Architectural Snowflakes

This fall the Non-Linear Systems Organization (NSO), a new PennDesign research group directed by Cecil Balmond, Cret practice professor of architecture, put on the exhibition “Frozen Architecture meets Dynamic Architecture” at the University City Science Center’s Esther Klein Art Gallery. In keeping with NSO’s mission to explore how mathematical and scientific elements inform architecture, the exhibition featured a series of photographic prints taken from US Department of Agriculture snow research laboratories. In conjunction with “Frozen Architecture,” the Esther Klein Gallery introduced LabStudio, a new collaboration between PennDesign’s NSO and Penn’s Institute for Medicine and Engineering (IME), whose joint snow research project details how non-linear architectural analysis of biological surface design, motility and networking can generate new paradigms and hypotheses in biomedicine. Founded and co-directed by Jenny E. Sabin MArch’05, PennDesign lecturer, NSO lead researcher and IME member, and Dr. Peter Lloyd Jones, associate professor of pathology and laboratory medicine, IME member and 2007 NSO fellow, LabStudio is funded in part by Bentley Systems, PennDesign and the University of Pennsylvania Academic Enrichment Fund.

Architecture Students Launch London Photo Contest

11 PennDesign students studying at the Architectural Association in London this fall found themselves so mired down in studio projects that they decided to take a minute every week to conduct a photo contest to make them appreciate where they were. Above is the inaugural award-winning photo, taken by Carlos Fornos MArch’08 on Regent Street before the students’ term began at the AA. When congratulated, Fornos was quick to point out that this was an “unofficial” photo contest, based on a photo contest held at PennDesign each year. When not taking pictures, “we are examining the effect modern and contemporary art has had on the development of east London; focusing on ways of seeing, documenting and redrawing the urban terrain,” says Fornos. “Having the opportunity to experience London and having full access to AA electives and its rich program of lectures, events and exhibitions has been an exceptional learning experience.”

Chan Center Boasts Growing Corporate Membership

Top corporations in the construction industry are seeking out the Penn-Tsinghua T.C. Chan Center for Building Simulation and Energy Studies. Arup, Bentley Systems, Dow Building Solutions, Gehry Technologies, Kohn Pedersen Fox, McGraw Hill Construction and Turner Construction are among the many leading companies supporting the Chan Center, established in 2006 with a gift from David T.C. Chan PAR'97 PAR'03 to develop new knowledge, tools, processes and techniques for professionals involved in the growing field of building energy and technology. Chan Center membership has its privileges, which include an appointment to the Center's advisory board, access to the Center's educational resources and the opportunity to display and view products and projects at the Center's locations. Under the guidance of co-directors Ali Malkawi (Penn) and Yi Jiang (Tsinghua), the Center recently provided consultancy services to Victor Marquez Arquitectos for an addition to the Monterrey Airport in Mexico and is working on several other high profile projects around the world, including LOTTE Super Tower in Seoul, Korea, where the Center conducted human movement simulation studies for SOM. ## MFA Blogspot

PennDesign's MFA students have developed an online forum — the Penn MFA Blog — for sharing all things art with each other and the community at large. Jules Joseph MFA'09, a first year MFA student, was featured in October. "My narrative drawings and paintings draw from an interest in mythology," says Joseph, "specifically [a myth] that states that the world was created on a shell of a turtle. I am intrigued by the literal/metaphorical attributes of the nomadic turtle carrying its home on its back. As a first-generation American, I was born in a cultural diaspora that I have experienced through the virtue of my parents [who are from Haiti]. I find that my upbringing resonates with this narrative." Joseph grew up in Miami, FL, earned his BFA at Maryland Institute College of Art and is now pursuing his MFA in painting and drawing at PennDesign. Go online to view more of his work and learn about other fine arts happenings at PennDesign: penndesignmfa.blogspot.com

Architectural Archives Presents "The Choreography of Gardens"

"Lawrence Halprin: The Choreography of Gardens" is on view at the Kroiz Gallery of the Architectural Archives through February 1, 2008. This first-ever retrospective celebrates the large number of gardens created over the past 60 years by the American environmental designer, Lawrence Halprin (b.1916). Best known for a remarkable series of public spaces in Portland, Seattle, Denver and Washington, DC, Halprin's garden projects provide the perfect laboratory to explore and develop themes central to his larger public work. Drawn from the Archives' extensive collection of Halprin's work, the exhibition features over 50 objects, including design sketches, rare archival photographs and period publications that vividly demonstrate Halprin's influence on the postwar landscape — from modest designs for postwar tract houses to the grand estates of his most active patrons, the Haas family.

Unspoken Borders at Penn and Beyond

Members of racial and ethnic groups have been clients, consumers, creators and critics of the built environment; however, they historically have been marginalized from entering design professions. To illuminate issues related to minorities within the disciplines of architecture, city planning, fine arts, historic preservation, interior design and landscape architecture, PennDesign's Black Student Alliance, formed in 2005, hosted a conference at Penn on March 30 – 31, 2007. With participants discussing the tangible and intangible borders that are created, enhanced or ignored by the various professions and a design competition providing a mechanism for the practical application of conference ideas, "Unspoken Borders" provided the opportunity for design professionals to confront latent biases that may enter everyday practice:
