
THE KNICKERBOCKER EMPTY

Only Workmen In Hotel—Broadway
Concerned About Liquors.

Broad shouldered men barred all entrances to the Hotel Knickerbocker yesterday, while employes could be seen through the windows piling chairs and rolling up carpets in preparation for the conversion of the hotel into an office building.

Broadway idlers voiced great concern regarding the ultimate destination of the stock of liquors at one time on sale in the King Cole room. At the office of James B. Regan, manager, inquiries were referred to one of the hotel man's secretaries.

"What's going to become of it?" he repeated and then answered, sadly: "Well, there's not much of it left. The United States Government has a good part of it."

The New York Times

Published: May 29, 1920

Copyright © The New York Times