Introduction

Systematics

The meerkat (Suricata suricatta), also referred to as the suricate, gray meerkat, slender-tailed meerkat, and stokstertje, is one of 36 species of mongoose. The family classification of this species continues to be disagreed upon, however more recent taxonomic listings place it in the Family Herpestidae. Meerkats and other mongoose species are closely related to members of the Family Viverridae (civets and genets) but several physical, behavioral, and genetic characteristics separate the two families.

There has been some research concerning the identification of subspecies of meerkats. Three subspecies have been identified (Suricata s. siricata, Suricata s. majoriae, and Suricata s. iona) and current DNA research is close to identifying a fourth subspecies. Because so few individuals in the North American regional population are identified to the subspecies taxonomic level, this studbook does not include subspecies identification and the population will be managed as a single species.

Status of Wild Population

The meerkat is found in the arid regions of South Africa and throughout the Kalahari Desert. Specific wild population numbers are not known, however, the species is prevalent. IUCN status: not listed.

Physical Description

Meerkats are a small-sized mongoose with a sleek physique and pointed muzzle. The coat is usually a shade of brown, orange, or gray with a lighter colored belly, usually white. They have a series of black stripes across the back, a black tail tip, black eye circles, and long curved claws. Their ears are set on the side of the head and can vary in color but are usually gray or black. Their body length is about 25-35cm (10-14in), tail length is about 24cm (9-10in), and weight can range from 600g to 2.5kg (1.3-5.5lbs). There is no sexual dimorphism in this species.

Ecology

Meerkats are highly social animals living in large groups from 10 to 30 individuals. Captive meerkats can be managed in groups as small as two individuals. Groups can consist of as many as three breeding females, three breeding males, and their offspring. Breeding individuals tend to hold alpha status within their gender, however no consistent hierarchies have been observed. Captive meerkats appear to have a strong hierarchy within each gender. Primarily males, using anal glands, mark territories, but all members of the group will defend the territory from intruders.

Within the meerkat group, each adult has a “job” which contributes to the overall survival of the group. These “jobs” are learned from adults and are rotated amongst individuals. Two examples of these “jobs” are babysitter and sentinel. Babysitters are responsible for watching out for the youngsters of the group while the parents are feeding, resting, or acting as sentinel. Usually babysitters are older siblings. The sentinel is responsible for watching for predators or other danger while the rest of the group feeds or rests.

Meerkats will dig their own dens or warrens but will also utilize those prepared by other mongoose species, ground squirrels or other rodents. They may make modifications to the warrens but will also share with the original inhabitants. Warrens consist of anywhere from 10 to 90 entrances and include tunnels, birthing dens, and sleeping chambers. “Bolt holes” are used as shelter during quick retreat when an alarm call is sounded. A group may have several warrens within their territory and when resources become scarce, the group will move to another warren.

A meerkat’s diet consists primarily of insects, arachnids, and an occasional small rodent or reptile. Individuals are responsible for meeting their own dietary needs and will sometimes squabble over food items. Occasionally many individuals will cooperate in making a kill of a larger prey item. Meerkats seems to have some immunity to scorpion and snake venom allowing them to kill prey that is untouchable by other species.

After a gestation of 77 days, 1 to 6 infants are born blind and without hair. Beginning at about 3 weeks of age, the infants begin to emerge from the den and adults begin teaching what and how to hunt. Within 6 weeks, the infants are weaned and they are completely independent by the age of 10 weeks. Adult size is reached at about 6 months of age and sexual maturity is reached at 12 months. The breeding season is October thru June with most births taking place between January and March. One female may have up to three litters in one year due to a postpartum estrus that allows the female to become pregnant again within days of giving birth. In captivity, breeding can occur year round, therefore, a female has the potential to produce 4 to 5 litters each year. If a den area is disturbed before infants have begun to emerge from the den, the female may consume the infants or will move the infants to a different den site.

Meerkats have a variety of vocalizations. They will almost constantly emit a contact call, a soft murmur. Infants will beg for food with chirps and trills. Alarm calls vary depending on the location of the danger and its severity. Barks are emitted as a threat, usually in defense.

Scope of the Studbook

The studbook database includes what is believed to be the first individuals brought into the region in the 1960s and is current through June 2003. Due to the prolific nature of this species, updated editions of the studbook will be produced on an annual basis. Management of the population, including breeding recommendations is pending due to the need for an analytical studbook. A husbandry manual is also pending.

This studbook will be available on the AZA website and in CD format. In the interest of saving resources, the studbook will not be distributed in hardcopy format, however individuals may make their own hardcopies if desired.

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank all of the institutions that provided information for the compilation of the database and those who have kept me updated as the first edition was under construction.

I would like to give special thanks to Laurie Bingham Lackey who helped with many technical challenges throughout the process of completion of the studbook.

Finally, I would like to thank Santa Barbara Zoological Gardens, specifically Alan Varsik, for the support and guidance provided during this process.

Introductory Notes

All individuals entering the regional population prior to the first reported captive birth are assumed wild-caught.

All individuals entering the regional population from Africa w/o an institution name documented are assumed wild-caught.

Sexual maturity is considered 12 months of age. Therefore, individuals less than 12 months old are not considered possible dams/sires.

MULT groups consist of no more than three possible dams/sires. If more than three possible dams/sires exist, the dam/sire is considered UNK.
