Supporting and sustaining vibrant communities and a strong economy through realising the significant, ongoing value of our historic environment.

Our buildings and archaeological heritage provide a powerful sense of connection between people and place, which in turn supports our sense of identity and our wellbeing as individuals and as a society. Our historic environment is also a vital and non-renewable component of our economy, generating an estimated £532 million annually, and creating and sustaining around 10,000 jobs.

Historic Environment Division works in collaboration with a very wide range of individuals and organisations in the public, private and third sectors to ensure that, together, we record, protect, conserve and promote our heritage in ways which support and sustain our economy and our communities. We provide expertise and skills, seeking to improve the understanding, caring for and appreciation of our heritage, and to ensure a suitable balance between respecting a rich past and building a successful future. This document provides contact details for staff and outlines the key areas of responsibility. The Director is Iain Greenway.
