Soviet Union and for promoting freedom in every corner of the world.

The Weinberger legacy has been tangibly evident in another area, as well: America's extraordinary successes on the battlefield over the past two decades have been a direct result of the reinvestment in our forces and their hardware undertaken on Cap's watch. Had it not been for his determined advocacy and competent oversight, we may have been less able to draw upon the mainstays of our military power today and tomorrow - from the M-1 main battle tank to the Bradley Fighting Vehicle to the B-1 and B-2 bombers to the V-22 tiltrotor to the Trident submarines to the Global Positioning Satellite system - to project power flexibly, precisely and decisively.

Secretary Weinberger will also be remembered for the seminal role he played in shifting the national paradigm from one of deliberate vulnerability to ballistic missile attack to one in which anti-missile defenses are part of a comprehensive homeland security posture. Thanks in no small measure to the groundwork laid by President Reagan and his cherished friend and loyal defense secretary, President George W. Bush recognized the need to deploy missile defenses and took the steps necessary to accomplish that goal. Most important of these was his decision to withdraw from the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, an action Mr. Weinberger championed with characteristic vision, eloquence and tenacity for the better part of two decades, both in and out of government.

The Center for Security Policy mourns as well the loss this year of another key member of President Reagan's team, Lynn Nofzinger. It joins with all the other members of that community in extending to his family and that of Secretary Weinberger our deepest condolences and profound thanks.

MARGO D.B. CARLISLE

On the same day Secretary Weinberger passed away, the Center for Security Policy lost one of the longest-serving members of its Board of Directors and a dear friend - and the Nation lost one of its most accomplished public servants: Margo D.B. Carlisle. While Mrs. Carlisle's lengthy career in Washington involved positions of great responsibility, they were largely out of the public eye. Throughout, she wielded enormous influence and contributed greatly to the commonweal, most especially in the security policy portfolio.

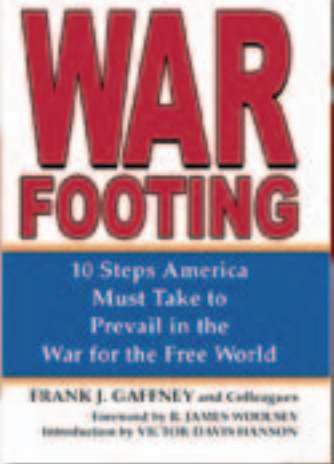

Particularly noteworthy was Mrs. Carlisle's role in various staff capacities in the United States Senate. These included: her tenure as Executive Director of the Senate Steering Committee under its then-Chairman, Senator James McClure, and as Director of the Senate Republican Conference and Chief of Staff to Senator Thad Cochran. She also served in numerous non-profit capacities, including as Executive Director of the Council for National Policy and as Vice President of Government Relations at the Heritage Foundation.

Margo also distinguished herself as a senior official in President Reagan's administration. She was the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Legislative Affairs under then-Secretary of Defense Weinberger. Like her boss, Mrs. Carlisle played an instrumental role in translating President Reagan's philosophy of "peace through strength" into the revitalization of America's armed forces and the destruction of the Soviet Union. She will be sorely missed.

WAR FOOTING

Over the past seventeen years, the Center for Security Policy has produced literally thousands of Decision Briefs, papers, columns, op.eds. and longer articles on innumerable topics of importance to the defense of freedom, both in this country and around the world. Valuable as these timely contributions to the debate have been, until now, this enormous intellectual output has not been distilled into a coherent, book-length agenda for American policy.

With the publication in November 2005 of War Footing: Ten Steps America Must Take to Prevail in the War for the Free World, the Center and its associates have now offered such a program. The Center's President, Frank J. Gaffney, Jr., lead-authored the book with contributions from nearly three-dozen of our country's most thoughtful security policy practitioners.

War Footing offers a comprehensive assessment of today's international environment and the forces that will shape that of tomorrow. It explains the complex array of threats emerging in the course of this War for the Free World – first and foremost from Islamofascists and their state-sponsors, but increasingly from other regimes around the world who share the Islamist totalitarians' enmity for freedom, if not their ideology.

War Footing then lays out ten specific steps that Americans – as individuals, as communities and as constituents – can take to ensure our way of life and the safety and well-being of our children and grandchildren. These steps include specific recommendations about how to:

- Know the enemy
- Really support our troops
- Provide for our energy security
- Stop investing in terror

- Equip the country for war at home
- Counter the mega-threat: an electromagnetic pulse attack
- Secure our borders and interior against illegal immigration
- Wage political warfare
- Launch regional initiatives
- Wield effective diplomacy

Among the many distinguished contributors to War Footing are a number closely associated with the Center: the Honorary Co-chairman of our National Security Advisory Council, former CIA Director R. James Woolsey; Academic Council member and renowned author Victor Davis Hanson; the chairman of the Center's Military Committee, Major General Paul Vallely, USA (Ret.) and Committee member Lieutenant General Thomas McInerney USAF (Ret.), Center Vice Presidents Alex Alexiev, Christopher Holton and Michael Waller; the Center's New York Director Amanda Bowman, Center Mideast Fellow Caroline Glick; Center Research Associates David McCormack and Colleen Gilbert; and 2005 Mightier Pen awardee Claudia Rosett. In addition, the extraordinarily speedy preparation and publication of War Footing benefited enormously from the team-spirit and outstanding skills of the entire Center for Security Policy staff.
